Faith diſpoſed Abraham to forſake his country and home, his eſtate, his kindred, following divine conduct he knew not whither; to wander Heb. 11. 8. Chryſ. Tom. 7. p. 17. abroad and ſojourn among barbarous ſtrangers: Faith inclined him at God's command, to ſacrifice his only Son, a goodly youth in the flower of his age and hopes, worthily moſt dear unto him; the Son of his old age, and the comfort thereof given to him by miracle, and in ſpecial favour; the prop of his Family, and the heir of promiſe, by whom his ſeed was to be propagated, and his memory to flouriſh; him was he ready in obedience with his own hand to ſlay, quelling nature and his bowels, thwarting his own hopes, defying all ſemblances of contradiction, or claſhing between the commands and promiſes of God.

Faith through the rudeſt efforts of envy and malice, through the diſmal calamities of exile and ſlavery, through hideous ſnares of temptation, through villainous ſlanders, through loathſome priſons and fetters of iron, all along ſuſtained with admirable moderation and preſence of mind, did rear up Joſeph to the helm of that great Kingdom.

The ſame inclined Moſes to exchange the dignities and delights of a Court for a ſtate of vagrancy and ſervility; it heartned him to outbrave the invincible obſtinacy of a mighty Prince; it ſteeled him with patience to conduct for the ſpace of fourty years, through a wild deſert, a moſt perverſe and mutinous herd of people.

Faith was mother of that renowned patience, which exhauſted Satan's Chryſ. Ibid. quiver, ſpent all his artillery, and wore out his invention in ſuggeſting miſchiefs; I know that my Redeemer liveth, was the rock, on which that Job 19. 25. unſhakable patience of Job was founded.

That pricked the ruddy Stripling forward, naked and unarmed, with undaunted heart and countenance, to invade the Monſter of Gath, that tower of fleſh, ſwelling with rage and pride, and all fenced with braſs 1 Sam. 17. 45. and ſteel; Thou comeſt to me, ſaid he, with a ſword and with a ſpear, and with a ſhield, but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hoſts; there lay his confidence, thence ſprung his admirable courage.

To this the bold attempts, and the glorious victories of Joſhuah, of Gideon, of Barak, of Jephtha, of Sampſon, of Jonathan, of the Maccabees, are worthily aſcribed, who with ſmall forces, upon great diſadvantages, did aſſault, did vanquiſh mighty Enemies, and Opreſſors.

1 Kings 18. 36. 19. 20. This enflamed the zeal of Elias, by which he alone did check and controll the degenerate follies of his Nation, ſurmounting the indignation 2 Kings 2. 11. of Princes which favoured them; it fed him in the Wilderneſs by the purveyance of Ravens; it framed the wheels of that fiery Chariot, which tranſported him into heaven.

This made Jeremy, with like zeal and courage, dare to carry moſt unwelcome news, and unpleaſant meſſages to an outragious people, Jer. 38. 4, 6. not daunted by their angry menaces, or cruel miſuſages; his feet ſunk into the mire, but faith bore up his heart above all diſcouragement.

This ſaved the conſcience of thoſe three brave Youths clear from that impiety, into which barbarous violence would have driven them;
ſo that neither the fury of that great Monarch, nor his gaping furnace could terrifie them into ſin; faith putting into their mouths thoſe man-Dan 3. 19. (16, 18, 27.) ful words, O Nebuchadnezzar we are not careful to anſwer thee in this matter; If it be ſo, our God whom we ſerve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O King; but if not, be it known unto thee, that we will not ſerve thy gods, nor worſhip the golden image, which thou haſt ſet up; their faith carried them undaunted into the flames, and kept them untoucht within them; ſo that they became as gold not waſted, but tried and purified in the furnace.

Heb. 11. 33. Dan. 6. 10, 22, 23. Neither could a danger no leſs terrible ſcare the noble Daniel from his devotions; his faith did ſtop the Lions mouths; and He (ſaith the Text) was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, becauſe he truſted in his God.

Such exploits of ſpiritual proweſs were atchieved by an Old-Teſtament- Faith, relying upon God's attributes and providence, although wanting a clear revelation of the promiſes, which then lay wrapped up in myſteries and ſhadows; But more heroical acts of fortitude and patience did the bright ſunſhine of grace and glory upon the minds of our Apoſtles, and primitive Saints produce; Animated by faith a little troop of them marched out with reſolution to attack all the Powers of hell, and to beat down the Kingdom of darkneſs, to diſpatch all the prejudices and errors of mankind, and to ſubdue the world to the obedience of Chriſt; ſo armed, ſucceſsfully did they knock down and trample upon all oppoſition to their glorious deſigns; they defeated all the ſecular power and policy, they baffled all the wit, the learning, the eloquence, which ſtood in their way, or gave them reſiſtence; they triumphed Rom. 8. 35. over perſecutions, and in regard to all ſufferings were more than conquerors; to forſake and forfeit all they had, was their gain; to have Eph. 3. 13. nothing was their wealth, to incurr diſgraces was their glory; to be in continual labour and travel was their eaſe; faſtings, hunger and thirſt Act. 15. 25. were their pleaſure, their feaſt, their luxury; priſons were chapels to them, in which they preached, and prayed, and ſang praiſes to God; their

their joy was to ſuffer, to receive ſtripes, and undergo torments was their triumph and their glory; they conſtantly defied, they often courted death.

That they were able to perform ſuch prodigious acts, and to endure things ſo inſupportable, was not from a ſtupid inſenſibility of things, from a ſturdineſs of ſpirit, or ſtiffneſs of humour; but from a true magnanimity inſpired by faith; Becauſe they were perſuaded of God's will, becauſe they confided in God's help, becauſe they relied on God's word, becauſe they did expect rewards from God able to ſatisfie for all their pains and loſſes; this made them to undertake ſo bold enterpriſes, and carried them with inſuperable conſtancy through all; hence were they glad to abandon their eaſe and pleaſure, to proſtitute their honour and reputation, to part with their ſubſtance, to venture their ſafety, to ſacrifice their lives for God's truth; Therefore do we both labour, and ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, who is the ſaviour of all men, ſpecially of thoſe that believe, is the ſhort account, which S. Paul rendreth of it: And infallibly the like effects will Faith produce, wherever it is found, in a degree proportionable to its ſincerity and ſtrength.

1 Tim. 4. 10.
(Rom. 8. 17.
2 Tim. 2. 11.
1 Pet. 1. 7.
4. 13.
2 Tim. 4. 8.)

A grain of Faith (our Saviour ſaith) is able to remove mountains; that is to accompliſh things in appearance very ſtrange and difficult; and To him that believeth all things are poſſible, ſaith the ſame mouth of truth; and He (ſaith our Lord again) that believeth in me, the works that I do, he alſo ſhall do, and greater works than thoſe ſhall he do; if this be true in reference to works concerning the frame of nature, it is ſurely no leſs true in regard to thoſe which lie within the more proper ſphere of Faith, to moral and ſpiritual operations: If Faith can obtain the help of God, enabling to transfer a mountain, it alſo can procure his grace diſpoſing to reſtrain an appetite, or repreſs a paſſion.

Matt. 17. 20.
21. 21.
Luke 17. 6.
1 Cor. 13. 2.
Mark 11. 23.
Mark 9. 23.
Joh 12. 14.
Chryſ. Tom. 7. Or. 64.

Now that which is in it ſelf ſo worthy and lovely, which is attended with ſo good conſorts; which is the daughter of ſo excellent cauſes, the ſiſter of ſo great vertues, the parent of ſo admirable effects, how can it otherwiſe than be very precious, very laudable, very acceptable? how can we at all wonder that it ſhould be graced with ſuch commendations, and crowned with ſuch rewards?

Let us therefore (to conclude) be exhorted, if we do want it, to endeavour the acquiſt of it by all proper means (by ſerious contemplation and ſtudy, by prayer to God, by voiding all obſtructions of it): if we have it, to hold it faſt, to cheriſh it, to improve it, as by all good ways, ſo eſpecially by good practice; that we may produce the good fruits, and obtain the happy rewards thereof; through the mercies of God in Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom for ever be all praiſe.

Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 6.

Now the God of all hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the holy Ghoſt. Amen.

Rom. 15. 13.

I Believe, &c.

SERMON IV.

OF JUSTIFYING FAITH.

ROM. 5. 1.

Therefore being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

T*Herefore*; that word implies the text to be a concluſion (by way of inference, or of recapitulation) reſulting from the precedent diſcourſe; it is indeed the principal concluſion, which (as being ſuppoſed a peculiar and a grand part of the Chriſtian doctrine, and deſerving therefore a ſtrong proof and clear vindication) S. Paul deſigned by ſeveral arguments to make good. Upon the words, being of ſuch importance, I ſhould ſo treat; as firſt to explain them, or to ſettle their true ſenſe; then to make ſome practical application of the truths they contain.

As to the explicatory part, I ſhould conſider firſt, what the faith is, by which we are ſaid to be juſtified; 2. what being juſtified doth import; 3. how by ſuch faith we are ſo juſtified; 4. what the peace with God is, here adjoined to juſtification; 5. what relation the whole matter bears to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; or how through him being juſtified we have peace with God; in the proſecution of which particulars it would appear, who the perſons juſtified are, and who juſtifies us; with other circumſtances incident.

I ſhall at this time only inſiſt upon the firſt particular, concerning the notion of Faith proper to this place, in order to the reſolution of which inquiry, I ſhall lay down ſome uſeful obſervations: and

1. Firſt, I obſerve, that Faith, or belief in the vulgar acception doth ſignifie (as we have it briefly deſcribed in Ariſtotle's Topicks a σφοδρὰ ὑπόληψις, an earneſt opinion or perſuaſion of mind concerning the truth of ſome matter propounded. Such an opinion being produced by, or grounded upon ſome forcible reaſon (either immediate evidence of the matter; or ſenſe and experience; or ſome ſtrong argument of reaſon, or ſome credible teſtimony; for whatever we aſſent unto, and judge true upon any ſuch grounds and inducements, we are commonly ſaid to believe) this is the popular acception of the word; and according thereto I conceive it uſually ſignifies in holy Scripture; which being not penn'd by Maſters of humane art or ſcience; nor directed to perſons of more than ordinary capacities or improvements, doth not intend to uſe words otherwiſe than in the moſt plain and ordinary manner.

Top. 4. 5.

Aut proba eſſe quæ credis; aut ſi non probas, quomodo credis. Tertul. adv. Marc. V. 1.

Ὅταν γὰρ πως πιστεύῃ, καὶ γνώριμοι αὐτῷ ὦσιν αἱ ἀρχαὶ, ἐπίσταται. Ariſt. Eth. 6. 3.

Ἀριστοτέλης τὸ ἑπόμενον τῇ ἐπιστήμῃ κρῖμα ὡς ἀληθὲς, τόδε τι πίστιν εἶναι φησί. Clem. Strom. 2. p 287.

Ἔνιοι γὰρ πιστεύουσιν οὐδὲν ἧττον οἷς δοξάζουσιν, ἢ ἕτεροι οἷς ἐπίστανται. Ariſt. 7. 3. (Eth.)

Belief therefore in general, I ſuppoſe, denotes a firm perſuaſion of mind concerning the truth of what is propounded; whether it be ſome one ſingle propoſition (as when Abraham believed, that God was able to perform what he had promiſed; and Sarah, that God, who had promiſed was faithful) or ſome ſyſteme of propoſitions, as when we are ſaid to believe God's word (that is all, which by his Prophets was in his name declared) to believe the truth (that is all the propoſitions taught in the true religion as ſo) to believe God's commandments (that is the doctrines in God's Law to be true, and the precepts thereof to be good) to believe the Goſpel (that is to be perſuaded of the truth of all the propoſitions aſſerted, or declared in the Goſpel.)

Rom. 4. 21.
Heb. 11. 19.
Heb. 11. 11.
Pſ. 106. 24.
78. 32.
2 Theſ. 2. 12.
Pſ. 119. 66.
Mark 1. 15.
Phil 1. 27.

2. I obſerve Secondly, that whereas frequently ſome perſon, or ſingle thing is repreſented (verbo tenus) as the object of faith, this doth not prejudice, or in effect alter the notion I mentioned; for it is only a figurative manner of ſpeaking, whereby is always meant the being perſuaded concerning the truth of ſome propoſition (or propoſitions) relating to that perſon or thing: for otherwiſe it is unintelligible how any incomplex thing (as they ſpeak) can be the complete, or immediate object of belief: beſide ſimple apprehenſion (or framing the bare Idea of a thing) there is no operation of a man's mind terminated upon one ſingle object; and belief of a thing ſurely implies more than a ſimple apprehenſion thereof: what it is, for inſtance, to believe this, or that propoſition about a man, or a tree (that a man is ſuch a kind of thing, that a tree hath this, or that property) is very eaſie to conceive; but the phraſe believing a man, or a tree (taken properly, or excluding figures) is altogether inſignificant, and unintelligible: indeed to believe (πιστεύειν) is the effect τοῦ πεπεῖσθαι (of a perſuaſive argument,) and the reſult of ratiocination; whence in Scripture it is commended, or diſcommended, as implying a good or bad uſe of reaſon. The proper object of Faith is therefore ſome propoſition deduced from others by diſcourſe; as it is ſaid, that many of the Samaritans believed in Chriſt, becauſe of the woman's word, who teſtified that He told her all that ever ſhe did; or as S. Thomas believed, becauſe he ſaw; or as when it is ſaid, that many believed on our Lord's name, beholding the miracles

Joh. 4. 39.
Joh. 20 29.
Joh. 2. 23.

Exod. 14. 31. 19. 9. Joh. 5. 45,&c. which he did; when then, for example, the Jews are required to believe Moſes (or to believe in Moſes, after the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking) it is meant, to be perſuaded of the truth of what he delivered, as proceeding from divine revelation; or to believe him to be what he 2 Chr. 20. 20. profeſſed himſelf, a meſſenger or prophet of God. So to believe the Prophets or in the Prophets, בִּנְבִיאָיו) was to be perſuaded concerning the truth of what they uttered in God's name (that the doctrines were true, the commands were to be obeyed, the threats and promiſes ſhould be performed, the predictions ſhould be accompliſhed: Luke 24. 25. Act. 24. 14. to believe all which the Prophets did ſay, as our Saviour ſpeaks, to believe all things written in the Prophets, as S. Paul.) So to believe God's works Pſ. 78. 32. (a phraſe we have in the Pſalms) ſignifies, to be perſuaded, that thoſe works did proceed from God, or were the effects of his good provi- Jer. 17. 5. 46. 25. Pſ. 118. 8. &c. dence: to believe in man (that which is ſo often prohibited, and diſſuaded) denotes the being perſuaded, that man in our need is able to relieve and ſuccour us; laſtly to believe in God (a duty ſo often injoyned, and inculcated) is to be perſuaded, that God is true in whatever he ſays, faithful in performance of what he promiſes; perfectly wiſe, powerful and good; able and willing to do us good; the being perſuaded, I ſay, of all theſe propoſitions, or ſuch of them as ſute the preſent circumſtances and occaſion, is to believe in God: thus, in fine, to believe on a perſon, or thing, is only a ſhort expreſſion (figuratively) denoting the being perſuaded of the truth of ſome propoſition relating in one way, or other to that perſon, or thing (which way is commonly diſcernible by conſidering the nature, or ſtate of ſuch a perſon, or ſuch a thing) the uſe of which Obſervation may afterward appear.

3. I obſerve thirdly, that (as it is ordinary in like caſes concerning the uſe of words) the word belief is by a kind of ſynecdoche, (or metonymie if you pleaſe) ſo commonly extended in ſignification, as together with ſuch a perſuaſion as we ſpoke of to imply whatever by a kind of neceſſity (natural, or moral) doth reſult from it; ſo comprehending thoſe acts of will, thoſe affections of ſoul, and thoſe deeds, which may be preſumed conſequent upon ſuch a perſuaſion: for inſtance, when God commanded Abraham to forſake his country, promiſing him a happy eſtabliſhment in the land of Canaan, with a perpetual bleſſing upon his poſterity; Abraham was perſuaded concerning the power, and fidelity of God; and concerning the truth of what was promiſed and foretold; in that perſuaſion his faith, according to the firſt, proper and reſtrained ſenſe, did conſiſt: but becauſe from ſuch a perſuaſion Rom. 4. 20. (being ſincere, and ſtrong enough) there did naturally, and duly reſult a ſatisfaction, or acquieſcence in the matter injoyned as beſt to be done; a choice, and reſolution to comply with God's appointment; an effectual obedience; a cheerful expectation of a good iſſue thereupon; therefore all thoſe diſpoſitions of ſoul, and actions concurring become expreſſed by the name of faith (that firſt perſuaſion being the principle, and root of them:) for it is for his faith that he is highly commended; it is for it that he obtained ſo favourable an approbation and acceptance from God: Yet ſuppoſing Abraham to have had ſuch a perſuaſion concerning God; and yet to have diſliked what God required, or to have reſolved againſt doing it, or to have indeed diſobeyed, or to have diſregarded the happy ſucceſs; it is plain that Abraham as to the whole matter deſerved rather much blame, than any commendation; Jam. 2. 23. and would not upon that account have had righteouſneſs imputed to him, and have been called the friend of God: when therefore his faith is ſo magnified, that word comprehends not his bare perſuaſion only, but all thoſe concomitants thereof, which if they had not gone along therewith, it had been a proof, that ſuch a perſuaſion was not ſincere (not ἀνυπόκριτος πίστις, an undiſſembled faith; ſuch as S. Paul commends 1 Tim. 1. 5.

in Timothy) or not ſtrong enough (not ἀδιάκριτος πίστις, an undoubting 2 Tim. 1. 5. Jam. 3. 17.
faith) but a weak, a ſmall, a dead, an ineffectual faith; which come Rom. 4. 20.
under blame, and reproof, but the effect ſhewed, that he did not (as Rom. 14. 1. 1 Cor. 8. 10.
S. Paul ſays) ἀσθενεῖν τῇ πίστει, had not a weak, or ſickly faith; nor Rom. 4. 19.
ſtaggered at the promiſe of God; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to Matt. 6. 30. 8. 26, &c.
God; which he did not only in believing his word, but in ſuting his Jam. 2. 17, 20.
affections, and yielding obedience thereto: (πίστει ὑπήκουσεν ἐξελθεῖν, Gal. 5. 6.
by faith he obeyed, ſo as to forſake his country, ſays the Apoſtle to the Heb. 11. 8.
Hebrews; And Faith thus taken is not only a ſingle act of a man's underſtanding, or will, but a complex of many diſpoſitions and actions, diffuſed through divers faculties of a man, denoting the whole complication of good diſpoſitions, and actions relating to one matter; which attend upon a true and earneſt perſuaſion concerning it; right choice, ſubmiſſion and ſatisfaction of mind, firm reſolution, dutiful obedience, conſtant and cheerful hope; or the like.

4. I obſerve more nearly to our purpoſe, fourthly, that the Faith here ſpoken of (being here, and otherwhere put abſolutely, or by it ſelf, without any adjunct of limitation or diſtinction) is often ſet down with terms annexed thereto, explaining and determining it; being ſometimes ſtyled the faith of Chriſt, Rom. 3. 3, 21, 26. Gal. 2. 16, 20. 3. 22.
of Jeſus, of God (τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, τοῦ Θεοῦ) ſome- Phil. 3. 9. Apoc. 2. 13. 14. 12. times faith upon Chriſt (εἰς Χριστὸν, and ἐπὶ Χριστὸν) εἰς. Act. 20. 21. 24. 25. 26. 18. Col. 2. 5. &c. faith in Chriſt (ἐν Χριστῷ) faith to Chriſt, to the ἐπὶ Heb. 6. 1. Act 9. 42. 22. 19, &c.
Lord, to God (πιστεύειν τῷ Χριστῷ, τῷ Κυρίῳ, τῷ ἐν. Gal. 3. 26. 1 Tim. 3. 13. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Act. 13. 39, &c.
Θεῷ) faith upon the name of Chriſt (εἰς ὄνομα) faith τῷ Χρ. Act. 5. 14. 16 34. 18. 8. 27. 25.
of his name (πίστις τοῦ ὀνόματος) faith to his name Joh. 5. 24. 10. 37, 38. 14. 11, &c.
(τῷ ὀνόματι;) which phraſes, all queſtionleſs de- εἰς ὄνομα. Joh. 1. 12. 2. 23. 1 Joh. 5. 13, &c. Act. 3. 16. τοῦ.
noting the ſame thing, do imply this faith to con- 1 Joh. 3. 23. τῷ.
ſiſt in being perſuaded concerning the truth of ſome propoſitions chiefly relating to our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, either as grounded upon his Authority, or appertaining to his Perſon: Now what ſuch propoſi- Mar. 1. 15.
tions are we may learn from other expreſſions, deſcriptions, or circum- Phil. 1. 27. 1 Pet. 4. 17.
locutions declaring the nature and quality of this faith: it is ſometimes 2 Theſ. 2. 12, called the belief of the Goſpel (that is of the whole ſyſteme of doctrines, 13. * 1 Tim. 4. 3.
and laws, and promiſes, and prophecies taught, delivered, or de- 2. 4. 1 Tit. 1. 1.
clared by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. Repent, ſaid S. John the Bap- Heb. 10. 26.
tiſt, and believe the Goſpel) the belief of the truth, (that body of truth, 1 Tim. 2. 4, &c ſignally ſo called, which was taught by the ſame Authors) the ac- a Joh. 5. 47, knowledgment of the ſame truth (* πιστὸς, & ἐπεγνωκὼς τὴν ἀλήθειαν are 48.
in S. Paul the ſame) equivalent to thoſe deſcriptions of this faith are b Joh. 12. 47. c Joh. 12. 48.
thoſe expreſſions, which ſet it out by yielding aſſent (generally) to 17. 8.
what our Lord Chriſt, and his Apoſtles taught, or to ſome chief points Act. 11. 1.
of their doctrine, inferring the reſt; the [a] believing, [b] hearing, [c] re- d Joh. 3. 33. e Joh. 1. 12.
ceiving the word of God, of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles, [d] the receiving 13. 20. 5. 43.
Chriſt's teſtimony, and (which is the ſame) [e] receiving Chriſt himſelf; f Joh. 6. 37, 44, 65. 5. 20.
[f] coming unto Chriſt (that is as diſciples to their Maſter, as ſervants to Matt. 11. 28. their Lord, as perſons oppreſſed and enſlaved to their Deliverer) g Joh. 17. 8.
[g] The believing (and knowing) that Jeſus was ſent by God, and came 5. 24. 6. 29.
from him; The believing, that Jeſus was, what he profeſſed himſelf to 11. 42. 16. 30. 17. 21.
be; Joh. 8. 24. 13. 19.

k 1 Joh. 4. 2. 15. be; [k] the confeſſing, that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh; that Jeſus is 1 Joh. 5. 1, 5. the Chriſt, the Son of God, He which ſhould come into the world; the King of
Joh. 4. 42. Iſrael; that God raiſed him from the dead; by the belief of which one point, Joh. 1. 50. as involving the reſt, S. Paul expreſſeth this faith: [l] If thou (ſaith he)
Joh. 20. 31. ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe with thy heart, Act 8. 37. that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved.
l Rom. 10. 9.

Ὁ. ἀκέσας παρὰ πατρὸς ϗ μαθὼν. John 6 45.

The reſult upon conſidering all which expreſſions declaratory of the nature of this Faith (for this ſurely is not different from that, which is ſo commonly otherwhere repreſented in our Saviour, and his Apoſtles diſcourſes and writings, as a great duty required of us; as a vertue (or act of vertue) highly commendable, as an eſpecial inſtrument of our ſalvation, as a neceſſary condition prerequiſite to our partaking the benefits, and privileges by divine favour conferred on Chriſtians) the reſult I ſay is this, that by this Faith (as to the firſt, and primary ſenſe thereof) is underſtood the being truly and firmly perſuaded in our minds, that Jeſus was what he profeſſed himſelf to be, and what the Apoſtles teſtified him to be; the Meſſias, by God deſigned, foretold and promiſed to be ſent into the world, to redeem, govern, inſtruct and ſave mankind; our Redeemer and Saviour; our Lord and Maſter; our King and Judge; the Great high Prieſt, and Prophet of God; the being aſſured of theſe, and all other propoſitions connexed with theſe; or in ſhort, the being thoroughly perſuaded of the truth of that Goſpel; which was revealed and taught by Jeſus and his Apoſtles. That this notion is true, thoſe deſcriptions of this faith, and phraſes expreſſing it, do ſufficiently ſhew; the nature and reaſon of the thing doth confirm the ſame; for that ſuch a faith is, in its kind and order, apt and ſufficient to promote God's deſign of ſaving us; to render us capable of God's favour; to purge our hearts, and work that change of mind, which is neceſſary in order to the obtaining God's favour, and enjoying happineſs; to produce that obedience, which God requires of us, and without which we cannot be ſaved; theſe things are the natural reſults of ſuch a perſuaſion concerning thoſe truths; as natural, as the deſire and purſuit of any good doth ariſe from the clear apprehenſion thereof, or as the ſhunning of any miſchief doth follow from the like apprehenſion; as a perſuaſion that wealth is to be got thereby, makes the merchant to undergo the dangers and pains of a long voyage; (verifying that, Impiger extremos currit mercator ad Indos, Per mare pauperiem fugiens, per ſaxa, per ignes) as the perſuaſion that health may thereby be recovered, engages a man not only to take down the moſt unſavoury potions, but to endure cuttings and burnings ut valeas ferrum patieris, & ignes) as a perſuaſion, that refreſhment is to be found in a place, doth effectually carry the hungry perſon thither: So a ſtrong perſuaſion that Chriſtian Religion is true, and the way of obtaining happineſs, and of eſcaping miſery doth naturally produce a ſubjection of heart, and an obedience thereto; and accordingly we ſee the higheſt of thoſe effects which the Goſpel offers, or requires, are aſſigned to this faith, as
1 Joh. 5. 1. reſults from it, or adjuncts thereof: Regeneration; Whoſoever, ſaith
1 Joh. 1. 12. S. John, believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God; Spiritual uni-
1 Joh. 4. 5. on with God; Whoſoever ſhall confeſs, that Jeſus is the Son of God, God
1 Joh 2 24. abideth in him, and he in God: if what ye have heard from the beginning, abide in you, ye ſhall alſo abide in the Father and the Son. The obtaining God's love; The father loves you, becauſe you have loved me, and have believed, that I came from God; Victory over the world: Joh. 16 27.

Who is he, that overcometh the world, but he who believeth that Jeſus is Vid. 2. Theſ.
the Son of God? Freedom from ſpiritual ſlavery; and becoming true 2 13. Eph. 1.
diſciples of Chriſt; If ye abide in my word, ye are truly my diſciples; 13. Act 15. 7, and ye ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall ſet you free. Obtaining 9. 1 Joh. 5. 5. Joh. 8. 31, 32.
everlaſting life; He that heareth my word, and believeth him that ſent Joh. 5 24.
me (that is, who believeth my word, which is indeed the word of God, who ſent me, and in whoſe name I ſpeak) hath everlaſting life. And, Theſe things were written, that you may believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, Joh. 20. 31.
the Son of God, and that believing it, you may have life in his name. Intereſt in God and Chriſt, He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, He 2 Ep. Joh. 9.
(οὗτος) hath the Father and the Son. Verily verily, I ſay unto you, he Joh. 6 47.
that believeth upon me, hath eternal life. Riſing with Chriſt (that 3. 36, 15, 16.
is as to capacity and right:) Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein you Col. 2. 12.
are riſen with him through faith of the operation of God; who raiſed him from the dead. Being ſaved: Whoever confeſſes with his mouth the Lord Rom. 10. 9.
Jeſus to be the Son of God; and in his heart believes that God raiſed him from the dead, ſhall be ſaved. Laſtly being juſtified; for (S. Paul adjoins) a man believeth (in the manner before mentioned) to righteouſneſs; and with the mouth confeſſion is made to ſalvation. So we ſee, that Rom. 10. 10.
the chief of thoſe excellent benefits, to the procuring of which faith (however underſtood) is any-wiſe conducible, or requiſite, do belong to the perſuaſion concerning Evangelical truths. We may alſo obſerve in the hiſtory concerning our Lord, and his Apoſtles proceedings toward perſons, whom they had converted to Chriſtianity, and did admit to a participation of the privileges thereof, that no other faith was by them required in order thereto; upon ſuch a perſuaſion appearing they received them into the Church, baptized them, pronounced unto them an abſolution from their ſins, and a reception into God's favour: This was the faith of Martha, which gave her intereſt in the promiſe of eternal life: Every one (ſaid our Saviour to her) living, and believing Joh. 11. 26.
in me, ſhall never die: doſt thou believe this? ſhe ſaith unto him: Yes Lord,
I have believed, that thou art the Chriſt, the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world: this was the faith, for which our Saviour commends S. Peter, and pronounces him happy: Upon appearance of this Matt. 16. 16.
faith S. Peter baptized and admitted into the Church the three thouſand Joh. 6. 69.
perſons whom he had converted (Then, ſays the Text, they who gladly Οἱ ἀσμένως ἀποδεξάμενοι τὸν λόγον.
(or willingly) received his word (that is, were perſuaded of the truth of that doctrine, which is before ſet down concerning our Lord) were Act. 2. 41. baptized; and the ſame day were added (to the Church) about three thouſand ſouls) Upon the like faith the Samaritans were baptized (ὅτε ἐπίστευσαν τῷ Φιλίππῳ, when they gave credence to Philip's doctrine:) and Act. 8. 12.
upon the ſame account did the ſame Evangeliſt ſay it was lawful to baptize the Eunuch, and accordingly did perform it: If, ſaith Philip, Act 8. 37, 38.
thou believeſt with thy whole heart, it is lawful (or thou mayſt be baptized) He anſwering ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God; ſo
he baptized him: This was the faith, upon which S. Paul baptized Lydia, Act 16. 14, 15.
when ſhe had yielded aſſent unto (ſo προσέχειν doth import in the Acts; not only προσέχειν νοῦν to yield attention, but προσέχειν πίστιν to give aſſent unto) the things ſpoken by Saint Paul; thus alſo of thoſe Jews in another place of the Acts, when S. Paul had opened, and alledged, out Act. 17 4. of the Scriptures, that Chriſt was to ſuffer, and to riſe again from the dead, and that Jeſus was the Chriſt, it is ſaid, τινὲς αὐτῶν ἐπείσθησαν καὶ Act. 17. 3, 4. Act 9. 20. 16.
προσεκληρώθησαν, were perſuaded, and conſorted with Paul, and Silas 32. 17. 11, 12.
(that

(that is, were received into Chriſtian communion with them.) The ſame is intimated in other paſſages of the Apoſtolical hiſtory; by all which it appears, that the Apoſtles method was to declare, and inculcate the main points of the Chriſtian hiſtory and doctrine, atteſting to the one, and proving the other by teſtimonies and arguments proper to that purpoſe; and whoever of their hearers declared himſelf perſuaded of the truth of what they taught, that he did heartily aſſent thereto, and reſolved to profeſs and practiſe accordingly, him without more to do, they preſently baptized, and inſtated him in the privileges appertaining to Chriſtianity; or (in S. Paul's language) did juſtifie them, according to their ſubordinate manner, as the miniſters of God. And thus did the Primitive Church practiſe after the Apoſtles; as Juſtin the Martyr fully relates of it: —ὅσοι ἂν πεισθῶσι, καὶ πιστεύωσιν ἀληθῆ ταῦτα τὰ ὑφ' ἡμῶν διδασκόμενα, καὶ λεγόμενα εἶναι, καὶ ποιεῖν οὕτως δύνασθαι ὑπισχνῶνται, &c.—ἄγονται ὑφ' ἡμῶν ἔνθα ὕδωρ ἐστὶ, καὶ τρόπον ἀναγεννήσεως, ὃν καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ ἀνεγεννήθημεν ἀναγεννῶνται — Apol. 2. Whoever (ſaith he) are perſuaded, and do believe theſe things by us taught, and ſaid to be true, and undertake that they can live ſo according to them; — are brought thither, where water is, and are regenerated after the ſame manner as we have been regenerated. I farther add, that even this faith is expreſſed to be the effect of divine grace, and inſpiration; for, when S. Peter had confeſſed that Jeſus was the Chriſt, the Son of the living God, our Saviour tells him, That fleſh and blood had not revealed that unto him, but his Father in heaven; and, No man (S. Paul tells us) can call Jeſus Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt; And, Every Spirit, which confeſſeth Jeſus Chriſt to have been come in the fleſh, is of God (ſaith S. John.) So that even, this is a faith, in reſpect to which the holy Ghoſt is called the ſpirit of faith, which is the fruit of the ſpirit; and the gift of God; that which no man can have without God's drawing him; and teaching him; No man can come unto me except the Father that hath ſent me ſhall draw him (ἑλκύσῃ αὐτόν.) Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me: to which it is ordinarily required, that God ſhould open the heart, as he did Lydia's heart, to attend, and aſſent unto what Saint Paul taught: Neither doth the Scripture (as I conceive) attribute any thing unto faith, which doth not agree to this notion.

Matt. 16. 17.
1 Cor. 12. 3.
1 Cor. 2. 10.
2 Cor. 4. 6.
2 Pet. 1. 19.
1 Joh. 4. 2.
(Eph. 1. 17, 18.)
2 Cor. 4. 13.
Gal. 5. 22.
Eph. 2. 8.
Phil. 1. 29.
Joh. 6. 44, 45.
Act. 16. 14.

We might laſtly adjoin, that this was the common, and current notion of Faith among the ancient Chriſtians; neither do we, I ſuppoſe, meet with any other in their Writings; all which things do abundantly confirm the truth thereof.

5. But I muſt farther obſerve particularly (in correſpondence to what was before more generally obſerved,) that this Faith doth not only denote preciſely, and abſtractedly ſuch acts of mind, ſuch opinions and perſuaſions concerning the truth of matters ſpecified, but doth alſo connote, and imply (indeed comprehend according to the meaning of thoſe, who uſe the word) ſuch acts of will, as, ſuppoſing thoſe perſuaſions to be real and complete, are naturally conſequent upon them, and are in a manner neceſſarily coherent with them; a firm reſolution conſtantly to profeſs, and adhere unto the doctrine, of which a man is ſo perſuaded; to obey all the laws and precepts, which it contains; forſaking in open profeſſion, and in real practices all principles, rules, cuſtoms inconſiſtent with thoſe doctrines and laws; that which is called converſion, or returning to Salv. de provid. IV. 1. Cum hoc ſit hominis Chriſtiani fides, fideliter Chriſti mandata ſervare, fit abſq; dubio, ut nec fidem habeat qui infidelis eſt, nec Chriſtum credat, qui Chriſti mandata conculcat, &c.

to the Lord (that is, leaving a courſe of rebellion, and diſobedience to thoſe laws, which the Lord in the Goſpel commands, and reſolvedly betaking themſelves to the obſervance of them) πολύς τε ὄχλος πιστεύσας Act. 11. 21.
ἐπέστρεψεν ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον, a great multitude (it is ſaid) believing, did return Vid. Act. 9. 35. 14. 15.
unto the Lord; their faith did carry with it ſuch a converſion. 26. 18.
Hence this faith is ſtyled πειθαρχεῖν Θεῷ (to obey God's command.) ὑπακούειν Act. 5. 32.
τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, to obey the Goſpel, ὑπακούειν τῇ πίστει, to obey the faith; 1 Theſ. 1. 8. Rom. 1. 6.
ὑποταγὴ τῆς ὁμολογίας εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον (ſubjection of profeſſing the goſpel of 5. 17. 16. 16.
Chriſt) with purpoſe of heart to adhere unto God; ſtipulation of a good 2 Cor. 9. 13. Act. 11. 23.
conſcience toward God (that which S. Peter intimates, as a neceſſary 1 Pet. 3. 21.
concomitant of baptiſm, it being a ſincere undertaking, and engaging ones ſelf to obey God's commandments) in fine, to repent; which is either adequately the ſame thing with faith, or included therein, according to the Apoſtolical meaning of the word; for that remiſſion of ſins, which is ſometime made the conſequent of faith, is otherwhere expreſly annex'd to repentance: The ſumm of the Goſpel our Saviour himſelf expreſſes by the preaching in his name repentance, and remiſſion Luke 24. 47.
of ſins in all nations: and Repent, (S. Peter preached,) and let every Act. 2. 38.
one of you be baptized: And, Repent, (ſaid he again) and return, that Act. 3. 19.
your ſins may be blotted out; and, Then to the Gentiles (ſay thoſe in the 17. 30. Act. 11. 18.
Acts) hath God given repentance unto life; which ſignifies the ſame with that other expreſſion concerning the ſame perſons, God's having Act. 15. 9. purified their hearts by faith; in which places I take repentance to import the ſame thing with faith; being in effect nothing elſe, but ſincere embracing Chriſtian Religion. Now the word faith is thus extended (beyond its natural and primary force) to comprehend ſuch a compliance of will, or purpoſe of obedience, becauſe this doth naturally ariſe from a perſuaſion concerning the truth of the Goſpel, if it be real and ſtrong enough, in that degree, which Chriſtianity requires, and ſuppoſes to the effects mentioned in the Goſpel; if it be ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ in the heart (or a hearty faith) as S. Paul ſpeaks; if it be ſuch, as Rom. 10. 9.
Philip exacts of the Eunuch, a belief ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας, from the whole Act. 8. 37.
heart; if it have that due plerophorie, that ſtability, that ſolidity, which the Apoſtles ſpeak of: for a weak, faint, ſlight, ill-grounded, Heb. 10. 22.
ill-rooted opinion concerning the truth of the Goſpel (ſuch as thoſe 23. 6. 11. 12.
in another caſe had, whom our Saviour rebuked with a τί δειλοί ἐστε, ὀλιγόπιστοι; 1 Theſ. 1. 5. Col. 1. 23. 2.
why are ye fearful, O ye ſmall in faith? ſuch as S. Peter had, 5. 7. 4. 12.
when our Saviour ſaid to him, ὀλιγόπιστε τί ἐδίστασας; O thou of ſmall 2 Cor. 8. 7. Matt. 8. 26.
faith, why didſt thou doubt? which faith could not keep them, nor Matt. 14. 30.
him from ſinking; not ſuch as thoſe had, who heard the word, and gladly Matt. 13. 20.
received it; but wanted root, ſo that, when perſecution, or affliction did ariſe for the word; they were preſently ſcandalized; not ſuch a faith, as thoſe many Rulers had, who are ſaid to have believed in Jeſus, but for Joh. 12. 42.
fear of the Phariſees, did not confeſs him; not ſuch, as Simon Magus had, who is ſaid to have believed Philip, but to no good effect, becauſe Act. 8. 13, 21.
his heart was not right before God; he having not thoroughly reſolved to obey the Goſpel; not ſuch as Agrippa had, whom S. Paul had almoſt Act. 26. 28.
perſuaded to be a Chriſtian) theſe ſorts of faith are in compariſon to that we ſpeak of, but equivocally ſo called; it includes a firm reſolution to perform carefully all the duties injoyned to Chriſtians, to undergo patiently all the croſſes incident to Chriſtianity; it is the ſame with becoming a diſciple of Chriſt, which a man cannot be without renouncing all other intereſts and concernments, without denying ones Matt. 10. 38.
ſelf, forſaking all and following him; without taking his yoke upon him, 11. 29. Luke 9. 23. 14. 26, 27. 16. 24.

going after, and bearing his croſs: it ſuppoſes (as our Saviour alſo teaches us,) that a man hath caſt up with himſelf the gain and loſs he is like to receive by the bargain; and being ſatisfied therein to contract bonâ fide with God; that a man hath weighed all the pains and dangers he ſhall be put upon by entring into this warfare; and ſo reſolvedly to adventure upon it; it is productive of love to the truth, yea of love to God, and charity to men; without which all faith is unprofitable, and ineffectual, as S. Paul teaches us. In ſhort, this Faith is nothing elſe but a true, ſerious, reſolute embracing Chriſtianity; not only being perſuaded that all the doctrines of Chriſt are true, but ſubmitting to his will and command in all things.

Matt. 13. 44, 45. Luke 14. 28, 31. 2 Theſ. 2. 10 (1 Cor. 13. 2. Gal. 5. 6.) Credere ſe in Chriſtum quomodo dicit, qui non facit quod Chriſtus facere præcepit? Cypr. de Un. E.

But to prevent miſtakes, and remove objections, I ſhall yet further obſerve,

That this Faith hath, although not an adequate, yet a peculiar reſpect unto that part of Chriſtian truth, which concerns the merciful intentions of God toward mankind, and the gracious performances of our Saviour in order to the accompliſhing them; the promiſes of pardon to our ſins, and reſtoral into God's favour upon the terms propounded in the Goſpel, of ſincere faith and repentance; whence the Goſpel is called λόγος καταλλαγῆς (the word of reconciliation) and this is expreſſed as a ſummary of the Apoſtolick miniſtery or meſſage; that God was in Chriſt reconciling the world, not imputing their ſins; And, this our Saviour did order, in eſpecial manner to be preached in his name; this accordingly they did mainly propound and inculcate; that God had exalted Jeſus to his right hand as a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins; that he ſhould receive remiſſion of ſins, whoever did believe in his name; Let it be known unto you, brethren, that by this man remiſſion of ſins is * denounced unto you, (ſo did they preach.) Whence this faith is (ſignanter) called belief in the blood of Chriſt: Indeed of all Chriſtian doctrines this is moſt proper firſt to be propounded and perſuaded; as the moſt attractive to the belief of the reſt; moſt encouraging and comfortable to men; moſt apt to procure glory to God by the illuſtration of his principal attributes, his juſtice and his goodneſs; moſt ſutable to the ſtate of things between God, and man; for men being in a ſtate of rebellion and emity toward God, in order to their reducement and recovery thence it was moſt proper that in the firſt place an overture of mercy and pardon ſhould be made; an act of oblivion ſhould be paſſed and propounded to them: Yet are not theſe propoſitions and promiſes the adequate or entire object of this faith; for other Articles of faith are often propounded in a collateral order with thoſe, yea ſometimes (as in the caſe of the Eunuch) others are expreſſed, when that is not mentioned; but only underſtood: neither if any one ſhould believe all the doctrines of that kind; if he did not withal believe that Jeſus is his Lord, and ſhall be his Judge; that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, and a judgment to come, with the like fundamental verities of our Religion, would he be a believer in this ſenſe.

2 Cor. 5. 18, 19. Luke 24. 47. Act. 5. 31. Act. 10. 43. Act. 13. 38. * καταγγέλλεται. Rom. 3. 25. Rom. 3. 26. 15. 9. Eph. 1. 6. Act. 8. 37. Rom. 10. 9.

7. I obſerve farther, that this Faith doth relate only to propoſitions revealed by God (or at leaſt, deduced from principles of reaſon, ſuch as are, that there is a God; that God is good, veracious and faithful; that our religion is true in the groſs; that the holy Scriptures were written by divine inſpiration; which propoſitions we believe upon rational grounds and motives) not unto other

Fides dicit, parata ſunt magna & incomprehenſibilia dona à Deo fidelibus ſuis: dicit ſpes mihi illa bona ſervantur, charitas dicit curro ego ad illa. Bern.

other propoſitions concerning particular matter of fact, ſubject to private conſcience or experience; nor to any concluſions depending upon ſuch propoſitions: For inſtance, it is a part of this faith to believe that God is merciful and gracious; that he bears good will unto, and is diſpoſed to pardon every penitent ſinner; or (which is all one) that ſuppoſing a man doth believe, and hath repented, God doth actually love him, and doth forgive his ſins; this is, I ſay indeed a part of the faith we ſpeak of, its object being part of the Goſpel revealed unto us: but the being perſuaded that God doth love me, or hath pardoned my ſins, or that I am in a ſtate of favour with God, may, as my circumſtances may be, not be my duty; however it is no part of this faith, but a matter of opinion, dependent upon private experience: For ſuch a perſuaſion muſt be grounded upon my being conſcious to my ſelf of having truly and thoroughly repented (this being required by God, as a neceſſary condition toward my obtaining pardon and his favour) of having performed which duty I may preſume, when it is falſe (and therefore cannot then be obliged to believe it) and may doubt, when it is true, and that not without good reaſon; conſidering the blindneſs and fallibility of man's mind, and that man's heart is deceitful above all things, as the Prophet tells us; upon which account, then a man may not be obliged to have ſuch a perſuaſion: it is indeed a great fault to doubt, or diſtruſt on that hand, which concerns God; about his goodneſs, his truth, his wiſdom, or power; but it is not always (perhaps not commonly) blameable to queſtion a man's own qualifications, or his own performances, whether in kind, or degree they be anſwerable to what God requires; that is inconſiſtent with true faith, but this not: We cannot have any good religious affections toward God, if we do not take him to be our gracious father; but we may have in us ſuch affections toward him, and he may be favourably diſpoſed toward us, when we ſuſpect our ſelves to be untoward children, unworthy (as the prodigal Son in the Goſpel confeſſed himſelf) to be called the ſons of God; the Centurion in the Goſpel did confeſs himſelf unworthy that Chriſt ſhould enter under his roof; but he declared his perſuaſion, that if Chriſt ſhould only ſpeak a word, his child ſhould be healed; and our Saviour thereupon profeſſes, that he had not found ſo much faith in Iſrael: to the blind men imploring his relief our Saviour puts the queſtion, Do ye believe that I can do this? they anſwered, Yes Lord; he required no more of them; but ſaid thereupon, according to your faith, let it be done unto you. And that for which Abraham the Father of believers his faith is repreſented ſo acceptable, is, his firm perſuaſion concerning God's power; becauſe (ſaith S. Paul) he had a plerophory, that what was promiſed, God was able to perform; by doing thus, he was a believer, and thereby gave glory to God (as the Apoſtle there adds) if we do not then diſtruſt God, we may have faith, although we diſtruſt our ſelves. It is true (generally, and abſolutely ſpeaking) we ſhould endeavour ſo fully and clearly to repent, and to perform whatever God requires of us; that we may thence acquire a good hope concerning our ſtate; we ſhould labour, that our hearts may not condemn us of any preſumptuous tranſgreſſing our duty; and conſequently that we may become in a manner confident of God's favour towards us; but when we have done the beſt we can, even when we are not conſcious of any enormous fault or defect, yet we may conſi-

Jer. 17. 9.

Qui perſeveraverit uſq; ad finem, hic ſalvus erit; quicquid ante finem fuerit, gradus eſt, quo ad faſtigium ſalutis aſcenditur, non terminus, quo jam culminis ſumma teneatur, &c. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl. p. 259.

Luke 15. 19.

Matt. 8. 8, 10.

Matt. 9. 28.
Vid. Matt. 15. 27.

Rom. 4. 21. 11.
Heb. 11. 19.

πληροφορηθείς.

Rom. 4. 20.

Col. 1. 23.
Heb. 3. 6.
1 Joh. 3. 21.

1 Cor. 4. 4. der with S. Paul, that we are not thereby juſtified; but abide liable to the 1 Sam. 16. 7. more certain cogniſance and judgment of God, who ſeeth not as man ſeeth; that we are not capable, or competent judges of our ſelves; nor are ever the better for thinking well of our ſelves; ſince (as 2 Cor. 10. 18. S. Paul tells us again) he is not approved that commends himſelf, but
Pſ. 19. 11. whom the Lord commendeth: for that, delicta ſua quis intelligit? who Prov. 20. 9. can thoroughly underſtand and ſcann his own errors? who can ſay I have made my heart clean, I am purged of my ſin? who can know (if the Pſalmiſt implieth that he could not) until God hath ſearched him and Pſ. 139. 24. diſcovers it, whether there be any ſecret way of wickedneſs in him; whether he be ſufficiently grieved for having offended God, fully humbled under the ſenſe of his ſins, thoroughly reſolved to amend his life? however it often happens that true faith and ſincere repentance are in de-Μὴ ὑψηλοφρόνει, ἀλλὰ φοβοῦ. Rom. 11. 20. gree very defective; in which caſe we may, without prejudicing the truth of our faith, ſuſpect the worſt, yea I conceive it is more ſafe, and commendable ſo to do: if in any, then chiefly, I ſuppoſe, in this moſt important and critical affair, the Wiſe-man's ſentence doth hold, Prov. 28. 14. Bleſſed is he that feareth always; ſo feareth, as Nunquam eſt de ſalute propriâ mens ſecura ſapientis. Salv. ad Eccl. Cath. lib. 2. thereby to become more ſolicitous and watchful over his heart, and ways; more careful and ſtu-2 Pet. 1. 10. dious of ſecuring his ſalvation finally; to render Quem cenſeas digniorem, niſi emendatiorem: quem emendatiorem, niſi timidiorem? Tertul. de Pænit. 6. his calling and election in the event more firm, and in his apprehenſion more hopeful. I dare ſay of two perſons otherwiſe alike qualified, he that upon this ground (fearing his own unworthineſs, or the defect of his performances) is moſt doubtful of his ſtate, doth ſtand really upon better terms with God; as the Phariſee, who juſtified himſelf, and took himſelf to be in a very good condition, was indeed leſs juſtified Luke 18. 14. (ſomewhat the leſs for that conceit of his) than the poor Publican, who 10. 29. was ſenſible of his own unworthineſs, and condemned himſelf in his own opinion: the great danger lies on that hand of being preſumptuous, arrogant and ſelf-conceited, which God hates; and on this hand there uſually lies humility, modeſty and poverty of Spirit, which Luke 16. 15. God loves. As every high thing (every elevation of mind) is abomina-
18. 14. ble in God's ſight; and he depreſſeth him that exalteth himſelf; ſo lowly
2 Sam 22. 28. Pſ. 34. 18. thoughts are gracious in God's regard; he raiſeth him, that humbleth
Eſ. 66. 2. himſelf, and is lowly in his own eyes: he hath an eſpecial reſpect to him, 57. 15. that is of a poor and contrite heart, and trembleth at his word. It is a property of good men (being ſuch as often reflect upon their own Gen. 32. 10. hearts and ways, and thence diſcern the defects in them) with Jacob, Pſ. 119. 120. to think themſelves leſs than the leaſt of God's mercies; with David to Phil. 2. 12. be afraid of God's judgments; it is their duty to paſs the time of their
1 Pet. 1. 17. ſojourning here in fear, to work out their ſalvation with fear and trem-
2 Pet. 1. 10. bling. I may add, that ſometime a perſon much loving God, and Pſ. 102. 6. much beloved of him, may be like a Pelican in the wilderneſs, and an Owle
38. 3. of the deſart; from an apprehenſion of God's anger may have no ſound- neſs in his fleſh, nor reſt in his bones by reaſon of his ſin; may have his 143. 4. ſpirit overwhelmed, and his heart within him deſolate: may fear that
Jer. 5. 25. his ſins have ſeparated between him and his God; and that he is forſaken
Matt. 27. 46. of God; God hiding his face, and withdrawing his light of his counte-
Pſ. 22. 1. Pſ. 30. 7. 89. nance, he may be troubled; may have his ſoul caſt down and diſquieted
46. 42. 5. 69. within him; may be ready to ſay, I am cut off from before thine eyes;
16. 31. 22. even ſuch a man in ſuch a ſtate of diſtreſs and doubt, may continue a believer; he retaining honourable thoughts of God (in which the worth and vertue of true faith conſiſteth) although dejected by the conſcience of his own infirmities, by ſuſpicion of his own indiſpoſitions, and conſequently by the fear of God's diſpleaſure.

Farther, that this Faith doth not eſſentially include a reſpect to ſuch particular propoſitions, or does not (as many in theſe two latter ages have deemed and taught) conſiſt in our being perſuaded that our ſins are pardon'd, or our perſons juſt in God's eſteem; that we are acceptable to God, and ſtand poſſeſſed of his favour, it appears from hence, that faith is in holy Scripture repreſented in nature precedaneous to God's benevolence (eſpecial I mean, not general benevolence, for that prevents all acts and diſpoſitions of us, or in us) to his conferring remiſſion of ſins, accepting and juſtifying our perſons; it is a previous condition, without which (as the Apoſtle teaches us) it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; it is Heb. 11. 6.
a reaſon of God's love (The Father, ſaith our Lord, loves you, becauſe Joh. 16. 27.
ye have loved me, and believed that I came from God) it is a ground of divine acceptation and good-will (Abraham believed him, ſaith Jam. 2. 23.
S. James, and it was accounted unto him for righteouſneſs, and he was called the friend of God) it is a mean, or inſtrument (ſo it is conſtantly repreſented) by which we are juſtified, obtain God's favour, and the remiſſion of our ſins; and therefore is in order of nature previous and prerequiſite thereto; it is therefore required before baptiſm, in which remiſſion of ſins is conſigned: God juſtifies, accepts and pardons him, that hath been impious, but not him that is an infidel: This is the method plainly declared in Scripture; wherefore if faith implies a perſuaſion that God hath remitted our ſins, it muſt imply an antecedent faith (even a juſtifying faith, antecedent to it ſelf,) or that we believe before we believe, and are juſtified before we are juſtified. I add, that by this notion many, or moſt (I will not after the Council of Trent ſay all) humble and modeſt Chriſtians are excluded from being believers; even all thoſe who are not confident of their own ſincerity and ſanctity, and conſequently cannot be aſſured of their ſtanding in God's favour: and on the other ſide, the moſt preſumptuous and fanatical ſort of people are moſt certainly the trueſt and ſtrongeſt believers, as moſt partaking of the moſt eſſential property thereof, according to that notion; for of all men living ſuch are wont to be moſt aſſured of God's eſpecial love unto them, and confident that their ſins are pardoned; Experience ſufficiently ſhews this to be true, and conſequently that ſuch a notion of Faith cannot be good.

Sed fide hoc beneficium accipiendum eſt, quâ credere nos oportet, quòd propter Chriſtum nobis donentur remiſſio peccatorum, & juſtificatio Conf. Aug.

Quum juſtificamur fide, vult te intueri filium Dei ſedentem ad dextram Patris, Mediatorem, interpellantem pro nobis, & ſtatuere, quòd tibi remittantur peccata; quòd juſtus, id eſt acceptus reputeris. Melanct. Loc. com. p. 418.

Much leſs is that notion of faith right, which defines faith to be a firm and certain knowledge of God's eternal good-will toward us particularly, and that we ſhall be ſaved; which notion (taught in the beginning of the Reformation by a man of greateſt name and authority) was thus lately expreſſed by the Profeſſours of Leyden in their Synopſis purioris Theologiæ: Faith (they ſay, in their definition thereof) is a firm aſſent —— by which every believer with a certain truſt reſting in God, is perſuaded not only that remiſſion of ſins is in general promiſed to them who believe, but is granted to himſelf particularly, and eternal righteouſneſs, and from it life, by the mercy of God, &c. which

Calv. Inſt. Lib. 3. §. 7, & 28. compar. Nunc juſta fidei definitio nobis conſtabit, ſi dicamus eſſe divinæ erga nos benevolentiæ firmam, certámq; cognitionem, &c.

Jam in divina benevolentia quam reſpicere dicitur fides, intelligimus ſalutis ac vitæ æternæ poſſeſſionem obtineri, &c.

---firmus aſſenſus-- quo certâ fiduciâ in Deo acquieſcens firmiter unuſquiſq; fidelis ſtatuit, non ſolùm promiſſum eſſe credentibus in genere remiſſionem peccatorum, ſed ſibi in particulari conceſſum, æternámq; juſtitiam, & ex ea vitam, &c.

notion ſeems to be very uncomfortable, as rejecting every man from the company of believers, who is either ignorant or doubtful, not only concerning his preſent, but his final ſtate; who hath not, nor only a good opinion, but a certain knowledge of his preſent ſincerity and ſanctity; yea not only of this, but of his future conſtant perſeverance therein; ſo that if a man be not ſure he hath repented, he is (according to this notion) ſure that he hath not repented, and is no believer: how many good people muſt this doctrine diſcourage and perplex? To remove it, we may conſider, 1. that it altogether inverts and confounds the order of things declared in Scripture, wherein Faith (as we obſerved before) is ſet before obtaining God's good-will, as a prerequiſite condition thereto; and is made a means Heb. 11. 6. of ſalvation (without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; By grace we are Eph. 2. 8. ſaved, through faith.) And if we muſt believe before God loves us, Rom. 10. 9. (with ſuch a love as we ſpeak of) and before we can be ſaved; then muſt we know that we believe before we can know that God loves us, or that we ſhall be ſaved; and conſequently we muſt indeed believe before we can know that God loves us, or that we ſhall be ſaved. But this doctrine makes the knowledge of God's love and of ſalvation in nature antecedent to faith, as being an eſſential ingredient into it; which is prepoſterous: Conſider this circle of diſcourſe: A man cannot know that he believes, without he does believe (this is certain) a man cannot know that he ſhall be ſaved, without knowing he doth believe (this is alſo certain, for upon what ground, from what evidence can he know his ſalvation, but by knowing his faith.) But again backward, A man (ſay they) cannot believe (and conſequently not know that he believes) without being aſſured of his ſalvation: What an inextricable maze and confuſion is here? this doctrine indeed doth make the knowledge of a future event to be the cauſe of its being future; Jam. 2 23. it ſuppoſes God to become our friend (as Abraham was by his faith) by our knowing that he is our friend; it makes us to obtain a reward by knowing that we ſhall obtain it; it ſuppoſes the aſſurance of our coming to a journeys end to be the way of getting thither; which Joh. 17. 3, 8. who can conceive intelligible, or true? Our Saviour doth indeed tell us, that it is the way to life everlaſting (or conducible to the attaining it) to know (that is, to believe, as it is interpreted in the 8*th* verſe of that chapter; for what upon good grounds we are perſuaded of, or judge true, we may be ſaid to know) the true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hath ſent; but he doth not ſay it is life everlaſting (or conducible to the obtaining it) to know, that we ſhall have life ever- 2 Pet. 1. 10. laſting: that were ſomewhat ſtrange to ſay. S. Peter exhorts us to uſe diligence to make our calling and election ſure (or firm, and ſtable) but he doth not bid us know it to be ſure; if we did know it to be ſo, what need ſhould we have to make it ſo; yea how could we make it ſo? he doth not injoin us to be ſure of it in our opinion, but to ſecure it in the event by ſincere obedience, and a holy life; by ſo impreſſing this perſuaſion upon our minds, ſo rooting the love of God and his truth in our hearts, that no temptation may be able to ſubvert our faith, or to pluck out our charity.

2. This notion plainly ſuppoſes the truth of that doctrine, that no man being once in God's favour can ever quite loſe it; the truth of which I ſhall not conteſt now (nor alledge the many clear paſſages of Scripture, nor the whole tenour of the Goſpel, nor the unanimous conſent of all Chriſtendom for fifteen hundred years againſt it) but ſhall only take notice, that their notion of faith neceſſarily preſuppoſing the truth of this doctrine is yet thereby everted: for it follows thence, that no man, who doth not aſſent to that doctrine, is, or can be a believer: for he that is not aſſured of the truth of that opinion (although we ſuppoſe him aſſured of his preſent ſincerity, and being in a ſtate of grace) cannot know that he ſhall be ſaved: So that only ſuch as agree with them in that opinion can be believers, which is ſomewhat hard, or rather very abſurd; and to aggravate this inconvenience I adjoin; 3. that according to their notion ſcarce any man (except ſome have had an eſpecial revelation concerning their ſalvation) before the late alterations in Chriſtendom, was a believer; for before that time it hardly appears, that any man did believe, as they do, that a man cannot fall from grace; and therefore ſcarce any man could be aſſured, that he ſhould be ſaved; and therefore ſcarce any man could be a believer in their ſenſe.

S. Auguſtine himſelf (whoſe ſuppoſed patronage ſtands them in ſo much ſtead upon other occaſions) hath often affirmed, that divers have had given them that faith, that charity, that juſtification, wherein if they had died, they ſhould have been ſaved; who yet were not ſaved: which perſons ſurely, when they were in that good ſtate, (admitting them according to S. Auguſtine's ſuppoſal to have been in it) were as capable of knowing their ſalvation, as any other man can be, yea S. Auguſtine himſelf (conſidering that Accidere cuiquam quod poteſt, cuivis poteſt, what was another man's caſe might be his, there being no ground of difference) could not be more ſure of his own ſalvation at any time, than ſuch perſons were at that time: According to S. Auguſtine's judgment therefore no man could know that he ſhould be ſaved (his ſalvation depending upon perſeverance, which in his opinion not being given to all, muſt as to our knowledge (whatever it might be in reſpect to God's decree) be contingent and uncertain) it follows I ſay upon his ſuppoſitions, yea he expreſly affirms it; (lib. 2. de bono perſ.) Itaq; (ſays he) utrum quiſq; hoc (perſeverantiæ) munus acceperit, quamdiu hanc vitam ducit, incertum eſt: Whether any have received this gift of perſeverance while he leads this life is uncertain. Wherefore S. Auguſtine could not be aſſured of his own ſalvation; and therefore (according to theſe mens ſenſe) he was no believer, no Chriſtian; which I ſuppoſe yet they will not aſſert, though it be ſo plainly conſequent on their own poſition. I might, 4. ask of them, if a man ſhould confeſs ingenuouſly, that although he did hope for mercy from God in that day, yet that he was not aſſured of his ſalvation, whether ſuch a perſon ſhould be rejected from Chriſtian communion, as no believer: it ſeems, according to their notion of faith, he ſhould; ſince by his own (in this particular infallible) judgment it is notorious that he (as being no believer) hath no title unto, or intereſt in the privileges of Chriſtianity; but this proceeding would very much depopulate the Church, and baniſh from it, I fear, the beſt (the moſt humble and modeſt, yea the wiſeſt and ſobereſt) members thereof.

De Corr. & gr. cap. 9 & 13.
De bon. perſev. cap. 8. 13.

---- nec ſibi quiſq; ita notus eſt, ut ſit de ſua craſtina converſatione ſecurus Aug. Ep 121. ad Probam.

In hoc mundo, & in hac vita nulla anima poſſit eſſe ſecura. Ibid.

Quamdiu vivimus, in certamine ſumus, & quamdiu in certamine, nullâ certa eſt victoria. Hier. adv. Pælag 2. 2

But ſo much I think ſuffices for the removal of that new harſh notion, to ſay no worſe of it.

There is another more new than that, deviſed by ſome (who perceived the inconveniences of the former notions, yet it ſeems did affect to ſubſtitute ſome new fine one in their room) which if it be not ſo plainly

Vid Ameſ. Med lib. 1. cap. 27.
Chriſtus adæquatum objectum. Ameſ.

falſe, yet is (it ſeems) more obſcure and intricate: it is this; that Faith is not an aſſent to propoſitions of any kind, but a recumbency, leaning, reſting, rolling upon, adherency to (for they expreſs themſelves in theſe ſeveral terms, and others like them) the perſon of Chriſt; or, an apprehending and applying to our ſelves the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; his perſon it ſelf, and his righteouſneſs, as ſimple incomplex things; not any propoſition (that they expreſly caution againſt) are the objects, ſay they, of our faith: they compare our faith to a hand that lays hold upon Chriſt, and applies his righteouſneſs; and to an eye that looks upon him, and makes him preſent to us; and by looking on him (as on the brazen Serpent) cures us: but this notion is ſo intricate, theſe phraſes are ſo unintelligible, that I ſcarce believe the deviſers of them did themſelves know what they meant by them; I do not, I am ſure: for what it is for one body to lean upon, or to be rolled on another; what for one body to reach at, and lay hold upon another; what it is to apply a garment to one's body, or a ſalve to one's wounds, I can eaſily underſtand; but what it is for a man's mind to lean upon a perſon (otherwiſe than by aſſenting unto ſome propoſition he ſpeaks, or relying upon ſome promiſe he makes) to apply a thing, otherwiſe than by conſenting to ſome propoſition concerning that thing, I cannot apprehend, or reach, there is not (as we noted before) any faculty or operation of a man's mind, which anſwers the intent of ſuch notions or phraſes. Let me put this caſe: ſuppoſe a great Province had generally revolted from its Sovereign, whereby the People thereof had all deſerved extreme puniſhment ſutable to ſuch an offence; but that the King moved with pity, and upon the interceſſion of his only beloved Son (together with a ſatisfaction offered and performed by him) ſhould reſolve to grant a general pardon to them, upon juſt, and fit, and withall, very eaſie terms; And that for the execution of this gracious purpoſe toward them, he ſhould depute and ſend his Son himſelf among them to treat with them, by him declaring his merciful intentions toward them, with the conditions, upon complyance wherewith all, or any of them ſhould be pardon'd their offence, and received into favour; thoſe conditions being, ſuppoſe it, that firſt they ſhould receive and acknowledge his Son for ſuch as he profeſſed himſelf to be (the King's Son indeed, who truly brought ſuch a meſſage unto them from his Majeſty) then that they ſhould ſeriouſly reſolve with themſelves, and ſolemnly engage to return unto their due allegiance; undertaking faithfully for ever after to obſerve thoſe laws, which the ſaid Prince in his Father's name ſhould propound unto them. Suppoſe farther, that the Prince in purſuance of this commiſſion and deſign, being come into the Country, ſhould there ſend all about Officers of his injoining them to diſcover the intent of his coming, what he offered, and upon what terms; withall, impowering them in his name to receive thoſe, who complied, into favour, declaring them pardoned of all their offences, and reſtored to the benefit of the King's protection, and all the privileges of loyal ſubjects; ſuppoſe now, that theſe Officers ſhould go to the people, and ſpeak to them in this manner: The King makes an overture of pardon and favour unto you upon condition, that any one of you will recumbe, reſt, lean upon, or roll himſelf upon the perſon of his Son (reſt upon his perſon, not only rely upon his word, that you are to underſtand) or in caſe you will lay hold upon, and apply to your ſelves his Son's righteouſneſs, by which he hath procured of the King his Father, this mercy and favour for you (not only being perſuaded that he hath performed thus much for you, this is not enough) do you think theſe meſſengers ſhould thus well expreſs themſelves, or perform their meſſage handſomely and with advantage? ſhould not they do much better, laying aſide ſuch words of metaphor and myſtery, to ſpeak in plain language; telling them, that their King his Son (by plain characters diſcernable to be truly ſuch) was come among them upon ſuch an intention; that if they would acknowledge him, and undertake thereafter to obey him, they ſhould receive a full pardon, with divers other great favours and advantages thereby? the caſe is apparently ſo like to that which ſtands between God and man, and doth ſo fully reſemble the nature of the Evangelical diſpenſation, that I need not make any application, or uſe any more argument to refute that notion; I ſhall only ſay that I conceive theſe new phraſes (for ſuch they are) not known to ancient Chriſtians, no delivered, either in terms, or ſenſe in Scripture, for the places alledged in favour or proof of them by Ames, one of the firſt broachers of them, (all we may preſume that they could find any-wiſe ſeeming to favour their notion) do not, as if time would permit might eaſily be ſhewed, import any ſuch thing, but are ſtrangely miſapplied) that I ſay theſe phraſes do much obſcure the nature of this great duty, and make the ſtate of things in the Goſpel, more difficult and dark than it truly is; and thereby ſeem to be of bad conſequence, being apt to beget in people both dangerous preſumptions and ſad perplexities: for they hearing that they are only, or mainly bound to have ſuch a recumbency upon Chriſt, or to make ſuch an application of his righteouſneſs, they begin (accordingly as they take themſelves to be directed) to work their minds to it; and when they have hit upon that poſture of fancy, which they gueſs to ſute their Teachers meaning, then they become ſatisfied, and conceit they believe well, although perhaps they be ignorant of the principles of the Chriſtian faith, and indiſpoſed to obey the precepts of our Lord: ſometimes, on the other ſide, although they well underſtand, and are perſuaded concerning the truth of all neceſſary Chriſtian doctrines, and are well diſpoſed to obſerve God's commandments, yet becauſe they cannot tell whether they apprehend Chriſt's perſon dexterouſly, or apply to themſelves his righteouſneſs in the right manner, as is preſcribed to them (of which it is no wonder that they ſhould doubt, ſince it is ſo hard to know what the doing ſo means) they become diſturbed and perplexed in their minds; queſtioning whether they do believe or no: Thus by theſe notions (or phraſes rather) are ſome men tempted fondly to preſume, and other good people are wofully diſcouraged by them; both being thence diverted, or withdrawn from their duty: whereas what it is to believe, as Chriſtians anciently did underſtand it, and as we have aſſayed to explain it, is very eaſie to conceive; and the taking it ſo, can have no other than very good influence upon practice, as both reaſon (as we have inſinuated) ſhews, and the Scripture largely and plainly affirms. But let thus much ſuffice for the enquiry concerning the genuine nature and notion of Faith proper to this place (that faith by which in this Text we are ſaid to be Juſtified) the other particulars I cannot ſo much as touch upon at this time.

I end with thoſe good prayers of our Church:

O Lord, from whom all good things do come, Grant to us thy humble ſervants, that by thy holy inſpiration we may think thoſe things that

Fifth Sunday fter Eaſter.

be good; and by thy merciful guiding may perform the ſame, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

14th. Sunday after Trinity. Almighty and Everlaſting Lord, give unto us the encreaſe of faith, hope and charity, and that we may obtain that which thou doſt promiſe, make us to love that which thou doſt command, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

I Believe, &c.

SERMON V.

OF JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

ROM. V. 1.

Therefore being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

IN order to the underſtanding of theſe words I did formerly propound divers particulars to be conſidered and diſcuſſed: the firſt was, What that Faith is, by which Chriſtians are ſaid to be juſtified? This I have diſpatched: The next is, What Juſtification doth import? the which I ſhall now endeavour to explain; and I am concerned to perform it with the more care and diligence, becauſe the right notion of this term hath in latter times been canvaſed with ſo much vehemence of diſſenſion and ſtrife.

In former times, among the Fathers and the School-men, there doth not appear to have been any difference or debate about it; becauſe (as it ſeems) men commonly having the ſame apprehenſions about the matters, to which the word is applicable, did not ſo much examine or regard the ſtrict propriety of expreſſion concerning them: conſenting in things, they did not fall to cavil and contend about the exact meaning of words. They did indeed conſider diſtinctly no ſuch point of doctrine as that of juſtification, looking upon that word as uſed incidentally in ſome places of Scripture; for expreſſion of points more clearly expreſſed in other terms; wherefore they do not make much of the word, as ſome Divines now do.

Περὶ λεξειδίων μικρολογεῖν. Naz.

But in the beginning of the Reformation, when the diſcovery of ſome great errors (from the corruption and ignorance of former times) crept into vogue, rendred all things the ſubjects of contention, and multiplied controverſies, there did ariſe hot diſputes about this Point; and the right ſtating thereof ſeemed a matter of great importance; nor ſcarce was any controverſie proſecuted with greater zeal and earneſtneſs: whereas yet (ſo far as I can diſcern) about the real Points of doctrine, whereto this word (according to any ſenſe pretended) may relate, there hardly doth appear any material difference; and all the Queſtions depending, chiefly ſeem to conſiſt about the manner of expreſſing things, which all agree in; or about the extent of the ſignification of words capable of larger, or ſtricter acception: whence the debates about this Point among all ſober and intelligent perſons might (as I conceive) eaſily be reſolved, or appeaſed, if men had a mind to agree, and did not love to wrangle; if at leaſt a conſent in believing the ſame things, although under ſome difference of expreſſion, would content them, ſo as to forbear ſtrife.

Articulus ſtantis, & cadentis Eccleſiæ, Luth.

To make good which obſervation, tending as well to the illuſtration of the whole matter, as to the ſtating and deciſion of the controverſies about it, let us conſider the ſeveral divine acts, to which the term Juſtification is, according to any ſenſe pretended, applicable: I ſay divine acts; for that the juſtification we treat of is an act of God ſimple or compound (in ſome manner) reſpecting, or terminated upon man, is evident, and will not I ſuppoſe be conteſted; the words of S. Paul in ſeveral places ſo clearly declaring it; as in that, Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? it is God that juſtifieth, and in that, To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs: Now according to the tenour of Chriſtian doctrine ſuch acts are theſe.

Rom. 8. 33.
4. 5. 3. 26.

1. God (in regard to the obedience performed to his will by his beloved Son, and to his interceſſion) is ſo reconciled to mankind, that unto every perſon, who doth ſincerely believe the Goſpel, and (repenting of his former bad life) doth ſeriouſly reſolve thereafter to live according to it, he doth (upon the ſolemn obſignation of that faith, and profeſſion of that reſolution in Baptiſm) entirely remit all paſt offences, accepting his perſon, receiving him into favour; aſſuming him into the ſtate of a loyal ſubject, a faithful ſervant, a dutiful Son; and beſtowing on him all the benefits and privileges ſutable to ſuch a ſtate; according to thoſe paſſages: It behoved Chriſt to ſuffer ---- and that repentance, and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his name among all nations: Then Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins; and, To him give all the Prophets witneſs, that through his name, whoſoever believeth

Luke 24. 47.
Act. 2. 38.
3. 19. 5. 31.
Act. 10. 43.
2 Cor. 5. 19.

in

Rom. 3. 24, 25. in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins; and, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their ſins; and in other places innumerable.

2. As any perſon perſiſting in that ſincere faith, and ſerious purpoſe of obedience, doth aſſuredly continue in that ſtate of grace and exemption from the guilt of ſin, ſo in caſe that out of humane frailty ſuch a perſon doth fall into the commiſſion of ſin, God (in regard to the ſame performances and interceſſions of his Son) doth upon the confeſſion and repentance of ſuch a perſon remit his ſin, and retain him in or reſtore 1 Joh. 1. 9. 2. 1. him to favour; according to thoſe ſayings of S. John: If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful, and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs; and, If any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father Jeſus Chriſt, the righteous.

3. To each perſon ſincerely embracing the Goſpel, and continuing in ſtedfaſt adherence thereto, God doth afford his holy Spirit, as a principle productive of all inward ſanctity and vertuous diſpoſitions in his heart, enabling alſo and quickning him to diſcharge the conditions of faith, and obedience required from him, and undertaken by him; that Rom. 8. 14. Gal. 4. 6. 1 Cor. 2. 12. 2 Tim. 2. 7. Act. 2. 38. Rom. 8. 9. Tit. 3. 5. (Eph. 2. 22.) Eph. 2. 10. 4. 23. which is by ſome termed making a perſon juſt, infuſion into his Soul of righteouſneſs, of grace, of vertuous habits; in the Scripture ſtyle it is called acting by the Spirit, beſtowing the gift of the holy Ghoſt, renovation of the holy Ghoſt, creation to good works, ſanctification by the Spirit, &c. which phraſes denote partly the collation of a principle enabling to perform good works, partly the deſign of religion tending to that performance.

Now all theſe acts (as by the general conſent of Chriſtians, and according to the ſenſe of the ancient Catholick Church, ſo) by all conſiderable Parties ſeeming to diſſent, and ſo earneſtly diſputing about the Point of Juſtification, are acknowledged and aſcribed unto God; but with which of them the act of Juſtification is ſolely or chiefly coincident; whether it ſignifieth barely ſome one of them, or extendeth to more of them, or comprehendeth them all (according to the conſtant meaning of the word in Scripture) are queſtions coming under debate, and ſo eagerly proſecuted: Of which queſtions whatever the true reſolution be, it cannot methinks be of ſo great conſequence, as to cauſe any great anger or animoſity in diſſenters one toward another, ſeeing they all conſpire in avowing the acts, whatever they be, meant by the word Juſtification, although in other terms; ſeeing all the diſpute is about the preciſe and adequate notion of the word Juſtification: whence thoſe queſtions might well be waved as unneceſſary grounds of contention; and it might ſuffice to underſtand the points of doctrine which it relateth to in other terms, laying that aſide as ambiguous and litigious. Yet becauſe the underſtanding the rightеſt, or moſt probable notion of the word may ſomewhat conduce to the interpretation of the Scriptures, and to clearing the matters couched in it, ſomewhat alſo to the ſatisfaction of perſons conſiderate and peaceable, I ſhall employ ſome care faithfully (without partiality to any ſide) to ſearch it out, and declare it: in order whereto I ſhall propound ſome Obſervations, ſeeming material.

I. Whereas it were not hard to ſpeak much, and criticiſe about the primitive ſenſe of the word, and about its various acceptions both in holy Scripture and other Writings, I do queſtion whether doing that Verba valent uſu nummi. would be pertinent, or conducible to our purpoſe of underſtanding its right notion here: for knowing the primitive ſenſe of words can ſeldom dom or never determine their meaning any where, they often in common uſe declining from it; and the knowing variety of acceptions doth at moſt yield only the advantage of chuſing one ſutable to the ſubjacent matter and occaſion. We are not therefore to learn the ſenſe of this word from mere Grammarians.

II. The ſenſe of this word is not to be ſearched in extraneous Writers; both becauſe no matter like to that we treat upon did ever come into their uſe or conſideration, and becauſe they do ſeldom or never uſe the word in a ſenſe any-wiſe congruous to this matter: in them moſt commonly the word δικαιόω doth ſignifie (as the like word ἀξιόω) to deem a thing juſt, equal, or fit (or ſimply to deem about a thing.) Sometimes alſo (yet not often, as I take it) being applied to an action, or cauſe, it importeth to make it appear lawful, or juſt, as when we ordinarily ſay to juſtifie what one ſaith or doeth; (whence δικαίωμα in Ariſtotle is an argument proving the juſtice of a cauſe, firmamentum cauſæ) but in them very ſeldom or never it is applied to perſons; and an example, I conceive, can hardly be produced, wherein it is ſo uſed.

Ἐδικαίωσαν, ἀντὶ τοῦ δίκαιον ἔκριναν. Balſ. in Syn. Chalced. Can. 1.

III. In the Sacred Writings at large it is commonly applied to perſons, and that according to various ſenſes, ſome more wide and general, ſome more reſtrained and particular. It there ſometime denoteth generally to exerciſe any judicial act upon, in regard unto, or in behalf of a perſon; to do him right, or juſtice, in declaring the merit of his cauſe, or pronouncing ſentence about him; in acquitting, or condemning him for any cauſe, in obliging him to, or exempting him from any burthen, in diſpenſing to him any reward or puniſhment, indifferently: thus Abſalom ſaid, O that I were made a judge in the land, that every man, which hath any ſute or cauſe might come unto me, והצדקתיו, καὶ δικαιώσω αὐτὸν, and I would juſtifie him, that is, I would do him right: and, in the 82. Pſalm this charge is given to the Princes, or Judges; Defend the poor, and fatherleſs, הצדיקו, δικαιώσατε, juſtifie the poor and needy; that is, do right, and juſtice to them.

2 Sam. 15. 4.
Pſ. 82. 3.

But more particularly the word ſignifieth (and that according to the moſt uſual and current acception) ſo to do a man right, as to pronounce ſentence in his favour, as to acquit him from guilt, to excuſe him from burthen, to free him from puniſhment; whence we moſt often meet with the word placed in direct oppoſition to that of condemnation: as in that law, If there be a controverſie between men, and they come unto judgment, that the Judges may judge them, then they ſhall juſtifie the righteous, and condemn the wicked: And in Solomon's prayer; Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy ſervants, condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head, and juſtifying the righteaus, to give him according to his righteouſneſs: and in the Proverbs, He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the juſt, even both are an abomination unto the Lord: And, in the Goſpel our Saviour ſaith; By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned.

Deut. 25. 1.
1 King 8. 32.
2 Chr. 6. 23.
Prov. 17. 15.
Matt. 12. 37.
(Eſ. 5. 23.
43. 9)

In conſequence upon this ſenſe, and with a little deflection from it, to juſtifie a perſon ſometime denoteth to approve him, or eſteem him juſt, a mental judgment, as it were, being paſſed upon him; ſo wiſdom is ſaid to be juſtified, that is, approved by her children: So in the Goſpel ſome perſons are ſaid to juſtifie themſelves, that is, to conceit themſelves righteous: and the Publican went home juſtified rather than the Phariſee, that is, more approved and accepted by God: So alſo it is ſaid, that All the people, and the Publicans juſtified God, being baptized with John's baptiſm; they juſtified God, that is, they declared their approbation of God's proceeding, in the miſſion of John.

Matt. 11. 19.
Luke 10. 29.
16. 15.
Luke 18. 14.
Luke 7. 29.

In like manner, Juſtification is taken for exemption from burthens; Act. 13. 39. as where in the Acts S. Paul ſaith, And from all things, from which by the law of Moſes ye could not be juſtified, in this is every one that believeth juſtified.

It may alſo ſometimes be taken for deliverance from puniſhment; as Exod. 23. 7. where in the Law God ſaith: The innocent and righteous ſlay thou not; for I will not juſtifie the wicked; that is, not let him eſcape with impunity; according to that in the Proverbs; Though hand joyn in hand the wicked ſhall not go unpuniſhed.

IV. We may obſerve, that (as every man hath ſome phraſes and particular forms of ſpeech in which he delighteth, ſo) this term is ſomewhat peculiar to S. Paul, and hardly by the other Apoſtles applyed to that matter, which he expreſſeth thereby: they uſually in their Sermons, and Epiſtles, do ſpeak the ſame thing (whatever it be) in Act. 13. 38. 2. 38. 3. 19. 5. 30. 10. 43. 22. 16. Luke 24. 47. other terms, more immediately expreſſive of the matter. S. James indeed doth uſe it, but not ſo much, it ſeemeth, according to his uſual manner of ſpeech, as occaſionally; to refute the falſe and peſtilent conceits of ſome perſons, who miſtaking S. Paul's expreſſions and doctrine, did pervert them to the maintenance of Solifidian, Eunomian and Antinomian poſitions, greatly prejudicial to good practice. And ſeeing the term is ſo proper to S. Paul in relation to this matter, the right ſenſe and notion thereof ſeemeth beſt derivable from conſidering the nature of the ſubject he treateth on, obſerving the drift of his diſcourſe and manner of his reaſoning, comparing the other phraſes he uſeth equivalent to this, and interpretative of his meaning.

V. Following this method of enquiry, I do obſerve and affirm that the laſt notion of the Word, as it is evidently moſt uſual in the Scripture, ſo it beſt ſuteth to the meaning of S. Paul here, and otherwhere commonly, where he treateth upon the ſame matters; that God's juſtifying ſolely, or chiefly, doth import his acquitting us from guilt, condemnation and puniſhment, by free pardon and remiſſion of our ſins, accounting us, and dealing with us as juſt perſons, upright and innocent in his ſight and eſteem: the truth of which notion I ſhall by divers arguments and conſiderations make good.

1. This ſenſe doth beſt agree to the nature of the ſubject matter, and to the deſign of S. Paul's diſcourſe; which I take to be this, the aſſerting the neceſſity, reaſonableneſs, ſufficiency and excellency of the Chriſtian diſpenſation in order to that, which is the end of all Religion, the bringing men to happineſs, and conſequently to the rendring men acceptable to God Almighty, who is the ſole Author and donour of happineſs; this is that, which in general he aimeth to aſſert and maintain.

This, I ſay, is that which he chiefly driveth at, to maintain, that it is not unreaſonable that God ſhould ſo proceed with men (whoſe good and felicity, as their gracious Maker, he greatly tendreth,) as the Chriſtian Goſpel declareth him to do, but that rather ſuch proceeding was neceſſary and fit in order to our ſalvation; and withall conformable to the ordinary method of God's proceedings toward the ſame purpoſe.

Now God's proceeding with man according to the Goſpel, the general tenour thereof doth ſet out to be this; that, God, out of his infinite goodneſs and mercy, in conſideration of what his beloved Son, our bleſſed Lord hath performed and ſuffered, in obedience to his will, and for the redemption of mankind (which by tranſgreſſion of his laws and defailance in duty toward him had grievouſly offended him and fallen from his favour, was involved in guilt, and ſtood obnoxious to puniſhment) is become reconciled to them (paſſing by, and fully pardoning all offences by them committed againſt him) ſo as generally to proffer mercy upon certain reaſonable and gentle terms, to all that ſhall ſincerely embrace ſuch overtures of mercy, and heartily reſolve to comply with thoſe terms, required by him; namely, the returning and adhering to him, forſaking all impiety and iniquity, conſtantly perſiſting in faithful obedience to his holy commandments: this, I ſay, is the proceeding of God, which the Chriſtian Goſpel doth eſpecially hold forth, and which according to our Lord's commiſſion and command the Apoſtles did firſt preach to men; as whoſoever will conſider the drift and tenour of their preaching, will eaſily diſcern; which therefore S. Paul may reaſonably be ſuppoſed here to aſſert and vindicate againſt the Jews, and other Adverſaries of the Goſpel; conſequently the terms he uſeth ſhould be ſo interpreted as to expreſs that matter; whence being juſtified, will imply that which a perſon embracing the Goſpel doth immediately receive from God, in that way of grace and mercy; viz. an abſolution from his former crimes, an acquittance from his debts, a ſtate of innocence and guiltleſneſs in God's ſight, an exemption from vengeance and puniſhment; all that which by him ſometimes, and by the other Apoſtles is couched under the phraſes of remiſſion of ſins, having ſins blotted out and waſhed away, being cleanſed from ſin; and the like: Thus conſidering the nature of the matter, and deſign of his diſcourſe, would incline us to underſtand this word.

Luke 24. 47.

Act. 13. 38.
22. 16. 2. 38.
3. 19. 5. 31.
1 Joh. 1. 7.

2. Again, the manner of his proſecuting his diſcourſe, and the arguments by which he inferreth his concluſions concerning the Goſpel, do confirm this notion. He diſcourſeth, and proveth at large, that all mankind, both Jews and Gentiles, were ſhut up under ſin, that all had ſinned and did fall ſhort of the glory of God (that is, of rendring him his due glory by dutiful obedience) that every mouth was ſtopped, having nothing to ſay in defence of their tranſgreſſions, and that all the world ſtood obnoxious to the ſeverity of God's judgments; that not only the light of nature was inſufficient to preſerve men from offending inexcuſably, even according to the verdict of their own conſciences, but that the written Law of God had (to manifold experience) proved ineffectual to that purpoſe, ſerving rather to work wrath, to bring men under a curſe, to aggravate their guilt, to convince them of their ſinfulneſs, to diſcourage and perplex them; upon which general ſtate of men (ſo implicated in guilt, ſo lyable to wrath) is conſequent a neceſſity either of condemnation and puniſhment, or of mercy and pardon.

Rom. 3. 9. 11.
12. 3. 19, 23.
Gal. 3. 22.

ὑπόχρεως
ὑπόδικ☉.

Rom. 8. 3.
Gal. 3. 21.
Rom. 4. 15.
3. 20. 7. 7.
Gal. 2. 16, 20.
Rom. 5. 20.
7. 8.

He doth alſo imply (that which in the Epiſtle to the Galatians, where he proſecuteth the ſame argument, is more expreſly delivered) that no precedent diſpenſation had exhibited any manifeſt overture, or promiſe of pardon; for the light of nature doth only direct unto duty, condemning every man in his own judgment and conſcience, who tranſgreſſeth it, but as to pardon in caſe of tranſgreſſion it is blind and ſilent; and the law of Moſes rigorouſly exacteth punctual obedience, denouncing in expreſs terms a condemnation and curſe to the tranſgreſſours thereof in any part; from whence he collecteth, that no man can be juſtified by the works of the Law, (natural, or Moſaical; or that no precedent diſpenſation can juſtifie any man) and that a man is juſtified by faith, or hath abſolute need of ſuch a juſtification as that, which

Rom. 1. 20.
2. 15.
Gal. 3. 10, 12.

Rom. 3. 20.

which the Goſpel declareth and tendreth; λογιζόμεθα οὖν, we hence (ſaith he) collect, or argue, that a man is juſtified by faith, without the works of the Law: which juſtification muſt therefore import the receiving that free pardon, which the criminal and guilty world did ſtand in need of, which the forlorn and deplorable ſtate of mankind did groan for, without which no man could have any comfort in his mind, any hope, or any capacity of ſalvation. If the ſtate of Man was a ſtate of rebellion, and conſequently of heinous guilt, of having forfeited God's favour, of obnoxiouſneſs to God's wrath; then that juſtification, which was needful, was a diſpenſation of mercy, remitting that guilt, and removing thoſe penalties.

Again, S. Paul commendeth the excellency of the Evangelical diſpenſation from hence, that it entirely doth aſcribe the juſtification of men to God's mercy and favour, excluding any merit of man, any right or title thereto grounded upon what Man hath performed; conſequently advancing the glory of God, and depreſſing the vanity of Rom 4. 2, 4. Man: If (ſaith he) Abraham were juſtified by works, he had whereof 3. 27. to boaſt, for that to him, who worketh, wages are not reckoned as beſtowed Tit. 3. 5. Eph. 2. 9. in favour, but are paid as debt; ſo it would be, if men were juſtified Rom. 11. 6. by works, they might claim to themſelves the due conſequences thereof, impunity and reward; they would be apt to pleaſe themſelves, and boaſt of the effects ariſing from their own performances; but if, Rom. 3. 24. as the Goſpel teacheth, men are juſtified freely (gratis) by God's mercy and grace, without any regard to what they formerly have done, either good, or bad, thoſe who have lived wickedly and impiouſly (upon their compliance with the terms propoſed to them) being no leſs caRom. 4. 5. pable thereof, than the moſt righteous and pious perſons; then where Rom. 3. 27. is boaſting? it is excluded; then ſurely no man can aſſume any thing to Eph. 2. 9. himſelf, then all the glory and praiſe are due to God's frank goodneſs: the purport of which reaſoning (ſo often uſed) doth imply, that a man's juſtification ſignifieth his being accepted or approved as juſt, ſtanding rectus in curia, being in God's eſteem, and by his ſentence abſolved from guilt and puniſhment, the which cannot otherwiſe be obtained, than from divine favour declared and exhibited in the Goſ- Eph. 1. 6. pel; according as S. Paul otherwhere fully ſpeaketh: To the praiſe of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved; in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace.

Again, S. Paul expreſſeth Juſtification as an act of judgment, performed by God, whereby he declareth his own righteouſneſs, or juſtice; that juſtice conſiſting in acceptance of a competent ſatisfaction offered to him in amends for the debt due to him, and in reparation of the injury done unto him, in conſequence thereof acquitting the debtor, and Rom. 3. 24. remitting the offence; ſo thoſe words declare: Being juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus; whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God; to declare at this time his righteouſneſs, that he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him, which believeth in Jeſus: Juſtification there we ſee is expreſſed a reſult of Chriſt's redemption, and the act of God conſequent thereon; ſo is remiſſion of ſins; God by them jointly demonſtrating his juſtice, and goodneſs, ſo that they may be well conceived the ſame thing diverſly expreſſed, or having ſeveral names according to ſome divers formalities of reſpect. So in other places, ſometimes times juſtification, ſometimes remiſſion of ſins are reckoned the proper and immediate effects of our Saviour's paſſion: Being (ſaith S. Paul in the 5th to the Romans) juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved Rom 5. 9. by him from wrath: and In whom (ſaith he again in the firſt of the Epi- Eph. 1. 7. ſtle to the Epheſians) we have redemption through his blood, the forgive- Col. 1. 14. neſs of ſins; which argueth the equivalency of theſe terms.

So likewiſe a main point of the Evangelical Covenant on God's Gal. 3 per. tot. part is made juſtifying of a man by his faith, or upon it; and remiſ- Rom. 11. 27. ſion of ſins upon the ſame condition, is alſo made the like principal point, which ſometime is put alone as implying all the benefits of that covenant.

Again, juſtification is by S. Paul made the immediate conſequent, or ſpecial adjunct of Baptiſm; therein he ſaith we die to ſin (by reſolu- Rom. 6. 2. tion and engagement to lead a new life in obedience to God's commandment) and ſo dying we are ſaid to be juſtified from ſin (that Rom. 6. 6, 7. which otherwiſe is expreſſed, or expounded by being freed from ſin;) now 6. 18, 22. the freedom from ſin obtained in Baptiſm is frequently declared to be the remiſſion of ſin then conferred, and ſolemnly confirmed by a viſible ſeal.

Whereas alſo ſo frequently we are ſaid to be juſtified by faith, and according to the general tenour of Scripture the immediate conſequent of faith is Baptiſm; therefore diſpenſing the benefits conſigned in Bap- Eph. 5. 26. tiſm is coincident with juſtification; and that diſpenſation is frequently Tit. 3. 5. ſignified to be the cleanſing us from ſin by entire remiſſion thereof. Act. 13. 38. 22. 16.

3. Farther, The ſame notion may be confirmed by comparing this term with other terms and phraſes equivalent, or oppoſite to this of juſtification.

One equivalent phraſe is imputation of righteouſneſs: As (ſaith S. Paul) David ſpeaketh of that man's bleſſedneſs, unto whom God im- Rom. 4. 6. puteth righteouſneſs without works; Bleſſed are they, whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered; Bleſſed is the man, to whom the Lord will not impute ſin; whence to him that conſiders the drift and force of S. Paul's diſcourſe it will clearly appear, that juſtification, imputing righteouſneſs, not imputing ſin, and remiſſion of ſin are the ſame thing; otherwiſe the Apoſtle's diſcourſe would not ſignifie or conclude any thing.

For confirmation of his diſcourſe (arguing free juſtification by God's mercy, not for our works) S. Paul alſo doth alledge that place in the Rom. 3. 20. Pſalm, For in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified; the ſenſe of Gal. 2. 16. Pſ. 143. 2. which place is evidently this, that no man living, his actions being ſtrictly tried and weighed, ſhall appear guiltleſs, or deſerve to be acquitted; but ſhall ſtand in need of mercy, or can no otherwiſe be juſtified than by a ſpecial act of grace.

Again, imputing faith for righteouſneſs is the ſame with juſtifying by faith (Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righte- Rom. 4. 3. 22. ouſneſs) but that imputation is plainly nothing elſe, but the approving Gal. 3. 6. him, and taking him for a righteous perſon in regard to his faith.

Again, juſtification is the ſame with being righteous before God, as appeareth by thoſe words: Not the hearers of the Law are juſt before God, but the doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified; but being juſt before Rom. 2. 13. God, plainly ſignifieth nothing elſe but being accepted by God, or approved to his eſteem and judgment.

Being reconciled to God ſeemeth alſo to be the ſame with being juſtified by him; as appeareth by thoſe words, Much more then being now juſtified Rom. 5. 9, 10.

by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him; for if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life: where πολλῷ μᾶλλον δικαιωθέντες, and πολλῷ μᾶλλον καταλλαγέντες, ſeem to ſignifie the ſame; 2 Cor. 5. 19. but that reconciliation is interpreted by remiſſion of ſins: God was in Chriſt, reconciling the World unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.

Rom. 11. 30, 31, 32. 1 Pet. 2. 10. To obtain mercy is another term ſignifying juſtification, and what doth that import but having the remiſſion of ſins in mercy beſtowed on us?

Rom. 5. 16, 18. Again, Juſtification is oppoſed directly to condemnation: As (ſaith he) by the offence of one man (judgment came) upon all men to condemnation, ſo by the righteouſneſs of one man (the free gift came) upon all men to juſtification of life (juſtification of life, that is, a juſtification ſo relating to life, or beſtowing a promiſe thereof, as the condemnation oppoſite thereto reſpected death, which it threatned.) In which place S. Paul comparing the firſt Adam with his actions, and their conſequences, to the ſecond Adam with his performances, and what reſulted from them, teacheth us, that as the tranſgreſſion of the firſt did involve mankind in guilt, and brought conſequently upon men a general ſentence of death, (foraſmuch as all men did follow him in commiſſion of ſin;) ſo the obedience of the ſecond did abſolve all men from guilt, and reſtored them conſequently into a ſtate of immortality (all men, V. 17. under the condition preſcribed, who (as it is ſaid) ſhould receive the abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs tendered to them;) the juſtification therefore he ſpeaketh of doth ſo import an abſolution from guilt and puniſhment, as the condemnation ſignifieth a being declared guilty, and adjudged to puniſhment.

Bellarm. de Juſtif. 2. 3. 1. 1. Bellarmine indeed (who in anſwering to this place objected againſt his doctrine, blunders extremely, and is put to his trumps of Sophiſtry) telleth us, that in this place to maintain the parallel or antitheſis between Adam and Chriſt, juſtification muſt ſignifie infuſion of grace, or putting into a man's ſoul an inherent righteouſneſs; becauſe Adam's ſin did conſtitute us unjuſt with an inherent unrighteouſneſs: but (with his favour) juſtification and condemnation being both of them the acts of God, and it being plain, that God condemning doth not infuſe any inherent unrighteouſneſs into man, neither doth he juſtifying (formally) (if the antitheſis muſt be patt,) put any inherent righteouſneſs into him: inherent unrighteouſneſs in the former caſe may be a conſequent of that condemnation, and inherent righteouſneſs may be connected with this juſtification; but neither that, nor this may formally ſignifie thoſe qualities reſpectively: as the inherent unrighteouſneſs conſequent upon Adam's ſin is not included in God's condemning, ſo neither is the inherent righteouſneſs proceeding from our Saviour's obedience contained in God's juſtifying men.

But however moſt plainly (and beyond all evaſions) juſtification and condemnation are oppoſed otherwhere in this Epiſtle: Who (ſaith Rom. 8. 33, 34. Τις ἐγκαλέσει κτλ... S. Paul) ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? (or criminate againſt them) 'tis God who juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth? what can be more clear, than that there juſtification ſignifieth abſolution from all guilt and blame?

4. Farther, this notion may be confirmed, by excluding that ſenſe, which in oppoſition thereto is aſſigned, according to which juſtification is ſaid to import not only remiſſion of ſin, and acceptance with God, but the making a man intrinſecally righteous, by infuſing into him (as they ſpeak) a habit of grace, or charity; the putting into a man a righteouſneſs, by which (as the Council of Trent expreſſeth it) We are renewed in the ſpirit of our mind, and are not only reputed, but are called, and become truly righteous, receiving righteouſneſs in our ſelves.

Bell. I. 3.
Juſtitiam in nobis recipientes.

Now admitting this to be true, as in a ſenſe it ſurely is, that whoever (according to S. Paul's meaning in this Epiſtle) is juſtified, is alſo really at the ſame time endewed with ſome meaſure of that intrinſick righteouſneſs, which thoſe men ſpeak of (for as much as that faith, which is required to juſtification, (being a gift of God, managed by his providence, and wrought by his preventing grace,) doth include a ſincere and ſtedfaſt purpoſe of forſaking all impiety, of amendment of life, of obedience to God, which purpoſe cleanſeth the heart, and is apt to produce as well inward righteouſneſs of heart, as outward righteouſneſs of practice; for that alſo to every ſound believer upon his faith is beſtowed the ſpirit of God, as a principle of righteouſneſs, dwelling in him, directing, admoniſhing, exciting him to do well; aſſiſting and enabling him ſufficiently to the performance of thoſe conditions, or thoſe duties, which Chriſtianity requireth, and the believer thereof undertaketh; which, the man's honeſt and diligent endeavour concurring, will ſurely beget the practice of all righteouſneſs, and in continuance of ſuch practice will render it habitual) avowing, I ſay, willingly, that ſuch a righteouſneſs doth ever accompany the juſtification S. Paul ſpeaketh of, yet that ſort of righteouſneſs doth not ſeem implied by the word Juſtification, according to S. Paul's intent, in thoſe places, where he diſcourſeth about juſtification by faith; for that ſuch a ſenſe of the word doth not well conſiſt with the drift and efficacy of his reaſoning, nor with divers paſſages in his diſcourſe. For

Rom. 8. 9.
1 Cor. 3. 16.
Act. 2. 38.
Eph. 4. 23, 24.
2 Cor. 5. 17.

1. Whereas S. Paul from the general depravation of manners in all men (both Jews and Gentiles) argueth the neceſſity of ſuch a juſtification, as the Chriſtian Goſpel declareth and exhibiteth, if we ſhould take Juſtification for infuſing an inherent quality of righteouſneſs into men, by the like diſcourſe we might infer the imperfection and inſufficiency of Chriſtianity it ſelf, and conſequently the neceſſity of another diſpenſation beſide it; for that even all Chriſtians (as Saint James ſaith) do offend often, and commiſſion of ſin doth alſo much reign among them; ſo that S. Paul's diſcourſe (juſtification being taken in this ſenſe) might ſtrongly be retorted againſt himſelf.

Jam. 3. 2.

2. Suppoſing that ſenſe of Juſtification, a Jew might eaſily invalidate S. Paul's ratiocination, by ſaying, that even their Religion did plainly enough declare ſuch a juſtification, which God did beſtow upon all good men in their way, as by their frequent acknowledgments and devotions is apparent; ſuch as thoſe of the Pſalmiſt: Create in me a clean heart, O God, renew a right Spirit within me. Teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God: Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; incline my heart unto thy teſtimonies; which ſort of prayers God hearing did infuſe righteouſneſs, and juſtified thoſe perſons in this ſenſe; ſo that Chriſtianity herein could not challenge any thing peculiar, or could upon this ſcore appear ſo neceſſary, as S. Paul pretendeth.

Pſ. 51. 10.
Pſ. 143. 10.
Pſ. 119. 35, 36.

3. From the juſtification S. Paul ſpeaketh of, all reſpect to any works, and to any qualifications in men (ſuch as might beget in them any confidence in themſelves, or yield occaſion of boaſting) is excluded; it cannot therefore well be underſtood for a conſtituting Man intrinſecally righteous, or infuſing worthy qualities into him; but rather ther for an act of God terminated upon a man as altogether unworthy of God's love, as impious, as an enemy, as a pure object of mercy; ſo it is moſt natural to underſtand thoſe expreſſions, importing the Rom. 4. 5. 5. 8. 5. 10. ſame thing; God juſtifieth the ungodly; we being ſinners Chriſt died for us purchaſing, as the following words imply, juſtification for us) being yet enemies we by his death were reconciled (or juſtified, for reconciliation and juſtification, as we before noted, do there ſignifie the ſame.)

4. Abraham is brought in as an inſtance of a perſon juſtified in the ſame manner, as Chriſtians are according to the Goſpel: but his juſtification was merely the approving and eſteeming him righteous, in regard (not to any other good works, but) to his ſtedfaſt faith, and ſtrong perſuaſion concerning the power and faithfulneſs of God --- Rom. 4. 21. becauſe he was fully perſuaded, that what God had promiſed he was able to Rom. 4. 23, 24. perform; to which faith and juſtification conſequent thereon, S. Paul comparing thoſe of Chriſtians ſubjoineth; Now it was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him, but for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him, that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead. As then it were an idle thing to fanſie a righteouſneſs, upon the ſcore of that belief, dropt into Abraham; and as his being juſtified is expreſly called, having righteouſneſs, upon the account of his faith, imputed (or aſcribed) to him; So our juſtification (like and anſwerable to his) ſhould correſpondently be underſtood, the approving and accounting us, notwithſtanding our former tranſgreſſions, as righteous perſons, in regard to that honeſt and ſtedfaſt faith, wherein we reſemble that Father of the faithful.

Even S. James himſelf, when he ſaith that Abraham and Rahab were juſtified by works, 'tis evident that he meaneth not that they had certain righteous qualities infuſed into them, or were made thence by God intrinſecally more righteous than they were before, but that they were approved and accepted by God, becauſe of the good works they performed (in faith and obedience to God) one of them offering to ſacrifice his Son, the other preſerving the Spies ſent from God's people.

5. The ſo often uſing the word Imputation of righteouſneſs, inſtead of Juſtification, doth imply this act not to be a tranſient operation upon the ſoul of Man, but an act immanent to God's mind, reſpecting Man only as its object, and tranſlating him into another relative ſtate: With this ſenſe that word excellently well agreeth, otherwiſe it were obſcure, and ſo apt to perplex the matter, that probably S. Paul would not have uſed it.

6. Again, When it is ſaid again and again, that faith is imputed for righteouſneſs, it is plain enough, that no other thing in Man was required thereto; to ſay, that he is thereby ſanctified, or hath gracious habits infuſed, is uncouth and arbitrarious: the obvious meaning is, that therefore he is graciouſly accepted and approved, as we ſaid before.

7. We might in fine add, that the word Juſtification is very ſeldom, or never uſed in that ſenſe of making Perſons righteous, or infuſing righteouſneſs into them. Bellarmine and Grotius, having ſearched with all poſſible diligence, do alledge three or four places, wherein (with ſome plauſible appearance) they pretend it muſt be ſo underſtood; but as they are ſo few, ſo are they not any of them thoroughly clear and certain; but are capable to be otherwiſe interpreted without much ſtraining; The cleareſt place, Dan. 12. 3. the LXX read מצדקים, ἀπὸ δικαίων, which the Hebrew, and ſenſe will bear. Wherefore the other ſenſe, which we have maintained, being undeniably common and current rent in the Scripture, and having ſo many particular reaſons ſhewing it agreeable to S. Paul's intent, ſeemeth rather to be embraced.

In S. Paul's Epiſtles I can only find three or four places, wherein the word Juſtifying may with any fair probability be ſo extended as to ſignifie an internal operation of God upon the Soul of men; they are theſe;

And ſuch were ſome of you; but ye have been waſhed, but ye have been 1 Cor. 6. 11.
*ſanctified, but ye have been juſtified in the name of Chriſt Jeſus, and * by* *ἐν.
the Spirit of our God; where Juſtification being performed by the Spirit of God, ſeemeth to imply, a ſpiritual operation upon a man's ſoul, as an ingredient thereof.

According to his mercy he ſaved us, by the laver of regeneration, and Tit. 3. 6, 7.
renewing of the holy Ghoſt; which he poured on us richly by Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour; that being juſtified by his grace, we may be made heirs; according to the hope of everlaſting life; where God's juſtifying us by the Grace of Chriſt ſeemeth to include the renewing by the holy Ghoſt.

He that dieth, is juſtified from ſin; where S. Paul ſpeaking about Rom. 6. 7.
our obligation to lead a new life in holy obedience, upon account of our being dedicated to Chriſt, and renouncing ſin in Baptiſm, may be interpreted to mean a being really in our hearts purified and freed from ſin.

Whom he predeſtinated, thoſe he called; and whom he called, thoſe Rom 8 30.
he juſtified, and whom he juſtified, thoſe he glorified; where the chief acts of God toward thoſe, who finally ſhall be ſaved, being in order purpoſely recited, and Juſtification being immediately (without interpoſing Sanctification) coupled to Glorification, the word may ſeem to comprize Sanctification.

If conſidering theſe places (which yet are not clearly prejudicial to the notion we have made good, but may well be interpreted ſo as to agree thereto) it ſhall ſeem to any, that S. Paul doth not ever ſo ſtrictly adhere to that notion, as not ſometime to extend the word to a larger ſenſe, I ſhall not much contend about it; It is an ordinary thing for all Writers to uſe their words ſometimes in a larger, ſometimes in a ſtricter ſenſe; and it ſufficeth to have ſhewn, that where S. Paul purpoſely treateth about the matter we diſcourſe upon, the purport of his diſcourſe argueth, that he uſeth it according to that notion, which we have propoſed.

8. I ſhall only add one ſmall obſervation, or conjecture favouring this notion; which is the probable occaſion of all S. Paul's diſcourſe and diſputation about this Point, which ſeemeth to have been this. That Chriſtianity ſhould (upon ſo ſlender a condition or performance, as that of Faith) tender unto all perſons indifferently, however culpable, or flagitious their former lives had been, a plenary remiſſion of ſins and reception into God's favour, did ſeem an unreaſonable and implauſible thing to many; The Jews could not well conceive, or reliſh that any man ſo eaſily ſhould be tranſlated into a ſtate equal, or ſuperiour to that, which they took themſelves peculiarly to enjoy; The Gentiles themſelves (eſpecially ſuch as conceited well of their own wiſdom and vertue) could hardly digeſt it; Celſus in Origen could not imagine or admit that bare faith ſhould work ſuch a miracle, as preſently to turn a diſſolute perſon into a Saint, beloved of God, and deſigned to happineſs.

Vid. Cyrill. adv. Julian. lib. 7. p. 248. where Juſtification is very well deſcribed.

ψιλὴ πίστις.

Zozimus ſaith of Conſtantine, that he choſe Chriſtianity as the only Religion, that promiſed impunity and pardon for his enormous practices;

ces; intimating his diſlike of that Point in our Religion; This prejudice againſt the Goſpel S. Paul removeth; by ſhewing that becauſe of all mens guilt and ſinfulneſs ſuch an exhibition of mercy, ſuch an overture of acceptance, ſuch a remiſſion of ſin was neceſſary in order to ſalvation, ſo that without it no man could be exempted from wrath and miſery; and that conſequently all other Religions (as not exhibiting ſuch a remiſſion,) were to be deemed in a main Point defective: When therefore he uſeth the word Juſtification to expreſs this matter, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that he intendeth thereby to ſignifie that remiſſion, or diſpenſation of mercy.

It may be objected that S. Auſtin and ſome others of the Fathers do uſe the word commonly according to the ſenſe of the Tridentine Council: I anſwer, that the point having never been diſcuſſed, and they never having thoroughly conſidered the ſenſe of S. Paul, might unawares take the word as it ſounded in Latine, eſpecially the ſenſe they affixed to it, ſignifying a matter very true and certain in Chriſtianity. The like hath happened to other Fathers in other caſes; and might happen to them in this, not to ſpeak accurately in points that never had been ſifted by diſputation. More I think we need not ſay in anſwer to their authority.

VI. So much may ſuffice for a general explication of the notion; but for a more full clearing of the Point, it may be requiſite to reſolve a queſtion concerning the time, when this act is performed, or diſpenſed; It may be enquired when God juſtifieth, whether once, or at ſeveral times, or continually: To which queſtion I anſwer briefly:

1. That the juſtification which S. Paul diſcourſeth of, ſeemeth in his meaning, only or eſpecially to be that act of grace, which is diſpenſed to perſons at their Baptiſm, or at their entrance into the Church, when they openly profeſſing their faith, and undertaking the practice of Chriſtian duty God moſt ſolemnly and formally doth abſolve them from all guilt, and accepteth them into a ſtate of favour with him; that S. Paul only or chiefly reſpecteth this act, conſidering his deſign, I am inclined to think, and many paſſages in his diſcourſe ſeem to imply.

If his deſign were (as I conceive it probable) to vindicate the proceeding of God, peculiarly declared in the Goſpel, in receiving the moſt notorious and hainous tranſgreſſours to grace in Baptiſm, then eſpecially muſt the juſtification he ſpeaketh of relate to that; to confirm which ſuppoſition we may conſider, that

1. In ſeveral places Juſtification is coupled with baptiſmal regeneration and abſolution: Such were ſome of you, but ye have been waſhed, ye have been ſanctified, ye have been juſtified in the name of Chriſt Jeſus: (where by the way being ſanctified, and being juſtified, ſeem equivalent terms, as in that place, where Chriſt is ſaid to have given himſelf for the Church, that he might ſanctifie it, and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water by the Word, Sanctification (I conceive) importeth the ſame thing with Juſtification.) Again, He ſaved us by the laver of Regeneration, that having been juſtified by his grace, we may be made heirs of everlaſting life.

1 Cor. 6. 11.

Eph. 5. 25, 26.
Heb. 10. 29.
Tit. 3. 6, 7.
Heb. 10. 22, 23.

2. S. Paul in expreſſing this act, as it reſpecteth the faithful, commonly doth uſe a tenſe referring to the paſt time: he ſaith not δικαιούμενοι, being juſtified, but δικαιωθέντες, having been juſtified; not δικαιοῦσθε, ye are juſtified, but δικαιώθητε, ye have been juſtified, namely at ſome remarkable time, that is at their entrance into Chriſtianity. (Our Tranſlators

Rom. 5. 1, 9.
Tit. 3. 7.
1 Cor. 6. 11.

tors do render it according to the preſent time, but it ſhould be rendred, as I ſay, in our Text, and in other places.)

3. S. Paul, in the 6th to the Romans, diſcourſeth thus; Seeing we in Baptiſm are cleanſed and diſentangled from ſin, are dead to it, and ſo juſtified from it, God forbid that we ſhould return to live in the practice thereof, ſo abuſing and evacuating the grace we have received; which diſcourſe ſeemeth plainly to ſignifie, that he treateth about the juſtification conferred in Baptiſm.

Rom. 6.

4. He expreſſeth the juſtification he ſpeaketh of by the words πάρεσις τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων, the paſſing over foregoing ſins, which ſeemeth to reſpect that univerſal abſolution, which is exhibited in Baptiſm. Being (ſaith he) juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption, that is in Chriſt Jeſus; whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs, for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God.

Rom. 3. 25.

5. The relation this juſtification hath to faith, being diſpenſed in regard thereto (or upon condition thereof) doth infer the ſame: Faith is nothing elſe, but a hearty embracing Chriſtianity, which firſt exerteth it ſelf by open declaration and avowal in Baptiſm (when we believe with our hearts to righteouſneſs, and confeſs with our mouth to ſalvation;) to that time therefore the act of Juſtification may be ſuppoſed eſpecially to appertain: (then, when the Evangelical covenant is ſolemnly ratified, the grace thereof eſpecially is conferred.) Upon ſuch conſiderations I conceive that S. Paul's juſtification chiefly doth reſpect that act of grace, which God conſigneth to us at our Baptiſm. But farther,

Rom. 10. 10.

2. The vertue and effect of that firſt juſtifying act doth continue (we abide in a juſtified ſtate) ſo long as we do perform the conditions impoſed by God, and undertaken by us at our firſt juſtification; holding faſt the profeſſion of our hope without wavering; keeping faith, and a good conſcience; ſo long as we do not forfeit the benefit of that grace by making ſhipwreck of faith and a good conſcience, relapſing into infidelity, or profaneneſs of life. Our caſe is plainly like to that of a ſubject, who having rebelled againſt his Prince, and thence incurred his diſpleaſure, but having afterward upon his ſubmiſſion by the clemency of his Prince obtained an act of pardon, reſtoring him to favour, and enjoyment of the protection and privileges ſutable to a loyal ſubject, doth continue in this ſtate, until by forſaking his allegiance, and running again into rebellion, he ſo loſeth the benefit of that pardon, that his offence is aggravated thereby; ſo if we do perſevere firm in faith and obedience, we ſhall (according to the purport of the Evangelical covenant) continue in the ſtate of grace and favour with God, and in effect remain juſtified; otherwiſe the virtue of our juſtification ceaſeth; and we in regard thereto are more deeply involved in guilt.

Heb. 10. 23.
1 Tim. 1. 19.
2 Pet. 2. 20, &c.
Heb. 10. 26, 38. 6. 1.

3. Although Juſtification chiefly ſignifieth the firſt act of grace toward a Chriſtian at his Baptiſm, yet (according to analogy of reaſon, and affinity in the nature of things) every diſpenſation of pardon granted upon repentance, may be ſtyled Juſtification; for as particular acts of repentance, upon the commiſſion of any particular ſins, do not ſo much differ in nature, as in meaſure or degree from that general converſion, practiſed in embracing the Goſpel; So the grace vouchſafed upon theſe penitential acts, is only in largeneſs of extent, and ſolemnity of adminiſtration diverſified from that; Eſpecially conſidering that repentance after Baptiſm is but a reviving of that firſt great reſolution and engagement we made in Baptiſm; that remiſſion of ſin upon it it is only the renovation of the grace then exhibited; that the whole tranſaction in this caſe is but a reinſtating the covenant then made (and afterward by tranſgreſſion infringed) upon the ſame terms, which were then agreed upon; that conſequently (by congruous analogy) this remiſſion of ſins, and reſtoring to favour granted to a penitent are only the former juſtification reinforced: whence they may bear its name; but whether S. Paul ever meaneth the word to ſignifie thus, I cannot affirm.

Pœnitentia imitatur Baptiſmatis gratiam. Hier. adv. Pelag. 1. 10.

Now according to each of theſe notions all good Chriſtians may be ſaid to have been juſtified; they have been juſtified by a general abolition of their ſins, and reception into God's favour in Baptiſm; they ſo far have enjoyed the virtue of that gracious diſpenſation, and continued in a juſtified ſtate, as they have perſiſted in faith and obedience; they have upon falling into ſin, and riſing thence by repentance, been juſtified by particular remiſſions. So that having been juſtified by faith, they have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

I Believe in God.

SERMON VI.

THE Being of GOD Proved from the FRAME OF THE WORLD.

JER. 51. 15.

Jer. 10. 12. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath eſtabliſhed the World by his wiſdom, and hath ſtretched out the Heaven by his underſtanding.

THE attentive obſervation of this World, or viſible Frame, is not only in it ſelf a moſt worthy employment of our thoughts (much more noble than any of thoſe petty cares, which commonly poſſeſs, or diſtract our minds) but if either the example of the beſt men, or the great uſefulneſs thereof, to the beſt purpoſes, can oblige us, even a conſiderable duty not to be neglected by us. For it is that which affords moſt cogent and ſatisfactory arguments to convince us of, and to confirm us in the belief of that truth which is the foundation of all Religion and piety, The Being of one God, incomprehenſibly excellent in all perfections, the maker and upholder of all things; It inſtructs us not only that God is, but more diſtinctly ſhews what he is; declaring his chief and peculiar attributes of wiſdom, goodneſs, and power ſuperlative; It alſo ſerves to beget in our minds affections toward God, ſutable to thoſe notions; a reverent adoration of his unſearchable wiſdom; an awful dread of his powerful Majeſty; a grateful love of his gracious benignity and goodneſs: To theſe uſes we find it applied by the beſt men, not only by the wiſeſt Philoſophers among Heathens, but by the holy Prophets of God; who frequently harp upon this ſtring, and make ſweeteſt melody thereon; exciting both in themſelves and others, pious thoughts and holy devotions therewith; ſtrengthning their faith in God; advancing their reverence toward him; quickning and enflaming their love of him; magnifying his glory and praiſe thereby; by the conſideration (I ſay) of thoſe wonderful effects, diſcernible in nature; or appearing to us in this viſible world. And if ever to imitate them herein were neceſſary, it ſeems to be ſo now, when a pretence to natural knowledge, and acquaintance with theſe things hath been ſo much abuſed to the promoting of Atheiſm and irreligion; when that inſtrument which was chiefly deſigned, and is of it ſelf moſt apt, to bring all reaſonable creatures to the knowledge, and to the veneration of their Maker, hath (in a method moſt prepoſterous and unnatural) been perverted to contrary ends and effects. To the preventing and removing which abuſe, as every man ſhould contribute what he can, ſo let me be allowed to endeavour ſomewhat toward it, by repreſenting briefly what my meditation did ſuggeſt, ſerving to declare, that (as the Prophet aſſerts, or implies in the words I read) even in this viſible World, there are manifeſt tokens, or footſteps by which we may diſcover it to be the work, or product of one Being, incomprehenſibly wiſe, powerful and good; to whom conſequently we muſt owe the higheſt reſpect and love, all poſſible worſhip and ſervice. Of theſe footſteps (or ſigns) there be innumerably many which ſingly taken, do diſcover ſuch perfections to be concerned in the production of them; the relation of ſeveral to each other do more ſtrongly and plainly confirm the ſame; the connexion and correſpondence of all together doth ſtill add force and evidence thereto, each atteſting to the exiſtence of thoſe perfections, all conſpiring to declare them concentred and united in one Cauſe and Being.

Pſ. 8. 3. 19. 1. 33. 5. 89. 11. 148. 5. 104. 5. 115. 16. 119. 64. 145. 10. 147. 4.

I. View we firſt ſingly thoſe things, which are moſt familiar and obvious to our ſenſes (for only ſome ſuch I mean to conſider, ſuch as any man awake, and in his ſenſes, without any ſtudy or skill more than ordinary; without being a deep Philoſopher, or a Curious Virtuoſo; may with an eaſie attention obſerve and diſcern) View we ſuch objects, I ſay; for inſtance firſt, thoſe plants we every day do ſee, ſmell and taſte; Have not that number, that figure, that order, that temperament, that whole contexture and contemperation of Parts we diſcern in them, a manifeſt relation to thoſe operations they perform? were not ſuch organs ſo faſhioned, and ſo ſituated, and ſo tempered, and in all reſpects ſo fitted, ſome of them in order to the ſucceſſive propagation of them (that they might in kind never fail or periſh, but in that reſpect become as it were immortal) ſome in regard to their preſent nutrition and maintenance (that the individuals themſelves might not, before their due period of ſubſiſtence run through, be ſpent, or deſtroyed) deſtroyed) ſome for ſhelter and defence againſt all ſort of cauſes prejudicial to either of thoſe continuances in being reſpectively; to omit thoſe, which ſerve for grace and ornament; (Do not, I ſay, the ſeed moſt evidently reſpect the propagation of the kind; the root the drawing of nouriſhment, the nervous filaments the conveyance of that; the skin or bark the keeping all together cloſe and ſafe; the husks and ſhells preſervation of the ſeed; the leaves defence of the fruit?) that ſuch a conſtitution of parts is admirably fit for ſuch purpoſes, we cannot be ſo ſtupid as not to perceive; we cannot but obſerve it neceſſary, for that by detraction, or altering any of them, we obſtruct thoſe effects. Whence then, I enquire, could that fitneſs proceed? from Chance, or caſual motions of matter? But, is it not repugnant to the name and nature of Chance, that any thing regular, or conſtant ſhould ariſe from it? That by it cauſes vaſtly many in number and different in quality (ſuch as are the ingredients into the frame of the leaſt organ in a plant) ſhould not once, not ſometimes, not often only but always in one continual unaltered method concur to the ſame end and effect (to the ſame uſeful end, to the ſame handſome effect?) are not confuſion, diſparity, deformity, unaccountable change and variety the proper iſſues of Chance? 'Tis Ariſtotle's diſcourſe: That one, or two things, ſaith he, ſhould happen to be in the ſame manner, is not unreaſonable to ſuppoſe; but that all things ſhould conſpire by chance, it looks like a fiction to conceive: what is univerſal and perpetual cannot reſult from Chance. We can only (ſaith he again) with good reaſon aſſert, or ſuppoſe ſuch cauſes of things, as we ſee generally, or frequently to occur. Now did we ever obſerve (or ever any man through the whole courſe of times) any new thing like, or comparable to any of theſe to ſpring up caſually? do we not with admiration regard (as a thing very rare and unaccountable) in other pieces of matter any groſs reſemblance to theſe, that ſeemeth to ariſe from contingent motions and occurrences of bodies? If Chance hath formerly produced ſuch things, how comes it, that it doth not ſometime now produce the like; whence becomes it for ſo many ages altogether impotent and idle? is it not the ſame kind of cauſe? hath it not the ſame inſtruments to work with, and the ſame materials to work upon? The truth is, as it doth not now, ſo it did not, it could not ever produce ſuch effects; ſuch effects are plainly improper and incongruous to ſuch a cauſe: Chance never writ a legible Book; Chance never built a fair houſe; Chance never drew a neat picture, it never did any of theſe things, nor ever will; nor can be without abſurdity ſuppoſed able to do them, which yet are works very groſs and rude, very eaſie and feaſible (as it were) in compariſon to the production of a flower, or a tree. 'Tis not therefore reaſonable to aſcribe thoſe things to chance: to what then? will you ſay, to Neceſſity? If you do, you do only alter the phraſe; for neceſſary cauſality (as applicable to this caſe, and taken without relation to ſome wiſdom, or counſel that eſtabliſhed it) is but another name for chance; they both are but ſeveral terms denoting blindneſs, and unadviſedneſs in action; both muſt imply a fortuitous determination of cauſes, acting without deſign or rule. A fortuitous determination,

Ἵνα τοῦ ἀεὶ, ϗ τοῦ θείου μετέχωσιν, ᾗ δύνανται. Ariſt. de An. 2. 4.

---fortuna amica varietati conſtantiam reſpuit. Cic. de Nat. D. 2.

Ὁ λίαν ὑπερβάλλων ἀριθμὸς οὐ δύναται μετέχειν τάξεως· θείας γὰρ δὴ τοῦτο δυνάμεως ἔργον, ἥτις καὶ τόδε συνέχει τὸ πᾶν. Ariſt. Pol. 7. 4.

Τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἓν ἢ δύο τοῦτον τρόπον ἔχειν, οὐδὲν ἄτοπον. τὸ δὲ πάνθ' ὁμοίως πλάσματι ἔοικεν, ἅμα δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τοῖς φύσει τὸ ὡς ἔτυχεν. οὐδὲ τὸ πανταχοῦ, καὶ πᾶσιν ὑπάρχον τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς τύχης. De Cælo. 2. 8.

Μόνα γὰρ ταῦτα θετέον εὐλόγως, ὅσα ἐπὶ πολλῶν, ἢ πάντων ὁρῶμεν ὑπάρχοντα. Id. de Cælo.

determination, I ſay; for motions of matter, not guided by art, or counſel, muſt be in their riſe fortuitous (inſomuch as that according to the nature of the thing there is no repugnance, and we may eaſily conceive it poſſible, that the matter might have been moved otherwiſe; there being therein no principle originally determining it to this more than to that ſort of motion) and the ſame motions in their proceſs muſt be determinate, becauſe in their ſubject there is no principle, whereby it can alter its courſe. The ſame effect therefore of this kind, if neceſſary is caſual as to its original, and in that reſpect may be ſaid to come from chance; if caſual, is neceſſary in the progreſs, and may thence be ſaid to proceed from neceſſity. And although we ſhould ſuppoſe the beginning of theſe cauſes in their action, or motion to be eternal, it were all one; for whether now, or yeſterday, or from eternity, inferrs no difference (except the entangling our minds, and encumbring the caſe with impertinent circumſtances) as to our purpoſe; not the circumſtance of the time, but the quality of the cauſe being only here conſiderable; the ſame cauſes (abſtracting from all counſel ordering them) being alike apt, or inept yeſterday as to day, always as ſometimes, from all eternity, as at any ſet time to produce ſuch effects. Neither can we therefore reaſonably attribute the effects we ſpeak of to neceſſity; except only to ſuch an hypothetical neceſſity, as implies a determination from cauſes acting by will and underſtanding; of ſuch a neceſſity matter is very ſuſceptive; being perfectly obedient to art directing it with competent force; As on the other hand we find it by reaſon and experience altogether unapt, without ſuch direction, of it ſelf (that is either neceſſarily or contingently) to come into any regular form, or to purſue any conſtant courſe; it being, as we ſee; ſhattered into particles innumerable, different in ſize, ſhape and motion, according to all variety more than imaginable; thence only fit in their proceedings to croſs and confound each other: The determination therefore of ſuch cauſes as theſe to ſuch ends and effects, can be only the reſult of wiſdom, art and counſel; which alone (accompanied with ſufficient power) can digeſt things, void of underſtanding, into handſom order, can direct them unto fit uſes, can preſerve them in a conſtant tenour of action; Theſe effects muſt therefore, I ſay, proceed from wiſdom, and that no mean one, but ſuch as greatly ſurpaſſes our comprehenſion, joined with a power equally great: For to digeſt bodies ſo very many, ſo very fine and ſubtile, ſo divers in motion and tendency, that they ſhall never hinder or diſturb one another, but always conſpire to the ſame deſign, is a performance exceedingly beyond our capacity to reach how it could be contrived, or accompliſhed; all the endeavours of our deepeſt skill, and moſt laborious induſtry cannot arrive to the producing of any work not extremely inferiour to any of theſe, not in compariſon very ſimple and baſe; neither can our wits ſerve to deviſe, nor our ſenſe to direct, nor our hand to execute any work, in any degree like to thoſe. So that it was but faintly, though truly, ſaid of him in Cicero, concerning things of this kind: * Natures powerful ſagacity no skill, no hand, no artiſt can follow by imitation.

* Naturæ ſolertiam nulla ars, nulla manus, nemo opifex conſequi poſſit imitando Cic de N. D. pag. 83.

And if we have reaſon to acknowledge ſo much wiſdom and power diſcovered in one plant, and the ſame conſequently multiplied in ſo many thouſands of divers kinds; how much more may we diſcern them in any one animal, in all of them? the parts of whom in unconceivable variety, in delicate minuteneſs, in exquiſiteneſs of ſhape, poſition and temper do indeed ſo far exceed the other, as they appear deſigned to functions far more various and more noble; the enumeration of a few whereof, obvious to our ſenſe, in ſome one living creature, together with conjectures about their manner of operation, and their uſe, how much induſtry of man hath it employed; how many volumes hath it filled, and how many more may it do, without detecting a ten thouſandth part of what is there moſt obvious and eaſie; without piercing near the depth of that wiſdom, which formed ſo curious a piece? So much however is palpably manifeſt, that each of theſe ſo many organs was deſigned, and fitted on purpoſe to that chief uſe, or operation we ſee it to perform; this of them to continue the kind, that to preſerve the individuum; this to diſcern what is neceſſary, convenient or pleaſant to the creature; or what is dangerous, offenſive or deſtructive thereto; that to purſue or embrace, to decline or ſhun it; this to enjoy what is procured of good; that to remove what is hurtful or uſeleſs; or to guard from miſchief and injury; That each one is furniſhed with ſuch apt inſtruments, ſutable to its particular needs, appetites, capacities, ſtations is moſt apparent; And I muſt therefore here ask again (and that with more advantage) whence this could proceed: whence all theſe parts came to be faſhioned and ſuted; all of them ſo neceſſary, or ſo convenient, that none without the imperfection and the prejudice of the creature, ſome not without its deſtruction can be wanting? who ſhaped and tempered thoſe hidden ſubtile ſprings of life, ſenſe, imagination, memory, paſſion; who impreſſed on them a motion ſo regular, and ſo durable, which through ſo many years, among ſo many adverſe contingencies aſſailing it, is yet ſo ſteadily maintained? can this however proceed from giddy chance, or blind neceſſity? could ever (of old, or lately 'tis all one) ſenſleſs matter jumble it ſelf ſo fortunately, into ſo wonderful poſtures, ſo that of thoſe innumerable myriads of atoms, or ſmall inſenſible bodies (which compoſe each of theſe curious engines) none ſhould in its roving miſs the way; none fail to ſtop and ſeat it ſelf in that due place, where exacteſt art would have diſpoſed it? Could ſo many, ſo dimm, ſo narrow marks be hit without the aim of a moſt piercing and unerring eye; without the guidance of a moſt ſteady and immoveable hand? all that grace and beauty which ſo delights our ſenſe beholding it; and all that correſpondence and ſymmetry which ſo ſatisfies our mind conſidering it; all that virtue and energy, extending to performances ſo great and admirable, muſt they be aſcribed to cauſes of no worth, and ſuppoſed done to no purpoſe? That eye which reaches the very ſtars, and in a moment renders all the world as it were preſent to the creature that uſeth it; that ear which perceives the leaſt ſtirring of the air about it, and ſo ſubtly diſtinguiſhes the ſmalleſt differences in its motion; that tongue which ſo readily is compoſed to imitate ſo many petty diverſities of tune; thoſe other organs, which are affected by the leaſt breath or vapour, by the leaſt tangue or ſavour, ſo that it by them can both perceive the preſence, and diſtinguiſh the quality of whatever is near, that it may not be diſappointed in miſſing what is beneficial, nor be ſurpriſed by the aſſault of what is noxious thereto; all theſe and many more, the defect, diſtemper, or diſlocation of which would be diſgraceful, incommodious, or deſtructive to the creature; all theſe I ſay, can any man, endewed with common ſenſe, or ordinary ingenuity affirm to have proceeded Ἔπελθε τῶν μελῶν ἁπάντων τὴν διάπλασιν, τὸ σχῆμα, τὰς ἐνεργείας, τὴν πρὸς ἄλληλα συμφωνίαν καὶ πάσης πόλεως εὐνομουμένης καὶ φιλοσόφως ἅπαντας τοὺς πολίτας ἐχούσης ἀκριβεστέραν ὄψει τὴν μελῶν τούτων πρὸς ἄλληλα πολιτείαν. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 69.

Vid. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ιά.

Μή τι ἀχρηστότερον τριχῶν τῶν ἐπιγενείου; τί οὖν οὐ συνεχρήσατο καὶ ταύταις ὡς μάλιστα πρεπόντως ἐδύνατο; οὐ διέκρινε δι᾽ αὐτῶν τὸ ἄρρεν καὶ τὸ θῆλυ, &c. Epict. 1. 16.

ded from any other cauſe, than from a wiſdom and power incomprehenſible? May not the moſt excellent pieces of humane artifice, the faireſt ſtructures, the fineſt portraictures, the moſt ingenious and uſeful enquiries, ſuch as we are wont moſt to admire and commend, with infinitely more eaſe, happen to exiſt without any contrivance or induſtry ſpent upon them? if we cannot allow thoſe rude imitations of nature, to ſpring up of themſelves, but as ſoon as we eſpy them are ready to acknowledge them products of excellent art, though we know not the artiſt, nor did ſee him work; how much more reaſon is there that we ſhould believe thoſe works of nature, ſo incomparably more accurate, to proceed alſo from art, although inviſible to us, and performing its workmanſhip by a ſecret hand? I can aſſure you of thoſe, who have with greateſt attention contemplated theſe things, and who paſs for men moſt able to judge in the caſe (even thoſe who have diſcovered leaſt affection to Religion, or indeed are more than ſuſpected of an averſion from it; whoſe words therefore may be taken at leaſt for impartial dictates of common ſenſe) that even from ſuch the irreſiſtible force and evidence of the thing hath extorted clear and ample confeſſions to this purpoſe; That in nature nothing is performed without reaſon or deſign; but every thing in the beſt manner, and to the beſt end; beyond what is done in any art; is frequently aſſerted, and aſſumed by Ariſtotle himſelf as a moſt evident truth: That in contriving the frame of our bodies (and the ſame holdeth concerning the bodies of other animals) a wiſdom inſcrutable; in accompliſhing it a power inſuperable; in deſigning to them ſo much of decency and convenience, a benignity worthy of all veneration are demonſtrated; Galen in ſeveral places, with language very full and expreſs, yea very earneſt and pathetical doth acknowledge. That who doth attently regard a locuſt, or a caterpillar, or any other viler animal, ſhall every where therein diſcover a wonderful art and diligence, is an aphoriſm dropt even from the gloomy pen of Cardan. That if any man ſhall view thoroughly all the inſtruments both of generation and nutrition, and doth not perceive them to have been made, and ordered to their reſpective offices by ſome mind (or intelligent agent) he is to be reputed himſelf void of mind (or out of his wits) is the expreſſion of another perſon well known among us, whom few do judge partial to this ſide, or ſuſpicious of bearing a favourable prejudice to Religion. Thus doth common ſenſe from theſe ſort of beings, whereof there be innumerable expoſed daily to our obſervation, even ſingly conſidered, deduce the exiſtence of a wiſdom, power and goodneſs unconceivably great; and there are probably divers others (ſtones, metals, minerals, &c.) no leſs obvious, even here upon the earth, our place of dwelling, which were our ſenſes able to diſcern their conſtitution and texture, would afford matter of the ſame acknowledgment.

Ariſt. de part. An. 1. 1. Μᾶλλον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ οὗ ἕνεκα, καὶ τὸ καλὸν ἐν τοῖς τῆς φύσεως ἔργοις, ἢ ἐν τοῖς τῆς τέχνης

Ἡ φύσις ἀεὶ ποιεῖ τῶν ἐνδεχομένων τὸ βέλτιστον. Phyſ. 2. 8.

Ἡ φύσις οὐδὲν ἀλόγως οὐδὲ μάτην ποιεῖ. de Cælo 2. 11.

Ἕνεκά του ἅπαντα ὑπάρχει τὰ φύσει. de Anima 3. 12.

Gal. de placitis Hippoc. & Plat l. 7. de uſu part. 3. Οἷος μὲν ἐστὶ τὴν σοφίαν, οἷος δὲ τὴν δύναμιν, ὁποῖος δὲ τὴν χρηστότητα, &c.

Card. de variet. 7. 27. pag. 283.
Hobbs. de hom. cap. 1.

Itaque ad ſenſus procedo, ſatis habens ſi hujuſmodi res attigero tantum, plenius autem tractandas aliis reliquero, qui ſi machinas omnes tum generationis, tum nutritionis ſatis perſpexerint, nec tamen eas à mente aliqua conditas, ordinatáſque ad ſua quaſque officia viderint, ipſi profecto ſine mente eſſe cenſendi ſunt.

Νὴ τὸν Δία καὶ τοὺς θεοὺς ἓν τῶν γεγονότων ἀπήρκει πρὸς τὸ αἰσθέσθαι τῆς προνοίας τῷ γε αἰδήμονι, καὶ εὐχαρίστῳ. Epict. 1. 16.

II. But if paſſing from ſuch particulars, we obſerve the relation of ſeveral kinds of things, each to other, we ſhall find more reaſon to be convinced concerning the ſame excellent perfections farther extending themſelves. By ſuch compariſon we may eaſily diſcern, that what ſpeaks much of art in it ſelf ſingly conſidered, declares more thereof in reſpect to other things; and that many things, in which, ſeparately looked upon, we could perceive but ſmall artifice, have indeed much of it in ſuch relation; (which although ſeeming in themſelves mean and deſpicable, are yet very uſeful and neceſſary to conſiderable purpoſes; in ſubſerviency to the convenience of more noble beings,) and though perhaps we cannot thoroughly penetrate the relative uſe and deſign of every thing, which hangs up before us in natures ſhop (by reaſon of our incapacity, or unskilfulneſs in her trade) yet we ſhall have reaſon from what we can plainly diſcover, to collect, that each piece there is a tool accommodate to ſome uſe. Is there not, for inſtance, a palpable relation between the frame, the temper, the natural inclinations, or inſtincts of each animal, and its element, or natural place and abode; wherein it can only live, finding therein its food, its harbour, its refuge? Is not to each faculty within (or to each ſenſitive organ) an object without prepared, exactly correſpondent thereto; which were it wanting, the faculty would become vain and uſeleſs, yea ſometime harmful and deſtructive; as reciprocally the object would import little or nothing, if ſuch a faculty were not provided and ſuted thereto? as for example, what would an eye (or the viſive power) ſignifie, if there were not light prepared to render things viſible thereto; and how much leſs conſiderable, than it is, would the goodly light it ſelf be; were all things in nature blind, and uncapable to diſcern thereby? what would the ear ſerve for, if the air were not ſutably diſpoſed (made neither too thick, nor too thin; neither too reſty, nor too fleeting, but) in a due conſiſtency, and capable of moderate undulations diſtinguiſhable thereby? the like we might with the ſame reaſon inquire concerning the other ſenſes, and faculties vital or animal, and their reſpective objects, which we may obſerve with admirable congruity reſpecting each other. Have not all thoſe goodly colours, and comely ſhapes, which in the leaves, the flowers, and the fruits of plants (I might add in gemms and precious ſtones; yea in all ſorts of living creatures) we behold, an evident reſpect to the ſight, and the ſight a no leſs viſible reference to them? thoſe many kinds of pleaſant fragrancy in herbs, flowers and ſpices have they not a like manifeſt relation to the ſmell, and it to them? Could all that great variety of wholſome, ſavoury and delicious fruits, herbs, grains, pulſes, ſeeds and roots become ſo conſtantly produced otherwiſe than for the purpoſe of feeding, and ſuſtaining living creatures, with pleaſure and content? is there not a notorious correſpondence between them, and the organs of taſte, digeſtion and nutrition? are there not appetites prompting, yea with intolerable pain provoking each living creature to ſeek its proper ſuſtenance; and doth it not find in the enjoyment hereof a pleaſure and ſatiſfaction unexpreſſible? Let me add: Whence comes it to paſs, that ordinarily in nature nothing occurrs noiſome or troubleſome to any ſenſe; but all things wholſom and comfortable, at leaſt innocent or inoffenſive? that we may wander all about without being urged to ſhut our eyes, to ſtop our ears, our mouths, our noſes; but rather invited to open all the avenues of our ſoul, for admiſſion of the Εἰ χρώματα ὁ θεὸς πεποιήκει, δύναμιν δὲ θεατικὴν αὐτῶν μὴ πεποιήκει, τί ἂν ἦν ὄφελος; οὐδοτιοῦν. ἀλλ᾽ ἀνάπαλιν, εἰ τὴν μὲν δύναμιν πεποιήκει, τὰ ὄντα δὲ μὴ τοιαῦτα, οἷα ὑποπίπτειν τῇ δυνάμει τῇ ὁρατικῇ, καὶ οὕτω τι ἦν ὄφελος; οὐδοτιοῦν. τί δ᾽ εἰ καὶ ἀμφότερα ταῦτα πεποιήκει, φῶς δὲ μὴ πεποιήκει; οὐδ᾽ οὕτω τι ὄφελος. τίς οὖν ὁ ἁρμόσας τοῦτο πρὸς ἐκεῖνο, καὶ ἐκεῖνο πρὸς τοῦτο; Epict. 1. 6.

the kind entertainments nature ſets before us? doth ſhe not every where preſent ſpectacles of delight (ſomewhat of lively picture, ſomewhat of gay embroidery, ſomewhat of elegant ſymmetry) to our eyes, however ſeldom any thing appears horrid or ugly to them? where is it that we meet with noiſes ſo violent, or ſo jarring, as to offend our ears; is not there rather provided for us, wherever we go, ſome kind of harmony grateful to them; not only in fields and woods the ſweet chirping of birds; by rivers the ſoft warbling of the ſtreams; but even the rude winds whiſtle in a tune not unpleaſant; the toſſing ſeas yield a kind of ſolemn and graver melody? All the air about us is it not (not only not noiſom to our ſmell, but) very comfortable, and refreſhing; and doth not even the dirty earth yield a wholſom and medicinal ſcent? So many, ſo plain, ſo exactly congruous are the relations of things here about us each to other; which ſurely could not otherwiſe come than from one admirable wiſdom and power conſpiring thus to adapt, and connect them together; as alſo from an equal goodneſs, declared in all theſe things being ſquared ſo fitly for mutual benefit and convenience. Theſe conſiderations are applicable to all (even to the meaner ſorts of) animals; which being the only creatures capable of joy and pleaſure, or liable to grief and pain; 'twas fit, that inſenſible things ſhould be diſpoſed to ſerve their needs, and uſes; which hath been with ſo wonderful a care performed, that of ſo vaſt a number among them there is none ſo vile or contemptible, (no worm, no fly, no inſect) for whoſe maintenance, whoſe defence, whoſe ſatisfaction competent (ſhall I ſay, or abundant) proviſion hath not been made, both intrinſecal (by a frame of organs fitting them to obtain and to enjoy what is good for them, to ſhun and repell what is bad; by ſtrong appetites inciting them to ſearch after and purſue; or to beware, and decline reſpectively; by ſtrange inſtincts inabling them to diſtinguiſh between what is fit for them to procure or embrace, to remove or avoid;) and extrinſecal alſo, by a great variety of conveniences, anſwerable to their ſeveral deſires and needs, diſperſed all about, and every where, as it were, offered to them. So that the Holy Pſalmiſt (conſidering this, and taking upon him to be as it were their Chaplain) had reaſon to ſay this grace for them: The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon; thou openeſt thy hand, and ſatisfieſt the deſire of every living thing. But eſpecially (that which as reaſon enables us, ſo due gratitude obliges us, and prompts us eſpecially to obſerve) there is an evident regard (ſo evident, that even Pliny, a profeſſed Epicurean, could not forbear acknowledging it) which all things bear to man, the Prince of creatures viſible; they being all as on purpoſe ordered to yield tribute unto him; to ſupply his wants, to gratifie his deſires; with profit and pleaſure to exerciſe his faculties; to content, as it were, even his humour and curioſity. All things about us do miniſter (or at leaſt may do ſo, if we would improve the natural inſtruments, and the opportunities afforded us) to our preſervation, eaſe or delight. The hidden bowels of the earth yield us treaſures of metals and minerals, quarries of ſtone and coal, ſo neceſſary, ſo ſerviceable to divers good uſes, that we could not commodiouſly be without them; the vileſt and moſt common ſtones we tread on (even in that we tread on them) are uſeful, and ſerve to many good purpoſes beſide: * the ſurface of the earth how is it beſpread all over, as a table well furniſhed with variety of delicate fruits, herbs and grains to nouriſh our bodies, to pleaſe our taſts, to chear our ſpirits, to cure our diſeaſes? how many fragrant and beautiful flowers offer them-

Pſal. 145. 15.

Ejus (hominis) causâ videtur cuncta alia genuiſſe natura Plin. lib 7. c. 1.

Ut omnis rerum naturæ pars tributum aliquod nobis conferret. Sen de Benef. 4. 5. Neque enim neceſſitatibus tantummodò noſtris proviſum eſt; uſque in delicias amamur. Ibid

Ut interdum Pronœa noſtra Epicurea eſſe videtur Cic. de N. D. 2.

* Vera eſt Sententia Stoicorum, qui aiunt noſtrâ causâ mundum eſſe conſtructum. Omnia enim quibus conſtat, quæque generat ex ſe mundus, ad utilitatem hominis accommodata ſunt Lact. de Ira 13

ſelves for the comfort of our ſmell, and the delight of our ſight? neither can our ears complain, ſince every wood breeds a quire of natural muſicians, ready to entertain them with eaſie and unaffected harmony. The woods, I ſay, which alſo adorned with ſtately trees afford us a pleaſant view, and a refreſhing ſhade, ſhelter from weather and ſun, fuel for our fires, materials for our houſes, and our ſhipping; with divers other needful utenſils. Even the barren mountains ſend us down freſh ſtreams of water, ſo neceſſary to the ſupport of our lives, ſo profitable for the fructification of our grounds, ſo commodious for conveyance of our wares, and maintaining entercourſe among us. Yea the wide ſeas are not (altogether improfitable) waſtes; but freely yield us, without our tillage, many rich harveſts, tranſmitting our commerce and traffick, furniſhing our tables with ſtores of dainty fiſh, ſupplying the bottles of heaven with waters to refreſh the earth, being inexhauſtible ciſterns, from whence our rivers and fountains are derived; the very rude and Pſal. 148. 8. boiſterous winds themſelves fulfill God's word (which once commanded all things to be good, and approved them to be ſo) by yielding manifold ſervices to us; in bruſhing and cleanſing the air for our health, in driving forward our ſhips (which without their friendly help could not ſtir,) in gathering together, in ſcattering, in ſpreading abroad the clouds; Pſal. 65. 11, 12, &c. the clouds, thoſe paths of God, which drop fatneſs upon our fields and paſtures. As for our living ſubjects, all the inferiour ſorts of animals, 'tis hardly poſſible to reckon the manifold benefits we receive from them; how many ways they ſupply our needs with pleaſant food, and convenient cloathing; how they eaſe our labour, how they promote even our recreation and ſport. Thus have all things upon this earth (as is fit and ſeemly they ſhould have) by the wiſe and gracious diſpoſal of the great Creatour, a reference to the benefit of its nobleſt inhabitant, moſt worthy and moſt able to uſe them; many of them have an immediate reference to man (as neceſſary to his being, or conducible to his well being; being fitted thereto, to his hand, without his care, skill or labour) others a reference to him, more mediate indeed, yet as reaſonable to ſuppoſe; I mean ſuch things, whoſe uſefulneſs doth in part depend upon the exerciſe of our reaſon, and the inſtruments ſubſervient thereto: for what is uſeful by the help of reaſon, doth as plainly refer to the benefit of a thing naturally endowed with that faculty, as what is agreeable to ſenſe referrs to a thing merely ſenſitive: we may therefore, for inſtance, as reaſonably ſuppoſe, that iron was deſigned for our uſe, though firſt we be put to dig for it, then muſt employ many arts, and Epict. 1. 16. much pains before it become fit for our uſe; as that the ſtones were therefore made, which lie open to our view; and which without any preparation we eaſily apply to the pavement of our ſtreets, or the raiſing of our fences; Alſo, the grain we ſow in our grounds, or the trees which we plant in our orchards, we have reaſon to conceive as well provided for us, as thoſe plants, which grow wildly and ſpontaneouſly; for that ſufficient means are beſtowed on us of compaſſing ſuch ends, and ---Pater ipſe colendi Haud facilem eſſe viam voluit, &c ---Curis acuens mortalia corda. Virg. rendring thoſe things uſeful to us (a reaſon able to contrive what is neceſſary in order thereto, and a hand ready to execute) it being alſo reaſonable, that ſomething ſhould be left for the improvement of our reaſon, and employment of our induſtry, leſt our nobleſt powers ſhould languiſh and decay by ſloth, or want of fit exerciſe.

Well then, is it to a fortuitous neceſſity (or a neceſſary chance) that we owe all theſe choice accommodations and preeminences of nature? muſt we bleſs and worſhip fortune for all this? did ſhe ſo eſpecially love us, and tender our good; was ſhe ſo indulgent toward us, ſo provident for us in ſo many things, in every thing; making us the ſcope of all her workings and motions here about us? muſt we change ſtyle and ſay; Fortune pours down bleſſings on our heads, fortune crowns us with loving kindneſs, fortune daily loads us with her benefits? Shall we not only eſteem theſe good things her gifts, but even acknowledge our ſelves her offsprings, and reverence her as our mother; diſclaiming ſo noble a parent, as wiſdom omnipotent; diſowning ſo worthy a benefactor, as ſovereign goodneſs? O brutiſh degeneracy; O helliſh depravedneſs of mind! Are we not, not only wretchedly blind and ſtupid, if we are not able to diſcern ſo clear beams of wiſdom ſhining through ſo many perſpicuous correſpondences; if we cannot trace the divine power by footſteps ſo expreſs and remarkable, if we cannot read ſo legible characters of tranſcendent goodneſs; but extremely unworthy and ingrateful, if we are not ready to acknowledge, and with hearty thankfulneſs to celebrate all theſe excellent perfections, by which all theſe things have been ſo ordered, as to conſpire and cooperate for our benefit? Methinks the very perception of ſo much good, the continual enjoyment of ſo many accommodations, the frequent ſatisfaction of ſo many ſenſes and appetites, ſhould put us in ſo good humour, that when we feel our hearts repleniſhed with food and gladneſs, when we ſo delightfully reliſh natures dainties, when we with pleaſure view this fair ſcene of things, when our ears are raviſhed with harmonious ſounds, when our ſpirits are exhilarated with thoſe natural perfumes ſhed about our gardens, our woods, and our fields, we ſhould not be able to forbear devoutly crying out with the Pſalmiſt; O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all, the earth is full of thy riches: The earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy and bounty; Lord, what is man, that thou art ſo mindful of him; or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt ſuch account of him? that, Thou haſt made him to have dominion over the works of thy hands, and haſt put all things under his feet? Under his feet; and ſuch in a manner, according to proper and direct meaning, are all thoſe things which we have as yet touched upon; ſo many arguments of the Divinity even looking downwards, as it were, (if we do not ſo look rather like beaſts than men) we may upon this little ſpot of our habitation perceive: But if, employing our peculiar advantage, we lift up our eyes and minds towards heaven, there in a larger volume, and in a brighter character, we ſhall behold the teſtimonies of perfection, and majeſty ſtupendious deſcribed: As our eyes are dazled with the radiant light coming thence, ſo muſt the vaſt amplitude, the ſtately beauty, the decent order, the ſteady courſe, the beneficial efficacy of thoſe glorious lamps aſtoniſh our minds, fixing their attention upon them: He that ſhall, I ſay, conſider with what preciſe regularity, and what perfect conſtancy thoſe (beyond our imagination) vaſt bodies perform their rapid motions, what pleaſure, comfort and advantage their light and heat do yield us, how their kindly influences conduce to the general preſervation of all things here below (impregnating the womb of this cold and dull lump of earth with various ſorts of life, with ſtrange degrees of activity) how neceſſary (or how convenient at leaſt) the certain recourſes of ſeaſons made by them are; how can he but wonder, and wondring adore that tranſcendency of beneficent wiſdom and power, which firſt diſpoſed them into, which ſtill preſerves them in ſuch a ſtate and order? That all of them ſhould be ſo regulated, as for ſo many ages together (even thorough all memories of time) to perſiſt in the ſame poſture, to retain the ſame ap-

Οὐχ ἑαυτὸν ἀμάρτυρον ἀφῆκεν, ἀγαθοποιῶν, &c. Act. 14. 17.

Act. 14. 17.

Pſal. 104. 24.
119. 64.
33. 5.
Pſal. 8. 4.
144. 3.

pearances, not to alter diſcernibly in magnitude, in ſhape, in ſituation, in diſtance each from other; but to abide fixed (as it were) in their unfixedneſs, and ſteady in their reſtleſs motions; not to vary at all ſenſibly in the time of their revolution (ſo that one year was ever obſerved to differ in an hour, or one day in a minute from another) doth it not argue a conſtant will directing them, and a mighty hand upholding them? it did ſo (Plutarch tells us) to the common apprehenſions of men in ancient times; who from theſe obſervations deduced the exiſtence and notion of a God; becauſe (ſaith he) * they took notice, that the ſun, the moon, and the reſt of the ſtars, taking their courſe about the earth, did conſtantly ariſe alike in their colours, equal in their bigneſſes, in the ſame places, and at the ſame times. Reaſon dictated to them what the inſpired Pſalmiſt ſings concerning the heavenly hoſt; that God commanded, and they were created; he hath alſo ſtabliſhed them for ever and ever, by a decree that ſhall not paſs. And ſurely, thoſe celeſtial ſquadrons could never be rang'd in a form ſo proper, and march on ſo regularly without the marſhalling, and without the conduct of a moſt ſkilful captain. He that can ſeriouſly aſcribe all this to an undiſciplined, and unconducted troop of atoms rambling up and down confuſedly through the field of infinite ſpace; what might he not as eaſily aſſert, or admit? certainly, he that can think ſo, can think any thing; and labour were vainly ſpent, in farther endeavour to convince him: So even Pagan Philoſophers have judged; upon whom what impreſſion this conſideration hath made, we may learn from theſe words of one among them, Cicero: Who (ſaith he) would call him a man, that beholding ſuch certain motions of heaven, thus ſettled ranks of ſtars, all things there ſo connected and ſuted together, ſhould deny there were a reaſon in them, or ſhould affirm thoſe things done by chance, which by no underſtanding we can reach with how great counſel they are performed? And, what other thing (adds he) can be ſo open and ſo perſpicuous, to us that ſhall behold the heavens and contemplate things celeſtial, as that there is a moſt excellent Divinity, by which theſe things are governed? Thus do * the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work; yea thus have we reaſon to acknowledge with Nehemiah † Thou, even thou art the Lord alone; thou haſt made heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſts; the earth and all things that are therein, the ſeas and all that is therein, and thou preſerveſt them all: Thus, every thing above and below us, before and behind, on this, on that, on every ſide of us yields more than a ſimple atteſtation to the exiſtence of its glorious maker; each of them ſingly, ſeveral of them together giving their vote and ſuffrage thereto.

III. Yea,

Ordo autem ſiderum, & in omni æternitate conſtantia neque naturam ſignificat, eſt enim plena rationis. neque fortunam, quæ amica varietati conſtantiam reſpuit. Cic. de Nat. D. 2 p 68.

Οὐδέποτε οὖν ἐν χειμῶνι μακρὰ γέγονεν ἡ ἡμέρα, ὥσπερ οὐδέποτε ἐν θέρει μακρὰ γέγονεν ἡ νύξ, τοσούτων παρελθουσῶν γενεῶν· ἀλλὰ ἐν τοσούτῳ διαστήματι καὶ μήκει. οὐδὲ ἀκαριαῖον, οὐχ ἡμιώριον, οὐ ῥιπὴν ὀφθαλμοῦ ἡ ἑτέρα τὴν ἑτέραν ἐπλεονέκτησε· Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. θ'.

* Ἀεί τε γὰρ ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη, καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ τῶν ἄστρων τὴν ὑπόγειον φορὰν ἐνεχθέντα, ὅμοια μὲν ἀνατέλλει τοῖς χρώμασιν, ἴσα δὲ τοῖς μεγέθεσι, καὶ κατὰ τόπους, καὶ κατὰ χρόνους τοὺς αὐτούς Plut. de plac. 1. 6.

Pſal. 147. 5, 6.

Iſa. 40. 26. & 45. 12. Dan. 4. 35. Neh. 9. 6.

Quis hunc hominem dixerit qui cùm tam certos cæli motus, tàm ratos aſtrorum ordines, támque inter ſe connexa, & apta viderit, neget his ullam ineſſe rationem, eáque caſu fieri dicat. quæ quanto conſilio gerantur, nullo conſilio aſſequi poſſumus? Cic. de Nat D. 2. pag. 90.

Quid poteſt eſſe tam apertum, támque perſpicuum, cùm cælum ſuſpeximus, cæleſtiáque contemplati ſumus, quam aliquod eſſe numen præſtantiſſimæ mentis, qua hæc regantur? Ibid. p. 53.

Τίς οὖν οὕτως ἄθλιος καὶ ταλαίπωρος, ὡς ὁρῶν μὲν οὐρανὸν, ὁρῶν δὲ θάλατταν καὶ γῆν, ὁρῶν δὲ τοσαύτην ὁρῶν εὐκρασίαν οὕτως ἀκριβῆ, καὶ ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς ἀδιάπτωτον τάξιν, νομίζειν αὐτομάτως ταῦτα γίνεσθαι, ἀλλὰ μὴ προσκυνεῖν τὸν ἅπαντα ταῦτα μετὰ σοφίας τῆς προσηκούσης διαταξάμενον; Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. θ'.

* Pſal. 19. 1.

† Neh 9. 6. Iſa. 37. 16.

Quocunque te flexeris, ibi Deum videbis occurrentem tibi, &c. Sen. de Benef. 4. 8.

III. Yea, which was the laſt conſideration intimated, All of them joyn together in one univerſal conſort, with one harmonious voice, to proclaim one and the ſame wiſdom to have deſigned, one and the ſame power to have produced, one and the ſame goodneſs to have ſet both wiſdom and power on work in deſigning, and in producing their being; in preſerving and governing it: for this whole Syſteme of things what is it, but one goodly body (as it were) compacted of ſeveral members and organs; ſo aptly compacted together, that each confers its being, and its operation to the grace and ornament, to the ſtrength and ſtability of the whole; One ſoul (of divine providence) enlivening in a manner, and actuating it all? Survey it all over, and we ſhall have reaſon to ſay with the Philoſopher; All the parts of the world are ſo conſtituted, that they could not be either better for uſe, nor more beautiful for ſhew. In it we ſhall eſpy nothing in ſubſtance ſuperfluous, or defective; nothing in ſhape deformed, in poſition miſplaced, in motion exorbitant, ſo as to prejudice the beauty or welfare of the whole. We may perhaps not diſcern the uſe of each part, or the tendency of each particular effect; but of many they are ſo plain and palpable, that reaſon obliges us to ſuppoſe the like of the reſt. Even as a perſon whom we obſerve frequently to act with great conſideration and prudence, when at other times we cannot penetrate the drift of his proceedings, we muſt yet imagine that he hath ſome latent reaſon, ſome reach of policy, that we are not aware of; Or, as in an engine conſiſting of many parts, curiouſly combined, whereof we do perceive the general uſe, and apprehend how divers parts thereof conduce thereto, reaſon prompts us (although we neither ſee them all, nor can comprehend the immediate ſerviceableneſs of ſome) to think they are all in ſome way or other ſubſervient to the Artiſts deſign; ſuch an agent is God, the wiſdom of whoſe proceedings being in ſo many inſtances notorious, we ought to ſuppoſe it anſwerable in the reſt, ſuch an engine is this World, of which we may eaſily enough diſcern the general end, and how many of its parts do conduce thereto; and cannot therefore in reaſon but ſuppoſe the reſt in their kind alike congruous, and conducible to the ſame purpoſe: Our incapacity to diſcover all doth not argue any defect, but an exceſs of wiſdom in the deſign thereof; not too little perfection in the work, but too great an one rather, in reſpect to our capacity: however we plainly ſee the reſult of all to be the durable continuance of things, without interruption, or change in the ſame conſtant uniform ſtate; which ſhews, that in the world there is no ſeed of corruption (as it were) no inclination to diſſolution or decay; nothing that tends to the diſcompoſure, or deſtruction of the whole: Each ingredient thereof (of thoſe ſo unconceivably numerous) conſiſts within its proper limits; not encroaching immoderately upon; not devouring, or diſturbing another in its courſe; contrary qualities therein ſerving to a due temperament, oppoſite inclinations begetting a juſt poiſe, particular viciſſitudes conferring to a general ſettlement; private deaths and corruptions maintaining the publick life and health, pro-

---ἐποίησεν ὡς ἀγαθὸς τὸ χρήσιμον, ὡς σοφὸς τὸ κάλλιστον, ὡς δυνατὸς τὸ μέγιστον. Baſ. Hexaem. λ. α.

Omnes mundi partes ità conſtitutæ ſunt, ut neque ad uſum meliores potuerint eſſe, nec ad ſpeciem pulchriores. Cic. de Nat. Deor. 2. pag 85.

Μηδὲν ἡ φύσις ποιεῖ μάτην, μηδὲ ἀπολείπει τῶν ἀναγκαίων. Ariſt. 3 de Anima, cap. 10.

Ῥύσεις, καὶ ἀλλοιώσεις ἀνανεοῦσι τὸν κόσμον διηνεκῶς. Anton.. 6. 15. 12. 13.

Αἱ μὲν γενέσεις ἐπαναστέλλουσι τὰς φθορὰς, αἱ δὲ φθοραὶ κουφίζουσι τὰς γενέσεις· μία δ' ἐκ πάντων περαινομένων σωτηρία διατελεῖ. Auct. de Mund. cap. 5.

Omnia pereundo ſervantur; omnia de interitu reformantur, &c. Tertull. Apol. cap. 48.

ducing a kind of youthful vigour in the whole: So that ſix thouſand years together hath this great Machine ſtood, always one and the ſame, unimpaired in its beauty, unworn in its parts, unwearied, and undiſturbed in its motions. If then (as Plutarch ſays) no fair thing is ever produced by hazard, but with art framing it; how could this moſt fair comprehenſion of all fair things be not the lawful iſſue of art, but a by-blow of fortune; of fortune, the mother onely of broods monſtrous and miſſhapen. If the nature of any cauſe be diſcoverable by its effects; if from any work we may infer the workman's ability; if in any caſe the reſults of wiſdom are diſtinguiſhable from the conſequences of chance, we have reaſon to believe, that the Architect of this magnificent and beautiful frame was one incomprehenſibly wiſe, powerful and good Being; and to conclude with Cicero, Eſſe præſtantem, aliquam æternámque naturam, & eam ſuſpiciendam, adorandámque hominum generi pulchritudo mundi, ordoque rerum cæleſtium cogit confiteri; the ſenſe of which Saying we cannot better render or expreſs, than in Saint Paul's words, The inviſible things of God by the making (or rather by the make and conſtitution) of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his external power and Godhead; ſo that, I adjoin after him, they are inexcuſable, who from hence do not know God; or knowing him do not render unto him his due glory and ſervice.

Ὁ μέγας ϗ θαυμαστὸς τῆς μεγαλειότητος αὐτοῦ κῆρυξ. Greg. Naz. Or. 43.
---Ἕκαστον μένει καθάπερ τινὶ χαλινῷ ϗ δεσμῷ τῷ βουλήματι τοῦ ποιήσαντος τοὺς οἰκείους διαφυλάττον ὅρους· ϗ ἡ μάχη τούτων εἰρήνης αἰτία γίνεται τῷ παντί. Chryſ. Orat. 47, 48. Tom. 6

Οὐδὲν τῶν καλῶν εἰκῆ ϗ ὡς ἔτυχε γίνεται, ἀλλὰ μετά τινος τέχνης δημιουργούσης. Plut. de plac. 1. 6.

Quòd ſi mundum efficere poteſt concurſus atomorum, cur porticum, cur templum, cur domum, cur urbem non poteſt, quæ ſunt multò minùs operoſa, & multò quidem faciliora? Cic. 2. de Natur. Deor. pag. 89.

Κόσμος καλὸν ποίκιλμα τέκτονος σοφοῦ. Eurip.

Cic. 2. de Nat. Deor. pag. 89.
Ἀριστοτέχνας. Epitheton Dei. Pind.

Rom. 1. 20.

I Believe in God.

SERMON VII.

The Being of GOD Proved from the FRAME of HUMANE NATURE.

GEN. 1. 27.

So God created man in his own Image, in the Image of God created he him.

THE belief of God's exiſtence is the foundation of all Religion, if which be not well laid in our minds by convincing reaſons, the ſuperſtructures ſtanding thereon may eaſily be in danger of being ſhaken and ruined; eſpecially being aſſailed by the winds of temptation

tion and oppoſition, which every where blow ſo violently in this irreligious age. No diſcourſes therefore can perhaps be more needful (or ſeaſonably uſeful) than ſuch as do produce and urge reaſons of that kind, apt to eſtabliſh that foundation. Of ſuch there be, I conceive, none better, or more ſutable to common capacity, than thoſe, which are drawn from effects apparent to mens general obſervation and experience, the which cannot reaſonably be aſcribed to any other cauſe, than unto God, that is (according to the notion commonly anſwering to that name) to a Being incomprehenſibly wiſe, powerful and good. Of ſuch effects there be innumerably many in this ſenſible world among things natural, more ſtrictly ſo called, that is, ſubſiſting and acting without immediate uſe of underſtanding or choice; the conſtitutions and operations of which (being evidently directed according to very much reaſon, and to very good purpoſe) do evince their being framed and ordered by ſuch a Being; as I have formerly, with a competent largeneſs, endeavoured to ſhew. But beſide thoſe, there is expoſed to our obſervation, yea ſubject to our inward conſcience, another ſort of beings, acting in another manner and from other principles; having in them a ſpring of voluntary motion and activity; not, as the reſt, neceſſarily determined, or driven on, by a kind of blind violence, in one direct road to one certain end; but guiding themſelves with judgment and choice by ſeveral ways toward divers ends; briefly, endued with reaſon to know what and why, and with liberty to chuſe what and how they ſhould act; And that this ſort of beings (that is we our ſelves, all mankind) did proceed from the ſame ſource or original cauſe, as it is in way of hiſtory delivered and affirmed in our Text, ſo I ſhall now endeavour by reaſon (apt to perſwade even thoſe, who would not allow this ſacred authority) to ſhew. Indeed, if the eternal power, and divinity of God may (as S. Paul tells us) be ſeen in all the works of God; the ſame peculiarly and principally will appear obſervable in this maſter-piece as it were of the great Artificer; if the meaneſt creatures reflect ſomewhat of light, by which we may diſcern the divine exiſtence and perfections; in this fine and beſt poliſhed mirrour, we ſhall more clearly diſcover the ſame: no where ſo much of God will appear as in this work, which was deſignedly formed to reſemble and repreſent him. This then is the ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe, That in man well conſidered we may diſcern manifeſt footſteps of that incomprehenſibly excellent Being, impreſſed upon him; and this doubly, both in each man ſingly taken, and in men as ſtanding in conjunction or relation to each other: conſidering man's nature we ſhall have reaſon to think it to have proceeded from God, conſidering humane ſocieties we ſhall ſee cauſe to ſuppoſe them deſigned and governed by God.

Rom. 1. 20.

I. Conſider we firſt any one ſingle man, or that humane nature abſtractedly, whereof each individual perſon doth partake; and whereas that doth conſiſt of two parts, one material and external, whereby man becomes a ſenſible part of nature, and hath an eminent ſtation among viſible creatures; the other, that interiour and inviſible principle of operations peculiarly called humane; as to the former we did, among other ſuch parts of nature take cognizance thereof, and even in that diſcovered plain marks of a great wiſdom that made it, of a great goodneſs taking care to maintain it. The other now we ſhall chiefly conſider, in which we may diſcern not only σημεῖα, but δεικνύματα of the divine exiſtence and efficiency; not only large tracks, but expreſs footſteps; not only ſuch ſigns as ſmoke is of fire, or a picture of the painter that drew it; but even ſuch, as the ſpark is of fire, and the picture of its original.

1. And firſt, that man's nature did proceed from ſome efficient cauſe, it will (as of other things in nature) be reaſonable to ſuppoſe. For if not ſo, then it muſt either ſpring up of it ſelf, ſo that at ſome determinate beginning of time, or from all eternity, ſome one man, or ſome number of men did of themſelves exiſt; or there hath been a ſucceſſion without beginning of continual generations indeterminate (not terminated in any root, one or more of ſingular perſons.)

Now generally that man did not at any time in any manner ſpring up of himſelf, appears, 1. from hiſtory and common tradition; which (as we ſhall otherwhere largely ſhew) deliver the contrary: being therein more credible than bare conjecture or precarious aſſertion, deſtitute of teſtimony or proof. 2. From the preſent conſtant manner of man's production, which is not by ſpontaneous emergency, but in way of ſucceſſive derivation, according to a method admirably provided for by nature. 3. Becauſe if ever man did ſpring up of himſelf, it ſhould be reaſonable that at any time, that often, that at leaſt ſometime in ſo long a courſe of times the like ſhould happen, which yet no experience doth atteſt. 4. There is an evident relation between our bodies and ſouls; the members and organs of our bodies being wonderfully adapted to ſerve the operations of our ſouls. Now in our bodies (as we have before ſhewed) there appear plain arguments of a moſt wiſe Authour, that contrived and framed them; therefore in no likelihood did our ſouls ariſe of themſelves, but owe their being to the ſame wiſe cauſe.

Alſo particularly, that not any men did at ſome beginning of time ſpring up of themſelves is evident, becauſe there is even in the thing it ſelf a repugnance; and it is altogether unconceivable that any thing, which once hath not been, ſhould ever come to be without receiving its being from another: and ſuppoſing ſuch a riſe of any thing, there could not in any caſe be any need of an efficient cauſe; ſince any thing might purely out of nothing come to be of it ſelf.

Neither could any man ſo exiſt from eternity, both from the general reaſons aſſigned, which being grounded in the nature of the thing, and including no reſpect to this circumſtance of now and then, do equally remove this ſuppoſition (for what is in it ſelf unapt, or unneceſſary, or improbable to be now, was always alike ſo; the being from eternity, or in time not altering the nature of the thing) and alſo particularly, becauſe there are no footſteps, or monuments of man's (not to ſay eternal but even) ancient ſtanding in the world; but rather many good arguments (otherwere touched) of his late coming thereinto; which conſideration did even convince Epicurus and his Followers, and made them acknowledge man to be a novel production. I add, ſeeing it is neceſſary to ſuppoſe ſome eternal and ſelf-ſubſiſtent Being diſtinct from man, and from any other particular ſenſible being (for there is no ſuch being, which in reaſon can be ſuppoſed authour of the reſt; but rather all of them bear characters ſignifying their original from a Being more excellent than themſelves) and ſuch an one being admitted, there is no need or reaſon to ſuppoſe any other; (eſpecially Man and all others appearing unapt ſo to ſubſiſt) therefore it is not reaſonable to aſcribe eternal ſelf-ſubſiſtence to Man. This diſcourſe I confirm with the ſuffrage of Ariſtotle himſelf; who in his Phyſicks hath theſe words: In natural things that which is definite, and better, if poſſible, muſt rather exiſt: but it

Ἐ γὰρ τοῖς φύσει δεῖ τὸ πεπερασμένον, καὶ τὸ βέλτιστον, ἐὰν ἐνδέχηται, ὑπάρχειν μᾶλλον· ἱκανὸν δὲ καὶ εἰ ἕν, ὃ πρῶτον τῶν ἀκινήτων ἀΐδιον ὄν, ἔσται τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀρχὴ κινήσεως. Phyſ. 8. 7.

it ſuffices, that one, the firſt of things immovable, being eternal, ſhould be to others the original of motion; (I ſubjoin and, by parity of reaſon, it is ſufficient that one and the beſt thing be eternally ſubſiſtent of it ſelf; and the cauſe of ſubſiſtence to the reſt.)

As for the laſt ſuppoſition, that there have been indeterminate ſucceſſions of men, without beginning, it is alſo liable to moſt of the former exceptions, beſide that it is altogether unintelligible, and its having this peculiar difficulty in it, that it aſcribes determinate effects to cauſes indeterminate. And indeed it hath been to no other purpoſe introduced, than to evade the arguments ariſing from the nature of the thing, by confounding the matter with impertinent intrigues, ſuch as the terms of infinite and indeterminate muſt neceſſarily produce in man's ſhallow underſtanding. I therefore upon ſuch grounds aſſume it as a reaſonable ſuppoſition, that man's nature is no wiſe * αὐτοφυὴς, but hath proceeded from ſome cauſe.

(* hath not ſprung up of it ſelf)

2. I adjoin ſecondly, that it could not come from any ſenſible or material cauſe, nor from any complication of ſuch cauſes; for that the properties, the powers, the operations of man's ſoul are wholly different from in kind, highly elevated in worth above all the properties, powers and operations of things corporeal, in what imaginable manner ſoever framed or tempered: the properties, faculties and operations of our ſouls are, or refer to ſeveral ſorts or ways of knowledge (ſenſe, fancy, memory, diſcourſe, mental intuition) of willing (that is of appetite toward and choice of good, or of diſliking and refuſing evil) of paſſion (that is of ſenſible complacency or diſpleaſure in reſpect to good and evil apprehended under ſeveral notions and circumſtances) of αὐτοκινησία, or ſelf-moving (the power and act of moving without any force extrinſecal working upon it.) The general properties of things corporeal are extenſion according to ſeveral dimenſions and figures; aptneſs to receive motion from, or to impart motion unto each other in ſeveral degrees and proportions of velocity; to divide, and unite; or to be divided, and united each by other; and the like coherent with and reſulting from thoſe: now to common ſenſe it ſeems evident, that thoſe properties, and theſe are toto genere different from each other; nor have any conceivable ſimilitude unto, connexion with, dependence upon each other, as to their immediate nature. Let any part of this corporeal maſs be refined by the ſubtleſt diviſion, let it be agitated by the quickeſt motion, let it be modell'd into what ſhape or faſhion you pleaſe, how can any man imagine either knowledge, or appetite, or paſſion thence to reſult? or that it ſhould thence acquire a power of moving it ſelf, or another adjacent body? Even, I ſay, this inferiour locomotive faculty is too high for matter by any change it can undergo to obtain: for we (as inward experience, or conſcience of what we doe may teach us) determine our ſelves commonly to action, and move the corporeal inſtruments ſubject to our will and command, not by force of any precedent bodily impreſſion or impulſe, but either according to mere pleaſure, or in virtue of ſomewhat ſpiritual and abſtracted from matter. acting upon us, not by a phyſical energy, but by moral repreſentation, in a manner more eaſily conceived than expreſſed; (for no man ſurely is ſo dull, that he cannot perceive a huge difference between being dragg'd by a violent hand, and drawn to action by a ſtrong reaſon; although it may puzzle him to expreſs that difference) ſuch a propoſition of truth, ſuch an apprehenſion of events poſſible, ſuch an appearance of good or evil conſequent (things no where exiſtent without us, nor having in them any thing of corporeal ſubſiſtence; nor therefore capable of corporeal operation) are all the engines that uſually impell us to action; and theſe by a voluntary application of our minds (by collecting and digeſting, ſevering and rejecting, ſifting and moulding the preſent ſingle repreſentations of things, by an immediate interiour power, independent from any thing without us) we frame within our ſelves. And even ſuch ſelf-moving, or ſelf-determining power we cannot any wiſe conceive to be in, or to ariſe from any part of this corporeal maſs, however ſhaped or ſeized, however ſituated or agitated: much leſs can we well apprehend the more noble faculties to be ſeated in, or to ſpring from it; of them the groſſeſt and the fineſt, the ſloweſt and the nimbleſt, the rougheſt and the ſmootheſt bodies are alike capable, or rather unlike, uncapable. To think a groſs body may be ground and pounded into rationality, a ſlow body may be thumpt and driven into paſſion, a rough body may be filed and poliſhed into a faculty of diſcerning and reſenting things; that a cluſter of pretty thin round atoms (as Democritus forſooth conceited) that a well mixt combination of elements (as Empedocles fanſied) that a harmonious contemperation (or craſis) of humours (as Galen, dreaming it ſeems upon his drugs and his potions, would perſuade us) that an implement made up of I know not what fine ſprings, and wheels, and ſuch mechanick knacks (as ſome of our modern wizards have been buſie in divining) ſhould without more to doe become the ſubject of ſo rare capacities and endowments, the authour of actions ſo worthy, and works ſo wonderful; capable of wiſdom and vertue, of knowledge ſo vaſt, and of deſires ſo lofty; apt to contemplate truth, and affect good; able to recollect things paſt, and to foreſee things future; to ſearch ſo deep into the cauſes of things, and diſcloſe ſo many myſteries of nature; to invent ſo many arts and ſciences, to contrive ſuch projects of policy, and atchieve ſuch feats of prowеſs; briefly ſhould become capable to deſign, undertake and perform all thoſe admirable effects of humane wit and induſtry which we daily ſee and hear of; how ſenſeleſs and abſurd conceits are theſe; how can we, without great indignation and regret entertain ſuch ſuppoſitions? No, no; 'tis both ridiculous fondneſs, and monſtrous baſeneſs for us to own any parentage from, or any alliance to things ſo mean, ſo very much below us. 'Tis indeed obſervable, that no man can well, or ſcarce any man hath diſowned the receiving his being from God, but hath alſo in a manner diſavowed his own being what he is; that no man denying God, hath not alſo withal denied himſelf; denied himſelf to be a man; renounced his reaſon, his liberty, and other perfections of his nature; rather than acknowledge himſelf ſo well deſcended, hath been ready to confeſs himſelf no more than a beaſt, yea much leſs than probably beaſts are; a mere corporeal machine, a ball of fate and chance, a thing violently toſt and tumbled up and down by bodies all about it. But let theſe degenerate men vilifie their own nature, and diſparage themſelves as they pleaſe, yet thoſe noble perfections of our ſouls ſpeak its extraction from a higher ſtock; we cannot if we conſider them well, but acknowledge that, or as Epicharmus ſaid of old, that man's reaſon did ſprout from the divine reaſon; they plainly diſcover their original to be from a cauſe it ſelf underſtanding and knowing, willing freely, reſenting things (if I may ſo ſpeak) and moving of it ſelf in a more excellent manner and degree.

Mentem è cœleſti demiſſam traximus arce;

Ariſt. de An. l. 2.

Ὁ γὲ δὲ τ᾽ ἀνθρώπȣ λόγος. πέφυκ᾽ ἀπὸ τȣ̃ θείȣ λόγȣ. Epic. Cl. Alex. Ser. 5. pag. 441.

And indeed it is very conſiderable to our purpoſe, that while we aſſert the exiſtence of God, we aſſert no other thing to be, than ſuch as whereof we can aſſign a manifeſt inſtance or example (as it were) although in degree much inferiour; for what can in any degree exiſt, 'tis not hard to conceive that poſſible to exiſt in any degree, how high ſoever; what is in kind poſſible, is in any perfection of degree poſſible; yea what we ſee in a lower degree ſomewhere to exiſt, doth probably otherwhere exiſt in higher perfection. There is therefore ſcarce any attribute commonly aſcribed to God, the exiſtence whereof we cannot ſhew poſſible, yea very credible, by ſhewing ſome degree (I uſe this word in a large and popular ſenſe, not regarding Scholaſtical nicety) ſome participation, ſome ſemblance (or if you pleaſe, ſome ſhadow) thereof diſcernible in man; he being indeed a ſmall picture, as it were, wherein God hath drawn and repreſented himſelf, giving us to read that of himſelf in this ſmall volume, which in its proper character and ſize we could never be able to apprehend; each letter, each line of his excellency being in it ſelf too large for our eye perfectly to view and comprehend.

3. We are (I ſay) not only God's works, but his children; our ſouls bearing in their countenance and complexion divers expreſs features of him; eſpecially as at firſt they were made, and as by improvement of our capacities they may again become. In the ſubſtance of man's ſoul, in its union with things corporeal, in its properties and powers we may obſerve divers ſuch reſemblances, declaring it in a manner to be what Seneca did ſay of it, a little God harboured in humane body. For as God (inhabiting light inacceſſible) being himſelf inviſible, and ſubject to no ſenſe, diſcovers himſelf by manifold effects of wiſdom and power, ſo doth our ſoul, it ſelf immediately expoſed to no ſenſe, ſhew it ſelf by many works of art and induſtry, wherein ſhe imitates nature, and the works of God; although her works in fineneſs and greatneſs do indeed come infinitely ſhort of his.

As God by his preſence and influence doth (as the Philoſopher ſpeaks) contain, and keep together the whole frame of things; ſo that he withdrawing them, it would fall of it ſelf into corruption and ruine; So doth the ſoul by its union and ſecret energy upon the body connect the parts of its body, and preſerve it from diſſolution, which preſently, they being removed, do follow.

As he, in a manner beyond our conception, without any proper extenſion, or compoſition of parts doth co-exiſt with, penetrateth, and paſſeth through all things; * So is ſhe, in a manner alſo unconceivable, every where preſent within her bounds, and penetrates all the dimenſions of her little world.

As He incomprehenſibly by a word of his mind, or by a mere act of will doth move the whole frame or any part of nature; ſo doth ſhe, we cannot tell how, by thinking only, and by willing wield her body, and determine any member thereof to motion.

O As

— quid mirum noſcere mundum
Si poſſunt homines, quibus eſt & mundus in ipſis, Exemplúmque Dei quiſque eſt in imagine parvâ? Manil. 4.

Triſmeg. χʹ. Διὸ τολμητέον ἐστὶν, τὸν μὲν ἄνθρωπον ἐπίγειον, εἶναι θεὸν θνητὸν· τὸν δὲ οὐράνιον εἶναι θεὸν, ἀθάνατον ἄνθρωπον.
Deus in humano corpore hoſpitans.

Quem in hoc mundo locum Deus obtinet, hunc in homine animus; quod eſt illuc materia, id in nobis corpus eſt. Sen. Ep. 65.
Deum te ſcito eſſe: ſiquidem Deus eſt, qui viget, qui ſentit, qui meminit, qui providet, qui tam regit, & movet, & moderatur id corpus, cui præpoſitus eſt, quàm hunc mundum princeps ille Deus; & ut ipſum mundum ex quadam parte mortalem Deus æternus, ſic fragile corpus animus ſempiternus movet. Cic. in Somn. Scip.

Περιέχει πᾶσαν φύσιν. Ariſt. de mundo.

Δοκεῖ ἡ ψυχὴ τὸ σῶμα συνέχειν· ἐξελθούσης οὖν διαπνεῖται καὶ σήπεται. Ariſt. de An. 1. 9.

* Ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ τοῖς τῆς διανοίας κινήμασι πάσῃ κατ᾽ ἐξουσίαν ἐφαπλοῦται τῇ κτίσει, καὶ μέχρις οὐρανῶν ἀνιοῦσα, καὶ τῶν ἀβύσσων ἐπιβαλεύουσα, καὶ τῷ πλάτει τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐπερχομένη, &c. Gr. Nyſſ. Cat. c. 10.

As He, not confined by the extenſion or duration of things doth at one ſimple view behold all things, not only preſent, but paſt and future; yea whenever, wherever, however poſſible; So doth ſhe making wide excurſions out of her narrow manſion in an inſtant, as it were, or with a marvellous agility tranſcend any fixed bounds of time or place; ſurveys in her thought the moſt remote regions, ſtopping no where, and paſſing over the worlds bounds into ſpaces void and imaginary; reviews ages long ſince paſt, and looks forward into thoſe long after to come; ſees things in their cauſes, and as it were beyond them, even the poſſibilities of things that never ſhall be.

Magna & generoſa res eſt humanus animus, in immenſum ſe extendit, nec ullos ſibi poni niſi communes cum Deo terminos patitur. Sen. Ep. 102.

Πῶς μετρῷ τόπῳ, ϗ νοῦς οὐ χωρίζεται, ἀλλ' ἐν ταυτῷ μένων πάντα ἐπέρχεται; Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

As He performs nothing raſhly or vainly, but always with wiſeſt deſign to the beſt end; ſo doth ſhe never ſet her ſelf on action without ſome drift, or aim at good apparent to her.

Ὁ θεὸς οὐδὲν μάτην ποιεῖ. Ariſt.

As He among all the agitations and changes of things without him abides himſelf immovable, impaſſible and immutable; ſo is ſhe, immediately at leaſt, not diſturbed, not altered, not affected by the various motions that ſurround her; they do not touch her; they cannot ſtir her; among the many tumults and tempeſts bluſtering all about her ſhe can retain a ſteady calm and reſt; (Ariſtotle himſelf concluded her to be unmoveable, impaſſible, unmixt and uncompounded.) So fair characters are there of the divine nature engraven upon man's ſoul; but one chief property thereof we have not as yet touched; whereof (alas!) the lineaments are more faint and leſs diſcernible; they being in themſelves originally moſt tender and delicate, and thence apt by our unhappy degeneration to ſuffer the moſt, and have thence accordingly been moſt defaced; Goodneſs I mean; whereof yet, I ſhall not doubt to ſay, many goodly reliques are extant, and may be obſerved therein. There do remain diſperſed in the ſoil of humane nature divers ſeeds of goodneſs, of benignity, of ingenuity, which being cheriſhed, excited and quickned by good culture do, to common experience, thruſt out flowers very lovely, yield fruits very pleaſant of vertue and goodneſs. We ſee that even the generality of men are prone to approve the laws and rules directing to juſtice, ſincerity and beneficence; to commend actions ſutable unto them, to honour perſons practiſing according to them; as alſo to diſtaſt, deteſt or deſpiſe ſuch men, whoſe principles or tempers incline them to the practice of injury, fraud, malice and cruelty; yea even them men generally are apt to diſlike, who are ſo addicted to themſelves, as to be backward to doe good to others. Yea no man can act according to thoſe rules of juſtice and goodneſs without ſatisfaction of mind; no man can doe againſt them without inward ſelf-condemnation and regret (as S. Paul did obſerve for us.) No man hardly is ſo ſavage, in whom the receiving kindneſſes doth not beget a kindly ſenſe, and an inclination (eo nomine, for that cauſe barely) to return the like; which inclination cannot well be aſcribed to any other principle than ſomewhat of ingenuity, innate to man.

Τάξας λογικοῦ ϗ ἀλόγου κεράματος τὸν ἄνθρωπον, ζῶον λογικὸν συνεστήσατο, καὶ συνέδησε μυστικῶς τε καὶ ἀῤῥήτως τὸν χοῦν τῷ νοῒ, ϗ τὸν νοῦν τῷ πνεύματι. Greg. Naz Or. 26.

Ἓν τῶν ἀδυνάτων ὑπάρχειν αὐτῇ κίνησιν. de An. 1. 3. ἀπαθής. de An. 1. 5. 3. 5, 6, &c. ἀμιγὴς ἁπλοῦς. 3. 6, &c.

Quæ autem natio non comitatem, non benignitatem, non gratum animum, & beneficii memorem diligit? quæ ſuperbos, quæ maleficos, quæ crudeles, quæ ingratos non aſpernatur, non odit? Cic. de Leg. 1. pag. 305.

Rom. 2. 15.

Quid tam laudabile, quid tam æqualiter in omnium animos receptum, quàm referre benè meritis gratiam? Sen. de Benef. 4. 16.

Huic uni rei non poſuimus legem, tanquam ſatis natura caviſſet. Ibid. 4. 17.

All men (I ſuppoſe) feel in themſelves (if at leaſt not harden'd by villainous cuſtom) a diſpoſition prompting them to commiſerate, yea (even with ſome trouble, and ſome damage to themſelves) to ſuccour and relieve them who are in want, pain, or any diſtreſs; even mere ſtrangers and ſuch from whom they can expect no return of benefit or advantage to themſelves.

Many examples occur in experience and in hiſtory of men, who from dictates of common reaſon, and natural inclinations (which in this caſe are not to be ſeparated, both ariſing from the ſame ſource of humane nature) have been very apt freely and liberally to impart unto others ſomewhat of any good thing they poſſeſſed; to ſacrifice their own eaſe, pleaſure, profit unto others benefit; to undergo great pains and hazards for publick good (the good of their family, of their friends, of their countrey, of mankind in general) and all this without any hope of recompence; except perhaps that commonly they might have ſome regard to the approbation and acceptance, to the good will and gratitude of them, whom their beneficence obliged; which in real eſteem is no great derogation to their noble performances; and argues only there is together with ſuch a laudable benignity or goodneſs of nature (to excite and enliven it) implanted a natural ambition alſo, or generoſity in man's ſoul; which being well moderated ſeems not culpable; ſince God himſelf in return to his moſt free beneficence doth expect and require ſomewhat of thanks and praiſe; ſo much as we are able to render to him.

Vicit amor patriæ, laudumque cupido.

Yea (although our adverſaries will ſcarce admit ſo much, for that not ſuppoſing any good original, they are unwilling to allow any good derivative; they are as ready to exclude all humanity as divinity; they have commonly as no opinion of God, ſo no good opinion of men; feeling little good in themſelves, they are willing to think leſs to be in others; ſo projecting to excuſe themſelves, and ſhrowd their own particular faults under the covert of a general naughtineſs) I doubt not to ſay, there have been many perſons in all ages full of very ſingle and ſincere good-will toward men, heartily deſiring the publick good, and compaſſionating the evils of mankind; ready with their beſt endeavours to procure and promote the one, to prevent and remove the other, from principles of mere ingenuity or pure nobleneſs; that with unmovable reſolution have perſiſted in courſes tending to ſuch ends, although in them they have encountred dangers, diſgraces and troubles from the ingrateful world, or rather from ſome men prevalent therein, their envy or ſpite.

Nec eſt quiſquam gentis ullius, qui ducem naturam nactus ad virtutem pervenire non poſſit. Cic. de Leg. 1.

Natura nos ad mentem optimam genuit, adeoque diſcere meliora volentibus promptum eſt, ut verè intuenti mirum ſit illud magis malos eſſe tam multos. Quintil. 12. 11.

In fine, the wiſeſt obſervers of man's nature have pronounced him to be a creature gentle and ſociable, inclinable to and fit for converſation, apt to keep good order, to obſerve rules of juſtice, to embrace any ſort of vertue, if well managed; if inſtructed by good diſcipline, if guided by good example, if living under the influence of wiſe laws and vertuous governours. Fierceneſs, rudeneſs, craft, malice, all perverſe and intractable, all miſchievous and vicious diſpoſitions to grow among men (like weeds in any, even the beſt ſoil) and overſpread the earth from neglect of good education; from ill conduct, ill cuſtom, ill example;

ζῶον ἥμερον. ζῶον πολιτικόν.

Chryſoſt. Tom 5. pag. 613. Καθάπερ ἡ γῆ, ὅταν λιπαρὰ καὶ πίων οὖσα τυγχάνῃ μὴ γεωργῆται δὲ, πολλὴν ἐπιδείκνυται τῶν ἀκανθῶν τὴν φορὰν, οὕτω δὲ καὶ ἡ φύσις ἡ ἡμετέρα καλὴ οὖσα διὰ τὸ περαγόντα, καὶ πρὸς τὸν τῆς ἀρετῆς καρπὸν ἐπιτηδείως ἔχουσα, &c.

Plut. de ſera num. vind. pag 978. --- Εἰδὼς ὅσην μοῖραν ἀρετῆς ἀπ᾽ αὐτῆ φερόμεναι πρὸς γένεσιν ψυχαὶ βαδίζουσι, καὶ τὸ γενναῖον ὡς ἰσχυρὸν αὐταῖς, καὶ οὐκ ἐξίτηλον ἐπέφυκεν ἐξανθεῖ δὲ παρὰ φύσιν τὴν κακίαν ὑπὸ τροφῆς, καὶ ὁμιλίας φαύλης φθειρόμενον, &c.

(tis the compariſon of Saint Chryſoſtom, and of Plutarch.) 'Tis favour therefore, I conceive, to their own habitual depravations of nature (or perhaps to ſome prejudicate opinions) which hath induced ſome men to make ſo diſadvantageous a portraicture of humane nature, in which nothing lightſome or handſome, no lines of candour or rectitude do appear, but all ſeems black and crooked; all is drawn over with dusky ſhades, and irregular features of baſe deſignfulneſs, and malicious cunning; of ſuſpicion, malignity, rapacity; which character were it true (in that general extent, and not proper only to ſome monſters among men) we need not farther ſeek for hell, ſince as many men, ſo many fiends appear unto us. But ſo commodious living here, ſo many offices daily performed among men of courteſie, mercy and pity; ſo many conſtant obſervances of friendſhip and amity, ſo many inſtances of fidelity and gratitude, ſo much credit always (even among Pagans and Barbarians) preſerved to juſtice and humanity, (humanity, that very name doth fairly argue for us) do ſufficiently confute thoſe defamers, and ſlanderers of mankind; do competently evidence, that all good inclinations are not quite baniſhed the world, nor quite razed out of man's ſoul; but that even herein humane nature doth ſomewhat reſemble its excellent original, the nature divine.

Thus doth man's nature in its ſubſtance, as it were, its faculties, its manner of operation reſemble God; but we may farther obſerve, that as children are indeed in complexion and feature uſually born ſomewhat like to their parents, but grow daily more like unto them; (thoſe ſmaller lineaments continually with their bulk and ſtature encreaſing and becoming more diſcernible) ſo is man improvable to more exact reſemblance of God; his ſoul hath appetites and capacities, by which well guided and ordered it ſoars and climbs continually in its affection and deſire toward divine perfection. Man hath an inſatiable curioſity and greedineſs of knowledge (his eye is never ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor his ear filled with hearing) he never reſts content with, but in a manner deſpiſes the notions already acquired; always ſtriving to enlarge and enrich his mind with intellectual treaſure. So doth he tend nearer to divine omniſcience.

Eccleſ. 1. 8.

And as his ſearches after truth, ſo his deſires of good are in a manner boundleſs. No preſent, no definite good can long detain his liking, or fully content him: he ſoon doth ſuck it dry, and leaves it inſipid; then longs and haunts after freſh entertainments: he ſeems poor to himſelf in the greateſt plenty, and ſtraitned in the moſt ample condition. In ſhort, he ever aſpires to ſomewhat more great and high than what he enjoys; finding in himſelf a kind of infinite (at leaſt indefinite) ambition and covetouſneſs, a reſtleſs tendency after farther degrees of joy and happineſs, ſo doth he ſhoot himſelf on toward that higheſt mark of divine felicity.

Being ſenſible of his own mortal and tranſitory condition, he yet ſeeks to live for ever in his name and memory, labours to perform memorable actions, rears laſting monuments of his art and knowledge, of his wealth and power, of his bounty and munificence, by all means ſtudying and ſtriving to commend himſelf to the regard of poſterity; thus affects he another ſort of likeneſs unto God, even a kind of immortality and eternity.

If alſo being, through divine grace, awakened out of that drowſie ſtate (which naturally in great meaſure hath ſeized upon all men) he diſcovereth his moral or ſpiritual wants and imperfections; he is then apt to breath and endeavour a nearer ſimilitude to God, even in goodneſs, righteouſneſs and purity; to labour in getting continually his inclinations more rectified, and his paſſions better compoſed; in reſtraining, ſubduing, deſtroying inordinate ſelf-love with the ſenſuality, the perverſeneſs, the pride, the malice growing from that evil root; in promoting all vertuous deſires and affections, eſpecially reverence toward God his father, and charity toward man his brother; neither then can he be at eaſe or well content, till he arrive in ſuch diſpoſitions of mind to that nearneſs of perfection which his capacities do admit. And a man thus qualified in degree, thus tending in deſire toward higher perfection in goodneſs, is indeed the moſt lively image that can be framed of God; being (as Saint Paul expreſſeth it) renewed to an acknowledgment (or better underſtanding of himſelf, of his maker, of true goodneſs) according to the image of him that made him. I might alſo propound to your conſideration that φίλτρον φυσικὸν τὸ πρὸς τ̃ κτίσαντα (as one of our Fathers doth call it) that natural proclivity obſervable in man to acknowledge and worſhip God; to embrace religion both in opinion and practice, and eſpecially on all occaſions of need or diſtreſs to have recourſe unto him, as an argument of his relation to God. 'Tis we ſee common in nature for all creatures to be readily acquainted with their parents, to run after them, to expect from them ſupply of wants, ſuccour in ſtraits, refuge and defence in dangers; from hence we may eaſily diſcern to what parent any child belongs: And ſince there appears the like inſtinct and capacity innate to man (and indeed to him alone, whence ſome Philoſophers thought good from this property to define man, a creature capable of religion) Since he is apt to entertain notions of God, to bear in his mind awe and reſpect toward him; ſince he is ready in all his ſtraits (when other helps and hopes fail him) to lift up his heart and voice toward heaven for aſſiſtance; why may we not in like manner hence diſcern, and with like reaſon infer, that man is alſo in eſpecial manner God's child and off-ſpring?

εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν. Coloſ. 3. 10.

Orig. in Celſ.

Teſtimonium animæ naturaliter religioſæ. Tertull.

Animal religionis capax

Animus---hoc habet argumentum divinitatis ſuæ, quòd illum divina delectant Sen Nat. quæſt 1. præf.

I might alſo adjoin, that the very power of framing conceptions, although imperfect and inadequate, concerning God, is in it ſelf a faculty ſo very ſpiritual and ſublime, that it argues ſomething divine in man's ſoul. * That like is known by its like, was an axiome among ancient Philoſophers; and that ſpiritual things are ſpiritually diſcerned, is the rule of a better Maſter in wiſdom than they; And beaſts ſurely, becauſe not indued with reaſon, have no conceptions concerning mans nature or the matters proper to him, (according to what rules, by what methods, to what purpoſes he doth act) ſo in likelihood ſhould we not be able to apprehend and diſcourſe about things appertaining to God, his nature, the methods and reaſons of his proceedings; the notions of eternal truth, the indiſpenſable laws of right, the natural differences of good and evil, with ſuch like high objects of thought, except our ſouls had in them ſome ſparks of divine underſtanding; ſome cognation with and communication from heaven.

*Ariſt. de An. 1. 2. γινώσκεσθαι ὁμοίῳ ὅμοιον.

1 Cor. 2. 14.

Quis cœlum poſſit niſi cœli munere noſſe,
Et reperire Deum niſi qui pars ipſe deorum eſt? Manil. lib. 2.

I ſhall to theſe only ſubjoin one farther conſideration worth attending to, that the wiſeſt and moſt conſiderate men in ſeveral times, only by reflecting upon their own minds, and obſerving in them what was moſt lovely and excellent, moſt pure and ſtreight, have fallen upon and conſpired in notions concerning God, very ſutable to thoſe which we believe taught us by revelation; although contrary to the prejudices of their education, and to popular conceits: many admirable paſſages to this purpoſe we may find drop from the mouth of Socrates, and the pen of Plato; in Cicero, in Epictetus, yea in the leaſt credulous or fanciful of men, Ariſtotle himſelf. Whence plainly enough we may collect how near affinity there is between God and us; how legible characters of the divinity are written upon our ſouls; how eaſily we may know God, if we be not ignorant of our ſelves; that we need not go far to fetch arguments to prove that God is, nor to find leſſons to learn what he is; ſince we always carry both about us, or rather within us; ſince our ſouls could indeed come from no other than ſuch a being, whom they ſo reſemble and repreſent.

I have indulged my thoughts ſomewhat freely in this ſpeculation, yet I hope not altogether impertinently, for that (as I before alledged) in the chief of God's works (obſervable by us) we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that his glory doth chiefly ſhine; and will therefore be moſt diſcernible to us, if we open our eyes and apply our minds thereto.

II. Thus doth humane nature, being in each ſingular man, ſhew the exiſtence of God, as its original authour and pattern; conſidering alſo men as related and combined together in ſociety, ſome glimpſe of a divine power and wiſdom ordering them toward it, and preſerving them in it, may be perceived. As in the world natural, the parts thereof are ſo fitted in varieties of ſize, of quality, of aptitude to motion, that all may ſtick together (excluding chaſms and vacuities) and all co-operate inceſſantly to the preſervation of that common union and harmony which was there intended: So in the world political we may obſerve various propenſions and aptitudes diſpoſing men to collection and coherence and co-operation in ſociety. They are apt to flock together not only from a kind of neceſſity, diſcovered by reaſon, for mutual help and defence; but from a natural love to company and converſation, with an aptneſs to delight therein; and from an inbred averſation to that ſolitude, wherein many great appetites natural to man muſt needs be ſtifled. They are alſo marvellouſly fitted to maintain intercourſe not only by the principal guide thereof, reaſon, but by that great inſtrument of it, ſpeech; whereby men impart and as it were transfuſe into one another their inmoſt thoughts; which faculty doth evidently relate unto and plainly ſhews men naturally deſigned for ſociety. In Order thereto men are alſo indued with ſeveral ſubordinate inclinations and qualifications (ariſing from different temper of body, or diſpoſition of mind) requiſite to cement ſociety and preſerve it for a competent durance in peace and order; ſo few being made very ſagacious and provident, and thence fit to direct others, very quick and active, thence able to execute; others of a high ſpirit and courage, thence affecting and diſpoſed to command; moſt others being dull in conceit, or heavy of temper, or of a ſoft ſpirit, and thence apt to follow, content to reſt in mean ſtate, willing to obey. All theſe things being ſo ordered, that even contrarieties of humour in men do ſerve to ſettle them in their due place and poſture; to beget and preſerve a peaceful union, and a decent harmony of action in ſociety; which, ſuppoſing all men in ability and inclination more like or equal (able to doe, apt to affect the ſame things) could hardly be; for then all men would be competitours and ſtruglers for the ſame thing, and ſo none would eaſily obtain, or peacefully enjoy it.

Now ſince it is plainly beſt for man to live thus in ſociety many great benefits thence accruing to him, (ſecurity to his life, ſafe enjoying the fruits of his induſtry, much eaſe by mutual aſſiſtance, much delight in converſation; all that civil people enjoy of convenience beyond Barbarians and Savages, or indeed above beaſts) that men are ſo diſpoſed and ſuted thereto is an argument of mighty wiſdom and great goodneſs in that cauſe, from whence all this proceeded; and ſuch a cauſe is God.

Thus from the conſtitution of ſocieties we may collect a provident care over humane affairs; the ſame alſo may be reaſonably deduced from the preſervation of them; for although man be inclined unto and fitted for ſociety, yet being an agent very free and looſe in his action (acting contingently, and without neceſſary ſubjection to any ſetled law or rule, as do other things in nature) no ordinary banks will conſtantly retain him in due place and order; ſo that the courſe of affairs, perverted by ſome mens irregular wills and paſſions, would run into great confuſion, did not a wiſe care alſo continually govern things, ſeaſonably interpoſing its hand, and thereby upholding, retaining, eſtabliſhing them in order, or reducing them thereinto; did not a ſuperintendent power reſtrain the fierceneſs of tyrants, the ambition of grandees, the greedineſs of oppreſſours, the wildneſs and precipitancy of factious multitudes; did not God ſometime break the arm of the wicked; or (as Job ſpeaks) pour contempt upon princes, and weaken the ſtrength of the mighty; If he, that ſtilleth the noiſe of the ſeas, did not alſo repreſs the tumults of the people. Indeed as in nature it is wiſely provided that tigres, wolves and foxes upon the earth, that kites in the air, and ſharks in the ſea ſhall not ſo multiply and abound, but that many tame and gentle creatures ſhall abide there by them: So among men, that (among divers fierce, ravenous, crafty and miſchievous men) ſo many poor, ſimple and harmleſs people do make a ſhift to live here in competent ſafety, liberty, eaſe and comfort, doth argue his ſpecial overwatching care and governance, who (as we are, in conformity to experience, taught by ſacred ſcripture) hath an eſpecial regard unto the poor, and unto the meek; providing for them, and protecting them.

Pſal. 37. 17.
Pſal. 10. 15.
Job 12. 21.
38. 15.
Pſal. 107. 40.
Pſal. 75. 7.

Pſal. 146. 7.
107. 41.
9. 9. 10. 14.
37. 18.

I might ſubjoin thoſe ſignifications of providence, which the general connexion of mankind doth afford; things being ſo ordered, that ſeveral Nations and Societies ſhall be prompted by need or by advantage mutual to maintain correſpondence and commerce with each other; under common laws and compacts, that ſo there ſhould become a kind of union and harmony even among the ſeveral parts, and elements, as it were, of the humane world. I might conſider the benefit that ariſes (as in the natural world from contrary qualities and motions, ſo) in the humane world even from wars and contentions; how theſe rowze men from ſloth, bruſh away divers vices, ferment and purge things into a better condition; but I will not ſtrive to be ſo minute and ſubtile.

Here I ſhall conclude theſe ſorts of argumentation, inferring the exiſtence of God from the common effects obvious to our ſenſe and experience, either in the greater world of Nature, or leſſer world of Man; by which God doth continually in a ſtill, though very audible, voice whiſper this great truth into our ears. There be other ſort of effects, more rare and extraordinary, which go above or againſt both thoſe ſtreams of natural and humane things, whereby God doth more loudly, as it were, and expreſly proclaim his Being and Providence; the conſideration of which I ſhall reſerve to another time.

Grant, we beſeech thee, Almighty God, that the words, which we have heard this day with our outward ears, may through thy grace be ſo grafted inwardly in our hearts, that they may bring forth in us the fruit of good living, to the honour and praiſe of thy name, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

I Believe in God.

SERMON VIII.

THE
Being of GOD
Proved from Univerſal Conſent.

PSALM 19. 3,4.

There is no ſpeech, nor language, where their voice is not heard: their line (or rather according to the * LXX, their voice) is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world.

* who reade קילם inſtead of קום.

THE Pſalmiſt doth in this place obſerve and affirm (very plainly) the Univerſality of Religion; that all Nations did conſpire in acknowledging a Divinity, and aſcribing thereto the framing and conſervation of the heavens. He ſuppoſes the heavens to ſpeak an univerſal Language, heard and underſtood by all people, therein glorifying God and declaring him their Maker.

Upon which ſuppoſition I purpoſe now to ground an argument to prove (that which formerly by ſeveral other kinds of diſcourſe I have endeavoured to evince) that great fundamental truth concerning the exiſtence of God, that is, of one incomprehenſibly Excellent Being, the Maker and Governour of all things.

The argument (to be ſhort) is that (as Lactantius ſpeaks) * univerſal and unanimous teſtimony of people, and nations, through all courſes of time, who (otherwiſe differing in language, cuſtom and conceit) only have agreed in this one matter of Opinion. This teſtimony, in it ſelf ſimply taken, hath indeed (according to the rules of reaſon and judgments of wiſe men) no ſmall force; but ſeems to have much greater, if we conſider the ſource, whatever that could be, whence it was derived. As to the thing abſolutely taken; Ariſtotle thus ranks the degrees of probability: What ſeems true to ſome wiſe men is ſomewhat probable; what ſeems to the moſt or to all wiſe men is very probable; what moſt men, both wiſe and unwiſe, aſſent unto, doth ſtill more more reſemble truth; but what men generally conſent in hath the higheſt probability, and approaches near to demonſtrable truth; ſo near, that it may paſs for ridiculous arrogance and ſelf-conceitedneſs, or for intolerable obſtinacy and perverſeneſs to deny it. A man (ſaith the Philoſopher) may aſſume what ſeems true to the wiſe, if it do not contradict the common opinion of men; no man's wiſdom (he ſuppoſes) ſufficient to balance the general authority of men. Indeed, when extravagant wits, and pretenders to wiſdom (or to an extraordinary reach in knowledge) ſhall aſſert things evidently repugnant to ſenſe or reaſon; that ſnow and coal have the like appearance (as did Anaxagoras,) that all motion is impoſſible (as Zeno,) that contradictory propoſitions may be conſiſtent (as Heraclitus;) we may add to thoſe inſtances, that all things in nature proceeded from Chance (as Epicurus and his followers;) what other means have we (ſince no principles can be more evident than ſuch propoſitions as they reject) to confute them, or to decide the cauſe, than making appeal to the common ſentiments of Mankind? which if they decline, what have we more to doe than to laugh at, or pity them? however ſurely, he needs to have a very ſtrong and very clear reaſon to ſhew, who dares to withſtand the common ſuffrage of mankind, and to challenge all the world of miſtake. Now ſomewhat to enforce this diſcourſe; but more to evidence the matter of fact upon which it is grounded, and withal to make good that confirmation thereof, which was intimated; I ſhall alledge ſome few teſtimonies of ancient Philoſophers (that is of witneſſes in this cauſe moſt impartial and unſuſpected) ſelected out of innumerable others extant and obvious, ſerving to the ſame purpoſe: We are wont to attribute much (ſaith Seneca) to what all men preſume; 'tis an argument with us of truth, that any thing ſeems true to all; as that there be Gods we hence collect, for that all men have engrafted in them an opinion concerning Gods; neither is there any Nation ſo void of laws, or good manners, that it doth not believe there are ſome Gods; ſo doth he aſſert the matter of fact, and argue from it: the like doth Cicero in many places, ſometimes in the perſon of his Dialogiſts, ſometimes according to his own ſenſe; preſſing this argument as very weighty. This (ſaith he, in his Tuſculane queſtions) ſeems a moſt firm thing, which is alledged, why we ſhould believe Gods to be, becauſe no Nation is ſo fierce, no man ſo wild, whoſe mind an opinion concerning Gods, hath not imbued: Many think amiſs concerning Gods, for that uſes to proceed from bad cuſtom, but all do however conceive a divine power and nature to exiſt— Now in all things the conſent of all nations is to be ſuppoſed a law of nature. We ſhall have other occaſion to cite divers places out of Plato and Ariſtotle, confirming the ſame thing; I ſhall now only add theſe pregnant words of Maximus Tyrius: In ſuch a quarrelling, and tumult, and jangling (about other matters of opinion) you may ſee this one by common accord acknowledged law and ſpeech, that there is one God, the King and Father of all; and many Gods, the children of God, and ruling together with him;

* Teſtimonium populorum atque gentium in una hac re non diſſidentium. Lact. 1. 2.

Θείη δ' ἂν τὶς τὸ δοκοῦν τοῖς σοφοῖς, ἐὰν μὴ ἐναντίον ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν δόξαις ᾖ. Top. 1. 8.

Multum dare ſolemus præſumptioni omnium hominum, apud nos veritatis argumentum eſt aliquid omnibus videri; tanquam deos eſſe ſic colligimus, quòd omnibus de Diis opinio inſita eſt; nec ulla gens uſquam eſt adeò extra leges moreſq; projecta, ut non aliquos Deos credat. Sen. Epiſt. 117. vid. de Benef. 4. 4.

Firmiſſimum hoc afferri videtur cur Deos eſſe credamus, quòd nulla gens tam fera, nemo omnium tam ſit immanis, cujus mentem non imbuerit Deorum opinio. Multi de Diis prava ſentiunt (id enim vitioſo more effici ſolet) omnes tamen eſſe vim, & naturam divinam arbitrantur. — Omni autem in re conſenſio omnium gentium lex naturæ putanda eſt. Tuſc. 1. p. 299.

Vid. de Nat. D. 1. pag. 22: & 2. pag. 53, 57, &c.

Ἐν τοσούτῳ δὲ πολέμῳ καὶ στάσει καὶ διαφωνίᾳ ἕνα ἴδοις ἂν ἐν πάσῃ γῇ ὁμόφωνον νόμον καὶ λόγον, ὅτι θεὸς εἷς πάντων βασιλεὺς καὶ πατὴρ· καὶ θεοὶ πολλοὶ, θεοῦ παῖδες, συνάρχοντες θεῷ, ταῦτα δὲ ὁ ἕλλην λέγει, καὶ ὁ βάρβαρος λέγει, καὶ ὁ ἠπειρώτης, καὶ ὁ θαλάττιος, καὶ ὁ σοφὸς, καὶ ὁ ἄσοφος. Diſſ. 1. p. 5.

this the Greek ſays, and this the Barbarian ſays; the inhabiter of the Continent, and the Iſlander; the wiſe, and the unwiſe do ſay the ſame.

Thus it appears, by teſtimony abundantly ſufficient (to which alſo all Hiſtories ancient and modern do agree) that our concluſion hath been the Catholick and current doctrine of all times and of all places; ſo that who denies aſſent thereto, is beyond meaſure paradoxical, and belongs to a Sect very thin and weak; is in opinion what a monſter is in nature, a thing extraordinary and uncouth; as a Lion without courage, an Ox without horns, a Bird without wings (as the Philoſopher ſpeaks) a thing which ſeldom happs to be, and that never without ſome great errour, or defect.

Ἐι δὲ ἐξεγένοντο ἐν τῷ ξύμπαντι αἰῶνι δύο που καὶ τρεῖς ἄθεον καὶ ταπεινὸν καὶ ἀσθενὲς γένος. ὡς ἄθυμος λέων, ὡς βοῦς ἄκερως, ὡς ὄρνις ἄπτερος. Id. 16.

Καί τις οὐκ ἂν ἐπῄνεσε τὴν τῶν βαρβάρων σοφίαν, εἴγε μηδεὶς αὐτῶν εἰς ἀθεότητα ἐξέπεσε, μηδὲ ἀμφιβάλλουσι περὶ θεῶν, ἆρά γε εἰσιν, ἢ οὐκ εἰσιν, καὶ ἆρά γε ἡμῶν φροντίζουσι, ἢ οὐ. &c. Ælian. var. 2. 31.

But if, as ſurely he will, our haughty adverſary, ſhall refuſe the verdict of this grand Jury, we may aſſert its authority, not only as competent in it ſelf, but as more conſiderable in reſpect to the cauſes, whence it proceeded, or from the manner by which this general conſent can be conceived to have been produced and propagated among men. That men ſhould thus conſpire in opinion muſt needs proceed either 1. from hence, that ſuch an opinion was by way of natural light or inſtinct (as the firſt moſt evident principles of ſcience are conceived to be, or as the moſt effectual propenſions toward good are) implanted in Man's nature; thus Cicero and other Philoſophers ſuppoſe it to have come: In him it is thus ſaid; and argued: Since not by any inſtitution, or cuſtom, or law, this opinion is eſtabliſhed, and among all, without exception, a firm conſent doth abide, it is neceſſary there ſhould be Gods; we having implanted, or rather imbred notions concerning them; but about whatever men naturally do agree, that muſt needs be true; we muſt therefore confeſs there are Gods. Thus doth he draw this opinion from original light of nature. Or, 2. it may come from a common inclination in man's ſoul naturally diſpoſing every man to entertain this opinion, whenever it is propounded, as there is in our eyes a natural readineſs to perceive the light, whenever it ſhines before us; thus others explain the riſe thereof, as Julian particularly: We all, ſaith he, without being taught (without any painful or long inſtruction) are perſwaded, that a Divinity exiſts; and to regard it, and to have, we may ſuppoſe, a ſpeedy tendency (or recourſe) thereto; being in ſuch manner diſpoſed thereto in our ſouls, as things endewed with the faculty of ſeeing are to the light: the ſame ſimilitude is, as I remember, uſed by Plato to the ſame purpoſe. Or, 3. it may come hence, that ſome very prevalent reaſon (obvious to all men, even to the moſt rude and barbarous, and flowing from common principles or notions of truth) did beget this agreement in them: Thus Plutarch derives it from mens common obſervation of the Stars conſtant order and motion; So S. Paul alſo ſeems to imply, the knowledge of God manifeſt to all men from the creation of the world, and the works of God viſible therein; and here (in this 19th Pſalm) the Prophet may ſeem to intend the ſame, although it be not certain he does; for that general acknowledgment and glorifying of God as maker of the heavens, which he avouches, may be underſtood

Cùm enim non inſtituto aliquo, aut more, aut lege ſit opinio conſtituta, maneátque ad unum omnium firma conſenſio, intelligi neceſſe eſt eſſe Deos, quoniam inſitas eorum, vel potiùs innatas cognitiones habemus; de quo autem omnium natura conſentit, id verum eſſe neceſſe eſt. Eſſe igitur Deos confitendum eſt. de N. D. 1. pag: 22. vid. 2. de N. D. 53, 57, &c.

Πάντες ἀδιδάκτως εἶναι θεῖόν τι πεπείσμεθα, καὶ πρὸς τοῦτο ἀφορᾷν, ἐπ' αὐτό τε, οἶμαι, σπεύδειν οὕτω διατεθέμενοι τὰς ψυχὰς πρὸς αὐτὸ, ὥσπερ οἶμαι πρὸς τὸ φῶς τὰ βλέποντα. Jul. ad Heraclitum.

Plut. de plac. 1. 6.

Rom. 1. 19, 20.

ſtood as well the conſequence as the cauſe of this religious opinion. Or, 4. it might from ſome common fountain of inſtruction (from one ancient Maſter, or one primitive tradition) be conveyed, as from one common head or ſource into many particular conduits. Thus the Authour of the Book de Mundo (dedicated to Alexander) ſeems to deduce it: It is an ancient ſaying, ſays he, and running in the face of all men, that from God all things, and by God all things were conſtituted, and do conſiſt. The like Ariſtotle himſelf implies in a notable place, which we ſhall afterward have occaſion to produce.

Ἀρχαῖος μὲν οὖν τις λόγος, καὶ πάτειός ἐστι πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, ὡς ἐκ Θεοῦ τὰ πάντα, καὶ διὰ Θεοῦ ἡμῖν συνέστηκεν. Cap. 6.

Metaph. 12. 8.

No other way beſide one of theſe can we (following experience or reaſon) imagine by which any opinion or practice ſhould prevail generally among men, who otherwiſe are ſo apt to differ and diſſent in judgment about things. And be it any one or more of theſe ways that this opinion became ſo univerſally inſtilled into mens minds, our argument will thereby gain weight and force: If we aſſign or acknowledge any of the two firſt ways, we do in effect yield the queſtion; and grant it unreaſonable to deny our concluſion: if nature forcibly drives men, or ſtrongly draws men into this perſuaſion (nature, which always we find in her notions and in her inſtincts very ſincere and faithful, not only to our ſelves, but to all other creatures) how vain an extravagancy will it then be to oppoſe it? Alſo, if we grant that plain reaſon, apparent to the generality of men, hath moved them to conſent herein, do we not therefore by diſſenting from it, renounce common ſenſe, and confeſs our ſelves unreaſonable: But if we ſay, that it did ariſe in the laſt manner, from a common inſtruction or primitive tradition (as indeed to my ſeeming from that chiefly, aſſiſted by good reaſon, it moſt probably did ariſe) we ſhall thereby be driven to inquire, who that common Maſter, or the Authour of ſuch tradition was; Of any ſuch we find no name recorded (as we do of them, who have by plauſible reaſons or artifices drawn whole Nations and Sects of people to a belief of their doctrine) we find no time when, no place where, no manner how it began to grow or ſpread, as in other caſes hath been wont to appear; what then can we otherwiſe reaſonably deem, than that the firſt deliverers and teachers thereof were none other, than the firſt parents of mankind it ſelf, who as they could not be ignorant of their own original, ſo could not but take care by ordinary education to convey the knowledge thereof to their Children; whence it muſt needs inſenſibly ſpread it ſelf over all poſterities of men, being ſucked in with their milk, being taught them together with their firſt rudiments of ſpeech? Thus doth that conſideration lead us to another, very advantageous to our purpoſe; that mankind hath proceeded from one common ſtock of one man or a few men gathered together; which doth upon a double ſcore confirm our aſſertion: firſt, as proving the generations of men had a beginning; ſecondly, as affording us their moſt weighty authority for the doctrine we aſſert. For, 1. Suppoſing mankind had a beginning upon this earth, whence could it proceed but from ſuch a being as we aſſert? who, but ſuch an one (ſo wiſe, powerful and good) could or would form theſe bodies of ours ſo full of wonderful artifice? who ſhould infuſe thoſe divine endowments, (not only of life and ſenſe, but) of underſtanding and reaſon? Ariſtotle diſcourſing about the generation of Animals, ſays,

De gener. Anim. 3. cap. ult.

Stoici putant homines in omnibus terris, & agris generatos tanquam fungos. Lact. 7. 4.
Vid. Lipſ. Phyſ. Stoic. 3. 3.

If man (or any other perfect animal) were γηγενὴς, he muſt be neceſſarily produced, either as out of a Worm, or as from an Egg; but is it not ridiculous to ſuppoſe him to ariſe in either of thoſe manners? did we, did ever any one in any age obſerve any ſuch production of a man? yet, why if once it could be, ſhould it not happen ſometime, yea often again, in ſome part of the earth, in ſo many thouſand years? what peculiar lucky temper of ſlime can we imagine to have been then, which not at ſometime afterward, not ſomewhere ſhould appear again? Experience ſufficiently declares, that more is required to ſo noble a production, that men no otherwiſe come into the world, than either from another man (fitted in a manner curious above our conception with many organs moſt exquiſitely ſuited to that purpoſe) or immediately from a cauſe incomprehenſibly great and wiſe. And could we without fondneſs conceive man's body poſſibly might ariſe (like Mice, as Diodorus Siculus tells us, out of the mudd of Nilus) from earth and water fermented together, and organized by the Sun's heat; yet, (as more largely we have diſcourſed at another time) we cannot however well ſuppoſe his ſoul, that principle of operations ſo excellent (ſo much different from, ſo far elevated above all material motions) to ſpring up from dirty ſtuff however baked, or boiled by heat. I ask alſo, (ſuppoſing ſtill this notion derived from the firſt men) 2. who inſtilled even this notion into them? why they ſhould conceive themſelves to come from God, if they did not find it ſo; if he that made them, did not ſenſibly diſcover himſelf to them, and ſhew them, that to him they owed their being? In ſhort, if they did teſtify and teach their poſterity, that they came from God, we can have no reaſon to disbelieve them; nor can imagine more credible witneſſes, or more reaſonable inſtructours than themſelves concerning their own original: 'tis a diſcourſe (this) which we find even in Plato: We muſt (ſaith he) yield credence to them, who firſt avouched themſelves the off-ſpring of God, and did ſure clearly know their own progenitours; It is indeed impoſſible to diſtruſt the children of the Gods, although otherwiſe ſpeaking without plauſible, or neceſſary demonſtrations; but, following Law, we muſt believe them, as teſtifying about matters peculiarly belonging to themſelves.

Πειστέον τοῖς εἰρηκόσιν ἔμπροσθεν ἐκγόνοις μὲν θεῶν οὖσιν, ὡς ἔφασαν, σαφῶς δὲ που τοὺς αὐτῶν προγόνους εἰδόσιν· ἀδύνατον οὖν θεῶν παισὶν ἀπιστεῖν καίπερ ἄνευ τε εἰκότων καὶ ἀναγκαίων ἀποδείξεων λέγουσιν, ἀλλ᾽ ὡς οἰκεῖα φάσκουσιν ἀπαγγέλλειν, ἑπομένους τῷ νόμῳ πιστευτέον Tim. p. 1053.

Thus do theſe two notions, that of general tradition concerning God, and that concerning Man's origine upon earth from one ſtock, mutually ſupport and defend each other. And indeed concerning the latter there be divers other arguments of the ſame kind, although perhaps hardly any ſo clear and valid, confirming it; I mean divers common opinions, ſtories and practices of an unaccountable riſe, which cannot be well deemed to have been introduced, and ſo univerſally diffuſed among men otherwiſe than from this fountain. I think it worth the while to propound ſome inſtances thereof, of each kind.

.... quæ ſi ſingula vos fortè non movent, univerſa certè inter ſe connexa, atque conjuncta movere debebunt. Cic. de N. D. 2.

Vid. Cl. Alex. Str. 5. p. 401.

Even this opinion, or ſtory it ſelf concerning Mankind proceeding from one ſingle or very narrow ſtock, was commonly received, and that from this head of tradition; as alſo divers other concerning the nature and ſtate of Man. That God did form Man and breath his ſoul into him (as Aratus ſays, that we are God's off-ſpring, and as Cicero ſpeaks, that we have our ſouls drawn, and dropt from the divine nature) might be ſhewn by innumerable teſtimonies to have been a general opinion; which although it have a very ſtrong foundation in reaſon, yet it ſeems rather to have obtained by virtue of tradition.

A natura divina hauſtos animos & delibutos habemus. Cic. divin. 1.

That Man was formed after the image of God, and doth much reſemble him, was alſo a general opinion, as Ariſtotle himſelf obſerves; and Ovid moſt expreſly according to what he found ſet down in ancient ſtories.

Ἀνθρωποειδεῖς θεοὺς, &c. Metaph. 12. 8. Ὥσπερ δὲ πάντες καὶ τὰ εἴδη ἑαυτοῖς ἀφομοιοῦσι, οὕτω καὶ τοὺς βίους τῶν θεῶν. Polit. 1. 1.

Finxit ad effigiem.

That Man's ſoul is immortal, and deſtined to a future ſtate of life, in joy or pain reſpectively, according to his merits or demerits in this life; that there ſhould accordingly paſs ſevere ſcrutinies and judgments after death upon the actions of this life; that there were places provided of reſt and pleaſure for good men, of horrour and miſery for bad men departed; were opinions that did commonly poſſeſs mens minds; none of them, it ſeems, upon the force of any arguments having a common influence upon men's minds (ſuch as Philoſophers did by ſpeculation invent, being indeed too ſubtile for vulgar capacities to apprehend, and ſcarce able to perſuade themſelves) but rather from their education, continued through all times, and commencing from that head we ſpeak of; as even ſuch Philoſophers themſelves confeſs: We muſt (ſays Plato) believe the reports of this kind, (ſpeaking about theſe matters) being ſo many, and ſo very ancient. And, We ſuppoſe, ſaith Cicero, that ſouls abide after death from the conſent of all Nations. And, I cannot, ſaith he again, aſſent unto thoſe, who have lately begun to diſcourſe, that ſouls do periſh together with bodies, and that all things are blotted out by death; the auctority of the ancients doth more prevail with me. And, When (ſaith Seneca) we diſpute concerning the eternity of ſouls, the conſent of men either fearing, or worſhipping the Inferi (that is, the ſtate of things after death) hath no ſlight moment with us. Even Celſus himſelf (an Epicurean Philoſopher, and great enemy of our faith) confeſſes, that divine men had delivered it, that happy ſouls ſhould enjoy a happy life hereafter.

Cl. Str. 5. p. 442.

Πιστεύειν δὲ ταῖς ἄλλαις φήμαις χρεὼν περὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα οὕτω πολλαῖς, καὶ σφόδρα παλαιαῖς οὔσαις· Plat. de Leg. 2. Vid. Gorg. ſub fin.

Permanere animos arbitramur conſenſu nationum omnium. Cic. Tuſc. 1.

Neq; enim aſſentior iis, qui hæc nuper diſſerere cœperunt cum corporibus ſimul animas interire, atq; omnia morte deleri, plus apud me antiquitas valet, &c. Cic. Læl.

Cùm de animarum æternitate diſſerimus, non leve momentum apud nos habet conſenſus hominum aut timentium inferos, aut colentium. Sen. Ep. 117.

Ἱστόρηνται θείοις ἀνδράσι εὐδαίμων βίος ψυχαῖς εὐδαίμοσι. Celſus apud Orig pag. 350.

The opinion concerning Man having ſometimes been in a better ſtate (both in regard to complexion of mind, and outward accommodations of life) but that he did by his wilful miſcarriages fall thence into this wretched condition of proneneſs to ſin, and ſubjection to ſorrow, was an ancient doctrine (if we take Plato's word) and concerning it Cicero hath theſe remarkable words: From which errours and miſeries of humane life we may (ſaith he) conclude, that ſometime thoſe ancient prophets, or interpreters of the Divine mind in the delivery of holy myſteries, who have ſaid, that we are born to undergo puniſhments for the faults committed in a former life, may ſeem to have underſtood ſomewhat.— ('Tis true, theſe Authors aſſign this fall to the ſouls of ſingular perſons in a ſtate of pre-exiſtence; but it is plain enough, how eaſie it might be ſo to miſtake and transform the ſtory.) To the ſame head may be referr'd that

Παλαιός τις λόγος. Phæd.

Ex quibus humanæ vitæ erroribus atque ærumnis fit, ut interdum veteres illi vates ſive in ſacris initiiſq; tradendis divinæ mentis interpretes, qui nos ob ſcelera ſuſcepta in vita ſuperiore pœnarum luendarum cauſâ natos eſſe dixerunt, aliquid vidiſſe videantur, &c. Cic. fragm. pag. 79.

current

Primi mortalium, quiq; ex his geniti naturam incorrupti ſequebantur, &c. Sen. Ep 90.

--χείρεσσι πίθου μέγα πῶμ' ἀφελοῦσα Ἐσκέδασ', ἀνθρώποισι δ' ἐμήσατο κήδεα λυγρά. Hes. ἔ γ.

current ſtory concerning the Golden Age, in which men firſt did live ſo happily without care and pain; which ſo livelily expreſſes Man's condition in Paradiſe. As alſo thereto may belong that relation concerning Man's being thrown into this miſerable ſtate, becauſe of a rapine committed againſt God's will, and that by the means of a Woman ſent down; who, with her hands opened the lid of a great veſſel (fraught with miſchiefs) and thence diſperſed ſad diſaſters and ſorrows among men; as Heſiod expreſſeth it, in words very applicable to the fact of our mother Eve, and the event following it.

In Phædr.

I do not know alſo whether what Plato ſays concerning Man's being at firſt ἀνδρόγυνος (of both ſexes,) and being afterward cleaved into two, was borrowed from tradition, or deviſed from his own fancy; it ſurely well comports with the ſacred Hiſtory concerning Woman' being taken out of Man. That there are two prime cauſes, or principles, one of good things, the other of bad, was the ancient doctrine among all the ancient Nations; of the Perſians (who called one of them Oromaſdes, the other Arimanius) of the Egyptians (who had their Oſiris and Typhon) of the Chaldeans (who had their good and bad Planets) of the Greeks (who had their good and bad Dæmon, their Ζεὺς and ᾅδης) we have reported by Plutarch in his tract de Iſide & Oſiride, by Laertius in his Prooeme, and others (Aug. de Civ. D. 5. 21.) which conceits ſeem derived from the ancient traditions concerning God the authour of all Good, and Sathan the tempter to all Evil, and the Miniſter of divine vengeance (Plutarch expreſly ſays the good principle was called God, the bad one Dæmon.) Indeed there were many other relations concerning matters of fact or pieces of ancient ſtory agreeing, with the ſacred writings, which did among the ancient people paſs commonly, although ſomewhat diſguiſed by alterations incident from time and other cauſes; which ſeem beſt derivable from this common fountain: Such as that concerning the Sons of God, and Heroes dwelling on the earth, concerning men of old time exceeding thoſe of following times in length of life, in ſtature, in ſtrength of body; whereof in ancient Poets there is ſo much mention; Concerning mens conſpiring in rebellion againſt God; affecting and attempting to climb heaven: Concerning mankind being overwhelmed and deſtroyed by an univerſal deluge; and that by divine juſtice, becauſe of cruelty and oppreſſion (with other enormous vices) generally reigning:

> —Quà terra patet fera regnat Erinnys,
> In facinus juraſſe putes, dent ocyùs omnes
> Quas meruere pati (ſic ſtat ſententia) pœnas.

All over the earth, fierce rage doth reign; you would take them to have ſworn to do miſchief; let them all immediately undergo the pains which they have deſerved; this is my reſolution: So God, in Ovid's ſtyle declared the reaſon, why he decreed to bring that ſore calamity upon mankind: I might add that prophecy, commonly known, that this World ſhall finally periſh by a general conflagration. Clem. Str. 5. p. 442.

Theſe opinions and ſtories chiefly concern Man; there were divers others concerning God and Religion, ſprouting probably from the ſame root. That divine goodneſs was the pure motive of God's making the World, ſeems to have been a tradition; implyed by their ſaying, that Love was the firſt, and the chief of the Gods: πρώτιστον μὲν ἔρωτα θεῶν μητίσατο πάντων, ſaid Parmenides; and Ἠδ' ἔρος, ὃς πάντεσσι, μεταπρέπει

Ariſt. Metaph. 1. 4.

ταπρέπει ἀθανάτοισι, ſaid Heſiod. That God made the world out of a Chaos, or confuſed heap of matter; which is ſo plainly expreſſed in Heſiod, in Ovid and in other ancient Writers. That God did make or beget inferiour inſenſible powers (of great underſtanding and ability; whom they called Gods, and the children of the ſovereign God) whom God immediately did converſe with, and in royal manner did govern; whom he did employ as ſpies and agents in providential adminiſtrations of humane affairs; who did frequently appear unto, and familiarly converſe with men; who do walk up and down the earth obſerving mens actions; ſecretly aſſiſting and comforting good men, reſtraining and croſſing, and puniſhing the bad; whereof we have ſo many inſtances in Homer, in Heſiod, and in other ancient Writers; ſhewing as to thoſe matters the general conceits of the old World. That God's eſpecial preſence and reſidence was above, in heaven; Ariſtotle expreſly tells us was the belief of all men: All men, ſaith he, have an opinion concerning Gods, and all men aſſign the higheſt place to the Gods, both Greeks and Barbarians.

Ariſt. Pol. 1. 1.

Πάντες γὰρ ἄνθρωποι περὶ θεῶν ἔχουσιν ὑπόληψιν, καὶ πάντες τὸν ἀνωτάτω τῷ θείῳ τόπον ἀποδιδόασι καὶ βάρβαροι καὶ ἕλληνες, de Cæl. 1. 3.

That God's providence did extend it ſelf to all particularities of affairs; and that all things were ordered by him; he conſtantly exerciſing both benignity and juſtice ſutably to the deſerts and needs of men; encouraging and aſſiſting; bleſſing and rewarding vertuous and pious men; relieving the diſtreſſed and helpleſs; controlling and chaſtiſing ſuch as were outragiouſly unjuſt, or impious. That God at ſeaſons uſed to declare his mind to men (his approbation or diſpleaſure in regard to their doings) by accidents preternatural or prodigious; did preſignifie future events; did impart fore-knowledge of them in ſeveral ways; by dreams, by viſions, by inſpirations, &c. To theſe opinions were anſwerable divers common practices: Invocating divine help in need; conſulting God by oracle in caſe of ignorance, or doubt; deprecating divine vengeance; making acknowledgments to God in hymns and praiſes; returning oblations for benefits received, both common and ſpecial; expiating guilt, and appeaſing God's wrath by purgations and by ſacrifices (a practice peculiarly unlikely to proceed from any other reaſon than inſtitution) fortifying teſtimonies and promiſes by oath, or appeal to divine knowledge and juſtice; invoking (upon condition) God's judgments upon themſelves or others what is called curſing: Apointing Prieſts for God's ſervice, and yielding them extraordinary reſpect; conſecrating Temples and Altars; making vows, and dedicating gifts; celebrating Feſtivals; paying Tithes (that very determinate part) of the fruits of the earth, of the ſpoils in war, of the gains in trade, by way of acknowledgment and thankfulneſs to the donour and diſpoſer of all things. In which, and the like opinions and performances (which it would be a long buſineſs particularly to inſiſt on) mens general concurrence doth fairly argue, that their Religion did peculiarly reſult from one ſimple inſtitution common to mankind.

That God doth know all the actions, words and inward thoughts of men Vid. Cl. Strom. 5.

That there will be a future judgment, and rewards ſuted to the practices of men in this life. Vid. Cl. Str. 5. p. 442.

To theſe we might adjoin divers civil cuſtoms, wherein moſt Nations did, from this cauſe probably, conſpire: For inſtance, Their counting by Decads, or ſtopping at Ten in their numerical computations; which Ariſtotle ſays, all men both Barbarians and Greeks did uſe, noting that ſo common an agreement could not ariſe from chance, Πάντες ἄνθρωποι καὶ βάρβαροι καὶ ἕλληνες εἰς τὰ δέκα καταριθμοῦσι---- οὐ γὰρ δὴ ἀπὸ τύχης γε αὐτὸ ποιοῦντες φαίνονται, καὶ ἀεὶ τὸ δὲ ἀεὶ καὶ ἐπὶ πάντων οὐκ ἀπὸ τύχης, ἀλλὰ φυσικόν. Ariſt. Probl. 15. 3.

chance, but from nature; but it is much more plauſible to aſſign its riſe to tradition. Their having every where anciently the ſame number of letters, and the ſame names (or little varied) of them. Their dividing time into weeks (or ſyſtems of ſeven days) of which practice to have been general there be many plain teſtimonies. Their beginning the νυχθήμερον (or account of the daily revolution of the heavens) from the night, grounded probably upon the report that night did precede day, (as Heſiod phraſeth it) that night did beget day. Their general abhorrence of inceſtuous copulations; of which there is indeed ſome ground in nature, but none I ſuppoſe ſo very clear or diſcernible, as might ſerve alone to produce ſuch a conſent; yea perhaps, if one conſider it, the whole buſineſs concerning matrimony will ſeem drawn from the head we diſcourſe of. Their great care of Funerals, and decently interring the dead; which Cicero indeed deduces as a conſequence upon their belief of the Soul's immortality. In fine, The Conſent of the Old World in all moral notions of moment doth (to my ſenſe) much imply the ſame thing; which notions although natural reaſon well uſed might ſuggeſt to all men; yet men (it ſeems) were never ſo generally diſpoſed to reaſon well, as thereby alone to diſcern and approve unanimouſly the ſame truths; eſpecially truths of this nature; which many men are apt to diſlike, (as repugnant to their deſires) and conſequently not ready to believe; which yet might eaſily by education be infuſed into their minds, and by virtue of the prejudice thereby begot (aſſiſted by plauſible reaſon and popular conſent) be preſerved and rooted in them.

Νυκτὸς δ' αὖθ' αἰθήρ τε καὶ ἡμέρη ἐξεγένοντο. Heſiod. Theog.
--- dies natales, & menſium, & annorum initia ſic obſervant, ut noctem dies ſubſequatur. Cæſ. de Gal. l. 6.

In Læl.

Now theſe (with divers more perhaps, which they, who are curiouſly inquiſitive might obſerve) common perſuaſions (whether concerning matters of univerſal truth, or of particular facts) and thoſe common uſages having little or nothing of foundation apparent in Man's nature, or in the clear reaſon of the thing; no prevailing appetite or inclination of man's ſoul prompting to them; no occaſion commonly incident to humane affairs, being apt to ſuggeſt them (at leaſt divers of them; there being indeed rather an aptitude in men to diſapprove and reſiſt them, as croſs to their diſpoſitions) we cannot reaſonably deduce them from any other cauſe than ſuch as we have aſſigned, Mens being (as S. Paul ſpeaks) made of one bloud, and receiving as their nature, ſo their principles of opinion, and practice from the ſame common parents.

To confirm which diſcourſe, and to prevent farther objections againſt it. We may conſider, that however perhaps among ſome very barbarous Nations this principal tradition (together with others mentioned, attending thereon) may have been almoſt worn out by time and mens ſtupid negligence; that however alſo among ſome people, affecting ſemblances of ſingular wiſdom, as among the Greeks, the matter thereof might fall under queſtion; and ſome might doubt thereof, others contradict and deny it; yet moſt ancient Hiſtories (particularly that of Moſes, far moſt ancient of all, and therefore, even ſecluding its ſpecial and more ſacred authority, of all moſt credible) do atteſt them to have been, in ſubſtance, univerſally received, running with a ſtrong and clear current among the Eaſtern people (The Chaldeans, Phœnicians and Egyptians) who that they were the moſt ancient inhabiters of the Earth, from whom the reſt of mankind was propagated, the antiquity of Empires among them, the firſt uſe of Letters, the riſe of Arts, the greater progreſs in all kinds of civil culture (which things argue a longer continuance in one place and ſtate) beſide expreſs records of ſtory and viſible monuments of things performed among them, do ſufficiently declare; whoſe conſent therefore doth in reaſon, ſo far as ſerves our purpoſe, involve the conſent of all mankind; and doth confirm thoſe notions to have flowed from the clear ſpring of our firſt parents their inſtruction.

'Tis alſo true, I muſt confeſs, that theſe original traditions (concerning the Being and Providence of God) as muſt neceſſarily happen not only by the malice of Evil Spirits, but from Man's natural infirmity and proneneſs to change, even to the worſe (as alſo from mens aptneſs to miſtake, from rude ignorance, from wantonneſs of fancy, from craftineſs in promoting deſigns of ambition and covetouſneſs by introducing novelties, and from ſuch like cauſes) did ſoon begin to be adulterated by many corrupt mixtures, did by degrees degenerate exceedingly into various ſhapes of ſuperſtition, falſhood and futility. Yet even ſo was Judaiſm depraved by the Scribes; and Chriſtianity it ſelf hath been ſtrangely debaſed by a long courſe of ignorant and bad times; yet who can doubt but both theſe were derived from one pure inſtruction; that of Moſes, this of Chriſt our Lord? That it might ſo fare with the primitive traditions of religion, is evident; that it really did ſo, we have even the judgment and aſſertion of Ariſtotle himſelf, in thoſe remarkable words of his to this purpoſe: There were, ſaith he, things conveyed traditionally by the primitive and ancient men, and left in a fabulous dreſs to their poſterity; that there are theſe Gods, and that divinity maintains (or encompaſſes) all nature: but other things were to theſe fictitiouſly ſuper-induced for perſuaſion of the vulgar ſort, and for the uſe of laws and publick commodity: Hence they ſpeak of the Gods, as having a humane ſhape, or reſembling other living creatures, and other things conſequent upon, or agreeable to theſe ſayings; from which things if we ſeparate that only which was firſt delivered, that they deemed the Gods the firſt Beings, we may ſuppoſe what they ſaid divinely ſpoken. And 'tis according to probability, all art and philoſophy being, as might poſſibly, often invented and loſt again, that even theſe opinions of them have as reliques been preſerved until now: the opinion then of our Fathers, and that which came from the firſt men, is only thus far manifeſted to us.

[y] Παραδέδοται δὲ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀρχαίων καὶ παλαιῶν, ἐν μύθου σχήματι καταλελειμμένα τοῖς ὕστερον, ὅτι θεοί τέ εἰσιν οὗτοι, καὶ περιέχει τὸ θεῖον τὴν ὅλην φύσιν. τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ μυθικῶς ἤδη προσήχθη πρὸς τὴν πειθὼ τῶν πολλῶν, καὶ πρὸς τὴν εἰς τοὺς νόμους καὶ τὸ συμφέρον χρῆσιν. ἀνθρωποειδεῖς γὰρ τούτους, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ζώων ὁμοίους τισὶ λέγουσι, καὶ τούτοις ἕτερα ἀκόλουθα, καὶ παραπλήσια τοῖς εἰρημένοις. ὧν εἴ τις χωρίσας αὐτὸ λάβοι μόνον τὸ πρῶτον, ὅτι θεοὺς ᾤοντο τὰς πρώτας οὐσίας εἶναι, θείως ἂν εἰρῆσθαι νομίσειε. καὶ κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς πολλάκις εὑρημένης εἰς τὸ δυνατὸν ἑκάστης καὶ τέχνης, καὶ φιλοσοφίας, καὶ πάλιν φθειρομένων· καὶ ταύτας τὰς δόξας ἐκείνων, οἷον λείψανα περισεσῶσθαι μέχρι τοῦ νῦν. ἡ μὲν οὖν πάτριος δόξα, καὶ ἡ παρὰ τῶν πρώτων ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἡμῖν φανερὰ μόνον. Ariſt. Metaphyſ. 12. 8.

Thus did the Philoſopher, with a ſagacity worthy ſo great a man, diſcern, that through that courſer ore, conſiſting in great part of droſs and feculency (taken from the fondneſs, or fraud of humane invention, or from diabolical ſuggeſtion) a pure vein of truth did run, drawn from the ſource of Primitive tradition; from which being ſuppoſed we do infer, what he acknowledges divinely ſaid, that there doth exiſt one firſt Being or ſubſtance, incomprehenſibly excellent in all perfection. The like obſervations and judgments might be produced out of divers other Wiſe men (Plato, Cicero, and the like) who acknowledge and urge this common tradition as a good argument of the truths we maintain, as to the ſubſtance of them; yet ſcruple not to diſſent from and to reprehend the vulgar errours and bad cuſtoms which had crept in and became annexed to them. But let thus much ſuffice for this whole argument; being the laſt of thoſe I intend to uſe for the proof of that fundamental Point, which is the root of all Religion and piety.

I have produced ſeveral arguments to that purpoſe (or rather ſeveral kinds of arguments, each containing many ſubordinate ones) moſt proper (I conceive) and apt to have a general efficacy upon mens minds, in begetting and confirming a belief thereof. Each of them have indeed, to my ſeeming, even ſingly taken a force irreſiſtible; and the greateſt in its kind, that any ſuch concluſion, not immediately apparent to ſenſe, is capable of. The exiſtence of any one cauſe in natural Philoſophy, is not there demonſtrable by effects in any proportion ſo many or various, ſo conſpicuous or certain. No queſtion can be determined by an authority ſo ample and comprehenſive, ſo expreſs and peremptory. No doctrine can to its confirmation alledge ſo general, ſo conſtant, ſo uniform a tradition. No matter of fact can be aſſured by teſtimonies ſo many in number, ſo various in kind, ſo weighty in quality, as thoſe, upon which this concluſion doth ſtand. And if we joyn together all theſe, in themſelves ſo conſiderable and powerful forces, how can we be able to reſiſt them? how can we dare to doubt of that, which they conſpire to infer? When, I ſay, to the univerſal harmony of Nature the common voice of Nations doth yield its conſent; when with the ordinary courſe of things, ſo many extraordinary accidents do concur in vote; when that which many reaſons prove, continual tradition alſo teaches; what can the reſult be, but firm perſuaſion in every wiſe and honeſt heart of the propoſition ſo confirmed? Except we can ſuppoſe, that, by a fatal conſpiracy, all the appearances in nature, and all the generations of men; the higheſt reaſon, and the greateſt authority imaginable have combined to deceive us.

In the precedent Diſcourſes I have endeavoured to prove the exiſtence of God, by arguments, which do indeed more immediately evince thoſe three principal attributes, Wiſdom, Power and Goodneſs incomprehenſible, but which alſo conſequentially declare all other the attributes commonly eſteemed ingredients of that notion, which anſwers to the name of God; (abſolutely put, and without any adjunct limiting and diminiſhing it;) all thoſe attributes, which Ariſtotle's definition, The eternal moſt excellent living thing; or that of Tertullian, the ſupreme great thing; do include or imply; namely, his Unity firſt; then his Eternity and indefectibility; his immenſe omnipreſence, his ſpirituality; his juſtice and veracity; his Sovereign Majeſty and authority; with the like connected to thoſe (for I cannot proſecute all the divine perfections, according to that multiplicity of diſtinction, which our manner of conceit and expreſſion is wont to aſſign.)

Φαμὲν δὲ τὸν θεὸν εἶναι ζῶον ἀΐδιον ἄριστον. Ariſt. Metaph. 12. 7.

Summum magnum, & forma, & ratione, & vi, & poteſtate. Tert. adv. Marc. 1. 3.

Ἡ μακαρία φύσις· ἡ ἄφθονος ἀγαθότης· τὸ ἀγαπητὸν πᾶσι τοῖς λόγου μετειληφόσι· τὸ πολυπόθητον κάλλος· ἡ ἀρχὴ τῶν ὄντων. ἡ πηγὴ τῆς ζωῆς· τὸ νοερὸν φῶς· ἡ ἀπρόσιτος σοφία. Baſ. hexaem. λογ. α.

The uniformity, concord and perfect harmony which appears in the conſtitution and conſervation of things; their conſpiring to one end, their continuing in the ſame order and courſe do plainly declare the Unity of God; Even as the laſting peace of a Commonwealth (compoſed of perſons different in affections and humour) argues one law, that regulates and contains them; as the orderly march of an Army ſhews it managed by one conduct; as the uniformity of a houſe, or of a Town declares it contrived by one Architect.

And hereto alſo the common ſuffrage of mankind doth in a manner agree: for, however that they worſhipped a multitude of inferiour Deities, yet that there was one Supreme God, Authour and Governour of the reſt, and of all things beſide; tranſcending in power and wiſdom, and all kind of perfection, was evidently the common opinon; whom therefore we ſee the Poets (the beſt interpreters of the popular opinions) do ſtyle the Father of Gods and Men; the King of the Gods; the moſt High, moſt great, moſt excellent, &c. The greater popularity (as Tertullian ſpeaks) of mankind, even when Idolatry obſcured the ſenſe of divine providence, did however appropriate the Name of God eſpecially to one; in their uſual expreſſions; being wont to ſay, if God grant; and what pleaſes God, and I commend it to God. And if the Vulgar had in ſome meaſure this conceit, the wiſer ſort appear to have had more clear and full apprehenſions and perſuaſions concerning it; Plato refers the making of the World to one whom he calls πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν (the father and maker of the Univerſe;) Ariſtotle, when he hath occaſion to ſpeak of God, doth uſually ſpeak in the ſingular; ſo do other Philoſophers, as the Stoicks, in their famous precept, Deum ſequi (to follow God, that is, to acquieſce in, or ſubmit to divine providence) ſometime they do expreſly ſignifie this to be their opinion: There are many popular Gods, ſaid Antiſthenes, but one Natural one; εἷς δ' ὢν πολυώνυμός ἐστι; Being really One (ſaith the Authour de Mundo) he hath many names; according to the ſeveral affections he diſcovers, and the operations he exerts: with whom Seneca thus agrees: So often as you pleaſe, you may diverſly name the Authour of things: there may be ſo many appellations of him, as there be gifts or offices and operations; him our people fancy to be father Bacchus, and Hercules, and Mercury; call him alſo Nature, Fate, Fortune; all theſe are but names of the ſame God, variouſly uſing his power: if they ever ſpeak of Gods plurally, they are to be underſtood to ſpeak with the like opinion of them, as we of Angels, that is, of inviſible, intelligent powers, created by the ſupreme God, dependent of him, ſubject to him; Marſ. Ficinus his caution concerning Plato being applicable to the reſt: —— ſed ne turbet quæſo Deorum numerus, quem non turbat numerus angelorum. Nihil enim plus apud Platonem tot poſſunt Dii, quam apud nos tot angeli, totque beati. So much for God's Unity.

Ὕψιστος, μέγιστος, κράτιστος.

Major popularitas generis humani—— etiam tantâ idololatriâ dominationem obumbrante, ſeorſim tamen illum, quaſi proprio nomine Deum perhibent; & Deum Deorum; & ſi Deus dederit; & quod Deo placet; & Deo commendo. Tertull. adv. Marc. 1. 10.

In Tim.

Cic. 1. de.N D. Ariſt. de Mund. cap. 7.

Quoties voles, tibi licet aliter hunc auctorem rerum noſtrarum compellare: tot appellationes ejus eſſe poſſunt, quot munera; Hunc & Liberum patrem, & Herculem, ac Mercurium noſtri putant; ſic hunc Naturam voca, fatum, fortunam; Omnia ejuſdem Dei nomina ſunt variè utentis ſua poteſtate. Sen de Benef. 4. 7.

See that moſt remarkable ſaying of Sophocles (apud Grot. in Excerpt p. 149.) εἷς ταῖς ἀληθείαισιν, εἷς ἐστὶν θεός, &c. Marſ. Fic. in arg. lib. 10. de Leg.

As to his Eternity; If God made all things, he could not receive being from another; and, He who made this World, what reaſon can there be to ſuppoſe him to be from another? Nor can any thing receive a being from it ſelf, or from mere nothing ſpring up into being; therefore the Maker of the World muſt be Eternal. Something of neceſſity muſt be eternal, otherwiſe nothing could have been at all; other things ſhew themſelves to have proceeded from the wiſdom, power and goodneſs of One; whence that One is Eternal; and ſo all Nations have conſented that God is.

That he is immortal and immutable doth alſo follow plainly: for he not depending for his being or any thing thereto belonging upon any other thing, neither can he depend for his continuance or conſervation; having power ſuperiour to all things, as having conferred on them whatever of power they have, nothing can oppoſe him, or make any prevalent impreſſion upon him, ſo as to deſtroy or alter any thing in him.

Alſo, from his making, his upholding, his governing all things is conſequent, that he was ever and is every where: where his power is, there his hand is; for every action with effect requires a conjunction of the agent and patient; nothing can act upon what is diſtant. That with his preſence and power he doth penetrate all things, operating inſenſibly and imperceptibly, doth argue the ſpirituality of his being; and that he doth not conſiſt of ſuch matter (ſo extended, ſo diviſible) as thoſe things do, which we by ſenſe perceive.

His over-reaching wiſdom implies him uncapable of being deceived; and his over-bearing power ſignifies that he doth not need to deceive; and his tranſcendent goodneſs proves him unwilling to deceive; the like we may ſay of doing wrong; whence are conſequent his perfect veracity and juſtice.

Laſtly, The Excellency of his nature, the Eminency of his wiſdom and power; the abundance of his goodneſs; as alſo, His having given being, then preſerving it to all things, do infer his rightful title to ſupreme dominion; and accordingly, that all love, all obedience; all praiſe and veneration are due to him; according to the devout acknowledgment of thoſe bleſſed Elders: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive the glory and honour and power, (or authority) becauſe thou haſt made all things; and for thy will they are and were created. Apoc. 4. 11.

I Believe in God.

SERMON IX.

THE
Being of GOD
Proved from Supernatural Effects.

JOH. 5. 17.

But Jeſus anſwered them : my Father hitherto worketh, and I work.

WHEN at firſt by the divine power this viſible Syſteme of things was conſummated and ſettled in that courſe wherein it now ſtands, it is ſaid that God reſted from all his work which he had made; the plain meaning of which ſaying is, that God had ſo framed all the parts of nature, and ſeveral kinds of things, and diſpoſed them into ſuch an order, and inſerted into them ſuch principles of action, that thereafter (without more than an ordinary converſation or concourſe from him) things generally ſhould continue in their being, ſtation and courſe, without any great change for ever; that is for ſo long as God had determined, or till their due period was run through: (He eſtabliſhed them, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, for ever and ever; he made a decree, that ſhall not paſs: His word was ſetled in the heavens, and his faithfulneſs unto all generations; they continue this day according to his ordinances: He made a covenant with day and night, and appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth) Thus God reſted and ceaſed from his work of Creation. But it is not ſaid, nor intended, that God did abſolutely give over or forbear working; that he withdrew his care, and tied up (as it were) his own hands by a reſolution not to intermeddle more with any thing, but to enjoy a kind of Epicurean eaſe and ἀπραξία. No: his wiſdom hath ſo ordered things, that there ſhould be need and reaſon of his acting continually; that there ſhould be frequent occaſion of variouſly diſplaying his glorious attributes; of exerciſing his power, of demonſtrating his goodneſs. Indeed

Gen. 2. 2.

Ἔστιν δ' οὖν καταπεπαυκέναι τὸ τὴν τάξιν τῶν γενομένων εἰς πάντα χρόνον ἀπαραβάτως φυλάττεσθαι τετάχεται, καὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς ἀταξίας ἕκαστον τῶν κτισμάτων καταπεπαυκέναι. Clem. Alex. St. 6. (pag. 4923.)

Pſal. 148. 6.

Pſ. 119. 89, &c.

Jer. 5. 22.

Jer 33. 25.
31. 36.

Ἀγαθὸς γὰρ ὢν εἰ παύσεταί ποτε ἀγαθοεργῶν, καὶ τοῦ θεὸς εἶναι παύσεται. Clem. Alex. ibid.

as

Pſal. 119. 91.
Pſal. 148. 8.
Iſa. 40. 26.
Pſal. 104. 9. 19.

Joh. 9. 3.
Exod. 7. 5.
Deut. 4. 35.
Dan. 4. 25.

as to Beings merely natural and unintelligent there were no need of his doing more; for they are all thoroughly his obedient ſervants, and exactly fulfil his word; never ſtragling from the ſtation in which he placed them; never tranſgreſſing the rule that he preſcribed them: but he hath alſo made other Beings, by nature uncapable of ſuch uniformity and ſettlement; very free, and therefore very mutable; to the well governing of whom therefore a continual intention and activity is requiſite. For the uſe and benefit of which Beings as a great part of nature was deſigned and made by God, ſo it was not unmeet, that for their ſake he ſhould ſometime alter the courſe of nature, and croſs or check the ſtream of things. The fuller and clearer illuſtration of his glory, the ſhewing that all things do not paſs on in a fatal track; the confirming that he made Nature, becauſe he can command and control it; the demonſtration of his eſpecial care over and love toward men, in ſuſpending or thwarting his own eſtabliſhed laws and decrees (as it were) for their ſake; the exciting men the more to mind God, and impreſſing on them a reſpect toward him; the begetting faith in him, and hope in his providence, are fair accounts, for which God ſometimes ſhould perform (even in a manner notorious and remarkable to us) actions extraordinary. And that God doth ſo, we learn in the words I read from the mouth of truth it ſelf; whoſe affirmation (for perſuading the incredulous) I intend to ſecond with particular inſtances, atteſted to by reaſonable proof; ſutable to the nature of the matter; and this with deſign to infer from ſuch operations (as effects aſſignable to no other cauſe) the exiſtence of God; having endeavoured formerly to deduce the ſame from the common ordinary works, appearing in both worlds, natural and humane. And as we before diſtinguiſhed the ordinary works or actions, ſo here we ſhall diſtinguiſh the extraordinary ones, into two ſorts; into thoſe which are above or againſt the courſe (or power) of nature; and thoſe, which ſurmount or croſs the ſtream of humane affairs; ſuch, as being evidenced and granted to have been really performed, either all men will believe, or the wiſeſt men will readily confeſs the being of ſuch a Cauſe as we aſſert.

I. Let us firſt conſider the firſt kind: And of theſe we may generally affirm, that no man can deny many ſuch to have been performed, without giving the lye to the moſt authentick records of hiſtory that are or have been extant; without extremely diſparaging the credit of mankind, without impeaching all Nations and all Ages not only of extreme weakneſs (in credulous aſſent unto, regarding and relying upon ſuch appearances; which not only the vulgar ſort, but even Princes and Stateſmen, learned men and Philoſophers every-where have done) but of notorious baſeneſs and diſhoneſty, in deviſing and reporting them; without indeed derogating utterly from all teſtimony that can be rendred to any matter of fact, and rendring it wholly inſignificant; for that if we may disbelieve theſe reports, there is no reaſon we ſhould believe any thing that is told us.

Noſtrum quidem, inquit (Socrates) humanum eſt conſilium, ſed de rebus & obſcuris & incertis ad Apollinem cenſeo referendum, ad quem etiam Athenienſes publicè de majoribus rebus ſemper retulerunt, &c. Cic. de divin. p. 206.

To this kind we may refer the preſignification and prediction of future events, eſpecially thoſe which are contingent, and depend upon man's free choice; to the doing of which nothing is more evident in it ſelf, nor more acknowledged by all, than than a power or wiſdom ſupernatural is required; concerning which we have the (not-deſpicable) conſent of all times, continued down from the remoteſt antiquity, that frequently they have been made: There is, ſaith Cicero,

Cicero, an ancient opinion, drawn even from the heroical times (that is from the utmoſt bounds of time ſpoken of) that there is among men a certain divination, which the Greeks call prophecy (or inſpiration) that is a preſenſion, and knowledge of future things. And of this kind even prophane ſtory doth afford many inſtances; there indeed having ſcarce happened any conſiderable revolution in ſtate, or action in war, whereof we do not find mentioned in hiſtory ſome preſignification or prediction; whereof though many were indeed dark and ambiguous, or captious and fallacious, yet ſome were very clear and expreſs (according as God was in his wiſdom pleaſed to uſe the miniſtery of thoſe Spirits, which immediately conveyed them, in directing men for their good, or miſguiding them for their deſerved puniſhment) ſuch as were, for inſtance, that concerning Cyrus his conquering the Lydians; that concerning the battel at Salamis, that concerning the battel of Leuctres; and divers others which occur in ſtories compoſed by wiſe men of the wiſeſt Nations; even * the life of one man, (good Socrates) deſcribed by excellent perſons his moſt intimate acquaintance (Xenophon and Plato) affords divers; and Cicero acquaints us, that Chryſippus did collect (and 'tis great pity his collection hath periſhed) an innumerable ſtore of them, all confirmed by good authority and teſtimony. I cannot ſtand to relate many of them particularly, or diſcuſs the validity of relations concerning ſuch inſtances; I ſhall only ſay, that diſcourſe in Tully, concerning the oracle at Delphos, which may be extended to the reſt of that ſort, doth not ſeem contemptible: I defend (ſaith he) this one thing; that never would that oracle have been ſo renowned, nor ſo ſtuff'd with the gifts of all Nations and Kings, if every age had not experienced the truth of thoſe oracles; for 'tis hard, that a mere impoſture ſhould, to the expence and damage of ſo many perſons, ſo long continue in credit. I will adjoin but one obſervation to this purpoſe, that even among thoſe Pagans, who regarded theſe things, it was known and acknowledged, that ſuch portending, or predicting future things, although immediately conveyed by inferiour powers, did originally proceed from the one Supreme God; ſo the wiſe Poet implies, when he makes the prophetick Fury ſay, that ſhe received her perdiction from Apollo, and Apollo from the Almighty Father.

Vetus opinio eſt jam uſque ab heroicis ducta temporibus, eáque & populi Romani, & omnium hominum firmata conſenſu, verſari quandam inter homines divinationem; quàm Græci μαντικὴν appellant, id eſt præſenſionem & ſcientiam rerum futurarum. De Div.

Gentem quidem nullam video neque tam humanam atque doctam, neque tam immanem, támque barbaram, quæ non ſignificari futura, & à quibuſdam intelligi, prædicique poſſe cenſeat. Idem.

'Αλλ' ὅταν ἡμίονος, &c. Herod. 1.
Ὦ θείη Σαλαμὶς, &c. Herod. 7.
Λεῦκτρα δέ μοι σκιόεντα μέλει, &c. Pauſan. 9. pag. 563.

Collegit innumerabilia oracula Chryſippus, nec ullum ſine locuplete auctore, atque teſte. De Div. 172.

* Vid. Cic de Divin pag 206. de Nat. Deor. 2. pag. 54.

pag. 172. Defendo unum hoc, nunquam illud oraculum Delphis tam celebre, & tam clarum fuiſſet, neque tantis donis refertum omnium populorum atque regum, niſi omnis ætas oraculorum illorum veritatem eſſet experta, &c.

Accipite ergò animis, atque hæc mea figite dicta,
Quæ Phœbo Pater omnipotens, mihi Phœbus Apollo
Prædixit, vobis Furiarum ego maxima pando;

Æneid. 3.

where Servius notes, that even Apollo (he who among their Deities was in chief eſteem for rendring oracles) is ſaid to derive his knowledge from Jove, or the Sovereign God.

Notandum Apollinem quæ dicit à Jove cognoſcere.

It ſeemed not amiſs to touch thoſe inſtances of this kind, which profane Story yields, but the Holy Scriptures afford moſt evident and eminent ones; ſome of them extant in Books written and in uſe long before the events foretold: as that of Abraham's concerning his poſterity ſojourning, and being afflicted in Egypt four hundred years; of the Prophet

Gen. 15. 13.
1 King. 13. 2.
Iſa. 44. & 45.
Jer. 25. 12.
29. 10.
Dan. 9. 2.
Vid. Chryſ. cont. Jud. 2. Tom. 6 p. 328
Dan 8 21, &c.
† Luc. 19. 43.
Matt. 24. 2.

phet concerning Joſias (ſome hundred years before his birth) that ſuch a Prince ſhould be, and what he ſhould doe; of Iſaias concerning Cyrus by name, his conqueſts, his reſtoring the Jews from exile, his re-edifying Jeruſalem; of Jeremiah concerning the captivity, and its duration for ſeventy years; of Daniel concerning the grand revolutions of Empire in the world (wherein the atchievements of Alexander, and his Succeſſours are ſo plainly deſcribed, that Porphyrius could not but acknowledge the conſonancy of them to the events) of our Saviour concerning the ſiege and deſtruction of † Jeruſalem; the truth of which reports, although we ſhould allow thoſe Writings which contain them, an authority no greater than humane, there were no reaſon to queſtion; ſince moſt of thoſe Writings were extant a good time before the events ſpecified. Now if but one of theſe innumerable inſtances were true, if ever one event hath been preſignified or predicted (and 'twere a hard caſe, that among ſo many not one ſhould prove ſo) it ſufficiently evinces what we intend.

* Joh. 3. 2.

Nè Deum quidem poſſe omnia. Nâmque nec ſibi poteſt conſciſcere mortem, nec mortales æternitate donare, aut revocare defunctos. Nat. Hiſt. 2. 7.

Φήμη δ' οὔτις πάμπαν ἀπόλλυται, ἥντινα πολλοὶ Λαοὶ φημίζουσι.

But to our purpoſe eſpecially do appertain the works uſually ſtyled miraculous, which exceed or contravene the ordinary courſe or power of nature; * which therefore all men will readily confeſs performable only by an agent in power or knowledge exceeding their comprehenſion (ſuch as are, for example, the fire being with-held from burning, and the waters from flowing; the ſick being (without medicinal applications) cured of long chronical diſtempers; limbs being (in the like manner) reſtored to perſons maimed, and ſenſes to them who, from their birth (or otherwiſe for a long time) had been deprived of their uſe; reſtoring the dead to life (a thing which Pliny mentions as impoſſible in his conceit to God himſelf) and the like; of theſe, although all Nations have had ſo many performed among them, as ſufficed to breed every where a conſtant opinion, that a divine power did frequently interpoſe, ſo as to control and overbear the force of nature (which opinion could not in likelihood ſo generally and conſtantly prevail without any ground at all.) Yet the Holy Scriptures do moſt fully and clearly teſtify concerning them to have been in great number performed (for the confirmation of that divine truth and will of God, which they declare him pleaſed to reveal; for guiding men into, or ſetling them in right opinions or good practices; for diſabuſing and withdrawing them from ways of errour and vice; for the encouragement and relief of good, or the reſtraint, diſcouragement and chaſtiſement of evil men; which in reaſon are the moſt proper cauſes, why by ſuch a Being, as we ſuppoſe (ſo wiſe, ſo good) ſuch works ſhould be effected the teſtimonies concerning which there can be no good reaſon aſſigned of refuſing, but very great to admit them, as we hope at another time ſatisfactorily to declare. Indeed God's patefaction of himſelf, his mind, his will (in many kinds and manners particularly to the Fathers of old, and afterward generally to all the world by his Son; on purpoſe ſent from heaven to publiſh and accompliſh his deſigns of mercy and favour to all mankind) accompanied with ſo many prodigious works of power, and ſo many glorious circumſtances of providence conſpicuous to all the world, and withal ſo accommodated as to beget firſt of all this aſſurance in us, that a divine power doth exiſt and preſide over all affairs both natural and humane, is an argument which in all honeſt and well diſpoſed minds (not poſſeſſed with falſe prejudices, nor depraved by vicious inclinations) cannot but obtain effect, the fuller urging and confirming of which I ſhall refer to another ſeaſon, when it will ſerve a more general purpoſe, even the confirming not only this part, but even the whole of our Religion in groſs: I ſhall only now briefly ſay concerning them, that conſidering the works themſelves, they were in number ſo many and various, in kind ſo great and high; as to the manner of performance ſo naked and open; (being done in the face, and expoſed to the ſenſes of all men) that there could be no reaſon to ſuſpect any jugling or humane artifice uſed about them; conſidering the witneſſes that aſſerted them, they were perſons who by their writings, by their behaviour, by the effect of their endeavours approved themſelves very intelligent; in their intentions very honeſt and free from any ſiniſter deſign, in their converſations very innocent and vertuous, in their atteſtation very conſiſtent and conſtant; ſo that there could be deſired no witneſſes of any fact better qualified, or more credible than they; conſidering the deſign of thoſe works, there could be none more noble and excellent, more worthy of God, more beneficial to man; it being chiefly the confirmation of a doctrine, incomparably the moſt reaſonable and moſt uſeful that ever appeared among men; productive of the beſt fruits, apt (being entertained heartily) to make men highly good and truly happy; to promote the honour of God and the intereſts of goodneſs; to ſecure as much as can be both the publick and private welfare of mankind. Conſidering which things, we can have no good reaſon to diſtruſt the performance of ſuch works, by authentick records, by conſtant tradition atteſted to us.

I may adjoin to the former ſorts of extraordinary actions, ſome other ſorts, the conſideration of which (although not ſo directly and immediately) may ſerve our main deſign; thoſe (which the general opinion of mankind hath approved, and manifold teſtimony hath declared frequently to happen) which concern apparitions from another world (as it were) of Beings unuſual; concerning ſpirits haunting perſons and places; (theſe diſcerned by all ſenſes, and by divers kinds of effects) of which the old world (the ancient Poets and Hiſtorians) did ſpeak ſo much, and of which all Ages have afforded ſeveral atteſtations very direct and plain, and having all advantages imaginable to beget credence. Concerning viſions made unto perſons of eſpecial eminency and influence (to Prieſts and Prophets) concerning preſignifications of future events by dreams; concerning the power of enchantments, implying the co-operation of inviſible powers; concerning all ſorts of entercourſe and confederacy (formal or virtual) with bad ſpirits; all which things he that ſhall affirm to be mere fiction and deluſion, muſt thereby with exceeding immodeſty and rudeneſs charge the world with extreme both vanity and malignity; many (if not all) worthy Hiſtorians of much inconſiderateneſs or fraud; moſt Lawgivers of great ſillineſs and raſhneſs, moſt Judicatories of high ſtupidity or cruelty, a vaſt number of witneſſes of the greateſt malice or madneſs; all which have concurred to aſſert theſe matters of fact.

'Tis true, no queſtion, but there have been many vain pretences, many falſe reports, many unjuſt accuſations, and ſome undue deciſions concerning theſe matters; that the vulgar ſort is apt enough to be abuſed about them; that even intelligent and conſiderate men may at a diſtance in regard to ſome of them be impoſed upon; But, as there would be no falſe gems obtruded, if there were no true ones found in nature; as no counterfeit coin would appear, were there no true one current; ſo neither can we well ſuppoſe that a confidence in ſome to feign, or a readineſs in moſt to believe ſtories of this kind could ariſe, or ſhould ſubſiſt without ſome real ground, or without ſuch things having in groſs ſomewhat of truth and reality. However that the wiſer, and more refined ſort of men; higheſt in parts and improvements both from ſtudy and experience (indeed the flower of every Commonwealth; Stateſmen, Lawgivers, Judges and Prieſts) upon ſo many occaſions of great importance, after moſt deliberate ſcanning ſuch pretences and reports, ſhould ſo often ſuffer themſelves to be deluded, to the extreme injury of particular perſons concerned, to the common abuſing of mankind, to the hazard of their own reputation in point of wiſdom and honeſty, ſeems no-wiſe reaſonable to conceive. In likelihood rather the whole kind of all theſe things, were it altogether vain and groundleſs would upon ſo frequent and ſo mature diſcuſſions have appeared to be ſo, and would conſequently long ſince have been diſowned, exploded, and thruſt out of the world. For, as upon this occaſion 'tis ſaid in Tully, Time wipeth out groundleſs conceits, but confirms that which is founded in nature, and real.

Opinionum commenta dies delet, naturæ judicia confirmat. De Nat. D. 2. pag. 54.

Now if the truth and reality of theſe things (all, or any of them) inferring the exiſtence of powers inviſible; at leaſt inferiour ones, though much ſuperiour to us in all ſort of ability, be admitted, it will at leaſt (as removing the chief obſtacles of incredulity) confer much to the belief of that ſupreme Divinity, which our diſcourſe ſtrives to maintain.

I muſt acknowledge that both theſe arguments drawn from teſtimonies concerning matters of fact (and indeed all other arguments) were invalid and inſignificant, could any demonſtration or any argument weighty enough be brought to ſhew the impoſſibility of ſuch a thing to exiſt, as we infer to exiſt from them. But, as it is a very eaſie thing (ſo whoever is vers'd in ſpeculation and reaſoning about things cannot but find) to prove many things poſſible to be, which do not actually exiſt; ſo it is hard to prove the impoſſiblity of a things being; Yea there is plainly no other mean of doing this, than the manifeſting an evident repugnance between being it ſelf, and ſome property aſſigned to that thing; or between ſeveral properties attributed thereto; as if we ſhould ſuppoſe a ſquare circle, or a round ſquare to exiſt. But, in our caſe no man can ſhew ſuch a repugnance; between being and wiſdom, power or goodneſs there is no inconſiſtence ſurely; nor can any man evince one to be between being and co-exiſting with matter, or penetrating body; between being and inſenſibility; between being and any other property which we aſcribe to God; nor is there any claſhing between thoſe properties themſelves; it is therefore impoſſible to ſhew that God cannot exiſt; and therefore it is unreaſonable to disbelieve the teſtimonies (ſo many, ſo pregnant) that declare him to exiſt.

'Tis not enough to ſay peremptorily, 'tis nonſenſe; or that you cannot underſtand how it ſhould be; ſuch proceedings are intolerably both inſolent and vain.

Ἀμύητοι γὰρ εἰσιν οἱ οὐδὲν ἄλλο οἰόμενοι εἶναι, ἢ οὗ ἂν δύνωνται ἀπρὶξ ταῖν χεροῖν λαβέσθαι. Plat. Theat.

Men indeed, who affix themſelves to things which their ſenſe offers, may be indiſpoſed to abſtract their minds from ſuch things, may be unapt to frame conceptions about any other ſort of things; but to think there can be no other things than ſuch as we ſee and feel, that nothing, endued with other properties than ſuch as theſe objected to our ſenſe have, can exiſt, implies a great dulneſs of apprehenſion, a greater ſhortneſs of reaſon and judgment; 'tis much like the ſimplicity of a ruſtick, who becauſe he never was above three miles from home, cannot imagine the world to reach ten miles farther; and will look upon all that is told him concerning things more diſtant, to be falſe and forged to abuſe him.

——affigit humi divinæ particulam auræ.

I add, that theſe mens incredulity is hence more inexcuſable, becauſe the poſſibility of ſuch a being its exiſtence, the compatibility and concurrence of ſuch properties in one thing, is (as we otherwhere have largely ſhewed) by a very plain inſtance declared, even by that Being within every man, which in a degree partakes of all thoſe properties.

I ſhall leave this head of diſcourſe, with this one remark; that they are much miſtaken, who place a kind of wiſdom in being very incredulous, and unwilling to aſſent to any teſtimony, how full and clear ſoever: For this indeed is not wiſdom, but the worſt kind of folly. 'Tis folly, becauſe it cauſes ignorance and miſtake, with all the conſequents of theſe; and 'tis very bad, as being accompanied with diſingenuity, obſtinacy, rudeneſs, uncharitableneſs, and the like bad diſpoſitions; from which credulity it ſelf, the other extreme ſort of folly is exempt. Compare we, I ſay, theſe two ſorts of fools, the credulous fool, who yields his aſſent haſtily upon any ſlight ground; and the ſuſpicious fool, who never will be ſtirr'd by any the ſtrongeſt reaſon or cleareſt teſtimony; we ſhall find the latter in moſt reſpects the worſt of the two; that his folly ariſes from worſe cauſes, hath worſe adjuncts, produceth worſe effects. Credulity may ſpring from an airy complexion, or from a modeſt opinion of ones ſelf; ſuſpiciouſneſs hath its birth from an earthy temper of body, or from ſelf-conceit in the mind; that carries with it being civil and affable, and apt to correct an errour; with this a man is intractable, unwilling to hear, ſtiff and incorrigible in his ignorance, or miſtake; that begets ſpeed and alacrity in action: this renders a man heavy and dumpiſh, ſlow and tedious in his reſolutions and in his proceedings; both include want of judgment; but this pretending to more thereof, becomes thereby more dangerous. Forward raſhneſs, which is the ſame with that, may ſometimes, like an acute diſeaſe, undoe a man ſooner; but ſtupid dotage, little differing from this, is (like a chronical diſtemper) commonly more miſchievous and always more hard to cure. In fine, were men in their other affairs, or in ordinary converſe ſo diffident to plain teſtimony, as ſome do ſeem to be in theſe matters concerning Religion, they would ſoon feel great inconveniences to proceed thence; their buſineſs would ſtick, their converſation would be diſtaſtful; they would be much more offenſive, and no leſs ridiculous than the moſt credulous fool in the World. While men therefore ſo perverſly diſtruſtful affect to ſeem wiſe, they affect really to be fools; and practiſe according to the worſt ſort of folly.

Thus have I, although very curſorily, conſidered the firſt kind of works extraordinary that appear in the world; I proceed briefly to touch the other ſort, obſervable in the tranſaction of humane affairs; for even in theſe there do happen things in a ſort miraculous, or prodigious; according to reaſonable eſtimation ſurpaſſing the common efficacy of humane cauſes; by which God in a language more expreſs (as it were) and in a lowder tone declares his preſence and providence here; ſo that they muſt be very deaf and ſtupid, who do not from them learn leſſons of piety and reverence toward God; who do not in them hear heaven thundring forth that proclamation to us all: Diſcite juſtitiam moniti. For inſtance,

1. We may obſerve, when any where things are come to ſuch a paſs, that iniquity and outrage do extremely prevail, ſo that the moſt of mens lives become intolerably grievous, that in ſuch caſes often the ſtate of things, how ſeemingly ſtable and robuſt ſoever, in a manner ſudden and ſtrange, by means to appearance ſmall and weak, to be overturned, and reduced to a more tolerable form; no ſtruglings of might, no fetches of policy, no circumſpection or induſtry of man availing to uphold it, an inviſible hand checking all ſuch force, and croſſing all ſuch devices. A ſtone cut out of the mountains without hands (that is, a ſlender inſtrument coming forth out of ſome remote and ſecret place, without any conſiderable influence of humane endeavour) breaking in pieces the iron, and the braſs, the clay, the ſilver and the gold; there being raiſed up inſtantly a Moſes, or a Maccabæus; an Ehud, or a Gideon; a Dion, or a Timoleon by a ſingle ſtroak, or a ſudden impreſſion to deliver oppreſſed Nations from ſlavery.

Dan. 2. 45.

2. How many examples do experience and hiſtory afford us of juſtice and vengeance, in ways for their kind and for their circumſtances very remarkable, executed in the face of the world upon perſons (ſuch as Corah and his fellows, Sennacherib, Herod, Brennus) notoriouſly wicked and miſchievous, who have out-braved heaven by their impiety, or horribly abuſed mankind by their injuſtice?

3. Yea we may take notice, that even few of thoſe men, whoſe actions have been illuſtrious for greatneſs void of goodneſs; who have climed to height of power and ſtate, by the ruines and ſlaughters of mankind, that, I ſay, few of ſuch perſons have departed off the ſtage in peace or honour. That Alexander was ſnapt in the flower of his age and glory; that Cæſar was no ſooner arrived to the top of his fortune, than to the bottom of his life; neither having time allowed them to enjoy (ſcarce to taſte) thoſe fruits which they ſo eagerly ſought and toiled for; both perhaps (one without any peradventure) being ſpeeded away by violent and treacherous hands. Not to mention Pompey or Hannibal, or other ſuch like men of exorbitant ambition, whoſe fortunes were ſo ſtrangely changed, and whoſe ends were ſo diſmal.

Dan. 4. 17.

4. We may however obſerve, that few great Tyrants and Oppreſſours, few perſons inſolently profane or ſacrilegious, have eſcaped the viſible ſtroke of divine vengeance; a ſtroke inflicted in ways not only violent, but ſhameful; and that uſually by means moſt unexpected, by the hands of their own Guards, their own Servants, their own Favourites, the very inſtruments of their miſchief, and theſe ſtirred up by ſlight cauſes, by ſome little diſgrace or diſguſt received by them from their Maſter. What a long black Legend of Caligula's, Nero's, Domitian's, Commodus's, Heliogabalus's, Maximinus's * may any man's obſervation even out of profane hiſtories eaſily compoſe, of whom the divine juſtice in ſuch ways hath rid the world?

Alexand. Pheræus, ab uxore occiſus. Vid. Plut. in Pelopida, ad fin.

* Of ſuch as Sejanus, Ruffinus, Eutropius, &c. Stilico, &c.

Pſal. 83. 17, 18.

5. I might alſo mention the judgments of God upon Perſons, and Families raiſed to wealth and ſplendour of eſtate by oppreſſion, fraud, ſacrilege, rapine, or ſuch bad means; whoſe eſtates without any viſible ordinary means do moulder and decay; a ſecret moth devouring them; a thing which falls under common obſervation.

6. The ſame providence hath more clearly diſcovered it ſelf in the ſtrange detections of murthers, and other enormous miſchiefs committed in darkneſs, and revealed by a light unaccountably darted from heaven. Of which kind not only Books, but common experience doth furniſh with ſtories and inſtances very remarkable both for number and weight.

7. The like ſtrange diſcoveries of Plots contrived ſecretly againſt the publick peace, and againſt the lives of Princes frequently offer themſelves in ſtory, and the like experience ſuggeſts concerning private men; a bird of the air carrying the voice of the wicked traitour to the ears of him who is deſigned againſt; the ſtones of the wall crying out treaſon and murther. Yea generally, according to the Pſalmiſts obſervation, when men have encouraged themſelves in an evil matter, and have communed about laying ſnares privily,---- ſaying who ſhall ſee them,-- God doth ſhoot at them with an arrow, ſuddenly they are wounded. So that all men have reaſon (as he adds they will do) to fear, and to declare the work of God; if they wiſely conſider his doing: and himſelf had reaſon to pronounce in another place: The Lord is known by the judgment that he executeth; the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hands.

Eccl. 10. 20.
Heb. 2. 10.
Pſal. 64. 5, 7.
Pſal. 9. 16.

8. I might adjoin the remarkable providences which alſo occur, concerning the recompences and encouragements of vertue; in the protecting good men from imminent dangers, delivering them from grievous ſtraits, ſupplying them in extreme needs, proſpering them in their undertakings, raiſing them (as Joſeph, David, Daniel, &c.) by wonderful means to wealth and dignity; for their own encouragement, or for publick benefit; concerning which occurrences the Pſalmiſt had reaſon to ſay, whoſo is wiſe will obſerve theſe things; and they ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord.

Pſal. 37. 25. I have been young and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken.----

Pſal. 107. 43.

Theſe conſiderations (with divers others of the ſame kind) grounded on providence, I muſt confeſs have not ſingly taken the greateſt force and evidence to infer our purpoſe, nor can they with the ſame aſſurance and peremptorineſs be urged to every adverſary or disbeliever, as ſome other arguments may; thoſe (which we have formerly inſiſted on) drawn from nature. For in nature, all cauſes there being themſelves deſtitute of immediate reaſon or choice, and ſubject to no chance or contingency (properly ſo called) we may indeed confidently aſcribe all effects, in which any reaſon or counſel doth appear (whether ordinary or extraordinary) to divine efficacy; there being no other cauſe, to which we can reaſonably impute them; but in humane affairs, ſeeing man is an underſtanding and free agent, and few effects happen without ſome act of his intervening, there can hardly occur any paſſage (how rare and ſtrange ſoever) which our incredulous Adverſaries (with ſome kind of colour or plauſible ſhift) will not be ready to attribute unto ſome reach of man's wit, or to ſome capricio of his humour, or to ſome unaccountable caſualty, incident to matters of this kind (as we ſee the Philiſtines were apt to impute the plague of Emerods to chance; the Iſraelites did preſently charge that terrible judgment on Corah and his complices upon Moſes and Aaron.) And commonly divine and humane influences upon theſe effects (even as in nature the influences of heaven, and of inferiour particular cauſes) are ſo complicated and interwoven together, that it is not ſo eaſie to diſtinguiſh the one from the other, either in whole or in part, to ſeparate the bounds of providence ordinary and extraordinary, to diſcern what God performs by uſual inſtruments, what by his immediate hand. As alſo the actions of the wiſeſt men are often grounded upon reaſons remote from, and impenetrable by vulgar conceit; ſo are the reaſons of God's proceedings with men various and often myſterious; above the reach of our capacity with diſtinction to apprehend them (as who for inſtance can oftentimes readily diſtinguiſh between God's merciful patience toward bad men; and his gracious recom-

Vid. Claud. in Ruffin. lib. 1. init. eleganter hac de re diſſerentem.

Sen. de Provid init.

1 Sam 6 9.
Numb. 16. 41

recompencing the good; between God's juſt vengeance on the one ſort, and his fatherly correction of the other; between his reclaiming one from vice either (as particular circumſtances require) by adverſe or proſperous events, and his trying or exerciſing the others vertue by the like proceedings? who can diſtinguiſh between what is performed or permitted upon general, or upon particular accounts; in reſpect to the publick, or in regard to private men; in relation to preſent times, or to poſterity; upon abſolute and immediate accounts, or in order to ſome farther, more remote deſigns? who I ſay can pretend skill enough to define what, or how much is beſt to be done in theſe caſes; when it is fit to allow men to proceed in the uſe of their freedom, when to interrupt them? who, but he that exactly knows the limits of juſt and fit, the qualities and tempers of men, the ſtate and circumſtances of every thing?

I add, that God's governance of things hath no complete iſſue here, that this is not the only, nor the chief place of diſpenſing rewards and puniſhments, that things are but doing here and not done; in a pro-greſs and tendency toward ſomewhat beyond, not in a ſtate of final reſolution or perfection; wherefore as we cannot fully judge of an artificial work by its firſt draughts, nor of a Poem by ſome ſcenes, but muſt ſtay till all is finiſhed and acted through, ſo we cannot ſo clearly diſcern the entire wiſdom and juſtice of divine diſpenſations here; not till that day, when (as Saint Paul tells us) God's δικαιοκρισία (his righ- Rom. 2. 5. teous judgment) ſhall be made apparent. Whence diſcourſe grounded Pſal. 10. 5. upon preſent events may not prove ſo convincing or ſatisfactory, except unto the children of wiſdom, who by a ſharper ſenſe can diſcover even the ſmaller lines and more occult tracts of God's hand; who with an eſpecial attention and ſagacity do (as the Prophet expreſſeth Pſal. 28. 5. it) regard the works of the Lord, and conſider the operations of his hands.
Iſa. 5. 12. However the frequent occurrences in humane affairs of paſſages (ſuch as we mentioned) ſo rare and remarkable, if they do not (ſingly and ſolitarily taken) thoroughly ſerve to demonſtrate the Hypotheſis of divine Providence, yet at leaſt they do much favour and ſtrengthen it, being very congruous thereto. Suppoſing ſuch a Providence, 'tis moſt probable (I may ſay neceſſary) that ſuch events would happen; whence there can be no abſurdity in aſcribing them thereto, but much of reaſon in doing it. They are digni vindice nodi, difficulties not otherwiſe eaſily reſolved, and therefore God may be moſt fitly introduced, as the moſt probable cauſe of them; if ſtrict diſcourſe cannot compel us, Pſal. 107. 43. yet ingenuity will incline us and wiſdom will oblige us to doe ſo: They Pſal. 64. 5, 7. that are wiſe will conſider theſe things, and they ſhall underſtand the lo- ving kindneſs (I add, and alſo both the wiſdom and power) of the Pſal. 92. 6. Lord. A brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, concerning the proceedings of providence.)

But however general providence doth work in convincing ſome, particular providence will at leaſt produce that effect in many: For I dare appeal to moſt men (to thoſe eſpecially, who have ever had any fear of God, or ſenſe of goodneſs in them) if ſometime or other, in their lives, they have not in their preſſing needs and ſtraits (eſpecially upon their addreſſes to God for help) found help and comfort conveyed unto them by an inſenſible hand; if they have not ſometimes in a manner unaccountable eſcaped imminent dangers; if they have not in the performance of their duty and devotion toward God experienced a comfort more than ordinary; if they cannot to ſome events of their life aptly apply thoſe obſervations of the Pſalmiſt. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and delivered him out of his troubles: The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them: O taſte and ſee that the Lord is good: O taſte and ſee; he appeals to experience; he ſuppoſes the divine goodneſs may be ſeen, and felt; that ſurely will be a moſt efficacious argument of God's exiſtence and providence. And ſo it is indeed to all good men (for whoſe comfort and confirmation it is chiefly mentioned) though it is not likely to have much influence upon them, who have alienated themſelves from God, and driven him out of their thoughts; except they ſhould (beyond what can be expected from them) be ſo civil and candid, as to believe the teſtimony of others, who aſſert this great truth unto them from their own inward conſcience and experience.

Pſal. 34. 6, 7, 8. 145. 18, 19.

(1 Joh. 5. 10.)

Pſal. 10. 4.

But let thus much ſerve, at preſent, for the ſhewing that God doth (as our Lord tells us) hitherto work; and conſequently that (as we thence meant to infer) that God doth exiſt.

The Father,

SERMON X.

I believe in GOD THE FATHER.

EPHES. IV. 6.

One God and Father of all.

I Have formerly diſcourſed concerning the nature of that Belief which we here profeſs: I did alſo endeavour by ſeveral Arguments to evince the truth and credibility of the firſt Article of our Creed (which is indeed the foundation of all the reſt, and of all Religion) That there is one God. I proceed to the following parts.

THE FATHER. The Appellation of God not improperly taken (as when it is attributed to creatures, upon ſome reſemblance in nature or office which they bear to the ſupreme God) but relating to him who only, truly and properly is ſtyled God, is ſometimes put abſolutely, ſometime hath a relative appoſition going along with it. Being abſolutely or ſingly put it ſometimes refers by way of eminency particularly to the Firſt Perſon in the bleſſed and glorious Trinity; as when Chriſt is called the Son of God; when God is put in diſtinction from the other Perſons (when for inſtance it is ſaid, That they may know thee the only true God and whom thou haſt ſent Jeſus Chriſt. Bleſſed be God and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Word was with God. To ſerve the living and true God and to wait for his Son from heaven: and in that form of Bleſſing, The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all) but commonly it is to be underſtood for God eſſentially conſidered (according to the Divine Eſſence common to all Three Perſons) to whom in that reſpect all the Divine Attributes agree, and from whom all divine operations (abſolutè & ad extra) do jointly proceed. And to this ſenſe or notion we have hitherto ſuppoſed that the name of God might be here applied. For, that there is one God, having ſuch eſſential attributes is the firſt principle and foundation of all Religion, which we muſt therefore ſuppoſe if not directly expreſſed yet at leaſt ſufficiently implied in the Creed.

And ſuppoſing the word in part doth imply this ſenſe, the attribute or title of Father doth upon many accounts truly and properly belong to God; (God abſolute and eſſential) in relation to all things generally, and to ſome things particularly; eſpecially, which is the moſt fruitful conſideration, in reſpect to our ſelves.

Let us firſt conſider the accounts upon which, then the terms (or objects) in relation to which God is ſo called; then let us apply the conſideration to practice.

One God and Father of all.

Every attribute, every title, every relation of God doth ground an obligation, doth afford an inducement to good practice; but none other doth ground higher obligation, or yieldeth ſtronger inducement to all kinds of obedience, than doth this of Father, which here, and frequently otherwhere in Holy Scripture is aſcribed to God: unto which purpoſe, of exciting us to good practice (to all good practice generally, and particularly to ſome kinds thereof) I do now intend to apply the conſideration thereof; but firſt let us conſider in what reſpects, or upon what grounds this title is attributed to God; then let us reflect ſomewhat upon the term, in reſpect to which God is ſtyled Father of all, that is, in a larger ſenſe of all things, in a ſtricter ſenſe of all perſons, in the moſt reſtrained ſenſe of all us Chriſtians.

The title of Father is upon ſeveral accounts commonly given to things; one is cauſality; for the efficient cauſe, or authour of any thing is called its father; any work is ſaid to be the child, or off-ſpring
Job 38. 28. of him that maketh, or inventeth it: Hath the rain a father (or, who is father of the rain, as the LXX render it) or who hath begotten the drops of the dew? ſaith God in Job: another ground thereof is ſuſtenance, Job 29. 16. 31. 18. or preſervation; ſo Job ſaith of himſelf, that he was a father to the poor and fatherleſs; becauſe he yielded them protection and relief: ſo Roma patrem patriæ Ciceronem libera dixit. Rome called Cicero father, becauſe he preſerved it from the attempts of wicked conſpirators againſt its liberty and ſafety: education alſo and inſtruction entitle to this name;

whence Saint Paul calleth Timothy and Philemon, the Corinthians and Galatians, whom he had inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith, his children: laſtly governance; attended with beneficient affection and care, doth found this appellation; whence Princes are uſually ſtyled the Fathers of their country, being ſuppoſed to deſire, and to provide for the publick good; ſo we have the Fathers of tribes, that is the principal perſons of them, who did preſide over them: I do omit antiquity, and age, for which we know that perſons are vulgarly called Fathers.

1 Tim. 1. 2.
Philem. 10.
1 Cor. 4. 15.
Gal. 4. 19.
Joſh. 19. 51.
21. 1.

Upon all theſe accounts it is plain that the title of Univerſal Father may truly be aſcribed unto God; eſpecially in reſpect to our ſelves, who may be conſidered as equivalent to all other objects, as comprehending in us ſomewhat common to them all: God in ſome of thoſe reſpects is the Father of all things, or of us as Beings; God is more eſpecially the Father of intelligent Beings, and of us as ſuch: God is the Father of all men, of all good men, and peculiarly of Chriſtians; which reſpects all of them do, or ſhould concur in us: Let us ſurvey thoſe particulars ſomewhat diſtinctly, then apply them as obligations and inducements to good practice.

1. God is the Father of all things: or of us as creatures; as the efficient cauſe and creatour of them all: He made the world, (as S. Paul telleth the Athenians) and all things therein; he commanded (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) and they were created; The world and the fulneſs thereof (that is all wherewith it is repleniſhed, and which it contains) he hath founded them; All theſe things (ſaith God in the Prophet) hath mine hand made: and ποιητὴν, καὶ πατέρα τοῦδε τοῦ παντός, the maker and father of this Univerſe, even Plato ſtyleth God. God is alſo the Father of all things, becauſe he preſerveth and ſuſtaineth them by his power; He (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) beareth up all things by the word of his power; He (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) hath eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever; he made a decree which ſhall not paſs, by virtue of which they ſubſiſt: alſo becauſe he by a continual care doth provide for them; they all (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) wait upon him, that he may give them their meat in due ſeaſon; what he giveth them, they gather; he openeth his hand, they are filled with good: He alſo governeth, and containeth them in good order; for, his kingdom ruleth over all; and, whatſoever the Lord pleaſeth, that doeth he in heaven and earth: all this he doeth with goodneſs and affection; for, his tender mercies are over all his works: whence even among Pagans the word Pater abſolutely put did ſignifie the Supreme God, they underſtanding thereby the Authour, Preſerver and Governour of all things; and Pater omnipotens is the periphraſis, whereby the wiſeſt Poet doth uſually expreſs God.

Act. 17. 24.
14. 15.
Pſal. 145. 15.
146. 6. 89.
11. 33. 6.
Iſa. 66. 1. 40.
26.
Plat. in Tim. pag. 1047.
Heb. 1. 3.
Pſal. 145. 15.
Pſal. 104. 27.
145. 15.
Iſa. 40. 26.
Pſal. 115. 3.
103. 19. 135.
6. 147. 15.
Pſal. 145. 9.
-----ô Pater, & Rex Jupiter--- Hor. Ser. 2. 1.
------Pater ipſe colendi Haud facilem eſſe viam voluit. Georg.
Ζεῦ πάτερ ἡμέτερε, Κρονίδη, ὕπατε κρειόντων.

2. More eſpecially God is the Father of intellectual Beings; he is ſtyled * the father of ſpirits; particularly the Angels in way of excellency are called the ſons of God: † There was a day when the ſons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord: and, When the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the ſons of God ſhouted for joy; in which place of Job the LXX have ἄγγελοί μου, my Angels; (although perhaps there all God's creatures may be underſtood rejoycing and exulting, as it were, in their being, newly by the goodneſs of their maker conferr'd on them) again, Who (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) in heaven can be compared unto the Lord? who among the ſons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? the ſons of the mighty, it is in the Hebrew, the ſons of God, and ſo the LXX render it; and what precedeth, who in heaven, doth make it, as it ſeems, beſt interpretable of the Angels? Of ſuch Beings God is more eſpecially the

* Heb. 12. 9.
Numb. 16. 22.
Job 1. 6.
† Job 38. 7.
Pſal. 89. 6.
29. 1.

Father, becauſe he did produce them in a more excellent manner; for other things he made as it were by his hand, theſe he breathed out of his mouth; as it is ſaid of Adam, when God infuſed his ſoul into his Gen. 2. body; that God breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life; becauſe they more nearly reſemble God in their nature and properties (in ſpirituality, and independence upon matter; in life, and ſelf-moving; in immortality, and perpetuity of being; in underſtanding, and wiſdom; in will, and goodneſs, or in a capacity at leaſt of ſuch perfections) becauſe alſo he ruleth them in a nobler way; a way, not of blind and conſtrained obedience, but of wiſe and free choice, according to laws of juſtice, by obligations of ingenuity; becauſe he likewiſe beareth a more dear affection unto them, and a peculiar care over them: in reſpect to theſe Beings indeed the relation of Father is more proper, Pſal. 103. 20. becauſe they only can be ſenſible thereof, and capable to render the duties of piety, gratitude and willing obedience ſutable thereto; Rational Beings (ſaith an Ethnick Philoſopher) are the ſons of God, becauſe they only are naturally fit to converſe with God, being conjoyned to him by participation of Reaſon: And thus indeed even the Pagan Theologers commonly, from primitive general Tradition we may ſuppoſe, did conceive the Supreme God to be the Father of the gods, (intending not ſuch gods as were of man's deviſing, creatures deifi'd by the flattery or fondneſs of the vulgar, but of higher rank, anſwering to our Angels, whom they ſuppoſed as to approach in excellency of nature neareſt to God, ſo to have derived their being from him, and to attend conſtantly upon him, partaking of his glory, and obſerving his pleaſure) whence Divum pater, Father of the Gods, is a common periphraſis, or title of God among them; and particularly in the Timæus of Plato there is an Oration, which he repreſenteth God making unto thoſe creatures, preſently upon their creation, beginning thus; O ye chief Gods, of whom I am the framer and father---- concerning which gods that which he can ſay, he pretendeth to deduce from ancient original Tradition: But to come nearer to our more particular concernment.

Ὅτι κοινωνεῖν μόνον ταῦτα πέφυκε τῷ θεῷ τῆς συναναστροφῆς κατὰ τὸν λόγον ἐπιπεπλεγμένα. Arr. Epict. 1. 9.

θεοὶ θεῶν, ὧν ἐγὼ δημιουργὸς, πατήρ τε.------

3. God is the Father, in a more eſpecial manner, of mankind: Mal. 2. 10. Have we not (ſaith the Prophet) one Father, hath not one God created us? and Luc. 3. 38. Adam is called the ſon of God, the genealogy of all men terminating in Act. 17. 29. him; and, we are all God's off-ſpring, ſaith S. Paul: we are ſo, for that Job 10. 8. his hands made and faſhioned our bodies; and for that he formed our ſpirit Pſal. 139. 15, 16. within us, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. He made us after his own image, ſo as ſignally to repreſent and reſemble himſelf, in properties of nature, and Zech. 12. 1. Pſal. 33. 15. Gen. 1. 27. in eminence of condition; in this great Family of viſible creatures he hath aſſigned unto us the principal ſtation, ſo that other creatures there are but as ſervants waiting on us, we are as children, depending only on him; he hath ſhewed an eſpecial tenderneſs of affection and good will toward us, in providing for us all manner of needful ſuſtenance and Pſal. 71. 6. comfortable accommodation; continually watching over us for our good, and holding us up (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh) from our mothers womb; beſtowing on us good education (inſtructing us by the light of nature, or dictates of natural reaſon and conſcience, by civil converſation, by the precepts of wiſe men, and examples of vertuous perſons, by providential encouragements to good, and determents from evil; together with the ſecret whiſpers, advices and motions of his grace) bearing with exceſſive patience our infirmities, miſcarriages and offences; uſing ſeaſonable and moderate chaſtiſements to reclaim us from bad courſes to thoſe, which our duty, and our advantage do require: In ſhort all God's dealings and demeanour toward mankind do argue in him a paternal regard thereto: whence even the blind Heathens diſcerned and acknowledged this general relation of God to men; and, Gentis humanæ pater, atque cuſtos (O Father, and keeper of mankind) was an invocation ſutable to their notion concerning him: from him they deduced our original; to him they aſcribed the formation of our bodies, ſo full of wonderful artifice; from him they affirm our ſouls to be extracted; from his goodneſs and care they ſuppoſed all the conveniencies of life which we enjoy to be deriv'd; they conceived him to bear a kind affection unto man, and to have a conſtant care over him; as by many expreſs teſtimonies might be ſhewed, and from their practices evidently may be inferred.

Hor. Carm. 1. 12.
Epict. 1. 3, 9.
Omnes ſi ad primam originem revocentur, à Diis ſunt. Sen. Ep. 44.
A natura divina hauſtos animos, & delibutos habemus. Cic. de Div. 1.
Charior eſt illis homo, quam ſibi.

4. Farther yet more eſpecially God is the Father of all good men; ſuch a relation being yet built upon higher grounds and reſpects; for as good they have another original from him; virtue ſpringeth in their hearts from a heavenly ſeed; that emendation and perfection of nature is produced by his grace, enlightning and quickning them: they are images of him, reſembling him in judgment and diſpoſition of mind, in will and purpoſe, in action and behaviour; the which reſemblances do argue them to be the ſons of God, and indeed do conſtitute them ſuch; for, Love your enemies (ſaith our Lord) bleſs thoſe that curſe you, doe good to thoſe that hate you,— that you may be the ſons of your father in heaven; and, Love your enemies, and doe good; and lend expecting nothing thence, and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the ſons of the moſt high; imitation of God in goodneſs and beneficence doth we ſee found a filial relation unto God: To ſuch God anſwerably doth bear a paternal kindneſs and compaſſion; for, Like as a father pitieth his children, ſo (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) the Lord pitieth them that fear him. He in all reſpects dealeth with them as with his children; ὡς υἱοῖς προσφέρεται, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh: He teacheth, and guideth them with wholſome advice upon all occaſions; for, What man is he that feareth the Lord? him ſhall he teach in the way that he ſhall chuſe; and, The ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; He gently removeth and correcteth them; Whom (ſaith the Wiſe-man) God loveth, he correcteth, even as a father the ſon, in whom he delighteth: He maintaineth them with all needful ſuſtenance and accommodation without their care or trouble; for, Take no care, ſaith our Saviour, ſaying, what ſhall we eat, or what ſhall we drink, or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed,---- for your heavenly father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things; he ſo knoweth and conſidereth it, as to provide, that there ſhall not be (as the Pſalmiſt affirmeth) any want unto them that fear him: He protecteth them from all danger, ſupporteth them in all diſtreſs, and reſcueth them from all miſchief; for, His eyes are upon the righteous —— to deliver his ſoul from death, and to keep him alive in famine; he keepeth all his bones ſo that none of them is broken—— though he fall, he ſhall not utterly be caſt down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand; Many are his afflictions, but the Lord delivereth him out of all: Such paternal affections doth God bear, ſuch paternal acts doth he exerciſe toward good men; the which even Pagan Wiſe-men did apprehend; of whom one thus expreſſeth himſelf; God (ſaith he) hath a fatherly mind toward good men, and ſtrongly loveth them -- between them and God there is a friendſhip, which vertue doth conciliate; a Bonus vir ſine Deo nemo eſt. Sen. Epiſt. 41.

1 Pet. 1. 23.
Matt. 5. 45.
Luc. 6. 36.
Pſal. 103. 13.
Heb. 12. 7.
Pſal. 25. 12.
37. 23.
Prov. 3. 12
Matt. 6. 31.
7. 11.
Pſal. 34. 9, 10. 37. 11.
Pſal. 33. 18. 19. 34. 19, 20. 37. 24.
Patrium habet Deus adverſus bonos viros animum, & illos fortiter amat, &c.
Sen. de provid 1, 2.

friendſhip do I ſay, yea a kindred, and ſimilitude; for that a good man is God's diſciple and imitatour, and his true off-ſpring, whom that magnificent father, no ſoftly exacter of vertue, doth after the manner of ſevere parents, educate hardly.

5. We may farther obſerve, that God in his proceedings with men, whereby he particularly deſigneth to contain them within bounds of duty, and thereby to lead them unto happineſs, delighteth to repreſent himſelf under this obliging and endearing relation; thus he did in regard to his ancient people upon all occaſions expreſs himſelf: who
Rom. 9. 4. are Iſraelites, whoſe is the adoption, ſaith S. Paul, reckoning this as the Exod. 4. 22. firſt of thoſe privileges, which appertain to the Jews: It was the commiſſion to Moſes: Thou ſhalt ſay unto Pharaoh; thus ſaith the Lord, Iſrael is my Son, even my firſt born; and I ſay unto thee; let my Son go, that he may ſerve me; Moſes alſo foreſeeing how that people would miſbehave themſelves, doth thus in God's name expoſtulate with them:
Deut. 32. 6. Do you thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people, and unwiſe? is not he thy father, that bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee? of the rock that begat thee, thou art unmindful, and haſt forgotten God, that
2 Chr. 29. 10. formed thee. David alſo thus addreſſeth himſelf to God in their behalf; Bleſſed be thou, Lord God of Iſrael, our Father, for ever, and ever; thine O Lord is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the Majeſty: and, Doubtleſs, (ſaith Eſay) thou art our father, though
Iſa. 63. 16. 44. 2, 24. 46. 3. Abraham be ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledge us not; thou O Lord, art our father, our redeemer, thy name is from everlaſting: and, I am
Jer. 31. 9, 20. (ſaith God in Jeremy) a father to Iſrael, and Ephraim is my firſt-born; Is Ephraim my dear ſon, is he a pleaſant child? he is; the LXX render it, in way of aſſertion, not of interrogation.

6. But in the Chriſtian diſpenſation God more ſignally repreſenteth himſelf in this quality and notion. God herein treateth us not ſo much, as our Lord and Maſter, with imperious rigour and awfulneſs, as our Father, with moſt gracious condeſcenſion, and allurements of kindneſs:
Heb. 2. 11. Our Lord (the only Son of God in a ſenſe infinitely moſt peculiar and
Joh. 20. 17. high) was not (ſaith the Apoſtle) aſhamed to call us brethren; Go (ſaid our Lord, for inſtance of that gracious condeſcenſion) to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father, and to your father; both my God, and your God: And ſuch are the advantages peculiar to Chriſtians, grounding this relation toward them, that S. Paul comparing our ſtate
Gal. 4. 7. in regard to God with that of the Jews, doth thus infer: So that thou, (O Chriſtian) art not now a ſervant, but a ſon: So it is aſſerted, and accordingly (which is worth our while diſtinctly to obſerve) all the performances of God toward us, and in our behalf are of ſuch a nature, and are ſet out in ſuch terms as do ground and import this relation: for

1. The reception of a believer into the participation of the privileges
Gal. 4. 5. and advantages which Chriſtianity tendreth, is termed υἱοθεσία, the ma-
Ep. 1. 5. 2. 19. Rom. 8. 15. king him a Son; the adopting him into God's family, the conferring upon him the title and quality of God's child; together with the internal diſpoſition of mind, and the liberty of acceſs and intercourſe, which
Joh. 1. 12. do ſute that relation: Whoſoever (ſaith S. John) did receive him, to them he gave the power (or privilege) to become the ſons of God, even to them,
Gal. 3. 26. who believed in his name: and, Ye are all (ſaith S. Paul) the ſons of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; that is, by ſincerely embracing Chriſtianity. And,
1 Joh. 3. 1. (Eph. 3. 15.) Behold (ſaith S. John again) what manner of love the father hath given us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God. And, Ye have not received the ſpirit of ſervitude unto fear, but ye have received the ſpirit of adoption, by which we cry, Abba father; that is, by which in our prayers with humble affection we freely, confidently and readily according to our Saviour's inſtitution do ſay, Our father.

Rom. 8. 15.
Gal. 4. 6.

2. That renovation of our nature, and qualifying our minds as the Goſpel preſcribeth and requireth, is called regeneration, a new creation, a new birth, the begetting a new man within us: If a man be not born from above he cannot ſee the kingdom of God, that is he cannot be a good Chriſtian: whoever is begot of God doth not ſin; that is, good Chriſtians do not live in a courſe of diſobedience: We are αὐτοῦ ποίημα, God's work, or production, being created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works: Ye have been taught--- to put on the new man, that is created according to the image of God in righteouſneſs, and true holineſs; in ſuch terms is the effect of the Chriſtian diſpenſation upon our hearts and lives deſcribed; and that with the greateſt reaſon; for no act of God toward us can be more fatherly, than working in us by his grace the principles of Chriſtian life, and the practices ſpringing from it; nothing doth nearer advance us to a ſimilitude with God, and a participation of the divine nature; nothing doth conciliate from God a more tender affection to us, or worketh in us a more dutiful affection toward him, anſwerable to this relation, than doth a hearty compliance with the grace of the Goſpel.

Joh. 3. 3.
1 Joh. 3. 9.
Eph. 2. 10.
Eph. 4. 21, 24.
Col. 3. 10.
2 Pet. 1. 4.

3. The reſurrection of good Chriſtians after death to a better ſtate of life; their entring into immortal bliſs and glory, is worthily ſtyled παλιγγενεσία, a being generated and born again; whereby they receive from God another more excellent life and ſtate of being, more like and conformable to God: for, we know (ſaith S. John) that if he ſhall appear (or, that when he ſhall appear, as ſome Copies reade it) we ſhall be like him; and, As (ſaith S. Paul) we have born the image of the earthly (Adam,) we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly: We ſhall (ſaith he) be metamorphoſed, or transfigured into the ſame image: and, They (ſaith our Saviour) which ſhall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the reſurrection of the dead---- are the ſons of God, being the ſons of the reſurrection: that ſtate of bliſs is therefore ſtyled a portion or inheritance, allotted to ſons, and conſequent upon ſuch a relation: If ſons, ſaith S. Paul, then heirs; heirs of God, and co-heirs with Chriſt, receiving the reward, and promiſe of an eternal inheritance: Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (ſaith S. Peter) who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away reſerved in heaven for us.

1 Joh. 3. 2.
2 Cor. 15. 49.
2 Cor. 3. 18.
Phil. 3. 21.
Matt. 19. 28.
Luc. 20. 35.
Gal. 4. 7.
Rom. 8. 17.
Col. 3. 24.
Heb. 9. 15.
1 Pet. 1. 3, 4.

4. I might adjoin, that Chriſtian men do become the ſons of God by the intervention of our Saviour, aſſuming our nature, and conforming himſelf to the likeneſs of men; whereby he becomes the firſt-born of many brethren: God (ſaith S. Paul) ſent forth his ſon, born of a woman, that we might receive the privilege of being made ſons: and, Children (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) partake of fleſh and bloud; whence (as he meaneth to infer) our Lord being the Son of God, we upon conjunction of nature with him, and as his brethren, become alſo ſuch; he farther intimateth, that upon this ſcore we do ſurpaſs Angels themſelves; for that He took not on him the nature of angels, but took on him the ſeed of Abraham; they were not, as we, dignified with a fraternal relation to the Son of God.

Phil. 2. 7.
Rom. 8. 3, 29.
Gal. 4. 4, 5.
Heb. 2. 11, 14, 16.

In ſo many ſeveral reſpects is God our Father; we are his children as being his creatures, made, preſerved and maintained by him; as we are intellectual creatures, being placed in degree and quality of nature ſo near him; as we by vertue and goodneſs (produced in us by his grace) do any wiſe approach him, reſemble him, and partake of his ſpecial favour; as we are Chriſtians, adopted into his heavenly family, renewed by his holy grace, and deſtinated to a participation of his eternal glory.

Now the conſideration of theſe grounds (each one of them, and all of them together) upon which this relation of God unto us is founded, hath manifold good uſes; It is apt to inform and admoniſh us concerning many neceſſary duties reſulting from it; and to enforce upon us the practice of them.

1. It in general may teach, and ſhould mind us what reverence, honour and obſervance is due from us unto God, in equity and juſtice, according to ingenuity and gratitude: If (ſaith God in the Prophet) I be Mal. 1. 6. a father, where is my honour? Our believing, and acknowledging this relation is vain, if we do not yield the reſpects, and perform the duties anſwerable thereto. And if indeed we are obliged to love, to reſpect, to obſerve thoſe, who have been the inſtruments of God in producing, in nouriſhing, in breeding us, how much more are we bound to yield the ſame to him, who principally did, who continually doth beſtow upon us our being together with all the ſupports, the conveniences, the comforts thereof; from whoſe free bounty we derive not only the benefits of this tranſitory life, but the ineſtimable privileges and bleſſings relating to the future incomparably better ſtate? If we neglect our duty ſo grounded, may not God juſtly expoſtulate with us, as he did of old with thoſe children of his: Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people, and Deut. 32. 6, 18. unwiſe: Is he not thy father, who bought thee? (or rather, who got thee, ὅς ἐκτήσατό σε, ſaith the Greek; and both that and the Hebrew do agree in expreſſion of that thing with our common manner of ſpeech) hath not he made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee? it is, as is there intimated, a part of extreme folly no leſs than of injuſtice and ingratitude to diſ-regard and diſobey him, to whom by ſuch bands of duty and obligation we are allied: Indeed the excellency of God's nature doth juſtly require honour and reverence to him; his ſovereign power may alſo reaſonably extort obedience from us, but his paternal benevolence and beneficence are the moſt obliging grounds, the moſt kindly inducements to the practice of all piety toward him; we are fooliſhly unworthy in not being good on the other accounts, in not being ſo for theſe reaſons we are monſtrouſly baſe.

2. This conſideration may inſtruct and admoniſh us what we ſhould be, and how we ſhould behave our ſelves; for that if we be God's children, it becometh us, and we are obliged in our diſpoſition and demeanour to reſemble, to imitate him: it is natural, and proper for children to reſemble their parents in their complexion and countenance; to imitate them in their actions and carriage: If ye (argueth our Lord) Joh. 8 39, 41. were Abraham's children, ye would doe the works of Abraham; ye would imitate him in readily believing and obeying God: and, Ye (ſaith he again) are of your father the Devil, becauſe ye perform the luſts of your father; becauſe in his envious, treacherous, murtherous diſpoſition and practice ye reſemble him: So if we be God's children, we muſt, according to S. Paul's exhortation, Eph. 5. 1. imitate God, as dear children; we muſt in all imitable perfections ſtrive to be like him; ſo doth the Scripture frequently (both in general, and as to particular caſes or matters) apply and inculcate this point; God is holy, and pure, ſo therefore ought 1 Pet. 1. 14. we to be; As obedient children (ſaith S. Peter) not faſhioning your ſelves according to the former luſts in your ignorance, but as he which hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation: and, That (ſaith S. Paul) ye may be blameleſs, and harmleſs, the ſons of God without rebuke (or irreprehenſible ſons of God) in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe nation: Phil. 2. 15. and, Beloved, now are we ſons of God, ſaith S. John ſubjoining----- 1 Joh. 3. 2, 3. And every one that hath this hope (a hope grounded upon, or ſpringing from ſuch a relation) purifieth himſelf, as God is pure: God is perfectly juſt, and righteous, thence we likewiſe ſhould labour to be ſuch; for, Every one (ſaith S. John) that doeth righteouſneſs is righteous as he is righteous: 1 Joh 3. 7. God is perfect in all goodneſs; ſo muſt we endeavour to be, as our Saviour enjoineth us: Be ye (ſaith he) therefore perfect as your Father is perfect: Matt. 5. 48. God is bountiful, gracious and merciful unto all, we thence ſhould learn to be ſo alſo; I ſay unto you (they are our Saviour's leſſons to us) love your enemies, bleſs thoſe that curſe you, doe good to thoſe that hate you, and pray for thoſe who deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you; that ye may be the children of your father, which is in heaven; Matt. 5. 44. for he maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil, and on the good; and ſendeth rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt: and again; Love your enemies, doe good, and lend hoping for nothing again; and your reward ſhall be great, Luc. 6. 35. and ye ſhall be the children of the higheſt; for he is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil; be ye therefore merciful, as your father alſo is merciful: So are we admoniſhed by the holy Writers of our engagements to be good on this account: and reaſon indeed ſheweth this relation to be inconſiſtent with our being otherwiſe; for ſimilitude only can preſerve cognation; things very unlike become formally different in kind and nature thereby; diverſity of manners ſignifie a difference in bloud: if therefore we be cloſely affixed to material things, or pronely addicted to brutiſh pleaſures, how can we be the children of him, that is purely ſpiritual, altogether intellectual? if we be fierce, hard-hearted, unmerciful or uncharitable, how can we claim kindred with him, who is all love, and benignity, all munificence and mercy? there can be no affinity in relation, where there is ſuch a diſſimilitude in nature: God alſo cannot deal with us as children, cannot affect or like us, if we do not reſemble him; he can only love good men, and the moſt certain κριτήριον (the moſt perfect rule, the moſt evident mark) by which we can diſcern or diſtinguiſh what goodneſs is, is conformity to God's nature, diſcovered by his actions; for that cannot otherwiſe than be very good, wiſe and reaſonable, comely and commendable, convenient and beneficial to us, wherein we reſemble God; God's example cannot miſguide us, his law and his practice ever conſent, his will and nature cannot diſagree; nothing therefore can more pleaſe him than what is like him; as even Plato could obſerve: What practice (ſaith he) is acceptable and ſutable to God? One; even that, which the Old ſaying implies, Like is ever a friend to like. Nothing likewiſe is more certainly bad, or more diſpleaſing to God, than that which rendreth us in our complexion of mind, or in our behaviour unlike to God: we by being ſuch, or doing ſo, muſt neceſſarily fall from this high dignity, muſt ipſo facto forfeit this excellent privilege of being thus related to God; we thereby becomes exiles, and aliens from his name and family; we prove rebels and foes inſtead of ſons, and friends unto him.

Τὸ ὅμοιον ὁμοίῳ φύσει συγγενές ἐστι. Plat. Protag.

Τίς πράξις φίλη, καὶ ἀκόλουθος θεῷ; μία, καὶ ἕνα ἔχουσα ἀρχαῖον λόγον, ὅτι τῷ ὁμοίῳ τὸ ὅμοιον φίλον ἂν εἴη. Plato de Leg. 4.

3. This conſideration may raiſe us to a juſt regard, eſteem and valuation of our ſelves, may conſequently inſpire noble thoughts, and breed generous inclinations in us; may withdraw us from mean, baſe and unworthy deſigns or practices; may excite and encourage us to

handſome, brave, worthy reſolutions and undertakings, ſutable to the dignity of our nature, the nobleneſs of our deſcent, the eminency of ſo high a relation, of ſo near an alliance to God: Even natural light dictateth this uſe of the notion, and Heathen Philoſophers do apply it: Arr. diſſ. 1. 3. If any one (ſaith Epictetus) could be affected with this opinion, that we are all originally deſcended from God, and that God is both the father of men and gods, he would not, I ſuppoſe, conceive any thing ignoble or mean concerning himſelf; If Cæſar ſhould adopt thee, none could endure thy ſuperciliouſneſs; and if thou knoweſt that thou art God's ſon, ſhall it not elevate thy mind? So that great Philoſopher diſcourſeth: and S. Auſtin relateth Aug. de Civ. D. 3. 4. this diſcourſe of Varro, the moſt learned Roman of his time: It is, ſaid he, uſeful for Cities, that valiant men, ſhould (although it be falſe) believe themſelves born of the gods, that their minds thence bearing a confidence of their divine extraction, may more boldly undertake great enterpriſes, purſue them more earneſtly, and hence accompliſh them more happily, from the ſecurity this conceit produceth: Shall we then, who in ſo many reſpects are ſo highly born, and of ſo illuſtrious an extraction (we that are allied to God by our intelligent nature, that are by the heavenly ſeed of Chriſtian regeneration more deeply implanted into his ſtock) ſo far debaſe our ſelves, as to affect and purſue trivial, abject, diſhonourable things? are we not aſhamed of ſo vile a degeneracy? can we dare ſo to diſparage our high relations? God our heavenly father, Chriſt our elder brother; the holy Angels, and bleſſed Saints, our kindred in nature, our brethren in grace? ſhall we not be fraid for ſuch unworthineſs to be degraded, to be rejected, to be diſinherited by our holy Father; who is jealous of his honour, who cannot brook to have his bloud ſo ſtained and defiled, or that ſuch blots and diſgraces ſhould ſtick to his lineage; that his image impreſſed on us ſhould be ſo deformed and diſfigured; that ſuch diſorders and mis-behaviours ſhould be committed in his Family? if we do not behave our ſelves as children, he hath declared that he will diſavow and caſt us off from being ſo; Joh. 15. 2, 6. Every plant (our Saviour telleth us) that beareth not good fruit, he loppeth it from his ſtock, and caſteth it away.

4. This conſideration is an eſpecial motive to humility, apt to depreſs vain conceit and confidence in our ſelves: for, if we are God's children, ſo as to have received our beings, all our powers and abilities, all our goods and wealth, both internal and external, both natural and ſpiritual, from his free diſpoſal, ſo as to be continually preſerved and maintained by his providence, to depend for all our ſubſiſtence upon his care and bounty; what reaſon can we have to aſſume or aſcribe any thing to our ſelves? how vain is it to rely upon any ſtrength or wiſdom, any poſſeſſion or endowment we have, or ſeem to have? how extremely fond are we if we be raiſed in our conceit, or are ambitious of reputation upon the ſcore of any ſuch things? for, Who (as the Apo- 1 Cor. 4. 7. ſtle invincibly diſcourſeth) made thee to differ? what haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? and if thou haſt received it, why doſt thou glory, as if thou hadſt not received it? To him alone, who is the Authour and Donour of all good things, to the fountain of all power, all joy, all bleſ- Jam. 1. 17. Joh. 3. 27. 1 Chron. 29. 14, 15. ſings, to the father of lights, from whom every good and perfect gift deſcendeth; all praiſe and glory is due.

5. This conſideration ſheweth us the reaſon we have to ſubmit intirely to the providence of God, with contentedneſs and acquieſcence in Plat. in Phæd. every condition: for ſeeing we are God's poſſeſſions (θεοῦ κτήματα, as Plato calleth us) he having made us whatever we are, according to all accounts and capacities, whether as men by his common providence, or as Chriſtians by his eſpecial grace; he ſurely hath the beſt right and title that can be upon us; he may juſtly diſpoſe of us, and uſe us as he thinks good; we may well thence be obliged, according to the Apoſtolical precept, to glorifie God in our body, and in our ſpirit, which are God's; 1 Cor. 6. 20. if we repine at, or complain of God's dealing with us; may he not juſtly return to us that anſwer in the Goſpel, Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Matt. 20. 15. Shall we not ſuffer God to order his own family according to his diſcretion and pleaſure; to aſſign what ſtation, to allow what portion he pleaſeth to his own children, without our offence or diſpleaſure? ſhall we pretend to know better than he what is fit to be done; ſhall we claim a right to diſpenſe his goods, or deſire to be carvers for our ſelves; if it be unjuſt and unreaſonable to doe thus, then in all reaſon we ought to be content in every ſtate that he diſpoſeth us into, and to undergo patiently whatever he impoſeth on us; yea we have reaſon to be more than content with every thing incident, not only as juſtly proceeding from him, but as preſumable to be good and convenient for us? for is it not fit that we ſhould think that God will order things for the beſt good of his own children? can we conceive that he willingly will hurt, or will not rather help them; that he will deſign them any miſchief, yea that he will eaſily ſuffer it? Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? Yea, they may (God telleth us) forget, yet he will not forget us; Iſa. 49. 15. ſooner indeed may the moſt tender parents become unnaturally regardleſs, ſpiteful and cruel toward their children, than the immutable God (who in his nature is unexpreſſibly benign and compaſſionate) ſhall neglect the good of his off-ſpring: good reaſon therefore have we to be ſatisfied with all that befalleth us.

6. Particularly this conſideration obligeth us to be penitent and chearful in the foreſt afflictions, as deeming them to come from a paternal hand, inflicted with great affection and compaſſion, deſigned for and tending to our good: Thou ſhalt (ſaith God to the Iſraelites) conſider in thy heart, that as a man chaſteneth his ſon, ſo the Lord thy God chaſteneth thee: Deut. 8. 5. and, We (ſaith the Apoſtle) have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits, and live? for they verily for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs: Heb. 12. 9, 10. the puniſhments inflicted on us by men may perhaps proceed from paſſion, but God aſſuredly never inflicts any thing grievous on us but out of pure good will: and what ſweeter conſolation can there be, than to know, that the moſt croſs and diſtaſtful accidents befalling us, do (according to the intention of him that bringeth them on us, and manageth them) conduce to our profit, and ſhall in the event, if we do patiently receive them, and by our untowardneſs do not hinder their effect, prove wholſome and advantageous to us.

7. This conſideration doth alſo ſhew the reaſon we have to obey thoſe precepts, which injoin us to rely upon God's providence; to caſt all our burthen and care upon God; to be ſolicitous, and anxious about nothing, which concerneth our ſuſtenance: Matt. 6. 25. Phil. 4. 6. 1 Pet. 5. 7. Pſal. 37. 5. 55. 23. for children commonly (eſpecially ſuch as have able and kind parents) do live altogether void of care concerning their maintenance, being aſſured that their parents will concern themſelves to provide whatever is neceſſary or convenient for them; and how much more have we reaſon to live free of ſolicitude in ſuch reſpects, who have a Father ſo infinitely ſufficient to ſupply all our wants, and ſo tenderly affected toward us; ſo ever preſent with us, and always vigilant over us; who cannot but ſee and know our needs; and can moſt eaſily ſatisfie them, and is no leſs willing and ready, if we truſt in him, to doe it? Do not (ſaith our Lord) take care, ſaying, what Matt. 6. 31, 32. ſhall we eat, or what ſhall we drink, or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed— for your heavenly father knoweth, that ye have need of all theſe things; the Epict. Arr. 1. 9. like reaſon did even natural light ſuggeſt to a Philoſopher: If, ſaith he, kindred with Cæſar, or with any other great man in Rome, is ſufficient to make a man live ſecurely, without contempt, and without fear, will not the having God our maker, and father, and guardian free us from griefs and fears? 'tis extreme infidelity concerning either the providence of God, or his power, or his goodneſs (that is, the practical disbelief of this point, or in our hearts diſavowing God to be our Father,) which cauſeth all that carking and diſtraction of mind, that fear of wants, that grief for loſſes and diſappointments which do commonly poſſeſs men, together with thoſe covetous deſires and unjuſt practices, with which the world aboundeth; he can hardly be guilty of them, who believeth and conſidereth, that God doth thus ſtand related and affected toward him.

8. This conſideration doth more generally in all regards ſerve to breed and cheriſh our faith, to raiſe our hope, to quicken our devotion: for whom ſhall we confide in, if not in ſuch a Father? from whom can we expect good, if not from him, who hath already given us ſo much, even all that we have? to whom can we have recourſe freely and chearfully, upon any occaſion, if not to him, who ſo kindly inviteth and calleth us to him, in ſo endearing terms, with ſo obliging an appellation? If we in any need, corporal or ſpiritual, requeſt ſuccour or ſupply from him, can we ſuſpect that ſuch a Father (ſo infinitely wiſe, ſo able, ſo Matt. 7. 9, 10, 11. Luc. 11. 13. good) will refuſe us, or can fail us? No; What man is there of us, that if his ſon ask him bread, will give him a ſtone, or if he ask a fiſh will give him a ſerpent? If we then who are evil know how to give good gifts to our children, how much more ſhall your father in heaven give good things to them that ask him? ſo doth our Saviour with moſt convincing force of reaſon move us to the duty of prayer, with faith and confidence of good ſucceſs: S. Luke hath it, How much more ſhall your heavenly father give the holy ſpirit to them that ask him? implying, that upon account of this relation we may in all our ſpiritual needs (if we do need light and direction in our doubts, or ſtrength againſt temptations, or comfort in our diſtreſſes) be aſſured of finding requiſite aſſiſtance and relief. We ſhould therefore upon all exigencies addreſs our ſelves to God, not with the fear of ſlaves, nor with the ſuſpicion of ſtrangers, but with diſpoſitions of heart ſutable to children, with a reverent love, and humble confidence, and chearful hope.

9. Laſtly, conſidering this point will direct and prompt us how to behave our ſelves towards all God's creatures, according to their reſpective natures and capacities: If God be the Father of all things, they are all thence in ſome ſort our brethren, and ſo may claim from us a fraternal affection and demeanour anſwerable thereto: ſhall we then ſcorn, abuſe, trample or tyrannize over any of them? doth it become us to doe ſo? will our common Father like it? or endure it: If we are all branches ſprouting from one ſtock, or ſtreams iſſuing from the ſame ſource of divine beneficence and fecundity; if we are members of one body, of one commonwealth, of one family, we are then ſurely obliged to an univerſal benevolence; to be kind and compaſſionate, to be helpful and beneficial unto all, ſo far as our capacity reacheth; we are to endeavour, as we can, to preſerve the order, and promote the welfare of the world, and of all things in it: Even upon this ſcore the meaneſt of God's creatures is not to be deſpiſed, the vileſt worm is not to be miſuſed by us; ſince even it is the work of his hands, and the ſubject of his care, yea the object of his kindneſs, Who (as the Pſalmiſt telleth us) is good unto all, and whoſe tender mercies are over all his works: But eſpecially toward thoſe Beings, who according to a more peculiar and excellent ſenſe are entitled the ſons of our father, and to whom we are more nearly allied by our better part (that divine breath, which both they and we drew from God) toward all intellectual Beings, we do learn hence our reſpective duties: of love and reſpect toward thoſe our elder brethren, the Angels (thoſe of them, which have not degenerated from their nature, and apoſtatized from their duty) of charity and good will toward each other; which if we do not maintain, we may conſider that we thereby are firſt undutiful and unkind to God our common father, and then even to our ſelves: we do hate and harm both God's relations and our own (God's children, and our brethren) by hating or harming any man whatever; eſpecially any good man, any Chriſtian brother; who by other more peculiar bands is ſtraitly tied to us; who upon ſo many better and higher accounts ſtandeth related unto God, and to our ſelves: Ariſtotle ſaith, that all men, upon grounds of natural cognation and ſimilitude are naturally friends to one another; much more are all good men ſo by participation of a more excellent nature, and by a nobler reſemblance; whence 'tis S. Paul's precept to Chriſtians, that they ſhould be τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλόστοργοι, that they ſhould bear a natural affection each to other in brotherly love; Chriſtians are in a more peculiar and eminent manner ſtyled brethren; and that charity, which in reſpect to others is called philanthropy (or humanity) in regard to them is named philadelphy (or brotherly affection) hence to perform all fraternal offices toward every Chriſtian, to wiſh heartily and earneſtly to promote his good; to compaſſionate, and (as we are able) to relieve his evils, to bear his infirmities, and to comport with unkindneſſes from him, and the like duties are incumbent on us, as peculiar to our profeſſion.

P. 145, 9. 16.

Συγγενὲς πᾶν τὸ λογικόν. Ant. 3. 4. Συγγενὴς, οὐχὶ αἵματος, ἢ σπέρματος τοῦ αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ νοῦ, καὶ θείας ἀπομοίρας μέτοχος. Ant. 2. 1.

Si ab uno Deo inſpirati omnes, & animati ſumus, quid aliud quàm fratres ſumus, & quidem conjunctiores quòd animis, quàm qui corporibus: ergò pro belluis immanibus habendi ſunt, qui hominibus nocent. Lactant. l. 6.

Ἀνδράποδον, οὐκ ἀνέξῃ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου, ὃς ἔχει Δία προγόνον, Epict. Arr. 1. 13.

Οἰκεῖον ἅπας ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ φίλον. Ariſt. Eth 8. 1.

Rom. 12. 10.

Theſe are the principal uſes which the conſideration of this point ſuggeſteth. Now God Almighty, the great Father of all things, and eſpecially our gracious Father in Chriſt Jeſus, grant that by his holy grace we may perform all filial duty toward him (rendring unto him all love and reverence, all praiſe and thanks, all worſhip and obedience, together with all faith and hope in him) that we may behave our ſelves in all things as becometh this relation, that we may reſemble him in all goodneſs, that we may perſiſt here continually in his favour, and obtain hereafter the bleſſed inheritance from him; this he of infinite mercy vouchſafe unto us, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe. Amen.

Even to God the Father, the Creatour, Preſerver and Governour of all things, the Authour and Donour of all good; to God the Son, the Redeemer of all the world, and foundation of all ſpiritual bleſſings; to God the Holy Ghoſt, the fountain of all true goodneſs, joy and comfort, be for ever and ever all glory and praiſe. Amen.

The Father Almighty.

SERMON XI.

REVEL. XI. 17.

O Lord God Almighty.

EVERY attribute of God is a proper and uſeful object of our conſideration; as being apt to mind us of our duty, and to excite us to the practice thereof; to beget in us thoſe diſpoſitions of mind (that love and reverence toward God, that faith and hope in him) which we ought to have; and to draw from us real performances of obedience to him; each of them doth ground obligations to piety, and yieldeth arguments to the practice thereof; to which purpoſes, that conſidering this divine attribute, Almighty (mentioned in our text) doth much avail, and that it therefore well deſerveth to be preſſed upon us, will appear more diſtinctly from the application we ſhall make thereof; at preſent we may perceive how conſiderable it is, by obſerving in groſs; 1. that it is frequently in holy Scripture ſingled forth, as moſt proper to God; as moſt fully expreſſive of his glorious excellency and Majeſty; particularly the moſt illuminate Miniſters of God's praiſe; the Seraphins in Eſay, the four Wights (or living creatures) in this Book; and the twenty four Elders in this place, do therefore uſe it. Eſ. 6. 3. Revel. 4. 8. 2. It is that attribute, which is alone moſt expreſly ſet down in our Creed, as eſpecially neceſſary to be believed and conſidered: We ſay therein; I believe in God the Father Almighty. 3. It is that with which we daily addreſs our devotions unto God; In our prayers we ſay, Almighty, and moſt merciful Father; in our praiſes we cry, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, or (which is the ſame) Lord God of Sabaoth. It ſeems therefore fit and uſeful, that we ſhould well underſtand the proper and full meaning thereof, together with the obligations grounded thereon, and the inducements it affordeth to good practice; that ſo when we hear it uſed in Scripture, when we profeſs to believe it, when we apply it to God in our devotions, we may ſo reflect thereupon, as to be admoniſhed of our duty, and moved to the performance thereof. Firſt therefore I will endeavour ſomewhat to explain it; then ſhall make a practical application thereof.

The title, Epithet, or attribute παντοκράτωρ, which we (finding no other word more properly and fully to expreſs it) do render Almighty, or omnipotent, is frequently in a manner peculiar and characteriſtical aſcribed to God: The uſe thereof in the New Teſtament is, by citation or imitation, transferred from the Greek of the Old, where it ſerveth to expreſs thoſe two famous and uſual names of God, Sabaoth and Shaddai; eſpecially it anſwereth to the former; for the latter is only rendred thereby in ſome places of the Book of Job: but the former, Sabaoth (when interpreted, and not left in its own ſound) is conſtantly rendred παντοκράτωρ. I call Sabaoth a name of God: for that it is ſo, it is in ſeveral places expreſly affirmed; as in Jeremy: Jer. 30. 54. Their redeemer is ſtrong, Jehovah Sabaoth is his name; and in Eſay: Iſa. 48. 2. For they call themſelves of the holy City, and ſtay thenſelves upon the God of Iſrael; the Lord of Hoſts is his name: and in Amos: Amos. 4. 13. He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man, what is his thought—— Jehovah Elohei Sabaoth is his name (from a ſort of Jove, called Ζεὺς Σαββάσιος, mentioned in ſome Pagan Writers was, Cicero, Ariſtoph. &c. Seld. de Diis S. cap. 3. as ſome Criticks ſuppoſe, deduced) Now as all the Names and appellations of God are ſignificant and denote ſome perfection, or ſome prerogative belonging to him (as Jehovah ſignifieth his ſelf-ſubſiſtence, independency, immutability and eternity; Elohim his omnipotence; Shaddai his all-ſufficiency; Adonai his ſupreme dominion and authority) ſo doth this name, or Title Sabaoth primitively ſeem to import God's univerſal conduct and managery of all creatures: for all things in the World, as being ranged in a goodly and convenient order (like an army marching in array, or marſhalled to battel) are called armies, or Sabaoth. Thus (after the hiſtory of the Creation it is ſaid) Gen. 2. 1. The heavens and earth were finiſhed, and all the hoſt of them (πᾶς κόσμος αὐτῶν, all the furniture, or all the Battalion of them) and, Pſal. 33. 6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) and all the hoſt of them: and, Pſal. 103. 21. Bleſs the Lord all ye his hoſts, ye Miniſters of his, that doe his pleaſure; that is, all creatures, which are ſubject to his command, and ſubſervient to his will; and, Iſa. 40. 26. Lift up (ſaith Eſay) your eyes on high; and behold who hath created theſe things, that bringeth out their hoſt by number, he calleth them all by names, by the greatneſs of his might, for that he is ſtrong in power, not one faileth; where God is repreſented to us as the General of an Army, drawing forth and ordering his creatures, as a General ſummoneth to a rendezvous, muſtereth and embattaileth his troops: hence this title of Sabaoth, which is rendred παντοκράτωρ, doth ſeem derived.

Ὄλβιοι ἀνέρες, οἷς Σαβαὼθ νόον ἐσθλὸν ἔδωκεν. Verſ. Sibyll lib. 1.

But we need not deal ſo ſtrictly, as to limit the ſenſe of this word, according to its original riſe, or its uſe in tranſlation; but ſince it hath been authenticated by its uſe in the holy fountains of truth, the New Teſtament, and is there uſed ſo, as to ſignifie or imply the ſum of divine perfections and pre-eminences; being (as it ſeems) ſelected eſpecially for that purpoſe, we may preſume to take it in its common latitude, for ὁ πάντων κρατῶν, or ὁ πάντων κράτος ἔχων, according to which extent, it may have various importances, ſomewhat different; it may accordingly denote, 1. right, or authority over all beings, Omni-poteſtas; and 2. a power, or ability to doe all things, Omni-potentia. 3. the actual exerciſe of ſuch authority, and ſuch power in ruling and diſpoſing all things; Omni-potentatus. 4. the poſſeſſion of all things; or the containing and holding all things in his hand; Omnitenentia ('tis S. Auguſtine's word.) 5. The preſervation or upholding of all things in their being and ſtate: for the word κρατεῖν, according to its propriety and ordinary uſe, may infer, and ground all theſe ſignifications; and according to them all, God is truly παντοκράτωρ: let us ſurvey the particulars, and ſhew how God, eſpecially in holy Scripture, is repreſented in reſpect to them:

1. God is παντοκράτωρ, as having a juſt right and authority over all things; he naturally is the ſovereign Lord and Emperour of the world;

for whatever imaginable reaſon or ground there is of authority doth in reſpect to all things agree unto God. Ariſtotle in his Politicks, diſcourſeth thus: Government doth aim at, and tend to the mutual benefit of the governour and governed; he therefore, who is moſt able and beſt diſpoſed to provide for, and procure the common benefit, is according to natural reaſon and juſtice (ſecluding other conſiderations of laws and compacts, of former conſtitutions, of preſent poſſeſſion, and the like) to be the Governour; or he deſerves, and, is fit to be ſo, and (no other reaſon hindring) becometh ſuch (That, ſaith the Philoſopher, which naturally is apt, or able to provide, doth naturally rule, and naturally lordeth) whence the ſoul hath a right to govern the body; and men naturally do rule over beaſts; and were there any ſuch perſons, as did without any queſtion very eminently exceed others in wiſdom and goodneſs, to them according to natural congruity the government of others would appertain; the common advantage ſo requiring: and if ſuch excellency of nature be a foundation of authority, then God, who in wiſdom and goodneſs doth incomparably ſurpaſs all things, hath aſſuredly the right to govern all: So a Pagan Authour could diſcourſe; There is (ſaith Cicero) nothing better than God; therefore it is neceſſary the World ſhould be ruled by him: he is the Only wiſe (as S. Paul telleth us) and thence moſt able; he is only good (as our Saviour teacheth us) and thence moſt apt to manage all things for the general welfare and benefit of the world. If alſo eminency of power doth qualifie for dominion (as it ſurely doth; for that which cannot be withſtood muſt in reaſon be ſubmitted to; it is vain to queſtion that authority, which by force altogether irreſiſtible can aſſert and maintain it ſelf) God hath the only right, nothing in the world being able to conteſt his Title; for, Who in the heaven can be compared unto the Lord, who among the ſons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? O Lord God of Hoſts, who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee? ſays the holy Pſalmiſt contemplating this divine attribute: all things are weak and feeble in compariſon; are altogether in his hand, and under his feet; are throughly at his diſcretion and diſpoſal: The Lord (ſaith the Prophet) is the true God, and the Everlaſting King, at his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation; and, How terrible (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) art thou in thy works? through the greatneſs of thy power ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee—He ruleth by his power for ever, his eyes behold the nations, let not the rebellious exalt themſelves.

1 Tim. 6. 6.

Τὸ δυνάμενον φύσει προορᾶν, ἄρχον φύσει, ϗ δεσπόζον φύσει.

Nihil eſt præſtantius Deo; ab eo igitur neceſſe eſt mundum regi. Cic. de N. D. 2.

Rom. 16. 17. Luk. 18. 19.

Pſal. 89. 6, 8.

Jer. 10. 10.

Pſal. 66. 3, 7.

If alſo to have made all things, and to preſerve them, doth create a right of governing (as it muſt needs do ſo; for what can we juſtly challenge a dominion over, if not over our own works, over that which we continually keep and nouriſh; over that which altogether depends upon us, and which ſubſiſts at our pleaſure?) then well may the Apocalyptical Elders thus acknowledge: Worthy art thou O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power, that is, to poſſeſs the royal Majeſty and ſovereign dominion over the world) for thou haſt made all things, and for thy will they are, and were created. Well might every creature, that is in heaven, and in the earth, and under the earth, and thoſe things which are in the ſea, and all things in them cry out, there; To him that ſitteth upon the throne (and to the Lamb) be the bleſſing, and the honour, and the glory, * and the dominion for ever, and ever.

Apoc. 4. 11.

Apoc. 5. 13.

* τὸ κράτος.

Well might King Hezekiah ſay, O Lord of hoſts— thou art the God; thou alone of all the Kingdoms of the earth, thou haſt made heaven and earth; and the Levites in Nehemiah; Thou, even thou art the Lord alone; thou haſt made heaven, and earth; the heaven of heavens with all their hoſts; the earth, and all things that are therein; the ſea, and all that is therein; and thou preſerveſt them all, and all the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee: Thus is God παντοκράτωρ; as he is upon all imaginable accounts, and according to all reaſonable grounds of right, the rightful Sovereign of all things: — as he is, —— Divûmque hominûmque poteſtas, as the wiſeſt Poet doth acknowledge and ſtyle him.

Iſa. 37. 16.
Neh. 9. 6.
Virg. Æn. 10.

2. He is alſo ſuch in regard to his infinite power, as that word may ſignifie Omnipotent. Natural light affordeth pregnant arguments of the greatneſs of his power, diſplayed in the conſtitution and conſervation of the World; his diſpoſing ſo ſtupendiouſly vaſt, ſo unconceivably various creatures into ſo comely and ſtable a poſture, whence his eternal power and divinity are diſcerned (as S. Paul telleth us) for he that could effect ſo much, his power muſt needs be far greater than we can imagine, or comprehend; to natural light, I ſay, it is incomprehenſibly great, and exceedeth all definite limits; but holy Scripture more clearly and fully declareth the extent of his power; aſſerting, that it is not only in reſpect to our weak conceit, and narrow capacity, but in it ſelf truly infinite, reaching the utmoſt poſſibility of things: It teacheth us, that whatever is not contrary to his nature, or to his eſſential perfections (to his goodneſs, fidelity, holineſs, wiſdom) which it doth not miſ-become him to doe; or which is not repugnant to the nature of things to be done (that is, which doth not imply a contradiction, and thereby is impoſſible, and becomes no object of power) for ſuch things he cannot doe, becauſe he is Omnipotent, as S. Auſtin acutely ſays; he is able with perfect eaſe and facility to atchieve it: There is among things good and poſſible nothing ſo difficult, but he can perform it, nothing ſo ſtrong and ſtubborn but he can ſubdue it: Is any thing too hard for the Lord? ſaid God to Abraham, when Sarah doubted, or wondred concerning the promiſe, that ſhe in ſo extreme an age ſhould become fruitful. Behold (ſaid the Prophet Jeremy in his prayer) thou haſt made the heaven, and the earth by thy great, and thy ſtretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee; οὐκ ἀδυνατήσει θεῷ πᾶν ῥῆμα· nothing (that can be ſaid, or conceived, or performed) ſhall be impoſſible to God, if he pleaſeth to deſign, or undertake it, ſaid the Angel to the bleſſed Virgin, when he delivered ſo ſtrange a meſſage to her concerning an event ſo wonderful and ſuper-natural, as our Saviour's conception of her: that a rich man ſhould be induced entirely to comply with God's will, and willingly to part with all, our Saviour affirmed exceedingly difficult (hardly any thing could be ſuppoſed more difficult, harder it was, than for a Camel to paſs through the eye of a Needle) but to ſatisfie his Diſciples ſcruple thence ariſing, he ſubjoyns: With men (or according to the common ſenſe of men) this is impoſſible, but to God all things are poſſible. In thine hand (ſaid King Jehoſhaphat) there is power, and might, ſo that none is able to withſtand thee; and King Nebuchadnezzar having felt an experiment of his power and being returned to a right underſtanding, confeſſeth thus: He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? The Lord of hoſts (ſaith the Prophet) hath purpoſed, and who ſhall diſannul it? his hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall

Rom. 1. 20.
Deus propterea quædam non poteſt, quia omnipotens eſt. Aug. de Civ. D. 5. 10.
Gen. 18. 14.
Jer. 32. 17, 27.
Luke 1. 37.
Matt. 19. 26.
2 Chr. 20. 6.
Dan 4. 35.
Iſa. 14. 27.

turn it back? To ſtop the Sun in his carreer, to make the Sea ſtand upon an heap, to draw ſtreams of water from a rock, to reſtrain fire from burning, to reſtore the blind and lame, to raiſe the dead, to ſuſpend, thwart, invert the courſe of nature, with all ſuch things, which we ſo wonder at, and term miracles, are comparatively but ſlender, and, as it were, perfunctory inſtances of his power; for with the greateſt eaſe, by the leaſt exertion of his power; by a thought, a look, a touch, Pſal. 18. 18. a word, the greateſt things are performed: He looketh on the earth, and Job 9. 5. 26. 11. it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they ſmoke. He overturneth the mountains in his anger, and ſhaketh the earth out of her place: The pillars of heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof: theſe ſeem great and ſtrange effects of power; yet in reſpect to what he can doe, and hath done, they are ſmall; for he at firſt made the whole world with a word; ſo the hiſtory of the Creation expreſſeth it, and ſo the Pſalmiſt Pſal. 33. 6, 9. telleth us: By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth; — and by a word he doth Heb. 1. 3. preſerve it, upholding (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh) all things by the word of his power, or by his powerful word; and by a word he can deſtroy and annihilate all things; yea more eaſily, in a manner, he can doe it, even by his mere ſilence, or by withdrawing Pſal. 104. 28. that ſalutary breath, by virtue of which all things ſubſiſt: Thou hideſt Job 34. 14, 20. thy face (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) they are troubled; thou withholdeſt thy breath, they dye and return to their duſt. For we may conſider, that in this reſpect alſo God is all-powerful, as being the ſource from which all power is derived, by which all power is ſuſtained, upon which all power doth depend: He not only can do all things incluſively, but excluſively, or ſo that nothing can be done without him: that of our Saviour, Joh. 15. 5. Without me ye can doe nothing, is not only true in Spiritual,
Act. 17. 24, 28. but in all other matters: He (as S. Paul preached at Athens) giveth life (or being, with all vital faculties) and breath (that is, all natural powers) and all things unto all: In him (or rather, by him) we live and move, and have our being; that is, whatever we are, whatever we have, whatever we can doe, doth proceed from him, doth depend upon him:
Thus is God παντοκράτωρ, as All-powerful.

3. God is alſo ſo, by reaſon that he doth actually exerciſe all dominion, and doth exert his power continually, according to his good pleaſure; he not only hath a juſt title to govern all things, and a perfect Pſal. 103. 19. ability to ſway in all matters, but he conſtantly uſed them: The Lord hath prepared his throne in heaven, and his Kingdom ruleth over all.
Pſal. 47. 7, 8. God is the King of all the Earth; God reigneth over the heathen (or the Pſal. 103. 4. nations) God ſitteth upon the throne of his holineſs: The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens: Who is like unto the Lord our God, who humbleth himſelf to behold the things, that are in heaven, and earth? It is indeed, as the holy Man ſaith, a great condeſcenſion in God, that he will vouchſafe to have the inſpection and adminiſtration of things ſo much inferiour to him, yet for the common good 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. of his creatures he is pleaſed to doe it: Thine (ſaith King David) O
Lord, is the Kingdom, and thou art exalted as head above all; both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all; in thine hand is power and might, &c. He is indeed the only Governour, abſolutely, originally 1 Tim. 6. 15. and independently ſo; ὁ μόνος δυνάστης, the only Potentate, as
S. Paul calleth him; All authority and power are imparted by him, and ſubordinate to him; from his diſpoſal and direction all Potentates do receive them; in his name and behalf, by virtue of his commiſſion miſſion and command, as his deligates and Miniſters, for his honour, intereſt and ſervice they adminiſter any juſt dominion, or power: It was Nebuchadnezzar's doom to be driven from men, until he did underſtand and embrace this truth, ſo neceſſary for all Governours to know and conſider, that, The moſt High ruleth in the Kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomſoever he will; that, His Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom, and all dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him. Promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South, but God is the Judge, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. There is no power but from God; the powers that are, are appointed by God. The judgment is God's (as Moſes ſaid in his charge to the Judges of Iſrael,) being exerciſed by his order, and in his behalf: Thus is God παντοκράτωρ, as the only abſolute Sovereign Lord, the authour and fountain of all juſt authority, the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, as the Scripture often doth ſtyle him.

Dan. 4. 25. 2. 21. 7. 27.
Pſal. 75. 6, 7.
Rom. 13. 1.
Joh. 19. 11.
Apoc. 19. 16.
Deut. 10. 17.
Pſal. 136. 3.

4. God is alſo παντοκράτωρ, as the true proprietary and juſt poſſeſſour of all things. Bleſſed be Abraham (ſaid King Melchiſedeck) of the moſt high God, Poſſeſſour of heaven and earth; and, Behold (ſaid Moſes to his people) the heaven, and the heaven of heavens is the Lord's, thy God; the earth alſo with all that is therein; and, The earth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein, for he hath founded it upon the Seas, and prepared it upon the flouds; and, The heavens, ſaith he again, are thine, the earth alſo is thine; as for the world, and the fulneſs thereof (that is, all which the world contains, all with which it is furniſhed and repleniſhed) thou haſt founded them; and, The Sea is his, and he made it, and his hands formed the dry land: all things they ſay are the goods and poſſeſſions of God; proving it from hence, that he made them, and thereby acquired a propriety in them; for there is no more evident and perfect ground of propriety than this: the products of our invention and care, the fruits of our endeavour and induſtry, even we do think that reaſonably we may call our own, and juſtly claim the enjoyment of: how much more he, that by an original, uncommunicated, independent wiſdom and power, hath contrived and produced all things? from thence ſurely do reſult ſuch a title to them all, that the entire and abſolute diſpoſal of them doth appertain to him; ſo that he may apply them, as the potter doth the veſſels which he maketh (it is the Scripture compariſon) to what uſe he thinketh good; that he may freely place and beſtow them where he pleaſeth; that he may take them away, or transfer them, when he ſeeth fit: they can never be ſo alienated from him, that the enjoyment of them doth not wholly depend on him, and that at pleaſure (his wiſdom and goodneſs permitting, his truth and word being ſolved) he may not reſume them to himſelf.

Gen. 14. 19.
Deut. 10. 14.
Pſal. 24. 1. 50. 12. 89. 11. 95. 5.
Iſa. 45. 9. 64. 8. 10. 15.
Jer. 18. 6.
Rom. 9. 21.

5. God is alſo παντοκράτωρ, as containing and comprehending all things by his immenſe preſence and infinite capacity: it is a name which the Jewiſh Doctors commonly apply to God, hamakom, the place, becauſe all things do ſubſiſt in him; he being (as S. Hierome ſpeaks) infuſed through all things, and circumfuſed about all things; ſo as to penetrate them within and to contain them without; ſo as to be within all things not included, and without all things not excluded: and, We do not (ſaith Minutius Felix) only live in the eye, but in the boſome of God. The whole world, how vaſt ſoever it ſeemeth to

המקום

In omnibus infuſus, & circumfuſus, ut cuncta penetret interior, & contineat exterior. Hier. ad Marcell. 5.

Intra omnia nec incluſus, extra omnia nec excluſus.

Non ſolum in oculis Dei, ſed in ſinu vivimus. Minut. F.

Solus eſt omnia; opus ſuum & extrà, & intrà tenet. Sen Præf. Nat. Q.

Iſa. 40. 15. 48. 13. 40. 12.

our narrow conceit, is but as a drop, or as an atome of duſt in his hand: Behold (ſaith the Prophet elegantly and truly) the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of the balance: behold he taketh up the Iſles as a very little thing; all nations are before him as nothing, and they are counted to him leſs than nothing, and vanity: and, I fill heaven and earth, ſaith God in Jeremy: and King Solomon in his prayer*ſaith more; Behold the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee: and, Whither (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſhall I go from thy Spirit, or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence; if I aſcend up into heaven thou art there, if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me.

Jer. 23. 24. 1 King. 8. 27. Pſ. 139. 7. &c.

Coloſ. 1. 17. Heb. 1. 3.

Ὅταν τῆς παντοκράτωρ φωνῆς ἀκούωμεν, τοῦτο νοοῦμεν, τὰ πάντα τὸν θεὸν ἐν τῷ εἶναι συνέχειν. Greg. Nyſſ.

Neh. 9. 6.

6. Laſtly, God is παντοκράτωρ in regard that he ſuſtains and preſerves all things. When (ſaith Saint Gregory Nyſſen) we hear the word παντοκράτωρ, we underſtand this, that God containeth all things in being: Thou, (ſay the Levites in Nehemiah,) even thou art God alone, thou haſt made heaven and earth, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſts, the earth and all things that are therein, and thou preſerveſt them all, and the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee.

In all theſe reſpects and ſenſes doth the title παντοκράτωρ (which we for want of a word more adequate and expreſſive, do render Almighty) belong to God: The Greek word in the latitude of its ſignification, according to its etymology, comprehendeth all theſe ſenſes, and the deſign in its uſe, as we before touched, warranteth the taking it in the largeſt acception; but however it certainly reſpecteth the former ſenſes, denoting the abſolute Univerſal Sovereignty, and the immenſe irreſiſtible power of God: the belief and conſideration of which particulars is of Great importance, and may have a very uſeful influence upon our practice: for,

I. If God be the Juſt Sovereign of all things, having a right to govern the World, and actually exerciſing it; then Τραχὺς μόναρχος, καὶ οὐκ ὑπεύθυνος κρατεῖ. Æſch.

1. We ſee our condition and ſtate here in this world. We live not in an anarchy, or in perfect liberty; we are not our own Maſters, or have a right to guide our actions according to our own will, or after our own fancy; but are under government; a government moſt abſolute and arbitrary; the laws whereof we may not diſpute, the proceedings whereof we cannot reſiſt. Whence

2. We underſtand our duty, that as ſubjects and vaſſals, we are obliged to render all awful reverence, worſhip and obedience to God; humbly to adore the Majeſty, readily to perform the commands, and patiently to ſubmit to the will of our great Sovereign: to conform all our actions to that heavenly law, under which we are born and live in the world. We do not (even Plutarch could tell us) come hither into life to make laws, but to obey thoſe which are appointed by God, who ordereth all things; to obſerve the decrees of deſtiny and providence.

Οὐ γὰρ νομοθετήσαντες πάρεσμεν εἰς τὸν βίον, ἀλλὰ πεισόμενοι τοῖς διατεταγμένοις ὑπὸ τῶν τὰ ὅλα πρυτανευόντων θεῶν, καὶ τοῖς τῆς εἱμαρμένης, καὶ προνοίας θεσμοῖς. Plut. Conſol. ad Apol.

3. Hence we may diſcern the heinouſneſs of every ſin, or tranſgreſſion of God's law; it receiving great aggravation hence. It hence appeareth not only a matter of ſimple folly, or private inconvenience, (contrary to our reaſon) but of publick miſchief and general ill conſequence; being committed againſt the crown and dignity of God Almighty; againſt the peace and order of the world; which ſubſiſt by the obſervation of his laws. Every ſin is an act of high rebellion, a breach of our natural allegiance, a lifting up our ſelves (as is ſaid of Belſhazzar) Num. 15. 30. againſt our Sovereign; an infringing that right, and violating Dan. 5. 20. that honour of his, which he by his place and office is concerned to maintain and vindicate.

4. We may hence learn what reaſon we have to be content in every condition, and to undergo patiently every event befalling us: for that our ſtation is allotted to us by an unqueſtionable right, and all things are diſpenſed to us by a common law, from which nothing can be exempted; for that things come not by a blind neceſſity or chance, but are diſpoſed and managed by Sovereign reaſon and wiſdom. We muſt (ſaith an Ethnick Philoſopher) not be diſpleaſed at any of theſe things; for we are come into that world, where we muſt live by theſe laws: and, A good man muſt needs be granted to be highly pious toward God; he therefore will ſuſtain all accidents with equanimity; as knowing them to happen unto him by a divine law, by which all things proceed. It were indeed intolerable arrogance and forwardneſs in us to deſire an exemption from that common law, to which all things are ſubject; to wiſh our ſelves out of that order, in which the all-guiding providence hath ſet us; to be diſſatisfied with any thing, which by the ſupreme wiſdom is aſſigned to us: It becometh us to ſay with old Eli; It is the Lord, let him doe what ſeemeth him good; to ſay upon 1 Sam. 3. 18. all occaſions with David: I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because Pſal. 39. 9. thou didſt it; upon this conſideration we ſhould not only be ſatisfied with, and acquieſce in, but praiſe and adore all occurrences of providence, how unkindly ſoever, and diſtaſteful they appear to us; ſuppoſing a juſt and reaſonable cauſe to lie under them, although indiſcernible to us. Yea farther,

Nihil horum indignandum eſt; in eum intravimus mundum, in quo his legibus vivitur. Sen. Epiſt. 91.

Virum bonum concedas neceſſe eſt ſummæ pietatis erga Deos eſſe; itaq; quicquid illi acciderit, æquo animo ſuſtinebit, ſcit enim id accidiſſe lege divinâ, quâ univerſa procedunt. Sen. Ep. 76.

Πάντα θαυμάζειν, πάντα ἐπαινεῖν, πάντα ἀνεξετάστως ἀποδέχεσθαι τὰ τῆς προνοίας ἔργα, κἂν φαίνηται πολλοῖς ἄδικα, διὰ τὸ ἄγνωστον εἶναι, καὶ ἀκατάληπτον τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν πρόνοιαν. Damaſc. de O. F. 2. 29.

5. It is a matter of great conſolation to reflect, that we and all the world are under ſuch a government; 'tis a common felicity, 'tis our particular happineſs that we are ſo; for 'tis no unjuſt uſurper, 'tis no mercileſs tyrant, 'tis no fond, no weak, no careleſs perſon that we are in ſubjection to, but a moſt juſt, moſt mild, moſt gracious, moſt wiſe, moſt powerful, moſt vigilant Lord; who will deal moſt equally, and moſt benignly with us; who ſincerely and earneſtly tenders our welfare; who is watchful and careful for our good; who is able to provide for all our needs, and to protect us from all miſchief; all whoſe laws do only aim at our benefit; all whoſe proceedings toward us are full of equity, goodneſs and truth; who will not only favourably accept, but moſt bountifully recompence our obedience; whom to ſerve and obey is a privilege, far better and more deſirable for us, than to be free, than to be wholly at our own diſpoſal, and under our own guidance; the very nature and the end of his government being only to preſerve us, and to reſcue us from the errours, the ſlaveries, the vexations and miſeries Deut. 10. 12. we are apt to incur; by virtue of whoſe univerſal dominion we are ſecured, that no malice of devil, no unjuſtice of men, no ſort of enemy whatever (excepting our own wilful diſobedience to his laws, and directions) ſhall be able to doe us harm; for all them he governs, and he curbs no leſs than our ſelves. Of this our King it is truly ſaid, that Juſtice Pſal. 89. 14. and judgment are the eſtabliſhment of his throne; mercy and truth go Pſal. 145. 17. before his face; that, He is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his Apoc. 15. 3.

Pſal. 45. 6. doings: that, The ſceptre of his kingdom is a right ſceptre; that, His Matt. 11. 30. yoke is eaſie, and his burthen light. In confidence of his protection
Pſal. 27. 1. we may ſay with the Pſalmiſt; the Lord is my light and my ſalvation, 46. 1. 56. 4. whom ſhall I fear; the Lord is the ſtrength of my life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? God is our refuge and ſtrength---- therefore will I not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midſt of the ſea. In God have I put my truſt, I will not fear what fleſh can doe unto me. Well therefore may we, may the whole world in conſideration of our being under ſo good a governour be excited to joy and jubilation Pſal. 47. 1. 96. with the Pſalmiſt; O clap your hands all ye people, ſhout unto God with 10. 98. 8. the voice of triumph; for the Lord moſt high is terrible, he is a great King over all the earth. Say among the nations, that the Lord reigneth; the world alſo ſhall be eſtabliſhed, that it ſhall not be moved, he ſhall judge the people righteouſly, let the heavens rejoyce, and let the earth be glad, &c.
Let the Floods clap their hands, let the hills be joyful together before the Lord, for he cometh to judge the earth; with righteouſneſs ſhall he judge the world, and the people with equity: Or with thoſe in the Revelation:
Revel. 19. 6. Allelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; let us be glad, and rejoyce, and give honour unto him. All the world hath exceeding reaſon not only to be content, but to rejoyce and triumph in being ſubject to ſuch a Governour, ſo able, ſo willing to maintain peace, good order, and equity therein: ſo that we alſo are obliged to bleſs and thank God, that he condeſcends ſo far, and vouchſafes to undertake the tuition and Pſal. 103. 19. overſight of the world; obeying the Pſalmiſt's exhortation; The Lord (ſaith he) hath prepared his throne in heaven, and his kingdom ruleth over all: therefore, Bleſs the Lord ye his angels--- Bleſs the Lord all his hoſts- Bleſs the Lord all his works in all places of his dominion; imitating Apoc. 11. herein thoſe Elders in the Revelation; who ſay, We give thee thanks, O
Lord God Almighty, which art, and waſt, and art to come; becauſe thou haſt taken unto thee thy great power, and haſt reigned. They who imagine the world is not governed at all, but that with unlooſed reins it runneth on at random, are very fooliſh; but more ſuch are they, who wiſh it to be ſo, and in their deſires depoſe God from his throne; for they do wiſh for anarchy and confuſion in their Country, inſtead of the moſt excellent eſtabliſhment and order, maintained by the wiſeſt and ableſt government.
That good Emperour was better adviſed, and better affected, who ſaid, What good were it for me to live in a world void of a Deity, and Providence?
and, Why ſhould I deſire to continue in ſuch a caſual jumble, and rout of things? The world, he well ſuppoſed, divine governance being excluded, would be a ſtrange diſorderly and uncomfortable place to abide in. And old Socrates, in the Phædon, diſcourſing about his departure hence, comforts himſelf in that, as he hoped, he was going thither, where the God's did preſide with a nearer inſpection, and a more apparent influence: theſe were worthy deſires, and noble hopes proceeding from natural reaſon, and moral vertue in ſuch perſons; but much more reaſon, and much greater obligation have we to be ſatisfied with, and to comfort our ſelves in the aſſurance, that all things, even at preſent, here are moderated by a ſuperintendency far more equal, and more propitious, than they could imagine or hope. Theſe, and ſuch like practical uſes the belief and conſideration of God's ſovereign authority and dominion do afford: the belief and conſideration of God's immenſe and uncontrollable power is alſo of very great importance, and influence upon practice.

Τί μοι ζῆν ἐν κόσμῳ κενῷ θεῶν, ἢ προνοίας κενῷ; Ant. 2. Sect. 11.

Τί καὶ ἐπιθυμῶ εἰκαίῳ συγκρίματι, καὶ φυρμῷ τοιούτῳ ἐνδιατρίβειν; Idem. 6. Sect. 10.

1. It ſerveth to beget in us a due awe, and dread of God: conſidering God's other attributes may breed in us a high eſteem, and hearty love of God, but the conſideration of his power is that which naturally and reaſonably produceth a great fear of him: he is moſt amiable for his goodneſs, and in regard to his wiſdom greatly venerable, but his power, arming the reſt, renders him exceedingly terrible. Hear ye this (it is ſaid in the Prophet Jeremy) O fooliſh people, and without underſtanding; fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord, will ye not tremble at my preſence, which hath placed the ſand for the bounds of the ſea, &c? and, Foraſmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in might, who would not fear thee, O thou King of nations? and, I will ſhew you (ſaith our Saviour) whom ye ſhould fear; Fear him, who after he hath killed (or who beſide killing) hath power to caſt into hell; I ſay unto you fear him: great reaſon he had ſo earneſtly to inculcate that admonition, the caſe being ſo apparent, and ſo important.

Jer. 5. 21, 22.
Jer. 10. 6, 7.
Luke 12. 5. Μετὰ τὸ ἀποκτεῖναι.

2. This point doth conſequently in high meaſure diſſuade and deter us from ſin, implying the extreme folly in committing it, and the inevitable miſchief following it. The conſideration of God's other attributes infer it to be great baſeneſs and ſtupidity to oppoſe or diſpleaſe God, but the conſideration of this demonſtrateth it to be infinite madneſs to doe ſo. For to wrong, diſhonour and diſpleaſe him, that is ſo good and beneficent to us is great diſingenuity and unworthineſs: to ſwerve from his advice and direction, who is only and perfectly wiſe is highly vain and unreaſonable; but for ſo feeble, and impotent things, as we are, to conteſt with, and withſtand, to provoke and offend omnipotency (that which with infinite eaſe can defeat and ſubdue us, can depreſs us into miſery, can cruſh us into nothing) is moſt palpably the top of inſolent wildneſs. It is Moſes his argument, whereby he preſſeth obedience to his Law: Circumciſe therefore, ſaith he, the foreskin of your heart, and be no more ſtiff-necked, for the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, and a mighty, and a terrible. 'Tis no leſs an evidently convincing, than a vehemently affecting increpation, that of S. Paul: Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie, are we ſtronger than he? and, God himſelf in Job uſeth the like ſcheme of ſpeech: Haſt thou an arm like God, and canſt thou thunder with a voice like him? if thou art as ſtrong, if thou haſt ſuch an arm, then mayſt thou perhaps dare to contend with him, and adventure to provoke him; but if thou no-wiſe art his match, if thou art infinitely ſhort of him in ſtrength, how vain and raſh a thing is it for thee to defy him thus, to enter with him into the liſts, to ſtrive and grapple with him? to doe, as the ſinner in Job is expreſſed doing: He ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God, and ſtrengtheneth himſelf againſt the Almighty. All preſumptuous ſinning is deſcribed and repreſented in Scripture as a comparing, and in effect preferring our power and force in regard to the power of God; or as a tempting God, and challenging him to battel; or as an actual coping, contention and fighting with him; ſinners as ſuch are ſtyled the adverſaries of God, and rebels againſt him; ſuch as riſe up, and lift up themſelves, and raiſe their hand againſt him; which doth either imply in them a more than Gigantick pride and arrogance in over-valuing their own power, and under-valuing the power of God (which doth alſo involve infidelity, and disbelief of God's omnipotence; for he who believeth that, cannot take himſelf for God's match, or dare to ſtruggle with him) or it argueth a moſt ſtrange inconſiderateneſs and vanity in preſuming at ſo infinite a diſadvantage, without any ground of confidence, without any hope of ſucceſs,

Deut. 10. 17.
1 Cor. 10. 22.
Job 40. 9.
Job 15. 25.

ſucceſs, to oppoſe God's will and power. Οὐ δηναιὸς, ὃς ἀθανάτοισι μάχοιτο: He is not long-lived, who fighteth with the immortals, old Homer Iſa. 49.9.10.5. could tell us; the ſame which the Prophet ſays; Woe unto him that ſtriveth with his maker. Nothing indeed can be more reaſonable, than that advice of the Preacher: Contend not with him that is mightier than thou; which in this caſe in effect is the ſame with this; Do not by ſinning offend or provoke God.

3. Whence likewiſe the conſideration of this point may diſpoſe us to weigh our counſels, and thereupon not to adventure upon any unwarrantable reſolution or deſign; there being ſo apparent reaſon to deſpair of ſucceſs, an inſuperable power, being always ready to obſtruct and croſs us in the carriage of ſuch deſigns, with whatever cunning laid, or backed with whatever might; for hence thoſe ſayings in Scripture are Iſa. 45. 23. manifeſtly verified: There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel Iſa. 54. 17. againſt the Lord: and, no weapon that is formed againſt thee ſhall proſper; Job 4. 9. Num. 14. 41. and, He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, who hath hardned Pſal. 66. 3, 7. himſelf againſt him, and proſpered?

4. It alſo likewiſe ſerveth to depreſs in us all confidence in our ſelves, and in all other things, as to any ſecurity in them, or ſuccour from them: for all things in the world, though they conſpire and combine together all their forces, will be altogether unable to ſupport us, to aſſiſt us, to defend us againſt the divine power, or indeed without it; they being all, otherwiſe than as maintained by him, infinitely feeble and frail: Though hand join in hand (that is, notwithſtanding the conjunction Prov. 11. 21. 16. 5. of all powers whatever) the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed, ſaith the Deut. 32. 39. Wiſeman: and, I kill (ſaith God) and I make alive, I wound, and I heal; Job 10. 7. 1 Sam. 2. 6. neither is there any thing that can deliver out of my hand: and, No King Pſal. 33. 16. is ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt; a mighty man is not delivered by much 146. 3. Iſa. 36. 6. ſtrength; a horſe is a vain thing for ſafety.

5. It therefore alſo may be of a ſpecial efficacy to quell and mortifie in us the vices of pride, haughtineſs, arrogance, ſelf-will, ſtubbornneſs and contumacy; ſince contemplating the power of God we cannot but perceive our ſelves to be very pitiful, impotent and inſignificant things: who without permiſſion cannot effect any thing; who cannot expect in any caſe to have our will; who have continually curbs in our mouths, and manacles on our hands; ſo that we cannot ſay or doe any thing, cannot ſo much as ſtir, or endeavour any thing, without check or con- Prov. 3. 34. troll; being under a predominant force, which always reſiſteth the proud: Iſ. 2. 11. 13. 11. under the power of him, who hath ſaid, the lofty looks of man ſhall be 24. 21. 10. 2. humbled, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be bowed down; whoſe cha- Job 40. 11, 12. racter and peculiar work it is to behold every one that is proud, and to abaſe 38. 15. him; to cauſe the arrogancy of the proud to ceaſe, and to lay low the haughtineſs of the terrible; to break the high arm, and to bring down the high Pſal. 18. 27. looks; and to ſtain the pride of all glory. Whence there is all the reaſon Iſa. 23. 9. in the world, that we ſhould obey S. Peter's injunction; to Humble our 1 Pet. 5. 6. ſelves under the mighty hand of God.

6. The conſideration of God's omnipotence ſerveth to breed and nouriſh faith in God, as to the certain performance of his word and promiſes: for let the accompliſhment of them be to appearance never ſo difficult or improbable, yet he is able to perform them, and will therefore 1 Sam. 15. 29. doe it. The ſtrength of Iſrael (as Samuel ſaid) will not lie, nor repent: Numb. 23. 19 and, Hath he ſaid it, and ſhall he not doe it; or hath he ſpoken it, and ſhall he not make good? ſaid Balaam, inſpiredly: and, The Lord of hoſts (ſaith Eſay) hath purpoſed it, and who ſhall diſannul it? his hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turn it back? and, My counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure; I have ſpoken it, I will alſo bring it to paſs; I Iſa. 46. 11.

have purpoſed, I will alſo doe it: and, My word that goeth out of my Iſa. 55. 11.
mouth, it ſhall not return unto me void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which I pleaſe; it ſhall proſper unto the thing whereunto I ſent it: and, The Pſal. 33. 11, 8.
counſel of the Lord (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of Iſa. 40. 8.
his heart to all generations: Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world ſtand in awe of him; for he ſpake, and it was done;
he commanded, and it ſtood faſt: and, Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, Mar. 13. 31.
but my words ſhall not paſs away. So doth God aſſert his immutable fidelity, Job 23. 13.
and conſidering his indefectible power doth aſſure us, that we may Prov. 19. 21.
rely upon his word; and the doing ſo is very grateful, and acceptable Jer. 4. 28.
to God; for it was that vertue, for which Abram is ſo highly commended, and ſo richly rewarded: He did not (ſaith S. Paul of him) ſtagger Rom. 4. 20, at the promiſe of God through unbelief, but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory 21.
to God; being fully perſwaded, that what God had promiſed, he was able to perform: To doe otherwiſe is very diſpleaſing and offenſive to God; for we do thereby either doubt of his veracity, ſo (as S. John ſaith) making him a liar; or we disbelieve his power, and make him impotent 1 Joh. 5. 10.
in our conceit; which to doe is high injury to God, and deteſtable ſacrilege.
Hence alſo,

7. Particularly this conſideration may produce and cheriſh our faith in the ſufficiency of God's providence, and may induce us entirely to rely upon it. For if God be omnipotent, then is he eaſily able to ſupply us in all our needs, to relieve us in all our ſtraits, to protect us from all danger and miſchief; and being able he will not fail to doe it, ſince his goodneſs alſo diſpoſeth him thereto, and his word engageth him; he having declared himſelf to be the patron, protectour and benefactour of the needy; he having promiſed to help, relieve and comfort thoſe who Pſal. 145, 146, ſeek and cry unto him. Diſtruſt in God's providence is always groun- 147, &c.
ded either in the disbelief of God's goodneſs, or of his power; either ſuppoſing him to be unwilling, or unable to doe us good; and that is commonly grounded on the latter, the Iſraelites conſtant behaviour in the wilderneſs (repreſenting the ordinary converſation of men in this world) doth inform us; who conceived their needs greater, than that God was able to ſupply them; their enemies ſtronger, than that by God's aſſiſtance they could withſtand, or ſubdue them; the obſtacles to their proceedings ſuch, that God himſelf could not carry them through them; for, as the Pſalmiſt repreſenteth their behaviour and diſcourſe; They ſpake againſt God, ſaying, Can God furniſh a table in the Pſal. 78. 19, 20.
wilderneſs? Behold he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed; can he give bread alſo, can he provide fleſh for his people? and, that from their conceiting God unable to convey them through all dangers and difficulties, to render them victorious over the tall men, and the fenced Cities of Canaan, they, notwithſtanding God's preſence with them, and ready aid, deſponded in heart, and murmured, and provoked God; and in conſequence of ſuch miſ-behaviour forfeited obtaining the reſt propounded to them, many paſſages in the ſtory do ſhew us. We in practice do commonly follow them, notwithſtanding Deut. 1. 28.
the many experiments of God's wonderful power and goodneſs, fre- Numb. 14. 9.
quently ſuſpecting that God cannot ſupply our neceſſities, or ſatisfie our Heb. 3. 18.
deſires; whence we are either over-born with anxiety, and become diſconſolate, or have recourſe for ſuccour and relief to other aids, deſerting God, as the Prophet intimates, when he (withal declaring the offence

God taketh at ſuch miſcarriages, with the guilt and miſchief we thereby incur) Jer. 17. 5, 6. pronounceth thus: Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord; for he ſhall be like the heath in the deſart, and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, &c. Whence our Saviour took it ill of his Diſciples, and rebuked them, when even in the moſt imminent and affrighting dangers they gave place to Matt. 8. 26. fear or doubt; as when in a great tempeſt, the ſhip being even covered with waves, they being afraid, cried out, Lord ſave us, we periſh; he ſaid unto them, τί δειλοί ἐστε, ὀλιγόπιστοι; Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? And when S. Peter, walking upon waves, and beginning to ſink, Matt. 14. 30, 31. his heart miſ-giving, in like manner cried out, Lord ſave me; our Lord alſo reproves him with an Ὀλιγόπιστε τί ἐδίστασας; O thou of little faith, why didſt thou doubt? whence we both learn, that it is our want or weakneſs of faith, which make us in our greateſt needs ready to ſink; and that it is not excuſable for us in the extremity of danger to doubt of God's protection and ſuccour. Farther

8. This conſideration affordeth comfort and encouragement unto us, in the undertaking and proſecution of honeſt and prudent enterpriſes, giving us to hope confidently for ſucceſs, how difficult or dangerous ſoever it appear unto us; all difficulties and improbabilities vaniſhing before that omnipotency which abetteth and backeth ſuch endeavours; the which is by faith imparted, and appropriated unto us; ſo that we Pſal. 4. 13. (with S. Paul) are able to doe all things by God ſtrengthening us. Nothing is ſo high or difficult (if juſt and reaſonable) which a reſolute faith in the divine power cannot eaſily ſurmount and atchieve: A word, ſeconded therewith, can tranſplant trees, and transfer mountains any whither: If ye (ſaith our Lord) have faith as a grain of Matt. 27. 20. Luke 10. 19. 17. 6. Mar. 11. 23. 16. 8. muſtard-ſeed, ye ſhall ſay to this mountain be thou removed hence to yonder place, and it ſhall be removed: Ye may ſay to this ſycamine tree be thou plucked up by the roots, and be thou planted in the ſea, and it ſhall obey you; καὶ οὐδὲν ἀδυνατήσει ὑμῖν, and there is nothing (adds our Saviour) Mar. 9. 23. which ſhall be impoſſible unto you; for, as he ſaith again, All things are poſſible to him that believeth; that is, unto him who relieth upon the divine power; for that the Faith he ſpeaks of referreth thither, appeareth by ſeveral like paſſages in the Goſpel; as for inſtance in that, Matt. 9. 28. whereto the blind men imploring his relief, our Lord puts this queſtion: Do ye believe that I can doe this? and they anſwering, Yes, Lord; he thereupon replies, according to your faith be it done unto you. In contemplation of this power, we may, if our duty, or good reaſon, do call us forth, how ſmall or weak ſoever in our ſelves, how deſtitute ſoever of defenſive arms, or offenſive weapons, naked and unarmed, 1 Sam. 17. 45. with a ſling and a ſtone, go out againſt the biggeſt and beſt armed Philiſtine, nothing doubtful of victory; it will be enough, if we can ſay with David: I come unto thee in the name of the Lord of hoſts; that is, confiding in his powerful help, as my invincible weapon and defence. But ſo much for this particular.

III. That notion of the word Almighty, which implieth God's being univerſal proprietary, and poſſeſſour of all things hath likewiſe many good uſes; we ſhall only name them, without enlarging upon them: We thence learn

1. That we our ſelves are not our own, and therefore ought to ſubmit our ſelves with content, and patience to God's diſpoſal; for that Matt. 20. 15. 1 Cor. 6. 20. (as it is in the Goſpel) God may do what he pleaſeth with his own. Whence alſo we are bound (as S. Paul enjoineth us) to glorifie God with our bodies and ſpirits, which are God's.

2. That alſo therefore we ought to be content with that portion of accommodations here which God alloweth us; for that ſince every thing is his, we can claim nothing to our ſelves; all we have doth proceed from mere liberality and bounty.

3. The ſame reaſon obligeth us to be ſatisfied, whenever providence withdraweth what it did afford us the enjoyment of; for God doth never ſo communicate any thing, as to deveſt himſelf of the paramount title and propriety therein; all things have an immutable relation to him as Lord, and cannot be alienated from him; whence he may juſtly, when he pleaſeth recal or reſume them into his hand.

Job 1. 21.

4. Yea hence we are obliged to be heartily thankful for all we ever have or enjoy; for that nothing is upon any account ours, or can be due to us from him; all proceeding from pure kindneſs and goodneſs.

5. We are hence obliged carefully to manage and employ all which is put into our hands; for his intereſt and ſervice; as honeſt tenants, and faithful ſtewards, making juſt returns and improvements; not embezelling, nor abuſing any of his goods committed to us.

6. Laſtly, we may learn hence to be humble and ſober; not to be conceited, or elevated in mind, or apt to glory, in regard to any thing we have; ſince we have nothing that we can juſtly eſteem, or properly call our own.

IV. That ſenſe, according to which the word doth ſignifie God's containing all things by his immenſe preſence, is alſo of moſt excellent uſe and influence upon our practice. We thereby may learn with what care and circumſpection, with what reverence and modeſty, with what innocence and integrity we ought always, and in all places, to manage our converſation and behaviour; ſince we continually do think, and ſpeak, and act in the immediate preſence, and under the inſpection of God; whoſe eyes are upon the ways of man, and he ſeeth all his goings; who ſearcheth and trieth our hearts; and poſſeſſeth our reins; who encompaſſeth our path, and is acquainted with all our ways; to whoſe eyes all things are naked and diſſected; according to the ſignificant, and emphatical expreſſions of Scripture. Did we ſtand in the ſight of our King, we ſhould not dare to behave our ſelves rudely and indecently; were a vertuous perſon conſcious of our doings, we ſhould be aſhamed to doe any baſe or filthy thing; the overſight of a grave or a wiſe perſon would reſtrain us from practiſing vanities, and impertinencies; how much more ſhould the glorious Majeſty of the moſt wiſe and holy God, being ever preſent to all our thoughts, words and actions, if duely conſidered and reflected upon, keep us within awe and compaſs? how can we, if we remember that we abide always in a temple ſanctified by God's preſence, not contain our ſelves in a careful and devout poſture of ſoul?

Job 34. 21.
Jer. 17. 10.
Pſal. 139. 3, 13, &c.
Heb. 4. 13.
Pſal. 90. 8.
Prov. 20. 27.

Πᾶς οὖν καὶ τόπος ἱερὸς τῷ ὄντι, ἐν ᾧ τὴν ἐπίνοιαν θεοῦ λαμβάνομεν, καὶ χρόνος; Clem. Alex. p. 520. vid. p. 517.

This conſideration alſo prompteth us to frequent addreſſes of prayer, thankſgiving, and all kind of adoration toward God: for all reaſon dictateth it to be unſeemly, to be in his preſence with our back turned unto him; without demonſtrations of regard and reverence to him; without anſwering him, when he ſpeaketh to us; that is, without correſponding to the invitations, which he frequently by his providence maketh to us, of converſing with him, of ſeeking his favour, and imploring his help, and returning thanks for his mercies.

V. Laſtly, the conſideration that God doth uphold all things, and conſequently our ſelves, in being, may upon ſeveral good accounts, be influential upon our practice; particularly it may powerfully deter us from offending and diſpleaſing him; for put caſe our life, our livelihood, all the conveniencies and comforts of our being ſhould wholly depend upon the bounty and pleaſure of any perſon, ſhould we not be very wary and fearful to affront, or injure, or diſpleaſe ſuch a perſon? It is in the higheſt degree ſo with us in reſpect to God; and why are we ſo inconſiderate, that the ſame reaſon hath not the ſame effect upon us?

This conſideration alſo ſhould mind us how infinitely we are obliged to the goodneſs of God, who when he may by the bare withdrawing his conſervative influence utterly deſtroy us, and ſuffer us to fall to nothing, doth notwithſtanding our many provocations, the many neglects and injuries he receiveth from us, continually preſerve us in his hand, and every moment imparteth a new being to us. For which, and all his infinite mercies and favours toward us, let us for ever yield unto him all thanks and praiſe. Amen.

Maker of Heaven and Earth.

SERMON XII.

ACT. IV. 24.

O Lord, thou art God, which haſt made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is.

IT may be demanded, why beſides that of Almighty, no other Attribute of God is expreſſed in our Creed? why for inſtance, the perfections of infinite wiſdom and goodneſs are therein omitted? I anſwer

1. That all ſuch perfections are included in the notion of a God, whom when we profeſs to believe, we conſequently do aſcribe them to him (implicitely.) For he that ſhould profeſs to believe in God, not acknowledging thoſe perfections, would be inconſiſtent and contradictious to himſelf. Deum negaret (as Tertullian ſpeaks) auferendo quod Dei eſt. He would deny God by withdrawing what belongs to God. Adv. Marc. cap. 3.

2. The title παντοκράτωρ, as implying God's univerſal providence in the preſervation and government of the world doth alſo involve or infer all divine perfections diſplayed therein; all that glorious majeſty and excellency, for which he is with higheſt reſpect to be honoured and worſhipped by us, which added to the name of God doth determine what God we mean, ſuch as doth in all perfection excel, and with it doth govern the world.

3. I may add thirdly, That the Doctrine of God's univerſal providence being not altogether ſo evident to natural light as thoſe attributes diſcovered in the making of the world (more having doubted thereof, and diſputed againſt it with much more plauſibility) it was therefore convenient to add it; as a matter of Faith clearly and fully (as we did ſhew) atteſted unto by divine Revelation. So much may ſuffice to remove ſuch a ſcruple concerning the fulneſs and ſufficiency of the Creed in that particular. I proceed,

MAKER OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

This clauſe is one of thoſe, which was of later times inſerted into the Creed; none of the moſt ancient Expoſitours thereof (Auſtin, Ruffin, Maximus Taurinenſis, Chryſologus, &c.) taking any notice thereof. But Irenæus, Tertullian, and other moſt ancient Writers in their Rules of Faith, exhibit their ſenſe thereof, and the Confeſſions of all General Councils (the Nicene, and thoſe after it) expreſs it. And there is great reaſon for it; not only thereby to diſavow and decry thoſe prodigious errours of Marcion, Manichæus and other ſuch Hereticks, which did then aſcribe the creation of the world (or of ſome parts thereof, ſeeming to their fancy leſs good and perfect) to another God or Principle inferiour in worth and goodneſs to that God which was revealed in the Goſpel; or did opinionate two Principles (not diſtinct only but contrary one to the other) from one whereof good things did proceed, from the other bad things were derived: But for that the creation of the world (which the holy Confeſſors of Chriſt do here in the Text aſcribe unto God) is that peculiarly auguſt and admirable work, by which we learn that He is, and in good meaſure what He is; by which, I ſay, the exiſtence of God is moſt ſtrongly demonſtrated, and in which his divine perfections are moſt conſpicuouſly diſplayed; which is the prime foundation of his authority over the world, and conſequently the chief ground of all natural Religion; of our juſt ſubjection, our reaſonable duty, our humble devotion toward him: the title, Creatour of heaven and earth, is that alſo, which moſt eſpecially characterizes and diſtinguiſhes the God whom we believe and adore from all falſe and fictitious Deities; for, as the Pſalmiſt ſings, All the gods of the nations are but idols, Pſal. 96. 5.
but the Lord made the heavens: and, Thou (prayeth Hezekiah) art the 2 King. 19.
God, thou alone of all the kingdoms of the earth, thou haſt made heaven 15, 19.
and earth: and, The gods (ſaith the Prophet Jeremy) that have not Jer. 10. 11.
made the heavens and the earth, they ſhall periſh from the earth, and from under the heavens: and, We preach unto you (ſaid S. Paul to the ignorant Lycaonians) that ye ſhould turn from thoſe vanities unto the living Act. 14. 15.
God, which made heaven and earth. It is therefore a point, which wor- 17. 24.
thily hath been inſerted into all Creeds, and Confeſſions of our Faith, as a neceſſary object of our belief, and 'tis indeed a ſubject no leſs wholſome and fruitful, than high and noble; deſerving that we employ our beſt thoughts, and moſt careful attention upon it: to the commemoration thereof God conſecrated the great Sabbatical Feſtivity among his ancient people; nor ſhould even the conſideration of the great works concerning our Redemption aboliſh the remembrance of it: to confer ſome advantage thereto, we ſhall now ſo diſcourſe thereon, as firſt to propound ſome Obſervations explicative thereof, and conducing to our information about it, then to apply the conſideration thereof to practice.

We may firſt obſerve, that the ancient Hebrews, having as it ſeems in their Language no one word properly ſignifying the World, or univerſal frame and complexe of things created (that Syſteme, as the Author de Mundo defines it, conſiſting of heaven and earth, and the natures contained in them) did for to expreſs it uſe a collection of its chief parts (chief abſolutely in themſelves, or ſuch in reſpect to us) the heaven, and the earth, adding ſometimes, becauſe of the word earth its ambiguity, the ſea alſo: yea ſometimes, for fuller explication, ſubjoining to heaven its hoſt, to earth its fulneſs, to the ſea its contents. So, In ſix days the Lord made heaven and earth, ſaith Moſes: and, Do not I fill heaven and earth, ſaith the Lord? (in Jeremy:) and, It is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, than for one tittle of the law to fail, ſaith our Saviour: and, God, ſaith S. Paul, who made the world, and all things therein, ſeeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth (where the World, and all things therein do ſignifie the ſame with heaven and earth; he firſt uſes the word (world) which the Greek language afforded, then adds the circumlocution, whereby the Hebrews did expreſs it.) By heaven and earth therefore we are, I ſay, to underſtand thoſe two regions ſuperiour and inferiour, into which the whole ſyſteme of things is divided, together with all the Beings that do reſide in them, or do belong unto them, or are comprehended by them; as we ſee fully expreſſed in our Text, and otherwhere; particularly with utmoſt diſtinction by the Angel in the Apocalypſe: who ſwears by him that liveth for ever, who created the heaven, and the things that are therein; and the earth with the things that therein are, and the ſea with the things therein.

σύστημα ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ γῆς, καὶ τῶν ἐν τούτοις περιεχομένων φύσεων. de M. 2. Lipſ. Phyſ. St. 2. 7.
Gen. 1. 1.
Jer. 23. 24.
Luke 16. 17.
Act. 17. 24.
Pſal. 69. 34.
Neh. 9. 6.
Exod. 20. 11.
2 Kin. 19. 15.
Iſa. 42. 5.
Revel. 10. 16.

By heaven then is underſtood all the ſuperiour Region encompaſſing the Globe of earth, and from it on all ſides extended to a diſtance unconceivably vaſt and ſpacious, with all its parts and furniture, and inhabitants; not only ſuch things in it as are viſible and material, but alſo thoſe which are immaterial and inviſible; ſo we are plainly taught by S. Paul: By him (ſaith he) were created all things, which are in heaven, and which are in earth, both thoſe that are viſible, and thoſe that are inviſible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, all things were created by him, and for him; that is, not only the material and ſenſible parts, or contents of heaven (thoſe bright and beautiful lamps expoſed to our view, with the fluid matter in which they may be conceived to float or ſwim) but thoſe Beings of a more pure and refined ſubſtance, and thence indiſcernible to our ſenſe, however eminent in nature, mighty in power, exalted in dignity, whoſe ordinary reſidence and proper habitation (their ἴδιον οἰκητήριον, as S. Jude termeth it) is in thoſe ſuperiour Regions; in that they are Courtiers and domeſtick Officers of God (whoſe throne, and ſpecial preſence, or the place where he more peculiarly and amply diſcovereth himſelf, and diſplayeth his glory, is in heaven) attending upon him, and miniſtring to him; encircling his throne (as it is in the Revelation) and always (as our Saviour telleth us) beholding his face; Even theſe all were made by God: The time indeed when, and the manner how thoſe inviſible ſublime creatures were made, is not in the hiſtory of the Creation, or otherwhere manifeſtly expreſſed (becauſe perhaps it doth exceed the capacity, or doth not ſute the condition of man to underſtand them; or becauſe it doth not much concern us, or not much conduceth to our edification to know them) but that they were made by God,

Coloſ. 1. 16.
Jud. 6.
Heb. 1. 14.
Dan. 7. 10.
Pſal. 103. 21.
Rev. 5. 11.
Matt. 18. 10.

The Greek Fathers commonly (and S. Hierom after them) conceived they were made before the creation of this material world: S. Auſtin thinks them meant under Fiat lux. De Civ. D. 11. 9.

Διὰ τὸ τοῖς εἰσαγομένοις ἔτι καὶ νηπίοις κατὰ τὴν γνῶσιν ἀνεπιτήδειον. Baſ. hexem. 1.

Φῶτα δεύτερα τοῦ πρώτου φωτὸς ἀπαυγάσματα. Naz. Orat. 43.

God, and that when we call God the maker of heaven they are comprehended, as the creatures of God, dwelling there, is evidently declared in Scripture: for beſide the fore-mentioned clear and full place of S. Paul, the Angel forecited in the Revelation ſaith, that God created the heaven, ϗ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ, and the things in it; and in our Text, it is ſaid that God made heaven and all things in it (πάντα τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ) which plainly includeth the Angels; if all things in it, then ſurely the Angels, who are often expreſſed to be in heaven, being indeed the principal, and moſt conſiderable things therein. And, Thou haſt made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their hoſt (pray the Levites in Nehemiah) where according to the Jews notion, who ſay there are three heavens; Cœlum nubiferum, or the Firmament; Cœlum aſtriferum, the (ſtarry) Heavens; Cœlum angeliferum, or the Heaven of Heavens; where the Angels reſide (the third heaven in S. Paul;) by the hoſts of heaven, are meant the Angels; as alſo the hoſts of God do ſeem to ſignifie in the 103. Pſalm; where 'tis ſaid, Bleſs the Lord ye his angels, that excel in ſtrength; that doe his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word; Bleſs ye the Lord all his hoſts, ye miniſters of his, that doe his pleaſure. Whence they are termed the ſons of God; as where in Job 'tis ſaid, There was a day, when the ſons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord; and in ſeveral other places: And S. Jude telleth us of the laps'd Angels, that they did not retain τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, their beginning, or primitive ſtate; wherefore they had a beginning, and whence could they have that, but from God; who alone is eternal (who alone originally, intrinſecally and neceſſarily hath, as S. Paul ſaith, immortality; and conſequently alone, [as Ariſtotle by ſeveral arguments proveth againſt Plato,] hath eternity. The Angels alſo are ſubject to God's juriſdiction and governance, which argueth their proceeding from him, and dependence upon him; In fine the Pſalmiſt reckons them among the works of God; for having ſaid, Bleſs the Lord, ye his angels; and, Bleſs the Lord all ye his hoſts, he recapitulating and concluding ſubjoins, Bleſs the Lord all his works in all places of his dominion; and again, in the 148. Pſalm, ſummoning all the creation to a conſort of doxology, he begins with the heavens, then proceeds to the earth, making a very particular recitation of the chief parts and inhabitants belonging to each; and in the firſt place mentioning the angels, then the ſtars, then the heaven of heavens; he ſubjoineth the reaſon why they ought all to praiſe God: Let them (ſaith he) praiſe the name of the Lord, for he commanded, and they were created, he hath alſo eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever; he hath made a decree, which ſhall not paſs. Thus we are by divine revelation inſtructed concerning the exiſtence and original of thoſe heavenly inviſible beings, to the knowledge of whom, that they are, what they are, whence they are natural light could not reach; although from the reliques of primitive Tradition even the Pagans themſelves commonly in part did acknowledge this truth, calling all the inferiour or ſecondary Gods; whom they conceived to converſe together happily (ἐν τῷ ἀνωτάτω τόπῳ) in the higheſt place above (as Ariſtotle ſaith) in ſubjection to God, and attendance on him, the children of the Supreme God; Plato calls God Πατέρα ϗ δημιουργὸν, the Father, and framer of them all, according (as he avoweth himſelf) to ancient Tradition. And thus concerning thoſe Beings piety doth oblige us to believe and profeſs that God is their maker, it eſpecially conducing to his glory to believe, that he is the authour of their ſublime natures, and donour of thoſe excellent properties, with which they are endowed, and wherein they ſo far ſurpaſs all other Beings.

Apoc. 10. 6.
Marc. 12: 25. 13. 32, &c.
Neh. 9. 6.
2 Cor. 12.
Pſ. 103 20, 21.
Job 2. 1. 38. 7: Pſ. 89. 6. 29. 1.
Jud. 6.
1 Tim. 6. 16.
Ariſt. de Cœlo, 1. cap. ult.
Pſal. 103. 20, &c.
Ariſt. de Cœlo, 1. 3.
Polit. 1. 1.
Plato in Tim.

As for all other things both in heaven and earth, the material frame of the viſible world, with all its parts compacted together in ſo fair, ſo fit, ſo firm and ſtable an order, they (as we have ſometime ſufficiently diſcourſed) even to natural underſtanding ſpeak themſelves to have been produced by a moſt wiſe, moſt powerful, moſt beneficent authour, that is by God; the which is confirmed by innumerable teſtimonies of holy Writ, ſo evident and obvious, that we need not to cite them; and to thus much the generality of mankind hath always conſented; as alſo the moſt and beſt reputed Philoſophers did in general terms avow it, acknowledging God the authour and builder of the World.

But there is one particular, wherein they ſeem unanimouſly to have diſſented from what Chriſtian piety inclines us to acknowledge, as moſt ſutable to the divine perfection and Majeſty; which concerns the origine of that matter, of which corporeal things do ſubſiſt. For even Plato himſelf, who ſo poſitively doth aſſert the world to have been framed by God, is yet conceived (I ſpeak ſo dubiouſly, becauſe his writings about this point are ſomewhat obſcure, and as Juſtin Martyr proves, inconſiſtent with themſelves) to ſuppoſe the matter of things to be eternal; he aſcribing only to God the forming and diſpoſing it into a good order, anſwerable to ſome patterns pre-exiſtent in his wiſe underſtanding; even as a good Artiſt doth out of an unſhapen lump of ſtuff frame a handſome piece of work, conformable to ſome Idea (or image) pre-conceived in his fancy: ſo that he repreſents God, rather as a builder out of prepared materials, than as a Creatour of the World: Socrates and Plato (ſaith * Plutarch) did ſuppoſe three principles of things, God, Matter, Idea; God is the mind; Matter the firſt ſubject of generation and corruption; Idea an incorporeal ſubſiſtence in the conceptions of God. Anaxagoras alſo, as the ſame Authour (and Ariſtotle before him) telleth us, did aſſert two Principles; the one paſſive, the matter conſiſting of an infinite number of ſmall particles like to one another in ſhape; the other active, underſtanding, which ranged thoſe troops of little bodies into order: to the ſame effect Pythagoras his conceits, though expreſſed with much obſcurity are reduced. Thales his opinion was in effect the ſame, who (as Cicero telleth us) ſaid, that water was the principle of things, and God that mind, which faſhioned all things out of water. *The Stoicks alſo were of the ſame opinion: It ſeems to them (ſaith Laertius in Zeno's life) that there are two principles of all things, the agent, and the patient; that the patient is the matter void of qualities, but the agent, reaſon which is therein, that is God. † Tertullian againſt Hermogenes ſaith, that he did take from the Stoicks to place matter with God; which matter did always exiſt, being neither born nor made, and no-wiſe having either beginning or end, out of which afterward the Lord made all things: And ‖Come now (ſaith the ſame Father in his Book againſt the Valentinians) let the Pythagoreans learn, let the Stoicks acknowledge, and even Plato himſelf, whence matter, whom they would have unmade, did draw its

both

Tim. p. 1058. Juſt. Mart. Cohort. 1. ad Græc. p. 8.

Ut igitur faber, cùm quid ædificaturus eſt, non ipſe facit materiam, ſed ea utitur, quæ ſit parata, fictorque item cerâ; ſic iſti providentiæ divinæ materiam præſtò eſſe oportuit, non quam ipſe faceret, ſed quam haberet paratam. Cic. apud Lact. 2. pag. 180.

Quibus oculis intueri potuit veſter Plato fabricam illam tanti operis; quâ conſtrui à Deo, atque ædificari mundum facit? Cic. de N. D. &c.

* Plut. de placitis 1. 3.

*Ἀναξαγόρας τε γὰρ μηχανῇ χρῆται τῷ νῷ πρὸς κοσμοποιΐαν. Ariſt. Met. 1,4.

Thales aquam dixit eſſe initium rerum, Deum autem eſſe mentem, qua ex aqua cuncta fingeret. D. N. D. 1.

* Δοκεῖ δὲ αὐτοῖς ἀρχὰς εἶναι τῶν ὅλων δύο· τὸ ποιοῦν καὶ τὸ πάσχον· τὸ μὲν οὖν πάσχον εἶναι τὴν ἄποιον ὕλην τὸ δὲ ποιοῦν τὸν ἐν αὐτῇ λόγον τὸν θεόν. Laert. in Zen. Lipſ. in Phyſ. Sen. Ep. 65.

† Sumpſit à Stoicis materiam cum Domino ponere, quæ & ipſa ſemper fuerit neque nata, neque facta, nec initium habens omninò, nec finem, ex quo Dominus omnia poſteà fecerit. Tertul. in Herm. 1.

‖ Age nunc diſcant Pythagorici agnoſcant Stoici, Plato ipſe, unde materia, quam innatam volunt & originem & ſubſtantiam traxerit in omnem hanc ſtruem mundi. Adv. Valent. 15.

Vid. Athenag. leg. pag. 19.

both origine and ſubſtance toward all this ſtructure of the world. Yea Ariſtotle tells us, that generally all natural Philoſophers before him did conceive, and did aſſume it for a principle; that nothing was made out of nothing, or that every thing produced had neceſſarily ſome pre-exiſtent matter, out of which it was produced: It is (ſaith he) the common opinion of naturaliſts, that nothing can be made out of nothing; and, That it is impoſſible, that any thing ſhould proceed from nothing, all that have ſtudied about nature do conſent: which principle Ariſtotle himſelf not only admits, but extends farther, affirming it impoſſible that any thing ſhould be produced out of matter not pre-diſpoſed to admit the form, which is to be produced; οὐδὲ γίνεται ὅτι ἂν ἐξ ὅτου ἂν, Neither can (ſaith he) every thing be made of every thing, but of ſome ſubject fitted thereto, (or ſuſceptive thereof) as animals, and plants out of their ſeed. Which principles deduced from the obſerving natural effects, or works of art performed always by alterations, additions, ſubtractions or tranſpoſitions of ſome matter ſubjacent, we may ſafely in reſpect only to ſuch kinds of effects, proceeding in the ordinary courſe of nature, admit; allowing no natural agent; no created artificer ſufficient to produce any thing without ſome matter or ſubject aptly qualified and prepared to receive its influence; but from hence to conclude univerſally, that every action poſſible doth require a matter pre-exiſtent, or a pre-diſpoſed ſubject, is no-wiſe reaſonable: becauſe ſuch a thing doth not uſually according to the courſe of nature happen; becauſe there is no cauſe obvious that can perform ſo much; becauſe we are not acquainted with the manner or way of doing ſuch a thing, that therefore the thing is in it ſelf abſolutely impoſſible, is no warrantable argumentation: No Logick will allow us from particular experiments to eſtabliſh general concluſions, eſpecially ſuch as do concern the determination of what is abſolutely impoſſible; that muſt be fetched from abſtracted notions of reaſon, not from ſingular appearances to ſenſe; there may be for all that we (we pitifully ſhort-ſighted creatures in this our dark ſtate) can by any means know, agents of another ſort, and powers in manner of efficacy much differing from all thoſe which come within the narrow compaſs of our obſervation. Eſpecially to imagine, that the ſupreme Being, who made the world in a manner, whatever that manner were, incomprehenſible, cannot himſelf act otherwiſe than we ſee theſe inferiour things (not only infinitely lower in degree, but wholly different in nature) do act, is groſly vain and unreaſonable: It is impoſſible (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom well) for man's nature by curious inquiry to penetrate the workmanſhip of God. From ſenſe or experience then ſuch concluſions cannot well be derived; it aſſures us that ſome effects are poſſible, but cannot help us to determine what is impoſſible. Neither are there any certain principles of reaſon, from whence it may be collected, that it is impoſſible, that ſome ſubſtances ſhould be totally produced de novo, or receive completely an exiſtence, which they had not before: That no ſuch principles are innate to our minds (if indeed there be at all any innate principles, which ſome Philoſophers deny) every man's experience can tell him: neither do theſe Philoſophers alledge any ſuch; nor (as we before ſhewed) can any ſuch be drawn from experience. If they ſay, the propoſition is αὐτόπιστος, or evidently credible of it ſelf, without any proof,

Κοινὴ δόξα τῶν φυσικῶν οὐδὲν γίγνεσθαι ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος.--Τὸ γιγνόμενον ἐκ τῶν μὴ ὄντων γίγνεσθαι ἀδύνατον· περὶ γὰρ ταύτης ὁμογνωμονοῦσι τῆς δόξης πάντες οἱ περὶ φύσεως. Phyſ. 1. 4. 8. Vid. de Gener. & Corrup. 1. 3. & Metaph. 1. 1, 3.

Phyſ. 1. 9.

Ἀεὶ ἐστί τι ὃ ὑπόκειται, ἐξ οὗ γίγνεται τὸ γιγνόμενον, οἷον τὰ φυτὰ καὶ τὰ ζῶα ἐκ σπέρματος. Phyſ. 1. 8.

Erit aliquid quod aut ex nihilo oriatur, aut in nihilum ſubitò occidat; quis hoc Phyſicus dixit unquam? Cic. de Divin. 2.

Ἀδύνατον τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δημιουργίαν περιεργάζεσθαι. Chryſ. in Gen. λογ. ϛ.

proof, 'tis a precarious and groundleſs aſſertion; ſuch as ought not to be admitted in any ſcience, or any diſceptation; except they can ſhew that the terms of theſe propoſitions (or of the like equivalent ones.) A ſubſtance is producible altogether de novo; A ſubſtance may exiſt, which did not exiſt; Something may be produced out of nothing, do involve a contradiction; which it rather is evident they do not, there being nothing contained in the notion of ſubſtance inconſiſtent with ſuch a producibility, or with novity of exiſtence; no more than there is in the notion of figure, or of motion, which things no man hardly denies to receive a new exiſtence. In fine, nothing is more reaſonable than to confeſs, that our reaſon can no-wiſe reach the extent of all powers, and all poſſibilities; and that we much (as Saint Chryſoſtome ſpeaks) do tranſgreſs our meaſures and bounds, if we pretend to know what things God is able to produce, or how he doth produce any: His works (as Lactantius ſpeaketh) are ſeen with eyes, but how he made them, the mind it ſelf cannot ſee. Thoſe opinions therefore of the ancient Philoſophers, that the matter of the world (or of natural things) was eternal and neceſſarily pre-exiſtent; and that there could be no creation out of nothing, were aſſumed altogether without any clear or ſure foundation. We may ſay unto them, as our Lord did once ſay to the Sadduces, Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. The poverty, and narrowneſs of man's natural underſtanding (not going uſually beyond matters obvious to ſenſe) and their inability by the meanneſs of their reaſon to look up to the height of truth, did (as S. Baſil ſays) deceive them. And that theſe opinions (revived and embraced by divers perſons in our days) are falſe, and contrary to our Faith, that in truth all the matter of things both could be, and really was created by God, may from ſeveral reaſons appear:

Ὑπερβαίνειν οἰκεῖον μέτρον. Chryſ.

—hòc eſt modum conditionis ſuæ tranſgredi, nec intelligere quouſque homini liceat accedere. Lact.

Opera ipſius videntur oculis, quomodò autem illa fecerit, nè mente quidem videtur. Lact. 2.

Matt. 22. 29.

Ἐξηπάτησεν αὐτοὺς τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως ἡ πενία-- οὐ δυνηθέντες διὰ λογισμῶν ταπεινότητα πρὸς τὸ ὕψος ἀπιδεῖν τῆς ἀληθείας. Baſ. hexaem. hom. 6.

1. It is often in general terms affirmed in Scripture, that God did make all things; all things in heaven and earth: Now it is unſafe, and never without urgent reaſon allowable, to make limitations or reſtrictions of univerſal propoſitions, eſpecially of ſuch as are frequently and conſtantly thus ſet down: And, like as S. Paul ſomewhere diſcourſes; becauſe it is ſaid in the Prophets, Every one that believeth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed; and, whoſoever ſhall call upon the Lord, ſhall be ſaved; therefore both Jews and Greeks, in caſe of their belief and invocation of God, are capable of acceptance and ſalvation; οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολή, for that there is no diſtinction or exception made: So it being ſaid univerſally, and unlimitedly, that all things were made, and no reaſon appearing which compells to reſtrain that univerſality, therefore the matter of things was alſo made; the matter being one thing, yea in the opinion of moſt Philoſophers, as well ancient as modern, the principal thing, the only ſubſtantial thing in nature; all other things being only modes, affections or relations thereof. Whence Ariſtotle telleth us, that moſt of the firſt Philoſophers did affirm nothing at all really to be made, and nothing ever to be deſtroyed; becauſe matter did always ſubſiſt and abide the ſame, as if no other thing beſide in nature had any being conſiderable. If God therefore did not produce matter it ſelf, he could hardly be accounted authour of any thing in nature, ſo far would he be from being truly affirmed the maker of all things: Upon this ground

Rom. 10. 11, &c.

Ariſt. Phyſ. 1. 8. Metaph. 1. 3.

Cicero (as Lactantius cites him) denied that God was the Authour of any of the Elements: It is not probable, ſaid he, that the matter, whence all things did ariſe, was made by divine Providence; and, if matter was not made by God, then neither earth, nor water, nor air, nor fire were made by him; to invert which diſcourſe, we ſay, that God did make all theſe things (Earth, Sea, Fire and Air) as the Holy Scripture frequently aſſerts, wherefore the matter of them was alſo his work: he was not only (as S. Baſil ſpeaks) an inventour of figures (or a raiſer of motions) but the maker of nature it ſelf; and of all that is ſubſtantial therein.

Primum igitur non eſt probabile eam materiam rerum unde orta ſunt omnia, eſſe divinâ Providentiâ effectam, ſed habere & habuiſſe vim, & naturam ſuam: ----Quòd ſi non eſt à Deo materia facta, nè terra quidem, & aqua, & aër, & ignis à Deo factus eſt. Cic. apud Lactant. 2. pag. 150.

Ὁ θεὸς---- οὐχὶ σχημάτων ἐστιν εὑρετὴς ἀλλ' αὐτῆς τῆς φύσεως τῶν ὄντων δημιουργός. Baſ. hex. 6.

2. Again, God is in Scripture affirmed to be the true proprietary, and poſſeſſour of all things, none excepted; how ſo, if he did not make them? for, He that did not make, cannot (as J. Martyr argues) have any right to that which is not made. It is the argument, by which the Scripture frequently proves God to be the owner, and diſpoſer of things, becauſe he made them: The earth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof, the world, and they that dwell therein; for he hath founded it upon the ſeas, and prepared it upon the floods. So, becauſe (we may ſay) he did produce matter, and doth ſuſtain its being; therefore he (by the moſt excellent ſort, and upon the beſt ground of right) doth own it, and may juſtly uſe it at his pleaſure; otherwiſe might we not ſay with Tertullian? If God did not make matter, he uſing a thing not his own, becauſe not made by him, either he uſed it precariouſly as needing it, or injuriouſly, as uſurping upon it by force.

Τῷ γὰρ μὴ πεποιηκότι οὐδεμία ἐξουσία πρὸς τὸ μὴ γεγονός. Juſt. M. Cohort ad Gr. 1. p. 22.

Pſal. 24. 1.
Gen. 14. 19.
Deut. 10. 14.

---- de alieno uſus aut precariò uſus eſt, quà egens ejus, aut in juriâ, quà prævalens ejus. Tert. adv. Hermog. 9.

3. The ſuppoſing any thing to be eternal, uncreated, and independent upon God doth advance that Being in thoſe reſpects unto an equality with God, imparting thereto ſo great and divine Attributes: It will become (as S. Baſil ſaith) God's peer, or equal in dignity, being dignified with the ſame privileges. That ſuppoſition likewiſe in effect depriveth God of thoſe ſpecial perfections, Independency, and All-ſufficiency; making him in his operations, and performances to depend upon, and to be in a manner ſubject unto matter; to need its concourſe; and to be unable to perform any thing farther than it admits: for, None (as Tertullian diſcourſeth) is free from needing that, whoſe ſtock he uſeth; none is exempt from ſubjection to that, which he needs that he may uſe; and none, who lends of his own to uſe, is not in this ſuperiour to him, to whom he lends it for uſe: the very doubting about this made Seneca put ſuch abſurd, and impious queſtions, as theſe: How God's power is limited; whether he effects whatever he pleaſeth, or is diſappointed by want of matter; whether he doth not form many things ill, not from defect of art in himſelf, but from diſobedience of the ſubject-matter: which queſtions we eaſily reſolve by ſaying, Nothing is impoſſible to God; his will can never be croſſed, or diſappointed; he can never doe any thing bad, or imperfect in its kind; becauſe he createth matter it ſelf, anſwerable to his deſign.

Ὁμότιμος ἔσται, θεῷ τῶν αὐτῶν πρεσβείων ἀξιουμένη.

Nemo non eget eo, de cujus utitur; nemo non ſubjicitur ei, cujus eget ut poſſit uti; & nemo qui præſtat de ſuo uti non in hoc ſuperior eſt eo, cui præſtat uti. Tert. adv. Herm. 4, 5.

Quantum Deus poſſit; materiam ipſe ſibi formet; an data utatur; utrum idea materiæ priùs ſuperveniat, an materia ideæ; Deus quicquid vult efficiat, an in multis rebus illum tractanda deſtituant; & à magno artifice pravè formentur multa, non quia ceſſat ars, ſed quia id in quo exercetur ſæpe inobſequens arti eſt. Sen. præf. Nat. Qu.

4. As Ariſtotle well diſcourſed againſt the ancient Philoſophers, who before Anaxagoras did aſſign but one Principle of things, a material and paſſive one, as if no active principle were required; ſo may we argue againſt him, and them together. If God did produce, and inſert an active principle into nature (as who can imagine thoſe admirable works of nature, the ſeminal propagation, and nutrition of plants, and however more eſpecially the generation, motion, ſenſe, fancy, appetite, paſſion of animals to be accompliſhed by a mere paſſive agitation of matter, without ſome active principle diſtinct from matter, which diſpoſeth, and determineth it to the production of ſuch effects?) if God could, I ſay, produce, and inſert ſuch an active Principle (ſuch an ἐντελέχεια, as the Philoſopher calleth it), why might he not as well produce a paſſive one, ſuch as the matter is? what greater difficulty could he find in doing it?

5. Yea farther, If God hath produced immaterial beings, or ſimple, and uncompounded ſubſtances diſtinct from matter, ſuch as Angels, and the ſouls of men, merely out of nothing (for out of what preexiſtent ſtuff could they be made?) then may he as well create matter out of nothing; for what greater difficulty can we conceive in creating ſo much lower, and more imperfect a thing, than in creating thoſe more excellent ſubſtances, ſo much fuller as it were of entity, or ſo far more removed from nothing? if any one thing is producible out of nothing, why may not all things capable of exiſtence be ſo produced by a competent, and omnipotent virtue? Why not (as Tertullian argued) all things out of nothing, if any thing out of nothing; except if the divine virtue, which drew ſomewhat out of nothing, was inſufficient to produce all things thence? But that ſuch immaterial ſubſtances were produced by God, we before from many plain teſtimonies of divine revelation did ſhew: and particularly the ſouls of men are produced from God's breath, or by the efficacy of his word.

Cur non omnia ex nihilo, ſi aliquid ex nihilo; niſi ſi inſufficiens fuit divina virtus omnibus producendis, quæ aliquid protulerit ex nihilo? Tertull. adv. Herm. 15.

6. The manner of God's making the world expreſs'd in Scripture, by mere will and command, (He ſpake, and it was done; he commanded, and it ſtood faſt; he commanded, and they were created) that only by uttering the word fiat (not audibly, but mentally, that is by an act of volition) all things ſhould be formed and conſtituted in their ſpecifical natures and perfections, doth argue, that matter, or any other thing poſſible, might eaſily by the divine power be produced out of nothing. Likewiſe effecting miracles ſuperiour, or contrary to the law and courſe of nature, without any preparatory diſpoſitions induced into the ſuſcipient matter, in the ſame manner, by mere willing, ſaying, or commanding, whereof there be in the Scripture frequent inſtances, doth perſuade the ſame; θέλω, καθαρίσθητι, I will, be thou cleanſed: Woman, great is thy faith, γενηθήτω σοι, ὡς θέλεις, be it to thee, as thou deſireſt: νεανίσκε, σοὶ λέγω ἐγέρθητι, young man, I ſay to thee, Wake, from the ſleep of death; So did our Saviour ſpeak, and the effect immediately followed; whereby as he demonſtrated his divine power, ſo he declared the manner whereby divine power doth incomprehenſibly operate in the production of things; and that it therein no-wiſe dependeth upon matter: for it is no-wiſe harder, or more impoſſible to produce matter it ſelf, than to produce a form therein without, or againſt an aptitude to receive it: nay it ſeemeth more difficult to raiſe children unto Abraham out of ſtones, than to draw them out of nothing;

Pſal. 33. 9.
148. 5.

Luke 5. 13.
Matt. 15. 28.
Luke 7. 14.

Matth. 3. 9.

nothing; there being a poſitive obſtacle to be removed, here no apparent reſiſtance; there as well ſomewhat preceding to be deſtroyed, as ſomewhat new to be produced, here only ſomewhat ſimply to be produced: eſpecially conſidering, as we ſaid, that God uſeth no other means, inſtruments or applications in theſe productions, than his bare word or command; which there is no reaſon, why we ſhould not conceive as able immediately to make the matter, as to produce the forms of things.

7. Laſtly, The Holy Text, deſcribing the manner and order of the creation, doth inſinuate this truth. The Scripture (ſaith Tertullian well) doth firſt pronounce the earth to be made, then ſetteth out its quality; as likewiſe firſt profeſſing the heaven made, it in the ſequel doth ſuperinduce its diſpoſition. In the beginning (ſaith Moſes) God made heaven and earth; now the earth was without form; that is, it ſeems, God at firſt did make the matter of heaven and earth devoid of all form and order, a confuſed and unſhapen maſs; then he digeſted, and diſtinguiſhed the parts of them, by ſeveral ſteps orderly raiſing thence all thoſe various kinds, and well arrayed hoſts of goodly creatures: Firſt he made the ſtones and timber, and all requiſite materials, then did he rear and frame this ſtately fabrick: So the words do ſound, and may well be underſtood.

Scriptura terram primò factam edicit, dehinc qualitatem ipſius ediſſerit; ſicut & cœlum primò factum profeſſa dehinc diſpoſitionem ejus ſuperinducit. Tertull. contra Hermog. 26.

Τὴν ὕλην ϖρουποστήσας εἰδοποίησεν ὕστερον, ἑκάστῳ τάξιν ϗ σχῆμα, ϗ μέγεθος ϖεριθείς. Greg. Naz. Or. 43.

From theſe Premiſſes we may conclude, againſt thoſe Philoſophers, who deſtitute of the light of revelation did conceit otherwiſe, and againſt thoſe Chriſtians, who have followed the Philoſophers (as Hermogenes of old, and Volkelius of late, together with the Sectatours of their opinions) that God did create (in the moſt ſtrict and ſcholaſtical ſenſe of that word, did create) that is, either immediately, or mediately did produce out of nothing, or did beſtow entirely a new exiſtence unto every thing, which is, not excepting any one; and that is the ſenſe of the words, having Made heaven and earth; or of the Title, Maker of heaven and earth aſcribed unto God.

Which Title as all ſober Chriſtians have always acknowledged, and the holy Oracles do moſt plainly avouch due to the one true God alone (for, To us there is but one God, the Father, from whom are all things) 1 Cor. 8. 6. ſo there were divers Hereticks of old, Marcion and others of the Gnoſtick crew, who contradicted it; affirming that the God of the Old Teſtament, who made the world, and enacted the ancient Law, whom Moſes and the Prophets did declare, was not the ſame God with him, from whom the Goſpel proceeded, and who preached therein; the Moſaick God being a worſe condition'd God, fierce and rigid, angry and implacable, delighting in wars and miſchiefs; but the Evangelical God, the Father of our Lord, being mild and gentle; void of all wrath and ſpleen; very indulgent and beneficent: Of kin to that fancy of Marcion was the errour of the Manichees; who ſuppoſed two firſt cauſes of things; from one whereof good, from the other evil did fatally proceed; which conceit it ſeems they drew from the Perſian, Egyptian, or other Ethnical Doctrines; the which we have recited by Plutarch in his diſcourſe

Prædicat hic duos eſſe Patres, diviſáque regna:
Eſſe mali cauſam Dominum, qui condidit orbem;
Quique figuravit carnem ſpiramine vivam;
Quíque dedit legem, & vatum qui voce locutus;
Hunc negat eſſe bonum, juſtum tamen eſſe fatetur,
Crudelem, durum, belli cui ſæva voluptas,
Judicio horrendum, precibus manſueſcere nullis:
Eſſe alium ſuàdens, nulli qui cognitus unquam;
Hunc ait eſſe bonum, nullum qui judicat æquè,
Sed ſpargit cunctis vitam, non invidet ulli.

Adv. Marc. Poëm. 1.

Plut. de Iſide, & Oſiride.
Aug. de Civ. Dei. XX. V. cum Lud. Vive.
Laërtius in proœmio.
Plato de Leg. X.
Euſebius de Præp. 24.
Ariſt. Metaph. IV. I.
Simplic. in Epict.

about Iſis, and Oſiris: The Perſian Magi (ſaid he) had their Oromazes, and Arimanius; the Egyptians their Oſiris, and Typhon; the Chaldæans their good, and bad Planets; the Greeks their Zeus, and Hades; the Pythagoreans their Monas, and Dyas; Empedocles his concord, and diſcord, &c. the like report we have in divers other Writers: The common reaſon, or ground upon which theſe erroneous conceits were built, was this; there appearing to be in nature ſome things imperfect, and ſome things bad (as ill diſpoſitions, inclinations and paſſions of mind; ill tempers and diſeaſes of body, attended with pains and troubles in life; vices, diſcords, deformities, antipathies, irregularities, monſters, poiſons, and the like things diſperſed in nature) this ſort of things, they ſuppoſed could not proceed from perfect goodneſs, the fountain of what was good, lovely, orderly, convenient, pleaſant and deſirable: If (diſcourſeth Plutarch, expreſſing the main of their argument) nothing can naturally ariſe without a cauſe, and good cannot afford cauſality to evil, it is neceſſary that nature ſhould have a proper ſeed and principle of evil as well as good; and thus it ſeems to the moſt and wiſeſt, for they indeed conceive two Gods as it were counterplotting each other; one the contriver and producer of good things, and the other of bad; calling the better One God, the other Dæmon. But this diſcourſe hath two faulty ſuppoſitions: It ſuppoſeth ſome things to be imperfect and evil, which are not truly ſuch; and, to thoſe things, which are truly ſuch, it aſſigneth an imaginary and wrong cauſe:

Εἰ γὰρ [οὐδὲν ἀναιτίως πέφυκε γενέσθαι, αἰτίαν δὲ κακοῦ τ' ἀγαθὸν ὐκ ἂν παράσχοι, δεῖ γένεσιν ἰδίαν ϗ ἀρχὴν ὥσπερ ἀγαθοῦ, ϗ κακοῦ τὴν φύσιν, &c. Plut. de Iſ. & Oſir.

1. It ſuppoſeth ſome Beings according to their original nature and conſtitution to be evil and imperfect; which ſuppoſition is, I ſay, falſe; for there is no ſort of creature, which did not at firſt paſs the divine approbation: God ſaw every thing which he had made, and behold it was very good: Good, that is, convenient and ſutable to its deſign (or its Authour's Idea) fair and decent in its place, according to its proportion; very good, that is, perfect and complete in its degree, without any defect, blemiſh or flaw; not liable to any reaſonable blame or exception. There are indeed among the creatures ſome degrees of perfection (it was fit there ſhould be ſo in great variety, that things might by compariſon illuſtrate and commend one another; that there might be regular ſubordinations, and ſubſerviencies, and harmonies; that ſeveral faculties of intelligent creatures might be exerciſed, and improved, and delighted; that the πολυποίκιλος σοφία, the manifold or multiform Wiſdom of the Creatour might be diſplayed, acknowledged and celebrated; there are, I ſay, for ſuch purpoſes in nature creatures gradually different in excellency) whence ſome things may be ſaid comparatively imperfect, or rather leſs excellent and noble in reſpect to other things, endued with higher faculties, or (as they be ſometimes called) perfections of nature; ſome things are leſs active, and more paſſive than others; are not ſo capable of enjoyments delectable unto, and more ſubject to impreſſions diſtaſtful to their particular nature; which paſſivities and diſpleaſures are not ſimply wills, becauſe they do ſute the degree of the particular natures of thoſe ſubjects, being alſo ever over-balanced with other pleaſing activities and enjoyments: ſo have things different meaſures of

Gen. 1. 31.

Naturæ omnes quoniam ſunt, & ideò habent modum ſuum, ſpeciem ſuam, & quandam ſecum pacem ſuam, profectò bonæ ſunt. Aug. de Civ. D. XII.

of excellency, but nothing as it comes from God's hand, or ſtands in its rank in nature, is poſitively imperfect, or void of that perfection, which is due to its kind; much leſs is any creature abſolutely bad, that is ugly, or noxious, or troubleſome, or cumberſome to the Univerſe; ſo that it were better away out of it, than in it. God (ſaith the Hebrew Wiſe-man) created all things, that they might have their being, and the generations of the world were healthful, and there is no poiſon of deſtruction in them. Every thing contributes ſomewhat to the uſe and benefit, or to the beauty and ornament of the whole: No weed grows out of the earth, no inſect creeps upon the ground which hath not its elegancy, and yields not its profit; nothing is abominable, or deſpicable, though all things are not alike aimable and admirable; there is therefore nothing in all the compaſs of nature unfit, or unworthy to have proceeded from God; nothing which he beſeemingly, without derogation to his excellencies, may not own for his work; nothing which in its rank and degree doth not confer to the manifeſtation of his glorious power, admirable wiſdom, and excellent goodneſs: O Lord (cryed the devout Pſalmiſt upon particular ſurvey, and conſideration of them) how manifold are thy works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches! That which we call poiſon, is ſuch only relatively, being noxious or deſtructive to one part, but innocent, wholeſome and uſeful to ſome other part; and never prejudicial to the whole body of things: yea even to that part it ſelf it is commonly beneficial in ſome caſe or ſeaſon; affording, if not continual alimony, yet ſometime phyſick thereto, and ſerving to expel another poiſon, or miſchief more imminently dangerous. That which we call a monſter, is not unnatural in regard to the whole contexture of cauſes, but ariſeth no leſs methodically, than any thing moſt ordinary; and it alſo hath its good end and uſe, well ſerving to illuſtrate the beauty and convenience of natures uſual courſe. As for pain and grief incident to the natures of things, without regard to any demerit or juſtice, they are not properly evils, but adherencies to the leſs perfect natures of things; in a ſtate liable to which God not only juſtly, but wiſely, according to his pleaſure might conſtitute things for the reaſons and ends before inſinuated; for no reaſon obliged him to confer upon every thing extreme perfection; he might diſpenſe his liberalities in what kind and meaſure he thought good. In fine, the reaſon of offence we take at any thing of this kind, ſeeming bad or ugly to us, ariſeth from our defect of knowledge and ſagacity, we not being able to diſcern the particular tendency of each thing to the common utility and benefit of the world.

Pſal. 104. 24.

Ἔστι τὸ τέρας τῶν παρὰ φύσιν τι· παρὰ φύσιν δ' οὐ πᾶσαν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολύ· παρὰ γὰρ τὴν ἀεὶ, καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἀνάγκης οὐδὲν γίνεται παρὰ φύσιν. Ariſt. de Gen. Anim. 4.

Τῆς τοῦ ὅλου δημιουργίας, ὥσπερ τινὲς ἑπόμεναι, καὶ ἀναγκαῖαι φύσεις. Max. Tyr. XXV.

Divina nos admonet providentia non res inſipienter vituperare, ſed utilitatem rerum diligenter inquirere, & ubi noſtrum ingenium vel infirmitas deficit, ibi credere occulta, &c. atque hæc ipſa aut humilitatis exercitatio eſt, aut elationis attritio. Aug. de Civ. Dei II. 22.

2. But as for thoſe real imperfection, and evils truly ſo called (which alone, as S. Baſil ſpeaketh, are properly evil, and moſt worthy of the appellation of evils) habitual diſtempers of ſoul, and irregular actions; errours, and vices, and ſins, we need not ſearch for any one eternal, or primitive cauſe of them: Although order, uniformity, beauty and perfection do, yet diſorder, confuſion, deformity and defect do not argue any unity of cauſe, whence they ſhould

Τὰ κυρίως κακὰ, ἅπερ μάλιστα εἰσὶ τῆς τῶν κακῶν προσηγορίας ἄξια. Baſ. in Orat. Quòd Deus eſt non author mali.

Peccatum à Deo non eſt, quia nec eſt. Lipſ.

Nemo quærat efficientem cauſam malæ voluntatis, non enim eſt effiCiens, ſed deficiens; quia nec illa effectio eſt, ſed defectio.

Mala voluntas efficiens eſt operis mali, malæ autem voluntatis efficiens eſt nihil. Aug. de Civ. D. XII. 6, 7.

Mali ulla natura eſt, ſed amiſſio boni mali nomen accepit. Aug. de C. D. XI. 9.

Ἀρχὴ ϗ ῥίζα τῆς ἁμαρτίας τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν ϗ αὐτεξȣσιον. Baſ. ubi ſupr.

Deut. 4. 16. 31. 29.
Gen. 6. 11.
Exod. 32. 7, &c.

Τὴν μοχθηρίαν ἡ τ͂ ψυχῆς ἐξȣσία κυΐσκει τε ϗ τελεσφορεῖ. Max. Tyr. XXV.

Αἰτία ἑλομένȣ· θεὸς ἀναίτιος. Plato de Rep. X.

Ὀυ γὰρ ἐξ ȣ̓ρανȣ̃, μὰ Δία, ȣ̓κ ἐξ ȣ̓ρανȣ̃. Max. Tyr.

ſhould ſpring; the true cauſes of them are ſufficiently notorious; not the will, or power of a Creatour, but the wilfulneſs and impotency of creatures are the fountains of them. They are no ſubſtantial beings, and ſo do not need an infinite power to create them; they do hardly need a poſitive cauſe; being themſelves rather defects, than effects; privations of being, than poſitive beings: Let no man (ſaith S. Auſtin) ſeek an efficient cauſe of a bad will; for there is no efficient, but a deficient thereof; for that it ſelf is not an effection, but a defection: and, An evil will (ſaith he again) is the efficient cauſe of an ill work; an evil will hath no cauſe; that is, none beſide it ſelf, or its own deficiency. And again: Evil hath no nature, but the loſs of good hath received the name of evil: however moſt certainly the riſe and root of ſin is our free will and choice; it is κακὸν βλάστημα προαιρέσεως (as Cyrill. Hier. ſaith) a bad ſprout from our choice. Men, or other intellectual and free agents their voluntarily averting themſelves from the ſupreme true good to inferiour appearing goods; their wilfully declining from the way which God doth ſhew and preſcribe to them; their rejecting the advices, and diſobeying the laws of God; their thwarting the dictates of that reaſon which God did put in them; their abuſing their natural faculties; their perverting and corrupting themſelves, and others alſo, by ill example, perſuaſion, allurement, violence; theſe cauſes of ſuch evils are moſt viſible and palpable: we need not go far, nor ariſe to the top of things to find an authour, upon whom we may charge our evils; they are moſt truly called our ways, our works, our imaginations, our inventions and devices; they are the children of our affected ſtupidity, and our naughty ſloth; of our precipitant choice, of our ſtubborn will, of our unbridled paſſion; they are wholly imputed to us, we are blamed, we are condemned, we are puniſhed for them: As it is horrible blaſphemy to aſcribe them to the moſt good God; ſo it is vain to imagine any other neceſſary principle, any uncreated miſchievous Arimanius, any ſpiteful Cacodæmon, any eternal Fate to father them upon.

Ἑκȣσίων κακῶν ἀκȣσια ἔκγονα. Damaſ. de Orth. F. IV. 20.

Hoſ. 13. 9.

Iſa. 3. 9.

Amos 3. 6.
Lam. 3. 38.

Iſa. 45. 57.

Tertul. in Marc 2.

The miſchiefs alſo of pain and grief conſequent upon thoſe diſtempers and miſdeanours (that unwilling brood of wilful evils, as Damaſcene calls them) have very diſcernible originals: they are partly to be imputed to us, and partly attributed to God: We by our faults deſerve, and draw them to our ſelves; God in juſtice and wiſdom doth inflict them on us: Perditio tua ex te; O, Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thy ſelf; and, Wo unto their ſoul, for they have rewarded evil unto themſelves; ſo doth God charge the cauſe of ſuch evils upon us; and, Shall there be any evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it? Doth not evil and good proceed out of the moſt High? I am the Lord, and there is none elſe; I form the light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create evil; ſo God aſſumes the cauſality of them to himſelf. We need therefore not to inquire after any other cauſe of theſe evils (mala pœnæ) ſo called becauſe they are diſpleaſing to ſenſe or fancy; although conſidering the needfulneſs, and uſefulneſs of them in reſpect to publick benefit (as they are exemplary and monitive) and their wholſomeneſs for particular correction and cure (for, No chaſtening, as the Apoſtle ſaith, for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheleſs afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs unto them, which are exerciſed thereby) in ſuch reſpects they may rather be called good things; however as they have any thing bad in them, they proceed from us, as they contain ſomewhat good, they are from God; which ſufficiently confuteth thoſe Heretical opiniators, and decideth the controverſie; it being vain to ſuppoſe any other, beſide theſe moſt apparent cauſes of ſuch evils; Our bad deſert, and God's juſt Providence. * It is conſiderable, that even vice (although the worſt thing in the world, and bad to the ſubject thereof) is yet in ſome reſpects uſeful; it in regard to the whole is not unprofitable; it ſerveth to the illuſtration of God's holy Attributes; it is a foil to vertue, and ſetteth off its luſtre. But let thus much ſuffice, concerning the objects of the Creation.

Heb. 12. 11.

Γίνεται καὶ ἡ κακία πως κατὰ τὸν τῆς φύσεως νόμον, καὶ οὐκ ἀχρήστως πρὸς τὰ ὅλα. Chryſ. apud Plut. de Stoic. contr. 31, 32. Sen. Qu. Nat. præf. & de Beneſ. 21. & Epiſt. 65.

I ſhall next touch a conſideration or two concerning the manner how, and the reaſon why God did make the world; which will commend to us his doing it, and intimate ſome grounds of duty, and both direct and excite our practice in reſpect thereto: The manner of God's producing the world was altogether voluntary, and abſolutely free; it did not iſſue from him ἀπροαιρέτως, without counſel or choice, not (as ſome Philoſophers have conceited) by natural or neceſſary emanation or reſult; as heat from fire, or light from the Sun, or ſhadow from a body; but from a wiſe free-choice: He ſo made the world, that he could wholly have abſtained from making it, that he could have framed it otherwiſe, according to an infinite variety of ways. He could not be fatally determined, there being no ſuperiour cauſe to guide him, or to conſtrain him any wiſe (to doe, or not to doe; to doe thus, or otherwiſe.) He could not be obliged to impart any perfection, being abſolute maſter of all things poſſible, and debtour unto none upon any account: 'Tis his privilege therefore, and property to perform all things κατὰ βουλὴν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, according to the counſel of his will, or according to his wiſe pleaſure, as S. Paul expreſſeth it; and accordingly we hear the Elders in the Revelation acknowledging: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power, for thou haſt created all things, καὶ διὰ τὸ θέλημά σου, and for thy will they are and were created: they do affirm God's pleaſure to be the cauſe of his creating things, and they imply its being ſo to be the ground of our due veneration, gratitude, and all devotion; theſe being tributes due unto free goodneſs and bounty; if he made all things fatally, no praiſe or thanks were due to him; if he doeth things ſo, there is no reaſon to offer prayers to him, to ſeek his aid, or implore his favour; no devotion toward him hath a ground, or can ſubſiſt. 'Tis alſo evident, that if the world had been produced in way of neceſſary emanation, that it ſhould have been eternal; as if the Sun had been eternal, his light had been eternal alſo; if fire had been, its heat likewiſe had been from eternity: but that the world was produced in time, not long ſince, within ſix or ſeven thouſand years, not only faith and divine Chronology do aſſure us, but reaſon alſo ſhews, and all hiſtory conſpires to perſuade us; there being no plain monument, or probable memory of actions beyond that time; and by what progreſſions mankind was propagated over the world; how, Fecit quàm optimum potuit; ait Plato in Tim.

Αἴτιον μὲν αὐτοῦ ὁμολογοῦσι τὸν θεόν, αἴτιον δὲ ἀπροαιρέτως ὡς τῆς σκιᾶς τὸ σῶμα, καὶ τῆς λαμπηδόνος τὸ ἀπαυγάζον. Baſ. hexaem. α.

Οἱονεὶ ἀποσκίασμα τῆς δυνάμεως. Id.

Δοῦλοι βασιλέων εἰσίν, οἱ βασιλεῖς θεῶν, Θεοὶ δ' ἀνάγκης. Philemon.

Eph. 1. 11.

Revel. 4. 11.

how, and when, and where Nations were planted, Empires raiſed, Cities built, Arts invented or improved, it is not very hard to trace near the original times and places: The world therefore in reſpect of time conceivable by us is very young, and not many ſucceſſions of ages, or lives of men have paſſed between its beginning and ours; whence it plainly appears, that it was freely produced by God.

And how he produced it, the Scripture farther teacheth us; it was not with any laborious care or toil; not with the help of any engines or inſtruments ſubſervient; not by inducing any preparatory diſpoſitions or aptitudes, but ψιλῷ τῷ βούλεσθαι, by his mere willing (as Clemens Alex. ſpeaks) his will and word were (as Tertull. expounds it) the hands, by which it is ſaid that God made the heavens; at his call they did all immediately ſpring up out of nothing, at his command they preſently ranged themſelves into order: it was not a high ſtrain of Rhetorick in Moſes (as Longinus deemed) thus to deſcribe the creation; but a moſt proper expreſſion of that incomprehenſible efficacy, which attends the divine will and decree.

Adv. Hermog. 45.

Long. Sect. 7.

But ſince God did not only make the world freely, but wiſely; and ſince all wiſe agents act to ſome purpoſe, and aim at ſome end, why (may it be inquired) did God make the world? what impulſive reaſon or inducement was there moving his will to doe it? we may anſwer with Plato; ἀγαθὸς ἦν, he was good; and he that is good, doth not envy any good to any thing: His natural benignity and munificence was the pure motive, incited or invited him to this great action of communicating exiſtence, and ſutable perfection to his creatures, reſpectively: No benefit or emolument could hence accrue to him; he could receive no acceſſion of beatitude; he did not need any prophet or pleaſure from without, being full within, rich in all perfection, completely happy in the contemplation and enjoyment of himſelf: Can a man, can any creature, be profitable to God? No; our goodneſs doth not extend to him; we cannot any-wiſe advance, or amplifie him thereby; 'tis becauſe goodneſs is freely diffuſive and communicative of it ſelf; becauſe love is active and fruitful in beneficence; becauſe higheſt excellency is void of all envy, ſelfiſhneſs and tenacy, that the world was produced ſuch as it was; thoſe perfections being intrinſecal to God's nature (for God is love, that is, eſſentially loving and good) diſpoſed him to beſtow ſo much of being, beauty, delight and comfort to his creatures. Hence, the earth (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) is full of the goodneſs of the Lord; that is, every thing therein, according to its ſtate and degree, is an effect of the divine goodneſs, partakes thereof both in its being, and in its enjoyments; and, The Lord (ſaith he again) is good to all, and his tender mercies (or his bowels of affection) are over all his works: he is good, and tenderly kind toward all his works, as well in producing them, as preſerving them; in freely rendring them capable of receiving good, as in carefully providing, and liberally diſpenſing good unto them: That thou giveſt them (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking with reſpect to the Univerſity of things) they gather; thou openeſt thy hand, they are filled with good; it is from God's open hand (that is, from his unconfined bounty and liberality) that all creatures do receive all that good which fills them; which ſatisfieth their needs, and ſatiateth their deſires: A glimpſe of which truth the ancient Pagans ſeem to have

Quæris quid propoſitum ſit Deo? bonitas; ità certè Plato ait: Quæ Deo faciendi mundum cauſa fuit? Bonus eſt; bono nulla cujuſquam boni invidia eſt. Sen. Ep. 65.

Ἐποίησεν ἀγγέλους, ἀρχαγγέλους, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας τῶν ἀσωμάτων οὐσίας· ἐποίησεν δὲ δι' ἕτερον μὲν οὐδὲν, δι' ἀγαθότητα δὲ μόνην, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 9. ad Stagir.

Job 22. 2.
Pſal. 16. 2.

1 Joh. 4. 8, 16.

Pſal. 33. 5.
119. 64.

Pſal. 145. 9.
רחמיו

Pſal. 104. 28.

have had, when they (as Ariſtotle obſerved) did commonly ſuppoſe love to have been the firſt and chief of the Gods; the original ſource and framer of things. But I will no longer inſiſt on this Point in way of doctrine or diſquiſition; I ſhall only adjoin a little application.

Ariſt. Metaph. I. 4.

Πρώτιστον μὲν ἔρωτα θεῶν μητίσατο πάντων. Parmenides.

Ἠδ' ἔρος, ὃς κάλλιστος μεταπρέπει ἀθανάτοισιν. Heſiod.

1. The belief and conſideration of this Point (that God is the Maker of Heaven and Earth) muſt neceſſarily beget in us higheſt eſteem, admiration, and adoration of God, and his divine Excellencies, his Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs: For what a Power muſt that be (how unconceivably great both intenſively and extenſively muſt it be?) which could ſo expeditely and eaſily rear ſuch a ſtupendiouſly vaſt frame? vaſt beyond the reach of our ſenſe, of our imagination, of any rational collection that we can make? the earth, on which we dwell, divided into ſo many great Empires, full of ſo many Inhabitants, bearing ſuch variety of creatures different in kind, having in reſpect to the whole but the like proportion, as a little ſand hath to the earth it ſelf, or a drop of water to the great Ocean? What a Wiſdom muſt that be, how unconceivably large and penetrant, that could contrive ſuch an innumerable number of creatures (the artifice, which appears in one, in the leaſt of which doth ſo far tranſcend our conceit) could digeſt them ſo fitly, could connect them ſo firmly in ſuch an order? What a Goodneſs and Benignity muſt it be (how immenſe and boundleſs?) that did extend it ſelf in affection and care, for ſo many creatures abundantly providing for the need and comfort of them all? how tranſcendently glorious is the Majeſty of him, that was authour of all thoſe beauties and ſtrengths, thoſe ſplendours and magnificencies we do with ſo much pleaſure, and ſo much wonder behold? Well might the devout Pſalmiſt and divine Prophets hence frequently take occaſion of exciting us to praiſe, and celebrate the perfections of God: Well might even Heathen Philoſophers from contemplation of the world be raiſed into fits of compoſing Hymns and Elogies of its great Maker.

2. This conſideration likewiſe may confer to the breeding of hearty gratitude, and humble affection toward God; for that we are upon many accounts very nearly and highly concerned in this great production. We our ſelves, whatever we are, and all we have, and all we enjoy; all our intrinſecal endowments, and all our extrinſecal accommodations are parts thereof, and did proceed from God; yea all the whole frame was deſigned by him with a particular regard, and from an eſpecial good will unto us; was fitted for our enjoyment and uſe: The world was made as a convenient houſe for us to dwell in, as a pleaſant theatre for us to view, as a profitable ſchool for our inſtruction, as a holy temple for us to perform offices of no leſs ſweet, than reaſonable devotion; for our benefit thoſe huge orbs roll inceſſantly, diffuſing their glorious light, and diſpenſing their kindly influences; for our ſake the earth is decked with all that goodly furniture, and ſtored with all that abundance of comfortable proviſions: All theſe things out of pure benevolence, not being moved with any deſert of ours, not regarding any profit of his own, before any deſire or any thought of ours (before we were capable of wiſhing or thinking) God was Mundus quaſi communis Deorum, atque hominum domus, aut urbs utrorumque. Cic. de N. D. II. de Fin. IV.

Mundus Deorum templum. Sen. de Ben. VII. 7. Epiſt. 90. Cic. in ſom. Sci. Philo. de Mun. 2. &c.

Ψυχῶν παιδευτήριον, καὶ διδασκαλεῖον, &c. Baſ. M.

--- οὐ πόνων ἀμοιβὴν ἔδωκεν, οὐ δὲ κατορθωμάτων ἀντίδοσιν, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. ζ. vid.

Cogitavit nos ante natura quàm genuit, &c. Sen. de Benef. 2. 23.

Nimis nos ſuſpicimus, ſi digni nobis videmur, propter quos tanta moveantur. Sen. de Ira, 27.

pleaſed to contrive, and to accompliſh for us: We (ſaid a Philoſopher) regard and eſteem our ſelves overmuch, if we think our ſelves worthy, that ſo great matters ſhould be agitated for our ſake; and the Pſalmiſt ſignifies the ſame, when upon contemplation of the World, he ſaith; Pſal. 8. When I conſider the heavens, the works of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained, what is man that thou art mindful of him? That the authour of ſo great and glorious a work ſhould vouchſafe to regard ſo mean things as us, to viſit us continually with a provident inſpection and care over our welfare, to lay ſo vaſt projects, and accompliſh ſo mighty works in regard to us; what a demonſtration of admirable condeſcenſion, what a ground of wonder and aſtoniſhment, what an argument of love and thankfulneſs toward God is this?

3. Yea what a ground and motive to humility ſhould this conſideration be unto us? What is man? what, I ſay, is man in compariſon to him that made the world? what is our ſtrength, what our wit, what our goodneſs, what any quality or ability of ours, in reſpect to the perfection of thoſe things in him? how weak, ſilly, narrow, poor and wretched things muſt we needs appear to our ſelves, when ſeriouſly we conſider the immenſe excellencies diſplayed in the World's creation; how ſhould this depreſs, and debaſe us in our conceits about our ſelves? Eſpecially if we reflect upon our own unprofitableneſs, our ingratitude, and our injuſtice toward our Creatour; how none, or how ſcant returns we have made to him, who gave unto us, and to all things for us, our being and theirs, our all and theirs; how faint in our acknowledgments, how negligent in our ſervices we have been; yea how prepoſterouſly, inſtead of our due homage and tribute, we have repay'd him affronts and injuries; frequently oppoſing his will, and abuſing his goodneſs.

4. This conſideration is further a proper inducement unto truſt and hope in God; and withal a fit ground of conſolation to us in all our needs and diſtreſſes. He that was able to doe ſo great things, and hath been willing to doe ſo much for us; he that having made all things, can diſpoſe of all, and doeth (as King Nebuchadnezzar taught by experience confeſſed) Dan. 4. 35. according to his will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, ſo that none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? How can we diſtruſt his protection or ſuccour in our exigencies? this conſideration good men have been wont to apply to Pſal. 121. 2. 124. 8. 146. 5. ſuch purpoſes: My help (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth: Well might he be aſſured, having ſo potent and faithful an aid: and, Happy (ſaith he again) is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help; whoſe hope is in the Lord his God, which made heaven and earth; the ſea, and all that therein is: Happy indeed he ſurely is; no diſappointment or diſaſter can befall him, who doth with reaſon confide in him that made the world, and can manage it to Jer. 32. 7. his advantage. The Prophet Jeremy begins his prayer thus: O Lord God, behold thou haſt made heaven and earth by thy great power and ſtretched-out arm; and there is nothing too hard for thee: The creation of the World is ſuch an experiment of God's power and goodneſs, as may ſupport our faith in all encounters; ſo that we ſhould not think any thing ſo difficult, but that God is able; nor ſo high, but that God is willing to perform it for us, if it make toward our real good.

5. Finally, This conſideration miniſtreth a general incitement unto all obedience; which from God's production of all things doth appear, upon ſeveral accounts, due and reaſonable; all other things do conſtantly obey the law impoſed on them, inſiſt in the courſe defined to them; and ſhall we only be diſobedient and refractary, irregular and exorbitant? Shall all the hoſts of heaven moſt readily and punctually obey God's ſummons? Shall the pillars of heaven tremble, and be aſtoniſhed Iſa. 48. 13.

at his reproof? Shall the ſea with its proud waves be curb'd, and con- 40. 26.
fined by his decree? Shall fire and hail, ſnow and vapour, and ſtormy Job 9. 5. 26.
winds (ſuch rude and boiſterous things) fulfil his word? as they are 11. 38. 11.
all ſaid to do doe; and ſhall we be unruly and rebellious? we, who Jer. 5. 21. Pſal. 48. 8.
are placed in the top of nature, for whom all nature was made, to whom all nature ſerves; ſhall we only of all things in nature, tranſgreſs againſt the Authour and Governour of nature?

But I leave the farther improvement of this grand Point to your meditation, concluding with the exhortation of that Angel in the Apocalypſe: Fear God, and give glory to him; worſhip him that made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and the fountains of water: Even to him be all obedience, and adoration, and praiſe for ever, and ever. Amen. Revel. 14. 7.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XIII.

OF THE Truth and Divinity
OF THE Chriſtian Religion.

EPHES. I. 13.

In whom ye alſo (truſted) having heard the word of truth, the Goſpel of your ſalvation.

THAT our Religion in groſs is true and agreeable to reaſon, is a ground upon which the truth of its ſingle doctrines and articles of faith doth lean; it is therefore requiſite that it firſt be well ſupported, or that we be thoroughly aſſured thereof. Being therefore engaged at other times to diſcourſe upon the particular points of Chriſtian doctrine, which ſuppoſe this general one; I ſhall take occaſion collaterally in theſe exerciſes to inſiſt upon this ſubject; ſuppoſing in thoſe, what in theſe we ſhall endeavour to prove; ſo both avoiding there ſuch grand digreſſions, or the treating upon matters not directly incident; and ſupplying here what ſeems neceſſary or uſeful there to the confirmation of our faith.

Now in the words (I did now reade) S. Paul ſtyles the Chriſtian doctrine (and in many other places of Scripture it is alſo ſo called) the word of truth (that is a moſt true doctrine) and the goſpel of our ſalvation (that is a meſſage brought from heaven by our Saviour and his Apoſtles; in which the ways and means of attaining ſalvation (that is of that beſt happineſs which we are capable of) the overtures thereof from God, and the conditions in order thereto required from us are declared.) And that we have reaſon to entertain it as ſuch, I ſhall immediately addreſs my ſelf to ſhew.

Μὴ ἐξέταζε, ἀλλὰ πίςευσον. Orig. 1. pag. 8, 9. Orig. 6. p. 282. Πίςευσον εἰ σωθῆναι θέλεις ἢ ἄπιθι.

It was anciently objected by Celſus, and other Adverſaries of our Religion, that Chriſtianity did exact from men ψιλὴν ϰ̀ ἄλογον πίςιν, a bare groundleſs faith; did impoſe νόμες ἀναποδείκτες, laws uncapable of proof; (that is, as to the goodneſs and reaſonableneſs of them) did inculcate this rule μὴ ἐξέταζε, ἀλλὰ μόνον πίςευε, do not examine or diſcuſs, but only believe; that it debarr'd inquiries and debates about truth, ſlighted the uſe and improvement of reaſon, rejected humane learning and wiſdom, injoyning men to ſwallow its dictates, without chewing, or any previous examination concerning the reaſon and truth of them.

Vid. Orig. in Celſ. lib. 3. pag. 142. Ὁ ταῦτα πιςεύσας ἐκ ἁπλῶς, ἐδὲ ἀλόγως ἀλλὰ κρίσει ϰ̀ πληροφορίᾳ, χάρισμα εἴληφεν ἐκ Θεῦ, &c. Conſt. Apoſt. 8. 1.

The ground of this accuſation was ſurely a great miſtake, ariſing from their not diſtinguiſhing that belief, whereby we embrace Chriſtianity it ſelf in groſs, from that belief, whereby in conſequence to the former we aſſent to the particular doctrines thereof: eſpecially to ſuch as concern matters ſupernatural, or exceeding the reach of our natural underſtanding to penetrate or comprehend. For as to the firſt kind, that belief whereby we embrace Chriſtianity it ſelf, as true in the groſs; I ſay, it is no-wiſe required upon ſuch terms; Our Religion doth not obtrude it ſelf upon men in the dark, it doth not bid men to put out their eyes, or to ſhut them cloſe; no; nor even to wink, and then to receive it; it rather obliges them to open their eyes wide, to go into the cleareſt light; with their beſt ſenſes to view it thoroughly, before they embrace it. It requires not, yea it refuſes (ordinarily) a ſudden and precipitate aſſent; admitting no man (capable of judging and chuſing for himſelf) to the participation thereof, or acknowledging him to be a believer indeed; till (after a competent time and means of inſtruction) he declares himſelf to underſtand it well, and heartily to approve it. Never any Religion was ſo little liable to that cenſure; none ever ſo freely expoſed it ſelf to a fair trial at the bar of reaſon; none ever ſo earneſtly invited men to conſider, and weigh its pretences; yea provoked them, for its ſake and their own (at the peril of their ſouls, and as they tendred their own beſt good and ſafety) to an ἐυγνώμων, ἐξέτασις, an equal and diſcreet examination thereof. Other Religions have for their juſtification inſiſted upon the examples of Anceſtours, the preſcriptions and cuſtoms of times, their large extent and prevalence among multitudes of people, their eſtabliſhment by civil laws, and countenance of ſecular powers (arguments wholly extrinſecal and of ſmall validity) declining all other teſt or trial of reaſon: Yea, 'tis remarkable how Celſus (and others who made the foreſaid objection) did contradict and confute themſelves, affirming men ought without ſcruple to conform form in opinion and practice to the Religion preſcribed by the Laws of their Country, be they what they will, never ſo abſurd or diſhoneſt. Δεῖ φυλάσσειν τὰ εἰς κοινὸν κεκυρωμένα (things eſtabliſhed by common authority muſt be obſerved.) And, τὰ παρ' ἑκάστοις ὀρθῶς ἂν πράττοιτο ταύτῃ δρώμενα, ὅπῃ ἐκείνοις φίλον· (things are every where rightly done, being done according to the faſhion of each place) ſuch were the rules and maximes thoſe men urged; and this was indeed exacting irrational belief; a ſtifling mens reaſon, and muzling their judgments: this was a method enforcing men blindly to yield conſent to errours and inconſiſtences innumerable. But the teachers and maintainers of Chriſtianity proceeded otherwiſe; confiding in the pure merit of their cauſe, they warned men to lay aſide all prejudices; to uſe their beſt underſtandings; in a caſe of ſuch moment, to apply themſelves to an induſtrious and impartial ſearch of the truth: Let one for the reſt ſpeak their ſenſe: Oportet in ea re maximè, in qua vitæ ratio verſatur, ſibi quemque confidere, ſuoque judicio ac propriis ſenſibus niti ad inveſtigandam & perpendendam veritatem, quàm credentem alienis erroribus decipi tanquam ipſum rationis expertem: dedit omnibus Deus pro virili portione ſapientiam, ut & inaudita inveſtigare poſſent, & audita perpendere: We ought eſpecially, ſays he, every one of us in that matter, which chiefly concerns our manner of life, to confide in our ſelves; and rather with our own judgment, and our proper ſenſes ſtrive to find out and judge of the truth, than believing other mens errours to be deceived, like things void of reaſon: God hath given all men a competent ſhare of wiſdom, that they might both ſearch out things not told them, and weigh what they hear. So eſpecially juſt and candid was Chriſtianity in its firſt offering it ſelf to the minds of men; it propounds indeed and preſſes, as evident in it ſelf, the worth and conſequence of the matter; but refers the deciſion on either part (ſo far as concerns every particular man) to the verdict of that reaſon and conſcience, with which to ſuch purpoſes God hath indued every man. And that it can proceed no otherwiſe appears farther, from the nature of that faith it requires: It commends faith as a great vertue, and therefore ſuppoſes it both voluntary and reaſonable; it promiſes ample rewards thereto, and ſo implies it a work not of neceſſity or chance, but of care and induſtry; it declares infidelity to be very blameable, and threatens ſevere puniſhment thereto; why? becauſe it ſignifies irrational negligence or perverſeneſs.

Hæ ſunt religiones, &c. Lactant. 2. 6. (p. 171.)

Orig. V. pag. 248, &c.

Quæ omnia ſapiens ſervabit tanquam legibus juſſa, non tanquam Diis grata. Sen. apud Aug. de Civ. D. 6. 10.

Omnem iſtam ignobilem Deorum turbam, quam longo ævo longa ſuperſtitio congeſſit ſic (inquit) adorabimus, ut meminerimus cultum ejus magis ad morem, quàm ad rem pertinere. Id. 16.----

--- Colebat quod reprehendebat, agebat quod arguebat, quod culpabat adorabat. Aug. ib. de. Seneca.

Lact. 2. 7.

Ἕξις προαιρετικὴ μετ' ἀληθοῦς λόγου. ἑκούσιος συγκατάθεσις. Clem. Alex.

In fine, Chriſtianity doth not inveagle any man by ſlight, nor compel him by force, (being indeed commonly deſtitute of thoſe advantages; nor being able to uſe them, if it would) but fairly by reaſon perſuades him to embrace it; it doth not therefore ſhun examination, nor diſclaim the judgment of reaſon; but earneſtly ſeeks and procures the one, chearfully and confidently appeals to the other. Examine all things; hold faſt that which is good. Believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits, whether they be of God. See that no man deceive you. Be always ready, with meekneſs and reſpect, to give to every one that demands it of you, an account of the hope in you. Theſe are the Maximes which Chriſtianity goes upon in the propagation and maintenance of its ſelf.

1 Theſſ. 5. 21.
1 Joh. 4. 1.
Matt. 24. 4.
Eph. 5. 6.
1 Pet. 3. 15.

Indeed after it hath convinced men of its truth in general, having evidenced the truth of its fundamental principles, it then requires a full and cordial aſſent, without exception, to its particular doctrines grounded ded upon, or deduced from them. When, I ſay, it hath, to the ſatiſfaction of a man's mind, with ſolid reaſon made good its principles; it then injoins men to ſurceaſe farther ſcruple or debate concerning what it teaches or draws from them; which is a proceeding moſt reaſonable, and conformable to the method uſed in the ſtricteſt Sciences: For the principles of any Science being either demonſtrated out of ſome higher Science, or evidenced by fit experiments to common ſenſe; and being thence granted and received, 'tis afterward unlawful and abſurd to challenge the concluſions collected from them; ſo if it have been proved and acknowledged that our Principles are true (for inſtance, that God is perfectly veracious, and that Chriſtian Religion hath his authority, or atteſtation to it) 'twill then be a part of abſurd levity and inconſiſtency to queſtion any particular propoſition evidently contained therein; and in this ſenſe or in theſe caſes it is true indeed that Chriſtianity doth engage us to believe ſimply and purely, doth ſilence natural reaſon, and condemn curious enquiry, and prohibit diſpute, eſpecially to perſons of meaner capacities or improvements. And thus, I take it, thoſe Chriſtians of old were to be underſtood, who ſo much commended immediate faith, excluded reaſon from being too buſie in matters of Religion, diſcountenanced that curioſity, which ſearched into and would needs ſound thoſe inſcrutable myſteries, which our Religion teaches. Our Religion then will allow (yea it invites and exhorts) an Infidel to conſider Baſ. in Pſ. 15. and judge of its truth, although it will not allow a Chriſtian to be ſo vain and inconſtant, as to doubt of any particular doctrine therein; ſeeing by ſo queſtioning a part, he in effects renounces the whole, and ſubverts the foundation of his faith; at leaſt ceaſes thereby to be a ſteady Chriſtian. I might then well invert our Adverſaries diſcourſe, and offer it as a good argument of our Religion its truth, that it alone among all Religions, with a candour and confidence peculiar to truth, Joh. 3. 21, 22. calls us to the light, is willing, yea deſirous to undergo trial; I add, yea challenges as its due from all men, and demands it of them as a neceſſary duty to hear it, to conſider it ſeriouſly, to paſs ſentence upon it; for as commonly errour and groundleſs conceit, being conſcious of their own weakneſs, are timorous and ſuſpicious, and thence ready to decline all proof and conflict of reaſon; ſo truth, knowing its own ſtrength, is daring and reſolute; enters boldly into the liſts, being well aſſured (or hopeful) of good ſucceſs in the combat.

Which proceeding, proper to Chriſtianity, is in it ſelf very plauſible, and may well beget a favourable prejudice on its ſide; and that it is not confident without reaſon, will appear upon our examining the principles and grounds on which it ſtands: The firſt Principle of Chriſtianity (common thereto and all other Religions) is that there is one God (ſovereign and tranſcendent in all perfections; the maker and governour of all things.) The next (which alſo no Religion doth not acknowledge) is that God is perfectly veracious, ſo that whatever appears to be aſſerted, or atteſted to by him is certainly true; which Principles (by reaſons I hope proper and ſufficient) I partly have proved, and partly ſhall hereafter upon occaſion ſhew: A third is, that God is the authour of the Chriſtian doctrine, and law; that he hath revealed this doctrine to mankind, and confirmed it by his teſtimony; that he hath impoſed this law upon us, and eſtabliſhed it by his authority. This Principle (being the foundation and ſum of our faith) involves matter of fact; and conſequently being not evident immediately in it ſelf, doth (for a full conviction of a man's mind, and producing therein a ſolid perſuaſion) perſuaſion) require a rational probation; and that it may appear we believe it like reaſonable men, not (as Pagans and Mahometans, and thoſe of other Sects do) upon wilful reſolution, or by meer chance, as alſo for ſetling the ground of particular Articles comprehended under this, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew the reaſonableneſs thereof; advancing my diſcourſe by ſeveral ſteps and degrees. I obſerve firſt that Μάθωμεν τοίνυν οὕτω πρὸς Ἕλληνας διαλέγεσθαι, ἵνα μὴ ὦμεν ὡς θρέμματα καὶ βοσκήματα, ἀλλ᾽ ὦμεν παρεσκευασμένοι περὶ τῆς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐλπίδος. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. 1, 17.

I. It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that God ſhould at ſome time or ſeaſon fully and clearly reveal unto men the truth concerning himſelf, and concerning them as he and they ſtand related to each other; concerning his nature and will, concerning our ſtate and duty, reſpectively; the nature and attributes of God, the nature and qualities of man being compared do perſuade thus much.

It is apparent to common experience, that mankind being left to it ſelf (eſpecially in matters of this kind) is very inſufficient to direct it ſelf: that it is apt to lie under woful ignorance, to wander in uncertainty, to fall into errour, to poſſeſs it ſelf with vain conceit, to be abuſed with any ſort of deluſion, which either the malice of wicked ſpirits, or the ſubtilty of naughty men, or the wildneſs of its own fond paſſions and deſires can put upon it, or bring it under; 'tis conſequently expoſed to all thoſe vices, diſhonourable, hurtful and deſtructive to its nature; and to all thoſe miſeries, which from ignorance and errour, from vice and wickedneſs do naturally ſpring; eſpecially to an eſtrangement from God, and an incapacity of his love and favour. The two only remedies of all theſe miſchiefs (natural light and primitive tradition) how little they did avail to cure them; how the one was too faint in it ſelf, and eaſily loſt in miſts of prejudice from ill education and bad cuſtom prevailing generally; how the other (beſides its other defects) ſoon was polluted, and indeed quite ſpoiled by adulterate mixtures of fond, impure and vile ſuperſtitions; woful experience doth more than enough evince. We ſee, that not only the generality of mankind did ſometime lie in this ſad condition, but that even the moſt elevated and refined wits (thoſe among men, who by all poſſible improvement of their reaſon did endeavour to raiſe themſelves from this low eſtate; to reſcue their minds from the common ignorance, the miſtakes, the ſuperſtitions and follies of the world) could by no means in any good meaſure attain thoſe ends; for what did their earneſt inquiries, or their reſtleſs ſtudies produce, but diſſatisfaction and perplexity of mind? wherein did their eager diſputations conclude, but in irreconcileable differences of opinion, and greater uncertainties than were when they began? moſt were plung'd into a deſperate Scepticiſm (a doubt and diffidence of all things) none arrived higher than ſome faint conjectures, on ſome unſteady opinions concerning thoſe matters of higheſt conſequence; ſuch notions as were not effectual enough to produce in them a practice (in any good meaſure) ſutable to the dignity of man's nature, to the duty he owes to God, to the capacities man hath of doing and receiving good; from which due glory to God, or much benefit to man did accrue. Ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς, they were made vain (or, they were fruſtrated, deluded, befooled) in their reaſonings and diſputes; the reſult of their buſie ſpeculations was, that their fooliſh heart was darkned; ſo darkned, that with all the light they had, they could not ſee any thing; at leaſt not clearly diſcern what chiefly it concerned them to know; The world by wiſdom (by all the wiſdom it could get) did not know God; did not

Rom. 1. 21.
Eph. 4. 17.

1 Cor. 1. 21.

acquire a requiſite meaſure of knowledge in divine things: did not however know him ſo, as to glorifie him; as to thank him for the benefits received from him; as to bring forth worthy fruits of piety and vertue. So much S. Paul obſerved of them; and not he alone did obſerve it, but even themſelves were ſenſible of this their unhappineſs, whence ſo many complaints concerning the blindneſs and infirmity of man's mind, concerning the obſcurity and uncertainty of things, concerning the inſuperable difficulty of finding truth, concerning the miſerable conſequences from theſe, do occur among them.

Rom. 1. 21, &c. 18.

---- Hinc cauſa mali mortalibus ægris Naturam neſcire Dei.

Now this being the natural ſtate of men, deſtitute of divine conduct and aſſiſtance; do they not (I pray) greatly need another light to guide them in this darkneſs, or to bring them out of it; a helpful hand to free them from theſe inconveniences? and is it not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God who is alone able, will alſo be willing in due time to afford it? He, who in nature is moſt benign and bountiful, moſt pitiful and gracious; whoſe goodneſs fills the earth, and whoſe mercy is over all his works; he, who bears to man the ſpecial relation of a Father, and bears to him a ſutable tenderneſs of affection and good will; he, all whoſe attributes ſeem concerned in engaging him upon this performance; not only his Goodneſs to inſtigate him, and his Wiſdom to direct him, but even his Juſtice in ſome manner to oblige him thereto.

Pſal. 33. 5. 104. 24.

1. His Goodneſs: Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? Yea; though 'tis unnatural and unuſual, 'tis yet poſſible ſhe may, becauſe nature in her is not unalterably conſtant, and the ſame; but the immutable God cannot ſo ceaſe to be mindful of, to be compaſſionate toward his children. That gracious ear cannot hear mankind groan ſo dolefully under bitter oppreſſions; that pitiful eye cannot behold his own dear off-ſpring, the flower of his creation, lying in ſo comfortleſs, ſo remedileſs diſtreſs, without feeling ſome pity, without being moved to reach ſome relief; ſuch notes ſurely cannot be grateful, ſuch ſpectacles cannot be pleaſant to him, nor can he then forbear long to provide means of removing them from his preſence. We eſteem it want of goodneſs (yea an effect of very bad diſpoſition) not to direct a bewildred traveller, not to relieve, if we can, even a ſtranger fallen into great diſtreſs: and if we being in ſuch degree bad, are inclinable to perform ſuch good offices, how much more ready may we ſuppoſe him, who is goodneſs it ſelf, (goodneſs infinite and abſolute) to doe the like for all mankind, ſo much needing his guidance and help? He who hath ſettled our outward eſtate in ſo advantageous a poſture, who hath made proviſions ſo various and ample for the needs and conveniences (yea for the pleaſure) of our bodies, would he have ſo little care over our better part, and leave our ſouls ſo ſlenderly furniſhed, letting them pine as it were for want of ſpiritual ſuſtenance? how can we think his good providence defective in ſo main, ſo principal a part thereof? Thus doth divine goodneſs (to my apprehenſion) very ſtrongly confirm our ſuppoſition.

Iſa. 49. 15.

Vid. Ezek. 16.

2. And his Wiſdom enforces the ſame: God made the world to expreſs his goodneſs, and to diſplay his glory; and his goodneſs who can be ſenſible of? his glory who can perceive, who can promote, but man? but he who is endewed with reaſon, enabling him to reflect upon the good he feels, to admire the excellency he diſcovers, to render grateful acknowledgments for the one, to utter acclamations of praiſe to the other? which purpoſes yet will be utterly (or at leaſt, in great meaſure) fruſtrated, ſhould God for ever ſuffer men to continue in ſuch ignorance, doubt or miſtake concerning himſelf; if men are not fully perſwaded that he made the world and governs it, how can they pay thoſe due homages of dread to his glorious power, of admiration to his excellent wiſdom, of love to his tranſcendent goodneſs? This grand theatre would (as it were) ſtand uſeleſs, and all the wonders acted thereupon would appear in vain, ſhould there be wanting a ſpectatour; ſhould man be altogether blind or heedleſs; yea man's faculty it ſelf, that his ſeeing faculty of mind would ſignifie nothing, were there not a light rendring things viſible to him. Common ſenſe hath dictated to men, that man is capable of ſhewing reſpect, of performing duty and ſervice to God, that alſo God requires and expects them from him; the ſame declares, that God beſt knows what kinds of ſervice, what expreſſions of reſpect beſt pleaſe him. Reaſon tells, that God would have man act in the beſt manner, according to the deſign of his nature; that he would have the affairs of men proceed in ſome good order, that he even deſires earneſtly the good of men, and delights in their happineſs: and if ſo, 'tis reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that being moſt wiſe he ſhould diſpoſe fit means for accompliſhing thoſe ends; for ſecuring himſelf, as it were, from diſappointment; that therefore he ſhould impart to men a competent knowledge of himſelf, ſhould declare his good will and pleaſure to them, ſhould reveal both the beſt way of their ſerving him, and the beſt means of their attaining happineſs to themſelves. So divine wiſdom grounds an argument for our ſuppoſition.

3. God's Juſtice alſo ſeems not a little to favour it; every good Governour thinks it juſt to take care that his ſubjects ſhould underſtand his pleaſure, and be acquainted with his laws; he cauſes them therefore to be ſolemnly promulgated, that all may take notice; if any of them by long diſuſe are become unknown, he revives the knowledge of them by new proclamations; to quicken obedience he propounds fit rewards, and deters from diſobedience by menacing ſutable puniſhments, knowing man's nature reſty and unapt to move without theſe ſpurs: And is it likely the ſovereign Governour and Judge of all the world ſhould obſerve leſs equity in his adminiſtrations? that he ſhould neglect any means neceſſary or apt to promote his ſubjects performance of their duty, to prevent the breaches of his laws? He that loves righteouſneſs above all, he that ſo earneſtly deſires to be duly obeyed, he that infinitely delights in his ſubjects good; can he fail ſufficiently to declare his will, to encourage men to comply with it, to terrifie them from tranſgreſſing it? will he ſuffer his laws to remain unknown, or uncertain; will he not conſider the infirmities of his ſubjects, will he leave any fair apology for diſobedience? No, the ſuperlative juſtice of God ſeems to perſwade the contrary.

4. I might add, that generally it ſeems unbecoming the Majeſty divine, that he ſhould endure the world, his kingdom, to continue under a perpetual uſurpation and tyranny; to ſuffer, that his imperial throne ſhould be poſſeſſed, his authority abuſed, his name inſulted over by enemies and rebels againſt him; (by evil ſpirits, whether thoſe of hell, or thoſe on earth) that a cruel fiend, that a curſed ghoſt, that a brute beaſt, that a chimæra of man's fancy ſhould be worſhipped, while himſelf is forgotten and neglected, is diſhonoured and deſpiſed; that iniquity and wickedneſs (with all the filthy brood of ignorance and errour) ſhould every where flouriſh and domineer, while righteouſneſs and vertue lie proſtrate and are trampled upon: This ſurely the King of glory, the great patron of goodneſs will not permit to be; ſooner rather ther may we conceive that, to remove theſe indecencies and theſe miſchiefs, he would preſently turn the world into a deſart and ſolitude, or pour a deluge of water over the face of the earth, or with flames of vengeance conſume it into aſhes.

Act. 10. 38.
Eph. 2. 2.

We cannot indeed judge or determine concerning the ſpecial circumſtances or limits of God's dealing toward man in this particular; concerning the time when, the manner how, the meaſure according to which God will diſpenſe thoſe revelations of himſelf; thoſe depend upon myſteries of counſel and wiſdom ſurpaſſing our comprehenſion: That God ſhould for a while connive at mens ignorance, and ſuffer them to grope after divine truth; to try them, as he did the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, how they would behave themſelves in that ſtate; to prove how they would uſe their talent of natural light, to make them ſenſible of their own infirmity, to ſhew them whence all their welfare muſt proceed, on whom all their happineſs depends, to make them more able to value, more deſirous to embrace the redreſs vouchſafed them; as alſo, to demonſtrate his own great clemency, long-ſuffering and patience; that I ſay for ſuch purpoſes, and others unſearchable by our ſhallow underſtanding, God ſhould for ſome time forbear, with a full evidence to declare all his mind to men, is not ſo ſtrange or unlikely; but that for ever, through all courſes of time, he ſhould leave men in ſo forlorn a condition, in ſuch a depth of ignorance, ſuch perplexity of doubt, ſuch captivity under ſin, ſuch ſubjection to miſery, ſeems not probable, much leſs can it ſeem unprobable that he hath done it: It cannot, I ſay, in any reaſon ſeem miſbecoming the goodneſs, wiſdom or juſtice of God clearly to diſcover to us, what he requires us to doe, what good he intends for us, what way leads to our happineſs, how we may avoid miſery. This conſideration if it do not prove peremptorily, that God cannot but ſometime make ſuch a revelation, nor that he yet hath actually done it (foraſmuch as we cannot reach the utmoſt poſſibilities of things, nor are fit judges of what God muſt neceſſarily doe; although to my apprehenſion this ſort of reaſoning, with due caution uſed, ſubſiſting in general terms, and not over preciſely applying it to particular caſes (implicated by circumſtances and ſpecialties not falling under our judgment) hath great force;) yet it removes all obſtruction to our belief, and diſpoſes us with more readineſs to admit the reaſons which follow: For it being not unprobable, yea according to the reaſon of the thing very probable that he ſhould doe it, we have cauſe with attention and expectation of ſucceſs on this hand to regard the arguments that pretend to prove he hath done it.

Act. 17 27,30. 14. 16.
Deut. 8. 15, 16.
Exod. 16. 8.

Vid. Gen. 15, 16, &c.

This is the firſt ſtep of our diſcourſe, at which we ſhall ſtop for the preſent.

And

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XIV.

OF THE Impiety & Impoſture OF PAGANISM AND MAHOMETANISM.

EPHES. I. 13.

In whom ye alſo (truſted) having heard the word of truth, the goſpel of your ſalvation.

THAT the Chriſtian doctrine is what S. Paul here calls it, a word of truth, and did proceed from the God of truth, is the Propoſition we are endeavouring to verify and perſuade. To that purpoſe we did firſt diſcourſe, that it is very probable God ſhould ſometime clearly and fully reveal his mind to men, concerning matters relating to his own glory and ſervice, their good and happineſs.

II. I now proceed another ſtep, and aſſert, that no other Revelation of that kind and importance hath been made; that no other Religion, which hath been or is now in being, can with good probability pretend to have thus proceeded from God; ſo as by him to have been deſigned for a general, a perpetual, a complete inſtruction, and obligation of mankind. There have appeared but three pretences thereto, that of ancient Paganiſm, that of Mahometaniſm, and that of Judaiſm (for the more particular pretenſions of enthuſiaſtical Impoſtours have been ſubordinate either to Chriſtianity it ſelf, or to one of thoſe; and beſides having found no conſiderable progreſs or continuance in the world, nor countenance (as it were) from providence, are not pertinent to this conſideration, beſides that they are all generally diſclaimed) but that none of thoſe three pretences are well grounded, I ſhall, examining each briefly, ſhew: (briefly, I ſay, for I need not inſiſt on them largely, the matter having paſt ſo many good pens, eſpecially that excellent one of Grotius; however it falling in my way and method, I ſhall offer what hath concerning it occurr'd to my thoughts.)

For the firſt, ancient Paganiſm; it did indeed (in the parcels thereof or by retail) pretend to a kind of divine Revelation; that it derived its notions and its forms of practice from the direction of inviſible powers, given to ſingle perſons or places, in ſeveral ways, (by immediate apparition, by prophetical inſpiration, by ſignificant events or prodigies) but it did not, nor could not pretend to any one uniform revelation from the ſovereign God ſolemnly delivered and directed to all mankind; which is an argument not only that thoſe pretended revelations were imperfect and inſufficient to the ends propounded, but alſo falſe and counterfeit: For we may well ſuſpect thoſe edicts, which are clancularly ſet up in corners, and which run not in the King's name, nor are marked with his royal ſignature, to have proceeded from impoſtours, or from rebels; eſpecially if the matter of them doth not advance, but depreſs his authority; doth not promote but prejudice his intereſt; doth not comport with, but contravene his pleaſure, otherwiſe declared. And ſuch was the manner, ſuch the matter of thoſe Pagan revelations. Put the whole body of that Religion (if I may ſo call it) together, and you have nothing but a lump of confuſion and inconſiſtency, of deformity and filthineſs, of vanity and folly, little as may be therein tending to the reverence of God, or to the good of man; to the promoting vertue and goodneſs in humane converſation, to the breeding love and goodwill in men toward one another, to the maintaining juſtice, peace and good order in ſocieties; much apt to produce the contrary effects. It was not (I ſay) ever one ſimple or uniform, one fixed or conſtant thing, but according to difference of place and time various, and mutable; diverſly ſhaped and model'd according to the fancy and humour, deſign or intereſt of the ſtate that allowed, the prieſts that managed it, and the people that received it; a plain ſign (that excepting ſome general ſcattered notions deduced from ancient Tradition) it did wholly proceed from humane device, or from a worſe cauſe (the ſuggeſtion of evil ſpirits, abuſing the fondneſs and pravity of men.) Survey it, and what ſhall you find therein, but a bundle of idle, ill contrived, incredible and inconſiſtent ſtories; (arguing nothing of truth or ſincerity, little of wit or diſcretion in thoſe who invented them) thoſe attended by practices fooliſh, lewd and cruel; unworthy of humane nature, contrary to common ſenſe and honeſty? Their worſhip (that of the ſupreme Lord being neglected, &c.) you will ſee directed towards objects moſt improper and unbecoming: to the ghoſts of dead men; men in their lives (if we may truſt the reports of their devouteſt adorers) famous for nothing ſo much as for vicious enormities, for thefts and rapine, for murthers and parricides, for horrid luſts, adulteries, rapes and inceſts; and ſuch perſons, alive or dead, what good or wiſe man would not rather loath and deſpiſe, than worſhip or reſpect? to ſomewhat, though not otherwiſe yet, in degree of nature worſe than thoſe, even to brute beaſts; to the moſt vile, the moſt miſchievous of them; (dogs, ſerpents, crocodiles) to pay veneration unto which how unſpeakably abject a mind doth it argue? yea they ſtooped lower, even to creatures inanimate, to the ſtars and elements, to rivers and trees, and other ſuch things, which we ſee acting by natural neceſſity, not yielding any ſignification of underſtanding, of

Indè furor vulgò, quòd numina vicinorum
Odit uterque locus, dum ſolos credit Habendos Eſſe Deos, quos ipſe colit.-- Juv. Sat. 15.

ſenſe, of life in them; which therefore, ſo far inferiour to us in nature, how ſottiſh a baſeneſs was it to adore? nay, they deſcended to a lower degree, if it may be, of folly, dedicating temples, and offering ſacrifices to things even void of ſubſiſtence; to mere qualities and accidents of things, to the paſſions of our minds, to the diſeaſes of our bodies, to the accidents of our lives: Who would think any man could be ſo mad as to reckon impudence, that odious vice; a fever, that troubleſome diſeaſe; or fortune (that unaccountable name of nothing; which wiſe men ſo little truſt, and fools ſo much complain of) among things divine and venerable? Can I mention any thing worſe than all theſe, which the degenerate ignorance, and naughtineſs of man hath crouched to? yes, (with a folly of all moſt wretched and deplorable) they fawned upon, they obeyed, they offered their deareſt pledges of life and fortune to the ſworn enemies as of God and goodneſs, ſo of their own good and welfare, to the very curſed fiends of hell: whom, if they had been extremely blind and ſenſeleſs, by the quality of thoſe rites and myſteries they ſuggeſted (ſo bloudy and cruel, ſo lewd and foul) they might eaſily have detected to be ſo. Such objects as theſe was their devotion ſpent upon, to theſe they paid their reſpect, in theſe they repoſed their confidence; And was ſuch a Religion likely to proceed from God, was it like to produce any glory to him, or any benefit to man? from ſuch thorns what fruits can we hope ſhould ſprout of good life, of ſound morality? what piety toward God, what juſtice, truth or goodneſs toward man; what ſobriety or purity in themſelves can we expect ſhould ariſe from ſuch conceits, and ſuch practices? ſurely, no other than thoſe, which S. Paul deſcribes in the firſt Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans, and in the ſecond of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, and S. Peter 1. 4. 3. which hiſtory plainly ſhews to have been no ſlanderous imputations upon Gentiliſm. If any good did appear in the converſation of ſome men, who followed that Religion, it is not to be imputed to the influence of that, but to ſome better cauſe; to the reliques of good nature, to the glimmerings of natural light, breaking forth in ſome, and by their precept or example conveyed to others; to the neceſſary experience concerning the miſchiefs of vice, and advantages of vertue; or (perhaps alſo) to ſecret whiſpers and impreſſions of divine grace upon ſome mens minds, vouchſafed in pity to them and others whom they might teach or lead into ways ſomewhat better, than thoſe common ones of extreme wickedneſs and folly; to theſe, I ſay, or ſuch cauſes all inſtances of practice in any meaſure innocent or commendable may rather be aſcribed, than to that Religion, which was much apter to corrupt and debauch, than to better or civilize men; for with what intention ſoever they were ſpoken, there was not much of real calumny in thoſe words of Lucretius

> ——————ſæpius olim
> Religio peperit ſcelerata, atque improba facta.

But it is needleſs to diſcourſe much againſt that which hath no reaſonable patron, and which ſcarce any wiſe man, when it was in faſhon, did ſeriouſly think to have had any truth or reality in it. Plato, you know, often inveighs againſt the inventers of thoſe beaſtly Fables in heathen Theology (upon which yet all the œconomy of their religious practice did depend;) Ariſtotle attributes the conſtitution of thoſe Religions to Ariſt. Metaph. 12. 8.
the ſubtilty of Stateſmen; there is none of the Fathers, I think, or any other diſputer againſt Heatheniſm who hath more directly or earneſtly oppugned it than Pliny hath: There was few or none of the Philo- Lib. 2. cap. 7.

ſophers, who did not ſignify his diſlike or contempt of the vulgar opinions and practices concerning Religion; what Cicero ſaith of one part, the wiſer ſort did judge of all: Tota res eſt inventa fallaciis aut ad quæſtum, aut ad ſuperſtitionem, aut ad errorem (the whole buſineſs was deceitfully forged either for gain, or out of ſuperſtition, or from miſtake.) They did indeed, moſt or all of them, in their external behaviour comply with common practice, out of a politick diſcretion, for their ſafety and quiet ſake; but in their inward thoughts and judgments they (as by many paſſages in their Writings doth appear) believed nothing, nor liked any thing in it: they obſerved thoſe things (as Seneca ſaid) tanquam legibus juſſa, non tanquam diis grata (not as acceptable to the gods themſelves, but as commanded by the laws of their country.) And indeed this diſſimulation was ſo notorious, that even the vulgar diſcerned it; and therefore ſeldom the wiſer men were reputed among them the moſt religious, but liable to accuſation for impiety; and ſome of them ye know ſuffered extremities upon that ſcore, who could not altogether conceal that contempt, which the vanity of popular ſuperſtitions had begotten toward them in their hearts.

Vid. Plut. de ſuperſt. p. 291. De Leg. X. &c. De div. p 240. Tuſc. 9. 1. Ep. 301.

Hæc & dicuntur & creduntur ſtultiſſimè, & plena ſunt futilitatis, ſummæque levitatis. Balbus in Cic. de N. D. 2.

Vid. Auguſt. de Civit. D. lib. 4. 33. lib. 6. 10.

I might add that all thoſe Pagan Religions did vaniſh together with the countenance of ſecular authority and power, ſuſtaining them; which ſhews plainly enough, that they had little or no root in the hearty belief or approbation of thoſe who profeſſed them.

And thus much may ſuffice, I ſuppoſe, to declare, that Paganiſm did not proceed from divine Revelation, but from humane invention or ſuggeſtion Diabolical.

I ſhall only adjoin that the conſidering this caſe of Heathens may be of good uſe, (and to that uſe indeed S. Paul hath largely applied it) in confirming what we before urged, The great need of ſome full and plain Revelation to the world of God's mind, in order to God's glory and man's good; as alſo it is of ſingular uſe (which alſo the ſame Apoſtle frequently did put it to) by the contemplation thereof to diſcover our great obligations to bleſs and thank God for his great mercy in revealing his heavenly truth to us, from whence we are freed from errours and miſchiefs ſo deplorable; which otherwiſe from humane infirmity, and the Devil's malice we ſhould eaſily (and in a manner neceſſarily) have incurred.

That pretence was ancienter in ſtanding; but there hath even ſince Chriſtianity ſtarted up another, (Mahometaniſm) which if not upon other accounts, yet in reſpect to its age, and to the port it bears in the world, demands ſome conſideration; for it hath continued a long time, and hath vaſtly over-ſpread the earth: neither is it more formidable in its looks, than peremptory in his words; vanting it ſelf to be no leſs than a complete, a general, an ultimate declaration of God's pleaſure, cancelling and voiding all others that have gone before. But examining both the ſubſtance and circumſtances thereof, conſidering the quality of the inſtruments by whom, of the times when, it was introduced; of the places where, of the people who firſt, or afterward did receive it; the manner of its riſe, progreſs and continuance; as alſo the matter it teaches, or injoins; we ſhall not find ſtamped on it the genuine characters of a divine original and authority; but have great reaſon to deem it a brood of moſt lewd and impudent cozenage. In times of great diſturbance and confuſion, when barbarous nations, like torrents, did overflow the world, and turned all things upſide down; in times of general corruption and diſorder in mens minds and manners, when even among Chriſtians ignorance and ſuperſtition, diſſenſion and uncharitableneſs, impiety and iniquity did greatly prevail; in a very blind and obſcure corner of the earth, among a crew of wild thieves and runagates (ſuch have thoſe Arabians been always famed and known to be) this Sect had its birth and foſterage; among thoſe fierce and ſavage over-runners of the world it got its growth and ſtature; into this ſort of people (being indeed in its conſtitution well accommodated to their humour and genius) it was partly inſinuated by jugling tricks, partly driven by ſeditious violence; the firſt Authour hereof being a perſon, according to the deſcription given of him in their own Legends, of no honeſt, or honourable qualities, but having all the marks of an Impoſtour; rebellious and perfidious, inhumane and cruel, lewd and laſcivious, of a baſe education, of a fraudulent and turbulent diſpoſition, of a vicious life, pretending to enthuſiaſms, and working of wonders; but theſe ſuch as were both in their nature abſurd and incredible, and for their uſe vain and unprofitable: at ſuch a ſeaſon, and in ſuch a ſoil, by ſuch means, and by ſuch a perſon (abetted by Aſſociates like himſelf, whom his arts, or their intereſts had inveagled to join with him) was this Religion firſt planted; And for its propagation it had that great advantage of falling in the way of barbarous people, void of learning and civility, and not prepoſſeſſed with other notions or any ſenſe of Religion; who thence (as mankind is naturally ſuſceptive of religious impreſſions) were capable and apt to admit any Religion firſt offering it ſelf, eſpecially one ſo groſs as this was, ſo agreeable to their furious humours and luſts. Afterward being furniſhed with ſuch Champions, it diffuſed it ſelf by rage and terrour of arms; convincing mens minds only by the ſword, and uſing no other arguments but blows. Upon the ſame grounds of ignorance and force, it ſtill ſubſiſts; neither offering for, nor taking againſt it ſelf any reaſon; refuſing all examination, and upon extreme penalties forbidding any diſpute about its truth; being indeed ſo far (whether out of judgment or fatal inſtinct) wiſe, as conſcious to its ſelf, or foreboding, that the letting in of a little light, and a moderate liberty of diſcuſſing its pretences would eaſily overthrow it. Now that Divine wiſdom ſhould chuſe thoſe black and boiſterous times to publiſh his will is, as if the King ſhould purpoſely order his Proclamations to be made in a tempeſtuous night, when no man ſcarce dared to ſtir out, nor any man could well ſee what was done, or hear what was ſaid; much fitter ſurely to that purpoſe were a ſerene and calm day; a time of general civility and peace, like that of Auguſtus Cæſar. That the declaration of God's mind ſhould iſſue from the deſarts of Arabia (that den of robbers) is as if the King ſhould cauſe his Edicts to be ſet up in the blindeſt and dirtieſt nook of the Suburbs; the Market-croſs ſurely, or the Exchange (the place of moſt general and ordinary concourſe) ſuch as, in reſpect to the world, was the flouriſhing Empire of Rome, were more convenient, and wiſely choſen for that purpoſe: that paſſing over the more gentle and tractable part of his people, a Prince ſhould ſend his laws to a rabble of Banditti; ſhould pick out for his meſſenger a moſt diſſolute Varlet; attended with a crew of deſperate ruffians, reſolved to buffet and rifle all they met; were an odd way of proceeding: To communicate his pleaſure unto the better and more orderly ſort of people (ſuch as were the ſubjects of that well governed Empire) by perſons of good meaning, mild diſpoſition, and innocent behaviour, (ſuch as were the Apoſtles of our Lord) in a quiet and gentle manner (ſuch as theſe only uſed) would ſurely better become a worthy Prince: Thus even the exteriour circumſtances of Mahometaniſm (both abſolutely and in compariſon) belonging to its riſe, its growth, its continuance (ſo full of indecency, of iniquity, of inhumanity) ground ſtrong preſumptions againſt its divinity; or rather plainly demonſtrate, that it could not proceed from God, whoſe truth cannot need ſuch inſtruments, or ſuch courſes to maintain it, whoſe goodneſs certainly abhors them. But farther, if we look into the matter and inward frame thereof, we ſhall find it a maſs of abſurd opinions, odd ſtories, and uncouth ceremonies; compounded chiefly of the dregs of Chriſtian Hereſies, together with ſome ingredients of Judaiſm and Paganiſm confuſedly jumbled, or unskilfully tempered together. From Chriſtian Hereſies it ſeems to have derived its negative Doctrines, oppoſite to Chriſtianity; as for inſtance, when allowing Chriſt much reſpect, it yet denies his being the Son of God; and that he did really Suffer; rejecting his true ſtory, it affixes falſe ones upon him: as alſo ſome poſitive ones; for example, that unreaſonable opinion, ſo much miſ-beſeeming God, that God hath a body (Mahomet forſooth once touched his hand, and felt it very cold) might be drawn from the Anthropomorphites; that Doctrine concerning the fatal determination of all events (ſo prejudicial to all religion, ſubverting the foundations of juſtice between God and man, man's free choice in ſerving God, God's free diſpoſal of rewards ſutable to mens actions) they probably borrowed from the Manichees, a Sect that much obtained in thoſe Eaſtern parts. The Jew contributed his ceremonies of Circumciſion and frequent purgations by waſhing, his abſtinence from ſwines fleſh, his allowance of polygamy and divorce: I might add that perhaps from him they filcht that proud inhumane, and uncivil humour of monopolizing divine favour and good-will to themſelves; ſo of reſtraining their own kindneſs and reſpect to perſons of their profeſſion, or ſect; condemning, deſpiſing, and hating all the world beſide themſelves; calling all others dogs, and adjudging all to certain damnation; and which is more, affirming, that all of their belief, how wicked ſoever their lives have been, ſhall at length aſſuredly partake of ſalvation; ſo partial do they make Almighty God, ſo addicted to a mere name and outward ſhew; feigning him as in ſhape, ſo in paſſions humane and like themſelves. Indeed in this main part of religion, a true notion of God, his nature, his attributes, his method of providence, their doctrine is very peccant, repreſenting him in his nature and actions very unworthily. Their deſcriptions concerning the ſtate of men after death (that main and principal part of Religion, which gives life and vigour to the reſt) whence can we better deduce its original, than from the Pagan notions or ſtories of Elyſium and Hades; what better pattern can we find, whence that paradiſe of corporeal delight, or rather of brutiſh ſenſuality, ſhould be tranſcribed, which any man ſees how poor an encouragement it is, how unworthy a reward to vertue; yea, how much it is apt to detract from, to diſcourage all performances of reaſon and honeſty? The like we might ſay of the puniſhments (which in due correſpondence to the rewards they propound) they only or chiefly inflict upon the body; the main part, it ſeems, of which a Mahometan man conſiſts. And muſt he not be very ſtupid, who can ſuffer himſelf to be perſuaded, that ſuch conceits (conceits favourable indeed to pleaſure, and indulgent to the fleſh, but contrary to vertue, prejudicial to the ſpirit and reaſon of man) ſhould come from the God of wiſdom and holineſs? Farther, how Mahomet was inſpired, his ſtories alone will evince; ſtories patched up out of old hiſtories corrupted, mangled and tranſplaced; interlarded with fabulous Legends, contrary to all probable records of hiſtory (the names, places, times, and all the circumſtances whereof he moſt unskilfully changes and confounds) yea repugnant to the nature and poſſibility of things; ſo that in a manner every tale he tells is an evident argument of an ignorant, and an impudent Impoſtour; And he that ſo blunders and falſifies about matters of fact, who will truſt him in matters of right and reaſon? which things, if it were worth the while, might by various inſtances be ſhewed; and you may every where receive ſatisfaction therein. The like might be ſaid concerning its multitude of ſilly ceremonies, grounded on no reaſonable deſign, nor ſubſervient to any purpoſe of vertue; the inſtitution whereof no man therefore without injury to the divine wiſdom can impute thereto. But I ſhall onely add two farther conſiderations upon this matter: One; that whatever is good or plauſible in this Religion (ſuch as are ſome precepts of juſtice and charity, although theſe confined among themſelves) may reaſonably be ſuppoſed taken from Chriſtianity, which being ſeniour in ſtanding may (in points wherein both agree) well go for the miſtreſs; and however that upon the ſcore of ſuch doctrines or laws, we have no reaſon to think this Religion came from God; for why ſhould he reveal that again, which in a larger extent, upon better grounds, with more advantage he had declared before; which alſo then was commonly embraced and acknowledged? I alſo obſerve, that this Religion by its own free conceſſions doth evidently deſtroy its ſelf: for it admits Chriſtianity once to have been a true doctrine, proceeding from and atteſted to by God: but Chriſtianity did ever declare it ſelf to be a general, perpetual, perfect and immutable Rule of faith and practice; that never any acceſſions thereto, any alterations thereof ought to be made or admitted; that whatever ſpirit (coming after it) ſhould offer to innovate, or pretend to new diſcoveries contrary to, or different from it, muſt be ſuſpected of deluſion; foretelling and forewarning againſt ſuch endeavours that ſhould appear, as fallacious and miſchievous: this it appears (by the Writings of thoſe, who firſt planted Chriſtianity; Writings, which no man in his wits can queſtion to be theirs; being through a continual uninterrupted courſe of times, from the beginning, by general conſent of both friends and adverſaries acknowledged and atteſted to as ſo; all characters within them imaginably proper for that purpoſe confirming the ſame; as alſo by the current tradition of their diſciples immediate and mediate, extant in records unqueſtionable; and by all other means conceivable) this, I ſay, it moſt plainly appears was one grand doctrine and pretence of Chriſtianity at firſt, which the Mahometans acknowledging originally true and divine in the groſs, muſt conſequently grant it ſelf to be an Impoſture.

And thus much ſeems ſufficient to demonſtrate that Religion not to be of a divine extraction. I ſhall next proceed to conſider the pretences of Judaiſm; and to ſhew that neither it was ſuch a perfect Revelation, as we proved it probable God would vouchſafe to make: But that ſhall be the ſubject of another diſcourſe.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XV.

OF THE IMPERFECTION OF THE Jewiſh Religion.

EPH. I. 13.

In whom ye alſo (truſted) having heard the word of truth, the goſpel of your ſalvation.

THAT it is probable God ſhould vouchſafe to Mankind a full and clear declaration of his mind and will concerning their duty, and their welfare; I did ſhew: That Paganiſm and Mahometaniſm without reaſon and truth did or does pretend thereto I alſo briefly diſcourſed; I now proceed to examine the plea, which Judaiſm puts in; and to make good that neither It is well grounded (which, as the cauſe deſerves, I ſhall doe ſomewhat more largely.) The Jewiſh Religion we acknowledge had its birth from the revelation and appointment of God; its truth, and its goodneſs we do not call in queſtion; but yet looking into it, we ſhall find it in many reſpects defective, and wanting the conditions due to ſuch a revelation, as we require. For it was not univerſal; (neither being directed to, nor fitted for the nature and needs of mankind;) it was not full and compleate, it was not deſigned to be of perpetual obligation, or uſe. Heb. 7. 18,19.

1. Firſt, I ſay, this Revelation was not general; not directed to, or intended for to inſtruct and oblige mankind: it ſelf expreſly affirms ſo much; the whole tenour and frame thereof ſhews it; ſo do all the circumſtances of its riſe and progreſs. That it was intended peculiarly for that ſmall Nation, poſſeſſing a very inconſiderable portion of the earth; diſtinguiſhed, and indeed, as it were, concealed from the reſt of mankind both on purpoſe, and in effect; for it ſo remained for many Ages, (till the Macedonian firſt, and afterward the Roman conqueſts opened the world and diſcloſed them) hid in a ſolitary obſcurity; even ſo far as to ſcape the obſervation of the moſt inquiſitive ſurveyours of the earth, the moſt curious ſearchers into the cuſtoms of all people (as of Herodotus for inſtance, who nicely deſcribing the places and manners of the People all about them, could not diſcern them, and takes no notice of them, although for their peculiar manners otherwiſe moſt remarkable, and deſerving his mention,) appears by expreſs paſſages in their law, and holy writings: He ſheweth his word unto Jacob, his ſtatutes and his judgments unto Iſrael; He hath not dealt ſo with any nation; and his judgments they have not known them: 'Tis plainly affirmed, that God did make that diſcovery of his will and mind peculiarly to that people, and to no other, I the Lord am holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine; (ſaith God to the Jews:) So ſhall we be ſeparated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth (ſaith Moſes in his addreſs to God;) Thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God; The Lord hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people unto himſelf, above all people that are upon the face of the earth (ſaith Moſes to that people;) which paſſages (together with divers others of the ſame import) being uſed to engage and encourage a ſingular obedience, do plainly ſay, that God tranſacted with that people ſingly and ſeparately from all other; taking them (on purpoſe) as it were, into a corner, at a good diſtance and beyond hearing of others, that he might there ſignify alone to them his pleaſure, peculiarly concerning them. Yea to this purpoſe, of maintaining a diſtance and diſtinction from the reſt of mankind, divers of their laws were appointed; as not onely the nature of ſuch laws doth imply, but words annexed to them ſometimes expreſs; I am the Lord your God, which have ſeparated you from other people; ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean. Whence Saint Paul calls their law μεσότοιχον φραγμοῦ, a partition wall, that fenced that nation, and ſevered it from others; and an enmity, being framed to ſet them in diſtance and variance from the reſt of men. That whole buſineſs alſo of this conſtitution is frequently ſtyled a covenant, made not between God and mankind, but between God and that ſingle nation; a covenant in formal terms mentioning them, and them onely; ſealed with marks and characters peculiar to them; requiring conditions and duties poſſible or proper onely for them to perform; exhibiting promiſes onely ſutable to them; propounding rewards which they onely were capable to receive; and puniſhments, which they onely could undergo. Hear, O Iſrael, is the uſual ſtyle, according to which thoſe laws are directed, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt; is the introduction to the Decalogue it ſelf (which among all parts of that law looks faireſt towards a general importance and obligation; which yet is ſo ſpecially directed, and is indeed peculiarly called the covenant between God and that people; viz. Synecdochically, as being the principal part directive of their duty.) In the body of the laws it ſelf, there is often made a diſtinction between them who were bound to obſerve it and others that were not; between brethren and ſtrangers; between Hebrews and Aliens; with duties ſuited and limited in regard to that diſtinction: (as in the caſes of remitting debts, releaſing ſervants, exacting uſe, and the like;) There are enjoined duties which others could not properly, or decently perform; ſuch as obſervation of Feaſts in commemoration and thankfulneſs for mercies vouchſafed to that Nation; as alſo others which could not be obſerved by all men with any poſſibility or convenience; ſuch as thoſe of repairing thrice a year to one certain place, eſtabliſhed for God's worſhip; of bringing tithes and oblations thither,

Pſal. 147.
Pſal. 76. 2.
Levit. 20. 26.
Exod. 33. 16.
They were not to marry, not to trade, to converſe, &c. Vid. Grot. in Evang. p. 130.
Deut. 7. 6. 14. 2.
Levit. 20. 24.
Eph. 2. 14.
Deut. 4. 13. 29. 14, 25, &c.
Deut. 4. 1. 5. 1. 6. 3. &c.
Pſal. 81. 8.
Deut. 4. 13.
Exod. 34. 28.
Deut. 17. 15. 1. 16.
Exod. 25. 46.
Deut. 15. 3. 12.
Levit. 25. 47, &c.
Deut. 16. 1.
Deut. 16. 16. 14. 21, &c.
Exod. 23. 19, &c.

Deut. 5. 33.
Deut. 6. 3, &c.
Moſes novos ritus, contrarióſque cæteris mortalibus indidit. Tac. 5.
Cætera Inſtituta ſiniſtra, fœda pravitate valuere.

and the like; neither was the number of Prieſts and Levites, ſet a-part for God's ſervice, proportioned otherwiſe, than in reſpect to that one people. The encouragements alſo and rewards promiſed to obedience do incommunicably pertain to them, as alſo the diſcouragements from and puniſhments for diſobedience; a long and proſperous enjoyment of the Land of Canaan was the meed ſet before them, if they ſhould obey and make good their part of the covenant; a diſpoſſeſſion thereof, or affliction in it, was the puniſhment threatned, if they ſhould preſume to diſobey, and violate thoſe engagements; Ye ſhall walk in all the Laws, which the Lord your God hath commanded you; that ye may live, and that it may be well with you; and that ye may prolong your days in the land, which ye poſſeſs. Hear therefore, O Iſrael, and obſerve to doe it; that it may be well with thee, and that ye may encreaſe mightily, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee, in the land that floweth with milk and honey: Such were the promiſes exciting to obedience; and the threatnings deterring from diſobedience were anſwerable, as every-where in their law and ſtory is viſible.

I may alſo hereto add; that as the laws and rites of this Religion were deſigned only for this People, as they did onely agree to their circumſtances; ſo they were onely ſuted to their inclinations, and their capacities; their inclinations, which were very ſtubborn and perverſe; their capacities, which were very low and groſs, as their own Prophets do upon many occaſions affirm and complain; being diſſentaneous and repugnant to the common humour and genius of mankind: ſo experience diſcovered them to be, when they became more apparent and obſervable: Judæorum mos abſurdus, ſordidúſque: (The Jewiſh way of life is uncouth and ſordid, was Tacitus his cenſure; Hiſt. V. 5.) and, They run counter to all men (was S. Paul's imputation on that People; 1 Theſſ. 2. 15.) to which the general conceit of men concerning them did agree; ſo little plauſible, or probable was their way; ſo liable to diſlike and contempt, which argues it unfit to be commended by the God of wiſdom to the generality of mankind.

Deut. 7. 7.

By which and many other like conſiderations obvious enough may appear, that this diſpenſation was not (either according to its nature, or in its deſign) general, or ſuch as reſpected the main body of mankind, but rather very particular and reſtrained; deſignedly reſtrained to the oblation and uſe of one place or people, if compared to the world of men, inconſiderably narrow and ſmall; the feweſt of all people God himſelf ſays they were.) That in fine, this conſtitution had onely the nature of a municipal law, impoſing burthens, and indulging privileges upon one City or Territory; not of a common civil ſanction, eſtabliſhed for the obligation, uſe and benefit of the whole Commonwealth, or Empire ſubject to the Almighty King.

Pſal. 145. 8.
Act. 17. 26.
The King of the World, the Judge of the earth.
Rom. 2.
Act. 10. 34.
1 Tim. 4. 10.
2. 4.
Wiſd. 6. 7. 11, 23, &c.

'Tis not therefore in reaſon to be taken for ſuch a Revelation, as we argued needfull for us, and to be expected from him, who (as the Pſalmiſt, as reaſon, as experience tells us) is good to all; and whoſe tender mercies are over all his works; from him, who is the common father of all, and (as S. Paul expreſſeth it) hath made of one bloud πᾶν ἔθνος ἀνθρώπων, the whole nation and commonwealth of mankind; from him, who cannot be in affection any-wiſe fond or partial; a reſpecter of perſons, or of nations (as Saint Paul in the ſecond to the Romans, and Saint Peter in the Acts alſo implies.) From him, who is not onely the Maker, but (as our Apoſtle alſo ſtyles him) the Saviour of all men; and (as even the Hebrew Wiſe-man aſſerts) careth for all alike; being de- ſirous that all men ſhould be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all men ſhould come to repentance. From him, who is not only φιλεβραῖος, or φιλέλλην, (a lover of Jews, or of Greeks;) but φιλάνθρωπος, a lover of men, and φιλόψυχος, a lover of ſouls; who, laſtly, is not the God of the Jews onely, but of the Gentiles alſo, as Saint Paul urges this argument; and as alſo the reaſon of the thing, and the voice of nature doth declare: From this God, I ſay, ſo diſpoſed, ſo related toward us all, ſo equally concerned in regard to us; ſo impartial in his affection, ſo unconfined in his bounty; we ſhould have reaſon to expect rather no Revelation at all, than one ſo ſcant, and pinched in ſuch narrow bounds; ſo ill proportioned to the glory due to himſelf, to the need and benefit of mankind. We cannot reaſonably imagine that he ſhould contract the effects of his goodneſs, or the manifeſtations of his glory to ſo ſlender a parcel of mankind, (no better qualified, no more deſerving ſuch ſpecial regard, than the reſt; as himſelf to repreſs their fond conceits, and, probably, in way of anticipation, to intimate his deſign of farther extending that favour in due ſeaſon to others, who might pretend thereto with as much right and reaſon as themſelves, doth ſometime declare.) That he, who hath freely diſpenſed the influences of Sun and Stars to all alike, ſhould cauſe the light of his heavenly truth to ſhine, as it were, but into one ſmall cloſet of his ſpacious houſe; leaving all the reſt, ſo many ſtately rooms thereof, encompaſſed with ſhades of ignorance and errour; that he ſhould pour down the ſhowres of his bleſſings ſpiritual (otherwiſe than he hath done thoſe natural) upon one onely ſcarce diſcernible ſpot of ground; letting all the world beſide (like a deſart of ſand) lie parched with drought, overſpread with deſolation and barrenneſs.

2 Pet. 3. 9.
Tit. 3. 4.
Sapient. 11. 26.
Rom. 3. 29.
Plat. Theæt. οὐδεὶς θεὸς δύσνους ἀνθρώποις.
Deut. 9. 4.
Matt. 5. 45.

This Revelation therefore was not in this reſpect ſufficient; wanting in its nature and deſign that due condition of generality and amplitude. But,

Ἐπὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς ὁ νόμος ἔκειτο, ὅτε οὐ πολλὴ ἀρίστης πολιτείας ἡ ἀκρίβεια, ὅτε εἰσαγωγὴ τοῦ θείου ἦν, ὅτε παιδικὰ τὰ παραγγέλματα, ὅτε τὸ γάλα, ὅτε ὁ παιδαγωγὸς, ὅτε ὁ λύχνος, ὅτε ὁ τύπος, καὶ ἡ σκιά. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 44.

2. Farther; As this Revelation was particular, ſo was it alſo partial; as God did not by it ſpeak his mind to all, ſo did he not therein ſpeak out all his mind. Our Apoſtle to the Hebrews chargeth it with blameableneſs; εἰ πρώτη ἦν ἄμεμπτος, if the firſt covenant had been blameleſs;) with imperfection, with weakneſs, with improfitableneſs, (ἀθέτησις μὲν γὰρ γίνεται προαγούσης ἐντολῆς διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενὲς, καὶ ἀνωφελές· Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος· There is made an abolition of the precedent commandment for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof: For the law made nothing perfect;) He means all this in degree and in compariſon to what was poſſible, and in ſome reſpects needfull. Which charge may be eaſily made good, (à priori) conſidering both the parts thereof which direct, and thoſe which excite to practice; together with the means and aids enabling, and facilitating obedience to the laws, or rules enjoined; alſo, (à poſteriori,) if we regard the fruits and effects thereof. Surveying firſt, I ſay, the directive part, we may obſerve both a redundancy in things circumſtantial or exteriour, and a defectiveneſs in things ſubſtantial and interiour: there be ritual inſtitutions in vaſt number very nicely deſcribed, and ſtrongly preſſed; The obſervation of times and places, the diſtinction of meats and of habits, (touch not, taſt not, handle not) corporeal cleanſings and purgations; modalities of exteriour performance in ſacrifices and oblations, thoſe δικαιώματα σαρκὸς (juſtifications of the mere fleſh, that onely concerned the body,

Heb. 8. 7.
7. 18.
Gal. 3. 21. οὐ δυν. ζωοποιεῖν.
Rom. 8. 3. τὸ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει.
Heb. 9. 9, 10.

body, or outward man, and could not perfect the obſervers conſcience; could neither ſatisfy or edify his mind and inward man) we ſee with extreme punctuality preſcribed and enjoined, ſome of them under very heavy penalties (of utter extermination and exciſion.) While moral duties (duties of juſtice and charity, yea of temperance and ſobriety it ſelf,) and ſpiritual devotions (ſo exceedingly more agreeable to rational nature, and which could not but be much more pleaſing to God) were more ſparingly delivered in precept, leſs clearly explained, not ſo fully urged with rational inducements; nor, in a due proportion guarded with rewards. Many things were plainly permitted, or tacitly connived at (as polygamy, and divorce; ſome kinds of retaliation, curſing, revenge; ſome degrees of uncharitableneſs) which even natural reaſon diſlikes, or condemns. So faulty was that diſpenſation as to the part thereof directive of life; and it was no leſs in that part, which promotes and ſecures good practice, by applying fit excitements to obedience, and fit reſtraints from diſobedience; rightly managing thoſe great inſtruments and ſprings of humane activity, natural courage, hope and fear. Nothing ſo damps mens alacrity in endeavour, as deſperation or diffidence of good ſucceſs; nothing ſo quickens it as a confidence, or ſtrong preſumption thereof: And how then could they be very earneſt in endeavours to pleaſe God, who were not aſſured of (yea had ſo much reaſon to diffide in) God's placability and readineſs (upon repentance) to forgive ſins wilfully and preſumptuouſly committed, ſuch as no man ſurely lives altogether free from? The not opening a door of mercy ſeems diſcouraging and apt to ſlacken performance of duty; what was then the ſhutting it up cloſe, the bolting it with that iron bar: Curſed is he, that abides not in all things written in this law to doe them? which at leaſt will exclude aſſurance, will quaſh the hopes of mercy; will conſequently enervate the ſinews of care and induſtry in ſerving God. Neither were the rewards of either kind (thoſe that ſpurr'd to obedience, thoſe that ſtop'd from diſodedience) in meaſure or in kind ſuch as the reaſon of things doth afford and require. They were onely temporal, and chiefly corporeal or ſenſible; ſuch as belonged to the outward ſtate of this tranſitory life, which neither can deſerve much regard, nor are apt to have great efficacy: for who will in effect, why ſhould any man in reaſon highly value the accommodations of this ſhort and uncertain life? who will, who ſhould be greatly terrified with the inconveniences thereof? whom probably would ſuch conſiderations ſufficiently animate to encounter and ſuſtain the perils, the difficulties, the troubles and the diſgraces, to which often the practice of vertue is expoſed? whom would they guard from the enchantments of pleaſure, profit and honour, alluring men to ſin? the pleaſures of ſenſe how improper an encouragement, how unworthy a recompence are they for the labours and atchievements of vertue? incomparably better ſurely, more worthy of regard, and more effectual upon man's reaſon; more apt to produce and to promote real vertue and hearty piety, are the rewards concerning the future ſtate of our immortal ſoul; which yet 'tis a queſtion whether that law doth ever mention; 'tis plain, it doth not clearly propound and apply them. Indeed as to evident diſcovery concerning the immortality of man's ſoul, or the future ſtate (ſo material a point of Religion, of ſo grand moment and influence upon practice) even the Gentile Theology (aſſiſted by ancient common Tradition) ſeems to have outgone the Jewiſh, grounding upon their revealed law;

Deut. 27. 26. Gal. 3. 10.

Ὅτε πάντα ἦν σαρκικά, καὶ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λόγος οὐδείς. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 98.

Περὶ οὐρανίων οὐδέποτε λόγος ἦν, οὐδὲ μελλόντων μνήμη, &c. Chryſ. ad Olymp. C. p. 60. Vid. Tom. 7. p. 16.

law; the Pagan Prieſts more expreſly taught, more frequently inculcated arguments drawn from thence, than the Hebrew Prophets; a plain inſtance and argument of the imperfection of this Religion.

I ſubjoin God's not thereby (in an ordinary certain way, according to any pact or promiſe) affording, or exhibiting ſuch interiour influences of grace upon the minds of men; as, conſidering the natural frailty, blindneſs and impotency of men, appears neceſſary to render them obedient to the rules of duty, to guide them in the ways of truth and goodneſs, to free them from errour and ſin, to ſhield and animate them againſt temptation; is a main defect in that Religion; apt to breed fear in the onſet upon duty, to nouriſh doubt in the performance thereof, to ſettle deſpair upon a fall or defeat. It preſented to mens eyes the obligation to duty, the difficulty thereof, the danger of tranſgreſſing it, but did not openly repreſent the means requiſitive to perform it. And what can be more diſcouraging or diſcomforting than to ſee ones ſelf, upon great peril and penalty, obliged to that, which is apparently very hard, or (conſidering his ſtrength) impoſſible, no help to ſupport being viſible? eſpecially joining the conſideration before touched, that no evaſion by pardon, no riſe by repentance doth appear. Whence we may well infer, that indeed, in effect, this diſpenſation was what Saint Paul calls it διακονία θανάτου & διακονία κατακρίσεως (a miniſtery of death and condemnation) a ſubjection to a curſe; a killing letter; bearing nothing leſs in the looks and language thereof, than certain death and unavoidable ruine; (a lying under inſupportable ſlavery both to the guilt and puniſhment of ſin.) If thou doeſt ill ſin lyeth at the door.

2 Cor. 3. 7, 9.
Gal. 3. 10.
2 Cor. 3. 6.
Gen. 4. 7.

Neither in diſcourſing thus do we lay any misbeſeeming imputation upon God, the Author of that Religion; the making ſo imperfect a Revelation no-wiſe being diſagreeable to his wiſedom, his goodneſs, or his juſtice. As for a time he might withhold the declaration of his mind to all mankind, ſo might he (upon the ſame or like grounds of wiſe counſel) forbear to declare ſome part thereof to that People: no ſpecial reaſon appears that could oblige, that might induce him not to be reſerved as well in part to theſe few men, as in whole to thoſe, all the reſt of men; yea, there be good reaſons aſſignable, why the divine wiſdom ſhould be then ſo ſparing of its mind, why God ſhould onely ſhew his back parts (as it were) to Moſes, and not let him ſee his face; (not diſcover all of his nature and of his pleaſure to him) why then he ſhould ſeem to delight in, to lay ſo much ſtreſs on thoſe carnal and ceremonious obſervances; why he ſhould forbear to exact that height of ſpiritual duty, and not draw men to complyance with the beſt motives of pure reaſon. A dawning of light perhaps more became that morning of times, than a meridian brightneſs; that infancy of the world was not it may be ripe for a more deep and perfect inſtruction; that Nation however (to whoſe ſtate, to whoſe diſpoſition and capacities thoſe laws and inſtitutions were adapted) was very unfit for the higheſt and hardeſt leſſons. For a Nation it was (as from infallible hands we have it) not wiſe, or conſiderate; not grave, or conſtant; not meek, or pliable; but a very ſtupid and heady, a very fickle and humorous, a very froward and ſtubborn generation of men; They are a nation void of counſel, neither is there any underſtanding (was ſaid of them at firſt by him, who delivered their law, or rather by God himſelf who injoined it) And, I knew that thou art obſtinate, and thy neck is an iron ſinew, and thy brow braſs: I have even from the beginning declared it to thee (ſaith the Prophet concerning the houſe of Jacob: alluding it ſeems to thoſe many paſſages

Deut. 32. 28.
Vid. Jer. 4. 22. 5. 4. Neh. 9.
Iſa. 48. 4.

Deut. 31. 27. Exod. 32. 9. Deut. 9. 6, 13, &c. paſſages in the Law, where they are termed a ſtiff-necked people: uncapable thence both of the fineſt notions and the more rigorous precepts; like children, by reaſon of the groſſneſs of their apprehenſion, and the unrulineſs Vid. Pſal. 78. 36. 57. of their paſſion they were not οἰκεῖοι ἀκροαταὶ (proper auditours) of a more pure and accurate diſcipline; wherefore as ſuch the divine wiſdom and goodneſs was pleaſed to deal with them; diſpenſing with the infirmities of their age, condeſcending to the meanneſs of their capacities, feeding them with milk, alluring them with pretty ſhews, ſcaring them with frightfull appearances, indulging them innocent trifles, paſtimes and ſports, ſo tempering his ordinances, as might beſt ſerve to keep them in good humour; to draw and entice them eaſily unto ſomewhat good, to curb and reſtrain them from miſchief. Whence Saint Gal. 4. 9. 3. Paul calls thoſe inſtitutions with good reaſon elements (poor and mean elements, and elements of the world; rudiments of knowledge and diſcipline, ſuted to the capacity of the firſt age, and the meaneſt rank; ſuch as vulgar and ſilly people were fit to learn, and able to practice) with Gal. 3. 24. good reaſon he calls the Law a pedagogue, that by inſtilling into thoſe Gal. 4. 9. νήπιοι (thoſe infants or little children, ſo alſo he terms them) ſome imperfect notions of truth; by keeping them in ſome good order did prepare them for a higher inſtruction, did prediſpoſe them toward a better courſe of life. Indeed, we may eaſily conceive that ſuch variety of ſuperficial formalities might well agree to childiſh and plebeian fancies; but to men of ſomewhat elevated minds, and well improved reaſon; of ſound judgment, and large experience; who had taſted, and could reliſh rational entertaiments (and ſuch in ſome meaſure and comparatively are men generally born and brought up in countreys and places, were civility hath obtained; at leaſt they are capable of being ſo, fit means being uſed to render them ſo) they muſt needs be inſipid and diſguſtful.
In the ſtudy of truth, and practice of vertue there are alluring beauties and ſweetneſſes; which it cannot but diſpleaſe him, who hath ſeen and felt them, to be diverted from, by an obligation to attend (ſo preciſely) upon ſuch an abundance of petty, circumſtantial, exteriour obſervances; to be forced, I ſay, to chew ſuch husks of things, to him, who thereby muſt neglect ſo delicious kernels, cannot but be grievous and irkſome. Wiſer men are never much affected with laborious and tedious promps; they are deſigned always to amuſe children, and the common ſort. I add, that this diſpenſation was ſuted not onely to the childiſh fancy, but to the ſlaviſh ſpirit of that People; who having in them little of ingenuity, or willingneſs freely to doe good;
would be apt to wax not only droniſh and lazy, but ſturdy and inſolent; had they not been kept under and inured to ſomething of burthen and toil. Such all wiſe men know to be the proper courſe of managing people of ſlaviſh temper; but toward men of a diſpoſition more ingenuous, tractable and free (ſuch as commonly men civilized, and well governed are or may become) ſuch a proceeding were incongruous; they will either refuſe to undergo ſuch unneceſſary burthens, or bear them unwillingly; their obedience will be none, or lame, or unkindly and heartleſs. God therefore dealt according to wiſdom with the Jews, when he impoſed ſuch burthens upon their ſhoulders, when he pinched their ſtiff necks with ſuch yokes, when he detained them in ſuch fetters;
Act. 15. 10, 28. (ſo they were, and ſo they are truly called by our Apoſtles; burthens Gal. 5. 1. intollerably heavy; yokes very galling and vexatious; fetters very Gal. 3. 23. ſtrait and grievous; which they reaſonably therefore reckon it a very valuable privilege and benefit, purchaſed by our Saviour for us, to be looſed

looſed from) but ſuch a diſpenſation could not be convenient for the rational nature in common and for perpetuity; it neither becomes God himſelf, who will not without need or profit vex his creatures; who cannot be fully ſatisfied with performances of ſo mean a ſort; who neceſſarily doth affect ſervices of a more excellent nature and importance (thoſe ſpiritual ſervices of love, reverence and gratitude; of purity, righteouſneſs and goodneſs:) It doth not ſute man, not being apt to perfect his nature, not being able to ſatisfy his mind. As he, by the improvement and uſe of his reaſon, will eaſily diſcern the ſmall worth of ſuch performances, ſo will he not readily comply with them without regret; but will ſoon apprehend the matter to be indeed, as S. Paul repreſents it, that an obligation to ſuch rites is a bond againſt us, (ἐξαλείψας τὸ καθ᾽ ἡμῶν χειρόγραφον τοῖς δόγμασιν, ὃ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν) which in reaſon he may expect to be wiped out and cancelled; that a law conſiſting of ſuch precepts hath an enmity, or repugnance to his nature; that ſuch a diſpenſation is a pupillage, and a ſlavery, which he earneſtly muſt deſire to be redeemed and mancipated from.

Coloſ. 2. 14.
Gal. 3, 24.
4. 1.
Gal. 4. 3, 5, &c.

Thus doth this Revelation upon many reſpects, grounded on the very intrinſick nature thereof, appear partial and imperfect; and conſequently not ſuch as that, which we reaſonably may expect from the divine wiſdom and goodneſs.

'Tis true (which ſome may deem an objection againſt our diſcourſe, but I ſhould rather take for a good confirmation thereof) that God did afterward annex ſome labels (as it were) to this deed; that he imparted by degrees farther manifeſtations of light and grace to that people by the inſtructions, and by the exemplary practices of Prophets and holy men raiſed up among them by his eſpecial inſtinct and order; in a manner and upon occaſions extraordinary. The Prophets frequently declared, that God had not much delight in thoſe ceremonious obſervances; nor would accept them otherwiſe than as proceeding from good diſpoſitions of mind, and as accompanied with practices of moral duty and more ſpiritual piety; that he chiefly did require of them hearty reverence toward himſelf, and ſubmiſſion to his will; ſtrict juſtice and tender charity toward their neighbours; meekneſs and patience in their behaviour; temperance and ſobriety in all their converſation. By them alſo he diſcovered more of his gracious diſpoſition, and of his merciful intentions toward them; that he would not be extreamly rigorous in puniſhing the tranſgreſſions of his law; that he would not refuſe pardon to the moſt grievous ſins, not remain irreconcileable toward the moſt hainous offenders, upon their ſincere repentance and amendment of life. By the practices of holy men he alſo ſhewed, that the rigour of that ceremonious law was mitigable; that in ſome caſes its obligation might be relaxed, and its obſervance diſpenſed with; that a ſervice more refined and rational was eſpecially acceptable to God; that he loved a purer devotion, a perfecter righteouſneſs, a higher charity than ſuch as the letter of their law preſcribed. By them alſo he intimated (which their devotions plainly infer) that he not only exacted ſuch duties, but was ready to afford them his aſſiſtance to the performing them; by teaching and admoniſhing them within; enlightning their minds, and enflaming their affections; directing, exciting, and quickning them to obedience. Thus did that morning of divine knowledge, from the firſt dawning, by degrees grow more lightſome; yet never arrived to a perfect daylight; the ſhadows were not quite diſperſed; the whole horizon of heavenly truth was not diſcloſed thereby. Even thoſe arbitrary and ex-

Iſa. 66. 3.
Iſa 1. 11, 12, 13, &c.
Mic. 6. 7.
Hoſ. 6. 6.
Pſal. 50. 8, 9, &c.
51. 16.
Pſal. 50 14.
51. 6, 17.
Iſa. 1. 16, 17.
58. 6.
Mic. 6. 8.
Hoſ. 6. 6.
Pſal. 130. 3, 4.
Iſa. 1. 18.
Iſa. 55. 7.
Ezek. 18. 21.
33. 12.
Matt. 12. 3.
Pſal. 51. 6, 17.

traodinary diſpenſations of farther inſtruction are ſo many good arguments, that God did not primarily intend the Jewiſh Law for a complete delivery of his mind; his reſerving ſo much to be upon occaſion detected implied that more ſtill might reſt behind; accordingly as indeed we ſee, that the future ſtate, and immortality it ſelf was not by the Prophets Heb. 8. 6. fully brought to light; that the better covenant, eſtabliſhed upon Vid. Heb. 11. better aſſurances, was not yet revealed; that all means requiſite for the 13, 40. glory of God, for the good of man were not throughly provided for.

Of which Concluſion we ſhall add this one farther probation, that Judaiſm did not ſerve (in effect) ſufficiently to better mens lives; to qualify a competent number of men for God's favour, or for their own happineſs; by diſpoſing their minds to any tolerable degree of true ſanctity, piety, and righteouſneſs acceptable to God, profitable to humane ſociety, perfective of man's nature. 'Tis a point that Saint Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans inſiſteth much upon, and excellently applies to this ſame purpoſe: The Jews were highly conceited of their way, ſcorning the reſt of men as altogether ignorant of God's will, and uncapable of his favour; but Saint Paul repreſſes their arrogance, by ſhewing Rom. 2. the difference was not ſo great (as they imagined) between them and others, not even in thoſe reſpects; for that the ſpecial revelation which they were ſo proud of) had not produced effects conſiderably better in them, than the light of reaſon and the law of nature (means ſo deſpicable in their eſteem) had brought forth in others; which charge being made good, 'tis evident they had no reaſon to prize their way ſo much; or to confide therein, as perfect; as thoroughly, in the beſt manner, and in reaſonable meaſure ſufficient to qualify them for God's favour, or to bring them into a ſtate of happineſs;) yea 'tis plain upon that ſuppoſition in ſome reſpects their way had the diſadvantage, and made their condition worſe than that of other men; rendring their faults more grievous and inexcuſable, more provoking God's diſpleaſure againſt them; eſpecially ſeeing upon the tenour of their Religion, they had ſcarce any better ground to preſume of pardon or impunity, than other men had from inſtincts of nature, from rational conjecture. Now that ſuch a Charge upon them is no ſlander, we need no other probations than what the continual ſtream of their own Hiſtories doth repreſent concerning their manners; than the many full and plain teſtimonies of their own Prophets concerning them; than the extreme puniſhments by divine juſtice inflicted upon them; than the common reputation they have continually had among men, grounded upon experience. What is their hiſtory but one continued tragedy, as it were, ſetting out the various ſtrange rebellions and apoſtaſies of that people, with the miſerable conſequences proceeding from them? what do their prophetical writings contain beſide pathetical expoſtulations, ſevere reproofs, dreadfull comminations of Judgment upon them, for their prodigious impieties, iniquities and lewdneſſes; general in extenſion over all perſons, exceſſive in degree, by no means curable or corrigible? Run ye to and Jer. 5. 1. fro through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem (Hieruſalem, that place of univerſal concourſe, the heart of that nation, the ſpecial ſeat and ſanctuary of their religion) ſee now and know and ſeek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man; if there be any that executeth judgment, that ſeeketh the truth, and I will pardon it (ſays Jeremy 5. 1.) There is a conſpi- Ezek. 22. racy of her Prophets in the midſt thereof (of Hieruſalem) like a roaring lyon ravening the prey; Her prieſts have violated my law, aud have profaned faned my holy things; her princes are like wolves; the people of the land have uſed oppreſſion and exerciſed robbery: And I ſought for a man among them, that ſhould make up the hedge, and ſtand in the gap before me for the land, that I ſhould not deſtroy it; but I found none, ſaith; Ezekiel: And the reſt frequently harp upon the ſame thing: But theſe Prophets, you'll ſay, lived in unhappy times: ſo circumſtantiated, that no religion could have much prevailed upon mens minds and lives; ſuch as make every religion liable to the ſame exceptions: well, but Iſaiah, one would think, lived in better times; for how many better Kings had that Nation) that more ſtrictly practiſed or earneſtly promoted piety) than Hezekiah? yet, A ſinful nation, a people laden with iniquities, a ſeed Iſ. 1. 4, 5, 6. of evil doers, were they, it ſeems, even then; the land was defiled under the inhabitants thereof; the whole head was ſick, and the whole heart faint; from the ſoal of the foot even to the head there was no ſoundneſs in the body of that nation. Yea, when did that religion flouriſh in greater vigour and ſtrength, when had it more advantage of exerting its beſt vertue, than in the peaceful and proſperous times of that great and mighty, that good and zealouſly pious Prince, King David? yet even in his reign, according to his own obſervation and teſtimony, they were Pſal. 14. 53. (generally) corrupt and did abominable works; they all were gone aſide, and were altogether become filthy; there was none that did good, no not one. But we need not urge particular inſtances, ſince we have it ſo often affirmed in groſs, that the manners of that people, from firſt to laſt, were conſtantly naught and offenſive to God: The children of Iſrael, and Jer. 32. 30. the children of Judah (ſaith God himſelf in Jeremy) have onely done evil before me from their youth. And again; Since the day that your fathers Jer. 7. 25. came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even ſent you all Jer. 16. 12. my ſervants the prophets, daily riſing up early and ſending them; yet they 11. 7. hearkened not unto me. The law, although by extraordinary perſons, in fitteſt opportunities, with utmoſt vehemence and diligence inculcated and urged upon them, proved continually ineffectual to produce the fruits of piety and righteouſneſs. The ſame you may ſee confeſſed by Ezra; Ezra. 9. 7. and not only acknowledged, but evidently demonſtrated by Nehemiah Neh. 9. in a punctual narration, deduced from the beginning to his time; in the ninth chapter of that Book.) Again; The heavy calamities by divine juſtice ſo often inflicted, ſo long continued upon them; and at laſt, God's ſo viſible utter direliction and diſowning them, do alſo ſufficiently declare what their deſerts, and what their qualities have been; as alſo what good may ever be expected from them. For as God never puniſhes grievouſly without a proportionate cauſe, ſo he never quite deſerts, but in a deſperate caſe, when no competent emendation may be expected. He is not wont to lop off the branches, but when they grow dead and barren; he never cuts down the tree, while there is any hope of fruit. This providence therefore toward that people ſhews, that in God's eſteem, that law is to be laid aſide, as an inſtrument grown uſeleſs, and unfit for his purpoſes; unfit to ſerve his glory, to further mens good.

I add; That through all courſe of times their manners have not procured in a manner from any men any good-will, or reſpect; but indeed the common diſlike, contempt and hatred of men: they have always (ſince well known and obſerved in the world) been reputed a ſort of people not onely above all men vain and ſuperſtitious, addicted to fond conceits and fabulous ſtories, but extremely proud and arrogant, churliſh and ſowre, ill-natured and falſe-hearted toward all men; not good or kind, yea not ſo much as juſt or true toward any but themſelves;

Juven. Sat. 14.

(Non monſtrare vias eadem niſi ſacra colenti;
Quæſitum ad fontem ſolos deducere verpos;

Tac. V. pag. 621. Vid. Grot. de Jure B. lib. II. 15. 9.

Apud ipſos fides obſtinata, miſericordia in promptu, ſed adverſus omnes alios hoſtile odium.)

ſuch are the obvious characters of them, ſuch were their humours noted to be; humours, not onely implauſible, but really blamable, deſervedly offenſive and odious; being contrary to the common ſenſe, to the natural ingenuity of man. They have been long, as we ſee them now to be, partly for the vanity of their conceits, partly for the baſeneſs of their minds and manners, and partly alſo for the wretchedneſs of their condition, the ſcorn and obloquy of all Nations.

Now the tree, which hath always bore ſuch fruits (ſo unſavoury, ſo unwholſome) we have no reaſon to admire, to eſteem excellent and perfect: It might be good for thoſe times, when men willingly did feed on acorns, on crabs, on bramble-berries; but cannot ſo well ſerve now, when higher improvements of reaſon, when philoſophy and learning by a general influence upon the world have prepared the palates of men to reliſh, their ſtomachs to digeſt more delicious and more wholeſome fare. But I

3. Proceed, to ſhew the third defect, which I at firſt obſerved, in this Religion, that it was not deſigned for perpetual obligation and uſe: (As it was particular in reſpect of the perſons, to whom it was directed, whom it obliged; as it was partial and incomplete in its frame, ſo it was, according to its deſign, temporary and mutable.) This concluſion we might infer from what hath been ſaid concerning the narrow extent, and concerning the intrinſick imperfection thereof; for ſuppoſing a new general and perfect revelation made to mankind, (ſuch as we aſſerted probably ſhould be) that would naturally ſwallow and void thoſe which are particular and imperfect; as comprehending them, it would render them uſeleſs; as ſupplying the defects, correcting the defaults, or removing, paring away the ſuperfluities of them, it would diſcover them unfit for continuance. As rivers run into the Sea, as ſhadows flee before the Sun, ſo theſe ſmall and ſhallow, theſe dusky and faint revelations would diſcharge themſelves into, would vaniſh before a complete and univerſal one. Nothing in nature, or in providence that is ſcant, or defectuous, can be ſtable and laſting. Thus, I ſay, is this a concluſion, a conſequence of thoſe which preceded; but we have another more convincing ſort of evidence to prove it by (moſt valid ad homines) even by many pregnant intimations; yea many expreſs remonſtrances and predictions, that God did intend in due time to introduce a great change in affairs of this kind; to refine, and reform the
Mal. 3. 1, 3. ſtate of things; to break open thoſe incloſures, and to remove thoſe
Heb. 9. 10. bars of ſeparation; to enlarge the bounds of his dominion, and to receive all nations into the fold of his moſt ſpecial care and love: In fine, that he would diſpenſe a general full revelation of his mind and will, of his grace and favour to mankind; ſuch as ſhould not be conſiſtent with that particular and partial law, ſuch as implies a diſannulling thereof for obligation, and diſabling it for uſe. The holy writings of that people Deut. 18. 15, 18. Act. 3. 23. acquaint us, that God intended to raiſe up another Prophet (for extraordinarineſs and eminency) like to Moſes, which ſhould have words by God put into his mouth (new words ſurely, new revelations from God; for why ſhould he with that ſolemnity be ſent to utter ſtale matters?) whom they ſhould upon peril of their lives and welfare, be particularly obliged to hearken (that is to yield attention and obedience) unto. That the days ſhould come, when the Lord would make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, Jer. 31. 31. different from that which he made with their fathers after their delivery from Egypt; not to be written upon ſtones, but impreſſed upon mens hearts; in regard to which paſſage we may with the Apoſtle to the Hebrews well argue; If the firſt had been faultleſs, Heb. 8. 7, 13. and deſigned to abide in force, there would have been no place found for the ſecond; and, that by ſpeaking of a new covenant, be antiquated (or declared his intention to antiquate) the old one.

Jer. 3. 16. That time ſhould be, when they ſhould ſay no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither it ſhould come to mind, neither ſhould they remember it, neither ſhould they viſit it; they are the words of the Prophet Jeremy, concerning better times to come; wherein, God ſhould give them paſtours according to his own heart, which ſhould feed them with knowledge and underſtanding; but in a way 'tis evident, altogether different from the Jewiſh inſtitution; without any regard to the ark of their covenant, that ſeat and emblem of God's eſpecial preſence among them.

That another prieſthood ſhould infallibly (for God ſwore ſo much) Pſal. 110. 4. be eſtabliſhed, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchiſedeck (not appointed to offer carnal ſacrifices, but to impart ſpiritual benedictions.)

That time ſhould be, when God would gather all nations and tongues, and they ſhould come and ſee his glory; Iſa. 66. 18. 21. and out of them, God would take (that which the Moſaical conſtitution would not any-wiſe permit) for Prieſts, and for Levites.

That there ſhould appear a Sion; Pſal. 132. 13. Mich. 4. 1, 2, 7, &c. Joel. 2. 28. 3. 16. a mountain ſeated above all mountains (viſible and conſpicuous to all the world) wherein God would place his perpetual reſidence (the ſeat of his worſhip, of his eſpecial preſence and influence) to which all nations ſhould flow (or willingly reſort) to learn God's will, and walk in his ways; (which Sion could not be that literal one, long ſince deſolated and diſregarded; and which however, did it ſtand in repute, could be no convenient receptacle, or reſort for all the world; 'tis ſurely another ſpiritual Sion, or myſtical rock, which is prophecied of.)

That God will create new heavens, and a new earth; Iſa. 65. 17. 66. 22. (a thoroughly new world, or new ſtate of things;) ſuch as that the former ſhould not be remembred, nor come into mind.

That God would pour his ſpirit of Prophecy upon all fleſh) Joel 2. 28. although we ſee the prophetical ſpirit hath long deſerted the Jewiſh nation, not ſo much as any pretence thereto remaining.) That the earth ſhould be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea; Hab. 2. 14. (Judaiſm ſurely is not this knowledge, which never did, nor is ever likely to fill the earth.) That from the riſing of the ſun, to the going down thereof, God's name ſhould be great among the Gentiles; Mal. 1. 11. and in every place incenſe ſhould be offered unto his name, and a pure offering (In every place incenſe, acceptable to God, ſhould be offered; not onely at Hieruſalem, to which the Jewiſh ſervice was confined.) That a time Dan. 9. 24. was determined to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and make an end of ſins; to make a reconciliation for iniquity, and to introduce everlaſting righteouſneſs, to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy; and to anoint the moſt Holy.

That God would ſend him, ſo much needed and deſired by all nations Hag. 2. 7. to whom the gathering of the people ſhould be; Gen. 49. 10. the Sun of righteouſneſs, Mal. 1. 3. 4. 2.

ariſing

Iſa. 59. 20. ariſing with ſalvation in his wings; the Redeemer that ſhould come to Si- 49. 8. 61. 1. on; the Meſſenger of the covenant; whom God would give for a covenant of the people, to eſtabliſh the earth; to cauſe to inherit the deſolate heritage; Jer. 23. 5, 6. the righteous branch, to be raiſed up unto David; to reign and proſper, executing judgment and Juſtice in the earth; whoſe name ſhould be called, the Lord our Righteouſneſs; whom God would anoint to preach good tidings to the meek, and bind up the broken-hearted, &c. that is, in fine, God in due time would ſend the Meſſias, to enlighten the world with a perfect Inſtruction; to reveal God's will, and declare his mercy to mankind; to erect an univerſal ſpiritual Kingdom in the minds and hearts of men, reducing them to fuller knowledge and to better obedience of God: Theſe places of Scripture (to which many others might be added) do ſufficiently evince, that the Moſaical diſpenſation was in the deſign thereof mutable and tranſitory; that God intended, what the Apoſtle affirms, Heb. 7. 18. effected by our Saviour, an abrogation of the precedent command for its weakneſs and unprofitableneſs. Thus doth God's deſign concerning the abolition of this Religion appear by verbal teſtimonies; the ſame we ſee alſo declared by real effects: his providence hath made good his word, he hath not only diſobliged men from that Religion, but hath manifeſtly diſcountenanced it; yea hath diſabled, even the moſt obſtinate adherents in opinion and will thereto, from the practice and exerciſe thereof, according to its primitive rules and preſcriptions. Long is it (for above fifteen hundred years) ſince they exiled from their ancient country, and ſcattered over the world, have wanted a place whither to reſort, wherein to perform thoſe moſt weighty parts of worſhip and ſervice to God, oblation of ſacrifices, incenſe and tithes; their Tribes being confounded, the diſtinction of prieſthood and people ſeems taken away; all the myſterious emblems of God's ſpecial preſence, all the tokens of God's favour and endearment to them are embezil'd and quite loſt; nothing is left ſubſtantial or ſolemn in their Religion, which if they would they could put in practice: all that they retain of their ancient inſtitution is the obſervation of ſome petty formalities, in matters of leſs importance; which alſo they have ſo blended and corrupted with impure mixtures of their own device and forgery (falſe and impious opinions, ridiculous and uncouth ceremonies, idle and abſurd ſtories) that we may juſtly ſuppoſe genuine Judaiſm no-where to be found; that it cannot be, nor is indeed any where practiſed.

So that what reaſon ſhewed fit to be, what God had declared ſhould be, that experience doth atteſt to be done; the ceſſation and abolition of that way of Religion, both as to obligation and uſe.

So I paſs over this ſecond ſtep of my intended diſcourſe; That no other Religion excepting Chriſtianity, which hath been, or is in being, can reaſonably pretend to have proceeded from God, as an univerſal, complete and final declaration of his mind and will to mankind. Such as we argued it probable that ſo wiſe a God, ſo juſt a Lord, ſo gracious a father would ſometime afford to his poor miſerable creatures and children, the ſons of Adam.

I have two great ſteps yet to take; One, that Chriſtianity is in it ſelf a doctrine and law endowed with the fore-mentioned conditions; in all reſpects worthy to come from God, apt to promote his glory, and procure man's benefit. Another, that it de facto did proceed from God, was atteſted to by him, and eſtabliſhed by his authority. Which propoſitions I ſhall hereafter by God's grace, endeavour to prove.

And

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XVI.

OF THE EXCELLENCY OF THE Chriſtian Religion.

1 COR. II. 6.

We ſpeak wiſdom to thoſe which are perfect.

THE meaning of theſe words (upon viewing the context, and weighing the ſcope of S. Paul's diſcourſe) I take to be in effect this; That however ſuch parts of the Chriſtian doctrine, which S. Paul diſcovered unto thoſe, whom he began to inſtruct therein, (the milk which he gave the babes in Chriſt to drink) eſpecially as propounded, proved and perſuaded in ſo plain and ſimple a manner, without advantages of ſubtile reaſoning or elegant language, might ſeem to perſons really ignorant, unskilful, and dull of apprehenſion (although much conceited of their own knowledge, wit and reach) or to men prepoſſeſſed with contrary notions, and corrupt affections, to be fooliſh and unreaſonable; Yet that the whole doctrine ſuch as it is in it ſelf, being entirely diſcloſed unto perfect men (that is to men of an adult and improved underſtanding, well diſpoſed and capable, void of prejudicate conceits, and cleanſed from vitious diſpoſitions) would appear wiſdom; wiſdom, that is not onely exactly true, but highly important, and very well ſuted to the attainment of the beſt ends; even thoſe ends, which it pretendeth to bring about, which are manifeſtly the moſt excellent that any knowledge can aim at; the glorifying of God, and ſalvation of man: this I ſuppoſe to be S. Paul's aſſertion here; and thereof it is my intent, by God's aſſiſtance, to endeavour now ſome declaration and proof, by repreſenting briefly ſome peculiar excellencies and perfections of our Religion; which may ſerve to evince the truth, and evidence the wiſdom thereof; to make good, that indeed our Religion well deſerveth the privilege it doth claim of a divine extraction, that it

1 Cor 3. 1, 2.

is

1 Cor. 2. 7. is not an invention of man, but (as S. Paul calleth it) the wiſdom of God, proceeding from no other Author, but the God of truth and wiſdom. It is indeed a common ſubject, and ſo the beſt ever ſhould be; it is always profitable, and now ſeaſonable to inculcate it, for the confirmation of our ſelves, and conviction of others in this Age of wavering and warping toward infidelity; wherefore regarding more the real uſefulneſs of the matter, than the ſqueamiſh fancy of ſome auditors, I ſhall without ſcruple propound what my own meditation hath ſuggeſted about it.

Matt. 11. 26. —— Neither knoweth any man the Father ſave the ſon, and he to whomſoever the ſon will reveal him.

1. The firſt excellency peculiar to the Chriſtian doctrine I obſerve to be this; that it aſſigneth a true, proper and complete character or notion of God (complete I mean not abſolutely, but in reſpect to our condition and capacity) ſuch a notion as agreeth thoroughly with what the beſt reaſon dictateth, the works of nature declare, ancient tradition doth atteſt, and common experience doth intimate concerning God; ſuch a character as is apt to breed higheſt love and reverence in mens hearts toward him, to engage them in the ſtricteſt practice of duty, and obedience to him: it aſcribeth unto him all conceivable perfections of nature in the higheſt degree, it aſſerteth unto him all his due rights and prerogatives, it commendeth and juſtifieth to us all his actions and proceedings. For in his Eſſence it repreſenteth him One, Eternal, perfectly ſimple and pure, Omnipreſent, Omniſcient, Omnipotent, Independent, Impaſſible and Immutable; as alſo, according to his eſſential diſpoſition of will and natural manner of acting, moſt abſolute and free, moſt good and benign, moſt holy and juſt, moſt veracious and conſtant; it acknowledgeth him the maker and upholder of all Beings, of what nature and what degree ſoever; both material and immaterial, viſible and inviſible; it attributeth to him Supreme majeſty and authority over all: It informeth us, that he framed this viſible world with eſpecial regard to our uſe and benefit, that he preſerveth it with the ſame gracious reſpect; that he governeth us with a particular care and providence; viewing all the thoughts, and ordering all the actions of men to good ends, general or particular. It declareth him in his dealings with rational creatures very tender and careful of their good, exceedingly beneficent and merciful toward them; compaſſionate of their evils, placable for their offences, acceſſible and inclinable to help them at their entreaty, or in their need; yet nowiſe fond, or indulgent to them; not enduring them to proceed in perverſe or wanton courſes; but impartially juſt, and inflexibly ſevere toward all iniquity obſtinately purſued; it, in ſhort, deſcribeth him moſt amiable in his goodneſs, moſt terrible in his juſtice, moſt glorious and venerable in all his ways of providence: whatever perfections in eſſence, ſtate or practice either Philoſophers (by rational collection from innate notions, or from contemplation of natural effects, or upon obſerving occurrences in humane affairs) or other inſtitutions from the reliques of primitive tradition, by politick reflection upon things, from other fountains, or by other means whatever have by parts (imperfectly, obſcurely and faintly) attributed to God, all thoſe our Religion in a full, clear and peremptory manner, with advantage beyond what I can expreſs, doth aſcribe and aſſert unto him; not intermixing therewith (as other doctrines and inſtitutions may be obſerved to doe) any thing unworthy of him, or miſbecoming him; adjoining nothing repugnant to that which natural light diſcerneth or approveth; but ſhewing ſomewhat beyond what it can deſcry, concerning God's incomprehenſible nature and manner of ſubſiſtence, his unſearchable counſels of wiſdom, his admirable methods of providence, whereby he hath deſigned to commend his goodneſs to us, and to glorifie his juſtice; which ſorts of truths exceeding man's reach to deviſe or comprehend as it becometh God (who ſo far tranſcendeth us in wiſdom and knowledge) to reveal them, ſo they wondrouſly conſpiring with the perfections of God otherwiſe diſcernible by us, do argue or confirm the divinity of the doctrine, which acquainteth us with them: For a doctrine, how plauſible ſoever, which ſhould teach us nothing about God, that by other means could not be found out, and whoſe bottom common ſenſe might not fathom, there were no urgent cauſe why we ſhould derive it from heaven, or why we ſhould not rather deem it the invention of ſome witty or ſubtile man. But ſuch a doctrine as this (which as it telleth us nothing about divine things, that contradicteth reaſon, ſo it informeth us many things, which no underſtanding of man had ever conceived, none can penetrate) we may juſtly preſume to come from a ſuperiour wiſdom, we muſt at leaſt avow it worthy of God; in the contrivances of man's wit or fancy about things of this nature (as in divers inſtances it hath happened) moſt probably many flaws and incongruities preſently would have appeared; they would have claſhed with themſelves, or with the dictates of common reaſon: that, for inſtance, God ſhould out of his own boſom ſend down his eternal Son to partake of our nature, and appear in our fleſh, that with utmoſt advantage he might diſcover God's will and merciful intentions toward us, that he might ſet before us an exact pattern of good life; that by his obedience and patience he might expiate our ſin, and reconcile God to mankind; that he might raiſe in us a hope of, and lead us in the way to happineſs; this indeed is a myſtery, and a depth of wiſedom, which we ſhould never have thought of, nor can yet thoroughly ſound by thinking, which we better may admire, than we can underſtand; but neither doth good reaſon diſallow it, nor can diſprove it; yea good reaſon ſo far confirmeth it, as it cannot but admit it to import nothing but that which is plainly true and moſt credible, the immenſe goodneſs and juſtice of God; concerning which nothing ought to ſeem ſtrange or uncouth to us, ſince even by the care expreſſed in matters of ordinary providence divine goodneſs appeareth ſo unaccountably vaſt and high, that upon conſideration thereof worthily might Job and the Pſalmiſt exclaim; What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, and that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thy heart upon him? Lord, what is man that thou takeſt knowledge of him, or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt ſuch account of him? Job 7. 17. Pſal. 144. 3.

Now thus to inſtill into the minds of men a right and worthy notion of God, is palpably a great excellency of any doctrine or Religion: for beſide that a true knowledge of God, (even barely conſidered as in way of theory moſt perfective of our underſtanding, it being converſant upon the nobleſt object of contemplation) is in it ſelf very deſirable; and upon the ſame ground errour in divine things is no ſmall evil or defect; both theſe, ſuch knowledge and ſuch errour reſpectively, are very conſiderable, as having a powerful influence upon action; for according to mens conceptions about God is their practice, religious and moral, very much regulated; if men conceive well of God, they will be guided and moved thereby to render him a worſhip and an obedience worthy of him, and acceptable to him; if they are ignorant of him, or miſtake about him, they will accordingly perform ſervices to him, or pretences of ſervice, which ſhall neither become him, nor pleaſe him; (God by Iſa. 66. 3. 1. 13, 14.

ſuch

Εὐλόγως τοῖς μὲν μοχθηροῖς φαύλας ἔχειν τὰς περὶ θεοῦ διανοήσεις ἀνάγκη, τοῖς δὲ σπουδαίοις ἀρίστας. Clem. Strom. 7. (pag. 511.)

ſuch miſconceptions being transformed into an idol, their religion will become vile or vain ſuperſtition.) And ſince all men apprehend the example of God a perfect rule of action, that they cannot do better than to reſemble and imitate him, ſuch as they conceive God to be, ſuch in good meaſure they will endeavour to be themſelves, both in their diſpoſition and demeanour; whence infallibly the vertues and defects which lie in their notion, will exert and diffuſe themſelves into their life.

2. A ſecond great excellency, peculiar to the Chriſtian inſtitution is this, that it faithfully informeth us concerning our ſelves, concerning our nature, our original, our end, all our ſtate paſt, preſent and final; points about which otherwiſe by no reaſon, no hiſtory, no experience we could be well reſolved or ſatisfied: it teacheth us that we conſiſt of a frail mortal body, taken from the earth and faſhioned by God's hand, and of an immortal ſpirit derived from heaven, and breathed out of God's mouth, whereby we underſtand the dignity of our nature, and nobleneſs of our deſcent, our near alliance, and our great obligation to God; and conſequently how it concerneth us to behave our ſelves both in regard to God, and toward our ſelves, in a manner anſwerable to ſuch a relation, worthy of ſuch an high birth and quality; it ſheweth us, that we were originally deſigned by a voluntary obedience to glorifie our Maker, and in ſo doing to partake of joy and felicity from him; that accordingly we were created in a ſtate agreeable to thoſe purpoſes, wherein we were fit to ſerve God, and capable thereby ever to continue happy: but that by our unworthy diſtruſt and wilfull diſobedience we caſt our ſelves from thence, and laps'd into this wretched ſtate of inward blindneſs, errour and diſorder, of outward frailty, ſorrow and trouble: it acquainteth us farther, how being thus eſtrang'd from God, and expoſed to the effects of his juſt diſpeaſure, we are yet again by his exceeding mercy and favour put into a capacity of recovering our ſelves, of being re-inſtated in a condition happy far beyond that, from which we fell, by returning unto God, and complying with his will declared unto us; as alſo how continuing obſtinately in our degeneracy and diſobedience we ſhall aſſuredly plunge our ſelves deeper into an abyſs of endleſs miſery: it fully repreſenteth unto us, what ſhall be our future ſtate and final doom, how it ſhall be ſuted to our demeanours and deſerts in this life, what a ſtrict trial, what a ſevere judgment all our actions (even our paſſant words, and our ſecret thoughts) muſt hereafter undergo, and how upon the reſult we ſhall become either exceedingly happy, or extremely miſerable for ever. It is indeed this doctrine onely, which fully reſolveth us about this weighty inquiry, which hath ſo much perplexed all men, and with ſo much irreſolution exerciſed Philoſophers, wherein the final end and happineſs of man conſiſteth, and what is the way of attaining it; aſſuring us, that it conſiſteth not in any of theſe tranſitory things, nor in a confluence of them all, but in the favour and the enjoyment of God, with the bleſſings flowing thence; that this happineſs is onely by a ſincere and conſtant obedience to God's holy laws, or by the practice of ſuch a piety and ſuch a vertue which this doctrine preſcribeth, to be obtained: Theſe moſt important truths ſo uſeful both for the ſatisfaction of our minds, and the direction of our lives, this doctrine unfoldeth; I call them truths, and that really they are ſuch even their harmony and conſiſtence between themſelves, their conſonancy with inferences from all ſorts of principles, which we can apply for learning of truth, with what about theſe matters reaſon collecteth, tradition reporteth, experience doth imply, may well perſuade us: for that man was firſt made and conſtituted in a happy ſtate, that he was for his miſbehaviour detruded thence; that hence he is become ſo very prone to vice, and ſo much ſubject to pain, that our ſouls do abide after death, that after this life there ſhall be a reckoning and judgment, according to which good men (who here are often much afflicted) ſhall be rewarded with joy, and bad men (who commonly proſper here) ſhall be requited with pain, the wiſeſt men upon theſe grounds, always have ſurmiſed; and their rational conjectures our Religion with a poſitive and expreſs aſſertion doth eſtabliſh. So great a light doth it afford (which is no ſmall perfection thereof) to the knowledge of our ſelves, and our chief concernments, the objects next to God, and what concerneth him, beſt deſerving our inquiry and information.

As ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to pleaſe God. 1 Theſſ. 4. 1.

3. It is a peculiar excellency of our Religion, that it preſcribeth an accurate rule of life, moſt congruous to reaſon, and ſutable to our nature; moſt conducible to our welfare, and our content; moſt apt to procure each man's private good, and to promote the publick benefit of all; by the ſtrict obſervance whereof we ſhall doe what is worthy of our ſelves and moſt becoming us, yea ſhall advance our nature above it ſelf into a reſemblance of the divine nature; we ſhall doe God right and obtain his favour, we ſhall oblige and benefit men, acquiring withall good-will and good reſpect from them, we ſhall purchaſe to our ſelves all the conveniences of a ſober life, and all the comforts of a good conſcience: For if we firſt examine the precepts directive of our practice in relation to God, what can be more juſt, or comely, or pleaſant, or beneficial to us, than are thoſe duties of piety, which our Religion doth enjoin? what can be more fit, than that we ſhould moſt highly eſteem and honour him, who is moſt excellent? that we ſhould bear moſt hearty affection to him, who is in himſelf moſt good, and moſt beneficial to us? that we ſhould have a moſt awfull dread of him, who is ſo infinitely powerfull, holy and juſt? that we ſhould be very gratefull unto him from whom we have received our being, with all the comforts and conveniences thereof? that we ſhould entirely truſt, and hope in him, who can doe what he will, and will doe whatever in reaſon we can expect from his goodneſs, and can never fail to perform what he hath promiſed? that we ſhould render all obedience and obſervance to him, whoſe children, whoſe ſervants, whoſe ſubjects we are born; by whoſe protection and proviſion we enjoy our life and livelihood? Can there be a higher privilege than liberty of acceſs, with aſſurance of being favourably received, in our needs to him, who is thoroughly able to ſupply them? Can we deſire upon eaſier terms to receive benefits, than by acknowledging our wants, and asking for them? Can there be required a more gentle ſatisfaction from us for our offences, than confeſſion of them, accompanied with repentance and effectual reſolution to amend? Is it not in fine moſt equal and fair, that we ſhould be obliged to promote his glory, who hath obliged himſelf to further our good? The practice of ſuch a piety as it is apparently λογικὴ λατρεία (a reaſonable ſervice) ſo it cannot but produce excellent fruits of advantage to our ſelves, a joyfull peace of conſcience, and a comfortable hope, a freedom from all ſuperſtitious terrours and ſcruples, from all tormenting cares and anxieties; it cannot but draw down from God's bountifull hands ſhowers of bleſſings upon our heads, and of joys into our hearts; whence our obligation to theſe duties is not onely reaſonable, but very deſirable.

Am. Marc. l. 22.

Conſider we next the precepts by which our Religion doth regulate our deportment toward our neighbours and brethren (ſo it ſtyleth all men, intimating thence the duties it requireth us to perform toward them) and what directions in that kind can be imagined comparably ſo good, ſo uſefull as thoſe which the Goſpel affordeth? An honeſt Pagan Hiſtorian ſaith of the Chriſtian Profeſſion, that nil niſi juſtum ſuadet & lene; the which is a true, though not full character thereof. It enjoineth us, that we ſhould ſincerely and tenderly love one another, ſhould earneſtly deſire and delight in each others good, ſhould heartily ſympathize with all the evils and ſorrows of our brethren, ſhould be ready to yield them all the help and comfort we are able, being willing to part with our ſubſtance, our eaſe, our pleaſure for their benefit or ſuccour; not confining this our charity to any ſorts of men, particularly related or affected toward us, but in conformity to our heavenly father's boundleſs goodneſs extending it to all; that we ſhould mutually bear one anothers burthens, and bear with one anothers infirmities, mildly reſent and freely remit all injuries, all diſcourteſies done unto us retaining no grudge in our hearts, executing no revenge, but requiting them with good wiſhes and good deeds. It chargeth us to be quiet and orderly in our ſtations, diligent in our callings, veracious in our words, upright in our dealings, obſervant of our relations, obedient and reſpectful toward our ſuperiours, meek and gentle to our inferiours; modeſt and lowly, ingenuous and compliant in our converſation, candid and benign in our cenſures, innocent and inoffenſive, yea courteous and obliging in all our behaviour toward all perſons. It commandeth us to root out of our hearts all ſpite and rancour, all envy and malignity, all pride and haughtineſs, all evil ſuſpicion and jealouſie; to reſtrain our tongue from all ſlander, all detraction, all reviling, all bitter and harſh language; to baniſh from our practice whatever may injure, may hurt, may needleſly vex or trouble our neighbour. It engageth us to prefer the publick good before any private convenience, before our own opinion or humour, our credit or fame, our profit or advantage, our eaſe or pleaſure; rather diſcarding a leſs good from our ſelves, than depriving others of a greater. Now who can number or eſtimate the benefits that ſpring from the practice of theſe duties, either to the man that obſerveth them, or to all men in common? O divineſt Chriſtian charity, what tongue can worthily deſcribe thy moſt heavenly beauty, thy incomparable ſweetneſs, thy more than royal clemency and bounty? how nobly doſt thou enlarge our minds beyond the narrow ſphere of ſelf and private regard into an univerſal care and complacence, making every man our ſelf, and all concernments to be ours? how doſt thou entitle us unto, how doſt thou inveſt us in all the goods imaginable; doſt enrich us with the wealth, doſt prefer us with the honour, doſt adorn us with the wiſdom and the vertue, doſt bleſs us with all proſperity of the world, whilſt all our neighbours good by our rejoycing therein becometh our own? how doſt thou raiſe a man above the reach of all miſchiefs and diſaſters, of all troubles and griefs, ſince nothing can diſturb or diſcompoſe that ſoul, wherein thou doſt conſtantly reſide, and abſolutely reign? how eaſily doſt thou without pain or hazard, without drawing bloud or ſtriking ſtroke, render him that enjoyeth thee an abſolute conquerour over all his foes, triumphant over all injuries without, and all paſſions within; for that he can have no enemy, who will be a friend to all, and nothing is able to croſs croſs him, who is diſpoſed to take every thing well? how ſociable, how ſecure, how pleaſant a life might we lead under thy kindly governance? what numberleſs ſorrows and troubles, fears and ſuſpicions, cares and diſtractions of mind at home, what tumults and tragedies abroad might be prevented, if men would but hearken to thy mild ſuggeſtions? what a paradiſe would this world then become, in compariſon to what it now is, where thy good precepts and advices being neglected, uncharitable paſſions and unjuſt deſires are predominant? how excellent then is that doctrine, which brought thee down from heaven, and would but men embrace thee, the peace and joy of heaven with thee?

Τοιαύτη γὰρ ἡ τῆς ἀγάπης δύναμις τοὺς οὐκ ἀπολαύσαντας τῶν ἀπολαυσάντων ἐξίσης ποιεῖ χαίρειν, κοινὰ τὰ τῶν πλησίον ἀγαθὰ πείθουσα νομίζειν. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 19.

If we farther ſurvey the laws and directions which our Religion preſcribeth concerning the particular management of our ſouls and bodies in their reſpective actions and enjoyments, we ſhall alſo find, that nothing could be deviſed more worthy of us, more agreeable to reaſon, more productive of our welfare and our content. It obligeth us to preſerve unto our reaſon its natural prerogative, or due empire in our ſouls, and over our bodies, not to ſuffer the brutiſh part to uſurp and domineer over us; that we be not ſwayed down by this earthy lump, not enſlaved to bodily temper, not tranſported with tumultuary humours, not deluded by vain fancy; that neither inward propenſions, nor impreſſions from without be able to ſeduce us to that which is unworthy of us, or miſchievous to us. It enjoyneth us to have ſober and moderate thoughts concerning our ſelves, ſutable to our total dependence upon God, to our natural meanneſs and weakneſs, to our ſinful inclinations, to the guilt we have contracted in our lives; that therefore we be not puft up with ſelf-conceit, or vain confidence in our ſelves, or in any thing about us (any wealth, honour or proſperity.) It directeth us alſo to compoſe our minds into a calm, ſerene and chearfull ſtate; that we be not eaſily diſtemper'd with anger, or diſtracted with care, or overborn with grief, or diſturbed with any accident befalling us; but that we be content in every condition, and entertain patiently all events, yea accept joyfully from God's hand whatever he reacheth to us. It commandeth us to reſtrain our appetites, to be temperate in all our enjoyments, to abſtain from all irregular pleaſures, which are baſe in kind, or exceſſive in degree; which may corrupt our minds, or impair our health, or endamage our eſtate, or ſtain our good name, or prejudice our peace and repoſe: it doth not prohibit us the uſe of any creature, whence we may receive innocent convenience or delight, but indulgeth us a prudent and ſober uſe of them all, with the ſenſe of God's goodneſs, and thankfulneſs to him, who beſtoweth them upon us. Our Religion alſo farther ordereth us (ſo far as our neceſſary occaſions or duties permit) to ſequeſter and elevate our minds from theſe low and tranſitory things, from the fading glories, the unſtable poſſeſſions, the vaniſhing delights of this world; things indeed unworthy the attention, unworthy the affection of an heaven-born and immortal ſpirit; that we ſhould fix our thoughts, our deſires, our endeavours upon objects moſt worthy of them, objects high and heavenly, pure and ſpiritual, infinitely ſtable and durable: Not to love the world, and the things therein; to be carefull for nothing, but to caſt all our care upon God's providence; not to labour for the meat that periſheth, not to truſt in uncertain riches; to have our treaſure, our heart, our hope, our converſation above in heaven; ſuch directions our Religion preſcribeth, by compliance with which, if man be at all capable of being happy, aſſuredly his happineſs muſt be attained; for that no preſent enjoyment can render a man happy, all experience proclaimeth; the reſtleſs motions we continually ſee, the wofull complaints we daily hear, do manifeſtly demonſtrate.

And who ſeeth not the great benefits, and the goodly fruits accruing from obſervance of theſe laws and rules? who diſcerneth not the admirable conſent of all theſe particular injunctions in our Religion with that general one, Whatever things are true, whatever things are juſt, whatever things are honeſt, whatever things are pure, whatever things are lovely, whatever things are of good report, if there be any vertue or any praiſe, that we ſhould mind ſuch things, and practiſe them? Such, and far more excellent than I am able to deſcribe, is the rule of Chriſtian practice; a rule in perfection, in beauty, in efficacy far ſurpaſſing all other rules; productive of a goodneſs more complete, more lovely, more ſprightfull than any other doctrine or inſtitution hath been, or can be able to bring forth; much exceeding not onely the righteouſneſs of blind Phariſees, but all the vertue of the moſt ſage * Philoſophers; ſomewhat in part concurrent therewith Philoſophy hath deſcried and delivered ('tis no wonder it ſhould, ſince all of it is ſo plainly conſonant to reaſon;) yet what Philoſophy hath in this kind afforded, is in truth, if compared with what our Religion teacheth, exceedingly meagre, languid and flat: two words here, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thy ſelf, do ſignifie more, do contain in them more ſenſe and ſavour, to the judgment and reliſh of a well diſpoſed mind, than the Ethicks of Ariſtotle, the Offices of Cicero, the Precepts and Diſſertations of Epictetus, the many other Volumes of Philoſophical morality all put together; in matter our Rule is far more rich and full, more ſweet and ſapid than theirs; in force and efficacy it doth alſo (as we ſhall hereafter ſee) far excell them.

Vid. Grot. de Ver. 4. 12.
Phil. 4. 8.

* Τί ἂν τις εἴποι τῶν προσταγμάτων τὴν φιλοσοφίαν, τῶν οὐρανίων νόμων τὴν ἀρετὴν, τῆς ἀγγελικῆς πολιτείας τὴν εὐταξίαν; τοιοῦτον γὰρ ἡμῖν εἰσηγήσατο βίον, τοιούτους ἡμῖν ἔθηκε νόμους, τοιαύτην κατεστήσατο πολιτείαν, ὡς τοὺς τούτοις χρωμένους ἀγγέλους εὐθέως γίνεσθαι, καὶ ὁμοίους Θεῷ κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τὴν ἡμετέραν Chryſ. in Joh. 1. 14.

Ὅσα παρὰ πᾶσι καλῶς εἴρηται, Χριστιανῶν ἐστι. Juſt. M. Apol. 1.

Vid. Lud. Viv. in Aug. de Civ. D. 10. 4.

Quæ diſputationes, quæ literæ quorumlibet Philoſophorum, quæ leges quarumlibet civitatum duobus præceptis, ex quibus Chriſtus dicit totam legem prophetaſque pendere, ullo modo ſint comparandæ? Aug. Epiſt. 3. ad Voluſ.

Vid. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 19.

Δηλοῦν ἐθέλει τοὔνομα τὸ Χριστιανοῦ ἄνδρα διὰ τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώσεως καὶ διδασκαλίας σωφροσύνη, καὶ δικαιοσύνη, καρτερίᾳ τε βίου καὶ ἀρετῆς ἀνδρείᾳ εὐσεβείας τε ὁμολογίᾳ ἑνὸς καὶ μόνου τοῦ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεοῦ διαπρέπειν. Euſeb. hiſt. 1. 4.

4. We may hereto annex this conſideration, which may paſs for another peculiar advantage of our Religion, that as it delivereth ſo excellent and perfect a rule of life, ſo it delivereth it unto us pure from any allay embaſing, free of any clog encumbring it; for that it chiefly, and in a manner onely requireth of us a rational and ſpiritual ſervice, conſiſting in performance of ſubſtantial duties, plainly neceſſary or profitable; not withdrawing us from the practice of ſolid piety and vertue by obligations to a tedious obſervance of many external rites; not ſpending the vigour of our minds upon ſuperficial formalities (or buſie ſcrupuloſities, as Tertullian termeth them) ſuch as ſerve onely to amuſe childiſh fancies, or to depreſs ſlaviſh ſpirits. It ſuppoſeth us men, men of good underſtanding, and ingenuous diſpoſition, and dealeth with us as ſuch; and much more ſuch it rendreth us if we comply therewith. The ritual obſervances it enjoineth are, as few in number, in nature ſimple and eaſie to perform, ſo evidently reaſonable, very decent, and very uſeful; apt to inſtruct us in, able to excite us unto the practice

Negotioſæ ſcrupuloſitates. Tertull. in Marc. 2.

Quædam pauca eadémque factu facillima, & intellectu auguſtiſſima, & obſervatione caſtiſſima, Dominus, & Apoſtolica tradidit diſciplina, ſicuti eſt baptiſmi ſacramentum, & celebratio corporis & ſanguinis Domini. Aug. de Doct. Chr. 3. 9.

Dominus noſter Jeſus Chriſtus leni jugo nos ſubdidit, & ſarcinæ levi; unde ſacramentis numero pauciſſimis, ſignificatione præſtantiſſimis ſocietatem novi populi colligavit; ſicuti eſt Baptiſmus Trinitatis nomine conſecratus, communicatio corporis & ſanguinis ipſius, & ſiquid aliud in Scripturis canonicis commendatur. Aug. Ep. 118. ad Januar.

ctice of moſt wholeſome duties: which conſideration ſheweth this doctrine to be complete, ſutable to the moſt adult age, and beſt conſtitution, to the moſt ripe and improved capacities of man. But farther.

5. Our Religion hath alſo this eſpecial advantage; that it ſetteth before us a living copy, and viſible ſtandard of good practice; wherein we have all its precepts compacted as it were into one body, and at once expoſed to our view. Example yieldeth the moſt compendious inſtruction, together with the moſt efficacious incitement to action; but never was there, or could be any example in either reſpect comparable to this; never was any ſo thoroughly perfect in it ſelf, ſo purpoſely deſigned, ſo fitly accommodated for imitation, or ſo forcibly engaging thereto, as this: there is not one flaw, one ſpot, one falſe or uneven ſtroke in all this copy, ſo that we are ſecure from doing amiſs in tranſcribing any part thereof; it was intended to conduct us through all the parts of duty, eſpecially thoſe which are moſt high and difficult to our frail and decayed nature, general charity, ſelf-denial, humility and patience: it was admirably ſquared for the imitation of all men, the perſon in whom it ſhined being as it were indefinite, and unreſtrained to any ſingle condition; he being in right and power ſuperiour to the greateſt Princes though according to choice and in outward parts inferiour to the meaneſt ſubjects; having under his command the largeſt wealth, although enjoying none; being able readily to procure to himſelf what glory and reſpect he pleaſed, yet pleaſing to paſs obſcure and diſregarded; ſo teaching thoſe of higheſt rank to be ſober and condeſcenſive, thoſe of loweſt degree to be patient and content in their reſpective ſtates; teaching all men not to reſt in, nor much to regard theſe preſent things, but ſingly in all their doings above all things to ſeek God's honour, with main reſolution and diligence to proſecute his ſervice: and as to all degrees, ſo to all capacities was his practice ſuited, being neither auſtere nor remiſs, formal nor ſingular, careleſs nor boiſterous; but in a moderate, even and uniform courſe ſo tempered, that perſons of all callings, and all complexions eaſily might follow him in the practice of all true righteouſneſs, in the performance of all ſubſtantial duties toward God, and toward man. It is alſo an example attended with the greateſt obligations and inducements to follow it; the great excellency and high dignity of the perſon, being the moſt holy, firſtborn Son of God, heir of eternal Majeſty; our manifold relations to him, being our Lord and Maſter, our beſt friend, our moſt gracious Redeemer; the many ineſtimable benefits received by us from him, all that redemption from extreme miſery, and capacity of perfect happineſs do import, are ſo many potent arguments engaging us to imitate him.

Longum eſt iter per præcepta, breve & efficax per exempla. Sen.

6. Farther, Our Religion doth not onely thus truly and fully acquaint us with our duty; but, which is another peculiar vertue thereof, it buildeth our duty upon moſt ſolid grounds, preſſeth it with moſt valid inducements, draweth it from the beſt principles, and driveth it to the beſt ends: No philoſophy can in any meaſure repreſent vertue ſo truly eſtimable and eligible, can aſſign ſo evident and cogent reaſon why we ſhould embrace it and ſtrictly adhere thereto, can ſo well diſcover or deſcribe the excellent fruits that grow upon it, as doth this Philoſophy of ours, as the ancient Fathers are wont to call it. Other Philoſophies have indeed highly commended vertue, and vehemently exorted thereto; but the grounds on which they laid its praiſe, are very ſandy, the arguments by which they enforced its practice are very feeble, the principles from which they deduced it, and the ends which they propounded thereto, are very poor and mean, if we diſcuſs them; at leaſt if they be compared with ours: Vertue, ſaid they, is a thing of it ſelf, upon account of its own native beauty and worth, abſtracting from all reward or profit ſpringing from it, very admirable and deſirable; it is beſide a very pleaſant, and very uſefull thing, begetting tranquility and ſatisfaction of mind; yielding health, ſafety, reputation, pleaſure, quiet, and other manifold conveniences of life: but can ſo magnificent and ſo maſſy a fabrick of commendation ſtand firm upon ſuch foundations as theſe? are theſe principles of love and admiration toward we know not what, theſe ends of temporal advantage and convenience, ſo noble or worthy? are the accommodations of this ſhort and uncertain life a proper encouragement, or a juſt recompence for the laborious atchievements of true vertue? are theſe weapons ſufficient to fortifie men, or theſe diſcourſes able to animate them in reſiſting the temptations which avert from vertue, or avoiding the enchantments which allure to vice? Will men, I ſay, readily for the ſake of an imaginary or inſenſible thing (a goodly name onely, for all they ſee) which repreſenteth no more of benefit attending it, croſs the bent of their natural inclinations, forfeit their preſent eaſe, reject certain fruitions of pleaſure, wave occaſions of getting to themſelves profit, honour and power, goods ſo manifeſtly ſubſtantial, and gratefull to nature; will they undergo contentedly the difficulties, encounter the dangers, ſuſtain the pains, the diſgraces, the loſſes commonly incident to vertue? No ſurely, when it cometh to earneſt trial, it will hardly ſeem reaſon or wiſdom ſo to doe. But the Chriſtian Doctrine as it comprizeth, and in an inferiour order urgeth alſo ſuch grounds and arguments, ſo it doth exhibit others far more ſolid and forcible: it commendeth goodneſs to us, not onely as agreeable to man's imperfect and fallible reaſon, but as conformable to the perfect goodneſs of God, as the dictate of his infallible wiſdom, as the reſolution of his moſt holy will; as enjoyned by his unqueſtionable authority, as our indiſpenſible duty, and onely way to happineſs: the principles, from which it willeth us to act, are love, reverence and gratitude to God, hearty good-will toward men, and a ſober regard to our own true welfare; the ends which it preſcribeth, are God's honour, publick edification, and the ſalvation of our own ſouls: it ſtirreth us to good practice by minding us, that we ſhall thereby reſemble the ſupreme goodneſs, ſhall expreſs our gratitude toward that great benefactour, unto whom we owe all that we have; ſhall diſcharge our duty, pay due honour, perform faithfull ſervice to our Almighty Lord and King; that we ſhall thereby ſurely decline the wrath and diſpleaſure of God, ſhall ſurely obtain his favour and mercy, with all ſorts of bleſſings needfull or profitable for us; that we ſhall not onely avoid regrets and terrours of conſcience here, but eſcape endleſs miſeries and torments; we ſhall not onely procure preſent comfort and peace of mind, but ſhall acquire crowns of everlaſting glory and bliſs. Theſe ſurely are the trueſt and firmeſt grounds upon which a right eſtimation of vertue can ſubſiſt, theſe are motives incomparably moſt effectual to the embracing thereof; theſe are the pureſt fountains whence it can ſpring, the nobleſt marks whither it can aim; a vertue ſo grounded, ſo reared is certainly moſt ſound and genuine, moſt firm and ſtable, moſt infinitely beneficial. But farther

7. 'Tis a peculiar advantage of Chriſtianity (which no other Law or Doctrine ſo much as pretendeth to) that it not onely clearly teacheth us, and ſtrongly perſuadeth us to ſo excellent a way of life, but provideth alſo ſufficient help and ability to practiſe it; without which (ſuch is the frailty of our nature, as experience proveth, that) all inſtruction, all exhortation, all encouragement would avail little. Other laws for want of this are in effect miniſteries of condemnation, racks of conſcience, parents of guilt, and of regret; reading hard leſſons, but not aſſiſting to do after them, impoſing heavy burthens, but not enabling to bear them: Our Law is not ſuch; 'tis not a dead letter, but hath a quickning ſpirit accompanying it; it not onely ſoundeth through the ear, but ſtampeth it ſelf upon the heart of him that ſincerely doth embrace it; it always carrieth with it a ſure guide to all good, and a ſafe guard from all evil: If our mind be doubtful or dark, it directeth us to a faithfull Oracle, where we may receive counſel and information: If our paſſions are unruly, if our appetites are outragious, if temptations be violent and threaten to overbear us, it leadeth us to a full magazine, whence we may furniſh our ſelves with all manner of arms to withſtand and ſubdue them: If our condition, in reſpect to all other means, be diſconſolate or deſperate, it ſendeth us to a place, where we ſhall not fail of refreſhment and relief; it offereth, upon our earneſt ſeeking and asking, the wiſdom and ſtrength of God himſelf for our direction, our aid, our ſupport and comfort in all exigencies. To them, who with due fervency and conſtancy ask it, God hath in the Goſpel promiſed to grant his holy Spirit, to guide them in their ways, to admoniſh them of their duty, to ſtrengthen them in obedience, to guard them from ſurprizes, and aſſaults of temptation, to ſuſtain them, and cheer them in afflictions. This advantage, as it is proper to our Religion, ſo it is exceedingly conſiderable; for what would the moſt perfect rule or way ſignifie without as well a power to obſerve it, as a light to diſcern it? and how can man (ſo ignorant, ſo impotent, ſo inconſtant a creature; ſo eaſily deluded by falſe appearances, and tranſported with diſorderly paſſions; ſo eaſily ſhaken and unſettled by any ſmall aſſault) either alone without ſome guidance perceive, or by himſelf without ſome aſſiſtance proſecute what is good for him, eſpecially in caſes of intricacy and difficulty? how ſhould he who hath frequent experience of his own weakneſs, not be utterly diſheartned and caſt into deſpair either of ſtanding faſt in a good ſtate, or of recovering himſelf from a bad one; of reſcuing himſelf from any vicious inclination, or attaining any vertuous habit, if he did not apprehend ſuch a friendly power vigilantly guarding him, ready upon all occaſions to ſuccour and abett him? this conſideration it is, which only can nouriſh our hope, can excite our courage, can quicken and ſupport our endeavour in religious practice, by aſſuring us, that there is no duty ſo hard, which by the grace vouchſafed us, we may not atchieve; that there is no enemy ſo mighty, which by the help afforded us we cannot maſter; ſo that, although we find our ſelves able to doe nothing of our ſelves, yet we can do all things by Chriſt that ſtrengtheth us.

2 Cor. 3. 7, 9. Rom. 5. 20. Aug. de Spir. & lit. Τοῖς εὖ βίον ἐπανηρημένοις ἰσχὺν πρὸς τὴν λοιπὴν σωτηρίαν ἐμπνεῖ. Clem. Alex. Strom. 6. p. 523.

Luke 11. 13.

Phil. 4. 13.

8. Another peculiar excellency of our Religion is this, that it alone can appeaſe and ſatisfie a man's conſcience, breeding therein a well grounded hope, and a ſolid comfort; healing the wounds of bitter remorſe, and anxious fear, which the ſenſe of guilt doth inflict: There is no man (as King Solomon ſaid, and all men know) who ſinneth not; who doth not find himſelf in thought, word and deed frequently thwarting the dictates of reaſon, violating the laws of piety and juſtice, tranſgreſſing the bounds of ſobriety; who conſequently doth not in his own judgment condemn himſelf of diſorder, and of offence committed againſt the worlds great Lawgiver and Governour, the juſt Patron of right and goodneſs; who thence doth not deem himſelf obnoxious to God's wrath, and is not fearfull of deſerved puniſhment from him: which fear muſt needs be foſtered and augmented by conſidering, that as paſt facts are irrevocable, ſo guilt is indelible, and puniſhment, except by the voluntary remiſſion of him that is offended, inevitable; as alſo that there are no viſible means of removing or abating ſuch guilt by any reparation or amends that he can make, who is more apt to accumulate new offences, than able to compenſate for what he hath committed: Now in ſuch a caſe, ſome man indeed may frame to himſelf hopes of mercy; may from the experience of God's forbearance to puniſh, and continuance of his bounty to ſinners, preſume that God is placable, and will not be rigorous in his proceedings with him, may hopefully gueſs, that in favour God will admit his endeavours at repentance, will accept the compenſations he offereth in lieu of his duty, may ſuffer his guilt to be attoned by the ſacrifices he preſenteth; Yet can no man upon ſuch preſumptions ground a full confidence that he ſhall find mercy; he cannot however be ſatisfied upon what terms mercy will be granted, in what manner it ſhall be diſpenſed, or how far it ſhall extend; God never having exhibited any expreſs declarations or promiſes to thoſe purpoſes; no man therefore can otherwiſe than ſuſpect himſelf to be in a bad ſtate, or eſteem himſelf ſecure from the purſuits of juſtice and wrath; as he knoweth that ſin lieth at the door, ſo he cannot know but that vengeance may lie near it; hence common reaſon as well as the Jewiſh Law is a miniſtry of death, and a killing letter, carrying nothing in the looks or language thereof but death and ruine; hence is a man (if at leaſt he be not beſotted into a careleſs ſtupidity) ſhut up in an irkſome bondage of ſpirit, under the grievous tyranny, if not of utter deſpair, yet, of reſtleſs ſuſpicion about his condition; which as it quencheth in his mind all ſteady peace and joy, ſo it dampeth his courage and alacrity, it enervateth his care and induſtry to doe well, he doubting what ſucceſs and what acceptance his undertakings may find; it alſo cooleth in him good affections towards God, whom that he hath offended he knoweth, and queſtioneth whether he can be able to reconcile.

2 Chr. 6. 36. Eccleſ. 7. 20.

Pœna poteſt demi, culpa perennis erit. Ovid.

Sap. 12. 19.

Gen. 4. 7.

2 Cor. 3. 6.

Rom. 8. 15.

From this unhappy plight our Religion thoroughly doth reſcue us, aſſuring us, that God Almighty is not only reconcileable, but deſirous upon good terms to become our friend, himſelf moſt frankly propoſing overtures of grace, and ſoliciting us to cloſe with them; it upon our compliance tendereth, under God's own hand and ſeal, a full diſcharge of all guilts and debts however contracted; it receiveth a man into perfect favour and friendſhip, if he doth not himſelf wilfully reject them, or reſolve to continue at diſtance, in eſtrangement and enmity toward God. It proclaimeth, that if we be carefull to amend, God will not be extreme to mark what we do amiſs; that iniquity, if we do not incorrigibly affect and cheriſh it, ſhall not be our ruine; that although by our infirmity we fall often, yet by our repentance we may riſe again, and by our ſincerity ſhall ſtand upright; that our endeavours to ſerve and pleaſe God (although imperfect and defective, if ſerious and ſincere) will be accepted by him. This is the tenour of that great covenant between heaven and earth, which the Son of God did procure by his interceſſion, did purchaſe by his merits of wonderful obedience and patience, did ratifie and ſeal by his blood; did publiſh to mankind, did confirm by miraculous works, did ſolemnize by holy inſtitutions, doth by the Evangelical

Pſal. 130. 3, 4.

Ezek. 18. 30.

miniſtery continually recommend to all men; ſo that we can no-wiſe doubt of its full accompliſhment on God's part, if we be not deficient on ours: ſo to our ineſtimable benefit and unſpeakable comfort doth our Religion eaſe their conſcience, and encourage them in the practice of their duty, who do ſincerely embrace it, and firmly adhere thereto.

9. The laſt advantage which I ſhall mention of this doctrine, is this, that it propoundeth and aſſerteth it ſelf in a manner very convincing and ſatisfactory: it propoundeth it ſelf in a ſtyle and garb of ſpeech as accommodate to the general capacity of its hearers, ſo proper to the authority which it claimeth, becoming the Majeſty and ſincerity of divine truth; it expreſſeth it ſelf plainly and ſimply, without any affectation or artifice, without oſtentation of wit or eloquence, ſuch as men ſtudy to inſinuate and impreſs their devices by: It alſo ſpeaketh with an imperious and awfull confidence, ſuch as argueth the ſpeaker ſatisfied both of his own wiſdom and authority; that he doubteth not of what he ſaith himſelf, that he knoweth his hearers obliged to believe him; its words are not like the words of a wiſe man, who is wary and carefull that he ſlip not into miſtake (interpoſing therefore now and then his may-be's and perchances) nor like the words of a learned Scribe grounded on ſemblances of reaſon, and backed with teſtimonies; nor as the words of a crafty Sophiſter, who by long circuits, ſubtile fetches, and ſly trains of diſcourſe doth inveagle men to his opinion; but like the words of a King, carrying with them authority and power uncontrolable, commanding forthwith attention, aſſent and obedience; this you are to believe, this you are to doe, upon pain of our high diſpleaſure, at your utmoſt peril be it; your life, your ſalvation dependeth thereon: ſuch is the ſtyle and tenour thereof, plainly ſuch as becometh the Sovereign Lord of all to uſe, when he ſhall pleaſe to proclaim his mind and will unto us. It freeth us from laborious and anxious inquiries, from endleſs diſputes and janglings, from urging ineffectual arguments, and anſwering croſs difficulties, &c. It doth alſo aſſert it ſelf and approve its truth to the reaſon of man the moſt advantageouſly that can be; with proofs moſt ſuitable to it ſelf, and in themſelves moſt effectual; waving thoſe inferiour methods of ſubtile argumentation and plauſible language with which men are wont to confirm, or ſet off their conceits; which how weak they are, how unfit to maintain truth, their unſucceſsfulneſs doth evince; ſeeing by thoſe means ſcarce any man hath been able thoroughly either to ſettle himſelf in, or to draw others to a full perſuaſion concerning any important truth, diſcoſted from ſenſe: ſuch methods therefore the Chriſtian doctrine hath waved (or rather ſlighted, as beneath it ſelf) applying arguments to the demonſtration of its truth, far more potent, more ſublime, and indeed truly divine; beſides its intrinſick worth, or the excellency ſhining in its ſelf (which ſpeaketh it worthy of God, and goeth more than half way in proving it to proceed from him) there is no kind of atteſtation needful or proper, which God hath not afforded thereto; God is in himſelf inviſible and undiſcernible to any ſenſe of ours, neither could we endure the luſtre and glory of his immediate preſence; it muſt be therefore by effects of his incommunicable power, by works ex-

1 Cor. 1. 17. 2. 2.

Ἁπλοῦς ὁ μῦθος τῆς ἀληθείας ἔφυ Eurip.

Vid. Orig. in Celſ lib. 6.

Lact. 3. 1.

Matt. 7. 29.

Οὐ γὰρ κτύπον ῥημάτων, οὐδὲ λέξεως κόμπον, οὐδὲ ὀνομάτων καὶ ῥημάτων κόσμον καὶ συνθήκην ὀψόμεθα περιττὴν καὶ ἀνόητον (πόῤῥω γὰρ ταῦτα τῆς φιλοσοφίας ἁπάσης) ἀλλὰ ἰσχὺν ἄμαχον καὶ θείαν, καὶ δογμάτων ὀρθῶν ἀμήχανον δύναμιν, καὶ μυρίων χορηγίαν ἀγαθῶν. Chryſ. proœm. in Joh.

Eccleſ. 8. 4.

Quæ quidem tradita ſunt breviter, ac nude, nec enim decebat aliter, ut cùm Deus ad hominem loqueretur, argumentis aſſereret ſuas voces, tanquam fides ei non haberetur, ſed ut oportuit eſt locutus, quaſi rerum omnium maximus judex, cujus non eſt argumentari, ſed pronunciare verum. Lact. 3. 1.

Legant noſtra —— quàm excellenter, quàm divinè non tanquam ex philoſophorum concertationibus ſtrepere, ſed tanquam ex oraculis & Dei nubibus intonare. Aug. de Civ. Dei 2. 19.

traordinary and ſupernatural (ſuch as no creature can perform or counterfeit) that he muſt, if ever convincingly ſignifie his purpoſe or pleaſure to us; and ſuch innumerable hath God vouchſafed to yield in favour and countenance of our Religion; by clearly predicting and preſignifying the future revelation of this doctrine by expreſs voices, and manifeſt apparitions from heaven, by ſuſpending and thwarting the courſe of natural cauſes in many ways and inſtances, by miracles of providence no leſs remarkable than thoſe of nature, by internal atteſtations to the minds and conſciences of men; things too great ſlightly to be paſſed over, and the particular mention of which I muſt therefore now omit; by ſuch wonderful means, I ſay, hath God taken care to convince us, that our Religion came from him, which is a peculiar advantage that it hath, ſuch as no other Inſtitution (except that of the Jews, which was a prelude thereto, and whoſe truth ſerveth to confirm it) can reaſonably pretend unto; and a great perfection it is thereof, ſince as it is no ſmall content to a traveller by a direction which he can fully confide in, to know that he is in the right way to his journeys end; ſo it cannot but prove an exceeding ſatisfaction and encouragement to us to be aſſured, by infallible teſtimony of God himſelf, that our Religion is the true and direct way unto eternal happineſs.

Theſe conſiderations may, I conceive, be ſufficient, as to vindicate our Religion from all aſperſions caſt upon it either by inconſiderate and injudicious, or by vain and diſſolute perſons; ſo to confirm us all in the eſteem, and incite us to the practice thereof; which uſe of them God in his mercy grant, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom for ever be all praiſe. Amen.

1 Pet. 4. 10. Now the God of grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Chriſt Jeſus —— Make you perfect, ſtabliſh, ſtrengthen, ſettle you; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

2 Theſ. 2. 16. Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XVII.

THAT JESUS IS THE True MESSIAS.

ACTS IX. 22.

——Proving that this is the very Chriſt.

AS for the name of the Meſſias, there is evident reaſon, why it ſhould not be openly expreſſed in the ancient predictions; it being an eaſy thing for any perſons out of impoſture, or wantonneſs to have aſſumed that name, and conſequently it would not have ſuited ſo well the true perſon. It was therefore more expedient, that his name ſhould rather only be covertly ſignified or intimated; it was ſufficient that a name ſhould be impoſed on him well agreeing to his office and chief performances. There be indeed ſeveral names attributed to the Meſſias; They ſhall call his name Emanuel (ſaid Eſay) This is his name, whereby he ſhall be called, The Lord our righteouſneſs (Jehovah tſidkenu) And, His name ſhall be called Wonderful, Councellour, the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace, ſaid Eſaias again; but it is apparent, that theſe were not intended to be ſo much his proper names, as attributes, or epithets congruous unto him in regard to the eminency of his perſon, and performances.

But Saul encreaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews, which dwelt at Damaſcus, proving that this is the very Chriſt.

Euſeb. hiſt. 1. 3.

Eſ. 7. 14.
Jer. 23. 6.
Iſ. 9. 6.

The Prophet Zechary ſeemeth alſo (inſiſting in the footſteps of Eſay and Jeremy) to aſſign him the name Netſer (or the Branch) Behold the man whoſe name is the Branch; but this onely denoted an appellation ſuiting him, as derived from the ſtock of David, and might beſide myſtically allude to ſome circumſtance concerning him. It doth not therefore appear, that the one proper name, by which the Meſſias, as the ſon of Man ſhould be known and called, is directly forementioned; yet it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God would have an eſpecial care, that he ſhould have one beſitting him. It was one of the ſeven things,

Zech. 6. 12. 3. 8.
Iſ. 4. 2. 11. 1.
Jer. 23. 5. 33. 15.
Matt. 2. 23.

which the Talmudiſts ſay were conſtituted before the world: the Law, Repentance, Paradiſe, Hell, the Throne of glory, the Sanctuary, the name of the Meſſias; according to that in the ſeventy ſecond Pſalm (verſe 17.) Ante ſolem primum nomen ejus; ſo it ſeems they read it: the LXX. have it, πρὸ τοῦ ἡλίου διαμενεῖ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ.

It was anciently a method of divine providence to impoſe upon perſons (deſtinated by God to be ſpecial ſubjects of his favour, and eminent miniſters of his glory) names anſwerable to the nature of their employment, or to the deſign, which was by their means and miniſtery to be accompliſhed. Whereby as God's care and providence over humane affairs was declared, ſo men upon the mention of ſuch names were admoniſhed to conſider the divine benefits, and the duties correſpondent to them. The particular reaſon of impoſing ſuch names is ſometime expreſly
Gen. 4. 25. ſet down; as in the caſes of Seth, Abraham, Iſraël, Solomon;
17. 5. 32 28. ſometime it ſeems tacitly implied, the actions of the perſons interpre-
1 Chr. 22 9. ting the reaſon of their names, as in Melchiſedeck, Joſhua, Malachy, Gen 13. 18. and perhaps in many others.
Heb. 7. 1.

This method with great reaſon we may ſuppoſe, that the ſame divine wiſdom would uſe in aſſigning a name to that Perſon, whom from the
Joh. 10. 36. beginning of things he had promiſed, and before the foundation of the world had deſigned to ſanctify and ſend into the world, for atchieving the moſt high, and excellent deſign, that ever for the glory of God and the good of his creation, was to be undertaken in this world. Moſt fit it would be, that God himſelf ſhould be his God-father; that he ſhould have no ordinary, no caſual, no inſignificant name; but ſuch an one, which being heard might inſtruct and admoniſh us, might raiſe in us a ſenſe of God's infinite mercy and bounty toward us; might breed love in our hearts, and impreſs veneration on our minds toward him, who ſhould bear that auſpicious and comfortable name; that name, which as Cant. 1. 3. the ſpouſe of the myſtical Solomon in her myſtical ſong did ſing is as an ointment poured forth, full of moſt wholſome, and moſt pleaſant fragrancy.

Iſ. 25.9.35.4. Now ſince of all the Meſſias his performances none was to be more 49.8, 26. 63. ſignal, than that of ſaving; to publiſh, to purchaſe, to effect ſalvation
1. 55. 5.52.7, were to be (according to what the Prophets expreſly and frequently ſay)
10. 61. 10. his peculiar works; to be the Saviour of the world was (as we be-
59. 16. fore touched, according to the common opinion of the Jews) a proper
Hoſ. 1. 7. attribute of his.
Zech. 9. 9.
Joh. 4 42.

Wherefore the name Jeſus (which we are told in the Goſpel was by direction from God imparted by particular revelation, brought by an Archangel from heaven, impoſed on our Lord) did very well ſuit the
Mat. 1. 21. Meſſias. No other name could be more ſweet, or acceptable; no other Luke 1. 32. name could better become him, who was to redeem men from all their
2. 21. enemies, their ſlaveries, their errours, their ſins, their miſeries.

It was indeed a name not in its immediate application altogether new,
Col. 4. 11. for many others had born it; Jeſus, the ſon of Juſtus we have mentioned in Saint Paul, Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, that excellent writer we know; and divers others ſo named occur in Joſephus; yet was it que-Baſil. Iren. ſtionleſs by Gods providence, or by Moſes, by divine inſtinct, firſt pro&c. duced with relation to the Meſſias; Moſes called Oſhea the ſun of Nun Je-
Num. 13. 16. hoſhua, ſaith the Text: being in a myſterious exchange from a former Eccluſ. 46. 1. name aſſigned to the famous Jeſus (as not onely Ben-ſirach, but the Apo- Heb. 4. 8. ſtle to the Hebrews write him) the ſon of Nun, who of all the ancient types did moſt exactly (in office and performance) repreſent and preſignify nify the Meſſias; being (as Benſirach ſpeaks) great for the ſaving of God's elect; whoſe actions are wonderfully congruous to thoſe, which we attribute to our Jeſus. For, by the way to ſhew the reſemblance (omitting leſs, and more nice congruities) as Joſhua did bring the good report, Numb. 14. 7.

and evangelized concerning the promiſed land (when other falſe or faint inquirers defamed it, and diſcouraged the people from entring) as he was educated under Moſes and ſerved him faithfully; as he ſucceeded in the adminiſtration and government of God's people, perfecting what Moſes had begun of deliverance and ſettlement to them; As he brought the Iſraelites (not that old disbelieving, mutinous and repining generation, but a new progeny of better diſpoſed people) finally out of the wilderneſs into Canaan, by God's miraculous aſſiſtance, ſubduing their Enemies, and eſtabliſhing them in a quiet poſſeſſion of the promiſed land, allotting unto each Tribe its inheritance; and as he did re-circumciſe Joſh. 5. 2.
the children of Iſrael: ſo did our heavenly Jeſus firſt make a true and faithful diſcovery concerning the myſtical land of promiſe (that better Heb. 11.
country) flowing with ſpiritual milk and honey (abundant with all ſpiritual comforts and pleaſures, for the food, ſuſtenance and refreſhment of our ſouls.) He was born under the Law and ſubmitted to its Gal. 4. 4. injunctions, fulfilling all righteouſneſs. He ſurvived it (the part of it, Matth. 3. 15. Matth. 5. 17.
which was purely Moſaical and arbitrary) and did complete it. He doth Ἀρχηγὸς conduct God's regenerate People (ſuch as believe, and willingly follow ζωῆς σωτη-him) out of the deſart ſtate of errour, guilt and ſin, into the ſuperiour ρίας, πίστεως.
ſtate of happy reſt and joy, with miraculous power and efficacy; vanquiſhing all the ſpiritual Amorites (the Devil, World and Fleſh) which infeſt, obſtruct and oppoſe them; ſettling them in a perpetual undiſturbed and immoveable enjoyment of that bliſsful region; having alſo by a ſpiritual circumciſion prepared and conſecrated them to God. Our Saviour therefore not only when he at laſt in fulneſs of truth did come into the world, but anciently in type and ſhadow may be ſuppoſed to have received this name Jeſus, conferr'd upon him in the perſon of Joſhua, his moſt illuſtrious repreſentative. It certainly was moſt appoſite to the Meſſias.

That Jeſus (that Perſon, whoſe birth, life, death, reſurrection and aſcenſion hence, are related in the Evangelical hiſtories) is the Chriſt, is the principal Article of pure faith; the moſt peculiar doctrine of our Religion as ſuch, and as deſtinct from all other Religions: it indeed virtually comprehends all other Doctrines of moment therein, regarding either faith or practice. For that our being perſuaded that Jeſus is the Chriſt, implies, that we apprehend our ſelves obliged to embrace for truth whatever was taught by him and his Apoſtles, to obey all his laws, to rely upon him for attainment of all the mercies and bleſſings, and rewards, which he promiſed to diſpence, in that order and upon thoſe terms, which the Goſpel declareth. Whence to the hearty belief of this Point ſuch great commendations are given, ſo high rewards are offered, ſo excellent privileges are annexed in the Scriptures. Whence alſo the declaring, proving and perſuading this doctrine was the chief matter of the Apoſtles preaching, as both their profeſſion and practice do ſhew. The Jews (ſaith Saint Paul to the Corinthians) require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after wiſdom, but we preach Chriſt, that was crucified. And, I determined (ſaith he again of himſelf) not to know any thing among you (that is not to diſcover any 1 Cor. 1. 23.
other knowledge, not to inſiſt on any other ſubject) ſave Jeſus Chriſt, 2. 2. καὶ τοῦτον ἐ-even him that was crucified. This Saint John tells us was the drift of his σταυρωμένον. writing the Goſpel (which is a more extenſive, and durable way of preaching,

Joh. 20. 31. preaching) Theſe things (ſaith he) were written, that ye may believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt. And their practice, ſutable to ſuch profeſſions, is apparent in divers paſſages of this Book, wherein their acts, and their diſcourſes are reported. This Text particularly repreſents the ſcope, to which Saint Paul mainly directed his Preaching, which was the maintenance and perſuaſion of this Point, that Jeſus is the Chriſt.

It is therefore very requiſite, that we ſhould well underſtand the meaning thereof, and that we ſhould firmly be perſuaded of its truth. To which purpoſe I ſhall endeavour, by God's aſſiſtance, to imitate S. Paul's practice here, who did συμβιβάζειν (that is the Greek word here, ſignifying primarily to put, or bring things together, and thence in a way of collection or argumentation to teach) who, I ſay, did inſtruct his auditours, collecting it from teſtimonies of ancient ſcripture, and confirming it by arguments grounded thereon. In performing which I ſhall obſerve this method.

1. I ſhall explain the notion and reaſon of this name, or title Chriſt.

2. I ſhall ſhew (that which is here tacitly ſuppoſed) that there was by God's appointment to be, or to come into the world from God one Perſon, ſignally that, which this name or title imports, ὁ χριστὸς, the very Chriſt.

3. I ſhall argue that Jeſus was that Perſon.

4. I ſhall explain in what manner, in what reſpects, to what purpoſes Jeſus in the New Teſtament is repreſented as Chriſt.

5. I ſhall make ſome practical application of the Point.

Joh. 1. 21. 4. 25. I. For the firſt particular. Chriſt is a name, or title importing office and dignity; being the ſame with Meſſias, that in Greek, this in Hebrew ſignifying, the Anointed; the which appellation we find attributed to ſeveral perſons upon the following ground: Of ancient times in the Eaſtern Countries (abounding as with good oyl, ſo with many delicate odoriferous ſpices) it ſeems generally to have been the manner (as from 1 King. 19. 15. Hazael the Syrian his being anointed may probably be collected) it was however ſuch among the Jews, to ſeparate or conſecrate perſons (and things alſo I might add) deſigned to any great or extraordinary employment, by anointing them with ointments compoſed of thoſe ingredients; they ſymbolizing, or denoting thereby (as it ſeems) both a plentiful effuſion upon them of gifts and faculties qualifying them for ſuch ſervices; and alſo a comfortable and pleaſant diffuſion of good and grateful effects expected from them (from the uſe of things, the performances of perſons thus ſanctified) Cant. 1. 2. Thy name, ſaith the ſpouſe in the Canticles, is as an ointment poured forth; that is, thy name is very delightful, Pſal. 133. 1, 2. very acceptable. And, Behold (ſaith David, commending brotherly love and concord) how good and pleaſant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; it is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard——ſo good and pleaſant were thoſe employments hoped to be, to which men were by ſuch unction inaugurated. We find eſpecially three ſorts of Perſons, to whom this conſecration did, by divine appointment, belong; Kings, Prieſts and Prophets; perſons by whoſe miniſtery God of old did manage his entercourſe with men, in governing them and cnmmunicating his bleſſings to them, both in an ordinary way (ſo he uſed Kings and Prieſts) and in an extraordinary manner, therein he employed Prophets; which ſorts of perſons are therefore ſtyled God's anointed; Kings and Prieſts more frequently, but ſometimes alſo Prophets; as in that of the Pſal. 105. 15. Pſalm: Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm; where Prophets and the Anointed of God do ſeem to denote the ſame thing, and 1 Chron. 16. 22. one to expound the other; however they belong to the ſame perſons: for Abraham, whom together with the other Patriarchs thoſe words concern, is expreſly called a Prophet. (Now therefore, ſaith the Text, Gen. 20. 7. reſtore the man his wife, for he is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee; and thou ſhalt live.) And that Iſaac was a Prophet the Apoſtle to the Hebrews intimates, ſaying; By faith Iſaac bleſſed Jacob and Eſau concerning things to come; The ſame is plain of Jacob, who before his death Heb. 11. 20. uttered many great and remarkable predictions. The Patriarchs therefore probably as Prophets were ſtyled God's anointed. But to remark ſomewhat of theſe great offices, and their anointing ſingly:

Prophets

For Prieſts, although at firſt all the Sons of Aaron were thus conſecrated, according to that Law in Exodus, Thou ſhalt anoint Aaron, and Exod. 30. 30. 40. 15. his ſons, that they may miniſter unto me in the Prieſts office; Yet the Jewiſh Χριστοὶ ἱερεῖς. Maſters tell us, that afterward in all the courſe of times only the Mac. 2. 1. 10. High-prieſt was ſo conſecrated. Whence by the anointed, or the Prieſt Selden. de Succ. 2. 9. that is anointed is, ſay they, meant the High-prieſt, in diſtinction from Levit. 4. 3. 5. 16. 6. 22. other inferiour Prieſts.

For Kings, the Jewiſh Doctors alſo (as Maſter Selden reports) do tell us, that ſuch of them, who in a legal, orderly, and unqueſtioned ὡς καὶ αὐτοὺς πνεύματι θείῳ. courſe of right did ſucceed into the Kingdom, were not themſelves in Προφῆται χρίοντες εἰκονικῶς τινας Χριστοὺς ἀπειργάζοντο. Euſeb. Hiſt. 1. 3. perſon anointed (they being conceived to derive a ſufficient conſecration from their Anceſtours) but all thoſe, who in an extraordinary way by ſpecial deſignation (as Saul, David, Jehu, Hazael) or upon a doubtfull, and controverted, or oppoſed title (as Salomon and Joas) did aſſume the royal charge, were thus initiated. (How ancient alſo the cu- 2 King. 9. 3. 11. 12. ſtom of anointing Princes was, may be ſeen from that expreſſion in Jo- 1 King. 19. 15. 1. 39. tham's parable: The trees went forth to anoint a King over them, and they Jud. 9. 8. ſaid to the Olive-tree, Reign thou over us.)

As for Prophets, we do not find that they were commonly, or according to ordinary rule anointed; but one plain inſtance we have of Eliſha, ſubſtituted to Eliah (the chief of Prophets in his time) in this manner: Eliſha, (it is ſaid by God) the ſon of Shaphat ſhalt thou anoint to 1 King. 19. 16. be Prophet in thy room; who was thus conſecrated, probably, becauſe he was to be a Prophet more than ordinary, endewed with higher gifts, and deſigned to greater actions, than common Prophets were then; or perhaps becauſe he was to be the Arch-prophet, or head of the Prophets at that time.

We may alſo farther obſerve, that ſome perſons, who (in probability) did not partake any material unction, but were yet deſtinated by God, and qualified and employed as ſpecial inſtruments of his providence or grace, for producing effects ſutable to any of thoſe offices, have been therefore ſtyled God's anointed. Upon which ſcore the Patriarchs (by 1 Chron. 16, 22. whom God's true Religion was maintained and conveyed) do ſeem to have been called God's Anointed. And King Cyrus (whoſe miniſtery Iſa. 45. 1. 44. 28. God uſed in the re-edifying his Temple, and refreſhing his People is therefore termed God's Chriſt, or Anointed (Thus ſaith the Lord to his Anointed, to Cyrus my Chriſt; τῷ Χριστῷ μου Κύρῳ) the name of the ſign being imparted to perſons, who were endewed with the qualities, or did perform the effects ſignified thereby.

Theſe things being conſidered, it appeareth that the name Chriſt, doth import a Perſon in a ſpecial and ſignal manner deſigned and ordained by God to one, or ſome, or all of theſe charges and functions; an extraordinary King, or a great Prieſt, or an eminent Prophet; or one, in whom either more, or all of theſe did concur; ſo much may ſuffice for the notion and reaſon of this title, Chriſt.

in

II. Now that there was a perſon, ſupereminently endued with all theſe characters (a Chriſt in all theſe reſpects) decreed by God in due time to come into the world for accompliſhment of the greateſt purpoſes anſwerable to that Title (for the inſtruction and reformation of the world, for the erecting and managing an univerſal and perpetual Kingdom, for the reconciliation and benediction of mankind, for the reduction of all Nations to the acknowledgment of God, and obedience to his will, and hope in his mercy) many expreſs paſſages in the ancient Scripture declare.

That ſuch a Prophet ſhould be ſent Moſes in expreſs terms foretold: Deut. 18. 15. The Lord thy God (ſaith he) ſhall raiſe up unto thee a prophet from the 18. midſt of thee of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him ſhall ye hearken. And, Joh. 1. 46. I will (ſaith God himſelf) raiſe them up a prophet from among their Act. 3. 22. brethren, like unto thee: And I will put my words into his mouth, and he 7. 37. ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him, &c. which words plainly deſcribe a very extraordinary Prophet ſometime to come, who was (ſignally and eſpecially, beyond all other Prophets) to reſemble Moſes; who conſequently was to accompliſh high deſigns, and to atchieve wonderfull acts; to conduct and deliver God's people, to reveal God's Deut. 33. 10. mind and will, to promulge a new Law, and eſtabliſh a new Covenant; ſo his reſembling Moſes doth imply, ſo his miſſion doth ſignify (for why, if he were not intended for the performance of ſomewhat great and new, even beyond what Moſes did, ſhould he be deſigned ſo formally; what need or reaſon had there been of his miſſion, after Moſes?) and ſo the later Prophets do interpret the great Law-giver his words: Who largely predict concerning one, ordained by God to come, who ſhould eminently diſcharge all parts of the prophetical function; who ſhould diſcloſe new truths to men, ſhould proclaim a new law to Jer. 31. 33. the world, ſhould eſtabliſh a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and Iſa. 49. 8. with all people; who ſhould propagate the knowledge and worſhip of God, enlightning the Gentiles, and converting them unto God; who ſhould inſtruct the ignorant, ſtrengthen the faint, comfort the afflicted; Eſ. 61. 1. according to divers paſſages concerning him; as for inſtance that in Eſay, Luc. 4. 18. cited by S. Luke: The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath ſent me to bind up the broken hearted —— and that in the ſame Prophet, alledged by Iſa. 42. 1. Matt. 12. 18. S. Matthew: Behold my ſervant, whom I uphold, mine elect, in whom my ſoul delighteth. I have put my ſpirit upon him; he ſhall bring forth judgment unto the Gentiles, he ſhall not cry, &c. which being anointed to preach tidings, and to bring forth judgment from God; being elected and inſpired by God in order to ſuch performances are peculiar marks of a Prophet; ſuch promulgation of God's will, ſuch miniſtration of direction and comfort from God are the proper employment of a Prophet, that is of an eſpecial Agent ſent and qualified by God to tranſact ſpiritual affairs with men, and to declare or denounce his pleaſure to them.

The ancient Scriptures do alſo plainly ſignifie concerning the ſame Act. 2. 36. perſon, that he ſhould be a great Prince conſtituted by God to govern his people for ever in righteouſneſs, peace and proſperity; endewed Luc. 1. 71, 74. with power requiſite for delivering them from oppreſſion and ſlavery; Iſa. 9. 6. 11. for ſubduing their enemies, for reducing the nations under ſubjection un- 1, 10. 16. 5. to God. So Eſay: For unto us a child is born, unto us a ſon is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulders—Of the encreaſe of his government and peace there ſhall be no end; upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to eſtabliſh it, with judgment, and with juſtice for ever. Jeremy: Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will raiſe unto David a righteous branch, and a King ſhall reign, and proſper; and ſhall execute judgment and juſtice in the earth: in his days Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely. Ezekiel: I will ſave my flock, they ſhall be no more a prey—and I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them, and he ſhall feed them—they ſhall alſo walk in my ſtatutes, and obſerve my ſtatutes, and do them. Daniel: I ſaw in the night viſions, and behold one like the ſon of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days—And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, and nations, and languages ſhall ſerve him: His dominion is an everlaſting dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed. Hoſea: The children of Iſrael ſhall return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their King; and ſhall fear the Lord, and his goodneſs in the latter days. The Pſalmiſt: I have ſet my King upon my holy hill of Sion; ask of me, and I will give thee the uttermoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion. In theſe, and in many other places do the Prophets ſpeak (very perſpicuouſly and magnificently) concerning the Kingdom, Royal ſtate, and Princely atchievements of this great Perſonage who ſhould come.

Jer. 23. 5. 33. 15. 30. 8.
Ezek. 34. 22, &c. 36. 21, &c. 37, 21, &c.
Dan. 7. 13. 7. 18. 2. 44, 45.
Hoſ. 3. 5.
Pſal, 2. 6, 8. 72. 11, 17. 45. 6. 89. 3. 27, 36. 132. 17, 18.

That he alſo ſhould aſſume and execute the Prieſtly function may alſo be learned from prophetical inſtruction. For of him Zechary thus ſpake: Behold the man, whoſe name is the Branch; (a name, which ſo often (in ſenſe) is attributed to this Perſon as ſprouting from the ſtock of David) he ſhall grow up out of his place, and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord; and he ſhall bear the glory, and ſhall ſit, and rule upon his throne; and he ſhall be a Prieſt upon his throne; and the counſel of the Lord ſhall be between them both. Of him alſo David ſpake: The Lord hath ſworn and will not repent; thou art a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchizedek. To make reconciliation for iniquity (which Daniel aſcribes to him) to bear the ſins of the people, and to make interceſſion for the tranſgreſſours (which are aſſigned to him by Eſay) are alſo performances, from which his ſacerdotal office may be collected.

Zech. 6. 12. ἀνατολὴ צמח.
Pſal. 110. 4.
Dan. 9. 24.
Iſa. 53. 12.

Theſe things being conſidered, it is no wonder, that the ancient Jews (although the Text of Scripture doth ſeldom, perhaps not oftner than once (in the ninth of Daniel) explicitely and directly apply this name of Chriſt, or Meſſias to this illuſtrious Perſon, ſo prophecyed of, and promiſed to come) did eſpecially aſſign this title unto him; it ſeeming of any moſt congruous, and moſt comprehenſive of what appertained to him; moſt apt to denote all the prerogatives, the endowments, the atchievements, the effects which ſhould belong to him, or proceed from him. Whence 'tis obſerved by the learned, that the Chaldee Paraphraſes (compoſed, as they ſay, before Jeſus our Lord his time, by the Prieſts, as an interpretation of the not ſo exactly underſtood Hebrew Scripture, for edification and inſtruction of the people) doth very often apply unto him this name of the Meſſias: according to whoſe expoſition and ſtyle, together with tradition continually deduced down from the Prophets themſelves (as is probable) we ſee plainly from the New Teſtament, and from other Hiſtory conſpiring therewith, that God's people unanimouſly did expect a Perſon under this name and notion, who ſhould be endued with qualities and ſhould perform actions conformable to the characters mentioned, to come in determinate time into the world.

Pſal. 45. 7. Iſa, 61. 1.

Luk. 2. 38. world. Of Anna the Propheteſs it is ſaid, that ſhe gave thanks likewiſe to the Lord, and ſpake of him πᾶσι τοῖς προσδεχομένοις λύτρωσιν, to all that Luk. 3. 15. expected redemption in Jeruſalem. Hence when S. John the Baptiſt did live, and teach in a manner extraordinary, the people did expect, and all men muſed in their hearts concerning him, whether he were the Chriſt.
Joh. 1. 19. Yea the Jews (that is their Senate, or great Synedrium) ſent Prieſts and Levites to inquire of him, whether he were the Chriſt or no: And when Jeſus his admirable diſcourſes and works had convinced divers perſons, Joh. 7. 31. they ſaid, When Chriſt comes, ſhall he do greater miracles than this man
Joh. 1. 46. hath done? and the report which Philip made to Nathanael concerning Joh. 4. 42. Jeſus was this: We have found him, of whom Moſes in the law and the pro- phets did write; ſo at large did they preſume concerning a Chriſt to come. That they particularly did conceive he ſhould be a great Prophet who ſhould abundantly declare God's truth and will, may be gathered Joh. 6. 12. from divers paſſages; as from that in S. John: Men therefore ſeeing the miracle that Jeſus had done, ſaid, That this is in truth the prophet, who Luk. 7. 16. was to come into the world. Thus may that in S. Luke be taken: And there came a fear upon all, and they glorifyed God, ſaying; that the great Joh. 4. 25. prophet is riſen up among us, and that God hath viſited his people; and this the Samaritan woman implied, when ſhe ſaid, I know that the Meſ- ſias comes, and when he ſhall come he will tell us all things. That they ſup-poſed he ſhould be a King, who ſhould be furniſhed with mighty power, and ſhould perform wonderful acts,; who ſhould aſſume the government of God's people with royal Majeſty, and execute it with glorious ſucceſs, is moſt clear. It was no wonder to King Herod to hear the Matt. 2. 2, 4. Wiſe-mens inquiry, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? upon it he immediately demands of the Scribes where Chriſt is to be born. Hence Joh. 1. 50. no ſooner did Nathanael believe in Chriſt, but he cries out, Maſter, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael. It was upon this ſuppo-Luk. 23. 3. ſition that the Prieſts grounded their calumny: We have found this man perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæſar, ſaying that he himſelf is Chriſt, the King; as alſo hence (upon information and by Luk. 19. 38. inſtinct from them) Pilate asked him that queſtion, Art thou the King of the Jews: hence likewiſe proceeded that acclamation: Εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος βασιλεὺς, Bleſſed is the King, that is to come in the name of the Lord. And it was from this ancient popular prejudice, that the A-Act. 1. 6. poſtles asked Jeſus after his reſurrection: Lord wilt thou at this time re- ſtore the Kingdom to Iſrael? It is indeed the ordinary Title, which the Talmudiſts and ancient Rabbins give the Meſſias Hammelech Meſſiah, Meſ- ſias the King.

That the Meſſias in their opinion was alſo to be a Prieſt, is not ſo clearly apparent; yet it may probably be inferred: That they underſtood the 110*th Pſalm* to reſpect the Meſſias is very likely, or rather Matt. 22. 43. certain from that paſſage in the Goſpel; in which Jeſus asked the Pha- riſees, What think ye of Chriſt, whoſe ſon is he? and, they anſwering, the Son of David, he returned upon them this puzling queſtion: How then doth David in the Spirit (that is prophetically) call him Lord, ſaying,
The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand; which queſtion confounded them, they not daring to deny that Pſalm to reſpect the Meſſias (it being the received opinion among the Doctors) nor yet ſeeing how the Relations of Son and Lord were reconcileable: And admitting Pſal. 110. 4. that Pſalm was to be referr'd unto the Meſſias, they muſt conſequently acknowledge him to be a Prieſt; for it is there ſaid, The Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent, Thou art a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

Melchizedek. It was alſo an opinion paſſing among them, that the Meſſias ſhould be the Saviour of the World, as may be collected from that ſaying of the Samaritans: We have heard him our ſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world: Which being their opinion, and toward the ſalvation of Men it being needful, that a reconciliation of them unto God, and an expiation of their ſins (which are Sacerdotal acts) ſhould be procured by him, it ſeems to follow, that they had ſome notion of his Prieſthood. Indeed the perſuaſion concerning a Meſſias to come, about the time when our Lord appeared, became diffuſed over the whole Eaſtern parts; as even Pagan Hiſtorians (Tacitus and Suetonius do report.) And the conceit thereof was ſo vigorous in the Jews, that it excited them to rebellion, and encouraged them with great obſtinacy to perſiſt therein, as not only thoſe Hiſtorians, but Joſephus himſelf telleth us; he alſo together with them (which is ſomewhat ſtrange) referring the intent of thoſe Prophecies, and the verifying of that opinion to the perſon of the Emperour Veſpaſian. The ſame conceit did then likewiſe occaſion many Pretenders and Impoſtours (ſuch as Theudas, and Judas the Galilæan) to ariſe, diſpoſing alſo the People ſo eaſily to be deluded by them, and ſo readily to run after them, as they did to their own harm.

Joh. 4. 42.
Luk. 2. 38.

Percrebuerat oriente toto vetus & conſtans opinio eſſe in fatis, ut eo tempore Judæâ profecti rerum potirentur. Suet. in Veſp.

Pluribus perſuaſio inerat antiquis ſacerdotum literis contineri, eo ipſo tempore fore ut valeſceret Oriens, profectique Judæâ rerum potirentur. Tacitus Hiſt. V.

Τὸ δ' ἐπᾶραν αὐτοὺς μάλιστα πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον ἦν χρησμὸς ἀμφίβολος ὁμοίως ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς εὑρημένος γράμμασιν, ὡς κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν ἐκεῖνον ἀπὸ τῆς χώρας τις αὐτῶν ἄρξει τῆς οἰκουμένης. --- ἐδήλου δ' ἄρα τὴν περὶ Οὐεσπασιανοῦ τὸ λόγιον ἡγεμονίαν, ἀποδειχθέντος ἐπὶ Ἰουδαίας αὐτοκράτορος. Joſ. ἁλώσ. 6. 31.

Thus according to the ancient Scriptures, interpreted, and backed by the current Tradition, and general conſent of God's People, it is ſufficiently apparent, that a Meſſias (according to the notion premiſed) was to come into the world.

III. Now farther, that Jeſus, whom we acknowledge, was indeed that Meſſias may appear plainly from the perfect correſpondency of all circumſtances belonging to the Meſſias his appearance, and of all characters ſuting his Perſon, and of all things to be performed by him; together with whatever was to be conſequent upon his preſence and performances; according to ancient preſignifications and predictions, and according to the paſſable opinions of God's People concerning him; the which (as they cannot poſſibly ſute with any other perſon, that hath yet appeared, or may reaſonably be expected to come hereafter, ſo) they exactly agree to the coming, and perſon, and practice, and ſucceſs of Jeſus.

Among circumſtances the moſt conſiderable is the time; the which (both when it was ſaid that he ſhould come, and when it was fit that he ſhould come) did very well agree to Jeſus. But when the fulneſs of time was come, God ſent forth his ſon, &c. Fulneſs in regard to ancient prediction, in regard to fitneſs of ſeaſon. For as the Meſſias was to be the deſire of all Nations, ſo Jeſus did come then, when by ſpecial inſtinct a general expectation and deſire of his coming was raiſed in the world; at the time, when the Patriarch Jacob foretold that Shiloh would come, viz. when the ſceptre was juſt departed from Judah, and a Law-giver from his feet; Judæa being brought under the dominion of ſtrangers (ſuch were the Romans, ſuch was King Herod.) About the expiration of Daniel's weeks (however commenced, or computed) the time determined to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to introduce everlaſting righteouſneſs; to ſeal up the viſion and propheſy, and to anoint the moſt holy (as the Prophet ſpeaks.) Shortly before the

Gal. 4. 14.
Eph. 1. 10.
Act. 14. 16.
17. 30.

Gen. 49. 8.

Dan. 9. 24.

Dan. 9. 26. the deſtruction of Hieruſalem, according to that of Daniel: And after ſixty and two weeks ſhall Meſſias be cut off, but not for himſelf, and the people of the Prince that ſhall come ſhall deſtroy the city, and the ſanctuary.
When that Sion, out of which (as Eſay tells us) the law was to go forth;
Iſ. 2. 3.59.20. and out of which the Redeemer ſhould come, and turn ungodlineſs from Jacob, did ſtand and flouriſh. When the Temple did ſtand, which the Prophets Malachi and Haggai did predict ſhould be illuſtrated by the Mal. 3. 1. preſence of the Meſſiah: The Lord, whom ye ſeek, ſaith Malachi, ſhall ſuddenly come to his Temple; even the meſſenger of the Covenant in whom ye Hag. 2. 6, 7, 9. delight: and, I will (ſaith Haggai) ſhake all nations, and the deſire of all nations ſhall come; and I will fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the Lord;
the glory of this latter houſe ſhall be greater than the glory of the former, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. Before Jewry was deſolated, Jeruſalem deſtroyed, the Tribes and Families of Iſrael confounded, all that People wofully Iſa. 2.4.11. 6. diſperſed, and in a palpable manner deſerted by God. When the Jewiſh
65. 25.66. 12. Religion (which the Meſſias was to complete) was by a numerous Pſal. 72. 7. acceſſion of Proſelytes diſſeminated, and diffuſed through many Provinces of that one vaſt Empire, under which a great part of the world was united and ſettled durably in a calm ſtate of peace and order: when one or two Languages were commonly underſtood by all, and men thereby more eaſily converſed together; and when the ancient Scriptures being Dan. 12. 4. tranſlated into Greek were ſo widely intelligible. When mankind was become generally civilized and cultivated with laws, and policy, and learning; with knowledge of Arts and Philoſophy; the world then beginning of it ſelf to open its eyes, ſo as to diſcern the errours and deceits, by which it long had been abuſed; and was thence well prepared to learn, and rendred very ſuſceptive of divine truth; when all things thus Gal. 4. 4. conſpired with good advantage to entertain the Chriſt, then in the fulneſs
Eph. 1. 10. of time, in the right, and proper ſeaſon (καιροῖς ἰδίοις, as S. Paul ſpeaketh)
1 Tim. 2. 6. Iſa. 49. 8. καιρῷ δεκτῷ, in an acceptable time, as Eſay propheſyed, did Jeſus
2 Cor. 6. 2. come, to inſtruct and reform the world, as he profeſſed. It was Porphyry's objection againſt Chriſtianity, and an obvious one, why Chriſt did not come before, but in the latter days; to which the particular fitneſs of this time is an anſwer.

The other circumſtances; the Family out of which, the place where, the manner in which Jeſus was born, did alſo punctually correſpond.
He was to be an Iſraelite, according to the promiſe made of old to Abraham, Gen. 22. 18. that in his Seed all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and Deut. 18. 5. according to Moſes his Prophecy: The Lord thy God ſhall raiſe up unto thee a Prophet from the midſt of thee of thy brethren. He was to come
Gen. 49. 7. &c. out of the Tribe of Judah; as the Patriarch Jacob in his laſt prophetical Rev. 5. 5. rapture did by various expreſſions intimate and ſignifie. Particularly he 22. 16. was to riſe out of the Family of David, as the Prophets frequently and
Iſa. 11. 1, 10. clearly did avouch; for he was (as Eſay ſaid) to be a rod out of the ſtem Jer. 23. 5. of Jeſſe, and a branch going out of his roots; a righteous branch (according 33. 15. to Jeremy) whom God would raiſe to David. He whom Solomon (that moſt wiſe, peaceable and proſperous Prince, who raiſed that glorious Temple, the emblem of God's Church) did preſignifie; and in whom the promiſes made to David, concerning the perpetuity of his throne
1. King. 8. 25. ſhould be made good; There ſhall not fail thee a man, &c. — Thine
2 Sam. 7. 16. houſe and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee; thy throne
2 Chr. 6. 16. ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever; eſpecially that abſolute and irrevocable Pſal. 89. 3. promiſe ratified by God's oath: I have made a covenant with my choſen, I 132. 11. Luc. 1.32. 69. have ſworn unto David, my ſervant, Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever, and build up thy throne unto all generations: who conſequently by reaſon of conjunction in bloud, and mutual repreſentation, David prefiguring him, and he by ſucceſſion into the imperial right expreſſing David, is by ſeveral of the Prophets (by Jeremy, by Ezekiel, by Hoſhea) called David, whence the learned among the Jews did conſent, that the Meſſias was to be the Son of David: How ſay the Scribes that Chriſt is the Son of David? and, What think ye of Chriſt, whoſe Son is he? ('tis our Lord's queſtion to the Phariſees) they ſay unto him, The Son of David. Yea the people were generally informed herein, and poſſeſſed with this ſentiment: Hath not the Scripture ſaid, that Chriſt cometh of the ſeed of David? was a popular ſpeech in S. John. And all the people were amazed, and ſaid, is not this the Son of David? Now accordingly that Jeſus came out of this Country, Tribe and Family (that he was, as S. Luke ſpeaketh, of the houſe and lineage of David, both according to natural and legal ſucceſſion) the expreſs affirmation of Angels, the poſitive atteſtation of his Parents and Kindred (who beſt knew) the genealogies (according to the manner of thoſe times, and that Nation) carefully preſerved, and produced by the Evangeliſts, do aſſure us; neither doth it appear that Jeſus his Adverſaries did ever conteſt this point, but ſeem by their ſilence to have granted it, as eaſily and evidently proveable by authentick records and teſtimonies.

Act. 2. 30.
Jer. 33. 17. 21, 22, 26.
Jer. 30. 9.
Hoſ. 3. 5.
Ezek. 34. 23. 24. 37. 24, 25.
Marc. 12. 35.
Matt. 22. 42.
(Mat. 21. 9.
Mar. 12. 23.)
Joh. 7. 42.
Matt. 12. 23.
Matt. 1. 20.
Luc. 1. 32, 69.

More preciſely yet for the place of the Meſſias his birth, it was to be the Town of Bethlehem; ſo the Prophet Micah foretold; thus cited by S. Matthew: Thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah, art not the leaſt among the Princes of Judah; for out of thee ſhall come a Governour, that ſhall rule my people Iſrael. So from hence did the learned judge; for being conſulted by King Herod, where Chriſt was to be born, they anſwered that in Bethlehem: and ſo alſo did the people commonly believe, as appears by the foreſaid paſſage in S. John: Hath not the Scripture ſaid, that Chriſt cometh of the ſeed of David, and out of the Town of Bethlehem, where David was? Now that Jeſus ſhould be there born God himſelf took eſpecial care, ordering it by his providence, that by imperial edict the world ſhould be taxed, or regiſtred; and that in order thereto the Parents of Jeſus ſhould be forced to go from a diſtant place of their habitation unto Bethlehem, the place of their ſtock and family; that ſo both Jeſus might be born there, and that good circumſtance might appear certain by the unqueſtionable teſtimony of the Cenſual Tables, unto which (extant even in their times) Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian and Saint Chryſoſtome refer thoſe, who would be certified in that particular.

Mich. 5. 2.
Matt. 2. 7.
Matt. 2. 5.
Joh. 7. 42.

Κώμη δέ τις ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ Ἰουδαίων σταδίους λε Ἱεροσολύμων, ἐν ᾗ ἐγεννήθη Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, ὡς καὶ μαθεῖν δύνασθε ἐκ τῶν ἀναγραφῶν, &c. Juſt. Martyr. Apol. 2. Tertull. in Marc. 4. 19.

That place alſo of his Parents abode in Nazareth of Galilee, upon which was conſequent his firſt appearance in way of action, was ſo ordered, as to anſwer ancient predictions; according to which it was ſaid, that in the land of Zebulon and Nephthali, by the way of the Sea beyond Jordan in Galilee of the nations, the people that walked in darkneſs did ſee a great light, and they that dwelt in the land of the ſhadow of death, upon them the light ſhined.

Eſ. 1. 2.
Mat. 4. 15.

The manner alſo of the Meſſias his birth, was as became ſuch a Perſon, to be very extraordinary, and different from the common generation of men: for he was not only to be One like the ſon of man (as the Prophet Daniel terms him) and indeed the Son of David, as all the Prophecies declare of him, but the Son of God alſo: for, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee ſaith God of him in the ſecond Pſalm.

Dan. 7. 13.
Pſal. 2. 7, 12.

And that which in the firſt leſs perfect ſenſe was ſaid of Solomon (who prefigured him) was according to a more ſublime meaning, and more 1 Chr. 22. 10. exactly to agree unto him: He ſhall be my ſon, and I will be his father:
2 Sam. 7. 13. Pſal. 89. 27. and I will eſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom over Iſrael for ever: Alſo I will make him my firſt-born higher than the kings of the earth: And accordingly we ſee, that the Jews (both the wiſer, and the vulgar ſort) did ſuppoſe that he ſhould be the Son of God? So S. John the Baptiſt, ſo Joh. 1. 34, Nathanael, ſo Martha, ſo S. Peter, and the other Apoſtles, when they
49. 11. 27. 6. 69. became perſuaded that Jeſus was the Chriſt, did preſently, according to Matt. 16. 16. anticipation of judgment common to them with the people, confeſs him to be the ſon of God; the High-prieſt himſelf intimated the ſame, Mark 14. 61. when he asked Jeſus: Art thou the Chriſt, the ſon of the bleſſed? Yea, Matt. 26. 63. the Devils themſelves were learned and orthodox in this point; who Matt. 8. 29. Mark 1. 24. cried out, Thou art the Chriſt, the ſon of God. Now that, according to Luc. 4. 34. thoſe Prophecies and thoſe Traditions, the Meſſias ſhould be in a more than ordinary way, and (for the juſtifying of God's truth together with the ſatisfying men) ſhould evidently appear to be the ſon of God, it was requiſite (at leaſt convenient) that his birth ſhould be procured by divine operation, without concurrence of a humane father (how otherwiſe, at leaſt how better, could it be apparent that he was both the ſon of God, and of man?) It was conſequently either neceſſary, or fit that he ſhould be born of a Virgin: And that he ſhould indeed be ſo born, the Prophet Eſay did ſignifie, when he ſaid, The Lord
himſelf ſhall give you a ſign; that is, ſhall perform
Iſa. 7. 14. ſomewhat very remarkable and ſtrange: what was that? Behold a Matt. 1. 12. Virgin ſhall conceive, and bear a ſon, and ſhall call his name Emanuel; which Prophecy that it belonged to the Meſſias appears from the report and deſcription, which follows in the continuation of this particular Iſa. 9. 6. Prophecy concerning this child: For unto us a child is born, unto us a ſon is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulders, and his name ſhall be called wonderful, &c. which deſcription queſtionleſs appertaineth to the Meſſias. The ſame Prophet ſignifies the ſame concerning Iſa. 49. 5. him, when he introduceth him ſpeaking thus: And now, ſaith the Lord, that formed me from the womb to be his ſervant, &c. Now that Jeſus in correſpondence to this admirable character was born of a Virgin, his Parents (perſons of unblameable integrity and innocence; ſo that even the adverſaries of Jeſus appear not ever to have offered to impeach them of impoſture, or to have troubled them about this report coming from them) did conſtantly averr, Angels did atteſt to their report, and God himſelf at ſeveral times by audible voices from heaven declared Jeſus to be his beloved ſon.

— Εἰ μὲν σημεῖον ἐστι τὸ διδόμενον, παράδοξος ἔστω καὶ ἡ γέννησις. εἰ δὲ κοινὸς ὁ τρόπος τῆς γεννήσεως τοῦ παιδίου, μήτε σημεῖον λεγέσθω. Baſ. in Iſa. 7.

The ſtate and condition alſo, in which the Meſſias was firſt to appear was deſcribed to be a ſtate of external meanneſs and obſcurity, of poverty and wretchedneſs in the eye of man: A ſtate indeed moſt convenient and proper for a ſpiritual King, a moſt holy Prieſt, and abſolute Prophet; who was to teach, exerciſe and exemplifie the moſt rough and harſh pieces of righteouſneſs and piety (contempt of worldly vanities and pleaſures; all ſorts of ſelf-denial, and abſtinence; the vertues of meekneſs, humility and patience) who was to manage and execute his great undertakings not by natural or humane force, but by a vertue ſupernatural and divine; whoſe power conſequently would be more conſpicuous in a ſtate of viſible meanneſs and impotency, than in a condition of worldly ſplendour and ſtrength; that alſo which he was to merit from God, and to undergo for the ſake of men doth argue the ſame:

that ſuch the Meſſias his ſtate was to be, there are divers myſtical intimations in the ancient Scripture; but the Prophet Eſay ſpeaks it out moſt plainly: He ſhall grow up (ſays he, deſcribing that ſtate) before the Iſa. 53. 3.
Lord like a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground; He hath no form or comelineſs; and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him. And again: Thus ſaith the Lord, the redeemer of Iſrael, and Iſa. 49. 7.
his holy one; To him whom man deſpiſeth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a ſervant of Rulers, Kings ſhall ſee and ariſe, Princes alſo ſhall worſhip.

Now that Jeſus appeared thus in a poor, ſervile and deſpicable condition, Phil. 2. 7.
we need not for to prove; for as his Followers avow it, ſo his 2 Cor. 8. 9.
Adverſaries are moſt ready to grant it, in the haughtineſs of their conceit taking it for an advantage againſt him, it proves a ſcandal to them.
Is not this the Carpenter's ſon? Is not this the Carpenter the ſon of Mary? Matt. 13. 55.
ſaid they, and they were offended at him. Hence was it, that as the Mark 6. 3.
Prophet foretold, He was deſpiſed and rejected of men, and they eſteemed Iſa. 53. 3.
him not. Thus all the circumſtances of the Meſſias his coming were anſwered by thoſe of Jeſus.

Now concerning the qualities and endowments of the Meſſias, which conſtitute his perſonal character, they are, as was expedient, ſuch as ſhould diſpoſe and fit him for the diſcharge of his great employment and duty with utmoſt advantage, and eſpecial decency; in general, he was to be endewed with ſupereminent piety and ſanctity, with perfect innocence and integrity; ſo it is implied in all the deſcriptions of his perſon, and performances: The ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre; thou loveſt Pſal. 45. 6, 7.
righteouſneſs and hateſt iniquity, wherefore God even thy God hath anointed thee with the oyl of gladneſs above thy fellows, ſaid the Pſalmiſt of him; and Righteouſneſs ſhall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulneſs Iſa. 11. 5.
the girdle of his reins, ſaid Eſay of him; (denoting the ready diſpoſition of his mind to doe whatever was good:) and, He had done no violence, Iſa. 53. 8.
neither was there any deceit in his lips, ſaith the ſame Prophet of him again.
Some particular vertues and abilities are alſo aſcribed to him in an eminent degree: Excellent wiſdom and knowledge in ſpiritual matters thus repreſented by Eſay: The ſpirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, Iſa. 11. 2. 53. 11.
the ſpirit of wiſdom, and underſtanding; the ſpirit of counſel, and might;
the ſpirit of knowledge, and fear of the Lord; and ſhall make him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the Lord. Eloquence alſo, ſkill and aptitude to inſtruct men; which that moſt Evangelical Prophet thus ſets forth; The Lord hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I ſhould Iſa. 50. 4. know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary ——. That he ſhould be meek, and gentle, and compaſſionate toward men, in regard to their infirmities and afflictions; mild, and lowly in his converſation, the Prophets alſo ſignifie: He ſhall (ſaith Eſay) feed his flock like a Iſ. 40. 11.
ſhepherd, he ſhall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his boſom; and ſhall gently lead thoſe that are with young. A bruiſed reed Iſa. 42. 3. Matt. 12. 20.
ſhall he not break, and the ſmoaking flax ſhall he not quench: and, Behold, Zach. 9. 9.
ſaith Zachary, thy King cometh unto thee; he is juſt and having ſalvation, Matt. 21. 5.
lowly, and riding upon an aſs. That he ſhould be of a quiet and peaceable diſpoſition, no-wiſe fierce or contentious, turbulent or clamorous, Eſay declares, thus ſaying of him (as S. Matthew cites him:) He ſhall Iſa. 42. 2. Matt. 12. 19.
not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets.
To his admirable patience in bearing afflictions and contumelies, Eſay thus renders expreſs teſtimony; He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, Iſa. 53. 7.

yet

Iſa. 50. 6.
Iſa. 50. 7, 5.

yet he opened not his mouth; he was brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before her ſhearer is dumb, ſo he openeth not his mouth. And, I gave my back to the ſmiter, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair, I hid not my face from ſhame, and ſpitting. His invincible courage and reſolution in God's ſervice, together with his ſtrong confidence in God, and entire ſubmiſſion to God's will, is thus deſcribed by the ſame Prophet*: The Lord God* (ſaith he) will help me, therefore I ſhall not be confounded, therefore have I ſet my face like a flint, and I know that I ſhall not be aſhamed.—— The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. His general goodneſs and boundleſs charity toward men, the nature of his office and deſign, together with the whole courſe and tenour of his practice, ſuch as they are repreſented, do ſuppoſe and imply.

Matt. 3. 15.
Heb. 10. 7.
Joh. 18. 11.
12. 27.
Matt. 26. 39.
Matt. 14. 23.
19. 13. 21. 22.
11. 25. 9. 14,
21. 17. 4.
Luk. 6. 12.
22. 32, 41, 42.
23. 34.
Joh. 17. 1, 6,
11. 7. 11, 41.
6. 11.
Joh. 4. 34.
6. 31. 8, 29.
5. 30. 9. 4. 15.
10. 17. 4.

Now that Jeſus (our Lord) did in his perſon fully correſpond, and did by his practice thoroughly make good this moral high character; the ſtory of his life with admirable ſimplicity and ſincerity, without any ſemblance of diſguiſe or artifice, repreſented by perſons, who moſt intimately were acquainted and long converſed with him (or by perſons immediately informed by them) and with greateſt conſtancy atteſted to and maintained by them, doth plainly ſhew; wherein his incomparable piety toward God, his readineſs to fulfill all righteouſneſs, his entire ſubmiſſion and reſignation of himſelf, to God's will, the continual fervency (devotion of all kinds, prayer, thankſgiving, faſting, practiſed in the moſt intenſe degree, and in the moſt reverent manner) his pure and ardent zeal for God's glory, his ſtedfaſt reſolution, and indefatigable induſtry in God's ſervice (making it his meat to do the will of him that ſent him, and to perform his work.)

* Matt. 8. 20.
2 Cor. 8. 9.
Luc. 2. 40, 52.
Matt. 9. 4. 12.
10, 25. 22. 18.
16. 1. 19. 3.
22. 18, 35, 46.
Joh. 8. 6.
Matt. 21. 27.
22. 18, 34.
Joh. 6. 1. 8. 6.
10. 39.
Luc. 20. 3. 22.
4. 30. 12, 24.
Matt. 12. 14.
Matt. 19. 5.
Mark 8. 30.
Luk. 12. 14.
13. 2. 14. 7.
12. 18. 17.
19. 11.

Wherein an unſpotted innocence, not only exempted from the vices and defilements, but raiſed above the vanities and impertinences of the world; ſecured by a magnanimous contempt, or * neglect and abſtinence from all worldly grandeur and ſplendour; all ſecular wealth and profit, all bodily delight and eaſe, wherein an admirable wiſdom and prudence, expreſſed in all his demeanour, and his diſcourſe; in his diſcerning the ſecret thoughts and diſſembled intentions of men; in his declaring and defending truth, detecting and confuting errours; in baffling learned and wily oppoſers; in eluding captious queſtions, and evading treacherous deſigns; in not meddling with the ſecular affairs and intereſts of men; in not encumbring himſelf with the needleſs cares and occupations of this life, nor entangling himſelf in the ſnares of this world; in dexterouſly accommodating his behaviour and his ſpeech to the diſpoſitions, the capacities, the needs of men; to the circumſtances of things, and exigencies of occaſion, ſo as did beſt conduce to the promoting his great deſign and undertaking; ſo that the people, obſerving his proceedings, could not but be aſtoniſhed, and aſk, † Whence hath this man this wiſdom? ſo that they could not but acknowledge, He hath done all things well.

Joh. 7. 6. 16.
4, 12. 11. 54.
16. 27. 4. 10.
† Mat. 13. 54.
Mark 7. 37.
Joh. 12. 42.
7. 15. 7. 46.
Matt. 7. 28.
Luk. 2. 47.
4. 42.

Wherein particularly an excellent faculty of ſpeaking and teaching, of interpreting and applying the Holy Scriptures, of proving and perſuading God's truth, whereby he drew the people after him, converted many of them to amendment of life, convinced the moſt averſe and incredulous; ſo that all that heard him were amazed at his underſtanding, and anſwers; ſo that all bare witneſs, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth; ſo that the Officers ſent to apprehend him did confeſs, Never man ſpake like this man.

Wherein an invincible fortitude and gallantry, expreſſed in his moſt conſtant profeſſion and undaunted maintenance of truth and goodneſs; in his encountring the prejudices, detecting the frauds, reproving the vices of the Age, though upheld by the greateſt perſons and by prevalent Factions; in his plain dealing and free ſpeaking with all ſincerity and all authority, in his zealous checking and chaſtiſing profane abuſes; in his diſregarding the raſh and fond opinions of men, their ſpiteful obloquies, harſh cenſures, ſlanderous imputations, and unjuſt reproaches; in his foreſeeing the greateſt of dangers, and worſt of miſchiefs that could arrive to man, yet chearfully encountring and firmly ſuſtaining them; ſuſtaining all the violent oppoſitions and aſſaults which the moſt virulent malice and envy enflamed with ſuperſtition and blind zeal could ſet againſt him.

Joh. 8. 40, 7.
25. 26. 7.
Luk. 20. 46.
13. 52. 16. 15.
Matt. 12. 14.
15. 13. 23. 19.
15. 6, 14. 8. 24.
Luk. 19. 45.
Joh. 2. 15.
Luk. 9. 22, 51.
18. 32. 22. 15.
Matt. 16. 21.
20. 17.
Mark. 10. 33.

Wherein a moſt quiet and peaceable diſpoſition, apparent from his never attempting any reſiſtence, or any revenge upon provocation of frequent great affronts and injuries; from his never raiſing any tumults, nor fomenting any quarrels, nor meddling with any litigious matters, nor encroaching upon any man's right or office; by his ready compliance with received cuſtoms, by his paying tribute, although not due from him, to prevent offence; by his frequent inſtructions and exhortations to peace, to innocence, to patience, to due obedience, to performing due reſpect to ſuperiours, and paying cuſtoms to governours; to the yielding a docile ear, and an obſervance to thoſe who ſate in Moſes his chair.

Matt. 26. 52.
Luc. 12. 14.
Matt. 8 4.
Luc. 17. 14.
Matt. 17. 27.
Matt. 9. 23.
10. 16.
Matt. 22. 21.
Matt. 23. 2.

Wherein an exceeding meekneſs and gentleneſs, demonſtrated in all his converſation; in reſenting very moderately, or rather not reſenting at all moſt unjuſt hatreds, outragious calumnies, bitter reproaches and contumelies from his adverſaries; very perverſe neglects and ingratitudes from multitudes of people; many infirmities, ſtupidities, diſtruſts, baſeneſſes and treacheries from his own neareſt friends and followers. In his paſſing over and eaſily pardoning the greateſt offences committed againſt him, yea ſometime extenuating and excuſing them. In the mildneſs of his cenſures, expoſtulations and reproofs; in his tempering the fierce zeal, hard cenſure, and rigorous proceeding againſt perſons unhappy, or faulty; in his tender pity of all perſons in any want, diſtreſs or trouble; in his earneſt commiſeration and bewailing the vengeance he foreſaw impendent on his perſecutors, and in his praying for their pardon.

Matt. 11. 29.
Matt 9. 4. 34.
12. 25. 10, 25.
12. 24.
Joh. 15. 19.
10. 32.
Luk. 4. 24.
Matt. 26. 50.
12. 25. 14. 31.
Joh. 7. 12.
7. 20. 8. 48.
10. 20.
Matt. 17. 17.
26. 56.
Luk. 22. 46.
23. 34. 22. 51.
Luk. 9. 55.
Joh. 8. 7.
Matt. 9. 36.
14. 14. 15. 32.

Wherein a marvellous humility and lowlineſs of mind expreſſed by his not ſeeking * honour or applauſe from men, but ſhunning and rejecting it; his not aſſuming to himſelf, but aſcribing all to God, and referring all to his glory; by his making no oſtentation of his miraculous power and high endowments, but, ſo far as would comport with the proſecution of his main purpoſe (the glory and ſervice of God, the good and welfare of men) carefully ſuppreſſing and concealing them; in his without diſſatisfaction or diſcouragement bearing ſcorn, and contempt, and obloquy; in his willing condeſcenſion to the meaneſt offices and employments; in his free and familiar converſation with all ſorts of people, with the loweſt and moſt deſpicable, with the worſt and moſt odious, for their good; he not deſpiſing the pooreſt or vileſt wretch, who ſeemed capable of receiving any benefit from him; in his eaſineſs to be entreated, and readineſs to comply with the deſires of any man imploring ſuccour or relief from him; in his being ready not only to oblige, but to be obliged and receive courteſies from any man; to anſwer the

Luk. 7. 13.
Luk. 9. 41.
13. 34.
Joh. 13. 21.
Luk. 23. 34.
* Joh. 5. 41.
8. 50, 54. 6.
15. 8. 28. 11.
4. 17. 4.
Luk. 7. 16, 29.
9. 43. 8. 56.
8. 39. 17, 18.
18. 43.
Matt. 8 4. 9. 30.
12. 16. 19. 17.
Mark. 5. 43.
8. 23.
Matt. 9. 24.
Joh. 13. 4.
Matt. 9. 10.
8. 3, 19.
Luk. 5. 29.
15. 2. 19. 5.
7. 36. 11. 37.

Joh. 12. 7. invitation of a Phariſee, or of a Publican; to accept favourably the well Matt. 26. 10. intended reſpect of a poor woman; in the ſoftneſs and ſweetneſs of his Matt. 9. 2, 22. language to all men, particularly to his diſciples; (Be of good courage
Joh. 15. 14. Daughter; Son be of good cheer; I ſay unto you my friends; little chil-
13. 33. dren, I am a little while with you; ſuch was his ſtyle, and converſation toward his inferiours.)

Wherein an unparallell'd patience in contentedly and chearfully, through all the courſe of his life, undertaking and undergoing whatever Joh. 18. 11. by God's will and providence was impoſed on him, how grievous and 12. 27. diſtaſtful ſoever, to humane apprehenſion or ſenſe; the extremeſt penu-Matt. 26. 39. ry, the hardeſt toil, the vileſt diſgraces, the moſt bitter pains and an-Matt. 8. 20. guiſhes incident to body or mind, the moſt horrid and moſt ſorrowful of (2 Cor. 8. 9.) deaths, all theſe aggravated by the conſcience of his own cleareſt innocence, by the extreme ingratitude of thoſe who miſuſed him, by the ſenſe of God's diſpleaſure for the ſin of man, by all the embittering conſiderations which a moſt lively piety and tender charity ſuggeſted; in ſubmitting to all this moſt freely and moſt calmly, without any regret, any diſturbance.

Eph. 3. 19. Wherein an unexpreſſible and unconceivable charity (a charity indeed which ſurpaſſeth knowledge, as S Paul ſpeaketh) evidenced in the conſtant ſtrain and tenour of his whole life, paſſing through all his deſigns, all his words, and all his actions; for διῆλθεν εὐεργετῶν (as S. Peter Act. 10. 38. ſays in the Acts) he did nothing elſe, but go about doing good, and bene-
Matt. 4. 23. 9. 35. fitting men; curing their diſeaſes, relieving their wants, inſtructing their minds, reforming their manners, drawing them to God and goodneſs, diſpoſing them to the attainment of everlaſting bliſs and ſalvation. 'Tis love, we may obſerve, which was the ſoul that animated and actuated him in all things; which carried him with unwearied reſolution and alacrity through all the cruel hardſhips and toils, through all the diſmal croſſes and ignominies he endured: His life was in effect but one continual expreſſion of charity, (differently exerting it ſelf according to various opportunities, and circumſtances, and needs of men) the which was conſummated, and ſealed by his death; the higheſt inſtance of cha-Joh. 15. 13. rity that could be; for, Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend.

Wherein finally (in which life, I ſay, of Jeſus) all holineſs, all vertue, all goodneſs (ſutable to him, who was to be not only the teacher, and the perſuader of the beſt life, but a living ſtandard and pattern thereof; who was to merit of God in man's behalf, to conciliate God's favour towards us, and appeaſe his anger againſt us) do ſhine and ſparkle with a beauty, and a luſtre tranſcending all expreſſion. All which particulars might, were it now proper and ſeaſonable, be thoroughly declared by inſtances extant in the Evangelical hiſtory. So that the characteriſtical qualities of the Meſſias do clearly and abundantly agree to Jeſus our Lord.

His performances ſhould next be conſidered and compared; but the time doth not admit that we ſhould now proceed any farther.

Now, bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XVIII.

THAT JESUS IS THE True MESSIAS.

ACTS IX. 22.

But Saul encreaſed more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews, which dwelt at Damaſcus — Proving that this is the very Chriſt.

IN conformity to S. Paul's deſign and practice implied here, I have formerly propounded to explain, and perſwade theſe particulars. 1. What is the right notion and reaſon of this name or title Chriſt. 2. That there was deſtinated to come into the world, a Perſon, who ſignally according to that right notion, ſhould be the Chriſt. 3. That Jeſus, whom we avow, is that Perſon, the very Chriſt. 4. In what manner, and upon what accounts the New Teſtament repreſenteth Jeſus to be the Chriſt. 5. What application the Point requireth.

In proſecution of which particulars, having diſpatched the firſt and ſecond, I did enter into the third, which is of higheſt conſequence, beginning to declare that Jeſus, our Lord, is the Chriſt, from the circumſtances of his coming into the world, and from his perſonal qualifications; which having in ſome meaſure performed, I ſhall now proceed to declare the ſame from the exact correſpondency of his undertakings and performances to thoſe, which, according to ancient preſignifications, and prophecies, the Meſſias was deſigned to undertake and accompliſh; together with the conſequences of what the Meſſias was to doe, and what anſwerably Jeſus did effect.

1. One great performance of the Meſſias, was by inſpiration, and in the name of God to make a complete diſcovery of divine truth; to publiſh a Law of univerſal and perpetual obligation; to inſtitute a Religion conſummate in all reſpects, which ſhould correct the faults, and ſupply the defects of all precedent diſpenſations, which ſhould therefore be, as it were, God's laſt will and teſtament, after which no other revelation was

Deut. 18. 18, 19. was to be expected: I will (ſaid Moſes of him) put words into his mouth; and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I command him, and it ſhall come to paſs, that whoever will not hearken unto my words, which he ſhall ſpeak in Iſa. 2. 2. my name, I will require it of him: By him Eſay foretold, that God ſhall teach us of his ways, and we ſhall walk in his paths, for out of Sion ſhall go forth the law, and the word of God from Jeruſalem: By him Jeremy ſigni-Jer. 31. 34. fied, that God would put his law into the inward parts of men, and write it
Ezek. 36. 27. in their hearts; it was, as it is ſaid in Daniel, part of his work to bring Dan. 9. 24. in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and to ſeal up the viſion, and prophecy; and his days in the Prophets are commonly ſtyled the laſt days, becauſe it ſeemeth, of the perfection of his doctrine, and immutability of his law; where ſuch an entire inſtruction, and final reſolution in all points was commonly expected by the Jews, as the Samaritan woman did intimate; Joh. 4. 25. I know (ſaid ſhe, according to the current perſuaſions then) that the Meſſias cometh, and when he ſhall come, he will tell us all things.

1 Tim. 1. 1. Now accordingly Jeſus (our hope, and Author of our faith) hath taught a Doctrine, hath proclaimed a Law, hath inſtituted a Religion, which upon ſtrict and careful examination will be found moſt perfect in all reſpects; ſuch in its nature as cannot but indiſpenſibly oblige all that underſtand it, ſuch as is worthy of God, and ſutable to his deſigns of glorifying himſelf, and obliging his creature; in ſhort, he hath been Author of ſuch an Inſtitution, as may be demonſtrated the moſt excellent and complete that can be. For, (briefly to ſhew this by conſidering the main, if not all imaginable excellencies of any Religion, Law or Doctrine) it is impoſſible that any Doctrine ſhould aſſign a more true, proper, complete notion or character of God himſelf, more congruous to what reaſon dictateth, the works of nature declare, the pureſt tradition atteſteth, or common experience doth intimate concerning God; more apt to breed in our hearts the higheſt affection and reverence toward him, or to engage us in the ſtricteſt practice of duty and obedience to him; none can aſcribe unto God higher perfections of nature, can more aſſert unto him all his due rights and prerogatives, can better commend and juſtify to us all his actions and proceedings, can repreſent him more amiable in his goodneſs, more terrible in his juſtice, more glorious and venerable in all his ways of providence; can conſequently better direct or diſpoſe us to render unto him a worſhip worthy of him, and acceptable to him; can alſo therefore with more ſecurity and advantage commend unto us the imitation of him in our diſpoſition and demeanour.

Nor could any doctrine more clearly and fully inform us concerning our ſelves; concerning our nature, our original, our end, all our ſtate, paſt, preſent, final; what the dignity of our nature is, for what purpoſes we were deſigned and framed, wherein our happineſs doth conſiſt, what ſhall be our ſtate after death, how we ſhall be judged, and dealt with then; the knowledge of which particulars is of ſo immenſe conſequence for the ſatisfaction of our minds, and direction of our lives; concerning which therefore men in all times have ſo earneſtly inquired and diſputed, without any ſure reſolution but from hence.

Nor could a more accurate rule of life (more congruous to reaſon, and ſutable to our nature, or perfective thereof; more conducible to our welfare, and our content; more apt to procure each man's private good, and to promote the publick benefit of all) have been preſcribed; nothing can be more juſt, or comely, or pleaſant, or beneficial to us, than are the duties of piety (conſiſting in love, reverence, gratitude, devotion, obedience, faith and repentance toward God) which Chriſtianiſm doth require. No directions concerning our deportment toward our neighbours and brethren can be imagined comparable to thoſe (thoſe of hearty love, good-will, beneficence, compaſſion, readineſs to forgive, meekneſs, peaceableneſs, and the like) which the Chriſtian law enjoineth. No precepts or advices concerning the management of our ſelves (the ordering our ſouls and our bodies in their reſpective functions and fruitions) can be deviſed more agreeable to ſound reaſon, more productive of true welfare, and real delight unto us, than are thoſe of being humble and modeſt in our conceits, calm and compoſed in our paſſions, ſober and temperate in our enjoyments, patient and contented in our ſtate, with the like, which the Chriſtian Doctrine doth inculcate. No other method can raiſe us up ſo near to heaven and happineſs as that which we here learn, of abſtracting and elevating our minds above the fading glories, the unſtable poſſeſſions, the vaniſhing delights of this world; the fixing our thoughts, affections and hopes upon the concernments of a better future ſtate.

No Religion alſo can be purer from ſuperſtitious alloys, or freer from uſeleſs encumbrances (or from, as Tertullian calleth them, buſie ſcrupuloſities) than is this, (ſuch as it is in its native ſimplicity, and as it came from its Authour, before the pragmatical curioſity, or domineering humour, or covetous deſignings of men had tampered with it) it onely requiring a rational and ſpiritual ſervice, conſiſting in performance of ſubſtantial duties plainly neceſſary or profitable; the ritual obſervances it enjoineth, being as very few in number, in nature ſimple and eaſie to obſerve, ſo evidently reaſonable, very decent and very uſefull, able to inſtruct us in, apt to excite us to the practice of moſt wholeſome duties.

Negotioſæ ſcrupuloſitates Tert. in Marc. lib. 2.

No Religion alſo can have the like advantage of ſetting before us a living copy, and viſible ſtandard of good practice, affording ſo compendious an inſtruction, and ſo efficacious an incitement to all piety and vertue: ſo abſolutely perfect, ſo purpoſely deſigned, ſo fitly accommodated for our imitation, and withall ſo ſtrongly engaging us thereto, as the example of Jeſus, our Lord, ſuch as it is in the Goſpels repreſented to us.

Neither can any Religion build our duty upon more ſolid grounds, or draw it from better principles, or drive it to better ends, or preſs it with more valid inducements than ours; which builds it upon conformity to the perfect nature of God, and to the dictates of his infallible wiſdom, upon the holy will, and moſt juſt authority of our natural Lord, and Maker; which draweth it from love, reverence and gratitude to God, from a hearty good-will to men, and from a ſober regard to our own true welfare; which propoundeth God's honour, our neighbour's edification, and our own ſalvation as the principal ends of action; which ſtirreth up good practice by minding us, that we ſhall thereby reſemble God, expreſs our thankfulneſs, and diſcharge our duty to him, obtain his mercy and favour, acquire preſent comfort of mind, and future bliſs, avoid regrets of conſcience here, and endleſs torments hereafter.

Neither can any Doctrine afford more encouragements to the endeavours of practiſing it than doth this, which tendereth ſufficient help and ability toward the performance of whatever it enjoineth; offering (upon our ſeeking them, or asking for them) God's infallible wiſdom to direct us in our darkneſſes and doubts, God's almighty ſtrength to aſſiſt us in our temptations and combats, God's loving Spirit to comfort us in our afflictions and diſtreſſes.

Nor can any Doctrine in a more ſure, or kindly manner appeaſe and ſatisfy a man's conſcience, ſo as to produce therein a well-grounded hope, and ſolid comfort; to heal the wounds of bitter remorſe and anxious fear, which the ſenſe of guilt doth inflict, than doth this, which aſſureth us, that God Almighty, notwithſtanding all our offences committed againſt him, is not only reconcileable to us, but deſirous to become our friend; that he doth upon our repentance, and compliance with his gentle terms, receive us unto perfect grace and favour, diſcharging all our guilts and debts however contracted; that our endeavours to ſerve and pleaſe God, although imperfect and defective, if ſerious and ſincere ſhall be accepted and rewarded by him.

Such is the Doctrine, Law and Religion of Jeſus; expreſſed in a moſt uneffected and perſpicuous way, with all the gravity and ſimplicity of ſpeech, with all the majeſty and authority of propoſal becoming divine truth; ſo excellent, and ſo complete in all reſpects, that it is beyond the imagination of man to conceive any thing better, yea, I dare ſay, repugnant to the nature of things that there ſhould be any other way of Religion (different ſubſtantially from it) ſo very good. God himſelf, we may preſume to ſay, cannot infuſe truer notions concerning himſelf, or concerning us, cannot reveal more noble, or more uſefull truths; cannot preſcribe better laws or rules, cannot afford more proper means and aids, cannot propound more equal and reaſonable terms, cannot offer higher encouragements and rewards, cannot diſcover his mind in a more excellent way than he hath done by Jeſus, for his own glory and ſervice, for our benefit and happineſs: So that hence we may reaſonably infer, that the Doctrine taught, the Law promulgated, the Religion inſtituted by Jeſus in God's name, are the very ſame which the predictions concerning the Meſſias do refer unto, as the laſt, which ſhould ever come from God, moſt full and perfect, univerſally and perpetually obliging.

2. Thus in general the Prophets ſpake concerning the Meſſias his doctrine, and ſo that of Jeſus correſpondeth thereto: but of that Doctrine particularly it was ſignified, that it ſhould be very comfortable, joyfull and acceptable to mankind; as containing a declaration (peculiar thereto) of God's kind and gracious intentions toward us, overtures of eſpecial mercy and love, diſpenſations of all ſorts of ſpiritual bleſſings; the pardon and abolition of ſins committed, peace and ſatisfaction of conſci-
Zech. 9. 9. ence, deliverance from ſpiritual ſlaveries and captivities: Rejoyce greatly, O daughter of Sion, ſhout O daughter of Jeruſalem; behold thy King cometh unto thee; So Zachary ſpeaketh of his coming, and implieth the joyfull purport of his meſſage: and, How beautiful (ſaith Eſay) upon
Iſa. 52. 7. the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publiſheth ſalvation,
Iſa. 61. 1. 42. 1, 3. that ſayeth unto Sion, thy God reigneth? and, The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me; becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek; he hath ſent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance (or of recompence, as the LXX render it) of our God; to comfort all that mourn, ἀνταποδόσεως. to give unto them that mourn in Sion beauty for aſhes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praiſe for the ſpirit of heavineſs. It is a part of what God in Jeremy promiſed to diſpenſe by him: I will forgive their
Jer. 31. 34. iniquity, and I will remember their ſin no more. It is one of the Meſſias
Dan. 9. 24. his performances —— to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſins, and to

to make reconciliation for iniquity; to ſprinkle clean water on God's people, and to ſave them from their uncleanneſſes. In fine, the Prophet Zechary ſaith of his time, that In that day there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem for ſin, and for uncleanneſs.

Ezek. 36. 25. 29. Iſa. 44. 3. 43. 25. Zech. 13. 1.

Now to all this the preaching of Jeſus did exactly correſpond; it being indeed, as it was named, a Goſpel, or Meſſage of good and joy; declaring the ſpecial good-will of God, and his mercifull willingneſs to be reconciled to mankind; offering peace and pardon to all that are ſenſible of their guilt, and penitent for their ſin; imparting reſt, comfort and liberty to all that are weary and afflicted with ſpiritual burthens, grievances and ſlaveries; taking off all grievous yokes of ſuperſtition, ſervility and ſin; and in their ſtead impoſing a no leſs ſweet and pleaſant, than juſt and reaſonable obedience; miniſtring all ſorts of bleſſings needfull for our ſuccour, relief, eaſe, content and welfare; wholly breathing ſweeteſt love (all kinds of love; love between God and man, between man and man, between man and his own conſcience) filling the hearts of thoſe who ſinccrely embrace and comply with it, with preſent joy, and raiſing in them gladſome hopes of future bliſs. It was indeed the moſt joyous ſound that ever entred into man's ears, the moſt welcome news that ever was reported upon earth; news of a certain and perfect ſalvation from all the enemies of our welfare, from all the cauſes of miſchief and miſery to us; well therefore deſerving that auſpicious gratulation from the Angel: Behold I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.

Act. 15. 32. Rom. 5. 13. Rom. 14. 17. Gal. 5. 22. Luc. 2. 10.

3. Collateral unto, or coincident with thoſe performances (the teaching ſuch a doctrine, publiſhing ſuch a law, diſpenſing ſuch bleſſings) was the formal inſtitution, and eſtabliſhment of a new everlaſting covenant (different from all precedent covenants, and ſwallowing them up in its perfection) a covenant between God and man, wherein God, entring into a moſt ſtrict alliance and relation with us, ſhould be pleaſed to diſpenſe the bleſſings of ſpiritual illumination and aſſiſtance, of mercy and favour, of ſalvation and felicity; wherein we in way of condition, according to obligations of juſtice and gratitude, ſhould engage to return unto God by hearty repentance, and to peſiſt in faithfull obedience to him: Of ſuch a Covenant the Meſſias was to be the Meſſenger and Mediatour, or the Angel thereof (as the Prophet Malachy, ſpeaketh alluding it ſeems to that Angel of God's preſence, who ordained the Jewiſh Law, and conducted the Iſraelites toward the promiſed land) of which Covenant and its Mediatour God in Eſay thus ſpake: I the Lord have called thee in righteouſneſs, and I will hold thine hand; and I will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the priſoners from the priſon, and them that ſit in darkneſs out of the priſon-houſe — and of the ſame he again: Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear and your ſoul ſhall live, and I will make an everlaſting covenant with you, even the ſure mercies of David — Behold I have given him a witneſs to the people, a leader and commander to the people: So in general he ſpeaketh thereof, and inviteth thereto; then a ſpecial part thereof he expreſſeth thus: Let the wicked man forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, and he will abundantly pardon. Of the ſame Covenant God in Ezekiel ſpeaketh thus: I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them — and I will make with them a covenant of peace, and it ſhall be an everlaſting covenant with them — and I will Ἄγγελος τῆς διαθήκης. Mal. 3 1. Exod. 23. 10. Iſa. 63. 9. Act. 7. 35, 38, 53. Gal. 3. 19. Iſa. 42. 6. 49. 8. 55. 3. Iſa. 55. 3, 4, 7. Ezek. 34. 23. 25. 37. 26. 36. 26, &c.

I will ſet my ſanctuary in the midſt of them for evermore —— they ſhall alſo walk in my judgments, and obſerve my ſtatutes, and doe them. Of the ſame God thus declareth in Jeremy, moſt fully and plainly reckoning Jer. 31. 31, &c. the particular bleſſings tendered therein: Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and the houſe of Judah; not according to the covenant, that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; but this ſhall be the covenant, that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael; After thoſe days, ſaith the Lord, I will put my Law into their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people: And they ſhall teach no more every man his brother, ſaying, know the Lord; for they ſhall all know me from the leaſt of them unto the greateſt, ſaith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their ſin no more; which words ſignify the tenour of that Covenant on God's part to import, that God would impart a full and clear diſcovery of his will unto them, whom it ſhould concern; that he would afford to them all requiſite means and helps qualifying them for the performance of their duty; that he would beſtow on them (complying with the terms of this Covenant, and performing their duty) an entire remiſſion of all their ſins, with an aſſurance of his conſtant and perpetual favour.

Now that Jeſus did inſtitute ſuch a Covenant, wherein all the benefits promiſed on God's part, and all the duties required on our parts, do punctually correſpond to the terms of that predeſigned by the Prophets, is apparent by the whole tenour of the Chriſtian Goſpel; wherein a full declaration of God's will is held forth, ſo that no man (except Luc. 24. 47. out of wilfulneſs or negligence) can be ignorant thereof; wherein, up- Act. 5. 31. 2. 38. on condition of faith and repentance, God's mercy and pardon are exhibited and offered to all; Heb. 10. 29. wherein the communication of God's holy Spirit of grace (for directing and aſſiſting the embracers of this Covenant in the practice of their duty) is promiſed and diſpenſed; wherein on our part faith in God (or heartily returning to him) and faithfull obſervance of God's laws are required; wherein God declareth a moſt favourable regard and love (together with very near and endearing relations) to thoſe who undertake and conform to his terms; of which new Heb. 9. 15. Covenant Jeſus is repreſented the Angel, the Mediatour, the Sponſor; 12. 24. 7. 22. having by his preaching declared it, 8. 6. by his merits and interceſſions purchaſed and procured it, 1 Tim. 2. 5. by his blood ratified, and aſſured it to us.

4. In coincidence alſo with thoſe performances, it is declared that the Meſſias ſhould erect a Kingdom ſpiritual in nature, univerſal in extent, and perpetual in duration; by the power and virtue whereof the enemies of God's people ſhould be curb'd and quell'd; the ſubjects of which ſhould live together in amity and peace, in ſafety and proſperity; wherein truth and righteouſneſs ſhould glorioully flouriſh. The chief teſtimonies of ancient Scripture predicting this Kingdom I had occaſion before to mention, and ſhall not repeat them now; only concerning the nature and extent thereof I ſhall add ſomewhat, ſerving for illuſtration and proof of our main purpoſe.

That it was to be a ſpiritual Kingdom (not a viſible dominion over the bodies and eſtates of men, managed by external force and co-action, but a government of mens hearts and conſciences by ſecret inſpirations, and moral inſtructions or perſuaſions) may be ſeveral ways collected, and argued; it appeareth from the temper and diſpoſition of its Founder, der, who was to be a Prince of Peace; of a peaceable, meek, patient Iſa. 9. 6. and humble diſpoſition; it may be inferred from his condition, which was not to be a ſtate of external grandeur and magnificence, but of poverty and affliction; for he was to be as he is deſcribed, mean and deſpicable in appearance; having no form or comelineſs, no beauty, that when Iſa. 53. 2, 3, 4, 7. 49. 7. 50. 6. we ſhould ſee him, we ſhould deſire him; being a man of ſorrow and acquainted with grief; it alſo followeth from the events happening to him, which were not to conquer and triumph openly in view of carnal eyes; but to be deſpiſed and rejected, to be afflicted, oppreſſed and ſlaughtered by men; the ſame we may learn from the manner of its eſtabliſhment and propagation; which was not to be effected by force and violence, but by virtue of a quiet and gentle inſtruction; by reaſonable words, not by hard blows: So doth the Prophet ſignifie, when he ſaith of the Meſſias, that, With righteouſneſs ſhall he judge the poor, and reprove with Iſa. 11. 4. equity for the meek of the earth; and he ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he ſhall ſlay the wicked: not by force of hands, or terrour of arms, not in furious and bloody combats, but by the ſpiritual rod of his mouth; with the ſoft breath of his lips he was to ſlay the wicked, converting them unto righteouſneſs: So doth Daniel alſo imply when he ſaith, that a ſtone cut out of the moun- Dan. 2. 44, 45. tains without hands, ſhould break in pieces, and conſume all other Kingdoms. Yea the nature thereof it ſelf doth argue the ſame; for the laws injoined, and duties required, the bleſſings miniſtred, and rewards propounded therein are purely ſpiritual, not relating to a temporal ſtate, yea hardly conſiſting with ſecular domination; as may appear by attending to its fundamental conſtitution, or to the covenant ſettled between the Prince and ſubjects thereof; wherein the divine ſpirit and grace, light and knowledge, mercy and pardon for ſins, comfort of mind, and peace of conſcience, God's eſpecial love and favour, things merely ſpiritual, are expreſly promiſed; but worldly power, wealth and proſperity are pretermitted; and thence may juſtly be preſumed no ingredients, or appurtenances thereof. Indeed the conſtitution of a temporal, or worldly Kingdom, with viſible pomp and luſtre, ſuch as the Jews (a groſly conceited, and ſenſually affected people) did, miſtaking the Prophets, deſire and expect, had been a thing, as very agreeable to the carnal or childiſh opinions of men, ſo in reaſonable eſteem of no conſiderable value, benefit or uſe to mankind: ſuch a domination could only have concerned the mortal part, and temporal ſtate of man; it could only have procured ſome trivial conveniences for our bodies, or gratifications to our ſenſe: the ſettlement alſo, and preſervation of ſuch a Kingdom (according to that vaſt extent, and long duration which the Prophets imply) ſeemeth, without quite altering the whole frame of humane nature, ſcarce poſſible; and reaſons there are obvious enough, why it would not be expedient, or beneficial for men: But the founding and upholding a ſpiritual Kingdom (ſuch as we deſcribed) is evidently of ineſtimable benefit to the nobler and more divine part of men, may ſerve to promote the eternal welfare of our ſouls; may eaſily without changing the natural appetites of men, or diſturbing the world, be carried on any where, and ſubſiſt for ever by the occult influences of divine grace; it conſequently is moſt worthy of God to deſign and accompliſh. Such a Kingdom therefore was meant by the Prophets, being indeed no other than a Church, or ſociety of perſons, with unanimous conſent, heartily acknowledging the One true God of Iſrael, Maker of heaven and earth, for their Sovereign Prince and Law-giver; ſubmitting themſelves in all their actions to his laws and commands, expecting protection and recompence of their obedience from him.

As for the general extent of this Kingdom, and the Meſſias his proceedings in ſettling and propagating it, that is alſo very perſpicuouſly and copiouſly repreſented in the ancient Prophets, who declare that by him mankind (then immerſed in deep ignorance and errour, in wretched impiety and wickedneſs, in utter eſtrangement and averſation from God and goodneſs) ſhould be reduced to the knowledge, worſhip and obedience of God; that they ſhould be received into God's protection, and ſhould partake of his ſpecial favour; that all nations of men ſhould by the Meſſias be enlightned with ſaving knowledge, and converted to the practice of true righteouſneſs; that all men every where (all that would regard and obſerve his word, all in God's deſign and deſire, in effect a numerous company of men) ſhould by his means be aggregated to God's Church, and rendred God's people; enjoying the benefits and privileges ſutable to that ſtate or relation: In expreſſing theſe things the ancient Scriptures are very pregnant and copious: Moſes, in that moſt divine Song (endited by God himſelf, and uttered in his name) which ſeemeth to contain the hiſtory, and the continual fate of the Jewiſh people doth foretell this, and concludeth his Song therewith; as with the laſt matter, which ſhould happen during God's ſpecial relation to that people, importing the period of Judaiſm, or of the Iſraelitiſh Theocracy. Deut. 32. 43. Rom. 15. 10. Rejoyce (ſaith he) O ye nations with his people. Pſal. 2. 8. God in the ſecond Pſalm thus ſpeaketh to the Meſſias: Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion: Pſal. 72. 17. 8. 1. and in the 72. Pſalm; His name ('tis ſaid) ſhall endure for ever; his name ſhall be continued as long as the ſun, and men ſhall be bleſſed in him; all nations ſhall call him bleſſed; he ſhall have dominion alſo from ſea, to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth: and otherwhere; Pſal. 22. 27. 86. 9. All the ends of the earth ſhall remember, and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations ſhall worſhip before thee: and, Iſa. 46. 9. Act. 13. 47. I will (ſaith God in Eſay concerning him) give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayſt be my ſalvation to the ends of the earth: and, Iſa. 40. 5. 52. 10. Luc. 3. 6. The glory of the Lord ſhall be revealed, and all fleſh ſhall ſee it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it; The Lord hath made bare his holy arm, in the eyes of all nations; and all the ends of the earth ſhall ſee the ſalvation of our God: and, Iſa. 42. 4. Rom. 15. 2. He ſhall not fail, nor be diſcouraged, till he have ſet judgment in the earth, and the Iſles (that is the European Nations) ſhall wait for his law: and, Iſa. 25. 6, 7. In this mountain ſhall the Lord of hoſts make unto all people a feaſt of fat things, a feaſt of wine on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wine on the lees well refined; and he will deſtroy in this mountain the face of the covering caſt over all people, and the veil that is ſpread over all nations: and, Iſa. 11. 10. In that day there ſhall be a root of Jeſſe, which ſhall ſtand for an enſign of the people, to it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, and its reſt ſhall be glorious: and, Iſa. 65. 1. Rom. 9. 24. I am ſought of them that asked not for me, I am found of them that ſought me not; I ſaid, behold me, behold me unto a nation, that was not called by my name: and, Iſa. 2. 2. Mic. 4. 1. It ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days (ſaith both Eſay and Micah in the ſame words) that the mountain of the Lord's houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the top of the mountains, and ſhall be exalted above the hills, and all nations ſhall flow unto it: Mal. 1. 11. From the riſing of the Sun (ſaith God in Malachy) even unto the going down of the ſame my name ſhall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: and, Hoſ. 1. 10. 2. 23. I (ſaith God in Hoſea) will have mercy upon her that had not obtained tained mercy; and I will ſay unto them, which were not my people, Thou Ro. 9. 25, 26.

art my people; and they ſhall ſay, Thou art my God: In the place where it was ſaid unto them, ye are not my people, it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God: and, The abundance of the ſea ſhall be Iſa. 60. 5. converted unto thee (ſaith God to his Church) the forces of the Gentiles ſhall come unto thee: Fear not, for I am with thee, I will bring thy ſeed Iſa. 43. 5.
from the Eaſt, and gather thee from the Weſt; I will ſay to the North give up, and to the South keep not back; bring my ſons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth: and, Sing, O barren, that thou didſt Iſa. 54. 1.
not bear ('tis ſaid to the Gentile Church) break forth into ſinging, and Gal. 4. 26.
cry aloud thou that didſt not travail with child; for more are the children of the deſolate than the children of the married wife, ſaith the Lord; Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them ſtretch forth the curtains of Vid. Amos 9.
thine habitations —— for thou ſhalt break forth on the right hand, and on 11, 12, the left, and thy ſeed ſhall inherit the Gentiles —— For thy Maker is thine Act. 15. 15, husband (the Lord of hoſts is his name) and thy Redeemer, the Holy one &c.
of Iſrael; The Lord of the whole earth ſhall he be called — The wilderneſs, Iſa. 35. 1.
and the ſolitary place ſhall be glad for them; the deſart ſhall rejoyce and bloſſome as the roſe, &c.

Such is the nature, and ſuch the extent of the Meſſias his Kingdom; now that Jeſus hath erected and ſettled a Kingdom of a ſpiritual and heavenly nature (the which is therefore in his Goſpel ſtyled the Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of Chriſt, the Kingdom that was to come) whereof God is the abſolute Sovereign; the throne whereof is in heaven above, which beareth ſway in the ſouls of men; wherein God governeth in effectual manner (moſt righteouſly and ſweetly, with admirable wiſdom, juſtice and clemency; with mighty power alſo, and awfull authority) according to moſt excellent laws, by his holy word, and powerfull ſpirit; propoſing moſt precious rewards to the obedient ſubjects thereof, and threatning dreadfull puniſhments to the rebellious; protecting and ſaving the faithfull people from all their enemies (from the powers of darkneſs, from the temptations, allurements, menaces of the fleſh and the world here, from death and hell hereafter) that alſo Jeſus (who as Mediatour between God and man, doth according to the Goſpel, by authority derived from God, and in God's name, adminiſter the government hereof) hath in effect been avowed as Lord and King; that his authority hath had great efficacy upon the minds and conſciences of men; what noble trophies over ſin and wickedneſs his word hath raiſed; in what glory and majeſty through many ages he hath reigned; is evident from obvious records of hiſtory, and from plain experience.

The extent of this ſpiritual Empire raiſed by our Lord (of that doctrine which he taught, of that reformation which he introduced, of that Church, or ſpiritual ſociety, knit together in faith and charity, which he founded of that whole diſpenſation, which he managed) is alſo thoroughly commenſurate to the extent of whatever in theſe kinds the Meſſias was to atchieve: The Empire of Jeſus in its nature and deſign, according to right and obligation, is declared univerſal and boundleſs, co-extended, with the world it ſelf, and comprehending all generations of men; all nations being ſummoned to come under the wings of its juriſdiction; all perſons being invited to partake the benefits, and enjoy the privileges thereof: The Lord, and Judge of all men; the Saviour, Act. 10. 36.
and Redeemer of the world; the common light of men, and Captain of humane life; are titles, which Jeſus aſſumed to himſelf: All things

Matt. 11. 27. things are delivered to me of my Father; Thou haſt given him power over
Joh. 17. 2. 5. all fleſh; All judgment is committed to the Son; yea, All power is given 22. 3. 35.
Matt. 28. 18. unto me in heaven and earth, ſuch is the authority he claimeth, and aſſerteth to himſelf: Going into the World preach the Goſpel to every
Mark 16. 15.
Matt. 28. 19. creature: Go, and diſcipline all nations, baptiſing them ——— ſuch
Luc. 24. 46. was the commiſſion and charge delivered by Jeſus to his Officers, and Miniſters: The grace of God which bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared
Tit. 2. 11.
Act. 17. 3. to all men; The times of ignorance God having winked at, doth now invite 2 Cor. 5. 19. all men every where to repent; God was in Chriſt reconciling the World
1 Tim. 2 4. unto himſelf, not imputing their ſins; God our Saviour will have all men
Coloſ. 1. 23. to be ſaved, and to come to the acknowledgment of the truth —— The Goſpel hath been preached to every creature under heaven; ſo do the Apoſtles declare the latitude of the Evangelical diſpenſation according to its nature and deſign: So that well may we cry out with Clem. Alex. Hearken ye that are far off, hearken ye that are near; the word is not hid from any, 'tis a common light, it ſhineth to all men; there is no Cimmerian in reſpect to the Goſpel. So in deſign, and of right is Jeſus his doctrine and diſpenſation common to all Nations, and to all perſons; all in duty are obliged to entertain it; all may have the benefit thereof, who are fit, and willing to embrace it; it doth not indeed obtrude its benefits upon unwilling, and thence unworthy perſons; it uſeth no unkindly violence, or rude compulſion; but it alloweth, it inviteth, it entreateth, it engageth all men to come, excluding only thoſe from a participation therein, who will not hear its call; who do not like, or love it.

Ἀκούσατε οὖν οἱ μακρὰν, ἀκούσατε οἱ ἐγγύς· οὐκ ἀπεκρύβη τινὰς ὁ λόγος· φῶς ἐστι κοινὸν, ἐπιλάμπει πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις· οὐδεὶς Κιμμέριος ἐν λόγῳ. Cl. Al. Protrept.

In effect alſo this Kingdom hath been very large and vaſt, a conſiderable part of the world having very ſoon been ſubjugated by its vir-
Matt. 24. 27. tue, and having ſubmitted thereto. As the lightning cometh out of the Eaſt, and ſhineth even unto the Weſt, ſo ſhall the coming (or preſence) of the Son of man be; ſaid He concerning the ſudden, and effectual ſpreading of his doctrine; and the event anſwered his prediction: for the Evangelical light did in an inſtant dart it ſelf all about, ſo as in many places to diſpell the night of ignorance, and to diſſipate the fogs of wickedneſs: ſo that the utmoſt ends of the earth (of which according to the moſt literal ſenſe we our ſelves are a moſt proper inſtance) are come under the poſſeſſion and government of Jeſus; are reduced to the acknowledgment and veneration of the only true God; do partake of God's favour, and hope in his mercy; do with good conſcience (in that meaſure, which is expectable from the natural infirmity and pravity of man, in various degrees, ſome more, ſome leſs ſtrictly) ſerve
Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61. pag. 634. God, and obey his laws: A Church, and ſpiritual Sion (ſpread over divers regions and countries, conſiſting of ſeveral nations and languages) compacted in good order, and ſweet communion, hath through a long courſe of times viſibly flouriſhed in competent degrees of peace, proſperity and glory; commending and cheriſhing true religion, charity and ſobriety; offering continual ſacrifices of holy devotion unto God, celebrating the divine name and praiſes; producing many noble examples of all piety and vertue; a Church in all regards adequate to the prophetical expreſſions concerning that which was out of the whole world to be collected, and conſtituted by the Meſſias.

5. If we do ſingly compare the particular conſequences and ſucceſſes of the Meſſias his performances, expreſſed by the Prophets; we ſhall find an exact correſpondence to what hath followed the undertakings and performances of our Lord.

They tell us, that great oppoſition ſhould be made againſt it by the Jews, and by the * Gentiles.

* Pſal. 2. 1. vid. Chryſ. Tom. 7. Orat. 61. p. 637.

They tell us, that the Meſſias his perſon ſhould be acknowledged, worſhipped, and bleſſed all over the world: —— All nations (ſay they) ſhall ſerve him, —— all nations ſhall call him bleſſed: This we ſee for almoſt 1700 years abundantly perfomed in reſpect to Jeſus, by the daily ſervices of praiſe and thankſgiving yielded to him in the Univerſal Church.

Pſ. 72. 11, 17

They ſay, that the knowledge of God ſhall be far extended, and diffuſed over the world; The earth, ſay they, ſhall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the ſea; this we ſee fulfilled by the large propagation of Chriſtian doctrine.

Iſa. 11. 9.

They affirm, that righteouſneſs in the times of the Meſſias ſhould commonly proſper, and be in high requeſt, according to that: In his days ſhall the righteous flouriſh: ſo we ſee, that vertue and piety have ever ſince Jeſus commended them to the world, enjoyed much repute having been practiſed among the profeſſours of his Religion in ſuch degrees, and according to ſuch manner as the condition of this world, the humours of men, and the nature of humane affairs do admit; nor reaſonably can any prophecies be underſtood to mean farther.

Pſal. 72. 7. 85. 11.

They farther intimate, that upon the entertainment of the Meſſias his doctrine and law, abundance of peace and concord, of love and charity, of innocence and juſtice ſhould enſue; ſo that the fellow-ſubjects of this Kingdom, although of different ſtates and complexions (the wolf and the lamb, the leopard and the kid, the lion and the oxe, the aſp and the young child; that is the rich and the poor, the mighty and the weak, the fierce and the gentle, the crafty and the ſimple ſorts of men) ſhould live and converſe together amicably, ſafely and pleaſantly, without moleſting, wronging, oppreſſing and devouring; but rather helping, and benefiting each other: They ſhall not (ſaith the prophet) hurt or deſtroy in all my holy mountain: To the making good of which particular, the doctrine of Jeſus doth temper and compoſe the minds of thoſe who do truly underſtand and embrace it: Such as are Chiſtians indeed (careful followers of Jeſus his rules and example) are thereby diſpoſed to maintain peace and amity between themſelves, yea to perform all offices of charity and kindneſs to one another, although their conditions in the world, their complexions, their endowments and abilities be however different; for the Chriſtian doctrine repreſenteth all that embrace it as fellow-ſervants of the ſame Lord, as brethren and children of the ſame Father, as members of the ſame body, as objects of the ſame divine regard and love, as partakers of the ſame privileges, profeſſours of the ſame truth, conſorts of the ſame hope, co-heirs of the ſame glory and happineſs, as thence united and allied to one another by the ſtricteſt bands, and moſt endearing relations; hence it ſuppleth the ſtouteſt heart, and ſweeteneth the fierceſt tempers; it inclineth perſons of higheſt ſtate, power, wealth, knowledge to condeſcenſive humility, and meekneſs toward the meaneſt; this reaſon preſently occurring to every Chriſtian mind, that no Chriſtian brother is indeed contemptible, can without folly, may without ſin be contemned: whence although Jeſus his doctrine hath not quite removed wars and contentions out of the world, yea not out of that part thereof, which doth acknowledge him) for that were a thing impoſſible, without a total alteration of humane nature, or rooting out of it thoſe appetites of pride, voluptuouſneſs, ſelf-love, and covetouſneſs, which are the ſeeds of ſtrife; the effecting which it cannot not be ſuppoſed that the Prophets did intend) yet hath it done conſiderably toward it; it hath diſpoſed many perſons (many great and conſiderable in the world) to a very juſt, innocent and peaceable converſation; it hath kindled ardent love and compaſſion toward all mankind in many hearts, it hath produced great fruits of charity and bounty in perſons of all ſorts, it hath had no ſmall influence upon the common ſtate of things, cauſing humane affairs to be managed with much equity and gentleneſs, reſtraining outragious iniquity and oppreſſion.

Pſal. 72. 7. 85. 10. Iſ. 11. 6. 65. 25. 2. 4. 65. 12.

Iſa. 5. 65. 25.

It was alſo farther particularly foretold, that great Princes and Potentates ſhould ſubmit to the Meſſias, ſeriouſly avowing his authority over them, yielding veneration to his name, and obedience to his laws; with their power and wealth promoting and encouraging the Religion inſtituted by him, defending and cheriſhing his faithful people: All Kings (ſaid the Pſalmiſt of him) ſhall fall before him; all nations ſhall doe him ſervice: To a ſervant of rulers (ſaid Eſaias alſo of him) Kings ſhall ſee and ariſe, Princes alſo ſhall doe worſhip: And the ſame Prophet concerning his Church; Kings (ſaith he) ſhall be thy nurſing fathers, and Queens thy nurſing mothers; they ſhall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the duſt of thy feet; — The Gentiles ſhall come to thy light, and Kings to the brightneſs of thy riſing; —— The ſons of ſtrangers ſhall build up thy walls, and their Kings ſhall miniſter unto thee; —— Thou ſhalt ſuck the milk of the Gentiles, and ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of Kings; —— The Gentiles ſhall ſee thy righteouſneſs, and all Kings thy glory. All this we ſee plainly to have been accompliſhed, for that ſoon the higheſt of earthly powers did ſubmit and ſtoop thereto; that many great Princes (great and glorious as even the world hath known any; ſuch as Conſtantine, Theodoſius, Charlemagne, and others of like illuſtrious renown) have willingly entertained Jeſus his doctrine and gladly undergone his yoke; that long ſucceſſions of Emperours and Kings through the beſt frequented, and moſt civilized part of the world have ſeriouſly profeſſed themſelves the ſubjects and ſervants of Jeſus; expreſſing humble adoration of his perſon, and yielding obſervance to his laws; maintaining the profeſſion of his Religion by their power, ſupporting the Miniſters of it by their bounty, cheriſhing the practice thereof by manifold helps and encouragements; they have ſeemed ambitious of titles drawn from performances of this nature, affecting and glorying to be ſtyled moſt Christian Kings, Catholick Kings, Defenders of the Faith, and Sons of the Church.

Pſal. 72. 11.
Iſa. 49. 7, 23. 52. 15.
Iſa. 60. 3. 11, 16. 62. 2.

Οὐ γὰρ ἀρνησαίμην ἄν, ἐφ' ᾧ μάλιστα χαίρω συνθεράπων ὑμέτερος πεφυκέναι. Conſt. apud Euſ. de Vit. Conſt. 3.

Ἐγὼ ὁ συνθεράπων ὑμέτερος καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰμὶ χαίρων. Conſtant. apud Socr. 1. 9. in Epiſt. ad Eccl. Alexandr.

It was alſo to be a particular conſequence of what the Meſſias ſhould doe, that by virtue of his performances Idolatry (that is the worſhip of wicked Spirits, or of fictitious Deities) ſhould in a conſpicuous manner be vanquiſhed, driven away, and deſtroyed; the worſhip of the only true God being ſubſtituted in its room: The Lord alone (ſaith Eſay concerning his time) ſhall be exalted in that day, and the Idols he ſhall utterly aboliſh: and, It ſhall come to paſs (ſaith Zachary) in that day, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I will cut off the name of the Idols out of the land, and they ſhall be no more remembred; and alſo I will call the Prophets, and the unclean ſpirits to paſs out of the land. Now this we know was ſoon effected by the doctrine of our Lord, in a moſt remarkable manner: Idolatry in all places where it came, did flee and vaniſh before it; the Devil's frauds (whereby he ſo long had abuſed and befooled mankind) being detected,

Iſa. 2. 17, 18.
Ezek. 36. 25.
Zech. 13. 2.

tected, and that authority, which he had uſurped over the world, being utterly diſavowed; all the pack of infernal Apoſtate Spirits being not onely rejected and diſclaimed, but ſcorned and deteſted. Jeſus (as the Goſpel telleth us, and as experience confirmeth) did combat the ſtrong one, did baffle and bind him, he diſarmed and rifled him, he triumphed over him, and expoſed him to ſhame; he caſt him out, and diſſolved all his works. At the appearance of Jeſus his doctrine, and the ſound of his name his altars were deſerted, his temples fell down, his oracles were ſtruck dumb, his arts were ſupplanted, all his worſhip and kingdom were quite ſubverted. The ſottiſh adoration of creatures (by the ſuggeſtion alſo of Satan, and by man's vain fancy advanced to a participation of divine honour) was alſo preſently baniſhed, and thrown away; the onely true God (the Maker and Lord of all things) being thenceforth acknowledged and adored as the onely fountain of good, and the ſole object of worſhip.

Joh. 12. 31.
16. 11.
Eph. 2. 2.
2 Cor. 4. 8.
Col. 1. 13.
Act. 26. 18.
Matt. 12. 29.
Luc. 11. 21.
Col. 2. 15.
Joh. 12. 31.
16. 11.
1 Joh. 3. 8.

Again whereas in regard to all theſe performances, the ſtate of things conſtituted by the Meſſias is deſcribed ſo different from the former ſtate of mankind, that it is called the creation of a new world: For behold (ſaith God in Eſay concerning the Meſſias his times) I create new heavens, and a new earth, and the former ſhall not be remembred, nor come into mind (whence the Jews commonly before our Lord's time were uſed to call the Meſſias his time the world to come, the future age; It is plain that Jeſus may well be eſteemed to have accompliſhed the intent of thoſe expreſſions; he (as the ἐπανορθωτὴς τȣ͂ κόσμȣ, the rectifier and rearer of the world, as Origen calleth him) having wrought ſo huge alterations in the minds, and hearts, and lives of men, in their principles and opinions, in their diſpoſitions, and in their practices; having ſo changed the face of affairs, and reformed the courſe of things in the world; bringing men out of lamentable darkneſs and errour into clear light and knowledge, reſcuing them from ſuperſtition, impiety and wickedneſs, and engaging them into ways of true religion, holineſs and righteouſneſs; ſo many perſons being apparently renewed in the ſpirit of their minds; being made new creatures, created according to God in righteouſneſs, and true holineſs; ſo that (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) old things are paſſed away, behold all things are become new; ſo that what the contumacious Jews, in anger and ill-will did call Jeſus his inſtruments, had a true ſenſe; they were οἱ τὴν οἰκȣμένην ἀναστατώσαντες, they who had turned the world upſide down; they did ſo indeed, but ſo as to ſettle it in a better poſture.

Καιρὸς διορθώσεως.
Heb. 9. 10.
Iſa. 65. 17.
65. 22. 43. 18.
Οἰκȣμένη μέλλȣσα.
Heb. 2. 5.
Ὁ μέλλων αἰών.
Heb. 6. 5.
Orig. in Celſ. 3.
Ep. 4. 23, 24.
2 Cor. 15. 17.
Act. 17. 6.

Concerning which good effects of Chriſtian Religion the ancient Chriſtians had good reaſon to glory, and to ſay with Origen; The adverſaries of Chriſtianiſm do not diſcern, how many mens diſeaſes of ſoul, and how many floods of vices have been reſtrained; and how many mens ſavage manners have been tamed by reaſon of the Chriſtian doctrine; wherefore being ſatisfied with the publick beneficialneſs thereof, which by a new method doth free men from many miſchiefs, they ought willingly to render thanks thereto, and to yield teſtimony, if not to the truth of it, yet to its profitableneſs to mankind.

Οἱ γὰρ κατήγοροι τȣ͂ Χριστιανισμȣ͂ ȣ̓χ ὁρῶσιν, &c.
Orig. in Celſ. lib. 1. p. 50.
Vid. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. 1.

There remain behind ſeveral important conſiderations appertaining to this purpoſe, concerning the performances of the Meſſias, and events about him; His being to ſuffer grievous things from men, and for men; his performing miraculous works; the yielding various atteſtations from heaven to his perſon and doctrine; from the congruity of which particulars to what Jeſus did endure, and act; and to what God hath done in regard to him, the truth of our Concluſion, That Jeſus is the Chriſt, will be manifeſt: but time now forbiddeth the proſecution of thoſe matters; and I muſt therefore reſerve it to an other occaſion.

* offending. *Now, To him that is able to keep us from * falling, and to preſent us*
blameleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy, To the onely Jud. 24, 25. wiſe God our Saviour be glory and majeſty, dominion and power, both now, and for ever.

* of ages. *Vnto the King * eternal, immortal, inviſible, the onely wiſe God, be ho-*
1 Tim. 1. 17. nour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Revel. 5. 13. Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

Apoc. 7. 10. Salvation be unto our God, which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

Apoc. 7. 12. Amen; Bleſſing, and glory, and wiſdom, and thankſgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

Apoc. 5. 12. Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing.

Apoc. 1. 5. Vnto him, that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood; and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God, and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XIX.

THAT JESUS IS THE True MESSIAS.

ACTS IX. 22.

— Proving that Jeſus is the Chriſt.

WHAT is the true notion of the name or Title Chriſt, we (in diſcourſing formerly upon this Text) did explain. That one Perſon, to whom that notion ſignally doth agree, was by God's eſpecial determination to come into the world, we did alſo in the next place, from prophetical inſtruction (back'd with the common tradition, and current opinion of God's people) declare. We farther in the ſequel did propound to ſhew, that Jeſus (whom we acknowledge) was that very Perſon; the Meſſias predicted by the Prophets, and expected by the Jews. This we have already (in the foregoing diſcourſes, proved from ſeveral circumſtances of his birth and coming among men; from his perſonal qualification, and from divers illuſtrious performances managed by him, in correſpondency to what the Prophets foretold concerning the Meſſias. The ſame we now proceed to confirm from other very conſiderable particulars foretold by them, and ſuting to him; and firſt from thoſe things, which the Meſſias was to undergo, and ſuffer.

Act. 3. 17.
Luk. 18. 31.

That the Meſſias was to come in an humble and homely manner (without appearances of worldly ſplendour or grandeur) that he was to converſe among men in a ſtate of external poverty and meanneſs; that he was to be diſregarded and deſpiſed by men; that he was to cauſe offences, and to find oppoſitions in his proceedings; that he was to be repulſed and rejected, to be ſcorned and hated, to be diſgracefully and hardly treated, to be grievouſly perſecuted and afflicted; yea that at laſt he was to be perſecuted, condemned and executed as a malefactour, is a truth which the Jews (although they firmly believed, and earneſtly expected the coming of a Meſſias) did not, and indeed were hardly capable to entertain. It was a point repugnant to the whole frame of their conceits, yea inconſiſtent with the nature and drift of their Religion, as they underſtood it. For their Religion in its ſurface (deeper than which their groſs fancy could not penetrate) did repreſent earthly wealth, dignity and proſperity as things highly valuable; did propound them as very proper (if not as the ſole) rewards of piety and obedience; did imply conſequently the poſſeſſion of them to be certain arguments of the divine good-will and regard; they could not therefore but eſteem poverty, affliction and diſgrace, as curſes from heaven, and plain indications of God's diſfavour toward thoſe on whom they fell: They particularly did conceit, that to be rich was a neceſſary qualification to a Prophet (no leſs neceſſary, than to be of a good complexion, of a good capacity, of a good life) Spiritus Dei non requieſcit ſuper pauperem; the Spirit of God reſts not upon a poor man (that is, no ſpecial communications of grace, wiſdom, goodneſs are ever by God afforded to perſons of a low or afflicted condition) was a Rule they had framed, and which paſſed among them. That He therefore, who was deſigned to be ſo notable a Prophet; who was to have the honour of being ſo ſpecial an inſtrument of promoting God's ſervice and glory; who therefore muſt be ſo highly favoured by God, ſhould appear deſpicable, and undergo great afflictions, was a notion that could not but ſeem very abſurd, could not otherwiſe than be very abominable to them. They had alſo (in congruity to thoſe prejudices, abetted by that extream ſelf-love and ſelf-flattery, which were peculiar to that Nation) raiſed in themſelves a ſtrong opinion, that the Meſſias was to come in a great viſible ſtate and power; to doe acts of great proweſs and renown, to bring the Nations of the world into ſubjection under him, and ſo to reign among them in glorious majeſty and proſperity. When Jeſus therefore (however otherwiſe anſwerable in his circumſtances, qualifications and performances to the prophetical characters of the Meſſias) did appear, ſuch as he did, with pretences (or intimations rather) that he was the Meſſias, their ſtomach roſe at it, they were hugely offended at him, they deemed him not only a madman (one poſſeſſed or diſtracted) and an impoſtour, but a blaſphemer; for to be no leſs than blaſphemy they took it, for ſo pitifull a wretch to arrogate unto himſelf ſo high a dignity, ſo near a relation to God, as the being the Meſſias did import. We ſee even the Diſciples of our Lord ſo deeply tainted with this National prejudice, that (even after they had acknowledged him to be the Chriſt) they could not with patience hear him foretelling what ſhould befall him (S. Peter, upon that occaſion, even juſt after he had confeſſed him to be the Chriſt, did, as the Text ſays, take him and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord) Yea preſently after that he moſt plainly had deſcribed his ſufferings to them, they could not forbear dreaming of Kingdoms, and being Grandees in them; yea, even after our Lord's paſſion and reſurrection, this fancy ſtill poſſeſt them; for even then they demand of him, whether he would at that time reſtore the Kingdom unto Iſrael (meaning ſuch an external viſible Kingdom.)

Matt. 16. 20.

Matt. 13. 57.
Matt. 26. 65.
Matt. 16. 22.
17. 2.
Joh. 16. 12.
Matt. 20. 21, 25.
Act. 1. 6.

This hence of all things notifying the Meſſias ſeems to be the only particular, which in general the Jews did not, or would not ſee and acknowledge: and this cauſed them to overſee all the reſt, how clearly ſoever ſhining in, and about the Perſon of Jeſus. This cloud hindred them from diſcerning the excellency of his doctrine, from regarding the ſanctity of his life, from being affected with the wonderfulneſs of his works; from minding or crediting all the teſtimonies miniſtred from heaven unto him. This (as S. Paul tells us) was the great ſcandal which obſtructed their embracing the Goſpel. We cannot therefore here, as in other particulars, alledge the general conſent of God's people, in expounding the Prophets according to our ſenſe; this being one of thoſe Points, in reſpect to which the Prophets did foreſee and foretell their perverſe ſtupidity and incredulity; that they ſhould look and not ſee, hear and not underſtand; yielding herein ſpecial occaſion to that complaint; Who hath believed our report?

Niſi enim ignoratus nihil pati poſſet Tert. in Marc. 3. 6.
1 Cor. 1. 23.
Vid. Tert. ibid.
Iſa. 6. 9.
Ezek. 12. 2.
Matt. 13. 13.
Act. 28. 26.
Iſa. 53. 1.

Yet notwithſtanding their (affected) blindneſs, there is no particular concerning the Meſſias, in the ancient Scripture, either more frequently (in way of myſtical inſinuation, or adumbration) glanced at; or more clearly (in direct and plain language) expreſſed; or which alſo by reaſonable deductions thence may be inferr'd more ſtrongly than this. S. Peter affirms that God had foreſhewed it by the mouth of all his Prophets (not only of ſome, but of all his Prophets:) The ſame our Lord himſelf did ſignifie before his departure to his Diſciples out of Moſes, the Prophets and Pſalms ſhewing them this particular, and opening their minds to underſtand the Scriptures concerning it; concluding his diſcourſe to them thus, ὅτι οὕτω γέγραπται, καὶ οὕτως ἔδει παθεῖν τὸν Χριϛὸν, Thus it was written, and thus ought Chriſt (according to the prophetical preſignifications and predictions) to ſuffer.

Act. 3. 18.
Luk. 24. 44.

For the explaining and confirming of which truth, let us preſume here to make a preparatory diſcourſe or digreſſion (not unſeaſonable perhaps, or improper to our purpoſe) concerning the nature of divine preſignifications, which may ſerve to declare the pertinency of many citations produced out of the ancient Scripture in the New Teſtament (the which, together with others connected to them, or bearing analogy to them, we alſo, being aſſured of their deſign by the authority of our Lord and his Apoſtles, may ſafely preſume after them to apply to the ſame purpoſes.) We may then conſider, that the All-wiſe God, (who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will, and to whom

Eph. 1. 11.
2 Tim. 1. 9.
Tit. 1. 2.

all things are preſent) having before eternal times (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) determined in due time to ſend the Meſſias for accompliſhing the greateſt deſign, that ever was to be managed in this world (which ſhould bring the higheſt glory to himſelf, and procure the greateſt benefit to the principal of his creatures here) did by his incomprehenſible providence ſo order things, that all the ſpecial diſpenſations preceding it ſhould have a fit tendency, and advantageous reference thereto; ſo that when it came upon the ſtage, it might appear, that the main of the plot conſiſted therein, and that whatever before was acted, had a principal reſpect thereto. As therefore from the beginning of things God did in a gradual method make real preparations toward it, by ſteps imparting diſcoveries of his mind about it, or in order to it (ſomewhat to Adam himſelf, more to Abraham and the Patriarchs, ſomewhat farther to Moſes, much more yet to divers of the Prophets among his choſen people, who not only foretold largely concerning it, but delivered ſeveral inſtructions conformable to it, and nearly conducing to the promoting thereof) So he did alſo take eſpecial care by many appoſite reſemblances, handſomely inſerted into all his diſpenſations, to ſet it out, and to inſinuate his meaning about it; that ſo at length it might ſhew it ſelf with more ſolemnity, and leſs ſurpriſe. The moſt eminent perſons therefore, whom he raiſed up and employ'd in his affairs tending to that end, as they did reſemble the Meſſias in being inſtruments of his particular grace and providence (being indeed inferiour Chriſts, and Mediatours, and partial Saviours of his people, as they are ſometimes called) ſo they were ordered in ſeveral circumſtances of their perſons, in divers actions they did, in the principal accidents befalling them to repreſent him; as alſo the rites and ſervices inſtituted by them were adapted to the ſame purpoſe; they and all things about them being * fitted by God's eſpecial wiſe care ſo as to be congruous emblems and ſhadows preſignifying the Chriſt, and what appertained to him; his circumſtances and accidents, his performances, his inſtitutions. Thus was Adam (as S. Paul calls him) a type of Chriſt; Abel, Melchizedek, Iſaac, Moſes, Joſhua, David, Solomon, Zorobabel are alſo intimated to have been ſuch; the moſt ſignal things done by them, or befalling them, having been ſuted to anſwer ſomewhat that was remarkable concerning him; We may ſay of them all, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſays of the Jewiſh Prieſts. They ſerved to the ſubindication and ſhadowing of heavenly things (οἵτινες ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιᾷ λατρεύουσι τῶν ἐπουρανίων.) In David particularly this relation is ſo plain, that becauſe thereof often (as we before noted) in the Prophets, (Jeremy, Ezekiel, Hoſea) the Meſſias is called by his Name. It indeed well ſuted the dignity of this great Perſon, and the importance of his buſineſs, that he ſhould have ſuch notable uſhers, heralds and harbingers going before his face; furniſhed with conſpicuous badges and enſigns denoting their relation to him; It was proper, that God ſhould appear always to have had an expreſs care, and eſpecial regard toward him. It conſequently ſerves for our edification; for that we duely comparing things, and diſcerning this admirable correſpondence, may be ſomewhat inſtructed thereby, and ſomewhat confirmed in our faith, may be excited to the admiration of God's wiſdom and goodneſs (ſo provident for our good) may alſo be induced thereby the more highly to adore the Meſſias, and to eſteem his deſign. All theſe things (ſaith S. Paul, having compared divers things concerning Moſes to things concerning Chriſt) hap-

1 Cor. 2. 7.
Eph. 1. 3. 3. 9.
Rom. 16. 25.
Col. 1. 26.

Νοητὰ θεωρήματα Euſebius calls them. Eccl. H. 1. 3.

Heb. 8. 6.
Gal. 3. 19.
Neh. 9. 27.
Act. 7. 35.

Εἰκονικοὶ Χριστοὶ (Chriſts in effigie) Euſebius calls them. Eccl. H. 1. 4.

* Heb. 8. 5.
Exod. 25. 40.
Rom. 5. 14.

Heb. 8. 5.

Heb. 8. 5. 10. 1. 9. 23.
Gal. 4. 24.
Col. 2. 17.

Ὅτι δὴ καὶ αὐτοὶ τὰ τοῦ μόνου καὶ ἀληθοῦς Χριστοῦ τοῦ κατὰ πάντων βασιλεύοντος θείου λόγου βασιλικῆς καὶ ἀρχικῆς ἐξουσίας τοὺς τύπους δι᾽ ἑαυτῶν ἔφερον (Euſeb. 16, &c.)

1 Cor. 10, 11, 6.

pened as types, and they were written for our admonition, on whom th ends of the world are come. It is alſo (for illuſtration, and alſo for proof of theſe things) to be obſerved, that becauſe thoſe eminent ſervants of God were repreſentatives of Chriſt, many things are ſpoken of them as ſuch; many things are aſcribed to them, which only or chiefly were intended of him; their names are uſed as veils to cover divers things concerning him, which it ſeemed not to divine wiſdom convenient or ſeaſonable in a more open and clear manner to diſcloſe promiſcuouſly to all men (Why God ſhould chuſe to expreſs things of this nature in ſuch a manner, we need not to determine; it may be perhaps for reaſons beſt known to himſelf, and above our ken or cognizance; yet probable reaſons may be aſſigned for it, yea ſome more than probable being hinted in Scripture; it may be for a decent and harmonious diſtinction of times, of diſpenſations, of perſons; it may be from the depth of things to conciliate a reverence to them, and to raiſe the price of knowing them, by the difficulty of doing ſo; it may be to exerciſe and improve mens underſtanding to enflame their deſire, to excite their induſtry, to provoke their devotion, to render them humble; it may be to reward an honeſt and diligent ſtudy of God's word; it may be for occaſion of freely conveying ſpecial gifts of interpretation; it may be to conceal ſome things from ſome perſons unfit, or unworthy to know them, eſpecially from perſons haughty and ſelf-conceited; it may be to uſe the ignorance of ſome as a means to produce ſome great event (If they had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory) it cannot be ſuppoſed neceſſary that all things ſhould be plainly diſcovered to all perſons; it is evident that ſome things are purpoſely couched in parabolical and myſterious expreſſion; it is particularly the manner of prophetical inſtruction frequently to involve things, the full and clear knowledge of which is not congruous to every ſeaſon and every capacity; but to return from out of this parentheſis to our caſe.) That under the names of Perſons repreſenting Chriſt (or of things we may add adumbrating his things) many things are intimated concerning him and his diſpenſations, may be collected and confirmed from hence, that many things are attributed to perſons (and to things alſo) which do not agree to them; many things were promiſed, which appear never accompliſhed, except after a very improper and hyperbolical manner of expreſſion, or according to an enormous wideneſs of interpretation; ſuch as doth not well ſute to the nature of true hiſtories, and ſerious promiſes. Thus (for inſtance) are many things foretold concerning the large extent and proſperous eſtate of the Jewiſh Church, which hiſtory and experience teſtifie never (according to ſtrictneſs of literal acception, yea not in any tolerable degree near the height of what the words import) to have happened. Thus alſo (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews well argueth) effects are attributed to the Jewiſh rites and ſacrifices, which according to the nature of the thing cannot belong to them, otherwiſe than as ſhadows and ſubſtitutes of higher things. Thus alſo, what is, with ſolemn oath, promiſed to Solomon (concerning the vaſt extent, and endleſs duration of his empire in righteouſneſs, peace and proſperity; together with his mighty acts and victorious atchievements) doth not appear directly in any competent meaſure to have been performed. Thus alſo David (as S. Peter obſerves and argues in the ſecond of the Acts) ſpeaketh many things of himſelf, which cannot be conceived properly and literally agreeable to him. Such things therefore are reaſonably ſuppoſed to be intimations of ſomewhat appertaining to the future moſt perfect ſtate of things

Vid. de Script. Obſ. & Proph. Chryſ. Tom. 6. pag. 649, &c. & 658, &c.

Apoc. 2. 7, &c. 13. 18. 17. 9. Matt. 13. 9. 24. 15. Dan. 9. 1. Joh. 5. 39. Luc. 24. 45. 1 Cor. 12. 10. 14. 26. Eph. 1. 9, 10.

Matt. 13. 13. 11. 25. 7. 6.

Act. 3. 17. 1 Cor. 2. 8.

Iſa. 25. 8.

Heb. 10. 4.

Pſal. 45. 72, 83, &c.

Act. 2. 29.

things under the Meſſias; to concern him (who was to be the end of the Law) and his diſpenſation, which was to contain the accompliſhment of all things predicted and preſignified. This is that which Saint Auſtin ſignifies when he ſays, Which Chriſt (ſaith he, and what concerns him) ---- all the promiſes of that nation, all their prophecies, prieſthood, ſacrifices, their temple, and altogether all their ſacraments did reſound, or expreſs.

Rom. 10. 4.
2 Cor. 3. 13.
Luc. 22. 37.

Quem Chriſtum —— omnia gentis illius promiſſa, omnes prophetiæ, ſacerdotia, ſacrificia, templum, & cuncta omnino ſacramenta ſonuerunt. Aug. ad Voluſ. Ep. 3.

Neither are theſe things only ſaid according to ſuppoſitions aſſumed in the New Teſtament, but they agree (as to their general importance) to the ſenſe of the ancient Jews, who did conceive ſuch myſterious references often to lie couched under the letter of Scriptures. They ſuppoſed a Midraſh or myſtical ſenſe of Scripture, which they very ſtudiouſly (even to exceſs commonly) did ſearch after. It was (as Lud. Capellus affirms) a confident and conſtant opinion of their Doctors, that all things in Moſes his Law were typical, and capable of myſtical expoſition. And Philo's Writings (compoſed in, or immediately after our Saviour's times) are a plain confirmation of what he ſaith; we have alſo ſeveral inſtances and intimations thereof in the New Teſtament. Neither probably would the Apoſtles in their diſcourſes and diſputations with the Jews have uſed this way of interpreting and citing paſſages of Scripture, if they in general had not admitted and approved it.

In Exerc. ad Zohar.

Matth. 21. 9, 42. 22. 32. 42.

Now theſe things being (curſorily) premiſed, we return into our way, and ſay, that the Meſſias his being to ſuffer was in divers paſſages of the ancient Scripture prefigured. Suppoſing the thing it ſelf ſhould be, there is a peculiar reaſon, why it ſhould be ſo repreſented, thus expreſſed by Tertullian: The Sacrament indeed (ſaith he) of Chriſt's paſſion ought to have been figured in the (ancient) predication; foraſmuch as that the more incredible it was, if it ſhould have been preached nakedly, the more offenſive it would have been; and the more magnificent it was, the more it was to be ſhaded, that the difficulty of underſtanding it might cauſe the ſeeking of God's grace. Suppoſing alſo it ſhould be, the paſſages about Abel, Iſaac, Joſias, Jeremy (and the like) may congruouſly be applied thereto; The elevation of the Brazen Serpent, and the killing of the Paſchal Lamb may appoſitely repreſent it; the Jewiſh Prieſts, with all their Sacrifices, may alſo with reaſon be brought in and accommodated thereto: Theſe things are not indeed by themſelves alone apt peremptorily to evince, that it ſhould be; yet do they handſomely ſute it, and adorn the ſuppoſition thereof, according to the notion we touched about the typical relation between the matters of the Old World before the Meſſias, and thoſe of the New one after him. But with a clearer evidence and ſtronger force we may affirm, that the Meſſias his ſufferings were implied in the afflictions of his repreſentative King David, ſuch as he in ſeveral Pſalms (the 35, 69, 109, 118, and eſpecially in the 22. Pſalm) deſcribeth them; wherein divers paſſages (expreſſing the extreme ſadneſs and forlornneſs of his condition) occur, which by the hiſtory of his life, do not ſo well, according to the literal ſignification of words, appear congruous to his Perſon; which therefore there is a neceſſity, or (at leaſt) much reaſon that they ſhould be applied to the Meſſias, whom David did repreſent.

Utique Sacramentum paſſionis ipſius figurari in prædicationibus oportuerat; quantoque incredibile, tanto magis ſcandalum futurum; quantoque magnificum, tanto magis adumbrandum, ut difficultas intellectus gratiam Dei quæreret. Tertull. in Judæos, cap. 10.

Which being admitted, comparing then the paſſages we have there to what befel Jeſus, we ſhall find an admirable harmony, there being ſcarce any part of his affliction in his life, or any circumſtance thereof at his death, which is not in emphatical and expreſs terms there ſet out. Pſal. 22. 6. There we have expreſſed his low and deſpicable eſtate (I am a worm, and no man; the reproach of men and deſpiſed of the people) The cauſeleſs hatred and enmity of the populacy and of the Great ones toward him: Pſal. 69. 4. 35. 7. 109. 3. (They that hate me without a cauſe are more than the hairs of my head; they that would deſtroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: They compaſſed me about with words of hatred, and fought againſt me without a cauſe.) The ingrateful requital made to him for all the good Pſal. 35. 12. 109. 5. Pſal. 118. 22. done by him, and intended by him (They rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love.) Their rejecting him (The ſtone which the builders refuſed is become the head ſtone in the corner:) Their inſidious and Pſal. 35. 7, 11. 109. 2. calumnious proceedings againſt him (Without cauſe have they hid for me their net, in a pit which without cauſe they have digged for my ſoul: and, Falſe witneſſes did riſe up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not: and, The mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitful are opened againſt me, they have ſpoken againſt me with a lying tongue.) Their bitter Pſal. 35. 15. 69. 26. inſulting over him in his affliction (But in mine adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together, yea the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me —— They perſecute him, whom thou haſt ſmitten, and they talk to the grief of thoſe, whom thou haſt wounded: καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ἄλγος τῶν τραυμάτων μου προσέθηκαν, and to the ſmart of my wounds, they added, ſay the LXX.) Their ſcornful reviling, flouting, and mocking him (All they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn, they ſhoot the lip; they ſhake the head (ſaying) He truſted in the Lord that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighteth in him. Pſal. 109. 25. 35. 21. 35. 16. 22. 6, 7. I became a reproach unto them, when they looked upon me, they ſhaked their heads. They opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid Aha, Aha; our eye hath ſeen it. Ἐπείρασάν με, ἐξεμυκτήρισάν με μυκτηρισμὸν ἔβρυξαν ἐπ᾽ ἐμὲ τοὺς ὀδόντας αὐτῶν· They tempted me, they extremely mocked me, they gnaſhed their teeth upon me.) Pſal. 22. 16. The cruel manner of their dealing with him (Dogs have compaſſed me, the aſſembly of the wicked have encloſed me; they pierced my hands and my feet; I may tell all my bones; they look and ſtare upon me.) Their dealing with him, when in his diſtreſs he called for ſome refreſhment Pſal. 69. 21. (They gave me gall for my meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink.) Pſal. 22. 18. Their diſpoſal of his garments upon his ſuffering (They parted my garments among them, and caſt lots upon my veſture.) His being deſerted of Pſal. 69. 9, 20. his friends, and deſtitute of all conſolation (I am become a ſtranger to my brethren, and an alien unto my mothers children.— I am full of heavineſs, and I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none, and for comforters, but I found none.) The ſenſe of God's withholding his favour and help Pſal. 22. 1. 69. 17. (My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me; why art thou ſo far from helping me? ——) His charitable diſpoſition and behaviour toward his Pſal. 35. 13. perſecutors (But as for me when they were ſick (or as the LXX, when they did trouble me, Ἐν τῷ αὐτοὺς παρενοχλεῖν μοι) my cloathing was ſackcloath, I humbled my ſelf with faſting; and my prayer returned into mine own boſom; I behaved my ſelf as though it had been my friend or brother; I bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his mother) which paſſagesand the like, how patly and punctually they do ſquare to reſpective paſſages in the Goſpels, I need not to ſhew; we do all, I ſuppoſe, well enough remember that both moſt doleful and comfortable hiſtory, to be able our ſelves to make the application.

But there are not only ſuch oblique intimations, ſhrowded under the coverture of other Perſons and Names, but direct and immediate predictions concerning the Meſſias his being to ſuffer moſt clearly expreſſed.

That whole famous Chapter in Eſay (the 53*d Chapter*) doth moſt evidently and fully declare it, wherein the kind, manner, cauſes, ends and conſequences of his ſufferings, together with his behaviour under them, are graphically repreſented. His appearing meanneſs (He v. 2. hath no form or comelineſs, and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him.) The diſgrace, contempt, repulſes and rejection he underwent (He is deſpiſed, and rejected of men —— we hid our v. 3. faces from him; he was deſpiſed, and we eſteemed him not.) His afflicted ſtate (He is a man of ſorrows and acquainted with grief; we did eſteem v. 3, 4. him ſtricken, ſmitten of God, and afflicted.) The bitter and painful manner of his affliction (He was ſtricken; bore ſtripes, was wounded, was v. 5, 8. bruiſed.) His being accuſed, adjudged and condemned as a malefactor (He was taken from priſon, and from judgment —— he was numbred among v. 8. 12.
the tranſgreſſors.) His conſequent death (He poured out his ſoul unto v. 12, 8, 7.
death; He was cut out of the land of the living.) The deſign and end of his ſufferings; they were appointed and inflicted by Divine providence for our ſake, and in our ſtead; for the expiation of our ſins, and our ſalvation (It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; he hath put him to grief —— v. 10, 5, 4, 8, 6, 12.
when thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin: — He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities; —— the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed; —— Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows —— For the tranſgreſſion of my people he was ſmitten; —— The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all.) His ſuſtaining all this with a willing patience and meekneſs (He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is v. 7. brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before the ſhearer is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth.) His charitable praying for his perſecutors; ſo that may be underſtood (He made interceſſion for the tranſgreſſors.) v. 12.
The conſequence and ſucceſs of his ſufferings (He ſhall ſee his v. 10, 11, 12.
ſeed, he ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand: He ſhall ſee of the travel of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied; by his knowledge ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many; —— and, I will divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhall divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong.)
Which paſſages as they moſt exactly ſute to Jeſus, and might in a manner conſtitute an hiſtorical narration of what he did endure, together with the opinions taught in the Goſpel concerning the intent and effect of his ſufferings; ſo that they did (according to the intention of the Divine Spirit) relate to the Meſſias, may from ſeveral conſiderations be apparent: The context and coherence of all this paſſage with the precedent and ſubſequent paſſages, which plainly reſpect the Meſſias, and his times: How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that Iſa. 52. 7, 13.
bringeth good tidings? —— and, Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, &c. are paſſages immediately going before, of which this 53*d Chapter* is but a continuation: and immediately after it followeth —— Sing
O barren, thou that didſt not bear, &c. being a very elegant, and perſpicuous deſcription of the Church augmented by acceſſion of the Gentiles, which was to be brought to paſs by the Meſſias. The general ſcope of this whole prophecy argues the ſame; And the incongruity of this particular prediction to any other Perſon imaginable beſide the Meſſias doth farther evince it; ſo high are the things which are attributed to the Suffering Perſon; as that he ſhould bear the ſins of all God's people and heal them; that he ſhould by his knowledge juſtify many;
that the pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in his hand; that God would divide him a portion with the great; and that he ſhould divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong—the magnificency and importance of which things do well agree to the Meſſias, but not to any other perſon: whence if the ancient Jews had reaſon to believe a Meſſias, they had as much reaſon to apply this place to him as any other, and to acknowledge he was to be a great ſufferer; and indeed divers of the ancient Targumiſts and moſt learned Rabbins did expound this place of the one Meſſias that was to come, as the Pugio Fidei, and other learned Writers do by ſeveral teſtimonies ſhew. This place alſo diſcovers the vanity of that figment deviſed by ſome later Jews, who to evade and oppoſe Jeſus affirmed there was to be a double Meſſias (one who ſhould be much afflicted, the other who ſhould greatly proſper) ſince we may obſerve that here both great afflictions, and glorious performances are aſcribed to the ſame perſon.

The ſame things are alſo by parts clearly predicted in other places of Iſa. 52. 13, 14. this Prophet, and in other Scriptures: By Eſay again in the Chapter, immediately foregoing: Behold (ſaith he) my ſervant ſhall deal prudently; he ſhall be exalted and extolled, and be very high (there is God's ſervant (he that is in way of excellency ſuch, that is, in this Prophet's ſtyle, the Meſſias) in his real glorious capacity; it follows, concerning his external appearance) his viſage was ſo marred more than any man, and his form more than the ſons of men,—and again (in the forty ninth Chapter) Thus ſaith the Lord, the redeemer of Iſrael, and his Holy one:
Iſa. 49. 7. To him whom man deſpiſeth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a ſervant of Rulers, Kings ſhall ſee and ariſe, Princes alſo ſhall worſhip: What can be more expreſs and clear, than that the Meſſias, who ſhould ſubject the world, with its ſovereign powers, to the acknowledgment, and adoration of himſelf, was to be deſpiſed by men; to be deteſted by the Jews, and to appear in a ſervile and baſe condition? The ſame Prophet again brings him in ſpeaking thus:
Iſa. 50. 6. I gave my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting. His offending the Jews and aggravating their ſins is alſo
Iſa. 8. 14. expreſſed by this ſame Prophet—And (ſaith he) He ſhall be for a ſanctuary, but for a ſtone of ſtumbling, and for a rock of offence to both the houſes of Iſrael; for a gin and for a ſnare to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem. The oppoſition alſo he ſhould receive is ſignified in the ſecond Pſalm—
Pſal. 2. 2. The Kings of the earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed. The Prophet Zachary doth alſo in ſeveral places very roundly expreſs his ſufferings: His low con-
Zech. 9. 9. dition in thoſe words: Behold thy King cometh unto thee lowly (Pauper) and riding upon an aſs: His manner of death in thoſe:
Zech. 13. 7. Awake O ſword againſt my ſhepherd, and againſt the man that is my fellow (ſaith the Lord of hoſts) ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered: and again—
Zech. 12. 10. I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications, and they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn, &c. The Prophet Daniel alſo in that place, from which probably the name Meſſias was taken, and
Dan. 9. which moſt expreſly mentions him, ſaith, that after threeſcore and two weeks the Meſſias ſhall be cut off, but not for himſelf—. Now from theſe paſſages of Scripture we may well ſay with our Lord; Ὅτι οὕτω γέγραπ-
Luke 24. 26. ται, καὶ οὕτως ἔδει παθεῖν τὸν Χριστόν· That thus it was written, and thus, according to the Prophets foretelling, it was to happen, that the Meſſias ſhould ſuffer; ſuffer in a life of penury and contempt, in a death of ſhame and ſorrow.

That it was to be thus might alſo be inferred by reaſons grounded on the qualities of the Meſſias his Perſon, and the nature of his performances, ſuch as they are deſcribed in the Scripture. He was to be really and to appear plainly a perſon of moſt admirable vertue and good worth; but never was or can there be any ſuch (as even Pagan Philoſophers, Plato, Seneca, and others have obſerved) without undergoing the trial of great affliction. He was to be an univerſal pattern to men of all ſorts (eſpecially to the greateſt part, that is to the poor) of all righteouſneſs; to exemplify particularly the moſt difficult pieces of duty (Humility, Patience, Meekneſs, Charity, Self-denial, entire reſignation to God's will) this he ſhould not have opportunity or advantage of doing, if his condition had been high, wealthy, ſplendid and proſperous. He was to exerciſe pity and ſympathy towards all mankind; the which to do it was requiſite he ſhould feel the inconveniences and miſeries incident to mankind. He was to advance the repute of ſpiritual and eternal goods; and to depreſs the value of thoſe corporeal and temporal things, which men vainly admire; the moſt ready and compendious way of doing this was by an exemplary neglecting and refuſing worldly enjoyments (the honours, profits and pleaſures here.) He was by gentle and peaceable means to erect a ſpiritual Kingdom, to ſubdue the hearts and conſciences of men to the love and obedience of God, to raiſe in men the hopes of future rewards and bleſſings in heaven; to the accompliſhment of which purpoſes temporal glory had been rather prejudicial, than conducible. He was to manage his great deſigns by means ſupernatural and divine, the which would be more conſpicuous by the viſible meanneſs and impotency of his ſtate. He was to merit moſt highly from God for himſelf, and for men; this he could not do ſo well, as in enduring for God's ſake and ours the hardeſt things. He was to ſave men and conſequently to appeaſe God's wrath, and ſatisfy his juſtice, by the expiation of our ſins; this required that he ſhould ſuffer what we had deſerved. But reaſons of this kind I partly before touched, and ſhall hereafter have occaſion to proſecute more fully in treating upon the article of our Saviour's paſſion.

Now that Jeſus (our Lord) did moſt thoroughly correſpond to whatever is in this kind declared concerning the Meſſias, we need not by relating minutely the known hiſtory of his life and death make out farther; ſince the whole matter is palpably notorious, and no adverſary will deny it. I conclude this Point with St. Peter's words (for the illuſtration and proof of which this diſcourſe hath been made.) But thoſe things which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled. Acts 3. 18.

And in Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

SERMON XX.

THAT JESUS IS THE True MESSIAS.

JOHN V. 37.

And the Father himſelf, which hath ſent me, hath born witneſs of me.

JESUS, our Lord, here, and in the Context doth affirm, that Almighty God, his Father, had granted unto him ſeveral kinds of extraordinary atteſtation, ſufficient to convince all well-diſpoſed perſons, unto whom they ſhall be diſcovered, that he truly was that Meſſias, whom God before all beginning of time had deſigned, and frequently by his Prophets had promiſed to ſend for the reformation of the world, and ſalvation of mankind: to repreſent thoſe ſeveral ways of divine atteſtation with ſome reflections on them, ſerving both to the confirmation of our faith, and improving our affection, and our reverence thereto is my chief deſign at this time.

But firſt in preparation to what we ſhall ſay concerning thoſe particulars, and for declaration of the divine wiſdom in this manner of proceeding, I ſhall aſſign ſome reaſons, why it was requiſite, that ſuch atteſtations ſhould be afforded to our Lord.

1. The nature of the Meſſias his Office required ſuch atteſtations; for ſince he was deſigned to the moſt eminent employment that ever was, or could be committed to any perſon; ſince he was to reveal things no leſs great and important, than new and ſtrange; ſince he was to aſſume a moſt high authority unto himſelf; ſince he was to ſpeak, and act all in the name of God; ſince alſo all men under great penalties were obliged to yield credit and obedience to him, there was great reaſon that God ſhould appear to authorize him; that he ſhould be able to produce God's hand and ſeal to his commiſſion; for that otherwiſe he might have been ſuſpected of impoſture; his doctrine might have been rejected, Deut. 18. 19. Act. 3. 23.

ed, his authority diſclaimed, and his deſign fruſtrated, without great blame, or however without mens being convincible of blame: for well might the people ſuſpect that perſon, who, profeſſing to come in ſuch a capacity an extraordinary Agent from heaven, brought no Credentials thence, (no evidence of God's eſpecial favour and aſſiſtance;) well might they reject that new doctrine, which God vouchſafed not by any ſignal teſtimony to countenance; well might they diſclaim that authority, which offering to introduce ſo great innovations (to repeal old laws, to cancel ſettled obligations, to aboliſh ancient cuſtoms; to enact new laws and rules, exacting obedience to them from all men) ſhould not be able to exhibit its warrant, and ſhew its derivation from heaven: well might Joh. 6. 27. ſuch peremptory aſſertions, and ſo confident pretences, without confirmations anſwerable in weight, beget even in wiſe men diſtruſt, and averſation. The reaſonableneſs and excellency of his doctrine, the innocence and ſanctity of his life, the wiſdom and perſuaſiveneſs of his diſcourſe would not, if nothing more divine ſhould attend them, be thoroughly able to procure faith and ſubmiſſion; they would at beſt have made his precepts to paſs for the devices of a wiſe man, or the dictates of a good Philoſopher. They were therefore no unreaſonable deſires or demands (if they had proceeded from a good meaning, and had been joined with a docile and tractable diſpoſition) which the Jews did make to our Lord; Maſter we would ſee a ſign from thee; what ſign therefore Joh. 2. 18. doſt thou doe, that we may ſee, and believe thee; what doſt thou work? 6. 30. Matt. 12. 28. what ſign doſt thou ſhew to us, that thou doeſt things? that is, how 16. 1. doſt thou prove thy doctrine credible, or thy authority valid by God's Mark 8. 12. teſtimony and warrant? This challenge our Lord himſelf acknowledged ſomewhat reaſonable; for he not only aſſerts the truth of his doctrine, Joh. 8. 16, 29. and validity of his commiſſion by divine atteſtation (in words and 10. 25. 5. 32, 36. works) nor only exhorts them to credit him upon that account, but he alſo plainly ſignifies that his bare affirmation did not require credit, and that if he could produce no better proof, they were excuſable for disbelieving him: If (ſaith he) I witneſs of my ſelf my witneſs is not true; not true, Joh. 5. 31. that is, not credible; or not ſo true, as to oblige to belief: and, If I doe 10. 37. 15. 24. not the works of my father, (that is, works only imputable to God's extraordinary power,) believe me not, that is, I require no belief from you: Yea, he farther adds, If I had not done the works among them, which no man elſe had done; they (the incredulous people then) had not had any ſin; that is, had not been culpable for unbelief. It was then from the nature of the Meſſias his Office, and undertaking very neceſſary, that he ſhould have atteſtations of this kind; and our Lord himſelf, we ſee, declines not, but aggravateth his pretences with this neceſſity.

2. The Effects which the Meſſias was to produce did require extraordinary atteſtations and aſſiſtances from God. He was to atchieve exploits of the greateſt difficulty conceivable; far ſurpaſſing all that ever was by any perſon undertaken in the world before: he was to vanquiſh all the powers, and to confound all the policies of hell; he was to ſubdue, and ſubjugate all the world; to make the greateſt Princes to ſtoop, and to Ἀνάπτυξον τῇ διανοίᾳ, καὶ ἐννόησον ἡλίκον ἐστὶ τὴν ὑφ' ἡλίῳ κειμένην ἅπασαν, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 61. p. 634. ſubmit their Sceptres to his will; to bring down the moſt haughty conceits, and to break down the moſt ſtubborn ſpirits, and to tame the wildeſt paſſions of men; he was to expell from their minds moſt deeply rooted prejudices, to baniſh from their practice moſt inveterate cuſtoms, to croſs their moſt violent humours, to thwart their intereſts, to bear down their ambitions, to reſtrain their covetous deſires, and their voluptuous appetites; he was to perſwade a Doctrine, and to impoſe a Law very oppoſite to the natural inclinations, to the current notions, to the worldly advantages, the liberties, emoluments and enjoyments of all, or of moſt, or of many people; he was, in ſhort, ſo to reform the world as in a manner quite to alter the whole frame of it, and all the courſe of affairs therein; things which ſurely it were a madneſs to enterpriſe, and an impoſſibility to accompliſh without remarkable teſtimonies of the divine preſence, eſpecial aids of the divine power, and large influences of the divine ſpirit communicated to him; without (as S. Peter phraſeth it) God were with him; theſe things were not effectible by means natural and ordinary, by humane wit or eloquence, by good behaviour or example, by the bare reaſon or plauſibility of doctrine, by the wiſe conduct or induſtrious management of the deſign; no, ſuch means have by many experiments appeared inſufficient to bring about much leſſer matters; nothing under the wiſdom of God directing, the power of God aſſiſting, the authority of God eſtabliſhing, and gracing his endeavours in an eminent and evident manner could enable the Meſſias to bring theſe mighty things to paſs.

Act. 10. 38.
Joh. 3. 2.

3. We may farther conſider, that the Chriſt was deſigned to preſent himſelf firſt to the Jews (in the firſt place imparting the declarations of God's will, and gracious intentions to them, his ancient friends and favourites) that is to a people wholly addicted to this ſort of proof, and uncapable of conviction by any other: they did not, as did the Greeks, ſeek wiſdom, but required a ſign, as S. Paul obſerved of them; they were not ſo apt to enquire after the intrinſick reaſons of things, as to expect teſtimonies from heaven; nothing elſe was able to perſuade them; ſo our Lord expreſly ſaith; Jeſus ſaid unto them, if you do not ſee ſigns and prodigies, you will no-wiſe believe: In conſequence of which diſpoſition in them, we ſee by paſſages in the New Teſtament, that they expected and believed the Meſſias ſhould come with ſuch atteſtations, and performances; ſo their importunate demanding of ſigns upon all occaſions from our Lord doth ſignifie, and ſo thoſe words in S. John do imply: And many of the people believed on him, and ſaid; when Chriſt cometh, will he doe more miracles than theſe, which this man doeth? where we may obſerve both their expectation of miraculous works from the Meſſias, and the efficacy which ſuch works had upon them. The condition alſo of the Gentiles unto whom his deſign in the next place did extend, ſeemed to require the ſame proceedings: for all other methods of inſtruction and perſwaſion had before often been applied to them by Philoſophers, and by Politicians for inſtilling their notions, and recommending their laws; they had been ſo inured to ſubtile argumentations, and plauſible diſcourſes, that the bare uſe of them was not likely to have any extraordinary effect upon them: If the Meſſias therefore ſhould bring no other confirmation with him unto them, he would ſeem to deſerve no higher regard or credit, than other Doctors or Law-givers, which had appeared among them; and as eaſily would he be declined, and put off by them: whence reaſonably it may be ſuppoſed, that for accommodation to the genius, and the capacities of thoſe, upon whoſe hearts he was to make impreſſion, the Meſſias ſhould come furniſhed with ſuch ſpecial teſtimonials, and powers from God. Eſpecially conſidering that,

1 Cor. 1. 22.

Joh. 4. 48.

Joh. 7. 31.

Orig. cont. Celſ. 8. (p. 408.)

4. It was agreeable to God's uſual method of proceeding in caſes reſembling this, although much unequal thereto in weight, and conſequence. There was never any more than ordinary diſcovery made to men by God, never any very conſiderable buſineſs managed by divine providence; never hardly any eminent Perſon appeared with a pretence of coming from God for the proſecution of ſuch purpoſes, without God's viſible interpoſal and abetment. This hath always been the authentick Seal, whereby he hath wonted to authorize the meſſengers ſent Joh. 6. 27.

from himſelf for tranſacting affairs of an unuſual, and very weighty nature; whereby his true Ambaſſadours have been diſtinguiſhable from ordinary perſons, or from deceitfull pretenders, who have offered to impoſe their own devices upon men: to a perſon bringing with him this ſort of aſſurance (except when his tale is evidently falſe and vain, or his deſign notoriouſly wicked and miſchievous) God hath always required, that a ready credence and obedience ſhould be yielded; taking it for a high affront to himſelf (no leſs, as S. John ſays, than giving him 1 Joh. 5. 10.
the lye) to diſbelieve ſuch a perſon, and for a heinous contumacy to Joh. 3. 33.
diſobey him: that it hath been God's ordinary method, the courſe of divine Hiſtory ſhews. When God ſeparated the Patriarchs for the Gen. 21. 22.
preſervation and propagation of his true Religion, he manifeſted an eſpecial preſence with them, frequently appearing to them, viſibly aſſiſting and bleſſing them in a more than ordinary manner, endewing them with a prophetical diſcretion, and foreſight of things: when he would reſcue the ſeed of thoſe his friends from cruel oppreſſion and hard ſlavery (deſigning alſo by them to maintain, and convey down the ſincere way of piety) he imparted alſo unto Moſes the ſpecial inſtrument of thoſe purpoſes, a power of doing wonders, thereby procuring authority to his perſon, and credit to his pretences. Moſes did well perceive, and judge, that had he come without ſuch atteſtation he ſhould not have been received or regarded: But Behold (ſaid he) they will not believe Exod. 4. 1.
me, nor hearken to my voice; for they will ſay, the Lord hath not appeared unto thee: wherefore God furniſhed him with ſuch a power of doing ſuch things as ſhould aſſure the truth of his meſſage; the effect whereof is thus expreſſed; —— Iſrael ſaw that great work, which the Lord did Exod. 4. 5, 31.
upon the Egyptians; and the people feared the Lord, and believed the 14. 31.
Lord, and his ſervant Moſes: To the promulgation of the Law, and Deut. 4. 34.
eſtabliſhment of that particular Covenant with the Iſraelites God did 5. 15. 7. 19.
alſo exhibit ſignifications of his preſence in a moſt evident and affecting 4. 35, 39.
manner: Loe (ſaid God to Moſes, expreſſing that matter, and its deſign) I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I Exod. 19. 9.
ſpeak with thee, and believe thee for ever. And in the whole conduct of Neh. 9. 13.
that People toward Canaan, God for thoſe ends vouchſafed by Moſes to perform very great and prodigious things; which we may ſee reckoned up in the 78*th* and 105*th Pſalms*, and in the 9*th* of Nehemiah. So alſo Pſal. 78. 14.
when God employed Elias to ſuſtain the remainders of decayed piety in 105. 39.
Iſrael againſt the countenance of power given to wickedneſs, and againſt Neh. 9. 15.
the ſtream of popular uſe, he endewed him with a liberal meaſure of his Spirit, and a power of doing great miracles: the like may be obſerved of all the Prophets, Judges and Princes, who upon ſpecial occaſions were raiſed to perform conſiderable ſervices for the glory of God, and the good of his People. This therefore being God's conſtant practice, it cannot but be well ſuppoſed, that in this caſe he would not withhold his atteſtation, but would afford it in a moſt plentiful meaſure to that perſon who was in dignity ſo far to excell all other his Envoys and Agents;
whoſe undertaking ſhould in importance ſo vaſtly tranſcend all others, that ever were ſet on foot in the world; to him, who was to free not one ſmall people only, but all mankind, not from a temporal ſlavery in Egypt, but from eternal miſery in Hell; to promulge not a pedagogy of ritual obſervances, but a law of ſpiritual righteouſneſs; to eſtabliſh not a temporal Covenant for a little ſpot of earth, but an everlaſting Teſtament for all the World, importing endleſs beatitude in heaven. God therefore ſurely would not balk his road upon ſuch an occaſion, nor refuſe his eſpecial teſtimonials to ſo great a Perſonage, and to ſo good a Deſign.

5. If we conſider the general reaſons aſſignable, why God hath been wont to proceed in this manner, or why he ſhould uſe it upon any occaſion, they are with ſtrongeſt force applicable to this caſe. The moſt general reaſons why God doth ever interpoſe extraordinarily, or produce works ſupernatural, are to aſſert palpably his own Divinity and Providence; ſtrongly to encourage devotion and piety in men: for he by ſuſpending, or thwarting the courſe of nature plainly declareth himſelf the maker, and maſter thereof; that he freely made the world, and freely doth uphold it; that he hath not tied his own hands, nor confined his power within limits; but is ſuperiour to, and free from all laws, excepting thoſe of indefectible holineſs and goodneſs; and conſequently that all things do not proceed in a track of dead fatality. He thereby alſo aſſureth us, that he hath an eſpecial regard unto, and a care over men, and wiſely ordereth humane affairs by his providence, frequently (as wiſedom directeth, and occaſion requireth) interpoſing his hand for the ſuccour, encouragement and reward of good men; that therefore it is not vain to hope and truſt in him, that prayers and devotions are available to procure good from him; that repentance and obedience are no leſs profitable for us, than acceptable to him; that alſo he freely and juſtly diſpenſeth recompences ſutable to mens actions voluntarily performed; that in fine there is a foundation of Religion, and a ground of juſtice between God and man: theſe things are moſt evidently, and effectually demonſtrated by extraordinary atteſtations; and when therefore could they more ſeaſonably be uſed, than when God by the Meſſias intended to call all the world to the acknowledgment and obedience of himſelf, to the practice of all piety and goodneſs, with aſſurances of fit reward, in regard to ſuch practice? If farther to excite mens attention and regard, to breed awe and reverence in mens minds, to confound the impudence, and to bend or break the obſtinacy of men are main ends, and proper effects of ſuch teſtimonies; whether we conſider the Meſſias his perſon, the nature of his undertaking, or the perſons with whom he was to deal, 'tis plain (as we have ſhewed) that his buſineſs would beſt deſerve, and moſt need them: no diſpenſation could better deſerve them for worth and conſequence; none could more need them for greatneſs and difficulty.

Such reaſons may be aſſigned for the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of divine atteſtations in this caſe: but in oppoſition to theſe diſcourſes, and in derogation to this way of confirming any truth or authority, it may be ſaid, that no ſuch teſtifications can well ſerve to ſuch purpoſes; for that the like have been, and may be applied to the perſuaſion of errour and impiety by falſe Prophets, and Antichriſts; by Magicians, and Wiſards; who not only have cunningly counterfeited, but really executed very prodigious and wondrous things, in a manner unaccountable to humane Philoſophy. Since alſo there are wicked ſpirits, in ſubtilty and power far exceeding us, who are able eaſily to divert the natural courſe of things; and the limits of whoſe power in working ſo, it is hard for us to diſcern or define; how can we be aſſured, that what is done in this kind, doth not

Deut. 13. 30.
Matt. 24. 24.
2 Theſ. 2. 2.

Πῶς οὖν οὐ σχέτλιον ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν ἔργων τὸν μὲν θεὸν, τοὺς δὲ γόητας ἡγεῖσθαι; —— Celſ. apud Orig. lib. 2. (p. 89.)

not proceed from them, but from a virtue divine? how can it be a certain and convincing argument of truth? may we not here object that of Tertullian, ſaying, that Our Lord pronouncing that many impoſtors ſhould come, and do miracles, ſhewed thereby the faith grounded on miracles to be temerarious.

Siquidem edicens multos venturos, & ſigna facturos, temerariam planè ſignorum, & virtutam fidem oſtendit, ut apud Pſeudo-Chriſtianos facillimarum. Tert. in Marc. 3. 2.

To this ſuggeſtion we may in general return, that ſeeing the doing ſuch things is the chief and moſt effectual way, whereby God beyond the reſiſtence of doubt or diſpute can in ſome caſes aſſure us concerning his mind, and will (whereby he can beſtow honour and credit to any inſtrument employed by him, to any revelation proceeding from him) it cannot but (notwithſtanding that croſs inſtance) reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that God however doth reſerve the power thereof in ſome eminent and diſcernible manner peculiar to himſelf, for the promoting his own ſervice. That alſo at leaſt God, being the author and eſtabliſher of nature, and the continual ſuſtainer of it by his free providence, it is not likely, that he will ſuffer the laws and courſe thereof to be much violated, except upon occaſions very conſiderable, and for very good purpoſes; no inferior cauſe being able to determine his voluntary influence, or providential concourſe to the accompliſhment of deſigns contrary to his will and purpoſe. That alſo the natural goodneſs and juſtice of God, the conſtant care and providence he exerciſeth over this world, the particular relations he beareth toward mankind (as the Maker and Father, the Lord and Governor thereof) the honour and intereſt of truth, of religion, of virtue (whoſe Protector and Patron he is, and declareth himſelf) the neceſſary regard he alſo, in connexion with the reſt, doth bear to his own honour and glory do all conſpire to perſuade, that God will never endure ſuch things to be performed in any high manner, ſo that good and well meaning people ſhall be very liable to be thereby extremely ſeduced into error; or that himſelf ſhall be intolerably mocked by the enemies of his glory, and our good. This may ſerve to render it probable, that the objection is capable of a ſolution.

Aug. de Civ. Dei 10. 16.

But to anſwer more diſtinctly and particularly; we do grant, that God ſometimes for ſpecial reaſons (for wiſe probation of ſome perſons, and juſt puniſhment of others; for to approve ſome mens ſincerity and conſtancy, to detect other mens naughtineſs and vanity) may permit ſuch things (in ſome manner, in ſome degree ſuch) to be effected by the influence of wicked ſpirits, or the fraud of wicked men; yet then it will never be very hard for moderately wiſe, and well diſpoſed perſons to diſtinguiſh ſuch feats from thoſe acts, which iſſue from the poſitive and direct efficacy of God, for authorizing his meſſengers, and confirming his truth: We may uſually diſcern them to come from bad cauſes by their nature; we may certainly detect them by their deſign and influence.

1 Cor. 11 19.
2 Theſſ. 2. 9, 11.
Deut. 13. 1, &c.
Matt. 24. 24.
Apoc. 13. 13.

There are ſome things ſo great, that it is not reaſonable to conceive, that any ſuch inferior power is able to do them; or if they were able, that God ſhould permit their power actually to be exerted, and to ſucceed in doing them: ſuch is the making any general or grand alteration in the courſe of nature; which being God's great work and eſtabliſhment, the which he doth (as the Prophets ſpeak) govern by a ſtanding law, and preſerve according to a perpetual decree, which cannot paſs; yea according to a Covenant, which his faithfulneſs is in a manner engaged to obſerve; it is not probable that he will ſuffer any creature to diſturb or diſorder: this experience well confirmeth, for had bad ſpirits

Jer. 5. 22.
33. 25.
Pſal. 148. 26.

a power of croſſing nature ſo, ſuch is their malice and proneneſs to do miſchief, that the world would ſoon have been turned by them into confuſion and ruin; that all things therein go in ſo kindly and ſteady a courſe, is an argument of their ſmall power and influence upon things; that God holdeth the reigns faſt in his own hands, reſerving to himſelf only as Lord paramount of Nature a power to diſpenſe with any of its main Pſal. 136. 4. 72. 18. 86. 10. Deut. 3. 24. laws; that it is he alone, who (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) doeth great wonders.
There are alſo ſome things, which although not of ſo great and general conſequence, are yet of ſo difficult performance, that it is improbable any creature ſhould effect them; ſuch was the turning of duſt into lice, which the Devils could not enable the Egyptian ſorcerers to perform;
to prepare or diſpoſe ſo much duſt for the reception of ſouls, and to furniſh ſo many ſouls for the duſt did it ſeems exceed their ability; whence Exod. 8. 19. they were forced to confeſs of that miracle done by Moſes; This is the finger of God.

There are alſo things ſo good, and ſo beneficial to mankind, that evil ſpirits may be deemed unable to do them (God the fountain of good retaining them as inſtruments of his glory, and arguments of his goodneſs, to his own diſpenſation) which alſo we may preſume they would not be willing, were they able, to perform, it being againſt their diſpoſition, or their intereſt to do it; ſuch are to diſpoſſeſs Devils (that is to divide and weaken their own Kingdom) to diſcover moral truths of conſequence (that is to drive men from themſelves) and even to free men from grievous diſeaſes (that is, to ſtarve their own ἐπιχαιρεκακία, and malignity) as is implied in that paſſage of the Goſpel; where it is John 10. 21. ſaid, Theſe are not the words of him that hath a devil; can a devil open the eyes of the blind? Extraordinary works then if they are very great, very hard, very good, do thence indicate their cauſe to be divine: wicked ſpirits deal only in petty, low and uſeleſs preſtigiatory tricks, of ſmall conſequence, and no benefit.

But there are farther ſome things infallibly ſignifying a divine virtue, peculiar to God, and (either by their nature, or from the decree of God) incommunicable to any creature, otherwiſe than as acted by God, or immediately depending on him; ſuch are, the knowledge of future contingent events declared by predicting, or preſignifying them, according Iſa. 41. 23. to that of the Prophet; Shew (ſaid he, in way of challenge, and conviction to the objects of Heathen worſhip) the things to come, that we may know ye are Gods; ſuch is the diſcerning mens ſecret thoughts Jer. 17. 10. 11. 20. 20. 12. and intentions, the which God aſſumeth as proper to himſelf; I the 1 Chron. 28. 9. Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins; ſo that καρδιογνώστης is a characteriſtical
1 Sam. 16. 7. attribute, or title proper to him. Such is the reſtitution of Pſalm 7. 9. men from a ſtate of death to life; a work not only in it ſelf moſt difficult, Acts 1. 24; 15. 8. in reſpect to the ordinary rule of nature, which it tranſgreſſeth, but impoſſible to any mere creature, without God's aid; for that the ſouls of men when they die return into God's hand, and enter into a ſtate determined by his high ſentence; whence no creature can fetch them down, or raiſe them up; moſt impoſſible alſo becauſe God by eſpecial degree hath reſerved the power of doing it appropriate to himſelf; Deut. 32. 39. the power of life and death being his prerogative, who ſaith, *I am he,
and there is no God * beſide me*; I kill, and I make alive, of whom again
* Πλὴν ἐμοῦ.
1 Sam. 2. 6. it is ſaid, The Lord killeth, and maketh alive; he bringeth down to the Apoc. 1. 18. grave, and bringeth up: He it is, that in his hand doth hold the keys of hell, and of death. The performing things alſo by mere word and will, without application of other force, or any preparation of the ſubject matter

matter (being equivalent to the work of creation) is peculiar unto God, the author of all being, or to ſuch as act by the immediate help of his infinite power.

We may add, that there alſo ſeem to be ſome things, which infernal ſpirits (who continue under reſtraint and command, within a great awe and dread of their Judge) dare not ſo much as pretend to, or counterfeit; knowing that as preſently they ſhall be checked in their attempt, ſo they ſhall be grievouſly chaſtiſed for their preſumptions; ſuch may be the aſſuming to themſelves the ſpecial names of God, the directly withſtanding the extraordinary meſſengers of God, and the like.

Matt. 8. 29.
Mark 1. 24.
Luc. 8. 28.

So even conſidering the very nature of ſtrange works may enable us to diſtinguiſh them; but the end and deſign of ſuch works, together with the influences and effects of them will farther aſcertain us of their original: If they are done to abett any groſs error, or to promote any miſchievous purpoſe; if they manifeſtly do ſeduce to Apoſtaſy from God or goodneſs, if they naturally tend to the production of impiety, iniquity or impurity; if they do neceſſarily produce any great diſorder or diſturbance in the world, aſſuredly hell is the ſource of them; they derive from him, whoſe Kingdom and intereſt they advance; by their fruits we may know the tree from which they grow. If alſo they diſcover oſtentation and vanity in the actors, or ſerve only to gratify idle humour and curioſity in the ſpectators of them, tending otherwiſe to no good purpoſe; it is eaſy to collect whence they ſpring; that they come from the father both of miſchiefs and vanities, who not only delights to abuſe us with villanies, but to amuſe us alſo with trifles, and fond ſuperſtitions.

As (ſaith Origen) the power of thoſe enchantments in Egypt was not (in it ſelf) like to that admirable power by God's grace vouchſafed to Moſes; ſo the end did convince thoſe Egyptian feats to be juglings, thoſe of Moſes to be divine. The portentous things done by the energy of Satan are (as S. Paul calleth them) τέρατα ψεύδους, either falſe prodigies, or prodigies abetting falſhood and vanity.

Ὡς γὰρ οὐχ ὁμοία δύναμις ἡ τῶν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ἐπαοιδῶν τῇ ἐν τῷ Μωυσῇ παραδόξῳ χάριτι, ἀλλὰ τὸ τέλος διήλεγχε τὰ μὲν τῶν Αἰγυπτίων ὄντα μαγγανείας. Orig. in Celſ. 2.

2 Theſſ. 2. 9.

But the works of the moſt wiſe and good God, as they are commonly works of wonderful majeſty and grandeur, incomparable and inimitable for difficulty; ſo they always are holy, always uſeful; they ever aim at good ends, and produce wholſome fruits; hence we may diſcern them, and hence we are obliged to acknowledge them; they afford us ground to ſay with the Pſalmiſt; Unto thee, O Lord, we do give thanks, for that thy name is near, thy wondrous works declare. Such works as they can only be effects of God's power, ſo they are arguments of his truth; for that he cannot lend his hand, for that he will not proſtitute his aſſiſtance to the maintenance of any thing, which is not perfectly true and good; he will not ſo tempt any man into error; If I by the finger of God caſt out Devils, then indeed is the Kingdom of God come unto you (that is, If I perform works by the divine power, then aſſuredly is my doctrine true) was an irrefragable argument.

Pſalm 75. 1.

James 1. 13.
Luke 11. 20.

We may alſo obſerve, that thoſe wicked ſpirits are themſelves apprehenſive how eaſily their feats are diſtinguiſhed from the works of God; for, hence it ſeems they choſe to utter them clancularly, in obſcure corners, in blind times, among barbarous and ſilly people; judging that perſons of any wiſdom or goodneſs will be ſoon able to detect them, and ready to explode them; a little light dazles the powers of darkneſs, and ſcares away theſe ſpectres; a little goodneſs mates their force, enfeebleth and diſheartenEth them.

We may alſo add that the Meſſias his works by a peculiar character ſhould be manifeſtly diſtinguiſhable from ſuch as proceeded from infernal powers; for that it ſhould be his buſineſs to impugn, defeat and overthrow the Devil's kingdom; all the falſhoods and ſuperſtitions, all the immoralities and impieties which it conſiſted in, or which ſupported it: to this end all his doctrine, practice and performances would conſpiringly tend, that Satan like lightening ſhould be thrown down from heaven; which moſt evidently would evince, that what he ſhould do ſhould only come from heaven.

Luke 10. 18.

Having thus ſhewed reaſons why, and ſignified to what purpoſes the Meſſias was to receive ſpecial teſtimonies from God; let us now ſurvey thoſe, which were indeed by him exhibited to Jeſus our Lord. There is indeed no kind or degree of atteſtation needful or proper, which hath not been largely from heaven afforded to him. God (ſo our Lord argueth) is in his own nature inviſible, and indiſcernible to any ſenſe of ours; neither could we endure the luſtre of his immediate preſence (No man ever ſaw God, or can ſee him; there ſhall no man ſee him, and live.) It muſt be therefore by mediation of ſigns, and works ſupernatural; the cauſing of which can only be imputed to him, as beyond the power of any creature to effect, or counterfeit; that he can aſſuredly ſignify his mind unto us; ſuch only in approbation of any Perſon, Law or Doctrine can be expected from him; and ſuch in divers kinds, and in great meaſures God hath, we ſay, furniſhed for the authorizing Jeſus.

John 5.36,37.
1 Tim. 6. 16.
Exod. 33. 20.

1. God did atteſt to him long before his coming into the world, by preſignifying and predicting concerning him, at ſeveral times, in ſeveral ways, by ſeveral perſons (even by all the Prophets, and eminent Perſons among his People of old) many things, even all things conſiderable about him; in exact congruity to the circumſtances of his coming into the world (the time when, the place where, the Family whence, the manner how, the condition in which he was born) to the qualities of his Perſon, to the doctrine and law which he publiſhed, to all his undertakings, and performances, and ſufferings, and to the ſucceſſes conſequent upon what he did. (This is a matter of very large conſideration; which otherwhile we have inſiſted largely upon, and therefore ſhall now wave enlargement on it.)

2. God did in atteſtation to him immediately ſend before his face as his herald and harbinger a Prophet (or one for his admirable wiſdom and ſanctity of life ſomewhat more than a Prophet; who indeed without doing any miracle, by the prodigious integrity and ſtrictneſs of his life, by the wonderful efficacy of his doctrine and diſcourſe procured unto himſelf a reputation equalling or exceeding that of any former Prophet; (whom even Joſephus, an indifferent Hiſtorian, reporteth a man of ſingular goodneſs, and great authority) to prediſpoſe the minds of men to receive him; by converting men to a ſerious reflection upon their lives, and amendment of their manners to prepare his way; as alſo to point him out, to foretel of him as preſently coming, to teſtify of him as being come. This was he, to whom it well agreed, and who plainly did aſſume to himſelf that which was written by Malachy: Behold I ſend my angel before thy face, who ſhall prepare thy way before thee; of whom Eſay (John himſelf being the avoucher and interpreter) ſaid, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtreight; who was, as Malachy did again ſignify, to come in the ſpirit, and power of Elias to convert the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt; to make ready a people

Matt. 11. 10.
John 10. 41.
Mal. 1. 3.
Matt. 11. 10.
Iſa. 40. 3.
John 1. 23.
Mal. 4. 6.
Luke 1. 17.

ple prepared for the Lord. This moſt extraordinary and excellent Perſon Joh. 1. 26.
did at ſeveral times and occaſions atteſt unto Jeſus, not only that 15. 29, 34.
he was incomparably for the dignity of his Perſon, and worth of his per- Matt. 3. 11.
formances to be preferred before himſelf, and conſequently before all Luk. 3. 16.
other Prophets, but that he was the very Chriſt, the lamb of God, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world: they ſent to John, ſaith the Text, Joh. 5. 33. and he bare witneſs of the truth. God by him alſo foretold divers things concerning our Lord, which did really come to paſs; as thoſe words; uttered occaſionally by many perſons, do imply: John indeed did do no Joh. 10. 41.
miracle; but all things which John ſpake of this man were true.

3. God atteſted unto our Lord by viſible apparitions from heaven, at ſeveral times, in fit ſeaſons, made in the ſight and preſence of very good witneſſes: Angels appearing warned his good Father, and bleſſed Mo- Matt. 1. 20, 24.
ther concerning the time and manner of his coming into the world; Luk. 1. 26.
Angels again appearing uttered tidings of his birth, joined with acclamations of praiſe to God, and gratulations of joy to men; Angels were Luk. 2. 9, &c. vigilant for his ſafety, miniſtred unto him in his temptations and needs, Matt. 2. 13.
aſſiſted and comforted him in the agonies of his paſſion, waited upon him at his reſurrection: an extraordinary Star (like that of the morn- Matt. 4. 11.
ing before the Sun) officiouſly did uſher him into the world; at his Luk. 22. 43.
baptiſm the Holy Ghoſt (in the ſymbolical figure of a Dove) appeared deſcending, and reſting upon him, in the preſence of S. John the Baptiſt Matt. 3. 17.
(that moſt juſt and holy perſon, ſo taken and acknowledged by all men, Luc. 3. 22.
even by his enemies and murtherers; and a moſt competent witneſs, as who dared with utmoſt peril before the greateſt perſons to aſſert the truth, (He teſtified thereof, and ſaid, I ſaw the ſpirit of God deſcending Joh. 1. 31. from heaven as a Dove, and reſting upon him. Moſes and Elias alſo (thoſe moſt eminent inſtruments of God, and illuſtrious repreſentatives of the Meſſias) did from heaven in a moſt glorious and ſplendid manner attend upon him, in the preſence of three moſt credible witneſſes, Peter, James Matt. 17. 5.
and John the Apoſtles; one of whom doth himſelf thus, with the due Luc. 9. 28, 31.
confidence of an eye-witneſs, report the fact: For we have not followed 2 Pet. 1.
cunningly deviſed fables, when we made known unto you the power and pre-ſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were ſpectatours of his Majeſty — being with him in the holy mountain.

4. God alſo by vocal atteſtation did expreſly at ſeveral times own and approve Jeſus: at his Baptiſm in the audience of S. John the Baptiſt, and others preſent there: when, Behold there was a voice from heaven ſaying, Matt. 3. 17.
This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; the like heavenly voice Luc. 3. 22.
was heard at the transfiguration; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well Mar. 17. 5. pleaſed, hear him: So the Goſpels report it; and thus S. Peter himſelf, a Luc. 9. 35. Mar. 9. 7.
more immediate witneſs and attendant there; He received from God the 2 Pet. 1. 17.
Father honour and glory, a voice being brought unto him from the magnificent glory; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; and this voice, which came from heaven we heard, being with him in the holy mount. Again, a little before his death, in preſence of a multitude, upon Jeſus his prayer, that God would by him glorify his name, an audible return was made from heaven: There came (ſaith the Text) a voice Joh. 12. 28.
from heaven, (ſaying) I have both glorified it, and will again glorify it.

5. God atteſted to our Lord in that he was endewed with a power conſtantly reſident in him, of performing miraculous works, for nature and quality ſuch, as could only proceed from a moſt divine power; not only thwarting the courſe of nature, but tranſcending the ſtrength of any creature, and eſpecially contrary to what any evil creature could, or would perform; this was a teſtimony beyond any humane teſtimony, Joh. 5. 36. 10. 25. 10. 38. 14. 11. and which our Lord inſiſted upon as ſuch: I (ſaith he) have a greater teſtimony than that of John, for the works, which the Father hath granted me, that I ſhould perform them, thoſe very works, which I doe, they teſtify about me, that the Father hath ſent me.

Works indeed he performed of a ſtupendious greatneſs and difficulty; all the creatures (the moſt unruly and boiſterous, the moſt malignant and rebellious) beſide their natures, and againſt their wills did obey his commands; In a tempeſt he aroſe and rebuked the winds, and the ſea, and Matt. 8. 25. Luc. 8. 25. there became a great calm, ſo that men did marvel, ſaying, what manner Matt. 14. 26. of man in this, for even the winds and the ſea obey him? the ſea ſtood firm Joh. 6. 19. for him and S. Peter to walk upon; Joh. 2. 9. he turned water into good wine; Joh. 4. 52. 9. 1. he unconceivably ſo improved a few loaves and little fiſhes as to feed and Mat. 8. 6. 9. 2, 20, 32. 8. 3. 12. 12. 15. 30. 20. 34. Mar. 9. 5. ſatisfy multitudes, leaving more behind, than there was at firſt; he cured the moſt incurable diſeaſes, inveterate palſies, fluxes of blood, and leproſies; he reſtored ſenſes, and limbs wanting from the birth, or for a long time; innumerable perſons blind, deaf, dumb, lame and maimed he reſtored to the uſe of their faculties, and members reſpectively, without any medicinal applications, or any natural means conducible to thoſe purpoſes; he reſtored lunatick perſons to their right wits, and diſpoſſeſſed evil ſpirits, they not daring to diſobey him, and acknowledg- Matt. 17. 5. Mar. 1. 27. ing his uncontrollable authority: They were (ſaith the Text) amazed, inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves ſaying; What thing is this? what new doctrine is this; for with authority he commandeth even the unclean ſpirits, and they do obey him. Theſe were indeed works of exceſſive grandeur and difficulty, but he did others far more great and hard, and theſe were greater for the manner of performing them, than in their own nature; he did other acts ſo great, that they were only to be done by an infinite power; and moſt of theſe he performed in a manner which argued omnipotency preſent with the doer.

Works proper unto God he did many; ſuch was diſcerning the Matt. 9. 4. 12. 25. 22. 18. thoughts, reaſonings, opinions and purpoſes of men, however concealed or diſguiſed, whereof we have many inſtances; and his intimate acquain- Luc. 11. 17. 6. 8. tance, S. John, teſtifies of him generally, ſaying, He needed not that any Joh. 2. 25. ſhould witneſs about a man, for he knew himſelf what was in man. Such was alſo to forgive ſins (a privilege only belonging to the ſupreme Lord, and Law-giver, againſt whom ſin is committed) the which he aſſumed to himſelf, and irreprovably maintained it by exerting a power Matt. 9. 5. equivalent thereto: For whether (ſaid he) is it eaſier to ſay, thy ſins be forgiven thee, or to ſay, ariſe and walk? but that you may know, that the ſon of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins: Then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſy, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go to thine houſe; and he aroſe, and Matt. 17. 12. departed to his houſe: Such it was likewiſe to foretell future contingen- 16. 21. 20. 17. cies; this he often did; as concerning his own paſſion and reſurrection, 24. 2, 9. 10. 17. 28. 20. with all the circumſtances of them; particularly the treaſon of Judas; Luc. 24. 27, 29. Joh. 6. 64. (He knew, ſaith S. John, from the beginning who they were that did not believe, and who it was that ſhould betray him.) Concerning S. Peter's lapſe, repentance and ſuffering; concerning the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and utter demoliſhment of the temple; concerning the perſecutions which his diſciples ſhould undergo; concerning the communication of the Holy Ghoſt after his deceaſe, and the propagation of the Goſpel Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 61. p. 634. 638. in the world: Such was the foundation of the Church upon a rock, againſt which the gates of hell ſhould not prevail: Such again it was to Matt. 9. 25. raiſe the dead, which he often performed; he raiſed the Ruler's daughter ter, and the Widows ſon of Naim, and his friend Lazarus, and The dead Luc. 7. 12. are raiſed, is reckoned among the ordinary miracles done by him, in Joh. 11. 1, &c. the anſwer to S. John the Baptiſt's diſciples: Theſe were acts of divine Luc. 7. 22. power, which no creature, unaſſiſted by God, could perform.

And conſidering the manner of performance ſuch were both theſe, and moſt of the reſt; they in that reſpect emulating God's inimitable work of creation, and in a manner ſeeming to exceed it; for that it ſeemeth harder to produce things out of matter indiſpoſed and repugnant, than to bring them out of mere nothing; as God by mere word and will created things, when He ſpake, and it was done, he commanded Pſal. 33. 9. and it ſtood faſt; ſo did Jeſus in like manner by the efficacy of his command, or by actions equipollent thereto, without prediſpoſing the ſubjacent matter, or uſing any natural inſtrument, accompliſh his great and ſtrange works: He rebuked the wind, and ſaid to the ſea, peace, be Mark 4. 39. ſtill; ſo he quelled the ſtorm: I will, be thou cleanſed; ſo he cured the Luc. 5. 12. leper: Young man, I ſay unto thee, ariſe; ſo he revived the widows ſon: Luc. 7. 14. O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee, as thou deſireſt; ſo he cured Matt. 15. 28. the Canaanitiſh womans poſſeſſed daughter: He cried out, Lazarus, come forth; καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ὁ τεθνηκὼς, ſo the dead man heard his voice, and pre- Joh. 11. 43. ſently came forth out of the grave: He ſaid ephatha, be opened, to the Mar. 7. 34. deaf man's ears; they immediately heard, and obeyed: he ſaid but one word, ἀνάβλεψον, ſee again, to the blind man; καὶ παραχρῆμα ἀνέβλεψε, and without more adoe he ſaw again: he did but chide the great fever, Luc. 4. 39. with which S. Peter's mother-in-law was troubled, and it left her: he Matt. 9. 25. did but take the Ruler's daughter by the hand and, the girl revived, Matt. 9. 29. and roſe up: he only touched the two blind mens eyes, and ſo their Luc. 8. 43, 47. ſight was reſtored: the woman, who had a flux of blood for 12 years, Matt. 9. 22. did but touch him, καὶ ἰάθη παραχρῆμα, and ſhe thereupon ipſo facto, inſtantly was healed: Yea multitudes of ſick perſons together did only endeavour to touch the hem of his garment, and as many as touched it were Matt. 14. 26. Luc. 6. 19. healed; there went virtue out of him, and healed them all. When he uſed any thing like means, he (as S. Chryſoſtome obſerveth) proceeded in Chryſ. in 1 Cor. 1. 22. ways not only preternatural, but contrary to nature; as when he cured the blind man in S. John's Goſpel, anointing his eyes with clay and Joh. 9. ſpittle: διὰ πράγματος ἐπιτείνοντος τὴν πήρωσιν, ἀνεῖλε· by a thing apt to encreaſe (or ſtrengthen) blindneſs he took it away. So great in nature, ſo high for manner of performance were the works of our Lord; they plainly were either the works, or they were done in the way of omnipotency.

They had alſo no leſs of goodneſs, than of greatneſs, divine; they were all of them plainly works of piety, or works of charity and pity; of a holy nature, and beneficial uſe; they were generally performed upon evidently reaſonable occaſions, or needs; for the ſuccour and comfort of perſons in ſome want or diſtreſs; or for inſtruction of the minds, and reformation of the manners of men; for healing the ſick, feeding the hungry, eaſing the afflicted, reſtoring men to their ſenſes, freeing them from the Devil's tyranny; for helping men in diſappointment and need, or for encouraging kindneſs and good neighbourhood among people (to which purpoſe his firſt miracle done at Cana ſerved) for inſtilling Joh. 2. 3. or impreſſing ſome wholſome truth, as when the fig-tree withered at his Matt. 21. 19. command; for encouraging dutifull ſubmiſſion to Governours; as when Matt. 17. 27. the fiſh was brought up with a piece of money in his mouth, furniſhing him and S. Peter to pay tribute: In fine, the nature and importance of his works, S. Peter thus well expreſſed, ſaying of him; Ὃς διῆλθεν εὐ-

εργετῶν,

Act. 10. 38. εργετῶν, Who went about doing good (or benefiting men) and healing all that were oppreſſed by the Devil; for God was with him: and the Evangeliſt thus; Matt. 9. 35. 4. 23. 15. 30. Jeſus went about all the cities, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people.

Conſidering which things, we may well diſcern by what power, and to what purpoſe Jeſus did perform his admirable works; and may repel from our hearts all the cavils or calumnies forged by malicious and vain wits (ſuch as thoſe of Celſus and Julian) in derogation to them; we may particularly perceive how impudently falſe that ſuggeſtion was of the Apoſtate Emperour: who ſaid that Jeſus, while he lived did nothing worthy hearing, except one ſuppoſe to heal cripples, and blind folk, and to exorciſe Demoniacks in the villages Bethſaida, and Bethany, to be great works: in oppoſition to which kind of ſuggeſtion, and for abundant confirmation of our purpoſe, we may conſider ſome advantageous circumſtances, and concomitances of our Lord's performances.

Ἐργασάμενος παρ' ὃν ἔζη χρόνον οὐδὲν ἀκοῆς ἄξιον, εἰ μή τις οἴεται τοὺς κυλλοὺς, καὶ κωφοὺς ἰᾶσθαι καὶ τοὺς δαιμονῶντας ἐξορκίζειν ἐν Βεθσαϊδᾷ, καὶ ἐν Βηθανίᾳ ταῖς κώμαις τῶν μεγίστων ἔργων εἶναι. Cyr. adv. Jul. lib. 6.

They were, we may obſerve, not ſome few things done at one time, or in one place, among friends and partiſans; but innumerably many and frequent (a world of things, more than well could be recited, as Saint Joh. 21. 25. John telleth us) done through a long courſe of time (for ſome years together) in ſeveral places, before all ſorts of people, many of them very Act. 26. 26. ill affected towards him. They were not done clancularly in a blind corner, among rude and ſimple people, but openly and viſibly every where about Judæa, the moſt lightſome place for knowledge and goodneſs in the world; where the beſt worſhip of God moſt flouriſhed, and all Diabolical impoſtures were moſt deteſted, in the places there moſt publick Joh. 18. 20. and conſpicuous; ſo he could affirm and admoniſh them; I ſpake freely to the world, I always taught in the ſynagogues, and in the temple, where the Jews from all places reſort, and in ſecret have I done nothing: they were done ſo apparently, that the people generally ſaw them, and acknowledged them; that ſcarce any man could be ignorant of them; that the moſt learned and conſiderate men took it for granted, that they were done; that adverſaries could not deny the performance of them, although out of envy and ill-will they were ready to impute it to the worſt cauſes deviſable; that many of all ſorts were convinced, and divers converted by them: as for the people, Great multitudes (ſaith Matt. 15. 30. S. Matthew, one preſent, and a follower of our Lord) came unto him, having with them thoſe that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and caſt them down at Jeſus his feet, and he healed them; inſomuch that the multitude wondred, when they ſaw the dumb to ſpeak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to ſee, and they glorified the God of Iſrael: and, The people marvelled, ſaying, It was never ſo ſeen in Matt. 9. 32. Iſrael; but the Phariſees ſaid, He caſteth out Devils by the Prince of the Devils: the matter of fact they could not offer, againſt conviction of ſenſe, to queſtion, but malice prompted perverſly, and fooliſhly to aſſign a bad cauſe thereof; the matter was ſo notorious, that S. Peter Act. 2. 22. ἀποδεδειγμένος. could thus confidently appeal to the whole Nation: Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved (or demonſtrated) unto you by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns which God did by him in the midſt of you; as you your ſelves know. The adverſaries (ſuch whom ſuperſtitious prejudices, obſtinate humors, or corrupt affections, envy, pride, ambition, avarice, or the like, had made adverſaries to him) did not only ſee the thing, but were affrighted with its conſequence: The chief Prieſts ('tis ſaid) and the Phariſees gathered a counſel together, and ſaid; What ſhall we do, for this man doeth many wonders? if we let him alone, all men will believe on him: Yes indeed notwithſtanding all this watchful caution, and fine policy of theirs, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition and diſcouragement they could interpoſe, all their ſtruglings to ſmother his credit and doctrine, many were in their hearts convinced, even divers of ſuch as were unwilling to believe; and aſhamed, or afraid to avow their perſwaſion: Alſo ('tis ſaid again) of the rulers many believed on him; but becauſe of the Phariſees they did not confeſs it, leſt they ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue: Nicodemus, an honeſt and ingenuous perſon, a man of honour, (but ſomewhat wary and timorous) came ſecretly, and in the name (it ſeemeth) of many perſons alike diſpoſed with himſelf thus ſpake: Rabbi, we know that thou haſt come a teacher from God; for no man can do thoſe things which thou doeſt, except God be with him: As for the generality of the people (the moſt unconcerned in ſuch caſes as to point of honour and intereſt, and thence the moſt impartial and ſincere party) they following their ſenſes were greatly affected, and aſtoniſhed with what he did; taking him for a very extraordinary perſon; ſome in a groſs and confuſed manner, others in a more diſtinct way of belief: Some ſaid he was John the Baptiſt, others that he was Elias; others Jeremias or one of the ancient Prophets riſen up again; but many of the people (more fully and exactly) believed on him, ſaying; when Chriſt cometh will he do more miracles than this man hath done?

John 11. 47.
John 12. 42.
John 3. 2.
Mark 16. 14.
Luc. 9. 19.
John 7. 31.
2. 23.

We may alſo obſerve, that Jeſus did not affect to perform wonders out of vanity, or to humour mens curioſity, but always upon inducements of piety and charity: moſt of them were performed occaſionally at the deſire of men, ſuggeſted by their needs; and all of them for their edification or comfort: that he therefore did not ſeek by them to acquire reputation, or applauſe to himſelf; nor by them deſigned to advance any private intereſt of his own, but ſingly aimed at the promotion of God's glory in them all: that in effect no ſecular advantage of dignity, or wealth, or pleaſure did from them accrue to himſelf; but rather diſgrace and obloquy, hatred and enmity, trouble and pain did from them befal him; all the glory of them purely coming to God, and all the benefit to men. As he charged his diſciples, ſo he practiſed himſelf, doing all gratis, and freely without expecting or accepting any requital. He often ſtudiouſly concealed his miracles, forbidding thoſe who were concerned in them, or conſcious of them to publiſh them; ſo ſtriving to decline, or to ſtifle the honour, naturally emergent from them. When it was neceſſary or expedient they ſhould appear, he diſclaimed being the principal author of them, referring and aſcribing them to God: I can (ſaid he) do nothing of my ſelf; and, The word that I ſpeak to you I ſpeak not of my ſelf; but the Father who abides in me, he doeth the works: and, I ſeek not mine own glory; I receive not glory of men; thus he profeſſed, and ſo he practiſed: conſequently the effect was, that (as it is expreſſed in the Goſpels) Fear, or a pious reverence, did ſeize all men; and they glorified God, ſaying that a great Prophet is riſen up among us, and that God hath viſited his people: All the people ſeeing it gave praiſe to God: All men were amazed at the mighty power (or majeſty) of God; when the multitude ſaw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given ſuch power unto men; And doth not ſo much glory from his performances reſulting to God, ſo good an influence upon the hearts of men, evidently ſhew, whence the power effecting

Matt. 10. 18.
Matt. 8. 4.
12. 16. 9. 30.
Mark 5. 43.
7. 36, 8. 26.
John 5. 41.
8. 49, 50, 54.
8. 24. 5. 30.
14. 10.
Luc. 7. 16.
9. 43. 18. 43.
Matth. 9. 8.
15. 30.
Ἐπὶ τῇ μεγαλειότητι.

ing them was derived? would the Devil be ſuch an inſtrument of God's praiſe?

Iren. 2. 58. We may alſo with S. Irenæus obſerve, that Jeſus in performing his cures, and other miraculous works, did never uſe any profane, ſilly, phantaſtick ceremonies; any muttering of barbarous names, or inſignificant phraſes; any invocation of ſpirits, or inferior powers; any preparatory purgations, any myſterious circumſtances of proceeding, apt to amuſe people; any ſuch unaccountable methods or inſtruments, as Magicians, Inchanters, Diviners, circulatorious Juglers, and ſuch emiſſaries of the Devil, or ſelf-ſeeking Impoſtors are wont to uſe; but did proceed altogether in a moſt innocent, ſimple and grave manner, with a majeſtick authority and clear ſincerity, becoming ſuch an Agent of God, as he profeſſed himſelf to be.

That alſo the whole tenour of his proceedings was directly levelled againſt the kingdom of darkneſs; againſt all the impiety, all the malice, all the filthineſs, and all the fallacy thereof; at the caſting wicked and impure ſpirits not only from the bodies, but out of the ſouls of men; cauſing men not only to deteſt and defy them, but to loath their qualities, and to eſchew their works: that is that binding, diſarming, rifling Luk. 11. 21. Matt. 12. 29. and diſpoſſeſſing the ſtrong one, which Jeſus alledged as an infallible argument; that he was not only no friend, but a mighty enemy to the infernal powers; an enemy not only in diſpoſition and deſign quite contrary, but in virtue and force highly ſuperior to them: That we ſhould worſhip God alone with moſt hearty reverence and love; that we ſhould bear the ſame clear good will to all men, as we do to our ſelves; that we ſhould be ſtrictly juſt, veracious and ſincere in our words and dealings, meek and humble in our ſpirits, pure and ſober in all our enjoyments (things perfectly oppoſite to the temper and intereſts Tertull. Apol. 23. of hell) were things, which as our Lord conſtantly in his doctrine did inculcate, ſo he countenanced and furthered them by his works; from whence aſſuredly we may collect, that they came from heaven, and were intended for the promoting God's ſervice: Hell would never contribute ſo much to its own diſgrace and diſadvantage, would never ſo induſtriouſly concur to defeat and deſtroy it ſelf; God plainly reaped the benefit by Jeſus his works, he therefore certainly did plant them, and bleſs them.

Upon theſe conſiderations it appeareth ſufficiently, that in correſpondence to the reaſon and exigency of the caſe, our Lord did perform innumerable works, which had impreſſed on them the trueſt and higheſt characters of Divinity; the moſt peculiar grandeur, and perfecteſt goodneſs; the pureſt holineſs of deſign, and the beneficial tendency proper to the works iſſuing from divine power; ſo that ſuppoſing God ſhould ſend the Meſſias into the world, or any great Ambaſſador from himſelf, he could ſcarce poſſibly, he ſhould not at leaſt, all things conſidered, need to furniſh him with more convincing atteſtations, than he hath exhibited to our Lord. Whence we may well apprehend the validity of that argument, which our Lord himſelf ſuggeſted for aſſurance of S. John the Baptiſt in his opinion concerning him, or rather for the ſatisfaction of S. John's Diſciples; when John ſent two of his Diſciples, with this inquiry, Art thou he, or look we for another? Jeſus thus repli- Matt. 11. 5. Luc. 7. 22. ed; Go your way, and tell John what things ye have ſeen, and heard; how that the blind ſee, the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed, to the poor the Goſpel is preached; And bleſſed is he, whoever ſhall not be offended in me.

6. God moſt ſignally did atteſt to our Lord by miraculouſly raiſing him from the dead; or in that by a divine power he raiſed up himſelf from the grave; which work for the ſingular greatneſs, and high conſequence thereof, together with the certain evidence that it was really performed, might alone ſuffice to confirm the verity of all our Lord's pretences; [that he was the true Meſſias, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, the Lord of all things, the Judge of all the world;] moſt efficaciouſly to evince and perſuade the moſt eminent and important parts of his doctrine (the immortality of our ſouls, the reſurrection of our bodies, the juſt and wiſe providence of God over men, the diſpenſation of rewards and puniſhments hereafter, anſwerable to mens converſation and practice in this life.) This indeed is the point, which invincibly guardeth and fortifieth all other teſtimonies; but it is ſo pregnant of conſiderations belonging to it, that it deſerveth more time and room than we now can yield it; wherefore we chuſe rather at preſent to paſs it over than ſlightly to touch it, reſerving it for a peculiar ſubject of diſcourſe.

7. A farther atteſtation was given to our Lord by the power of doing miracles in his name imparted to his Diſciples; who by him were appointed and authorized to proſecute the great deſign commenced by himſelf: not only his Perſon, but even his Name did great wonders; it cured diſeaſes, it caſt out Devils, it ſurmounted nature, and ſubdued hell: whereby he indeed appears for eſpecial favour with God, perſonal excellency, dignity of office, importance of undertaking incomparably to have ſurpaſſed all former Prophets, and commiſſioners of God, by whoſe miniſtry any Law, Covenant or Doctrine hath been conveyed to men; never by delegation, or independence upon any other perſon, never in any other perſon's Name were ſuch works done. To the XII Apoſtles at their firſt miſſion he among other inſtructions injoined thus; Cure the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, caſt out Devils; Ye have freely received, freely give: to the LXX Diſciples, ſent out by himſelf to inſtil the rudiments of his doctrine, and to admoniſh people of his approach, he gave this commiſſion and charge; In any city, into which you enter, heal thoſe which are ſick therein; and ſay unto them, the kingdom of heaven is come near unto you —— he then adds; Behold I give you power to tread upon ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and upon all the power of the enemy; the ſucceſs was, that They returned with joy, ſaying, Lord, even the Devils are ſubject unto us through thy name. At his departure he promiſed and foretold thus: *Theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe; in my name they ſhall caſt out Devils, they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues, they ſhall * take up ſerpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it ſhall not hurt them; they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover*; all which things were abundantly fulfilled; for a liberal communication of divine power was granted to them, enabling them to perform the greateſt works; ſo that (as S. Luke telleth us) By the hands of the Apoſtles many wonders and ſigns were done among the people; the performance of which was ſo notorious, that upon knowledge, and in confidence thereof, There came (ſaith the holy Hiſtorian) a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jeruſalem, bringing ſick folkes, and them which were vexed with unclean ſpirits, and they were healed every one. * The like power alſo was by the Apoſtles derived unto others, in ſuch kind and meaſure, as the carrying on Jeſus his great deſign (the propagation of God's truth, and the edification of his Church) did require; by ſucceſſion it was tranſmitted through ſeveral ages, and viſibly continued ſo long, as ſuch extraordinary means Omnis hæc noſtra in illos dominatio & poteſtas de Chriſti nominatione valet, &c. Tertul. Apol. 23.

Acts 3. 16.

Matth. 10. 8.

Luc. 10. 9, 1[illegible]

Luc. 10. 17.

Mark 16. 1[illegible]

* Ἀροῦσι.

Acts 2. 4.

Acts 2. 43.

5. 12.

Acts 8. 17.

* Heb. 2. 4.

Rom. 15. 18.

were

were uſeful or expedient for the conviction and converſion of the world; Moſt of the firſt Fathers of the Church do expreſly teſtify concerning remainders thereof in their times: Iren. 2. 48. It is not poſſible (ſaith S. Irenæus for one inſtance, among others innumerable) to tell the number of the graces (or ſpecial gifts) which the Church through the whole world receiving from God doth in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, crucified under Pontius Pilate, daily perform for the ſuccour of the nations, &c. And remarkable is the confidence of Tertullian, reporting the effects of this power in his time: he in his Apologetick ſpeech for the Chriſtians even dares to provoke the Ethnick Governors to trial, and to lay the iſſue concerning not only the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, but the lives and ſafety of its profeſſors thereon; Tertull. Apol. 23. Let, ſaith he, any perſon, manifeſtly poſſeſſed with the Devil, or one who is deemed to be rapt with a divine fury, be ſet before your tribunals; that ſpirit, being commanded by a Chriſtian to ſpeak, ſhall as truly there confeſs himſelf to be a Devil, as otherwhere a God -- If he do not ſo confeſs, not daring to lye, even there ſpill the blood of that procacious Chriſtian: What (adds he) is more manifeſt, than that work? what more faithful than that probation? Stand not to theſe ſayings, if your eyes and ears will ſuffer you. The like aſſertions and challenges might be produced out of divers other Fathers.

Τῆς δυνάμεως τῶν σημείων οὐδ᾽ ἴχνος ὑπολέλειπται. Chryſ. de Sacerd. 4. in Joh. Or. 24. in Pſalm 142. Aug. de Bapt. 3. 16. Retract. 1. 13. Iſa. 59. 1. 50. 2.

Neither perhaps is the communication of this divine virtue ſo ceaſed now, that it would be wanting upon any needful occaſion; the frequent performance of ſuch works among them in whom faith by abundance of other competent means may be produced and confirmed, unto whom alſo the firſt miracles are virtually preſent by the help of hiſtory and good reaſon, is indeed no-wiſe neceſſary, nor perhaps would be convenient; but did the ſame pious zeal for God's honour, and the ſame charitable earneſtneſs for mens good excite any perſons now to attempt the converſion of Infidels to the ſincere Chriſtian truth, I ſee no reaſon to doubt, but that ſuch perſons would be enabled to perform whatever miraculous works ſhould conduce to that purpoſe; for the Lord's hand is not ſhortned, the grace of Chriſt is not ſtraitned, the name of Jeſus hath not loſt its virtue.

The ſpirit of God doth atteſt to him. John 15. 26. Acts 5. 32. 1 John 5. 7, 8. 1 Cor. 12. * Acts 10. 45.

8. God did atteſt to our Lord by accompiſhing his prediction and promiſe, in a plentiful * effuſion of the divine ſpirit upon his Church and Diſciples, for their perfect inſtruction and guidance, for their ſupport and comfort, for enabling them to convince and convert men to him; John 15. 26. 1 John 5. 7, 8. When (ſaid our Lord to them before his deceaſe, concerning this atteſtation) the comforter is come, whom I will ſend to you from my Father, even the ſpirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtify of me: Luc. 24. 49. Acts 1. 4. 2. 33. and, Tarry ye (ſaid he again, after his reſurrection) in the city of Jeruſalem, until ye be endewed with power from on high.

Acts 4. 31. 8. 17. 10. 44. 11. 15. 13. 52. 19. 6. 1 Cor. 12------

Accordingly ſoon after our Lord's aſcenſion, as the Holy Spirit was conſpicuouſly diſpenſed, upon various occaſions, in divers proportions, and in different ways, according to the exigencies of things for the edification and enlargement of the Church; ſo eſpecially at Pentecoſt it was in a moſt ſolemn manner, and abundant meaſure poured forth upon the whole Church, and each member of it; For then (ſaith S. Luke) the diſciples (to the number of one hundred and twenty perſons) being gathered Acts 1. 15. Acts 2. 1. ---- together —— with one accord, in one place; —— ſuddenly there came a ſound from heaven as of a ruſhing mighty wind (which was a moſt proper emblem of the Holy Spirits nature and powerful efficacy) and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting (which then typified the Catholick Church, through which the Holy Spirit was to be diffuſed, to animate and actuate it) And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire (denoting the various gifts and graces, imparted for expreſſion of God's praiſe and propagation of his truth, which were to be enlivened by fervent charity, zeal and devotion) and it ſate upon each of them; implying that every faithful Chriſtian conſtantly ſhould partake of this heavenly benefit, according to his need: And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance: that is, they were perfectly inſpired, ſo that each was endowed with the gift of ſpeaking a language before unknown to him; which was a miracle very great, and moſt pertinent; to learn a ſtrange tongue requiring much time and great pains; the ſpeaking ſuch tongues being then very ſerviceable to the promulgation of the Goſpel:) All which event was very publick and notorious; for that at that Feſtival-time There were (ſaith the Divine Hiſtorian) dwelling at Jeruſalem, Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven: Now when this was noiſed about, the multitude came together, and were confounded, becauſe that every man heard them ſpeak in his own language,—— the wonderful things of God.

Μεριζόμεναι διὰ τὸ χαρισμάτων διάφορον. Naz. Orat. 44.

This was therefore a general atteſtation to our Lord, pregnant and clear as could be, both for conviction of unbelievers, and confirmation of the faithful; the which effects it had, ſo that in virtue thereof, Saint Peter having explained the deſign of it, Three thouſand ſouls were added to the Church; and all did continue ſtedfaſtly in the Apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip. Act. 2. 41, 42.

Beſides alſo it was an illuſtrious pledge of that ineſtimable gift, to be perpetually communicated to the Church for its edification; and to each Chriſtian for his direction and aſſiſtance in religious practice, according to the Evangelical covenant; the which is a ſtanding witneſs, atteſting to our Lord, in the heart and conſcience of every good man, according to that of S. Peter; And we are his witneſſes of theſe things; and ſo is the Holy Ghoſt whom God hath given to them that obey him: He indeed keeping his reſidence, and exerting his power in all pious ſouls; ſhining into their minds with the true heavenly light (that pure and perfect wiſdom, which is from above) kindling charity, devotion, comfort and joy in their hearts; ſupporting them in trials and temptations, raiſing their affections and deſires above this preſent tranſitory world, diſpoſing them to reliſh ſpiritual things, and to entertain themſelves with the hopes of future bleſſedneſs, doth aſſure them, that Jeſus is the Lord, doth ſeal to them the truth of his doctrine, the reality of his promiſes, the efficacy of his grace, the wonderful greatneſs of his love and goodneſs toward them; ſo that hence that is abundantly verified, which S. John telleth us, He that believeth on the ſon of God, hath the witneſs in himſelf.

Act. 5. 32.
Eph. 1. 18.
2 Cor. 4. 6.
1 Cor. 12. 3.
Rom. 8. 16.
Gal. 4. 6.
2 Cor. 1. 22.
4. 2. 5. 5.
Eph. 1. 13.
4. 30.
1 Joh. 5. 10.

There are divers other conſiderable atteſtations to our Lord, ſuch as the divine ſublimity of his doctrine, diſcovering it ſelf to enlightned minds to ſhine from heaven; the teſtimony of God's ſpirit to the hearts and conſciences of good and faithful people, aſſuring them that Jeſus is the Lord, and ſealing to them the truth of his doctrine; the operation of God's grace in production of moral vertues, or the purgation of heart and amendment of life flowing from faith in him, the efficacy of prayers in his name offered to God; all the joys, and comforts, and happy fruits ſpringing from Chriſtian devotion; the good effects the Goſpel hath had in reformation of the world inducing many great benefits, and preventing miſchiefs therein: But theſe, and the like being not

Rom. 8. 16.
Gal. 4. 6.
2 Cor. 1. 22.
5. 5. 4. 2.
Eph. 1. 13.
4. 30.
1 Cor. 12. 3.
1 Joh. 5. 10.
Ὁ πιστεύων εἰς τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἔχει τὴν μαρτυρίαν ἐν ἑαυτῷ.

ſo publick, ſo diſtinctly obſervable, ſo eaſily drawn into argument apt to convince the incredulous, I ſhall paſs over; adding but one more of a more general and conſpicuous nature.

9. Laſtly, God hath atteſted unto our Lord by the wonderful ſucceſs which hath attended his Goſpel in its conveyance and propagation: its, in ſo ſhort a time, ſo generally prevailing in the hearts of men, triumphing over the mighteſt oppoſitions, ſubduing the world to the faith and obedience of its ſelf, accompliſhed by means to appearance ſo inſufficient, and by ways ſo improbable, may ſeem to reaſon no leſs a miracle of providence againſt the courſe of humane affairs, than the reſt performed by him, or for him, were miracles to ſenſe, above the power of natural cauſes, both arguing the preſence and aſſiſtance of omnipotency: the work was a victory over the world, and over hell atchieved by the faith of Jeſus; and that a very ſtrange one, whether we conſider the combatants who fought for him, or the adverſaries, againſt whom, or the weapons by which, or the manner how they ſtrove, or the very cauſe it ſelf which they maintained for him.

2 Cor. 1. 26.

Ἀγράμματοι, καὶ ἰδιῶται. Act. 4. 13.

They were not many wiſe, not many mighty, not many noble, but a very few, mean and poor, unlearned and ſimple men, whom no outward circumſtances commended to humane regard, no worldly advantage furthered in purſuance of their deſign, who had nothing viſible to rely on, to hearten, to ſupport them in their endeavours: a few fiſhermen, publicans, tent-makers, and other perſons of like quality, education, improvement and capacity, were the inſtruments of this great work; thoſe brave ſouldiers of Chriſt, who boldly ſet themſelves in array againſt all his adverſaries; and what adverſaries were they? who, but all the majeſty and authority, all the force and violence, all the policy and craft, all the wit, learning, wiſdom and eloquence, all the paſſion and rage of men, all the power, cunning and malice of the curſed ſpirits; in ſhort all the forces and endeavours of earth and hell combined againſt them. They were to check and controll the ambitions, intereſts, pleaſures of mighty Emperours and Potentates; whoſe aſſumed Divine honours they decried as vain and wicked, whoſe commands they reprehended as unjuſt and impious, to whoſe power and pleaſure they preſcribed reſtraints, declaring them obliged to contain their practice within bounds of piety, equity and temperance: they were to ſuppreſs the credit, and the gain of all Prieſts, or Miniſters of Religion in the world, whoſe doctrines they condemned as vain and ſilly, whoſe practices they reproved as vile and damnable: they were to confute all the ſubtilty of Philoſophers, all the eloquence of Oratours, all depths of learning, and improvements of reaſon or wit; impugning the opinions famous and current among men as falſe, or ſlighting them as frivolous: they were to overbear, and maſter the prejudices of all people, fortified by natural inclination and temper, by countenance of long tradition and cuſtom; by education, by publick laws, and alſo mighty enforcements: they were to charge with reproach all ages paſt, and the Anceſtours of all people in the world (thoſe of one ſmall people only in part excepted) of very groſs ignorance and errour, of ſottiſh folly, of heinous wickedneſs and impiety: they were to ſuſtain all the ſlanders, reproaches and perſecutions which the reſolute oppoſing ſo many intereſts, humours and opinions inevitably would produce: they were beſide vigorouſly to aſſault Satan,

Clem. Alex. well ſays that no Philoſophy would have endured ſuch a teſt, or endured ſuch a ſhock of perſecution.

Καὶ τὴν μὲν φιλοσοφίαν τὴν ἑλληνικὴν ἐὰν ὁ τυχὼν ἄρχων κωλύσῃ, οἴχεται παραχρῆμα, τὴν δὲ ἡμετέραν, &c. Strom 6. (p. 502)

Καίτοι γε μυρίων ὅσων κωλυμάτων γενομένων πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπισπαρῆναι τὴν Ἰησοῦ διδασκαλίαν τῇ οἰκουμένῃ. Orig. cont. Celſ. 7. (p. 349.)

tan, and all his complices; to beat down his worſhip, and overturn his domination; to baffle all his craft and might, to ſtop his mouth, to bind his hands, to tread upon his neck.

All theſe great exploits they were to atchieve in a moſt quiet and peaceable manner, in a way moſt plain and ſimple, without any terrour or tumult, any ſlight or artifice, any plauſibility of language, or ſubtilty of reaſoning; without applying either any rude violence, or ſly allurement: they were indeed little more than barely to report a ſtory, and to affirm it true of their own knowledge, adjoining in connexion with that ſtory ſome plain honeſt rules of life here in this world,* and denouncing ſome conſequences on the belief of their ſtory, and the practice of their rules in another world hereafter. Theſe things it was their buſineſs to tell ſimply, and to averr confidently, charging men at their utmoſt peril to believe them; boldly condemning whatever thing, and what perſon ſoever ſhould oppoſe their report, or doctrine: they were not to aſſay the perſuading this, or diſſuading from the contrary by fine ſtrains of ſpeech, or with acute enthymems; but to propoſe it without care or circumſtance, in ſuch a homely dreſs, and naked plainneſs of ſpeech, that even children and idiots might eaſily comprehend the main of their ſenſe and drift: all the ſtrength, the ornament, the charm of their diſcourſe conſiſted in the clear ſincerity ſhining through it; joined with a conſtant adherence to their doctrine, an earneſt diligence in promoting it, an admirable patience in joyfully ſuffering all contumelies, and adverſities incident to them for its ſake; accompanied alſo with a blameleſs innocence and integrity of life, a ſweet calmneſs of mind, and meekneſs of behaviour, together with a kind and charitable diſpoſition toward all men: theſe were all the humane or natural weapons of their warfare; with which alone, God's help concurring, they did (to uſe S. Paul's words) pull down ſtrong holds, and caſt down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God; bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt: in this ſtrange manner did they maintain their cauſe.

1 Cor. 4. 5.
2 Cor. 4. 7.
12. 9.

1 Cor. 2. 4.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

A cauſe indeed, which of it ſelf did not ſeem likely to proſper in the world, having in it ſelf ſo little of plauſibility, and affording to the embracers thereof ſo very ſmall encouragement: which enjoined to its followers the worſhip and imitation of a perſon lying under extreme diſadvantages in the eye of man; who had lived in a very mean condition, and had ſuffered a moſt ignominious death; who therefore to be obliged to adore and obey could not but to the ordinary ſenſe of men appear very offenſive: which again recommended a doctrine little grateful, or rather very croſs to the natural propenſions, to the current principles, to the ſecular advantages of men; which indulged men in nothing that they were apt to like, but greatly curb'd and check'd them in the uſe of their liberties, gratification of their fancies, and enjoyment of their pleaſures; which much diſparaged all the pleaſing goods, and all the flattering glories of the world; charging men never much to affect, or ſeek them, ſometimes utterly to quit and renounce them; freely chuſing in their ſtead to undertake a croſs with all its pains and diſgraces, which propounded it as an eſſential ingredient of it ſelf, or a condition neceſſary for all that ſhould avow it, to circumciſe the heart, to mortifie the deeds of the body, to crucifie the fleſh with its affections and luſts; to cut off right hands, and pull out right eyes; to part with all their fortunes, to hate their relations, to ſacrifice their lives, if they were thereto called, for its ſake; which rendred men, as it were

* Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61. p. 635.

Rom. 8. 13.
Gal. 5. 24.

were dead to all preſent fruitions, and unconcerned in all hopes here; engaging them entirely to place their contents and happineſs in a reverſion of things inviſible and future: they, in fine, did hold forth a doctrine to the ſenſe of fleſh and blood full of moſt rigid laws, ſevere rules, harſh conditions, and hard ſayings, apt to choak the faith of men, and to obſtruct its entertainment with them.

Τὸ ῥῆμα ἐκεῖνο, τὸ οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, τοῦτο πάντα εἰργάσατε, τοιοῦτοι γὰρ οἱ τοῦ θεοῦ λόγοι ἔργων δημιουργοὶ, ἔργων θαυμαστῶν καὶ παραδόξων, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61. p. 636. Πῶς οὖν τοσούτων πρᾶγμα μετὰ τοσούτων κωλυμάτων καὶ πέρας ἔσχεν οὕτω λαμπρὸν καὶ ἔκβασιν μαρτυροῦσαν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, εἰ μὴ θεία τις καὶ ἄμαχος δύναμις ἦν τοῦ ταῦτα εἰπόντος, καὶ τελέσαντος, &c. Ibid. p. 637.

Now that a handful of ſuch perſons, againſt ſuch obſtacles, in ways ſo prepoſterous, and different from the courſe of humane proceedings, were able to render ſo unlikely a cauſe ſo abſolutely victorious; ſo that ſuddenly all the might, wit and eloquence of men did ſtoop unto it, and ſerve under it; that the Majeſty of the greateſt Princes gladly veiled thereto, that the prudence of Stateſmen cordially did approve it, that all the learning of the world yielded it ſelf up captive and tributary thereto, that all ſuperſtition vaniſhed before it, and all the force of hell ſunk under it; is it not a huge argument, that God himſelf did in favour thereof
2 Chr. 14. 11. 1 Sam. 14. 6. interpoſe his omnipotent arm; that to the Lord of hoſts (Unto whom, as King Aſa ſaid, it is nothing to help whether with many, or with them Rom. 15. 8. that have no power; to whom it is indifferent to ſave by many or by few) this glorious victory is to be aſcribed, who thereby pleaſed to accompliſh his ancient promiſes, to maintain his holy truth, to further the ſalvation of his creatures, to promote his own glory, and eſpecially to magnifie the Name of his only beloved Son Jeſus, our ever bleſſed Lord, to whom for ever and ever be all praiſe. Amen.

Having thus largely endeavour'd to ſhew that Jeſus our Lord is the Meſſias, and conſequently ſuppoſing the truth of the Chriſtian doctrine; let us now briefly recapitulate and explain in what manner, and in what reſpects the New Teſtament repreſents him as Chriſt; how according to that Jeſus was ſignally choſen and conſecrated by God, in a manner ſupereminent, to all the offices denoted by the title Chriſt (the office Prophetical, Regal and Sacerdotal) and how he effectually doth execute them.

Act. 10. 38. Him (ſaith S. Peter in general) God anointed with the Holy Spirit and Power: God anointed him not with an external affuſion of material oil (as neither were the Patriarchs, nor King Cyrus, who are yet called the Chriſts of God) that was only a ritual and ſymbolical buſineſs; but with a real infuſion of divine grace and power, qualifying and enabling him perfectly to execute all thoſe great and extraordinary functions.
Pſal. 45. 5. Luc. 4. 1. John 3. 34. Matt. 3. 16. Luc. 4. 22. With this gladſome oil he was thoroughly anointed and repleniſh'd above meaſure; with this he was ſanctified from the womb; when the power of the higheſt did overſhadow him at his Conception; with this at his Baptiſm he was ſolemnly and viſibly inaugurated; when the heavens were opened unto him, and the ſpirit of God deſcended upon him as a Dove and came upon him; with this in all the courſe of his life and miniſtery he was continually accompanied; the vertue of it being diſcovered and diffuſed in moſt ſenſible effects of wiſe and gracious diſcourſe, holy and blameleſs converſation, wonderful and glorious performances, for the honour of God, and the benefit of mankind, to the delight and conſo-
Acts 10. 38. lation of all well-diſpoſed minds. God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth (ſaith S. Peter in the Acts) with the Holy Ghoſt; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the Devil; for God was with him. He was by this Spiritual unction conſtituted in right, and in effect a Joh. 6. Prophet, a King, a Prieſt.

1. Firſt a Prophet; For they were not miſtaken, who, upon his raiſing the widows child, were amazed, and glorified God, ſaying, that a Great Prophet was raiſed up among them, and that God had viſited his people. Nor they (in S. John's Goſpel) who reflecting upon another great miracle (feeding multitudes with five loaves, and two little pickled fiſhes) brake into thisc onfeſſion; This is in truth that prophet, who was to come into the world. And the diſciples well deſcribed him, who ſtyled him, A Prophet mighty in word and deed, before God and all the people. He was ſo, as having an extrordinary commiſſion from God, declared by vocal atteſtation of God himſelf from heaven, by expreſs teſtimony of S. John the Baptiſt (the Perſon of moſt remarkable ſanctity and greateſt authority in his time) by the performance of innumerable and incomparable ſigns and works miraculous (arguments in the higheſt degree, and to the utmoſt poſſibility ſufficient to aſſert and confirm it.) He was alſo in greateſt perfection qualified for the exerciſe of that function, by inſpiration complete and unlimited; by diſpoſition of mind altogether pure and holy (expreſſed in a continual practice of life void of all ſin and guile; by an inſuperable courage and conſtancy, a tranſcendent wiſdom and diſcretion, an incomparable meekneſs and patience, a moſt winning ſweetneſs and goodneſs, a moſt powerful awfulneſs and majeſty, ſhining in all his diſcourſe and demeanour.) Sutable alſo to the authority of his commiſſion and the qualifications of his perſon were the weight, and the extent of the doctrine he in God's name revealed; It concerning no leſs than the ſalvation of mankind, and reconciliation of the world to God; the entire will of God, and whole duty of man; with all the laws and precepts, the covenants and conditions, the promiſings and threatnings relating to our future ſtate. He did not (as other Prophets have done) prophecy about the conſtitution of one particular Law, Religion or Covenant; about the reproof or reformation of one ſtate, the judgment or fate determined to one Nation, but his deſign reached to the inſtruction and converſion of all people, in all places, through all times, to the ſettling of a Law and Covenant abſolutely univerſal and perpetual; Myſteries he brought forth never before revealed, and decrees never to be reverſed; to the final doom of all the world did his prophetical denunciations extend. So is he a Prophet. Such he was in his temporal appearance, and adminiſtrations upon earth; and ſuch he continues for ever in heaven; from thence upon all occaſions by his Holy Spirit imparting to his faithful people all needful inſtruction in truth, direction in practice, admonition to duty, and comfort in trouble. He is alſo ſuch by the miniſtery of his ſervants, whom he hath appointed, and whom he aſſiſts, to inſtruct and guide us.

Luc. 7. 16.
John 6. 14.
Luc. 24. 16.
Εἷς ἡμῶν καθηγητής, ὁ Χριστός.
Matt. 23. 8.
1 Pet. 2. 22.
2 Cor. 5. 21.
1 Joh. 3. 5.

2. He is alſo a King; by many unqueſtionable Titles; Of a great and extenſive authority, exerciſing it to the beſt effects and purpoſes. He is a King by nature and birth: as the only Son of God, partaker of his eternal power and majeſty; For therefore to him it was ſaid; Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy Kingdom is a right ſceptre; and as the ſon of David; For of him the Angel ſaid —— The Lord God ſhall give unto him the throne of David his Father, and he ſhall reign over the houſe of David for ever; and of his Kingdom there ſhall be no end. He is alſo a King by divine deſignation and appointment. For, Let all the houſe of Iſrael (ſaith S. Peter) know aſſuredly, that God hath made him Lord and Chriſt; and The father hath given him authority to execute judgment, becauſe he is the ſon of man (or as ſuch.) He is alſo King by

Heb. 1. 8.
Eſ. 9. 5.
Luc. 1. 32.
Acts 2. 36.
John 5.22,27.
Hebrews 1.2.

Heb. 2. 9. merit and purchaſe; for, He for the ſuffering of death was crowned with Phil. 2. 8. ὑπερύψωσε glory and honour; He was obedient to death, even the death of the croſs; ἐχαρίσατο Therefore God ſuper-exalted him, and beſtowed on him a name above every Rom 14. 9. name. To this end he both died and roſe again, that he might Lord it over ἵνα κυριεύσῃ. both the dead and living. He is King alſo by conqueſt; having delivered
Col. 1. 13. us out of the power of darkneſs, and freed us from the vaſſalage of ſin;
Col. 2. 15. having ſpoiled principalities and powers, made a ſhew of them openly, and Luc. 1. 71,74. Tit. 2. 14. triumphed over them; having delivered us from our enemies, and from
Rom. 6. 22. the hand of all that hate us; that we being delivered from our enemies,
John 8. 36. might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all Matt. 11. 29. the days of our life. He is alſo a King by our election and free choice, we having voluntarily put our ſelves under his protection, and ſubmitted to his command, and taken upon our ſelves his yoke, and vowed everlaſting fealty to him in our Baptiſm. Such a right he hath of Governing.

As for the extent of his Kingdom, it is in all reſpects boundleſs, both for place and time; 'tis univerſal and perpetual. He is the Eternal King of all the world: God hath ſo exalted him and given him a name above all names, That to the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bend, whether of Phil. 2. 8. things in heaven, or things upon earth, or things under the earth. To him
Rev. 5. 13. that ſitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb by every creature in heaven,
19. 16. 1. 5. and in the earth, and under the earth are jointly to be aſcribed the bleſſing,
27. 12. and the honour, and the glory, and the power, for ever and for ever.
Eph. 1. 21. He is conſtituted ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς, above all rule, and authority, and
Col. 2. 10. domination, and every name that is named not onely in this world, but in 1 Tim. 6. 15. Matt. 28. 18. that which is to come: 'tis his juſt title and proper badge, The King of
11. 27. Kings, and Lord of Lords; to whom all Nations are vaſſals, yea all creatures
John 3. 35. 13. 3. 17. 2. tures are ſubject and tributary. But he in eſpecial manner is King over
---- Eph. 1. 22. his Church; that peculiar people, whom he hath eſpecially purchaſed to Acts 20. 28. himſelf by his merits and blood; whom he hath ſubdued to his obedience by the ſword of his Word, and by the prevailing virtue of his Spirit;
Pſalm 132. 13. that myſtical Sion, in which 'tis ſaid that God will place his reign
Apoc. 3. 12. and reſidence for ever; that heavenly city, whereof all the Saints are 21. 2. Heb. 12. 22. fellow-citizens, and he the ſovereign Head and Governour; God hath
Gal. 4. 26. (ſaith S. Paul) put all things under his feet, and hath given him head
Eph. 2. 19. Eph. 1. 22. above all things to the Church. In reſpect to which both the Evangelical diſpenſation here, and the future ſtate of bliſs hereafter are called the Kingdom of heaven. Over this he reigns, enjoying all Royal prerogatives, exerciſing all Royal adminiſtrations, and diſpenſing moſt Royal munificences. He hath in this his Kingdom eſtabliſhed moſt righteous and wholſome laws; the which his ſubjects are by him obliged and enabled to obey. He conſtantly defendeth, and protecteth his ſubjects from all invaſions and aſſaults of their enemies (inteſtine enemies, their own luſts; external enemies, the Devil and the World.) He provides for all their needs and wants; he ſupports them in all their diſtreſſes and troubles. He exerciſes judgment over them; diſtributing fit rewards and puniſhments with exquiſite juſtice and equity (moſt liberal rewards to the loyal and obedient; moſt ſevere puniſhments upon obſtinate offenders and rebels.) He laſtly reſtrains and ſuppreſſes, defeats and deſtroys Col. 2. 15. all the adverſaries to his royal dignity, and to the welfare of his good ſubjects, both viſible and inviſible, temporal and ſpiritual. Out of Apoc. 19. 15. his mouth (as it is in the Apocalypſe) there goeth a ſharp ſword that with it
Pſalm 2. 9. he ſhould ſmite the nations; and he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron. Theſe Matt. 25. 31. Luc. 19. 27. mine enemies (he ſhall one day ſay) which would not that I ſhould reign over over them, bring them hither and ſlay them before me. He muſt reign (ſaith S. Paul) till he hath put all enemies under his feet. Thus is he a King, endewed with ſovereign right and power; crowned with glorious Majeſty; enjoying all pre-eminencies, and exerciſing all acts ſutable to Regal dignity.

1 Cor. 15. 25.

3. He is likewiſe a Prieſt, and that much above an ordinary one; διαφορωτέρας τέτυχε λειτουργίας, He hath obtained a more excellent function (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh) than ever any other Prieſt had. Every High Prieſt (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) is appointed to offer gifts and ſacrifices. He did (as ſuch) once offer up an oblation, in worth and excellency far ſurpaſſing all the ſacrifices and oblations that ever were made (all the fatteſt Hecatombs that were ever ſacrificed, all the gold and pretious ſtones that ever were dedicated, all the ſpices and perfumes that ever were kindled into incenſe, upon altar, were but vile and ſordid, were ineffectual and unacceptable in compariſon thereto) a willing oblation he made upon the altar of his croſs of himſelf (his moſt innocent, moſt pure, moſt ſpotleſs and unblemiſhed ſelf) of his moſt glorious body (the Temple of the Divinity) of his moſt pretious blood, of his dear life, for the life of the world, and redemption of mankind; for the propitiation of our ſins, and the ſins of the whole world; an oblation which alone could appeaſe God's wrath, and ſatisfy his juſtice, and merit his favour toward us.

Heb. 8. 6.
Ἀρχιερέα τῆς ὁμολογίας ἡμῶν. Heb. 3. 1.
Heb. 8. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 18.
Heb. 9. 9.
Heb. 7. 26,27. 10. 10, 5. 9. 12.
Eph. 5. 2.
John 10. 16.
John 6. 51.
1 John 2. 2.

He doth alſo (which is another ſacerdotal performance) intercede for us; He intercedes as an Advocate for the pardon of our ſins (If any man ſin, we have an advocate with (or to) the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous). He intercedes for the acceptance of our ſervices (whence we are enjoined to doe all things, to pray, to give thanks in his Name) for the granting our requeſts; for grace and aſſiſtance; for comfort and reward; for all ſpiritual bleſſings and advantages to be conferred upon us; he thus purſuing the work of ſalvation by his propitiatory ſacrifice begun for us; whence (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſaith) He is able to ſave to the uttermoſt, thoſe that by him come to God, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for us.

1 John 2. 1.
1 Tim. 2. 5.
John 14. 13. 15. 16. 16. 23, 24.
Eph. 5. 20.
Heb. 5. 7.
Eph. 1. 3, 6.
Heb. 7. 25.

He doth alſo perform the Prieſtly function of bleſſing. Bleſſing the people in God's name, and bleſſing God in the peoples behalf; as did that illuſtrious Type of his Melchiſedek (Bleſſed, ſaid he, be Abram of the moſt High God, poſſeſſour of heaven and earth; and, Bleſſed be the moſt High God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand.) So hath Jeſus effectually pronounced all joy and happineſs to his faithful people; He pronounced bleſſedneſs to them in his Sermons; He bleſſed his diſciples at his parting; Lifting up his hands he bleſſed them, ſaith S. Luke. God in him (ſaith S. Paul) hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly places (or in heavenly things) and, God (ſaith S. Peter) having raiſed up his ſon Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs us in turning every one of us from his iniquity: and at the laſt day he will utter that comfortable benediction: Come ye bleſſed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. So is Jeſus a true and perfect Prieſt. And,

1 Chr. 23. 13.
Lev. 9. 22,23.
Numb. 6. 23.
Gen. 14. 19,20.
Matt. 5. 1, &c.
Luc. 24. 50.
Eph. 1. 3.
Acts 3. 26.
Matt. 25. 34.

So finally in all reſpects is Jeſus God's anointed, and the Chriſt of God: as the great Prophet, and Doctor; as the Sovereign King and Prince: as the High Prieſt and Advocate of his Church. And indeed, that he is ſo is the Fundamental Point of our Religion; which the Apoſtles did peculiarly teſtify, preach and perſuade; the ſincere belief of which doth conſtitute and denominate us Chriſtians.

IV. The conſideration whereof ought to beget in us a practice anſwerable to the relations between him and us, grounded thereupon.

Heb. 2. 1, &c. Διὰ τοῦτο δεῖ ἡμᾶς προσέχειν τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσι μήποτε παραῤῥυῶμεν, &c.

If Jeſus be ſuch a Prophet, we muſt with careful attention, and a docile mind hearken to his admonitions and inſtructions; we muſt yield a ſteady belief to all his doctrine, and we muſt adhere conſtantly thereto, and we muſt readily obey and practiſe what he teaches.

If he be a King we muſt maintain our due allegiance to him, pay him honour and reverence, ſubmit to his laws and commandments, repoſe truſt and confidence in him, fly to his protection and aſſiſtance in all our difficulties and needs.

If he be a Prieſt, we muſt with ſincere faith and hope apply our ſelves unto him for, and rely upon his ſpiritual miniſteries in our behalf; ſue for and expect propitiation of our ſins by virtue of his Sacrifice; the collation of all ſpiritual gifts from his interceſſion; all comfort, joy and Heb. 10. 21, 22. felicity in conſequence of his effectual benediction. Having (ſo the Apoſtle to the Hebrews admoniſheth us) a great Prieſt over the houſe of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full aſſurance of faith.

In ſhort, if Jeſus be Chriſt, let us be Chriſtians; Chriſtians, not only in name, in outward profeſſion, in ſpeculation and opinion, but in very deed and reality, in our heart and affection, in all our converſation and practice. Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt (that is, who 2 Tim. 2. 19. confeſſeth Jeſus to be Chriſt, and himſelf to be his follower) depart from iniquity.

Now the God of peace, that brought from the dead our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that great Shepherd of the ſheep through the blood of the everlaſting covenant, make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

His Onely Son.

SERMON XXI.

JOHN I. 14.

And we beheld his glory; the glory as of the only begotten of the father.

THAT Jeſus Chriſt our Lord is the μονογενὴς, the only Son of God, John 1. 18.
that is, the Son of God in a peculiar and high manner, otherwiſe 3. 16, 18.
far than any creature can be ſo termed, S. John doth here 1 John 4. 9.
(and in ſeveral other places) ſuppoſe, or aſſert plainly; And it is a great point of the Chriſtian doctrine, a ſpecial object of our faith. To ſhew the truth of which, to explain how it is to be underſtood, and to apply the conſideration thereof to our practice, ſhall be the ſubject and ſcope of our preſent diſcourſe.

I. That the Meſſias, deſigned by God to come into the world for the reſtoring and reconciling mankind unto God, was in an eſpecial manner to be the Son of God, even the ancient Prophets did foretel and preſignify: Thou art my ſon, this day I have begotten thee, ſaith God of Pſalm 2. 7.
him in the ſecond Pſalm. And of him, that which in the firſt leſs perfect Heb. 1. 5.
ſenſe was ſpoken to King Solomon (who as the ſon and heir of David, Acts 13. 33.
as the builder of God's houſe, as a Prince of peace, reigning in great glory, wealth and proſperity; as endewed with incomparable wiſdom, did moſt ſignally repreſent and prefigure him) was chiefly intended for him, and did more exactly agree to him: He ſhall be my ſon, 1 Chr. 22. 10.
and I will be his father; and I will eſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom over 28. 6.
Iſrael for ever: and again; He ſhall cry unto me, thou art my father, 2 Sam. 7. 13. Pſal. 89. 26, 27.
my God, and the rock of my ſalvation: Alſo I will make him my firſt-born, Heb. 1. 5. higher than the kings of the earth. And accordingly it was, even before our Saviour's appearance, a perſuaſion commonly paſſing among the Jews (both learned and unlearned) that the Meſſias ſhould be the Son of God; as may be collected from ſeveral paſſages in the New Teſtament; in which being the Chriſt, and being the Son of God are conjoined as inſeparable adjuncts, whereof one did imply the other, according to the ſenſe then current, and previous to the embracing our Lord's doctrine.
For Nathanael we ſee was no ſooner perſuaded, that Jeſus was the Chriſt, but he (according to his anticipation, common to the people) confeſſeth thus: Rabbi, thou art the ſon of God; Rabbi, thou art the king of John 1. 49.
Iſrael. Martha in like manner being moved to declare her faith concerning Jeſus, expreſſeth it thus: Yea Lord, I believe that thou art the John 11. 27.
Chriſt, the ſon of God, which ſhould come into the world: and likewiſe doth

Joh. 6. 69.
Matt. 16. 16.
Joh. 1. 34.
Mark 14. 61.
Matt. 26. 63.
Matt. 8. 29.
Mark 1. 24.
Luc. 4. 41, 34.

doth S. Peter, in the name of all his brethren, the Apoſtles: We have believed, and have known, that thou art the Chriſt, the ſon of the living God. S. John the Baptiſt alſo, doth thus expreſs his belief and yield his teſtimony concerning Jeſus: And I ſaid, and bare record, that this is the ſon of God. Yea even the High-Prieſt himſelf implied the ſame, when examining our Lord he ſaid: Art thou the Chriſt, the ſon of the Bleſſed? I adjure thee by the living God tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the ſon of God: ſuppoſing that to be the Chriſt, and to be the ſon of God would concur in the ſame perſon. Yea the Devils themſelves had learned this, who cried out, What have we to doe with thee, Jeſus, thou ſon of God?

Matt. 3. 17.
12. 18. 17. 5.
Eph. 1. 6.
Col. 1. 13.
Rom. 8. 32.
John 5. 18.
1 John 1. 20.
Col. 1. 15.
Heb. 1. 6.
Luc. 3. ult.
Pſalm 82. 6.
Acts 17. 29.
Matt. 5. 45.
χρ̃ τινα σχέσιν ὑψηλοτέραν. Naz. Orat. 37.

Thus did the ancient Scriptures intimate, and thus were God's People generally perſuaded about the Meſſias; and that he is indeed the ſon of God, the Evangelical Scripture doth every where teach us, calling him not only at large the ſon of God, but more emphatically the ἀγαπητὸς (the darling ſon of God) the υἱὸς τῆς ἀγάπης, ſon of God's love, the υἱὸς ἀληθινὸς, God's true ſon (that is, ſuch moſt properly, in a moſt excellent manner incomparably repreſenting and reſembling God) the ἴδιος υἱὸς (God's proper, or peculiar ſon) the πρωτότοκος, God's firſt-born; God's υἱὸς μονογενὴς, his only begotten ſon: all which epithets import ſomewhat of peculiar eminency in the kind and ground of this his relation unto God. The relation it ſelf in a large ſenſe, and equivocally is attributed to ſeveral: Adam is called the ſon of God; and the Angels are uſually entitled ſuch; and Princes are ſtyled the children of the moſt high; and all men are ſaid to be God's Off-ſpring, and Good men are eſpecially dignified with that appellation; God's people as ſuch (the Iſraelites of old, and Chriſtians now) are the children of God; Yea, God is the Father of all things, as the Maker and preſerver of them: But all theſe, in compariſon to Chriſt, are ſuch in a manner very inferiour, and in a very improper ſenſe; for he is the Only ſon of God; which denotes a relation in its kind ſingular, and incomparable; from which all other things are excluded.

Now that we may diſcern the difference, let us conſider the grounds and reſpects upon which this relation of our Saviour to God is built, or the reaſons why he is called the ſon of God: There are ſeveral expreſſed or implied in Scripture.

Luc. 1. 35. Τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον.
Gal. 4. 4.
Luc. 1. 32. He ſhall be great and ſhall be called the ſon of the higheſt, and God ſhall give him the throne of his father David.

1. Chriſt is called the ſon of God in regard to his temporal generation, as being in a manner extraordinary conceived in the Bleſſed Virgin by the Holy Ghoſt; ſo the Angel expreſly telleth us: The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee, therefore alſo that holy thing, which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the ſon of God: So the Apoſtle alſo: When the fulneſs of time was come, God ſent forth his ſon made of a woman (or born of a woman, γενόμενον ἐκ γυναικὸς; γεννώμενον in ſome Copies) A generation ſo peculiar and wonderful, without intervention of any father but God himſelf, is one ground of this relation and title; he therein excelling the common ſort of men.

Dies iſte quem tanquam extremum reformidas, æterni natalis eſt. Sen. Epiſt. 102.
* Luk. 20. 35, 36.
1 Cor. 15. 20, 23.
Col. 1. 18.

2. Chriſt alſo may be termed the Son of God in regard to his reſurrection by divine efficacy; that being a kind of generation, or introduction into another ſtate of life immortal. Others are upon this ground called the ſons of God: * They (ſaith our Saviour) who ſhall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the reſurrection from the dead —— can die no more; for they are equal to the Angels, and are the children of God (υἱοὶ εἰσι τοῦ Θεοῦ) being ſons of the reſurrection. How much more then may he be thence ſo named, who is the firſt-fruits of them that ſleep, and the firſt- firſt-born from the dead? eſpecially ſince that of the Pſalmiſt, Thou art my ſon this day have I begotten thee, was (according to S. Paul's expoſition) verified in the raiſing him. In this reſpect Chriſt alſo did much excel all others, who upon the ſame ground are called the Sons of God. Apoc. 1. 5. Acts 26. 23. 3. 15.

3. Chriſt is capable of this Title by reaſon of that high Office, in which by God's eſpecial deſignation he was enſtated. Acts 13 32,33. If ordinary Princes and Judges (as being deputed by God to repreſent himſelf in the diſpenſation of juſtice; or as reſembling God in the exerciſe of their power and authority) have been called the children of the moſt High, in the language of Holy Scripture; with how much greater truth and reaſon may he be called ſo, who was moſt ſignally conſecrated and commiſſionated to the moſt eminent Function that ever was or could be; who did whatever he did in God's name, who repreſented and reſembled God ſo exactly? Pſalm 82. 6. 29. 1. It is his own argumentation and inference: If he called them Gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the Scripture cannot be broken, ſay ye of him, whom the father hath ſanctified, and ſent into the world, thou blaſphemeſt, becauſe I ſaid, I am the ſon of God? John 30. 36. The extraordinary ſanctification and miſſion did render him worthy and capable of that Appellation, far beyond all others, who have for the like reaſon obtained it.

4. Whereas alſo it is ſaid, that God did appoint, or conſtitute our Saviour heir of all things; did give him Head above all things to the Church, and did put all things under his feet, did give him power over all fleſh, did commit unto him all authority in heaven and earth; did exalt him to the higheſt place of dignity and authority next to himſelf; at the right hand of the Majeſty in the higheſt; yea did place him upon his own throne and tribunal in his room, ſo that The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son; well may he in that reſpect be entitled the Son of God; as thereby holding the rank and privilege ſutable to ſuch a relation: He being the Chief of the Family, and next in order to the great Paterfamilias of heaven and earth. Heb. 1. 2. Eph. 1. 22. John 17. 2. Phil. 2. 9. Matt. 28. 18. 11. 17. Heb. 1. 3, &c. Acts 2. 33,36. John 5. 22. Of him (ſaith S. Paul) all the family in heaven and earth is named; Eph. 3. 15. Moſes verily (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) was faithful in all his houſe as a ſervant, but Chriſt as a Son over his own houſe: Heb. 3. 5, 6. and, Being made ſo much better than the Angels (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle) as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they (they being only called ſervants, or miniſters; he being entitled a ſon and heir.) Heb. 1. 4,5,7.

In theſe reſpects is our Saviour properly, or may be fitly denominated the ſon of God with ſome peculiarity and excellency beyond others: But his being with ſuch emphaſis called God's only begotten ſon, (denoting an excluſion of all others from this relation upon the ſame kind of ground) doth ſurely import a more excellent ground thereof, than any of theſe mentioned. For the firſt Adam did alſo immediately receive his being from the power and inſpiration of God (God formed his body and breathed a ſoul into it,) Iſaac, Samuel and John the Baptiſt had alſo a generation extraordinary and miraculous, as being born of Parents mortified by age, and unapt for generation, by interpoſition of the divine power (ſo it is expreſly ſaid of Sarah, δύναμιν ἔλαβεν εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος, ſhe received power from God for conception of ſeed) Ἀφ' ἑνὸς ϗ ταῦτα νενεκρωμένου. which productions do not ſo greatly differ from the production of Chriſt as man.

And how can we conceive that the production of Angels ſhould be ſo much inferiour to our Saviour's temporal generation, if there were no other but that? Heb. 11. 11, 12.

And although our Saviour was the firſt and chief, yet was he not the Heb. 2. 10. onely Son of the reſurrection; There were (as the Apoſtle to the He- Rom. 8. 29. brews ſaith) many ſons of this kind brought to glory; and Chriſt was firſt-born among many brethren; this is alſo a ground not proper or perſpicuous enough for ſuch a denomination; and indeed before it came to paſs, he was called God's ſon; he was ſo when he lived, he was ſo when God ſo loved the world, that he gave him for its ſalvation.

John 3. 16, 18. Neither doth the free collation of power and dignity how eminent ſoever well ſuffice to ground this ſingularity of relation; for we ſee others alſo in regard to their deſignment and deputation to offices of power and dignity, although indeed ſubordinate and inferiour to thoſe he received, to be entitled the ſons of God; and however this is rather the foundation of a metaphorical, than of a natural and proper ſonſhip, which is too ſlender and inſufficient for him; who in the moſt ſolemn and auguſt ſtrain is denominated ſuch.

Likewiſe although our Saviour be the heir of all things, yet hath he co- Rom. 8. 17. 29. heirs, whom God hath (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) together enlivened, and to- Eph. 2. 5, 6. gether raiſed, and together ſeated with him in thrones of glory and bliſs; Heb. 2. 10. beſide that privileges of this kind are rather conſecutive and declarative of this his Relation to God, than formally conſtitutive thereof: Rom. 8. 17. If a ſon, then an heir, ſaith S. Paul; inheritance follows ſonſhip, and declares it, rather than properly makes it.

Moreover thoſe prerogatives of ſingular affection, and favour appropriated to Chriſt, together with all thoſe glorious preferments conſequent on them, do alſo argue ſome higher ground of this relation: for how could it be, that merely upon account of that temporal generation (which did only make him a man, of like paſſions and infirmities to us, ſin only excepted) or in reſpect to any thing conſequent thereupon, God ſhould affect him with ſo ſpecial a dearneſs, and advance him to dignities ſo ſuperlative, ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς, καὶ ἐξουσίας, καὶ δυνάμεως, καὶ Eph. 1. 21. κυριότητος, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named; Angels, and authorities, and powers 1 Pet. 3. 22. being (as S. Peter ſays) made ſubject unto him? Such proceedings (that generation only, or any thing reſulting from it, being ſuppoſed) do not ſeem conſiſtent with that decent congruity and natural equity, which God is ever wont to obſerve in his regard to perſons and in his ordering of things.

We muſt therefore ſearch for a more excellent, and more proper ground of this magnificent relation, or peculiar ſonſhip; and ſuch an one we ſhall find clearly deducible from teſtimonies of holy Scripture, (and by ſeveral ſteps of diſcourſe we ſhall deduce it.)

1. It is thence firſt evident, that our Saviour had in him ſomewhat more than humane, according to which he is ſaid to have exiſted before his temporal generation here among men. Even as men after death are in regard to a ſuperviving part of them, their immortal ſoul, ſaid to be Luc. 20. 38. and live; for, even then, ſaith our Lord, all men do live to God. For, before his birth here, he is ſaid to have been in heaven, and to have de- John 3. 13. ſcended thence; No man, ſaith he, hath aſcended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the ſon of man, which is in heaven: Even when he viſibly lived here, he was (as himſelf affirms) ſecundum aliquid ſui, according to ſomewhat inviſible in him, then actually in heaven; and according to that ſomewhat he was before in heaven; and by Union of that inviſible being to humane viſible nature, he is ſaid to have deſcended from heaven. His aſcenſion into heaven was but a tranſlation of the humane nature thither, where according to a more excellent nature he did abide before the incarnation: for, What (ſaith he a- John 6. 62.

gain) if ye ſhall ſee the ſon of man aſcend up, where he was before? from hence he is declared worthy and capable of ſo tranſcendent preferments; for,
He that cometh from above, out of heaven, is above all things; becauſe, The ſecond man is the Lord from heaven. He, as to his manifeſtation in the fleſh, John 3. 31. 8. 23.
was junior to S. John the Baptiſt, but in truth was of more ancient ſtan- 1 Cor. 15. 47.
ding, and thence was to be preferr'd before him, as S. John himſelf perceived, and profeſſed: He that (ſaid S. John) comes after me is preferred be- John 1. 15.
fore me, becauſe he was before me. He did ſubſiſt even before Abraham was born, whence without abſurdity he could affirm, that He, and Abra- ham had interviews and entercourſe together; ſo he diſcourſed with the Jews: Thou art not (ſaid they) yet fifty years old, and haſt thou ſeen Abra- John 8. 58.
ham? He replied; Verily, Verily, I ſay unto you, before Abraham was, I am:
this ſaying did ſeem very abſurd to them, and ſo offended them, that they took up ſtones to caſt at him; not apprehending the myſtery couched in his words, and that he had another nature, different from that which appeared to them, according to which that ſaying of his was verified. Yea farther he had a ſubſiſtence and a glory before the world had a being; for thus he prays: And now, father, glorifie me, with thine own John 17. 5.
ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was; Glory (that is a moſt honourable ſtate of being, and excellent perfection) was not only ἣν εἶχον παρὰ σοί.
deſtinated to him, but he really had it, and enjoyed it with God, before the world was.

2. Neceſſary indeed it was, that he ſhould exiſt before the world, for that, ſecondly, God by him made the world, and for that he made the Eph. 3. 9.
world himſelf: God (ſaith Saint Paul) created all things by Jeſus Chriſt; Heb. 1.2.11.3. and, By him (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) God made the worlds (or the Ages, τοὺς αἰῶνας, that is, all things which ever at any time did ſubſiſt; thoſe very ages, which the ſame Apoſtle ſaith we believe to have been fram- ed by the word of God.) By him (ſaith S. John in the beginning of his Goſpel) John 1. 3.
were all things made, and without him was nothing made, that was made;
δι' αὐτοῦ, that is, by him, not δι' αὐτὸν, for him only; to exclude that un-grammatical miſinterpretation Saint Paul joineth both theſe notions Col. 1. 16.
together: τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ, καὶ εἰς αὐτὸ ἔκτισται, All things (ſaith he) were made by him, and for him; as alſo to prevent any reſtriction, or exception of matters created by him, he particularly reckoneth what things were made by him; By him (ſaith S. Paul) were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth; whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, all things were created by him, and for him: he was not only (as ſome heterodox Interpreters would expound it) to create a new moral, and figurative world; he ſhould not only reſtore and reform mankind, but he of old did truly and properly give being to all things; and among thoſe things, he even created Angels, all things in heaven; beings unto which that metaphorical creation of men here doth not extend, or any-wiſe appertain: he therefore conſe-quently, as S. Paul ſubjoins, ἔστι πρὸ πάντων, doth exiſt before all things;
as the cauſe muſt neceſſarily in nature precede the effect.

3. He did indeed (to aſcend yet higher, even to the top) exiſt from Col. 1. 18.
all eternity: for he is called abſolutely ἀρχὴ, the beginning, which ex- Apoc. 3. 14.
cludes all time previous to his exiſtence; he is ſtyled πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, the firſt born of every creature, (or rather born before all the Col. 1. 15.
creation, as πρῶτός μου ἦν, ſignifies, he was before me, in S. John.) He John 1. 30.
is the Word, which was in the beginning, that is, before any time con- John 1. 1.

ceivable

ceivable, and conſequently from eternity. He is called the eternal life; 1 John 1. 2. The life (ſaith S. John in the firſt Epiſtle; John 1. 4. 11. 25. 14. 6. his life that is another name, frequently attributed to Chriſt, eſpecially by that Apoſtle; 1 John. 1. 2. 5. 11. 5. 12. 5. 20 the life) was manifeſted, and we did ſee it; and we bear witneſs, and ſhew that eternal life, which was with the father (ὁ λόγος ἦν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν, the word was with God; and ἡ ζωὴ ἦν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα, the life was with the Father, are, as I conceive, the ſame thing:) and more explicitely in the ſame 1 John 5. 20 Epiſtle: We are (ſaith S. John) in him that is true, in his ſon Jeſus Chriſt; he is the true God, and the eternal life. Hence is he frequently Apoc. 1. 11, 17. 2. 8. 21. 6. 22. 13. in the Apocalypſe ſtyled the firſt and the laſt, the beginning and the end, Alpha and Omega; He that was, and is, and is to come; which phraſes do commonly expreſs the eternity and immortality proper to God; as in Iſa. 44. 6. 41. 4. 48. 12. that of Iſay: Thus ſaith the Lord, the King of Iſrael; and his Redeemer, the Lord of Hoſts; I am the firſt, and I am the laſt, and beſide me there is no God. The ſame is ſignified by that elogy of the Apoſtle to the Hebrews: Heb. 13. 8. Jeſus Chriſt, the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever; (that is, who is eternally immutable) that Apoſtle alſo implies the ſame, when he ſaith, that Melchiſedek repreſented and reſembled the ſon of God, as Heb. 7. 13. having μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν, μήτε ζωῆς τέλος, neither beginning of days, nor end of life; Melchiſedek in a typical or myſtical way, our Lord in a real and proper ſenſe was ſuch; beginning-leſs and endleſs in his exiſtence. And the Prophet Micah ſeems to have taught the ſame, ſaying of him (of him that ſhould come out of Bethlehem, to be Ruler in Iſrael) Micah 5. 2. that his goings forth have been from old, even from everlaſting (or, from the days of eternity. His eternity is however neceſſarily deducible from that, which is by S. John, S. Paul, and the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſo plainly affirmed of him, that he made the Worlds, that he made the Ages, that he made all things; for if he made the world, he was before the foundations of the world, which phraſe denotes eternity; if he made the Ages, he muſt be before all Ages; if all things were made by him, and nothing can make it ſelf, then neceſſarily he was unmade; and being unmade, he neceſſarily muſt be eternal; for what at any time did not exiſt, can never without being made come to exiſt. His eter- 1 Cor. 1. 24. In decret. Conc. Nic. pag. 276. nity alſo may be ſtrongly inferred from his being called the Word, the Wiſdom, and the Power of God; for if he were not eternal, ἦν ἄρα καιρὸς, ὅτε χωρὶς τούτων ἦν ὁ θεὸς, there was a time when God wanted theſe; when he was without mental ſpeech, or underſtanding; when he was not wiſe, when he was not powerful; as S. Athanaſius argues. It therefore doth with ſufficient evidence appear from Scripture, that our Saviour had a being before his temporal birth, and that before all creatures, yea even from eternity. Farthermore.

4. From what hath been ſaid, it follows, that his being was abſolutely Divine. If he was no creature, if authour of all creatures, if eternally ſubſiſtent, then aſſuredly he is God; that ſtate, that action, that property are incommunicably peculiar unto God. Only God is ὁ ὢν, being of himſelf originally, and independantly; only God is the Creatour Heb. 3. 4. of all things (He that made all things is God, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) 1 Tim. 6. 16. Only God hath immortality (or eternity) ſaith S. Paul; No Rom. 16. 26. epithet or attribute is more proper to God, than that αἰώνιος θεὸς, God eternal. Hence is our Lord ſaid by S. Paul before he did aſſume the 2 Phil. 6. 7. form of a ſervant, and became like unto men, to have ſubſiſted in the form of God, not deeming it robbery * to be equal to God (or to have a ſubſiſtence in duration and perfection equal to God) ſo that as he was after his incarnation truly man, partaker of humane nature, affections and properties, ſo before it, he was truly God, partaking the Divine eſſence and attributes. Thence is he often in the Scriptures abſolutely and directly named God; God in the moſt proper, and moſt high ſenſe: In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, ſaith S. John in the beginning of his Goſpel (the place where he is moſt likely to ſpeak with the leaſt ambiguity, or darkneſs) the ſame word, which was in time made fleſh, and dwelt among us, did before all time exiſt with God, and was God. God (ſaith S. Paul) was manifeſted in the fleſh, juſtified in the ſpirit, ſeen of angels, preached among the Gentiles, believed upon in the world, aſſumed up into glory: Of which propoſitions, 'tis evident, that Chriſt is the ſubject, and by conſequence he is there named God. God is alſo by S. Paul ſaid to have purchaſed the Church with his own blood; who did that, but he that alſo was man, even the man Chriſt Jeſus? S. Thomas upon his conviction of our Saviour's reſurrection did expreſs his faith upon him, by crying out: My Lord, and my God; which acknowledgment our Saviour accepted and approved as a proper teſtimony of that faith. (He permits him to ſay it, or rather he accepts it, not hindring him, ſaith S. Athanaſius.) S. Paul calls the coming of our Lord at the reſurrection, the appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. To the Son (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews interpreteth it) it was ſaid in the Pſalm (Pſal. 45. 7.) Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy Kingdom is a right ſceptre. We are (ſaith S. John) in the true one, in his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, this he (οὗτος) is the true God, and life eternal; no falſe, no metaphorical, no temporary God, but the very true God, the ſupreme eternal God. Out of whom (ſaith S. Paul, recounting the privileges of the Jewiſh nation) as concerning the fleſh (or according to his humanity) Chriſt came who is over all, God bleſſed for ever; ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς, the God over all; the ſovereign God and Lord of all things; the moſt high; God bleſſed for ever; the ὁ εὐλογητὸς, which is a characteriſtical title, or ſpecial attribute of God in the ſtyle of the Scriptures, and according to the common uſe of the Jews. Yea even of old, Iſaias foretold of the Child which ſhould be born, of the Son which ſhould be given to us, that his name ſhould be called (that is according to the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking, that he ſhould really be; or however that he truly ſhould be called) the Mighty God, the Everlaſting Father, the Prince of peace.

* Τὸ εἶναι ἴσα τῷ θεῷ.

John 1. 1.

1 Tim. 3. 16.

Acts 20. 2.

John 20. 28. Συγχωρεῖ λέγειν, καὶ μᾶλλον ἀποδέχεται, μὴ κωλύων αὐτόν. Athan. Orat. 3. contra Ar. p. 394.

Tit. 2. 13.

Heb. 2. 8.

1 John 5. 20.

Utroſque Dei appellatione ſignificavit Spiritus & eum qui ungitur Filium, & eum qui ungit, id eſt Patrem, Iren. 3. 6.

Rom. 9. 5.

● Apoc. 5. 13. πᾶν κτίσμα (where by the way ſeeing all creatures worſhip him, he is excluded from being a Creature.

Mar. 14. 61. Rom. 1. 25. 2 Cor. 11. 31.

Iſa. 9. 6.

In theſe places more clearly and immediately, in many other places obliquely, and according to fair conſequence; in many more probably, our Saviour is called God, God abſolutely without any interpretative reſtriction or diminution. And ſeeing the Holy Scripture is ſo careful of yielding occaſion to conceive more Gods than one, ſeeing it is ſo ſtrict in exacting the belief, worſhip and obedience of one only God, abſolutely ſuch; may we not well infer with S. Irenæus, Now, (ſaith he, ſpeaking indeed concerning the God of the Old Teſtament, whom the Gnoſticks did not acknowledge to be the higheſt and beſt God, but in words, applicable to the God of the New Teſtament, whom we adore: Now (ſaith he) neither the Lord, nor the Holy Ghoſt, nor the Apoſtles would ever have called any one definitively, nor abſolutely God, unleſs he were truly God: and, Never (ſaith he again) did the Prophets, or the Apoſtles name any other God, or call Lord, beſide the true and only God.

Vid. 1 John 3. 16.

Gal. 1. 1, 12.

Jud. 4.

Iſa. 35. 4.

Neque igitur Dominus, neque Spiritus Sanctus, neque Apoſtoli eum, qui non eſſet Deus, definitivè & abſolutè Deum nomināſſent, niſi eſſet verus Deus Iren. 3. 6.

Nunquam Prophetæ, neque Apoſtoli alium Deum nominaverunt, vel Dominum appellaverunt, præter verum, & ſolum Deum. Idem lib. 3. cap. 8.

That he is truly God, we might alſo from other appellations peculiar to God; from divineſt attributes, and divineſt operations aſcribed to him; from the worſhip and honour we are allowed and enjoined to yield him, farther ſhew; but theſe things (in compliance with the time and your patience) I ſhall omit.

Other appellations alſo peculiar unto the ſupreme God are aſſigned to him, as that moſt appropriate and incommunicable name Jehovah: (of which in the Prophet Iſay God himſelf ſays thus, I am the Lord, and there is none elſe: and Moſes; Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: even this is attributed to him: for This (ſaith Jeremy) is his name, whereby he ſhall be called, Jehovah our righteouſneſs; and of S. John the Baptiſt it was by Malachy foretold; that he ſhould prepare the way of Jehovah. The name Lord (anſwering to Jehovah) is both abſolutely, and with moſt excellent adjuncts commonly given him: The ſecond man, ſaith S. Paul, is the Lord from heaven; The Lord of all things he is called by the ſame Apoſtle; and, the one, or only Lord. To us (ſaith he) there is one Lord, by whom are all things. And, The Lord of glory, or moſt glorious Lord; (If they had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory;) And, The Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, he is called in S. John's Revelation (They ſhall, ſaith he, war with the Lamb, and the Lamb ſhall overcome them, for he is the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings:) We are alſo by precept enjoined, and by exemplary practice authorized to render unto our Saviour that honour and worſhip, which are proper and due to the only ſupreme God; for, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve, is the great law of true Religion: * 'Tis only belonging to God (as S. Athanaſius ſpeaks) to be worſhipped; a creature muſt not worſhip a creature, but a ſervant his Lord, and a creature its God. And, † They who call a creature Lord, and worſhip him as a creature, how (ſaith he) do they differ from the heathen? But of him it is ſaid, Let all the Angels of God worſhip him; of him myriads of Angels ſay, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain to receive the power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing: Yea all creatures in heaven and earth, and under the earth reſound the ſame acclamation, ſaying; To him that ſitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb be the bleſſing, and the honour, and the glory, and the worſhip, and the praiſe for ever. Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood —— to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Hence the throne of God, the Father, and of his Son are one and the ſame; The throne of God, and of the Lamb, are in it, ſaith S. John, ſpeaking of the heavenly city; For the Son (ſaith that great Father) reigning with the ſame royalty of his Father, is ſeated upon the ſame throne with his Father. To invocate the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is a practice characterizing and diſtinguiſhing Chriſtians from Infidels; as when S. Paul inſcribes his Epiſtle to the Church of Corinth, Together with all that call upon the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in every place; and when Saul is ſaid to have authority from the chief Prieſts to bind all that called upon his name, ſo that we need not to alledge the ſingle example of S. Stephen invoking our Lord. Indeed himſelf informs us, that The Father had committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men ſhould honour the Son even as they honour the Father. To wiſh and pray for grace and peace from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the uſual practice of the Apoſtles, and to diſpenſe them is a prerogative of his common to him with God his Father. To have the ſame Holy Spirit as the Father unmeaſurably, and to ſend it from himſelf, with commiſſions and inſtructions, and to communicate

Iſa. 45. 6, 18.
Deut. 6. 4.
Jer. 23. 6.
33. 16.
Mal. 3. 1.
Matt. 3. 3.
1 Cor. 15. 47.
Acts 10. 36.
1 Cor. 8. 6.
1 Cor. 2. 8.
Pſal. 24. 9.
Jud. 4.
Apoc. 17. 14.
19. 16.
Matt. 4. 10.

* Θεοῦ ἐστι μὲν τὸ προσκυνεῖσθαι· κτίσματι κτίσμα οὐ προσκυνεῖ, ἀλλὰ δοῦλος δεσπότην, καὶ κτίσμα Θεόν. Athan. in Ar. Or. 3. p. 394.

† Οὗτοι τὸ κτίσμα λέγοντες εἶναι τὸν κύριον, καὶ ὡς κτίσματι λατρεύοντες αὐτῷ, τὸ διαφέρουσιν Ἑλλήνων. Ath. Or. 1. in Ar. p. 296.

Heb. 1. 6.
Apoc. 5. 12.
13. 4. 11.

V. Apoc. 1. 5.

Apoc. 22. 3.

Τὴν τε γὰρ τοῦ πατρὸς βασιλείαν βασιλεύων ὁ υἱὸς ἐπὶ τὸν αὐτὸν θρόνον τῷ πατρὶ κάθηται. Athan. Orat. 2. in Ar.

1 Cor. 1. 2.
Acts 9. 14. 21.
Rom. 10. 12, 13, 14.
2 Tim. 2. 22.
John 5. 23, 24.
2 John 3.
Rom. 1. 7.
1 Cor. 13.
2 Theſ. 2. 16.
1 Theſ. 3. 12.
Tit. 3. 6.

municate it freely, are eſpecial characters of ſupreme Divinity, and much tranſcending any Creature; as S. Athanaſius obſerves: With authority (ſaid he,) to give the ſpirit doth not ſute a creature, or a thing made, but is an endowment of God. Whereas alſo we are often ſeverely prohibited from relying or confiding upon any man, or any creature (as in that of the Prophet: Curſed be the man, that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm) we are yet allowed, yea we are obliged to repoſe our truſt and confidence in Chriſt; Ye truſt in God (ſaith he himſelf to his Diſciples) truſt alſo in me; whence S. Paul calleth him emphatically, our hope; in his compellation to Timothy: Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, by the commandment of God our Saviour, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, our hope; which is the ſame title, that Jeremy attributes unto God: O the hope of Iſrael, the Saviour thereof, in time of trouble. Hence to him jointly with God the Father, and the divine Spirit that ſolemn benediction or prayer is directed; The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all; as alſo a parity of higheſt adoration is then together with the ſame divine Perſons yielded to him, when we are baptized in his name, and conſecrated to his ſervice.

Τὸ γὰρ μετ᾽ ἐξουσίας διδόναι τὸ πνεῦμα, οὐ κτίσματος, οὐδὲ ποιήματός ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ δῶρον. Ath. Orat. 3. in Ar. p. 388
Jer. 17. 5.
Joh. 14. 1.
1 Tim. 1. 1.
Col. 1. 27.
Jer. 14. 8.
2 Cor. 13. 13.

The divineſt attributes of God are alſo in the moſt abſolute manner, and perfect degree aſſigned to him; Eternity, as we diſcourſed before. Immenſity of preſence and power, then implied, when ſpeaking with the Jews he told them that he was then in heaven; and when he promiſes his Diſciples, that he will be with them, whenever they meet in his name; and alſo, that he will be with them to the end of the world. Infinite wiſdom and knowledge; for in him are hidden all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; and, Now are we ſure (ſay the Diſciples to him in S. John) that thou knoweſt all things: and, Lord, (ſaith S. Peter) thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee: and S. Paul calls him the wiſdom of God, and the power of God; wherefore ſince God's wiſedom is omniſcient, and his power omnipotent, ſo conſequently is he. In ſhort, whatever attribute or perfection God hath, the ſame hath he: for, All things, ſaith he, that the father hath, are mine, what creature without high preſumption could ſay thoſe words concerning the divine Spirit: He ſhall glorify me, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

Joh. 3. 13.
Matt. 18. 20.
Matt. 28. 20.
Col. 2. 3.
Joh. 16. 30.
John 21. 17.
1 Cor. 1. 24.
Joh. 16. 15.
Joh. 16. 14.

The divine attributes he expreſſeth by divineſt operations and works, which are aſcribed to him. It is a moſt divine work to create, this we ſhewed before to have been performed by him: To ſuſtain, and conſerve things in being is another like work; this he doth, For he (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) upholdeth all things by the word of his power: and, By him, ſaith S. Paul, all things conſiſt. To perform miracles, or doe things ſurmounting the laws, and thwarting the courſe of nature; ſuch as by mere word and will rebuking winds and ſeas, curing diſeaſes, ejecting Devils is the property of him, who (as the Pſalmiſt ſays) alone doeth great wonders. Particularly to raiſe the dead, is a prerogative reſerved by God in his own hand (for, The Lord killeth, and the Lord maketh alive; he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up) This our Lord often did, at his pleaſure: for, As the father raiſeth up the dead, and quickneth them; even ſo the ſon quickneth whom he will; and of himſelf he ſaith in the Apocalypſe: I have the keys of hell and of death. Eſpecially to raiſe himſelf, which he aſſumeth to himſelf; (I, ſaith he, lay down my life, that I may take it up again; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again: and, Demoliſh this temple (ſaith he

Heb. 1. 3.
Col. 1. 17.
Pſ. 72. 18. 86. 8, 10. 136. 4.
1 Sam. 2. 6.
Deut. 32. 39.
Apoc. 1. 18.
Joh. 10. 17, 18.
Joh. 2. 19.

he again) and in three days I will rear it; which it was impoſſible for him to doe, and unintelligible how it ſhould be done otherwiſe, than by the divinity reſident in him. To be καρδιογνώστης, ſearching mens hearts and diſcerning their ſecret thoughts is a peculiar work of him, that Jer. 7. 10. ſaith, I the Lord try the heart, I ſearch the reins; and of our Lord it is Joh. 2. 25. ſaid, He needed not, that any ſhould witneſs about a man, for he knew what was in man; and by many experiments he declared this power. To foreſee and foretell future contingencies to be peculiar to himſelf God ſignified when in the Prophet he thus challenged the objects of heathen Eſa. 41. 23. worſhip: Shew the things to come, that we may know ye are Gods; this our Lord did upon ſeveral occaſions, particularly in the caſe of Judas his Joh. 6. 64. treaſon: He knew (ſaith S. John) from the beginning, who they were, who did not believe, and who it was that ſhould betray him. This, I ſay, he did, not as the Prophets by particular arbitrary revelation, but immediately by his own Spirit; whereby even the Prophets themſelves 1 Pet. 1. 11. well illuſtrated and inſpired; for it was (as S. Peter ſays) The Spirit of Chriſt in them which teſtified before-hand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the 1 Tim. 6. 16. glories that ſhould follow. To ſee and know God (who inhabits inacceſſible light) is beyond a creatures capacity and ſtate; and yet belongs to
Joh. 6. 46. him. None (ſaith he) hath ſeen the father, ſave he which is of God; he Matt. 11. 27. hath ſeen the father: and, None knoweth the father, but the ſon, and he to whomſoever the ſon will reveal him. To remit ſins abſolutely he denied not to be the property of God, when his adverſaries thus objected it:
Mar. 2. 7. Who can forgive ſins, except God only? yet he aſſumed it to himſelf, and
Iſa. 43. 25. aſſerted it by a miracle. To ſave alſo God declared to be a peculiar work
Iſa. 43. 11. of his, when he ſaid it, and reiterated it in Eſay, and in Hoſea; I am
45. 21. the Lord, and beſide me there is no Saviour; which act yet, and which
Hoſ. 13. 4. title are no leſs proper to our Lord. In fine, briefly, he claims to himſelf at once the performance of every divine work, when he ſaith, Whatſoever
Joh. 5. 19. the father doeth, that alſo doth the ſon likewiſe.

Now all this ſtate and majeſty, all theſe glorious titles, attributes and works, can we imagine that he whoſe name is jealous (as it is in Exodus 34. 14.) and who is jealous of his name (as it is in Ezekiel 39. 25.) who Deut. 6. 15. ſaid it once and again in the Prophet Eſay, that he will not give his glory
Iſa. 42. 8. to another; can we conceive, I ſay, that he ſhould communicate them,
48. 11. or ſhould ſuffer them to be aſcribed to any mere creature, how eminent ſoever in nature or worth, how dear ſoever upon any regard? for indeed the higheſt creature producible muſt be infinitely diſtant from him, infinitely inferiour to him, infinitely baſe and mean in compariſon to him, as to any true perfection or dignity; nor therefore can any creature be in nature capable of ſuch names, ſuch characters, ſuch prerogatives; nor can in any reaſon or juſtice accept or bear them. Our Saviour therefore, unto whom by divine allowance and injunction they are attributed, who willingly admits them, who clearly aſſumes them to himſelf, is truly God.

Οὐδ' ἂν ἐτόλμησε δοῦλος ὢν, καὶ τῶν πολλῶν, εἷς ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ τρέφεσθαι τοῦ δεσπότου. Chryſ. in Joh. 1. 18.

5. Now the whole tenour of our Religion (according to dictates of Scripture moſt frequent and obvious) aſſerting the Unity of God; our Saviour therefore, being God, muſt of neceſſity partake the ſame individual eſſence with God his Father; and it muſt be certainly true, which Joh. 10. 30. he affirmeth concerning himſelf: I and the father are one (ἓν ἐσμὲν, are 1 Joh. 5. 7. the ſame thing, or one in nature; not εἷς ἐσμὲν, the ſame in perſon, or Joh. 14. 9. manner of ſubſiſtence) and what he again ſaith; He that hath ſeen me, Apoc. 21. 22. The Lord God Almighty is its temple and the lamb. hath ſeen the Father; and, I am in the Father, and the Father in me; by the divine eſſence common to both.

Yet hath he not this eſſence from himſelf, but by communication; for, As the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo he hath given the ſon to have life in himſelf. And ὁ ὢν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, He that is or hath his eſſence from God, is the periphraſis he gives of himſelf. He is not firſt in order, as an original, but is the Image of the inviſible God (an image indeed moſt adequate and perfectly like, as having the very ſame nature and eſſence. He is ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης (the effulgency of his Father's glory) and χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως, the character, or exact impreſſion of his ſubſtance. He is the internal word, or mind of God, which reſembles him, and yet is not different from him: He is the life, the wiſdom, the power of God, which terms denote the moſt intrinſick and perfect unity. So the Apoſtles by the moſt appoſite compariſons that nature affords, ſtrive to adumbrate the ineffable manner of that eternal communication of the divine nature from God the Father to our Saviour; the which is that generation, whereupon the relation, about which we ſpeak, is founded; or, becauſe of which, our Lord is moſt truly and properly called The only begotten ſon of God. For, if to produce a like in any kind or degree, be to generate; then to give a being without any diſſimilitude or diſparity is the moſt proper generation: our Saviour therefore hence truly is the Son of God the Father. And that he is ſo only, that no other beſide him hath been ever thus begotten, is evident; for that as no reaſon of ours could have informed us, that our Saviour himſelf was thus begotten, ſo no revelation hath ſhewed us that any other hath been; and we therefore cannot without extreme temerity ſuppoſe it. we are ſufficiently inſtructed that all other divine productions together with the relations grounded on them are different from this; by creation things receive a Being from God infinitely diſtant from, infinitely unequal and unlike to the Divine eſſence; and that filiation, or Sonſhip which doth ſtand upon adoption and grace is wholly in kind different from this. And the communication of the divine eſſence jointly from the Father and Son to the Holy Spiait, doth in manner (although the manner thereof be wholly incomprehenſible to us) ſo differ from this, that in the Holy Scripture (the only guide of our conception, and of our ſpeech in matters of this nature far ſurpaſſing our reaſon) is never called generation; and therefore we muſt not preſume to think, or call it ſo.

John 5. 26.
John 6. 46.
Col. 1. 15.
2 Cor. 4. 4.
John 14. 9.
Heb. 1. 3.

But let ſo much ſuffice for explication of the Point; a Point repreſented in Scripture ſo conſiderable, that the belief thereof (if it have that ſincerity, and that ſtrength, as to diſpoſe our hearts to a due love and reverence of the Son of God, attended with, or atteſted to by a faithfull obedience to his laws) doth raiſe us alſo to the privilege of becoming the Sons of God, and doth myſtically unite us to him, and elevateth us above the world; ſo doth S. John teach us: To as many (ſaith he) as received him (received him as the Son of God, or believed him to be ſo) to them gave he the power (or the privilege) to become the ſons of God, And. Whoſoever (ſaith he) ſhall confeſs, that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And, Who (ſaith he again) is he that overcometh the world, but he that beliveth that Jeſus is the Son of God? of ſo great importance is the Point, Of which I ſhall onely now farther briefly propoſe ſome practical applications.

Ὧ καὶ ἡμεῖς συμμορφούμενοι κατὰ χάριν, τὴν δι' αὐτοῦ, πρὸς τὴν τῆς υἱοθεσίας ἀναβαίνομεν δόξαν. Cyril. Al.
John 1. 12.
1 John 4. 15.
1 John 5. 5.

1. We may hence learn whence the performances and the ſufferings of Chriſt become of ſo high worth, and ſo great efficacy. Wonder not (ſaith S. Cyril the Catechiſt) if the whole world was redeemed; for it was not a bare man, but the onely Son of God that died for it. It is not ſo ſtrange, that God's only Son his mediation, ſhould be ſo acceptable and ſo effectual with God; that the bloud of God's deareſt Son ſhould be ſo pretious in God's ſight, that the interceſſion of one ſo near him ſhould be ſo prevalent with him. What could God refuſe to the Son of his love earneſtly ſoliciting and ſuing in our behalf? What debts might not ſo rich a price diſcharge? What anger could not ſo noble a ſacrifice appeaſe? what juſtice could not ſo full a diſpenſation ſatisfy? We were not (S. Peter telleth us) redeemed with corruptible things, with ſilver or gold (no; whole Indies of ſuch ſtuff would not have been ſufficient to ranſome one ſoul) but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot. It was not (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews remarketh) by the blood of goats and heifers, that our ſins were expiated (no; whole hecatombs would have nothing availed to that purpoſe) but by the blood of Chriſt, who by the eternal ſpirit offered up himſelf ſpotleſs unto God (who as the eternal Son of God did offer himſelf a ſacrifice not to be blamed or refuſed) It is (as S. John ſaith) the blood of Chriſt, the Son of God, which purgeth us from all ſin. And well indeed might a Perſon ſo infinitely noble, worthy and excellent be a ſufficient ranſome for whole worlds of miſerable offenders, and captives. Well might his voluntary undergoing ſuch inconveniences and infirmities of life, his ſuffering ſo diſgraceful and painful a death countervail the deſerved puniſhment of all mankind; well might his ſo humble, ſo free, ſo perfect ſubmiſſion to God's will infinitely pleaſe God, and render him propitious to us. Well might (as S. Athanaſius ſpeaks) the very appearing of ſuch a Saviour in the fleſh be a general ranſome of ſin, and become ſalvation to every creature; the which S. Paul thus expreſſeth: God ſending his own ſon in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin, condemned ſin in the fleſh; for if our diſpleaſing, injuring and diſhonouring him, who is ſo great and ſo good, doth aggravate our offence; the equal excellency and dignity of the Perſon, ſubmitting in our behalf to the performance of all due obedience, and all proper ſatisfaction, may proportionably advance the reparation offered, and compenſate the wrong done to God. Well therefore may we believe, and ſay with comfort, after the Apoſtle: Τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν; Who ſhall criminate againſt the elect of God? it is God that juſtifieth (it is the Son of God, it is God himſelf, who ſatisfies divine juſtice for us) who is there that condemns? it is Chriſt that died.

Μὴ θαυμάζῃς εἰ κόσμος ὅλος ἐλυτρώθη· οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἄνθρωπος ψιλὸς, ἀλλ' υἱὸς Θεοῦ μονογενὴς ὁ ὑπεραποθνήσκων, &c. Cyril. Catech. 13.

1 Peter 1. 18, 19.
Pſal. 49. 7.
Heb. 9. 12, 13, 14. 10. 4, 8, 10.
1 John 1. 7.
Ἡ ἔνσαρκος παρουσία τοῦ σωτῆρος θανάτου λύτρον, καὶ κτίσεως πάσης σωτηρία γέγονεν. Ath n. ad Adelph.
Rom. 8. 3.
Rom. 8. 33.

2. We may hence be informed, what reverence and adoration is due from us to our Saviour, and why we muſt honour the Son, even as we honour the Father, why even all the Angels muſt worſhip him; why every thing in heaven, and earth, and beneath the earth muſt bend the knee (that is, muſt yield veneration and obſervance) to him; why by all creatures whatever the ſame preeminence is to be aſcribed, and the ſame adoration paid jointly and equally to God the Father Almighty, who ſits upon the throne, and to the Lamb his bleſſed Son, who ſtandeth at his right hand. Such divine glory and worſhip we are obliged to yield him becauſe he is the Son of God, one in eſſence, and therefore equal in Majeſty, with his Father: were it not ſo it would be injury to God, and ſacrilege to doe it; God would not impart his glory, we ſhould not attribute it unto another. So this conſideration grounds our duty, and juſtifies our practice of worſhipping our Lord; it alſo encourages us to perform it with faith and hope; for thence we may be aſſured, that he being the Son of God omniſcient doth hear and mind us; being the Son of God omnipotent, he can thoroughly help and ſave us; being alſo as

John 5. 23.
Heb. 1. 6.
Phil. 2. 9.
Apoc. 5. 13.

ſuch abſolutely and immenſely good, he will be always diſpoſed to afford what is good and convenient for us in our need.

3. We hence may perceive the infinite goodneſs of God toward us, Tit. 3. 4. and our correſpondent obligation to love and thankfulneſs toward him. Eph. 2. 4. In this (ſaith S. John) was manifeſted the love of God towards us, becauſe 1 John 4. 9. God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through 10. him: In this (adds he) is love (love indeed, love admirable and inconceivable) not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his only begotten Son to be a propitiation for our ſins. Can there be imagined any equal, any like expreſſion of kindneſs, of mercy, of condeſcenſion, as for a Prince, himſelf glorious and happy, moſt freely to deliver up, out from his own boſom, his own only moſt dearly beloved Son, to the ſuffering moſt baſe contumelies, and moſt grievous pains for the welfare of his enemies, of rebels and traitours to him? Even ſuch hath been God's goodneſs to us: The Son of God, the heir of eternal Majeſty, was by his Father ſent down from heaven (from the boſome of his glory and bliſs) to put on the form of a ſervant, to endure the inconveniences of this mortal ſtate, to undergo the greateſt indignities and ſorrows; that we, who were alienated, and enemies in our mind by wicked works, Col. 1. 21. might be reconciled to God; might be freed from wrath and miſery; might be capable of everlaſting life and ſalvation: ſutable to ſuch unex- 1 John 4. 9. preſſible goodneſs ought our gratitude to be toward God: what affectionate ſenſe in our hearts, what thankful acknowledgments with our mouths, what dutiful obſervance in all our actions doth ſo wonderful an inſtance of mercy and goodneſs deſerve and require from us?

4. This conſideration may fitly ſerve to beget in us hope and confidence in God upon any occaſions, of need or diſtreſs to ſupport and comfort us in all our afflictions: for, He that ſo loved us, that he gave John 3. 16. his only begotten ſon for our ſalvation and happineſs; how can we ever ſuſpect him as unwilling to beſtow on us whatever elſe ſhall to his wiſedom appear needful or convenient for us? He that out of pure charity and pity toward us did part with a jewel ſo ineſtimable, how can any thing ſeem much for him to give us: it is the conſolatory diſcourſe of S. Paul: He (ſaith the Apoſtle) that did not ſpare his own ſon, but delivered him up for us all; how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? Rom. 8. 32. all things that we truly need, all things that we can reaſonably deſire, all things which are good and fit for us.

5. S. John applieth this conſideration to the begetting charity in us toward our brethren. Beloved (ſaith he) if God ſo loved us (as to ſend 1 John 4. 12. his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live by him) we ought alſo to love one another. If God ſo lovingly gave up his only Son for our ſakes; what in grateful regard to him (in obſervant imitation of him) what expreſſions, I ſay, of charity and good will ought we to yield toward our brethren? what endeavours, what goods, what life of ours ſhould ſeem too dear unto us for to expend or impart for their good? ſhall we be unwilling to take any pains, or ſuffer any loſs for them, for whom (together with our ſelves) the Son of God hath undergone ſo much trouble, ſo much diſgrace, ſo much hardſhip? ſhall we, I ſay, be uncharitable when the Son of God hath laid upon us ſuch an obligation, hath ſet before us ſuch an example?

6. This conſideration alſo may inform us, and ſhould mind us concerning the dignity of our nature and of our condition; and conſequently how in reſpect to them we ſhould behave our ſelves. If God did ſo much conſider and value man, as for his benefit to debaſe his only Son;

if the Son of God himſelf hath deigned to aſſume our nature, and to advance it into a conjunction with the divine nature, then is man ſurely no inconſiderable or contemptible thing; then ſhould we deſpiſe no man, whom God hath ſo regarded and ſo honoured; then ought we not to neglect or ſlight our ſelves: if we were worthy of God's ſo great care, we ought not to ſeem unworthy of our own. We ought to value our ſelves, not ſo indeed as to be proud of ſo undeſerved honour, but ſo as to be ſenſible thereof, and to ſute our demeanour thereto. Reflecting upon theſe things ſhould make us to diſdain to doe any thing unworthy that high regard of God, and that honourable alliance unto him. It ſhould breed in us noble thoughts, worthy deſires, and all excellent diſpoſitions of ſoul conformable to ſuch relations; it ſhould engage us
Heb. 2. 11. unto a conſtant practice, beſeeming them, whom God hath ſo dignified, whom the Son of God hath vouchſafed to make his brethren: by affecting any thing mean or ſordid, by doing any thing baſe or wicked, we greatly undervalue our ſelves, we muſt diſparage that glorious Family; into which by the Son of God his incarnation we are inſerted. Ταύτης οὖν τῆς τιμῆς ἀξίαν τὴν φιλοσοφίαν ἐπιδειξώμεθα, καὶ μηδὲν ἔχωμεν κοινὸν πρὸς τὴν γῆν· Let us therefore (ſaith S. Chryſ.) ſhew a Philoſophy worthy of this honour; having nothing common with this earth. (in Joh. 1. Hom. 18.)

7. This conſideration doth much aggravate all impiety and ſin. Wilfull ſin upon this account appeareth not only diſobedience to our Creatour and natural Lord, but enormous offence againſt the infinite bounty, and mercy, and condeſcenſion of our Saviour; a moſt heinous abuſing the Son of God, who came down into this homely and hum-
Acts 3. 26. ble ſtate on purpoſe to bleſs us in turning every one of us from our
Rom. 6. 22. iniquities; to free us from the grievous dominion, and from the woful effects of ſin; we thereby fruſtrate the moſt gracious intentions of God, and defeat the moſt admirable project that could be for our
Heb. 6. 6. benefit and ſalvation: We thereby trample upon the ſon of God, recrucify
10. 28. him, and put him to open ſhame: ſo the Apoſtle to the Hebrews telleth us, implying the heinous guilt, and ſad conſequence of doing ſo:
Heb. 10. 28. He (ſaith the Apoſtle) that deſpiſed Moſes his law died without mercy; —— Of how much ſorer puniſhment, ſuppoſe ye, ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath troden under foot the ſon of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy thing?

8. Laſtly, This conſideration may ſerve to beget in us a high eſteem of the diſpenſation Evangelical, and hearty ſubmiſſion thereto.
Luc. 20. 13. Almighty God (as is ſignified in the Parable) after ſeveral proviſions for the good of mankind, and ſeveral meſſages from heaven to the world here, did at laſt ſend his Son, with this expectation: Surely they will reverence my Son: And ſurely much reaſon he had to expect the greateſt reverence to be yielded to his Perſon; the readieſt credence, and obedience to his word. For if any declaration of God concerning his will, or our duty, however proceeding from him (either by dictate of natural reaſon, or by the inſtruction of Prophets, or by the miniſtery of Angels) ought to be entertained with great reſpect and obſervance; much more ſhould the overtures of greateſt mercy and favour exhibited by his own Son (on purpoſe ſent unto us to diſcover them) be embraced with higheſt regard, and humbleſt reverence, and moſt hearty compliance. 'Tis the Apoſtle to the Hebrews
Heb. 1. 2.
2. 1, 3. his diſcourſe, and inference: Therefore (ſaith he, therefore, becauſe

God hath in theſe laſt times ſpoken unto us by his Son) we ought περισσοτέρως προσέχειν to give more (abundant, or more) earneſt heed to the things, which we have heard; for (ſubjoins he) How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation; which at firſt began to be ſpoken by (our) Lord; and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him. Ταῦτ' οὖν διηνεκῶς στρέφοντες, καὶ ἀναλογιζόμενοι ἐκκαθαίρωμεν ἡμῶν τὸν βίον, καὶ λαμπρὸν ποιήσωμεν. Continually therefore revolving and recounting theſe things, let us cleanſe our life, and make it bright: So we conclude with good S. Chryſoſtome.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. pag. 623, &c.

Almighty God, who haſt given us thy only begotten Son to take our nature upon him; grant that we being regenerate, and made thy children by adoption and grace may daily be renewed by thy Holy Spirit, through the ſame our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the ſame ſpirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Our Lord.

SERMON XXII.

EPH. IV. 5.

One Lord.

Luc. 2. 11. Ὅς ἐστι Χριστός, Κύριος.

AS the name of God (truly common to all three Perſons of the Bleſſed Trinity) is (not in way of excluſion, but) according to a myſterious peculiarity (κατ' οἰκονομίαν, in way of diſpenſation accommodated to our inſtruction, as the Greek Fathers expreſs it) attributed to God the Father, who is the fountain of the Deity, and firſt in order among the divine Perſons; ſo likewiſe is the Name Lord, truly common to the other perſons, peculiarly (though alſo not excluſively) aſcribed and appropriated unto God the Son; who therefore in the ſtyle of the New Teſtament, which more fully have revealed him, is called ſometimes abſolutely Lord, ſometimes the Lord Jeſus, ſometimes our Lord; to acknowledge and call him ſo being the eſpecial duty, and the diſtinctive mark or character of a Chriſtian: for, to us, as there is one God and Father of all, and one Holy Spirit, ſo there is (as S. Paul here in my Text doth ſay) One Lord. And otherwhere: There be (ſaith he, there be according to popular eſtimation, and worldly uſe) Gods many, and Lords many, but to us there is one God the Father, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Hence to call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (that is, by confeſſion and practice to acknowledge him our Lord) gives a periphraſis, or deſcription of a Chriſtian (To the Church of God that is in Corinth, ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus called to be Saints, together with all that call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in every place; that is, together

1 Cor. 8. 6.

1 Cor. 1. 2.
Act. 9. 14.

together with all Chriſtians every where, ſo doth S. Paul inſcribe his 1 Cor. 12. 3. firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians) whence, No man (ſaith he in the ſame Epiſtle) can call Jeſus Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt; that is, no man can heartily embrace Chriſtianity without the gracious aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit. The reaſon of which Appellation, being ſo peculiarly attributed unto Chriſt, may be, for that beſide the natural right unto dominion over us, neceſſarily appertaining to him as our God, who hath made us, and doth preſerve us; there are divers other reſpects and grounds ſupervenient, and accruing to him from what he hath undertaken, performed and undergone for us, in ſpontaneous obedience to the will of God his Father, upon which alſo the Title of Lord is due unto him: the which to declare firſt, then to apply them unto our practice ſhall be the ſubject and ſcope of our preſent diſcourſe.

In whatſoever notion we take the word Lord; either as a Prince over Subjects, or as a Maſter over Servants, or as an Owner of goods, or as a Preceptor, and Preſident over Diſciples, or as a Leader and Captain to followers; or as a perſon ſingularly eminent above inferiours; he is according to all ſuch notions truly Our Lord.

According to whatever capacity we diſtinctly or abſtractively conſider him, either as the Son of God, or as the Son of Man; or as θεάνθρωπος (jointly God and Man, united in one Perſon) as Jeſus our Saviour, as the Chriſt of God, he is our Lord:

If we examine all imaginable foundations of juſt dominion, eminence in nature the power, the collation of being, or preſervation thereof; donation, conqueſt, purchaſe, merit, voluntary compact, upon all theſe he hath a right of Lordſhip over us duly grounded.

I. He is, I ſay, firſt our Lord according to every notion, and acception of the word Lord.

He is our Prince and Governour, we are his ſubjects and vaſſals:
Heb. 1. 8. for, to him it was ſaid, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre. Of him it was propheſied; Eſ. 9. 6, 7. that the government ſhould be upon his ſhoulder, and that of the encreaſe of his government and peace there ſhould be no end; He is the King of Iſ- rael, or of the Church, who, as the Angel told the Bleſſed Virgin, ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob for ever and ever. God hath given him head over all things to the Church. So is he a Prince moſt abſolute, endewed with ſovereign right and power, crowned with glorious Majeſty, en-Luc. 1. 33. Eph. 1. 22. joying all pre-eminences, and exerciſing all acts ſutable to Regal dignity, 1 Cor. 15. 27. in reſpect to all things, and particularly in regard to us.

He alſo is our Maſter, and we are his Servants; the Church is a 1 Tim. 3. 15. Matt. 24. 45. houſe and family, whereof he is the οἰκοδεσπότης, or Houſholder; If (ſaith Matt. 10. 25. he) they have called the Maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more thoſe of his houſhold (τοὺς οἰκιακοὺς αὐτοῦ, famulos ejus, his domeſticks, or Eph. 3. 15. menial ſervants) All the family in heaven and earth are named of him (ſaith S. Paul) that is, the whole Church (both triumphant above in heaven, and militant here on earth) is his family, or called the family
Heb. 3. 6. of him, as of its Lord. Chriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) is as a 1 Cor. 7. 22. Son over his houſe, whoſe houſe are we. He that is called free, is a ſervant
Col. 3. 24. Eph. 6. 9. of Chriſt: and, We ſerve the Lord Chriſt; and, We have a Maſter in
Col. 4. 1. heaven, ſaith S. Paul: Bleſſed (ſaith our Lord himſelf) is that ſervant, Matt. 24. 46. whom his Lord coming ſhall find ſo doing; that is, whom Chriſt, our Lord, coming to judgment ſhall find diſcharging his duty faithfully. He indeed as a good Maſter governeth, ordereth and maintaineth his Family well; furniſheth and feedeth it, with all neceſſary proviſions; protect-eth it from all want, and all miſchief; appointeth to every one therein 1 Cor. 3. 8.

his due work and ſervice, and payeth to each his due wages and recompence. Luc. 6. 35. Ap. 22. 12.

He is alſo our Owner; or the Poſſeſſour and Proprietary of us; The 2 Pet. 2. 1.
Lord that bought us, as S. Peter calls him; and conſequently, who poſſeſſeth and enjoyeth us. We are not our own (ſaith S. Paul) for we 1 Cor. 6. 19.
were bought with a price: whence we are become entirely ſubject to his 20. 7. 23.
diſpoſal.

He likewiſe is our Preceptor, or Teacher; or that is, the Lord of our Underſtanding, which is ſubject to the belief of his dictates; and the Lord of our Practice, which is to be directed by his precepts. Ye (ſaith Joh. 13. 13.
he) call me Maſter, and Lord, (διδάσκαλον, καὶ κύριον, Doctour and Lord) and ye ſay well, for ſo I am: And, Be ye not called Maſters (καθηγηταὶ, Matt. 23. 10. guides in doctrine) for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt. And, Every 2 Cor. 10. 5. thought of ours (ſaith S. Paul) is to be captivated to the obedience of Chriſt: Such, as infallibly wiſe, and perfectly veracious, he neceſſarily is unto us; ſuch he is, as ſent on purpoſe by God to enlighten our Joh. 1.
minds with the knowledge of heavenly truth; and to guide our feet into Luc. 1. 79.
the ways of peace; whence we cannot but be obliged to embrace his doctrine, and to obſerve the rules which he preſcribeth us.

He is therefore alſo our Captain and Leader; whoſe orders we muſt obſerve, whoſe conduct we ſhould follow, whoſe pattern we are to regard and imitate in all things: He is ſtyled ἀρχηγὸς πίστεως, the Captain of our 1 Pet. 2. 21.
faith, ἀρχηγὸς ζωῆς, the Captain of our life, ἀρχηγὸς σωτηρίας, the Captain Heb 12. 2.
of our ſalvation, ἀρχιποίμην, our chief Shepherd, the Apoſtle, and 2. 10.
high Prieſt of our profeſſion; the Biſhop of our Souls. In fine, he (accor- Act. 3. 15. 5. 31.
ding to what S. Paul ſays) ἐν πᾶσι πρωτεύει, hath in all things, the primacy, 1 Pet. 2. 25.
and preeminence; ſo that according to all notions and ſenſes of 5. 4. Heb. 3. 1.
Lordſhip he is our Lord; but chiefly he is meant ſuch in the principal Col. 1. 18.
ſenſe, as having an abſolute right and power to command and govern us.

II. Chriſt is alſo our Lord according to every capacity or reſpect of nature or office, that we can conſider appertaining to him.

1. He is our Lord as by nature the Son of God, partaking of the divine eſſence and perfections: he as ſuch being endewed with eminence ſuperlative, and with power irreſiſtible; as ſuch having created all things, and upholding all things; whence all things neceſſarily and juſtly are ſubject to his order and diſpoſal; all things according to all right and reaſon are to be governed, poſſeſſed and uſed according to his pleaſure.
Hence is that moſt auguſt, and moſt peculiar name, JEHOVAH (denoting either independency, and indefectibility of ſubſiſtence, or uncontrollable and infallible efficacy in operation, or both of them together; which therefore is by the Greek Interpreters fitly rendred κύριος, and after them Lord by our Tranſlatours; for the word κύρειν doth ſignifie to ſubſiſt, and κῦρος is uſed to denote efficacy, ratification, ſtedfaſt power or authority) is aſſigned to him; This is his name whereby he ſhall Jer. 23. 16.
be called, JEHOVAH OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS, ſaith Jeremy of him: and, I will have mercy upon the houſe of Judah, and will ſave Hoſ. 1. 7. them by Jehovah their God (ſaith God in Hoſea concerning the ſalvation accompliſhed by him) and in the Prophet Zechary, he thus ſpeaks of himſelf: Sing, and rejoyce, O daughter of Sion, for lo I come, and I will Zech. 10. 12.
dwell in the midſt of thee, and thou ſhalt know, that the Lord of hoſts hath Jehovah à Jehova.
ſent me unto thee: where it is ſaid, that Jehovah, being ſent by Jehovah Gen. 19. 24 ſhould come and dwell in the Church, enlarged by acceſſion of the Gentiles; apud Iren. 3. 6.

tiles; who can that be, but our Lord Chriſt, who dwelt among us, and was by God his Father ſent unto us? And what in the Old Teſtament is ſpoken of Jehovah is by infallible Expoſitours in the New attributed to our Lord: Sanctifie Jehovah Sabaoth, and he ſhall be for a ſtone of ſtumbling, Iſa. 8. 13, 14. and for a rock of offence; ſo did Iſaias ſpeak; and his words are 1 Pet. 2. 7. Rom. 9. 33. by S. Peter and by S. Paul applied to Chriſt. Whoſoever ſhall call upon
Joel 2. 32. the name of Jehovah ſhall be delivered; ſo did the Prophet Joel foretell
Rom. 10. 9, 10, 13. concerning the latter days; and S. Paul accommodates it to the ſalvation
Mal. 3. 1. obtained by confeſſing the name of Chriſt. In Malachy, Jehovah
Matt. 3. 3. ſaith, that he would ſend his meſſenger to prepare his way before him; this Mar. 1. 2, 3. Joh. 1. 23. according to the Evangeliſts interpretation was verified in S. John the Lu. 7. 27. 3, 4. Baptiſt his preparing the way before our Saviour. Likewiſe, what Eſay
Iſa. 40. 3. ſaid: The voice of him that cried in the wilderneſs, prepare the way of Jehovah, is by all the Evangeliſts applied to the Baptiſt, as the voice crying, and to our Saviour, as the Lord coming: Chriſt therefore is the Lord
Jehovah, independent, and immutable in eſſence, and in power.

The word Adon alſo, which more immediately and properly doth ſignify dominion (and which put abſolutely doth belong to God) is Pſal. 110. 1. plainly attributed to our Saviour. The Lord (Jehovah) ſaid to my Lord
Mark 22. 43. (le Adoni,) that is, God the Father to Chriſt, the Son, yet Lord of Mal. 3. 1. David; as our Saviour himſelf expounds it. And, The Lord (ha Adon)
ſhall come to his temple; ſo in Malachy 'tis prophecied concerning the John 20. 28. coming of Chriſt. According to this notion was it, that S. Thomas, being by our Saviour's reſurrection convinced of his divinity cried out;
My God, and my Lord; In this ſenſe it was, that S. Peter called our Saviour
John 21. 17. Lord, when he aſcribed omniſcience to him, ſaying, Lord, thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee. Upon this account, John 3. 31. S. John the Baptiſt ſaid, He that cometh from above is above all things, 1 Cor. 15. 47. which S. Paul expreſſeth thus: The ſecond man is the Lord from heaven.
So is Chriſt, as he is God, our Lord.

2. He is alſo our Lord, as Man, by the voluntary appointment and free donation of God his Father; in regard to the excellency of his Perſon, and to the merit of his performances. God did by gift and delegation confer upon him a ſupereminent degree of dignity and authority, with power to excecute the moſt Lordly acts of enacting, of diſpenſing with, and of abrogating laws; of judging, of remitting offences; of diſpenſing rewards, and of puniſhing tranſgreſſours. The Scripture is copious and emphatical in declaring this Point both in general terms, and Acts 2. 36. with reſpect to particulars. Let all the houſe of Iſrael (ſaith S. Peter) know aſſuredly; that God hath made him Lord, and Chriſt, even this Jeſus, John 17. 2. whom ye did crucify, And, Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh:
Luc. 10. 22. All things are delivered unto me by my Father: All power is given me in Matt. 11. 27. Mark 28. 18. heaven and upon earth. The Father hath loved the Son, and hath given
John 3. 35. 13. 3. all things into his hand; ſaith he concerning himſelf: and, Being found in faſhion as a man he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs; wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jeſus
Phil. 2. 8. every knee ſhould bow — and that every tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus Eph. 1. 20. 1 Pet. 3. 22. is the Lord: And, God raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him at his right hand in the heavenly places far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name, that is named not onely in this world, but alſo in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his
Heb. 2. 0, feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the Church: and, We ſee Jeſus, who was made a little lower than the Angels for the ſuffering of death crowned with glory, and honour: and, The Lamb which was ſlain is Apoc. 5. 12.

worthy to receive power, and riches, and wiſedom, and ſtrength, and honour, and bleſſing: and, When the Son of man ſits upon the throne of his Mar. 19. 28.
glory, ye ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael. 25. 31. 26. 64.
In which places, as in others of the ſame importance, it is ſignified generally, that beſide the dominion, naturally belonging to our Saviour as God, there hath been conferred on him as man an univerſal dominion over all things in regard to what as man he did and ſuffered; and that in him (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews obſerveth and diſcourſeth) that hath Heb. 2. 7, 8.
been ſignally fulfilled, which the Pſalmiſt acknowledgeth, and praiſeth Pſal. 8. 7.
God for, in reſpect to man: Thou crownedſt him with glory and honour, and didſt ſet him over the works of thy hand, and didſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet. In him alſo was accompliſhed the prophetical viſion of Daniel: I ſaw in the night viſions, and behold one like the Son Dan. 7. 13, 14.
of man — And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages ſhould ſerve him: his dominion is an everlaſting dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his kingdom, that which ſhall not be deſtroyed. It is alſo particularly expreſſed of him, that to him as Man is committed a power legiſlative; I ſay unto you, I command you, is the ſtyle he commonly uſed: and, The Son of man (ſaid he) is Joh. 15. 10.
Lord of the Sabbath (that is, hath a power to diſpenſe with the obſervation 12. 14.
thereof, or to abrogate the poſitive law concerning it; which by parity of reaſon infers a general power of conſtituting and reſcinding Laws of the like nature.) The prerogative alſo of remitting ſins was given him: That ye may (ſaith he) know, that the Son of man hath power Matt. 9. 6.
on earth to forgive ſins (then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſie) ariſe, take Luc. 5. 24.
up thy bed and walk: and, The God of our fathers (ſaith S. Peter) hath Acts. 5. 30, 31.
raiſed Jeſus, whom ye ſlew, and hanged on a tree; him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince, and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins. The adminiſtration of juſtice and judgment Act. 11. 42.
he thus alſo hath: for he is, ὡρισμένος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ κριτὴς, Ordained by 17. 31.
God the judge of quick and dead; God hath appointed to judge the world, ἐν ἀνδρὶ ᾧ ὥρισε, by the man whom he hath ordained: The Father judgeth Joh. 5. 22. 27.
no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son — and hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶ becauſe, or whereas he is the Son of man: So alſo for the prerogative of diſtributing rewards, and inflicting puniſhments: The Son of man (ſaith he) ſhall Matt. 16. 27.
come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and reward every man according to his work. Thus by emphatical expreſſion it is ſignified, that Chriſt, as man, is our Lord, by God's appointment and donation. We may alſo conſider, that our Saviour as the Son of David, and conſequently by a right of ſucceſſion, according to divine ordination, as King of Iſrael (to the which all Chriſtians are become Proſelytes; for προσεληλύθατε Σιὼν ὄρει, Ye are Proſelytes to Mount Sion, and to the city of the Heb. 12. 22.
living God, the heavenly Hieruſalem, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) is our Lord; according to that of the Angel to the Bleſſed Virgin: He Luc. 1. 32.
ſhall be great, and ſhall be called the Son of the Higheſt; and the Lord God ſhall give him the throne of David his Father; and he ſhall reign over the houſe of Iſrael for ever and ever: Of the encreaſe of his government there ſhall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom to order it, and to eſtabliſh it with judgment and with juſtice from henceforth Iſa. 9. 7.
even for ever: ſo Eſay foretold of him; and many like paſſages occur in Acts. 2. 30.
other Prophets.

3. He alſo conſidered as θεάνθρωπος (as God and man, united in one Perſon) is plainly our Lord. For whatever naturally did appertain to God, whatever freely was (in way of gift or reward) communicated to man, doth accrue to the perſon, and is attributed thereto in conſequence of the union hypoſtatical, or perſonal. It was indeed by virtue thereof, that the man Chriſt Jeſus became capable of ſo high preferments; where-Acts 10. 36. fore moſt properly upon this conſideration is Chriſt the Lord of all, as 1 Cor. 15. 27. S. Peter ſtyles him; having all things (him onely excepted, who did ſubject all things to him) put under his feet.

4. If we alſo conſider him as Jeſus, our Saviour, that notion doth involve acts of dominion, and thence reſulteth a title thereto: Nothing more becomes a Lord, than to protect, and ſave; none better deſerves the right, and the name of a Lord, than a Saviour; wherefore thoſe
Iſa 43. 11. titles are well conjoined: I am the Lord, and beſide me there is no Sa-
Acts 5. 31. viour, ſaith God in Iſay of himſelf; and, Him hath God exalted to be a Prince, and a Saviour to his right hand, ſaith Saint Peter concerning Jeſus.

5. Likewiſe if he be conſidered as the Chriſt, that eſpecially implieth him anointed, and conſecrated to ſovereign dominion, as King of the Church: well therefore did the Angel expreſs his joyfull meſſage when
Luc. 2. 11. he told the ſhepherds: I bring you good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord: and S. Peter well joined them, ſaying:
Acts 2. 36. Let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt. Thus in all reſpects is Chriſt our Lord.

III. Let us alſo farther briefly ſurvey the ſeveral grounds upon which dominion may be built, and we ſhall ſee, that upon all accounts he is our Lord.

Ὁ πρῶτος (ὡς ἔοικεν) καὶ κυριώτατος νόμος, τῷ σώζεσθαι δεομένῳ, τὸν σώζειν δυνάμενον ἄρχοντα κατὰ φύσιν ἀποδίδωσι. Plut. in Pelop.

Προσήκει γοῦν ἀεὶ τῷ κρείττονι κατὰ φύσιν ἡγεῖσθαι τοῦ χείρονος——Clem. Alex. Strom 7. (pag. 506.)

Τὸ δυνάμενον φύσει προορᾷν ἄρχον φύσει, καὶ δεσπόζον φύσει. Ariſt. Pol. 1. 1, 3, 4.

1. An uncontrollable power and ability to govern is one certain ground of dominion; he that is endewed therewith, it is neceſſary that we ſhould ſubmit to him, it is reaſonable willingly to admit him for our Lord: Perſons ſo qualified Ariſtotle telleth us have a natural title to dominion; as on the contrary perſons weak (in power or in wiſdom) unable to protect themſelves, and unfit to manage things are naturally ſubjects and ſervants. This ground eminently agrees to him, as being by nature the Almighty God, who can
Joh. 13. 3. doe all things, whom nothing can reſiſt; and alſo for that all things are given into his hand, all things are put under his feet. Hence he is moſt Matth. 16. 18. able to protect us; the gates of hell cannot prevail againſt his Church;
Joh 10. 28. none can ſnatch us out of his hand; he is able to ſave to the uttermoſt them
Heb. 7. 25. that come to God through him.

2. To make, to preſerve, to provide and diſpenſe maintenance are alſo clear grounds of dominion; for what can we more juſtly claim dominion over, than over our own inventions and works; over that which we continually keep and nouriſh; over that which wholly depends upon Acts. 17. 28. us, and ſubſiſts merely by our pleaſure? Since then in him we live, and move, and have our being; ſince we have derived all our being from him (our being natural as men, and ſpiritual as Chriſtians) and are by him,
Heb. 1. 3. who upholdeth all things, ſuſtained therein; ſince as to all our powers,
Col. 1. 17. and in all our actions we depend upon him; for without him we can doe
Joh. 15. 5.
2 Cor. 3. 5. nothing, and all our ſufficiency is of him; he ſurely is our Lord, having an an abſolute right to diſpoſe of us, to order us, and to uſe us according to his diſcretion and pleaſure. We thence have reaſon to render that acknowledgment of the Elders in the Revelation to him: Worthy art Apoc. 4. 11.

thou, O Lord, to receive the glory, and the honour, and the power; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy will they are, and they were created; to confeſs, and celebrate him as our Lord, for that, as it is in the Pſal. 100. 3.
Pſalm, It is he that made us, and not we our ſelves;
we are his people and the ſheep of his paſture. * Thus by birth, and privilege of nature, as the Son of God, heir apparent, and conſort of eternal Majeſty;
thus alſo as concurring with his Father in the divi-neſt actions of creation and providence is Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God, our Lord.

But beſide theſe natural grounds of dominion over us, there are ſeveral others conſiderable, each of them according to the ſtanding rules of juſtice and equity, ſufficient to found a good title thereto. We (conſidering our ſelves as the ſons of Adam, in that ſtate wherein Chriſt found us, or wherein we ſhould now be, if he had not vouchſafed to come and redeem us) had attempted to withdraw our ſelves from our due ſubjecti-on to God by wilful rebellion and diſobedience, we thence had forfeited the benefit of God's favourable protection and providence for our good:
we had become Outlaws, dead in law; (dead in treſpaſſes and ſins) we inſtead of being ſubjects and ſervants of God were become (or ſhould Eph. 2. 1, 5.
have been) aliens, and enemies to God by wicked works, according to the Col. 1. 21.
natural blindneſs of our minds not knowing (or acknowledging) God; in Rom. 8. 7, 8, 9.
our affections eſtranged and averſe from him, in our practice oppoſite to his holy will and righteous laws, we in a manner were got out of God's poſſeſſion; were in reſpect to him become imbecil and loſt: we were Luc. 19. 10.
like ſheep gone aſtray out of the fold of his gracious care and governance; Matt. 18. 11.
we had got other Maſters, and were come into other hands; like thoſe, 10. 6. 15. 24.
who in the Prophet confeſs; O Lord our God, other Lords beſide thee Pſ. 119. 176.
have had dominion over us. The Devil had got us into his power; we Iſa. 26. 13.
were captivated (or taken alive, as S. Paul phraſeth it, ἐζωγρημένοι) 2 Tim. 2. 26.
at his will; we were detained under wretched ſubjection, overpowred, Act. 10. 38. Col. 2. 13.
and oppreſſed by him; who therefore is called the Prince, and the God John 14. 30.
of this world; to whoſe ſuggeſtions it hearkened, whoſe will it obſerved, 16. 11. Eph. 6. 12.
whom it was prone even to worſhip and adore. The world alſo (whoſe 2. 2. friendſhip is enmity to God, which all lieth in wickedneſs) had prevailed 2 Cor. 4. 4.
over us, ſo as to walk according to it; to be governed by its corrupt princi- Jam. 4. 4. 1 John 2. 15.
ples, and vicious practices; to be driven by its force, and drawn by its 1 John 5. 19.
allurement into evil. We were captives, and ſlaves alſo to the law of ſin ru- Eph. 2. 2. Rom. 7. 23.
ling in our members; ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures; being in our acti- 6. 12, 16, &c. ons guided by a carnal mind, oppoſite to God and goodneſs; ſwayed by Tit. 3. 3. Rom. 8. 7, 8.
ſenſual appetites, and hurried by violent paſſions to what is bad. This was the condition of mankind generally when Chriſt came, and would have ſo continued; but out of it he came to deliver us; by the merit of his blood, and power of his grace, to free us from the oppreſſions of all thoſe uſurping powers; to recover and reſtore us into the propriety, poſſeſſion and protection of God. He came to ſeek and to ſave that which Luc. 19. 10.
was loſt: to ſave us from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate Matt. 10. 6. Luc. 1. 71.
us; to deliver us out of the power of darkneſs, and to tranſlate us into his Col. 1. 13.
own Kingdom; the kingdom of righteouſneſs, peace and joy. So that he Rom. 14. 17. hath acquired us to himſelf; we being now περιποίησις, an acquiſt made by him (as S. Paul calleth us) and λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν (as S. Peter ſpeaks) Eph. 1. 14.

---

* Χριστὸς φύσει κύριος, καὶ βασιλεὺς ἀΐδιος ὤν, οὐχ ὅτε ἀποστέλλεται μᾶλλον γίνεται κύριος· οὐδὲ τότε ἀρχὴν λαμβάνει τοῦ εἶναι κύριος, καὶ βασιλεύς, ἀλλ' ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀεὶ τοῦτο καὶ τότε κατὰ σάρκα πεποίηται· καὶ λυτρωσάμενος πάντας γίνεται καὶ οὕτως ζώντων καὶ νεκρῶν κύριος. Ath. Orat. 3. in Ar. pag. 385.

1 Pet. 2. 9. a people by acquiſition peculiarly appertaining to him: and divers ways we have been acquired to him, as to our Lord.

3. He hath acquired us by free donation from God his Father: for John 17. 2. God hath given him power over all fleſh; God hath delivered all things into
13. 3. his hand; God hath ſubjected all things under his feet. Peculiarly God
Eph. 1. 22. hath given unto him thoſe who comply with his gracious invitations
Joh. 10. 27. and ſuggeſtions; his ſheep, that hear his voice, and follow him; them hath God given him, to govern them with eſpecial favour, and keep 17. 12, 6. them with a particular care; Whom (ſaith he) thou haſt given me, I have
6. 39. kept; and, This is the will of the Father that ſent me, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing.

4. Again, he hath acquired us by juſt right of conqueſt, having ſubdued thoſe enemies, unto whom (partly by their fraud and violence, partly from our own will and conſent) we did live enſlaved and addicted:
Col. 2. 15. them he vanquiſhed, having ſpoiled principalities, and powers, and made a ſhew of them, openly triumphing over them. Whence we rightly fall under ſubjection to him, as acceſſions to his victory; having formerly belonged to his enemies, and having by his mercy been preſerved:
he might juſtly have deprived us of liberty, and of life; might have utterly deſtroyed us, or have detained us in woful miſery, as dependents upon, and partizans with his foes; our ſelves together with them being
Rom. 5. 8, 10. found in open hoſtility againſt him; but according to his great mercy he ſa-
Col. 1. 21. ved us; and did put us into a capacity of a free, comfortable and happy
Eph. 1. 8. life under him; calling us to his kingdom and glory. We therefore being Titus 3. 3. ſubacti potentiâ (ſubdued by his power) become jure ſubditi (in right 1 Theſſ. 2. 12. ſubject to him) [being ſervati we are made ſervi;] being ſaved from death by him, we according to juſtice and reaſon become vaſſals to him, ſo that all our life ſhould be devoted to his ſervice; that (as it is in the Luc. 1. 74. hymn Benedictus) being delivered out of the hands of our enemies (his enemies, and our enemies alſo no leſs in truth and effect) we ſhould ſerve him without fear.

5. He hath alſo farther acquired us to himſelf by purchaſe; having by a great price bought us; ranſomed us out of ſad captivity and redeemed us from grievous puniſhment due to us. We, as heinous ſinners and rebels, had forfeited our lives to God's law, and were ſentenced unto a miſerable death; we had loſt our liberty, and were throne into a Rom. 11. 32. grievous priſon, fettered in guilt, lying under wrath, and reſerved to puniſhment
3. 23. unavoidable; we were ſtripped of all goods, all comfort, all hope,
Gal. 3. 22. and remedy: ſuch was the caſe of man, when he procured a redemption, 1 Tim. 2. 6. a pardon, a deliverance and reſtitution for us; delivering up himſelf a ranſome for us all; undergoing a puniſhment for our ſins, diſcharging Rom. 8. 34. our debts, propitiating divine juſtice, acquitting us from all claims and Acts. 20. 28. pretences upon us; yea meriting for us a better ſtate than we did ever 1 Pet. 1. 18. before ſtand in; Thus he purchaſed his Church with his own blood:
1 Cor. 6. 20. whence, as S. Paul argues, we are not our own, for we were bought with
7. 23. a price. In requital for ſuch mercies and favours ſo unexpreſſibly great, we cannot, either in gratitude or juſtice, owe leſs than our ſelves to be rendred up wholly to his dominion and diſpoſal; it is our duty therefore to be his ſubjects and ſervants; and it was indeed the intent of his doing ſo much for us, that we ſhould be ſo: he did all gratis (moſt freely) as to any precedent motive beſide his own Rom. 14. 9. goodneſs, but he would not doe it fruitleſly, as to effect: To this end
(ſaith S. Paul) Chriſt both died, roſe and revived, that he might be Lord

Οὐ γὰρ οὐρανὸν, καὶ γῆν, καὶ θάλασσαν δοὺς, ἀλλὰ τὸ πάντων τούτων τιμιώτερον, τὸ ἑαυτοῦ αἷμα καταθεὶς οὕτως ἡμᾶς ἐξηγόρασε. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 21.

both of the dead and living. He died for all, that they, which henceforth live, ſhould not live to themſelves, but unto him which died for them: and, He gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, Tit. 2. 14. and purify to himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

6. He likewiſe acquired a Lordſhip over us by deſert, and as a reward from God, ſutable to his performances of obedience and patience, highly ſatisfactory and acceptable to God. For this the Father loves me, becauſe John 10. 17. I lay down my life, that I may take it again: He humbled himſelf, becoming Phil. 2. 8. obedient to the death of the croſs; therefore alſo did God exalt him, and gave him a name above every name. For the joy that was ſet before him, he en- Heb. 12. 2. dured the croſs, and having deſpiſed the ſhame, ſate down at the right hand of the glory of God. We ſee Jeſus for the ſufferances of death crowned with Heb. 2. 9. glory and honour. He drank of the brook in the way, therefore he hath lifted Pſal. 110. 7. up his head. Becauſe he poured out his ſoul unto death; therefore did God Eſ. 53. 12. divide him a portion with the great, and he did divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong; as the Prophet expreſſeth it.

7. We may add, that he hath acquired a good right and title to dominion over us, as our continual moſt munificent benefactour; by the great benefits he beſtoweth on us, by the ample hire, and large recompence he pays us. He affords us a ſure protection under him, and a liberal maintenance; high privileges, and ample rewards for our ſervice: It is no Egyptian bondage that he would detain us in, requiring hard labour, and yielding no comfort or recompence, but it is a moſt beneficial and fruitful ſervice. Chriſt hath promiſed to withhold no good thing from Pſal. 84. 11. his ſervants; nothing requiſite for the ſupport or convenience even of 34. 9, 10. this temporal life (for to them who ſeek the Kingdom of God, and its Matt. 6. 33. righteouſneſs, even all theſe things ſhall be added, or caſt in) but eſpeci- Rom. 8. 28. 2 Peter 1. 4. ally moſt ineſtimable precious recompences he hath promiſed, and will certainly beſtow in ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings: He will render to every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well- Rom. 2. 6. doing ſeek glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life; ſaith S. Paul; and, Being freed from ſin (ſaith he again) and made ſervants to God, ye Rom. 6. 22. have your fruit unto ſanctificatian, and in the end everlaſting life: a fruit to ſanctification, that is, all benefits conducing to our ſpiritual welfare here, and hereafter a life in perpetual joy and happineſs. To them who have been diligent in performing their tasks, and improving their talents committed to them now for his intereſt, and honour, he will one day ſay: Well done good and faithful ſervants enter into your Maſter's Matt. 25. 21. joy: and, Bleſſed (ſaith our good Maſter) are ye, when men ſhall revile Apoc. 11. 18. you, and ſpeak all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake; Rejoyce, and be exceeding glad, for great ſhall your reward be in heaven. Now Matt. 5. 12. he that is at ſuch care and charges for us; who feeds and furniſhes us ſo plentifully, who rewards our ſmall pains, our poor works, our unprofitable ſervices (ſuch indeed we muſt confeſs all that we can doe to be) with ſo high and bountiful wages, him ſurely moſt juſtly we ſhould eſteem, and moſt willingly call our good Lord, and Maſter.

8. Yea farther yet, our Saviour Jeſus, is not onely our Lord by nature, and by acquiſition in ſo many ways (by various performances, deſerts and obligations put on us) but he is alſo ſo by our own deeds, by moſt free and voluntary, moſt formal and ſolemn, and therefore moſt obligatory acts of ours. He is our Lord and King by election; we finding our ſelves oppreſſed by cruel tyrants and enemies; groaning under intolerable ſlaveries, loaded

Καθάπερ ἡμεῖς οἰκέτας ἀγοράζοντες, αὐτοὺς τοὺς πωλουμένους πρότερον ἐρωτῶμεν εἰ βούλονται ἡμῖν δουλεῦσαι· οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ποιεῖ ἐπειδὰν, &c οὐ γὰρ κατηναγκασμένη ἡ δεσποτεία αὐτοῦ ἐστι, &c. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ 21.

ded with heavy burthens, plunged into grievous diſtreſſes, tormented with anxious fears, regrets and ſorrows, had our recourſe unto him, upon his gracious invitation, offering us deliverance, eaſe and refreſhment Matt. 11. 28. under his moſt equal and gentle government: Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden: and I will give you reſt —— Take my yoke upon you; —— for my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light; ſo he was pleaſed to invite us; and ſo we did, or have at leaſt ſeemed and pretended to undergo his yoke, freely ſubmitting to his government: We have vowed perpetual allegiance and fealty to him, as to our lawful Prince; we have promiſed entire ſubjection to his will, and ſincere obedience to his laws; we have engaged forſaking all things to follow him; to follow him as our Captain, and to fight reſolutely under his banners againſt the 2 Tim. 2. 3. 4. 8. common enemies of his glory, and our ſalvation. We did συμφωνεῖν (as Matt. 20. 2. it is in the Parable) contract, and agree with him upon certain conditions and conſiderations, moſt advantageous to our ſelves, to be his faithful ſervants, and diligently to perform his work: We renounced all other Maſters; yea reſigned up all claim to any liberty or power over our ſelves; becoming abſolutely devoted to his will and command: Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 21. This we did at our Baptiſm, in moſt expreſs and ſolemn manner, and in every religious performance we confirm our obligation; when we acknowledge his right over us, and our duty toward him; when we implore his protection, his ſuccour, and his mercy; when we promiſe our humble reſpect and obedience to him: if our daily confeſſions do ſignifie any thing, if our vows and proteſtations have any truth or heart in them; if our prayers are ſerious, or praiſes are hearty, our communions have in them any thing of good earneſt and ſincerity; we do by them continually tie faſter the band of this relation and duty toward him; he by our renewed choices, and conſents, and promiſes, and acknowledgments doth appear to be our Lord. But let thus much ſuffice for explication of this point; or for conſidering upon what grounds Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God is our Lord: Now for practical application of the point thereof.

1. The general influence which this doctrine may and ſhould have upon our practice is very obvious and palpable. If we are truly perſuaded, that Chriſt is our Lord and Maſter, we muſt then ſee our ſelves obliged humbly to ſubmit unto, and carefully to obſerve his will; to attend unto, and to obey his law, with all readineſs and diligence: Luc. 6. 46. for, Why call ye me Lord, Lord; and doe not the things that I ſay, is the expoſtulation of our Lord himſelf, implying it to be a vain and abſurd profeſſion, an irrational and illuſive pretence we make, when we avow and invoke him as our Lord, but withall diſclaim his authority in our practice, by ſlothfully neglecting, or wilfully diſobeying his com- Matt. 7. 21. mands: Not every one that ſaith Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doth the will of my father, which is in heaven; that is, not he that makes loud and eager profeſſions (crying Lord, over and over again) is in God's eſteem a loyal ſubject, or faithful ſervant, or ſhall obtain the rewards aſſigned to ſuch; but he that, although perhaps more ſparing in words and pretences doth really his duty, and performs the will of God. Many (ſaith our Saviour again) Matt. 21. 22. Luc. 13. 25. ſhall in that day (in that great day of final account and recompence) ſay unto me, Lord, Lord; have we not in thy name prophecyed, and in thy name caſt out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? and then will I profeſs unto them; I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Not only bare profeſſions and acknowledgments are inſufficient, ſufficient, but even the faireſt and moſt plauſible actions done in the name of Chriſt will avail nothing, without real obedience to the law of Chriſt; even then, when ſuch actions are performed, Chriſt doth not know them; that is, doth not eſteem them his ſervants; the working of iniquity rendring them uncapable of that name and privilege. Such perſons do, as S. Paul ſpeaks, profeſs to know him (or acknowledge him as their Lord) but with their works they deny him; who are diſobedient, and to every good work reprobate (that is, upon trial found bad and falſe) they (as S. Peter ſays) deny the Lord that bought them. Do ye not know (ſaith S. Paul) that to whom ye yield your ſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are, whom ye obey? and, Every one (ſaith our Saviour) that doeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin; and, By whom (ſaith S. Peter) a man is overcome, to him he is made a ſervant, or enſlaved (δεδούλωται.) 'Tis not what we ſay, but what we doe; not what we would ſeem, but what we indeed are, doth really conſtitute, and truly denominate us ſervants: we not onely ſhall loſe the rewards and privileges granted to the ſervants of Chriſt, but we do even forfeit all claim to the very name if we diſobey his commands, being indeed properly ſervants to thoſe luſts which ſway us; to that Devil, whoſe pleaſure we fulfill; to that world, whoſe bad manners we follow: we do but invade and uſurp the name of Chriſtians, if our practice is not conformed to the precepts of our Lord.

Tit. 1. 16.
2 Pet. 1. 16.
Rom. 6. 16.
John 8. 34.
2 Pet. 2. 19.
Πάντιμος καὶ ἔνδοξος, καὶ ζωοποιὸς προσηγορία Mar. Lugd. Euſeb. 5. 2.
Mendacium eſt Chriſtianum ſe dicere, & opera Chriſti non facere. Ambr.
'Tis a lye to call ones ſelf a Chriſtian, and not to doe the works of Chriſt, as S. Ambr. ſaith. Omnino nihil prodeſt nomen ſanctum habere ſine moribus; quia vita à profeſſione diſcordans abrogat illuſtris tituli honorem per indignorum actuum vilitatem. Salv. de Gub. Dei 3. ſub fin.

2. Indeed the conſideration of this point doth clearly demonſtrate to us the great heinouſneſs of ſin; how many follies, iniquities, baſeneſſes and ingratitudes lie complicated therein: the madneſs of oppoſing irreſiſtible power, and diſſenting from infallible wiſdom; the unworthineſs of offending and abuſing immenſe goodneſs; the injuſtice and diſloyalty which are couched in the diſobedience of him, who by ſo many titles, and upon ſo many obligations is our Lord; the abuſiveneſs of evacuating all his laborious and expenſive deſigns in acquiring us; the levity and giddineſs of diſavowing him by our practice, whom we ſo often have acknowledged our Lord, and vowed entire ſubjection unto.

3. Again, if Chriſt be our Lord, then are we not our own Lords, or our own men; we are not at liberty, or at our own diſpoſal as to our perſons, or our actions: thoſe rules of the civil Law, that a ſervant can poſſeſs nothing of his own, that no profit can ſimply accrue to him, but all in reſult muſt goe to his Lord; that he is reckoned no body in law; and the like, do moſt perfectly agree to us in regard to Chriſt, who is upon ſo many accounts abſolutely our Lord, infinitely more than one man can be to another. We conſequently muſt not think to have our own wills, we muſt not attend our own buſineſs, we muſt not pleaſe our own appetites, or gratify our own deſires, or enjoy our own pleaſures, or follow our own fancies, or regard our own profits, or ſeek our own honour; we muſt not undertake or proſecute any thing merely our own, or farther than doing ſo is ſubordinate unto, or conſiſtent with the ſervice, intereſt and glory of our Lord: otherwiſe we do conſtitute our ſelves the Lords and Maſters, in effect renouncing and caſting off him: if he be truly our Lord, it is his will, and word, that ſhould be the rule of all our actions; which we ſhould diligently attend unto, which we ſhould readily obſerve; it is his buſineſs, that we ſhould with eſpecial care mind, and moſt earneſtly proſecute; it is his advantage and credit

Ὁ δοῦλος οὐ μόνον δεσπότου δοῦλός ἐστιν, ἀλλ᾽ ὅλως ἐκείνου. Ariſt. Pol. 1. 3.
Τοῦ δούλου ἐστὶ τὸ ζῆν μὴ ὡς βούλεται. Ariſt. Pol. 6. 2.

credit, that we ſhould propound unto our ſelves, as the main aims of all our endeavours. Whatever we deſign or undertake of moment, we ſhould do it with this formal conſideration and reference; doing it as the ſervants of Chriſt; from conſcience of our duty to him, with intention therein to ſerve him, with expectation of reward onely from 1 Cor. 10. 31. him; according to thoſe Apoſtolical precepts: Whether we eat, or drink,
1 Cor. 6. 20. or whatever we doe, we ſhould doe all to the glory of our Lord: We muſt
2 Cor. 5. 15. glorifie him with our bodies, and our ſpirits, which are his. We muſt not live to our ſelves, but to him that died, and roſe again for us: Since whether we live or die (that is, whatever action we ſet upon relating either to life or death) we are the Lords; we ſhould direct all to his honour profit and ſervice.

4. If Chriſt be our Lord (abſolutely and entirely ſuch) then can we have no other Lords whatever, in oppoſition to him, or in competition with him; or otherwiſe any way than in ſubordination, and ſubſerviency Mat. 6. 24. to him: No man (as he doth himſelf tell us) can ſerve two Lords; that is, two Lords having collateral, or equal authority; their injunctions will interfere, oppoſe or ſupplant one the other; our affections will incline to one more than to the other; at leaſt we ſhall be detained in hovering ſuſpence; our leiſure, our care, our endeavour being employed in the ſervice or attendance of one will force us to neglect and diſappoint the other; Ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon; ſerving wealth (that is, eagerly affecting it, and earneſtly purſuing it) is inconſiſtent with our duty to Chriſt; the like may be ſaid of honour, of pleaſure, of curioſity, Jam. 4. 4. of any worldly thing; for, He that will be a friend of the world
καϑίςαται. is thereby (ſaith S. James) conſtituted an enemy of God; and if he thereby be made an enemy, he ſurely can be no good ſervant; a ſervant being (as the Philoſopher calls him) humilis amicus, a meaner ſort of friend; who performeth ſervice out of good-will and affection; like S. Paul, who diſcharged that high and laborious ſervice, of preaching the Goſpel, incumbent on him, and of that kindly neceſſity which he ex-
2 Cor. 5. 14. preſſes, ſaying, The love of Chriſt conſtrains me; or as S. Peter injoins, 2 Cor. 9. 17. thoſe particular ſervants of Chriſt (employed by him in teaching and 1 Pet. 5. 2. guiding his people) to doe their duty, μὴ ἀναγκαςῶς, ἀλλ' ἑκȣσίως, not by conſtraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; or Eph. 6. 7. as S. Paul chargeth all ſervants, μετ' ἐυνοίας δȣλέυειν, to ſerve with good will, as to the Lord, and not to men. It is indeed the proper nature, and the neceſſary condition of this ſervice, that we decline, forſake, renounce, deteſt all other obligations, all affections, all encumbrances, which may Lu. 14. 33. avert us from a cloſe adherence thereto. Whoever (ſaith he) he be of you, that forſaketh not (or, who renounceth not, who biddeth not farewell to, ὃς ȣ̓κ ἀποτάσσεται) all that he hath, cannot be my diſciple; or Luc. 14. 26. my follower and ſervant: If any man cometh after me, and do not hate his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brothers, and ſiſters, yea and his own life, he cannot be my diſciple; he cannot indeed truly and heartily be ſo, who in love and obſervance of Chriſt will not readily forſake and loſe all.

5. Particularly therefore, if Chriſt be our Lord, we are thereby diſobliged, yea we are indeed prohibited from pleaſing or humouring men, ſo as to obey any command, to comply with any deſire, or to follow any cuſtom of theirs, which is repugnant to the will or precept of Gal. 1. 10. Chriſt: If (ſaith S. Paul) I did yet pleaſe men (that is, humour, ſooth or flatter them, ſo the word ἀρέσκειν doth import) I were not the ſervant of Chriſt; that is, I were not ſuch in effect, I did in ſo doing not behave my ſelf as a ſervant of Chriſt; as it becomes ſuch an one, and as ſuch an one is obliged to doe. And, Ye (ſaith he again) are bought with a price, be not the ſervants of men (or, ye are not the ſervants of man, ſo the words will bear rendring) that is, ye therefore do not, or ye therefore ought not to perform ſervice to men, abſolutely as ſuch, or with ultimate relation unto them; but when ye lawfully, and allowably doe it, ye doe it out of conſcience, and regard to Chriſt as his ſervants. We may indeed, yea in duty we muſt obey men humbly and willingly, diligently and faithfully in our ſtations, and according to our conditions, as we are placed and called in this world, either as ſubjects or ſervants; but we muſt doe this in ſubordination to our principal, and ſupreme Lord; in obedience to his command, and with regard to his ſervice; ſo we are taught by S. Paul: Servants (ſaith he) obey your Maſters according to the fleſh with fear and trembling (that is very reſpectfully and carefully) in ſingleneſs of heart, as to Chriſt; not in eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, but as the ſervants of Chriſt; doing the will of God from the ſoul; ſerving with good will as to the Lord, and not unto men: and, Be ſubject (ſaith S. Peter) to every humane conſtitution διὰ τὸν Κύριον, for the Lord; (that is, out of conſcientious regard, or affection to the Lord; becauſe he is our Lord) as free, and not having your liberty for a cloak of malicioùſneſs, but as the ſervants of God. Yea, Whatſoever (ſaith that wiſe inſtructour, S. Paul again) ye doe, doe it heartily as to the Lord, and not to men; knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive back the recompence of inheritance; for ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt.

1 Cor. 7. 23.

Eph. 6. 5, 6, 7.

1 Pet. 2. 13. 16.

Col. 3. 23, 24.

6. It is we ſee (which may be another improvement of this conſideration) not onely an engagement, but an encouragement to the performance of all duty; particularly to the performance of thoſe hard duties (ſo contrary to natural will and ſtomach) chearfull obedience and ſubmiſſion to men; who often, as S. Peter intimates, are σκολιοὶ, crooked, or untoward, and harſh in their dealings with their ſervants; to whom yet upon this conſideration he enjoins us willingly to yield obeiſance, no leſs than to the good and gentle; for that in this and all other performances of duty we do ſerve a moſt equal and kind Maſter, who will graciouſly accept our ſervice, and abundantly requite it; a Lord that will not ſuffer his ſervants to want any needfull ſuſtenance, any fit encouragement, any juſt protection or aſſiſtance; who will not onely faithfully pay them their promiſed allowance, but will advance them to the higheſt preferment imaginable. No man ever had reaſon to complain with them in the Prophet: It is vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinances? No: The Devil himſelf, with envy and regret obſerving the benefits and bleſſings which the pious man enjoyed in regard to his faithfull ſervice, could not but ſay; Doth Job ſerve God for nought; haſt thou not made a hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is encreaſed in the land. No wonder, argued the detracting Spirit, and little thank or praiſe is due to a ſervant, whoſe ſervice is ſo bountifully rewarded. Indeed our Lord is not onely juſt and faithfull ſo as to render unto every man ἴδιον μισθὸν κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον κόπον, a proper reward anſwerable to his proper pains; but he is exceedingly, beyond expreſſion, liberal in beſtowing on his ſervants retributions infinitely ſurpaſſing the deſert and worth of all their labours: for their ſmall, weak, faint, imperfect and tranſitory endeavours (by all which he is indeed really nothing the richer, or the greater) he returneth bleſſings in nature, in degree, in duration immenſely great, pretious and glorious. He fails not

1 Pet. 2. 18.

Mal. 3. 14.

Job 1. 9, 10.

1 Cor. 3. 8.

not here to feed them with food convenient, to cloath them decently, to ſupply all their needs, to comfort them in all diſtreſſes, to keep them in all ſafety, to deliver them from all evil; he afterwards conferreth on them a Kingdom, an incorruptible and unfading Crown; a ſtate of perfect joy and endleſs glory.

7. 'Tis a great comfort alſo for a Chriſtian (how mean and low ſoever in his worldly condition) to conſider the dignity and excellency of this his relation; how great, and how good a Lord he ſerveth; and Apoc. 19. 16. the greateſt Princes are his fellow ſubjects (for He is the King of Kings, Pſal. 72. 11. and Lord of Lords; All kings ſhall fall down before him, all nations ſhall ſerve him.) Yea, that the higheſt Angels are his fellow-ſervants (as Apoc. 22. 8. the Angel in the Revelation told S. John.) That although his Lord be
Eph. 1. 20. ſo high in power and glory above all, yet he is ſo gracious, as not to
Luc. 1. 48. neglect or deſpiſe him; but condeſcendeth to regard the loweſt of his Job 34. 19. ſervants with equal care and favour as the higheſt: He accepteth not the perſons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor; for they all are the work of his hands, ſaid good Elihu; and they all, we might add, are the price of his bloud.

8. And as it is a comfort to the meaneſt, ſo it is no ſhame or diſparagement for the greateſt of men to ſerve ſuch a Lord; 'tis a relation in it ſelf more worthy and honourable than the higheſt dignity or preferment in the world: to wear a crown, how rich ſoever, to command the whole earth, to poſſeſs all the land, and all the gold under heaven, are beggarly trivial and ſordid things in compariſon thereto; a ſervant of Chriſt (the Apoſtolical ſtyle) is a ſtyle far more glorious than all thoſe windy Titles, which the greateſt Monarchs aſſume to themſelves; having ſuch a place in God's peculiar regard and care doth exceed all privileges and advantages, all glories and dignities, which any perſon is Phil. 3. 8. capable of: Well therefore did S. Paul in reſpect to the excellency of the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt his Lord eſteem all ſuch things (all worldly privileges and benefits) as loſs, and as dung; as things detrimental and deſpicable; wiſely did the Holy Apoſtles forſake all things (all their deareſt relations, all their ſweeteſt enjoyments, all their ſecular occupations) to follow Luc. 18. 28. ſuch a Lord. (Behold, ſaith S. Peter, we have let go all things, and have followed thee.) Moſt juſt and reaſonable are thoſe ſentences pronounced againſt thoſe vainly proud, or perverſly contumacious people, Luc. 9. 26. who are aſhamed to obey him, or do reject his government: Whoſoever
ſhall be aſhamed of me, or of my words, him ſhall the ſon of man be aſhamed of, when he comes in the glory of himſelf, ard of his father, and the holy angels. Them who proudly diſdain to ſerve him here, will he with juſt, and ſad diſdain reject hereafter from his face and favour; yea with
Luc. 19. 27. dreadfull vengeance will he puniſh their perverſeneſs: Thoſe mine enemies (will he ſay) that would not have me reign over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me.

9. S. Paul alſo maketh uſe of this conſideration to preſs upon ſuperiours their duties toward their inferiours; their duties of equity, meek-Col. 4. 1. neſs, kindneſs, mercy, pity, and all humanity. Maſters (ſaith he) yield unto your ſervants that which is juſt, and equal, knowing that ye alſo Eph. 6. 9. have a maſter in heaven. And, Ye maſters (ſaith he again) doe the ſame things to them (perform the like good offices, ſhew the ſame good will to your ſervants) forbearing menaces, knowing that your Maſter alſo is in heaven, and there is no reſpect of perſons with him. Thus in Leviticus Lev. 42, 43, 55. God commandeth his people not to rule over their ſervants with rigour, aſſigning this reaſon, for they are my ſervants, &c. And we know how our Saviour, as he doth commend and bleſs thoſe wiſe and honeſt ſervants who being appointed over his houſhold (that is, being placed in any ſuperiour rank or charge) do behave themſelves juſtly and kindly Matt. 24. 45, 49. to their fellow-ſervants, diſpenſing to them their food in due ſeaſon; ſo upon thoſe who injuriouſly or rudely do beat or abuſe their fellow-ſervants; Matt. 18. 28, &c. who are harſh, rigorous or unmerciful in exactions of debt, or in any other dealings toward them; he denounceth ſevere chaſtiſement. A ſervant of the Lord (that is, one employed by Chriſt in any office or 2 Tim. 2. 24. charge) muſt not fight, but muſt be gentle unto all, (ſaith S. Paul; ſuch indeed ſhould be the humility and goodneſs of Chriſtians one toward another, that the greateſt of them ſhould ſtoop to the meaneſt offices and expreſſions of good will to their brethren: He (ſaith our Lord) that Matt. 10. 44. will be great among you, let him be your miniſter, and he that will be firſt of you, let him be your ſervant.

10. The conſideration indeed of Chriſt being our Lord, is in general an inducement to charity, to all ſorts of charity. We muſt (ſaith Saint Eph. 4. 2, 5. Paul) walk worthy of our calling, with all lowlineſs of mind, and meekneſs, with long ſuffering, forbearing one another in love, endeavouring to keep the unity of ſpirit in the bond of peace, becauſe we are members of the ſame body, whereof Chriſt is the head, and fellow-ſervants of the ſame Lord. 'Tis an endearing and obliging relation; it becometh us, and concerneth us, being ſo of one family, to be courteous and gentle, kind and helpful one to another; to maintain peace, quiet and love one with a- 2 Cor. 13. 11. nother; it is a juſt duty and reſpect to our common Maſter, who loveth order and peace, who hateth confuſion and diſſention in his houſe; who is himſelf full of charity toward every one of his, and therefore hath enjoined it as the eſpecial duty, hath declared it to be the moſt diſtinctive character of his ſervants and followers: Hereby (ſaith he) John 13. 15. ſhall all men know, that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another.

11. Particularly this conſideration doth oblige us to exerciſe that piece of charity, and of juſtice, which conſiſts in forbearing raſh and harſh cenſure; which practice is not only very uncharitable, and unjuſt toward our brethren, but it is alſo a wrongful and arrogant encroachment upon our Lord himſelf, unto whom only the right of deciſion in ſuch caſes doth appertain; unto whoſe infallible and impartial judgment both they and we are obnoxious: Who art thou (ſaith Saint Rom. 14. 4. Paul) that judgeſt another's ſervant (or domeſtick; ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην) 10. to his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth. And, Why doſt thou judge thy brother, or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother: and, We ſhall all be preſented before the judgment ſeat of Chriſt. There is (ſaith S. James) Jam. 4. 12. one Lawgiver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy; who art thou that judgeſt another? 'Tis, we ſee, an invading our Lord's right and authority, without moſt evident and reaſonable cauſe, to cenſure or condemn our fellow-ſervants.

12. The conſideration of this Point our Saviour doth alſo improve as an engagement to imitate himſelf in the practice of all vertue and piety; eſpecially in the practice of charity, humility and patience. It is proper for a ſervant to follow and attend upon his maſter in all places, and in all performances; to compoſe himſelf in behaviour to the manners and example; to conform himſelf to the garb and condition of his Lord: Is it not abſurd and unſeemly, that the ſervant ſhould be more ſtately, or more delicate than his maſter; that he ſhould ſlight thoſe, whom his maſter vouchſafes to reſpect; that he ſhould refuſe to undertake thoſe inployments, ſhould ſcorn to undergo thoſe hardſhips, which his maſter doth willingly condeſcend unto? to ſuch purpoſe our Saviour diſcourſeth; impreſſing by this argument on his diſciples the duties of humility, charity and patience by him exemplified for that John 13. 3. very end: Ye call me, ſaith he Maſter, and Lord; and ye ſay well, for ſo I am; if I then your Lord and Maſter have waſhed your feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one anothers feet; for I have given you an example, that ye ſhould doe as I have done to you. And having directed his diſciples to the patient enduring of reproaches, affronts and injuries put upon them, Matt. 10. 24. Luc. 6. 40. John 15. 20. he enforces his precept by ſubjoining: The diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor the ſervant above his Lord; 'tis enough for the diſciple to be as his Maſter, and the ſervant as his Lord; that is, the ſervant in all reaſon ought to be very well content, if he find ſuch uſage as his Lord hath willingly and patiently undergone. And he thus again impreſſes theſe Luc. 22. 26. Matt. 20. 25. duties on them: He that is greateſt among you, let him be as the younger, and he that is chief, as he that doth ſerve: for whether is greater, he that ſitteth at meet, or he that ſerveth? but I am among you as he that ſerveth. Yea S. John raiſeth this conſideration ſo high, that he ſaith thus: Becauſe (ὅτι.) 1 John 3. 16. he laid down his life for us, we alſo ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

13. Finally, for our ſatisfaction and encouragement we may conſider, that the ſervice of Chriſt is rather indeed a great freedom than a ſervice; it is a reducement into a moſt deſirable eſtate, wherein we fully enjoy that wherein liberty is defined to conſiſt, ἐξουσίαν αὐτοπραγίας, power of doing whatever (as reaſonable and wiſe men) we pleaſe our ſelves to doe; wherein all things are lawful to us, excepting only Quæ eſt vera libertas? innocentia. Epict. ſuch things as are unprofitable to us, or hurtful. What Ariſtotle made the character of a juſt Prince (whoſe government doth no-wiſe prejudice true liberty) that he doth not in his government chiefly aim at his own profit, but his Subjects good, is perfectly true of our Lord; he is indeed capable to receive no private benefit to himſelf, beſide ſatisfaction in our welfare; all his laws and commands, all his adminiſtra- Deut. 10. 13 6. 24. Neh. 9. 13. tions and proceedings are purely directed to our advantage. Even the ſtatutes, which God gave to Iſrael by Moſes are ſaid to have been commanded for their good, not for any good that could accrue to God from their obſervance: much more are the laws of Chriſt purely ſuch; conducing to the health, the ſafety, the peace, the comfort, the joy, the happineſs both of our bodies and ſouls; of the preſent temporal life 1 Tim. 4. 8. here, and of our immortal ſtate hereafter: His religion is profitable unto all things, having promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. Well therefore might S. James call the Law of Chriſt a per- Jam. 1. 25. John 8. 36. fect Law of liberty; well might our Saviour ſay, If the Son ſet you free, then are ye free indeed. What the Stoicks vanted of themſelves, the Chriſtian modeſtly and truly may ſay, that he is the only freeman; 'Tis this Philoſophy only, to which thoſe words of Seneca may truly be applied: You muſt ſerve Philoſophy, that you may attain true liberty: for, if to be above the reach of all conſiderable evil or miſchief; if to be ſafe from all enemies, and ſecure from all impreſſions of fortune; if to have no reaſon much to fear, or much to grieve for any thing; if not to deſire things baſe, or things immoderate; if to have an eſpecial command over ones ſelf is (as thoſe philoſophers define it) properly liberty; then is he moſt free that ſerves our Lord. If to be reſcued from the ſervitude Philoſophiæ ſervias oportet, ut tibi contingat vera libertas. Sen. Ep. 8. & 88.

Non homines timere, non fortunam; nec turpia velle, nec immodica; in ſe ipſum habere maximam poteſtatem, &c. Sen. Ep. 75.

of diſorderly paſſions and baſe vices is the greateſt freedom, then the good Chriſtian chiefly doth enjoy it. A good man (ſaith S. Auſtin) although he ſerve, is free; a bad man, although he reign, is a ſlave; not of one man, but which is more grievous, of ſo many Lords, as of vices. Such indeed is the benignity of our Lord, that he treats his faithful ſervants rather as friends, than as ſervants; Ye are (ſaith he) my friends, if ye doe whatever I command you; I call John 15. 14. you no more ſervants. Yea he bears to them the affection of a brother, and affords them the honour to be ſo ſtyled: Go (ſaith he, after his re- John 20. 17. ſurrection to Mary Magdalen) to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſ- 1. 12. cend unto my Father, and your Father, to my God, and to your God; and, Ἴδετε ποταπὴν ἀγάπην, See ye what love the Father hath given us, that we 1 John 3. 1. ſhould be called the ſons of God.

Bonus etiamſi ſerviat, liber eſt; malus etiamſi regnet, ſervus eſt; nec unius hominis, ſed quod gravius eſt tot dominorum quot vitiorum. Aug. de Civ. D. 4. 112.

Full of ſo many practical uſes is this excellent Point; the which I leave to be farther deduced by your meditation.

Now, The God of peace ſanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole 1 Theſſ. 5. 23. ſpirit, and ſoul, and body be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory and praiſe for ever. Amen.

Who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt.

SERMON XXIII.

THE INCARNATION OF Our LORD.

MATTH. I. 20.

For that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt.

Τὸ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν, ἐκ πνεύματός ἐστιν ἁγίου.

Without any preface, or circumſtance of ſpeech, we obſerve three particulars couched in theſe words. 1. The incarnation of Jeſus our Lord, implied by the word τὸ γεννηθὲν, that which is conceived, or generated. 2. The principal efficient cauſe of this Incarnation the Holy Ghoſt; by whoſe immediate operation, without any active influence of man, he was generated, is of the Holy Ghoſt. 3. The concurrence of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, as the ſubject of that divine virtue and operation; he was conceived in her. Upon each of theſe particulars, being all of them conſiderable Points of that Faith, which we daily profeſs (and eſpecially proper ſubjects of our meditation at this time) I ſhall reflect, obſerving ſomewhat profitable for our edification both in way of right knowledge, and in tendency to practice.

John 1. 1, &c.
1 John 1. 1.

I. Our Saviour Jeſus was conceived and born; that is, the only Son of God, our Lord and Redeemer, the ſame who was from the beginning, and did (as S. John in the entrance of his Goſpel teacheth us) from all eternity exiſt with God, the eternal word of God, by whom all things were made, was in the fulneſs of time conceived and born; that is, had a production agreeable to the nature of man, becoming thereby truly and really a man, which wonderful myſtery is in Scripture by various phraſes expreſſed and implied; by the word being incarnated, that is being made, or becoming fleſh; God being manifeſted in the fleſh; The Son of God being ſent in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; partaking of fleſh and blood; His taking the form of a ſervant, being made in the likeneſs of men, being found in faſhion as a man, aſſuming the ſeed of Abraham: His deſcending from heaven, coming forth from the father, being ſent, and coming into the world: The day-ſpring from on high viſiting us, eternal life being manifeſted; the reſult of what is ſignified by theſe, and the like expreſſions, that, The bleſſed and glorious perſon, who before from all eternity did ſubſiſt in the form or nature of God, being the Son of God, one in nature with his Father (the expreſs image, or exact character of his ſubſtance) did by a temporal generation truly become man, aſſuming humane nature into the unity of his Perſon; by a real conjunction and union thereof to the divine nature, in a manner incomprehenſible and ineffable. He did, I ſay, truly become man, like unto us in all things (as the Apoſtle ſaith) ſin only excepted, conſiſting as ſuch of all the eſſential ingredients of our nature; endued with all our properties and faculties, ſubject to all paſſions, all infirmities, all needs adherent, or incident to our nature and condition here.

John 1. 14.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
Rom. 8. 3.
Heb. 2. 14, 16.
Phil. 2. 7, 8.
John 3. 13, 31. 6. 33, 38, 50, 51, 58. 3. 17. 10. 36. 17. 18.
1 John 4. 2, 3, 9. Gal. 4.
Jo. 16. 27, 28.
Luc. 1. 78.
1 John 1. 2.
Phil. 2. 7, 8.
John 10. 30. 14. 9.
1 John 5. 7.
Col. 1. 15.
2 Cor. 4. 4.
Heb. 1. 3.
Heb. 2. 17. 4. 15.

He was not only (as the Gnoſticks and ſome other Hereticks have conceited) in ſhape and outward appearance (as a ſpectre, deluding mens ſight and fancy) but in moſt real truth a very perfect man; having a real body, figured and circumſcribed as ours, compacted of fleſh and bloud; viſible and tangible; which was nouriſhed and did grow, which needed and received ſuſtenance, which was tender and ſenſible, frail and paſſible; which was bruiſed with ſtripes, torn with ſcourges, pricked with thorns, pierced with nails, transfixed with a ſpear, which was mortal, and underwent death by expiring its breath, and being disjoined from the ſoul that enlivened it. He had alſo a ſoul, endewed with the ſame faculties as ours; with an underſtanding, capable of learning and improvement (for, he was, as man, ignorant of ſome things, which he might know; and He grew, 'tis ſaid, in wiſdom and in ſtature) with a will, ſubject and ſubmiſſive to the divine will (for, Let this cup, ſaid he, if it be poſſible, paſs from me; but however let not my will, but thy will be done; and, I ſeek not my own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me) with ſeveral appetites, of meat, of drink, of ſleep and reſt (for we read that he was hungry, that he thirſted, that he was weary) yea with various paſſions and affections (φυσικὰ καὶ ἀδιάβλητα πάθη, I mean, that is, natural and irreprehenſible paſſions) and theſe

Vid. Athan. in tract. cont. Apollinar.
Phil. 2. 8. Ἐν σχήματι εὑρεθεὶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος.
Rom. 8. 3.
Mark 13. 32.
Luc. 2. 52.
Matt. 26. 39.
Luc. 22. 42.
John 5. 30.
Matt. 21. 18.
John 4. 6, 7.

theſe of the moſt troubleſome and afflictive ſort, ſuch as zeal, pity, ſorrow; the which were ſometime declared by very pathetical ſignifications, and are expreſſed in high terms: as upon occaſion of his friend Lazarus his death, 'tis ſaid, He groaned in ſpirit and was troubled; He then, and upon other occaſions out of pity and ſorrow did weep; and ye know what exceſſes of ſorrow, what anxieties and agonies, what tribulations, diſturbances and amazements the Evangeliſts, uſing thoſe very terms, deſcribe him to have undergone at his paſſion; ſo that, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh, We have not an High-Prieſt, that could not compaſſionate (or ſympathize with) our infirmities, but who was in all points tempted (or exerciſed and proved) as we are, yet without ſin.

Matt. 16. 23.
John 2. 17.
Mar. 3. 5.
John 11. 33. 5.

Περίλυπος. Matt. 26. 38.
Ἀδημονεῖν Matt. 26. 37.
Ἀγωνία. Luc 22. 24.
Τετάρακται. Joh. 12. 27.
Ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι. Mar. 14. 33.
Πειρασμοῖς Luc. 22. 28.
Heb. 4. 15.

So it appeareth, that the Son of God (co-eternal and co-eſſential with his Father) became the Son of man; truly and entirely partaking of the nature and ſubſtance of man, deficient in no eſſential part, devoid of no property belonging to us; exempt from no imperfection or inconvenience conſequent upon our nature, except onely ſin, the which is not a natural ſo much as a moral evil, did not ariſe from man's original nature, but proceedeth from his abuſed will, doth rather corrupt than conſtitute a man.

Now concerning this great diſpenſation ſeveral inquiries and conſiderations may be made, concerning the manner of it, how therein God did aſſume our nature; or how therein God and man ſubſiſt united; concerning the reaſon of it whence it proceeded, and why it was deſigned; concerning the uſe and influence of it, which it ſhould have upon our practice.

1. As for the firſt Point, the manner of this myſtery, we may well in diſcretion and modeſty anſwer with the Schoolman; It is not in man to define what manner of communication this is, whereby the humane nature is communicated to the word; we cannot indeed otherwiſe than by negation determine, not otherwiſe than by compariſon explain it. No words perhaps, which we do uſe to ſignifie our conceptions about theſe material and inferiour things, will perfectly and adequately ſute to a myſtery ſo much remote from the common objects of our knowledge, ſo far tranſcending our capacity; to affirm poſitively, that this wonderfull Incarnation did come to paſs, that this incomprehenſible and ineffable union doth perſiſt in this or that manner may be raſh and dangerous; it would ceaſe to be admirable, if we could fully conceive or expreſs it: but this juſtly and ſafely we may aſſert, that whatever manner of conception or expreſſion about it doth plainly derogate from the divine perfections, or is irreconcileably repugnant to the nature of things, or diſagreeth with the tenour of revealed truths evidently connected unto, or depending on this myſtery; or which (either directly and immediately, or obliquely and by manifeſt conſequence) doth contradict the language and doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, is to be rejected by us: whence we may for excluſion of errours and miſtakes about this Point, with the Holy Fathers, and particularly with the great Council of Chalcedon aſſert, that in the Incarnation of our Lord the two natures, divine, and humane were united ἀσυγχύτως, ἀτρέπτως, ἀδιαιρέτως, ἀχωρίστως.

Cujuſmodi ſit hæc communicatio, quâ natura humana communicatur verbo, non eſt hominis definire. Alenſ.

Syn. Chalc. Acts. 5. (fin.) (pag. 340.)

1. The natures were, I ſay, united ἀσυγχύτως, that is, without any confuſion, or commixtion; for ſuch a way of blending would induce a third nature different from both, ſuch as reſulteth from the compoſition and contemperation of the elements into a mixed body; ſuch a commixtion being ſuppoſed, our Lord would be neither God nor man; but another third kind of ſubſtance, ſuch as muſt not without any ground or authority be ſuppoſed; that would deſtroy, diminiſh or alter the properties of each; which is unſound to ſay, and impoſſible to be, for the divine nature is not capable of any diminution or alteration: wherefore both natures in this myſtery do ſubſiſt entire, diſtinct and unconfuſed, each retaining its eſſential and natural properties.

2. The Incarnation was performed ἀτρέπτως, that is without converſion or tranſmutation of one nature into another: The divinity could not be turned into humanity, for how could God (the eternal, ſelf-ſubſiſtent, moſt ſimple and immutable Jehovah) as ſuch, be any-wiſe changed or made, become infirm and paſſible, conſiſt of body and ſoul, ſuffer and die? Nor could the humanity be turned into divinity; for how could that which did not ſubſiſt at all before the Incarnation, be therein converted into another thing? why ſhould our Saviour ever be called man, when his humanity was by tranſlation into divinity deſtroyed? why is it ſaid, the word was made fleſh, if the fleſh was changed into the word? to omit, how impoſſible it is, that one Subſtance ſhould be tranſmuted into another, eſpecially a corporeal into a ſpiritual, a finite into an infinite; to omit likewiſe the many dangerous conſequences of this poſition, and its inconſiſtency with many principal and plain doctrines of our religion, particularly the real paſſion and death of our Lord, which could not be incident to him otherwiſe than as retaining the true nature of man.

3. The natures were alſo joined ἀδιαιρέτως, undividedly, that is, ſo as they have not diſtinct ſubſiſtences, or do not conſtitute two perſons: for there is but one Chriſt, one perſon, to whom, being God, and being Man, are truly and properly attributed.

4. We muſt alſo underſtand the natures to be united ἀχωρίστως, inſeparably; ſo that they never are ſevered, the union is never diſſolved; the ſame perſon never ceaſing to be both God and Man; not even then, when our Lord as man did undergo death; for he raiſed himſelf from the dead, he reared the temple of his own body, being fallen: as being God he was able to raiſe himſelf, as being man he was capable to be raiſed by himſelf; the union between God and man perſiſting, when the union between humane body and ſoul was diſſolved.

We might add, in farther excluſion of erroneous conceits, that this myſterious union was not made κατὰ παράστασιν, by aſſiſtance, or cloſe preſence onely, nor κατ' ἐνοίκησιν, merely by inhabitation, nor κατὰ σχέσιν, by relation, nor κατ' ἀξίαν, by eſtimation, nor καθ' ἁρμονίαν, by conformity, in will and practice, nor κατὰ ταυτοβουλίαν, by conſent; as Neſtorius and other heterodox Dogmatiſts anciently, in oppoſition to the Catholick expoſition of this myſtery did imagine; but it doth not ſeem worth the while to diſcuſs thoſe antiquated conceits, or with more ſubtilty to intrigue the Point.

Salmeron. apud Gerard. in loc. Exeget. p. 441. Bel.

As for illuſtration of it by compariſon, I ſhall onely (paſſing over divers more wide and improper reſemblances; ſuch as thoſe of Bellarmine, the union of a man's arm to his body, the inciſion of a bough into a tree, and the like) obſerve, that nature doth afford us one ſimilitude very appoſite for explication of this myſterious union; which is the union of a man's ſoul and body, whereby he becometh one Perſon: The ſoul and body are two ſubſtances, very different in kind, in properties, in dignity: the one of it ſelf, material, extended, diviſible, paſſive and corruptible, lifeleſs and ſenſeleſs; the other immaterial, indiviſible, incorruptible, ſelf-moving, endewed with life, knowledge, paſſion: both of them are alſo capable of ſeparate exiſtence, or of ſubſiſtence by themſelves; yet are theſe two, although in a manner difficult for us to conceive or comprehend, cloſely united together, and do concur to the making up a man; and that ſo as to remain ſtill in ſubſtance diſtinct, each retaining its natural properties, without any confuſion, or any converſion of one into the other; ſo alſo that from them the ſame man receiveth the denominations of corporeal and ſpiritual, of mortal and immortal: In a like manner (although in a degree more admirable and incomprehenſible) are the divine and humane natures conjoined in our Lord; for, as we hear in the Athanaſian Creed, As the reaſonable ſoul and fleſh is one man, ſo God and man is one Chriſt. So much for the manner.

2. As for the reaſon why the Son of God did aſſume our nature; the chiefeſt and cleareſt reaſon thereof was, God's deſign thereby to exerciſe and demonſtrate his immenſe goodneſs, mercy and pity toward us; So God loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Son: In this the love of God was manifeſted, that God ſent his onely begotten Son into the world, that we might live by him. Through the tender mercy of our God the day ſpring from on high did viſit us: It was χρηστότης καὶ φιλανθρωπία, the benignity and philanthropy of God, which induced him to engage his Son upon ſuch a debaſement and exinanition of himſelf, that we thereby might be raiſed to a capacity of ſalvation.

Joh. 3. 16.
1 Joh. 4. 9.
Rom. 5. 8.
8. 32.
Διὰ σπλάγχνα ἐλέους θεοῦ.
Luc. 1. 78.
Tit. 3. 4.

God's choice is reaſon enough.

If we farther deſire to contemplate the wiſdom of God in this admirable proceeding; and to know, why God among other means and methods, alike (for all we can know) poſſible to him, did chuſe in this way to tranſact our redemption; it may be anſwered, that it becometh us rather to adore the depth of God's wiſdom herein, than to ſound it, or to hope by ſearching to reach the bottom of it: yet ſome congruities of this method to the reaſon and exigency of things are in the Scripture intimated to us, and in ſome manner are diſcernible by us, ſufficient to recommend the divine wiſdom therein to our admiration; Reaſons may be aſſigned why our Redeemer ſhould be θεάνθρωπος, why God, why man. It well became God to ſtoop down thus, that as his goodneſs toward us was infinite, ſo the demonſtrations thereof, to his glory and our benefit, ſhould be anſwerably ſuch; which perhaps could not otherwiſe be, than by ſuch a condeſcenſion: As a Prince could not make any other ſo great atteſtation of favour to his vaſſal, as by deſcending from his Throne, laying aſide his Majeſty, putting himſelf into a like condition, converſing freely with him, ſubjecting himſelf to the ſame laws and duties, enduring the like hardſhips and inconveniencies with him.

Niſi enim eſſet verus Deus, non adferret remedium, niſi eſſet homo verus non præberet exemplum. Leo. M. de nat. Serm. 1.

Eph. 1. 6.
Εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ.

It was expedient that our Redeemer ſhould be God, that he might be able by his power to ſave us; to remove thoſe huge obſtacles that croſſed our ſalvation, to ſubdue thoſe potent enemies which oppoſed it; to command and conquer nature, to vanquiſh the powers of hell, to aboliſh death in our behalf.

Ἔνδειξις δικαιοσύνης.

It was requiſite that he ſhould be the co-eſſential natural Son of God, that by the nearneſs of his relation to God, by the ſupereminent dignity of his Perſon, by the immenſe value of his merit he might conciliate God's favour to us, fully appeaſe his wrath incenſed againſt us, and ſatisfy his juſtice abuſed by our offences.

third nature different from both, ſuch as reſulteth from the compoſition and contemperation of the elements into a mixed body; ſuch a commixtion being ſuppoſed, our Lord would be neither God nor man; but another third kind of ſubſtance, ſuch as muſt not without any ground or authority be ſuppoſed; that would deſtroy, diminiſh or alter the properties of each; which is unſound to ſay, and impoſſible to be, for the divine nature is not capable of any diminution or alteration: wherefore both natures in this myſtery do ſubſiſt entire, diſtinct and unconfuſed, each retaining its eſſential and natural properties.

2. The Incarnation was performed ἀτρέπτως, that is without converſion or tranſmutation of one nature into another: The divinity could not be turned into humanity, for how could God (the eternal, ſelf-ſubſiſtent, moſt ſimple and immutable Jehovah) as ſuch, be any-wiſe changed or made, become infirm and paſſible, conſiſt of body and ſoul, ſuffer and die? Nor could the humanity be turned into divinity; for how could that which did not ſubſiſt at all before the Incarnation, be therein converted into another thing? why ſhould our Saviour ever be called man, when his humanity was by tranſlation into divinity deſtroyed? why is it ſaid, the word was made fleſh, if the fleſh was changed into the word? to omit, how impoſſible it is, that one Subſtance ſhould be tranſmuted into another, eſpecially a corporeal into a ſpiritual, a finite into an infinite; to omit likewiſe the many dangerous conſequences of this poſition, and its inconſiſtency with many principal and plain doctrines of our religion, particularly the real paſſion and death of our Lord, which could not be incident to him otherwiſe than as retaining the true nature of man.

3. The natures were alſo joined ἀδιαιρέτως, undividedly, that is, ſo as they have not diſtinct ſubſiſtences, or do not conſtitute two perſons: for there is but one Chriſt, one perſon, to whom, being God, and being Man, are truly and properly attributed.

4. We muſt alſo underſtand the natures to be united ἀχωρίστως, inſeparably; ſo that they never are ſevered, the union is never diſſolved; the ſame perſon never ceaſing to be both God and Man; not even then, when our Lord as man did undergo death; for he raiſed himſelf from the dead, he reared the temple of his own body, being fallen: as being God he was able to raiſe himſelf, as being man he was capable to be raiſed by himſelf; the union between God and man perſiſting, when the union between humane body and ſoul was diſſolved.

We might add, in farther excluſion of erroneous conceits, that this myſterious union was not made κατὰ παράστασιν, by aſſiſtance, or cloſe preſence onely, nor κατ' ἐνοίκησιν, merely by inhabitation, nor κατὰ σχέσιν, by relation, nor κατ' ἀξίαν, by eſtimation, nor καθ' ἁρμονίαν, by conformity, in will and practice, nor κατὰ ταυτοβουλίαν, by conſent; as Neſtorius and other heterodox Dogmatiſts anciently, in oppoſition to the Catholick expoſition of this myſtery did imagine; but it doth not ſeem worth the while to diſcuſs thoſe antiquated conceits, or with more ſubtilty to intrigue the Point.

Salmeron. apud Gerard. in loc. Exeget. p. 441. Bel.

As for illuſtration of it by compariſon, I ſhall onely (paſſing over divers more wide and improper reſemblances; ſuch as thoſe of Bellarmine, the union of a man's arm to his body, the inciſion of a bough into a tree, and the like) obſerve, that nature doth afford us one ſimilitude very apposite for explication of this myſterious union; which is the union of a man's ſoul and body, whereby he becometh one Perſon: The ſoul and body are two ſubſtances, very different in kind, in properties, in dignity: the one of it ſelf, material, extended, diviſible, paſſive and corruptible, lifeleſs and ſenſeleſs; the other immaterial, indiviſible, incorruptible, ſelf-moving, endewed with life, knowledge, paſſion: both of them are alſo capable of ſeparate exiſtence, or of ſubſiſtence by themſelves; yet are theſe two, although in a manner difficult for us to conceive or comprehend, cloſely united together, and do concur to the making up a man; and that ſo as to remain ſtill in ſubſtance diſtinct, each retaining its natural properties, without any confuſion, or any converſion of one into the other; ſo alſo that from them the ſame man receiveth the denominations of corporeal and ſpiritual, of mortal and immortal: In a like manner (although in a degree more admirable and incomprehenſible) are the divine and humane natures conjoined in our Lord; for, as we hear in the Athanaſian Creed, As the reaſonable ſoul and fleſh is one man, ſo God and man is one Chriſt. So much for the manner.

2. As for the reaſon why the Son of God did aſſume our nature; the chiefeſt and cleareſt reaſon thereof was, God's deſign thereby to exerciſe and demonſtrate his immenſe goodneſs, mercy and pity toward us; So God loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Son: In this the love of God was manifeſted, that God ſent his onely begotten Son into the world, that we might live by him. Through the tender mercy of our God the day ſpring from on high did viſit us: It was χρηστότης καὶ φιλανθρωπία, the benignity and philanthropy of God, which induced him to engage his Son upon ſuch a debaſement and exinanition of himſelf, that we thereby might be raiſed to a capacity of ſalvation.

Joh. 3. 16.
1 Joh. 4. 9.
Rom. 5. 8.
8. 32.
Διὰ σπλάγχνα ἐλέους θεοῦ.
Luc. 1. 78.
Tit. 3. 4.

God's choice is reaſon enough.

If we farther deſire to contemplate the wiſdom of God in this admirable proceeding; and to know, why God among other means and methods, alike (for all we can know) poſſible to him, did chuſe in this way to tranſact our redemption; it may be anſwered, that it becometh us rather to adore the depth of God's wiſdom herein, than to ſound it, or to hope by ſearching to reach the bottom of it: yet ſome congruities of this method to the reaſon and exigency of things are in the Scripture intimated to us, and in ſome manner are diſcernible by us, ſufficient to recommend the divine wiſdom therein to our admiration; Reaſons may be aſſigned why our Redeemer ſhould be θεάνθρωπος, why God, why man. It well became God to ſtoop down thus, that as his goodneſs toward us was infinite, ſo the demonſtrations thereof, to his glory and our benefit, ſhould be anſwerably ſuch; which perhaps could not otherwiſe be, than by ſuch a condeſcenſion: As a Prince could not make any other ſo great atteſtation of favour to his vaſſal, as by deſcending from his Throne, laying aſide his Majeſty, putting himſelf into a like condition, converſing freely with him, ſubjecting himſelf to the ſame laws and duties, enduring the like hardſhips and inconveniencies with him.

Niſi enim eſſet verus Deus, non adferret remedium, niſi eſſet homo verus non præberet exemplum. Leo. M. de nat. Serm. 1.

Eph. 1. 6.
Εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ.

It was expedient that our Redeemer ſhould be God, that he might be able by his power to ſave us; to remove thoſe huge obſtacles that croſſed our ſalvation, to ſubdue thoſe potent enemies which oppoſed it; to command and conquer nature, to vanquiſh the powers of hell, to aboliſh death in our behalf.

Ἔνδειξις δικαιοσύνης.

It was requiſite that he ſhould be the co-eſſential natural Son of God, that by the nearneſs of his relation to God, by the ſupereminent dignity of his Perſon, by the immenſe value of his merit he might conciliate God's favour to us, fully appeaſe his wrath incenſed againſt us, and ſatisfy his juſtice abuſed by our offences.

It was convenient, that his doctrine ſhould carry with it the higheſt certainty, and ſtrongeſt efficacy; that his example ſhould challenge the greateſt regard and ſtricteſt imitation; that his laws ſhould have ſupreme authority, and with greateſt advantage oblige us; fit therefore it was that he ſhould be God, and have the character of divinity ſtamped upon what he ſaid and performed.

The redemption and ſalvation of man did import an honour too auguſt for any creature to be dignified with; it was a work too difficult and mighty for any but God to atchieve; it was not proper that any creature ſhould be principal in managing an affair of ſuch height and importance: needfull and expedient therefore it was, that our Saviour ſhould be God.

Rom. 5. 19, &c.

He by his humanity did unite mankind in fraternity.
Τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ καταργήσας. Eph. 2. 15.
Ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ. Eph. 5 30.

It was alſo requiſite, upon many accounts, that he ſhould be man: that by perfectly obeying God's commands, and ſubmitting patiently to God's will as man, he might procure God's favour toward man; that as man had deeply wronged and offended God, ſo man alſo ſhould highly content and pleaſe him; in S. Paul's language, that as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners (that is, were condemned and expoſed to death, upon God's juſt diſpleaſure for that one man's tranſgreſſion, back'd with the like in his poſterity) ſo by the obedience of one man many ſhould be made righteous (that is, all who would imitate his obedience ſhould be abſolved from guilt, exempted from puniſhment, and received into grace; God being well pleaſed with and reconciled to mankind eſpecially to his followers, in regard to that man's dutifull obſervance of his will.) Decent it was that as man did approve, ſo man alſo ſhould condemn ſin in the fleſh, that as man by wilfull ſelf-pleaſing did incur miſery, ſo by voluntary ſuffering he ſhould recover happineſs; Ἔπρεπε, * It did (as the Apoſtle ſaith) become him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many ſons unto glory, to make the captain of their Salvation perfect through ſuffering.

Rom. 8. 3. That he might taſte death for man. Heb. 2. 9. Col. 1. 22. * Heb. 2. 10.

As the Devil did overbear man —— Evæ advocata. Iren. Heb. 4. 15. 5. 2.

It was alſo fit, that he who was deſigned to intercede for our welfare, to propitiate for our faults, to ſuccour and relieve our diſtreſſes, ſhould be tender of our good, and ſenſible of our needs; that he therefore ſhould by nature and experience be diſpoſed συμπαθεῖν to compaſſionate our infirmities, and μετριοπαθεῖν to be gently affected toward us, in reſpect of our ignorances and errours; whence ὤφειλε, he (ſaith the divine Apoſtle again) according to the deſign appointed to him, and undertaken by him ought, or it did behove him to be in all things like unto his brethren, that he might be a mercifull and faithfull High-Prieſt in things pertaining to God; that he might propitiate for the ſins of the people; for in that he hath himſelf ſuffered being tempted, he is alſo able to ſuccour thoſe that are tempted.

Heb. 2. 17.
Ἄνθρωπος ψιλὸς σῶσαι οὐκ ἴσχυε. Θεὸς γυμνὸς παθεῖν οὐκ ἠδύνατο. Procl. in Conc. Eph. pag. 5.

He was to be man alſo, for that by appearing in humane ſhape, viſible and audible, familiar and agreeable to us, he was qualified for that great deſign of declaring God's will and intentions toward us in a more eaſie, leſs amazing, and more obliging way, than otherwiſe could have been: for that hence likewiſe he could, with more advantage, deſcribe an exact copy of righteouſneſs for us to tranſcribe; ſhewing us exemplarily how as men we ſhould behave our ſelves; how we ſhould moderate our ſenſual appetites, how govern our paſſions, how order and employ all the powers of our ſoul, and members of our Body; how paſs through all conditions, and entertain all events befalling us; it not being indeed otherwiſe poſſible, that ſo lively and ſo ſutable a pattern of tranſcendent charity, meekneſs, humility and patience could have been exhibited to us.

Fit it alſo was, that he who was to be appointed our Judge, ſubſtitute of the ſupreme Judge inviſible, ſhould be, as God (of perfect wiſdom, and ſo able to diſcern all matters of fact, to diſtinguiſh all points of right; of perfect rectitude, ſo as never willingly to diſcoſt from truth and equity) ſo alſo man: viſible and audible to us, without ſurpriſing aſtoniſhment and terrour; apt to ſcreen us from the inſupportable preſence of God; endued with a natural tenderneſs of good will and compaſſion toward us, diſpoſed to temper needful ſeverity with competent mildneſs.

Acts. 17. 31. 10. 42.

In fine, it was moſt congruous, that he who was deſigned to recapitulate and Reconcile (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) all things in heaven and earth, to be the great mediatour and peacemaker between God and man, for the repairing God's honour, and diſpencing his grace, for the purchaſing our peace, and procuring our ſalvation, that he ſhould be moſt nearly allyed unto both parties; that conſequently if poſſible (and what is to God, the author of this œconomy, impoſſible? he ſhould be both God and man; Son to God, and brother to us; the ſame in nature with God, in kind with us. Such reaſon and wiſdom is diſcernible in this diſpenſation.

Ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, Eph. 1. 10. καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξαι. Col. 1. 20. 1 Tim. 2. 5.

III. Now for the practical uſe of this doctrine (for it is not a doctrine merely ſpeculative, and barren of fruit, or practical uſe) it ſhould, firſt, have a powerful influence upon our minds, cauſing us, with high degrees of love and gratitude, to adore the infinite goodneſs of that God, who hath been pleaſed himſelf to ſtoop ſo low, that he might advance us from the loweſt depth of meanneſs and wretchedneſs, to the higheſt pitch of honour and happineſs, that we are capable of: What words can expreſs, what thought can apprehend a favour ſo unconceivable, and ineffable? well might S. Paul call it ὑπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως ἀγάπην, Love tranſcending all knowledge: Well may heaven admire, and earth be aſtoniſhed, and hell tremble at the diſcloſure of ſuch a myſtery, at the accompliſhing ſuch a miracle of grace, and mercy; that the ſovereign majeſty of heaven, the eternal Lord of glory, the worlds great maker, the only Son of God, and heir of all things, ſhould become a poor, ſmall, weak and frail man; ſhould dwell in a tabernacle of fleſh, ſhould converſe with ſilly, wretched and frail mortals here, ſhould be expoſed to want, diſgrace and pain: ὢ βάθος, O depth of goodneſs, and mercy unſearchable! if this will not, What conſideration can raiſe us, what benefit can affect us? What prodigious ingratitude will it be, to be regardleſs, or inſenſible of kindneſs ſo wonderful.

Eph. 3. 19.

2. Another great uſe of this point, is to engage us, as univerſally to all obedience, ſo particularly to the duties of humility, of patienee, and of charity. Did the Son of God thus willingly ſubmit, and ſo abaſe himſelf; and ſhall we then be refractary, ſhall we exalt our ſelves; ſhall we refuſe any appointment, or repine at any proceeding of God? Did he from the higheſt pitch of glory ſuperceleſtial, voluntarily deſcend into this gloomy region, and ſtate of ignoble obſcurity; did he, abandoning immenſe wealth, freely embrace extreame poverty; did he gladly ſequeſter himſelf from thoſe ineffable joys above, to converſe with ſorrow and ſadneſs here, in this valley of tears, for God's ſake, and ours; And ſhall we be unwilling to doe any thing for God's ſake,

Phil. 2. 6, 7, 8.

Vid. 1 Joh. 4. 10, 11.

2 Cor. 8. 9.

Ἑορτάζομεν ἐπιδημίαν θεοῦ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους, ἵνα πρὸς θεὸν ἐκδημήσωμεν, ἢ ἐπανέλθωμεν, Naz. Orat. 38.

or to part with any thing for him? to theſe purpoſes doth S. Paul apply the conſideration of this point: Let (ſaith he) the ſame mind (the ſame humble, patient, meek, charitable mind) be in you, which was in Chriſt Jeſus; who being in the form of God — emptyed himſelf, taking upon him the form of a ſervant; being made in the likeneſs of men, and being found in faſhion as a man, humbled himſelf, becoming obedient unto death: It was the greateſt argument and inſtance of humility, patience and charity, that could be, for him, that did exiſt in the form of God, thus to debaſe himſelf to partake of our nature, and ſubmit to our ſtate; and know (ſaith that Apoſtle again) the Grace (or graciouſneſs) of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that being himſelf rich, for your ſake he became poor (being rich as God, and Lord of all things, he put himſelf into this mean and poor condition of man) that ye, through his poverty, might be rich; it was a conſideration ſurely moſt proper to his purpoſe of inciting unto charity.

Pſal. 8. 5.

Heb. 2. 7, 8.

Heb. 2. 16.

1. 5.

Agnoſce, Chriſtiane, dignitatem tuam, & divinæ conſors factus naturæ, noli in veterem vilitatem degeneri converſatione recidere. Leo de Nat. Serm. 1.

Phil. 2. 15.

Matt. 5. 48.

1 Pet. 1. 15, 16.

* Vid. Leonem P. de Nat. Serm. 6.

3. The conſideration of this point ſhould raiſe our minds to a ſenſe of the dignity of our nature, accompanyed with diſpoſitions of heart, and deportments of life anſwerable thereto: By our Lord's Incarnation our nature is ſo advanced, that we become nearly allyed to God, of the blood-royal of heaven, in this reſpect overtopping all the creation of God; ſo that hereby (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews diſcourſeth) that of the Pſalmiſt was verifyed, concerning man; Thou haſt crowned him with glory, and honour, and haſt ſet him over the works of thine hands; thou haſt put all things under his feet: the Angels themſelves cannot boaſt of ſuch an honour; for he took not the Nature of Angels, but he took the Seed of Abraham: Being therefore ſo highly dignifyed, we ſhould have a mi[illegible]ſutably great and noble, loving, delighting in, aiming at the moſt excellent things, void of baſe cares, of ſordid deſires, of unworthy deſigns; we ſhould in all our converſation, demean our ſelves worthily and decently, like the brethren of Jeſus, and children of God; that we may not * diſparage and diſgrace this illuſtrious alliance. As our Lord did vouchſafe, in moſt condeſcenſive Grace, to reſemble us, ſo ſhould we, with a generous and honeſt ambition, aſpire to reſemble him; as he ſtooped to humanity, ſo let us rear our ſelves to a kind of Divinity, in purity of mind, and ſanctity of life; ſo S. Gregory Nazianzene exhorteth; Let us (ſaith he) be as Chriſt, ſince Chriſt is become like us; let us, for his ſake, be Gods, ſeeing he is become Man for us.

Γενώμεθα ὡς χριστὸς, ἐπεὶ καὶ χριστὸς ὡς ἡμεῖς. Γενώμεθα θεοὶ δι' αὐτὸν, ἐπειδὰν κἀκεῖνος δι' ἡμᾶς ἄνθρωπος. Greg. Naz. Orat. 41.

Luc. 2. 10.

Εὐαγγελίζομαι ὑμῖν χαρὰν μεγάλην.

Luc. 2. 13.

4. The conſideration of this point ſhould fill our hearts with ſpiritual comfort, and joy; There never can be a greater occaſion, or juſter cauſe of rejoycing, than this, that our Lord is born and come: It is ſignally Evangelium, good tidings; never news more welcome hath come into the world; never report more gratefull was heard by mortal ears: It is news from heaven, and the beſt that ever came thence; Behold (ſaid the Angel that brought it, and a Meſſage it was moſt worthy the mouth of an Angel) I tell good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people; news, at which all heaven was pleaſed, and raviſhed with joy, breaking preſently forth into Hymns of Praiſe and Congratulation; There was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly hoſt, praiſing God and ſaying, Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, and good will to men. In this, if we mark it, all the grand cauſes of extraordinary joy and feſtivity do conſpire.

Is the birth of a Prince ever by honeſt Subjects entertained and celebrated with joy? Behold a Prince born to all the World; a Prince that cometh to rule mankind with perfect equity and clemency; to bring with him all peace and proſperity; to atchieve the moſt noble exploits, that could be undertaken in our behalf; to protect us in moſt aſſured ſafety, to defend us from all evil, to ſubdue and deſtroy all the enemies of our welfare, to reſcue us from the greateſt ſlaveries and miſeries, to ſettle us in perfect happineſs; He bringeth ſalvation from our enemies, Luc. 1. 71. and from the hands of all that hate us; ſo that being delivered from the hands 74. of our enemies, we might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our lives.

Is Victory glorious and joyful? See the invincible warriour is iſſued Apoc. 6. 2. forth into the field, conquering and to conquer; he that ſhall quell, diſ- Luc. 11. 22. arm, and rifle the ſtrong one, that ſhall rout all the forces of hell, that Joh 16. 33. ſhall defeat ſin, and ſlay death it ſelf, that ſhall ſubdue the world, and ſubject all things to himſelf: The captain of our ſalvation appeareth, triumphing in humility; the great blow is given; the Devil's pride and envy are abaſed; all the enemies are amaſed, are daunted, are confounded at his preſence; they cannot ſtand, they break, they ſcatter, they flee before him.

Is the publiſhing of Peace acceptable? Behold eternal peace between heaven and earth, a general peace among men, a peace of conſcience between man and himſelf, is now eſtabliſhed and proclaimed: the illuſtrious Ambaſſadour, the noble hoſtage, the infallible pledge thereof Eph. 2. 17. is arrived; Preaching peace to them that are far off, and to them that are Act. 10. 36. near.

Is recovery of liberty comfortable unto ſlaves and captives? Behold the Redeemer is come, the great ranſome is laid down ſufficient to purchaſe the freedom of whole worlds: innocence appearing in humane nature hath unlocked the priſon of ſin, in which we were cloſely detained, hath broken the ſhackles of univerſal Gal. 3. 22. guilt, which ſorely pinched mankind: he is come, who is anointed to Luc. 4. 18. preach (αἰχμαλώτοις ἄφεσιν) diſmiſſion to the captives.

In natali Domini quaſi in nuptiis ſpiritualibus ſponſæ ſuæ Eccleſiæ Chriſtus adjunctus eſt, tunc proceſſit ſponſus de thalamo ſuo, hoc eſt verbum Dei de utero virginali. Aug. de Temp. Serm. 2.

Is the coming of a good friend to be congratulated? Behold, the beſt friend to all mankind (bringing with him moſt wholeſome advice, moſt needful ſuccour, moſt ſeaſonable conſolation) is arrived to viſit us, and dwell with us.

Is it a comfortable thing to be graced with honour? What greater honour could mankind be dignifyed with, than this of receiving the Son of God into its kind, and kindred? What could more advance, and adorn us, than this high relation?

Is mirth ſeaſonable to the day of Marriage? Behold heaven and earth this day are coupled, divinity is eſpouſed to humanity, an eternal indiſſoluble knot of amity, of unity, is tyed between God and Man; the great Bridegroom is come forth clad in his nuptial garment of fleſh, ready to wed the Church, his beloved ſpouſe.

Is the Sun's riſing (after a long, dark and cold night) chearful and comfortable? See, the Sun of righteouſneſs is riſen, with healing in his wings; diſpenſing all about his moſt pleaſant light, and ſalutary influences: The day ſpring from on high hath viſited us, diffuſing an univerſal Luke 1. 78, light upon the ſouls of men, diſpelling the night of ignorance and errour, 79. ſhining out to thoſe which ſit in darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death, and Iſa. 60. 1. guiding our feet in the way of peace; Ariſe, ſhine, for thy light is come and

and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee, &c. Never did heaven with ſo clear and ſerene a countenance ſmile upon earth, as it did this day, when this ſuper-illuſtrious luminary (this bright morning ſtar, as he is Apoc. 22. 61. Ἀϛὴρ λαμπρὸς ϗ ὀρθρινός. called in the Apocalypſe) did ſpring up above our horiſon. From this auſpicious day commenced the revocation of that fatal curſe, by which we were exiled from Paradiſe, condemned to death, expoſed to hell; the reinſtating us in a condition of hope, in a capacity of happineſs; the return of life and joy into this region of corruption, and diſconſolateneſs: This is the day, which all nations deſired, and earneſtly longed for (with an implicite ſenſe) which the good Patriarchs foreſeeing did rejoyce; which the Profits in ſo magnificent ſtreins did predict and preſignify. In our Lord's nativity all mankind was in a manner born, or did revive; was reſtored from a manifold neceſſity of dying; from lying dead in the guilt, and under the power of ſin; from having our bodies irrecoverably diſſolved by corruption, and our ſouls immerſed into that ſecond death of endleſs miſery. It is in effect therefore the Worlds nativity that we celebrate, annexed to that of our Lord; the beginning of the new, better, ſpiritual and eternal life to men: all reaſon therefore we have upon this conſideration heartily to rejoyce; How extremely ſtupid and ſenſeleſs are we, if the apprehenſion of goods ſo many, ſo excellent hence accruing to us doth not inſpire our hearts Pſal. 118. 24. with a gratefull chearfulneſs? This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad therein.

Conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. Born of the Virgin Mary.

SERMON XXIV.

THE INCARNATION OF Our LORD.

MATTH. I. 20.

For that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt. Τὸ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθέν.

IF every circumſtance of our Lord's wonderfull incarnation deſerveth to be conſidered, as affording matter of good inſtruction, and ſerving to excite devout affection; then ſurely the principal cauſes and ingredients thereof may demand a ſpecial regard from us; ſuch are thoſe which are couched in this Text; The efficiency of the Holy Spirit, by which it was accompliſhed; the concurrence of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, as the ſubject, in whom the divine virtue did work it; upon which two particulars we ſhall reflect, in order.

I. It was the Holy Ghoſt, by the ſingular virtue and operation of whom, without intervention of any man, or earthly Father, the Bleſſed Virgin became impregnated and did conceive. Joſeph was, ὡς ἐνομίζετο, in outward eſteem, the Father of our Saviour (for Is not this, ſaid they, the Carpenter's ſon? Is not this the ſon of Joſeph?) the modeſty of his Holy Mother being preſerved from miſpriſion under the ſhrowd of wedlock, during the time that by God's order the myſtery and truth of things was to be concealed from general notice, untill the day of his being ſhewed, and manifeſted to Iſrael; but God onely was in truth his Father, his Incarnation being performed by the miraculous efficacy of God's Holy Spirit; upon which account (beſide his eternal generation) he was alſo the Son of God; for therefore (ſaid the Angel to his Mother) that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.

Luc. 3. 23.
Matt. 13. 55.
John 6. 42.
Luc. 4. 22.
Marc. 6. 3.
Luc. 1. 80.
John 1. 31.
Luc. 1. 35.

The matter of fact was well known to Joſeph by Revelation, and to the Bleſſed Virgin her ſelf by her conſcience alſo; and by them it was atteſted to the Holy Apoſtles; their atteſtation being ſeconded by the Miracles of our Lord, together with all the potent arguments which confirm his Doctrine: Nor do we find, that even the adverſaries of our Lord did ever offer to impeach his Parents of impoſture, or did any-wiſe trouble them about this report coming from them. And it is ſo clearly, and fully affirmed in the Goſpels, that it is prodigiouſly ſtrange that here have been lately ſome (called Joſephites) who have queſtioned it, upon weak pretences of diſcourſe; whom we cannot otherwiſe conſider, than as intolerably audacious perverters of Scripture, or ſubverters of its authority and uſe; for ſurely nothing there can be deemed certain, if this point is not. The fact therefore we muſt take for granted; and for our farther inſtruction about it we ſhall conſider three particulars; the manner of it, the reaſons for it, the practical uſe, whereto it may be applyed.

Apud Epiſcopium. ——

Luc. 1 35.

Δύναμις ὑψίστου.

1. The manner of that operation, whereby the Holy Ghoſt did effect the humane generation of our Lord, is by the Archangel Gabriel expreſſed to be from the ſupervention of the Holy Ghoſt, and the divine power over-ſhadowing the Bleſſed Virgin; the which words being of ſo general interpretation, and as to preciſe meaning ſo little intelligible by us, may well ſerve to bound our curioſity, and to check farther inquiry. Some indeed (as the followers of Valentinus and Apollinarius of old, as Menno, Servetus, and others of late) have been ſo bold as to determine, that the Holy Ghoſt did bring from Heaven a body, which he did convey into the Bleſſed Virgin; or that our Saviour's fleſh was formed of a divine ſeed, from the ſubſtance of God himſelf; or that in his conception the Holy Ghoſt did create, and impart ſomewhat of matter; but it is enough to ſay, that theſe are raſh and groundleſs conceits; The holy Fathers, having weighed and diſcuſſed ſuch imaginations, to prevent dangerous or misbecoming thoughts and ſpeeches, about a point of ſo ſacred nature, more ſoberly do teach, that our Saviour was conceived by the Holy Spirit, not σπερματικῶς, ſeminally; but δημιουργικῶς, operatively; οὐ διὰ συνουσίας, by copulation; but διὰ δυνάμεως, by power; not de ſubſtantia Spiritus S. of the ſubſtance of the Holy Ghoſt; but de potentia, by the virtue of it; and farther than this, ſay they, Generationem ejus quis enarrabit; Who can declare his generation, or exactly deſcribe the manner of a performance ſo very wonderfull and ſublime; to the which no experience doth furniſh any event like or comparable? When therefore it is ſaid, that the conception, or generation was ἐκ πνεύματος ἁγίου, of the Holy Ghoſt, the Prepoſition ἐκ is to be taken for the ſame with ὑπὸ, or διὰ (as it is very commonly uſed) denoting not matter out of which, but efficiency by which the effect was derived. But,

Damaſc. 3. 2.
Juſt. Mart. Apol. 2.
Aug. de. Temp. Serm. 6.
P. Leo de Nat. Serm.

2. Why was our Saviour conceived by the Holy Ghoſt? Divers reaſons for it may be aſſigned.

1. It was needfull for aſſuring the Divinity of our Saviour, or his being the Eternal Son of God. That the Meſſias, the Redeemer of the World ſhould be the Son of God was neceſſary, according to the purpoſe of God, the ancient predictions, the general opinions and expectations of God's people (often implyed in the Goſpels;) Accordingly ſuch he was as the coeternal Word in his divine nature; but it was requiſite that he ſhould alſo be ſuch according to his humane nature; that by his extraordinary generation, as Man, his other more ſublime generation (ſo much tranſcending humane conceit) might be more credible, and the world might be convinced of his divinity; for men

Pſal. 2. 7, 12.
1 Chr. 22. 10.
2 Sam. 7. 13.
Pſ. 80. 27.
Joh. 1. 34. 49. 11. 27. 6. 69.
Matt. 16. 16.
Marc. 14. 61.

hardly would have been capable to believe him more than a man, whom they ſaw born in the common way of men; Is not this the ſon of Joſeph, was an argument which they urged againſt him, when he ſpake about his deſcent from heaven, Joh. 6. 42. and cauſed them to admire, when they obſerved the power of his miracles (Matt. 13. 55.) and the wiſdom of his diſcourſe (Luk. 4. 22.) but eaſily might they be induced to admit a myſtery, which was countenanced by ſo grand a miracle, as the birth of a child, by the divine power, without a Father.

26. 63. Matt. 8. 29. Marc. 1. 24. Luc. 4. 34.

2. This was the moſt fit way of accompliſhing that ſo neceſſary conjunction of the divine and humane nature: A work of ſuch grandeur and glory, of ſuch grace and goodneſs, was not to be atchieved by any other agent; than by him, who is the ſubſtantial virtue and love of God; by whom we ſee all extraordinary and moſt eminent works to have been managed, to whom commonly the μεγαλεῖα Θεȣ̃, the majeſtick and magnificent things of God are aſcribed; for in the creation of the world, it was the Spirit of God which moved upon the waters, forming things, and impregnating them with all kinds of life and vigour natural; He it is, to whom thoſe ſignal works of providence, the revelation of divine truth, the prediction of future events, the performance of miracles, the renovation of mens minds, and reformation of their manners in a peculiar manner are attributed; So likewiſe to him this incomparably ſupernatural, glorious and important act was moſt properly due.

Acts. 2. 11.

3. It being neceſſary that our Saviour ſhould be conſecrated to his great functions, and perfectly ſanctifyed in his perſon, as Man; And thoſe performances (according to the myſtical œconomy of things among the divine perſons) being appropriated to the Holy Ghoſt, the natural ſpring of all derived ſanctity; his efficacy muſt needs intervene to this purpoſe: If Jeremy, S. John Bapiſt, and S. Paul (perſons deſigned for offices and employments in dignity, in conſequence ſo far inferiour) were ſanctifyed, and ſeparated by the Holy Ghoſt from their mothers womb; In how more excellent kind, and degree, was it requiſite that he ſhould be ſanctifyed thereby, who was ſent into the world to redeem, and purify it from all filth and fault? according to that ſaying of our Lord, Say ye of him, whom the Father hath ſanctifyed, and ſent into the world, thou blaſphemeſt, becauſe I ſaid I am the ſon of God? whereas the ſtyle of Gods was given to perſons devoted to far meaner ſervices.

Jer. 1. 5. Luc. 1. 15. Gal. 1. 15.

Joh. 10. 36.

4. It was needfull, that the humane nature, which God did vouchſafe ſo highly to advance, by aſſuming it to a perſonal conjunction and union with himſelf, ſhould be clear from all ſtain, and pollution; ſuch as in ordinary propagation doth adhere to our ſinfull fleſh and corrupt nature; That he whom God even as man would ſo dearly love, and ſo entirely be pleaſed with, ſhould be void of the leaſt inclination to iniquity, or impurity; for (as the Pſalmiſt telleth us) God is not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs, neither ſhall evil dwell with him; He is of purer eyes, than to behold evil, and cannot ſo much as look upon iniquity; How then would he receive any defiled thing into ſo near an union, into ſo dear a regard, into ſo full a complacence: He therefore was to be thoroughly ſanctifyed; and thence it was needfull that his Humanity ſhould iſſue from the fountain of Holineſs, God's moſt Holy Spirit.

Futurum hominum ſalvatorem talis ortus decebat, qui & in ſe haberet humanæ ſubſtantiæ naturam, & humanæ carnis inquinamenta neſciret. Leo 1. de Nativ. Ser. 2.

Rom. 8. 3. Pſal. 5. 4. Hab. 1. 13.

5. It in like manner was neceſſary, that he who was ordained to appeaſe God's diſpleaſure, and fully to reconcile him toward us, to expiate all our offences, thoroughly to redeem mankind from the guilt, and from the power of ſin; who with abſolute authority was to teach, 2 Cor. 5. 21. to exemplify, to command all righteouſneſs, ſhould himſelf know no ſin; Heb. 7. 26, 27. Such an high Prieſt (as the Apoſtle ſaith) became us, who was holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners; who had no need firſt to offer up ſacrifices for his own ſins: The ſacrifice expiatory for our offences was to 1 Pet. 1. 19. be a lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot: Whence he was to be fully Luc. 1. 35. ſanctifyed; and to become τὸ ἅγιον, that holy thing (abſolutely) as he was termed by the celeſtial meſſenger: Whence from the ſource of ſanctity, the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe proper name doth import Holyneſs, whoſe proper work it is to ſanctify, he was to derive a perfect ſanctity and purity in his ſacred conception.

6. We may add, as an obſervable point, the analogy, or appoſite reſemblance thereof, between the conception of our Saviour for us, and Gal. 4. 19. his formation in us; his natural generation and the ſpiritual regeneration of Chriſtians; his becoming our brother in the fleſh, and our being made his brethren in the ſpirit; both being effected by the ſame agent: As Chriſt was made true man, and partaker of our nature, ſo we become θείας φύσεως κοινωνοί. true Chriſtians, and conſorts of the divine nature by the operation of the ſame divine Spirit: As he by the diſpenſation of God, ſo we by his grace 2 Pet. 1. 4. Eph. 1. 10. are born not by bloud, nor by the will of fleſh, nor by the will of man, but of John 1. 13. God; Hence doth accrue a new relation, and we become his brethren, not onely as he was made like to us, but alſo as we become like to him; 1 Pet. 1. 23. 1 Joh. 3. 9. and are begotten of God, by the ſame heavenly virtue, the ſame incorruptible ſeed.

It may indeed be an admonition to us to labour after this ſpiritual conception, which will render us conformable to our Lord, and far more truely allyed to him, than even his partaking our nature hath done; And indeed without that ſpiritual one, this carnal alliance will not ſignifie any thing of benefit to us; it will little profit us, that he was 2 Cor. 5. 16. born in the fleſh, if we are not born of the ſpirit; without which ge- Joh. 3. 3, 5. neration we cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

3. The proper application of this point is to engage us on a thankfull adoration of the divine goodneſs and wiſdom; ſo fully, ſo fitly carrying on that infinitely gracious work of our redemption; all the divine perſons of the Bleſſed Trinity in a particular manner conſpiring, as in the deſignation ſo in the execution thereof; The Father mercifully deſtinating and ſending his Son; the Son willingly and gladly condeſcending to come; the Holy Ghoſt effectually bringing him into the world; to which Bleſſed Trinity therefore we ſhould render all humble reverence, and hearty praiſe: And ſo much for the firſt particular obſerved in the Text.

τὸ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθέν. II. The next is, the concurrence of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary to our Lord's Generation; that which is conceived (or generated) in her.

The being generated (τὸ γεννᾶσθαι, here) we may ſuppoſe to reſpect, or to expreſs his whole humane generation, with the parts and progreſs thereof; implying on the Virgins part all that ſhe as a mother did confer thereto; wherein therefore are comprehended the following particulars;

Luc. 1. 42. 1. His conception of her ſubſtance, whence he is called the fruit of Iſa. 11. 1. her womb; and a rod (that is, a branch, or twig) ſprouting from the ſtem συλλήψῃ ἐν γαστρί. Luc. 1. 31. of Jeſſe; and, Behold, ſaid the Angel, thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb.

2. The nutrition, accretion, and entire conformation of his body, out of her blood and ſubſtance; whence her womb is ſaid to bear him (bleſſed is the womb that bare thee) Luc. 11. 27. to have been gravidated*, or great with child, * ἔγκυος. the which as it grew, did ſwell her womb viſibly; Luc. 2. 5. ſo that ſhe was found*, Matt. 1. 18. or obſerved, by apparent ſigns, to be with child of him, or to have him in her womb. * εὑρέθη ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα.

3. His nativity it ſelf, or excluſion into the open world; which is thus expreſſed by the Evangeliſt; The days were accompliſhed that ſhe ſhould be delivered, and ſhe brought forth her firſt born ſon. Luc. 2. 6.

Whatever therefore any mother doth confer to the entire production of a child, is to be attributed to the Bleſſed Virgin; whence ſhe was truly and properly the mother of our Lord, and is accordingly often ſo called in the Goſpels; Luc. 1. 43. whence alſo ſhe hath been in the Church defined to be and commonly ſtyled θεοτόκος, the bearer and mother of God; that is, of him who is God; that term aſſerting the Divinity of Chriſt, and the Unity of his perſon [againſt Neſtorius and his partizans; Neſt. ad Cyrill. in Conc. Eph. who ſaid, that the Virgin was not properly θεοτόκος, but χριστοτόκος; and that He who was born, was not God, but ἄνθρωπος θεοφόρος, a man carrying God, or divinity in him.] Cyrill. Epiſt. ad Neſt.

Now for our inſtruction and uſe we may reſolve the word her into three reſpects diſtinctly conſiderable; He was born of her, a Woman; He was born of her, a Virgin; he was born of her, Mary; each of which reſpects is pregnant with matter obſervable: He was born of a Woman, that was highly needful to be; of a Virgin, that was very requiſite; of Mary, that doth involve diverſe circumſtances of importance.

1. Our Saviour was born of a Woman.

The Valentinian Hereticks of old did opine, that he was only born through a woman, or did merely paſs through her, as liquor doth paſs through a veſſel; But that is a great errour; for He was born in her, and of her; in our Text it is ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθὲν, generated in her; which in ſound expreſſeth no more, than her containing him when conceived, but according to the force of the Hebrew particle ב (Be) anſwering to ἐν here, is apt to ſignifie more; and muſt be taken to do ſo in conformity to parallel expreſſions; as that of S. Paul, God ſent forth his ſon born ἐκ γυναικὸς, of a woman; Gal. 4. 4. and that of S. Luke (in the beſt Copies, followed by our Engliſh Tranſlatours) τὸ γεννώμενον ἐκ σοῦ, the Holy thing that is born of thee, or out of thee. Luc. 1. 35.

Indeed of a woman he was born, that is from the matter and ſubſtance of a woman; ſo as thereby to bear the return of a kinſman to us, becoming conſanguinious to all mankind, which God did make of one blood; Acts 17. 26. whence he is not aſhamed to call us brethren Heb. 2. 11, — 14. [and alloweth us to be of his fleſh, and of his bones.] Eph. 5. 30.

We may eaſily conceive, that God could immediately have created a nature in kind and properties like to ours, and have aſſumed it; but that would not have ſo fitly ſerved the deſign of reconciling himſelf to us, and redeeming us; to the effecting that in the moſt congruous way, not only a reſemblance in nature, but a cognation and proximity in blood was needful, or at leaſt was very convenient and ſuitable: for our blood being tainted, our whole ſtock having forfeited its dignity and eſtate by the rebellious diſloyalty of our common anceſtours, it was expedient that it ſhould be purged and reſtored by the ſatisfactory merit, and acceptable fidelity of one, who was of our race and kindred. We being to be adopted, and received into God's Family, it was proper that buſineſs ſhould be tranſacted by intervention of a common re-

Gal. 4. 4, 5. lation according to the diſcourſe of S. Paul, God ſent forth his ſon, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem thoſe that were under the law (that according to the obligation undertaken by him, he performing the obedience required by the law, might redeem thoſe, who being tyed to obey the law, had yet tranſgreſſed it) ἵνα τὴν υἱοθεσίαν ἀπολάβωμεν, that (it followeth) we might receive the adoption; that is, that we by virtue and in conſequence of that birth from a woman, and of that obedience to the law performed by our brother, might be in capacity to receive the quality or ſtate of Sons to God.

It was likely ſeemly, that the Devil, who by the weakneſs of a woman had ſeduced man from his duty to God, had overthrown, triumphed over, and captivated God's creature, in juſt amends, for the reparation of God's honour, and our conſolation, ſhould by the ſtrength and faithful conſtancy of one, proceeding from a woman, be himſelf defeated and debaſed; according to the myſtical intent of that moſt ancient prophecy, or promiſe, The ſeed of the woman ſhall break the ſerpent's head; of the woman, the man is not mentioned; for,

2. Our Lord was born of a Virgin: ſo it was anciently preſignifyed
Iſa. 7. 14. and predicted; a Virgin ſhall conceive and bear a ſon; A Virgin; Almah, עלמה ἀπόκρυφος (ſo Aquila, with reſpect to the derivation of the word, did render it) that is a recluſe; one who perhaps had ſeldome ſeen, who never had known a man.

This, it ſeemeth, was that new thing (that moſt ſtrange and admirable thing) which God in the Prophet Jeremy did foreſhew, that he
Jer. 31. 22. would create in the earth, and which ſhould then happen, when he would reſtore Sion, and eſtabliſh a new covenant with his people; namely, a woman ſhall compaſs a man; a woman in a manner extraordinary, without the concourſe of a male, ſhould conceive, and encloſe in her womb a man; that very man, who ſhould accompliſh the great matters there predicted and promiſed. So it was, and ſo upon diverſe accounts it was requiſite that it ſhould be.

For how otherwiſe apparently, to the ſenſe and ſatisfaction of all men, could he be that which (according to ancient Prophecies, and common expectation, as alſo according to the exigency of things, and the tenour of divine purpoſes) he ought to be, both the ſon of God, and the ſon of man, otherwiſe than by coming of a Virgin? He muſt be born of a woman, that he might truly be the ſon of man; He muſt be born of a Virgin, that he might be clearly the ſon of God; How otherwiſe could there be an effectual conviction of his divine original?

It was alſo decent and expedient, that the tabernacle in which God ſhould reſide and dwell, ſhould be proper and encloſed; that the Temple of the divinity ſhould be holy and ſeparate; that the ſoil, whence Holyneſs it ſelf would ſprout forth, ſhould be clear and pure from all ſordid mixtures; that none ſhould preſume to touch the border of that Holy * Mountain where God ſo ſpecially would manifeſt himſelf; that the luſt of man ſhould not approach that place, whence the glory of God would ſo illuſtriouſly ſhine forth.

Ἔπρεπε γὰρ τὸν ἐπὶ ἀφθαρσίᾳ τοῦ παντὸς ἐν τῷ ἀνθρωπίνῳ βίῳ γενόμενον, ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπηρετούσης αὐτοῦ τῇ γεννήσει ἀφθαρσίας ἄρξασθαι. Greg. Nyſſ. in Chriſti Nat. (Tom. 2. p. 776.)

* Exod. 19. 11.

It was alſo moſt convenient for exciting due attention and regard, for begetting faith, for procuring reverence and admiration in men, that our Redeemer ſhould enter on the world in a manner ſo peculiar and miraculous: For who that heareth of ſuch an event, can forbear to mind it, and ponder on it? Who can doubt him to be the Son of God, whom by ſufficient and certain atteſtation he learneth to have been conceived without any concurrence of man? who will not readily defer high veneration to him, who appeareth in a manner ſo glorious, and ſupernatural?

3. Moreover, our Saviour was born of Mary; of that ſingular perſon determined and deſcribed in the Goſpels; of her, that was eſpouſed to, and did live with Joſeph; with Joſeph the Carpenter; who was born in the town of Bethlehem, who lived in the city of Nazareth in Galilee; who both according to natural and legal extraction was deſcended in a direct lineage from King David, being (as S. Luke ſaith) of the houſe and family of David, and who by conſequence did lineally come from Abraham. She her ſelf was alſo of the ſame ſtock and family; as may be collected from circumſtances intimated in the ſtory, and certainly may be deduced from the prophecies concerning our Saviour's ſtock, with the aſſertions implying their accompliſhment.

Ἐξ οἴκου ϗ πατριᾶς Δαβίδ. Luc. 2. 4. 1. 27.

Of Mary therefore, by blood and progeny a Princeſs, extracted from the moſt illuſtrious ſtem on earth; not only famous among men, but (which is infinitely more) eſpecially dear to God; who yet in external condition was very mean and poor, living obſcurely in habitation with an Artiſan, of a painful and not gainful trade.

Luc, 1. 48.

As for her perſonal qualifications, they were excellently worthy; for in diſpoſition of mind ſhe was very religious and devout toward God; in the temper of her ſpirit very ſweet and calm, very modeſt, meek and humble; ſuch the paſſages occurring in the Goſpels concerning her do ſhew her to have been; ſuch particularly that moſt excellent hymn ejaculated by her (wherein we may diſcover a ſpirit raviſhed with the moſt ſprightly devotion imaginable; a devotion full of ardent love, of humble thankfulneſs, of hearty joy, tempered with moſt ſubmiſſive reverence) demonſtrateth her to have been.

Of a mother ſo related, and ſo qualified, our Saviour was born; both which points were requiſite.

She was ſo related, for the declaration of God's truth, fidelity and conſtancy in accompliſhing thoſe ancient predictions and promiſes made to the Fathers; to Abraham, that in his ſeed all the families of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; to David, that of the fruit of his loines God would raiſe up Chriſt to ſit upon his throne; concerning whom, as by many paſſages in the Goſpel it appeareth, God's people had a general expectation and perſuaſion, that he ſhould be the rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch growing out of his roots; in whom the horn of David ſhould bud; who ſhould raiſe the tabernacle of David that was fallen, and rule over the Kingdom of Jacob for ever. And that our Lord ſhould be born at Bethlehem, that he ſhould be called a Nazarene, were circumſtances touched in the Prophets, for the verification whereof it was needful that the mother of our Lord ſhould be thus related.

Gen. 26. 4. 12. 3. 18. 18. 22. 18. Gal. 3. 8. Acts 3. 25. Acts 2. 15. Iſa. 11. 1. 10. Rom. 1. 3. 15. 2. Pſ. 132. 17. Apoc. 5. 5. 22. 16. Amos 9. 11. Acts 15. 16. Luc. 1. 32.— Jer. 33. 15. 23. 5. — Matt. 2. 5. 21. 15, 23. 9, 15. 27. 22. 20, 30, 42.

She was alſo to be ſo duely qualifyed as to her ſtate and mind; being homely in ſtate of life, and holy in diſpoſition of mind; to ſignifie, that God did not ſo much regard the outward pomps and appearances of this vain world, as the inward frame and temper of ſpirit.

It is indeed no ſmall diſparagement to thoſe empty glories, which men are wont ſo hugely to admire, and it may be a ſtrong inducement to a moderate eſteem of them, if we conſider it, that God did not chuſe for the mother of his ſon, and Saviour of mankind, a viſibly great Princeſs, or any to appearance honourable, ſplendid or wealthy perſonage; but her that was eſpouſed to a mechanick artificer, her that was only rich in grace, and deck'd with interiour endowments; adorned (after the

1 Peter 3. 4. the garb, which S. Peter recommendeth to women) with the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible purity of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which in the ſight of God is of great price. This is the reflexion which ſhe her ſelf did make upon the matter; for this her ſoul did magnifie Luc. 1. 51. --- God, becauſe he had regarded the low eſtate of his handmaiden; —— he had ſhewed ſtrength with his Arm, he had ſcattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts; he had put down the mighty from their ſeat, and had exalted the humble and meek; he had filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he had ſent empty away: This ſheweth the extreme folly of contemning the poor, to whom commonly God expreſſeth ſo ſpecial regard, who are capable of ſo high favours, who have ſo glorious conſorts of their ſtate.

Such a perſon did the ſon of God chuſe to bear himſelf, to bear duty unto, to confer that ſpecial favour and eminent honour upon; an honour, among all exteriour honours the higheſt, that ever was vouchſafed to any of humane kind, or indeed to any mere creature.

I ſay of exteriour honours, for ſpiritual advantages, our Lord himſelf doth teach us in our eſteem to prefer above this great privilege; they being toto genere, ſuperiour, and placing us in a nobler relation to him Matt. 12. 5. than this; Whoſoever, ſaith he, ſhall doe the will of my Father that is in heaven, the ſame is my brother and ſiſter and mother; the ſame in a more excellent manner and ſublime degree is allyed, is endeared to me, than he can be upon the ſcore of any carnal kindred: The conformity to him in our mind and affections doth render us nearer to him than any cognation of blood; the having him formed in our hearts is more conſiderable, than the bearing of him in the womb.

Indeed, the mother of our Lord her ſelf, although as ſuch ſhe was Luc. 1. 28. 48, 49. κεχαριτωμένη, eſpecially favoured and graced, and bleſſed among women; although upon that account all nations muſt eſteem and call her bleſſed; although worthily ſhe did in that reſpect acknowledge, that God had done μεγαλεῖα, magnificent and mighty things for her; yet really, in juſt eſteem, to have Chriſt born in her ſoul, to have participated of his divine grace and preſence in her heart, the Holy Ghoſt's having produced a ſpiritual birth of holy diſpoſitions in her, was a nobler honour, and a truer happineſs than that; neither would it, as S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, have been any-wiſe profitable to her, if ſhe had not been vertuous, to bear Chriſt in her womb, or to bring forth that admirable birth; this our Saviour plainly declared, when as a good woman, tranſported by the raviſhing excellency of his diſcourſe, did cry out, * Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, he thence took occaſion to ſay, Yea rather, bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.

'Ουδὲ τὸ κυοφορῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν, καὶ τὸν θαυμαστὸν ἐκεῖνον τόκον τεκεῖν ἔχει τι κέρδος, ἀρετῆς οὐκ οὔσης. Chryſ. in Matt. 12. 50.
* Luc. 11. 27.

We might alſo here farther obſerve, that our Saviour upon other good accounts, willingly did chuſe ſo mean a parentage; namely,

That he thence might have readier opportunity to undergoe and taſte the greateſt inconveniences and hardſhips incident to our nature, thereby more fully meriting and ſuffering for us.

That he might have occaſion to exemplify the moſt difficult vertues and duties (humility, meekneſs, patience, contentedneſs) ſhewing us how we ſhould vertuouſly comport with the loweſt ſtate; how we ſhould chearfully ſuſtein wants, labours, pains and diſgraces; how we ſhould contentedly be deſtitute of all the glories, riches and pleaſures of this world;

That alſo the divine power and glory might appear more conſpicuouſly through his worldly ſtate of impotency and baſeneſs.

That he might inſinuate the nature of his Kingdom not to conſiſt in ſecular pomp and puiſſance, but in ſpiritual power over the hearts of men.

That he might diſcover wherein our happineſs doth conſiſt; how little any thing, which is high in vulgar eſteem of men, is an ingredient thereof: And what is the true grandeur of a man; not his outward garb and retinue, but his inward vertue and goodneſs.

Finally, this relation of the Bleſſed Virgin to our Lord, as it ſhould beget a precious eſteem and honourable memory of her (for let that mouth be curſed which will not call her bleſſed, let the name of him be branded with everlaſting reproach of folly, who will not prefer her in dignity before any Queen or Empreſs) ſo it ſhould not ſerve to breed in us fond opinions, or to ground ſuperſtitious practices in regard to her, as it hath happened to do among divers ſorts of Chriſtians; eſpecially among the adherents to Rome. For,

They (out of a wanton mind, but in effect profanely and ſacrilegiouſly) have attributed to her divers ſwelling and vain names, divers ſcandalouſly unſavoury, ſome hideouſly blaſphemous titles and elogies, as alluding to, ſo intrenching upon the incommunicable prerogatives of God Almighty, and of our Bleſſed Saviour; ſuch as the Queen of Heaven, the Health of the world, the Mother of mercies, the Spouſe of God, our Lady (as if beſide our unus Dominus, there were una Domina in the Church, forgotten by S. Paul) with Epheſ. 4. 5.
the like. 1 Cor. 8. 6.

They aſcribe to her the moſt ſublime attributes of God, together with his moſt peculiar actions of providence and protection over us, yea of redemption it ſelf.

They yield acts of religious veneration (prayer and praiſe) to her, and thoſe in a very high manner and ſtrein; profeſſing not onely to ſerve her religiouſly (which the Holy Scripture chargeth us to doe in regard to God and him onely) but ὑπερδουλεύειν, to doe more than ſerve her, or to ſerve her with exceeding devotion.

Who commonly do at the end of their works joyn, Praiſe be to Laus Deo &
God, and to the Bleſſed Virgin; as if ſhe were to ſhare with God in B. Virginis the glory and gratitude due for bleſſing or ſucceſs upon our performances.

All this they doe without any plain reaſon, any plauſible authority, any ancient example, yea manifeſtly enough againſt the beſt reaſon, the commands of God, the doctrine and practice of the primitive Church, all which do conſpire in appropriating religious adoration to God alone; Neither the Holy Scripture, nor the firſt Fathers excepting the Bleſſed Virgin from the general rule; or taking notice of her as an object of our worſhip, but nipping the firſt eſſays of ſuch a ſuperſtition in the Collyridians.

Such groundleſs and fooliſh conceits, ſuch dangerous and impious practices we ſhould carefully beware; the which, as they much derogate from God's honour, and prejudice his ſervice, and thwart his commands, ſo they indeed do rather greatly diſcredit, injure and abuſe the Bleſſed Virgin; (making her name acceſſory to ſuch enormous ſcandals) than they do bring any honour, or doe any right to her.

And, I doubt not but, εἴ τις αἴσθησις, if ſhe from her ſeat of bliſs doth behold theſe perverſe ſervices, or abſurd flatteries of her, ſhe with holy regret and diſdain, doth diſtaſte, loath, diſdain and reject them; with a Non nobis Domine, Pſal. 115. Not unto us, O Lord; and with the Angel in the Apocalypſe, Ὅρα μὴ, See thou doe it not.

Apoc. 19. 10. 22. 9. Act. 10. 26. 14. 14.

Whoſe greater honour it was in truth, to be a meek and humble ſervant, than to be the mother of her Lord and Saviour; It is the chief and trueſt honour we can doe her, to eſteem her great modeſty and humility, to imitate her piety and grace, after her pattern conſcientiouſly to reverence and obey her Son; Unto whom therefore let us with hearty thankfulneſs render all Glory and Praiſe. Amen.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate.

SERMON XXV.

1 COR. 1. 23.

*But we preach Chriſt * crucified.*

* Who was crucified. (τὸν ἐσταυρωμένον.) Λόγος τοῦ σταυροῦ, 1 Cor. 1. 18.

THe Doctrine of the Goſpel is called the word of the Croſs; that is, a report concerning our Lord's crucifixion, together with a declaration of the ends, effects and uſes of it; this being a ſpecial and main point therein, whereto all the reſt are cloſely allyed, and whereon the whole method of our ſalvation dependeth; a point, which (as S. Paul in this, and in ſeveral other places doth acquaint us) of all others did find the hardeſt entertainment among all ſorts of people, to whom it was addreſſed; few auditours being diſpoſed to ſwallow it, or able to digeſt it. The Jews were much offended, that one who ſuffered by their hands in ſo vile and wretched a manner, ſhould be propounded to them as their Meſſias and King; the ſame, who according to their opinions and hopes (grounded on their ancient Prophecies plauſibly interpreted, and on their conſtant traditions) was deſtined to reſtore them from their afflicted condition, and to rear them into a high ſtate of proſperity. The Pagans took it for an extravagantly fooliſh conceit, that a perſon of ſo mean a quality, and ſo miſerable a fortune, ſhould be ſuch as was told them, the Son of God, and Lord of all things, the authour of happineſs, and the object of higheſt adoration to all men; very abſurd and abominable this Propoſition did generally ſeem to the carnal and worldly prejudices of men, who little could underſtand, and leſs would conſider the ſublime deſign thereof;

Celſus. Orig. lib. 2. p. 83, &c. lib. 1. p. 368. Porphyrius. Aug. de. Civ. D. 10. 28. Lucian. Jul. apud Cyrill. 6. p. 194. Tryphon. apud Juſt. (p. 317.)

thereof; but to thoſe, who (being endewed with a meek heart, and enlightned by divine grace) did rightly apprehend and duely weigh it, it did afford great ſatisfaction and comfort; it had on them a moſt effectual and beneficial influence; proving indeed unto them the power of God to ſalvation; as raiſing in them ſtrong hopes of ſalvation, and engaging them in a practice conducible thereto. Upon this point therefore our Lord's Ambaſſadours, the Holy Apoſtles, in their preaching chiefly did inſiſt, declaring the great ends, and excellent fruits of our Bleſſed Saviour's crucifixion; according to that of S. Paul, I determine to know nothing among you ſave Chriſt, and him crucified.

1 Cor. 1. 18.
Rom. 1. 16.

1 Cor. 2. 2.

It is therefore queſtionleſs a moſt profitable, and ever (eſpecially now, when our Lord's paſſion is by the Church ſolemnly commemorated) very ſeaſonable ſubject of our meditation; apt to excite good thoughts, good affections, and good reſolutions in us; and as ſuch I mean now to recommend and apply it; endeavouring to aſſiſt your meditation by ſuggeſting ſome remarkable particulars concerning it; and in my diſcourſe I ſhall not ſo much generally conſider the death and paſſion of our Lord, as the particular manner and kind thereof, by crucifixion; the which we may contemplate, as qualified with divers notable adjuncts; namely, 1. As a ſuffering in appearance criminal. 2. As moſt bitter and painfull. 3. As moſt ignominious and ſhamefull. 4. As agreeable and advantageous to the intents of his paſſion. 5. As completory of ancient preſignifications and predictions. 6. As apt to excite devotion in us, and to enforce on us the practice of our duty.

Tryphon the Jew in Juſtin Martyr, doth confeſs, That Chriſt, according to the Prophecies of Holy Scripture, was to ſuffer, but it did offend him that he ſhould ſuffer in this kind. Juſt. M. p. 317.

I. Let us conſider it as a ſuffering in appearance criminal; or a ſeeming execution of juſtice upon our Lord, as a malefactour: He was, as the Prophet foretold, numbred among the tranſgreſſours; and God (ſaith S. Paul) made him ſin for us, who knew no ſin; that is, God ordered him to be dealt with as an exceedingly ſinfull, or criminous perſon, who in himſelf was perfectly innocent, and void of the leaſt tendency to any fault: So in effect it was, that he was impeached of the higheſt crimes, not onely as a violatour of the divine law, in breaking the Sabbath, in keeping bad company, and holding an over-free converſation; but as an impoſtour, deluding and ſeducing the people; as a blaſphemer, aſſuming to himſelf the properties and prerogatives of God; as a ſeditious and rebellious perſon, perverting the nation, forbidding the payments of tribute to Cæſar, uſurping Royal authority, and pretending to be Chriſt a King; in general, as a κακοποιὸς, a malefactour, or one guilty of notable crimes; ſo his proſecutours (in the Goſpel) did affirm, If (ſaid they to Pilate) he were not a malefactour, we ſhould not have delivered him up unto thee: As ſuch he was repreſented and arraigned; and that although by a ſentence wreſted from the Judge againſt his conſcience, by the malicious importunity of his accuſers, he was condemned, and in pretence ſuffered as ſuch, is clear and admitted by all.

Iſa. 53. 12.
2 Cor. 5. 21.

Joh. 5. 18.
10. 30. 7. 12.
Luc. 23. 2.
Matt. 27. 63.

Joh. 18. 30.

Now whereas any death, or paſſion of our Lord (as being in it ſelf infinitely valuable, and moſt precious in the ſight of God) might have been ſufficient toward the accompliſhing the general deſigns of his paſſion, the expiation of our guilt, the appeaſement of God's wrath, the ſatisfaction of divine juſtice; it might be inquired, why God ſhould ſo expoſe him, and why he ſhould chuſe to ſuffer under this odious and ugly character; to ſatisfie this demand, and that we may the more admire the wiſedom and goodneſs of God in this great diſpenſation, divers reaſons may be aſſigned, which are intimated in Holy Scripture, or bear a conformity to its doctrine, why it was ſo ordered. For. 1.

1. As our Saviour freely did undertake a life of greateſt meanneſs and hardſhip, ſo upon the like accounts he might be pleaſed to undergoe a death of all moſt bitter and uncomfortable: There is nothing to man's nature (eſpecially to honeſt and ingenuous nature, wherein natural modeſty is not extinct) more abominable than ſuch a death: God for good purpoſes hath planted in our conſtitution a lively ſenſe of diſgrace; and of all diſgraces that which proceedeth from an imputation of heinous crimes is moſt diſguſtfull and pungent; and being conſcious of our innocence, doth increaſe the ſmart; and to reflect upon our ſelves dying under it, or leaving the world with an indelible ſtain upon our name and memory, is yet more grievous; Even to languiſh by degrees, enduring the torments of a long, however ſharp diſeaſe, would, to any ingenuous perſon, be far more eligible, than in this manner (of being reputed and treated as a villain) to find a quick and eaſie diſpatch; Some touch of which reſentment we may conceive breaking forth in our Lord, and ſomewhat of man's nature diſcovering it ſelf in that queſtion; Luc. 22. 52. Matt. 26. 55. Be ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves? He did it ſeems, as a man, loath to be proſecuted as a thief; yet he willingly choſe it; as he purpoſely did embrace other the worſt of diſtaſtfull things, belonging to our nature, and incident to that lowly condition, into which he did put himſelf; (not onely being Phil. 2. 7. made in the likeneſs of man, but taking the form of a ſervant) to endure want, and to fare hardly; to be ſlighted, envyed, hated, ſcorned and reproached through the whole courſe of his life. Had he dyed in any other way, he had not been ſo complete a ſufferer, nor had taſted the worſt of what men can and do endure; there had been a comfort in ſeeming innocent, which had impaired the perfection of his undertaking. Joh. 5. 18. 8. 37, 40, 59. 7. 1, 19, 25. 10. 32, 38. Often was he in danger of death, both from the cloſe machinations, and from the open violences of thoſe who maligned him; but he induſtriouſly declineth a death ſo eaſie, and ſo honourable, if I may ſo ſpeak; it not being ſo diſgracefull to fall by private malice, or by ſudden rage, as by the ſolemn and deliberate proceeding of perſons in publick authority, and great credit.

This kind of death he did foreſee, and plainly with ſatisfaction did aim at; He (as we have it related in the Goſpels) did ſhew his diſciples, that it was incumbent on him (by Gods appointment, and his own choice) Matt. 16. 21. Luc. 9. 22. Marc. 9. 12. Ἀποδοκιμασθῆναι ἐξουδενοῦσθαι. ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν πολλὰ παθεῖν, that he ought to ſuffer many things; to be reprobated by the Chief Prieſts, Elders and Scribes; to be vilifyed by them; to be condemned, and delivered up to the Gentiles, εἰς τὸ ἐμπαῖξαι, to be mocked and ſcourged, and crucifyed: as a moſt flagitious ſlave.

Thus would our Saviour, in conformity to all the reſt of his voluntary afflictions, and for a conſummation of them, not onely ſuffer in his body, by ſore bruiſes and wounds, in his ſoul by the bittereſt ſorrows and agonies; but in his name alſo and reputation by the fouleſt ſcandals; undergoing as well all the infamy, as the infirmity which did belong unto us, or could befall us; thus meaning by all means to expreſs his charity, and exerciſe his compaſſion toward us; thus advancing his merit, and yielding the utmoſt ſatisfaction to juſtice in our behalf. Again,

2. Death paſſing on him as a malefactour by publick judgment, did beſt ſute to the nature of his undertaking, was moſt congruous to his deſign in ſuffering, did moſt aptly repreſent what he was doing, and imploy the reaſon of his performance. We all were guilty in a moſt high degree; we deſerved an exemplary condemnation; the ſharpeſt pain, together with the greateſt ſhame, was due to us for our unworthy offending our moſt great, and our moſt good Lord and Maker; He did undertake in our ſtead to bear all this, and fully to ſatisfy for us; He therefore underwent the like judgment and puniſhment, being reputed, being termed, being treated as we ſhould have been, in quality of a notorious malefactour, as we in truth are. What we really had acted in diſhonouring and uſurping upon God, in diſordering and troubling the world, in deceiving and perverting others (by our negligent miſtakes, and our preſumptuous miſcarriages; by our evil practices and contagious examples) that was imputed to him, and avenged on him; All we like ſheep have gone aſtray; we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquities of us all; he therefore did not only ſuſtain an equivalent puniſhment, but in a ſort did bear an equal blame with us before God and man. Farther,

Iſa. 53. 6.

3. Seeing it was determined that our Lord ſhould die for us, and that not in a natural but violent manner, ſo as perfectly to ſatisfie God's juſtice, to vindicate his honour, and to evidence his indignation againſt our ſins; it was moſt fit, that he ſhould perform it in that way, wherein God's right is moſt nearly concerned, and his providence moſt diſcernible; wherein it ſhould be moſt apparent, that God did exact and inflict puniſhment on him, that he did yield unto it, and ſubmiſſively undergoe it. All judgment (as Moſes ſaid in his charge) is God's; or is adminiſtred in his name, by authority derived from him; all Magiſtrates being his Officers and inſtruments, by whom he governeth and ordereth the world, his Kingdom; whence that which is done in way of formal judgment by perſons in authority, God himſelf may be ſuppoſed in a more ſpecial and immediate manner to execute it, as being done by his commiſſion, in his ſtead, on his behalf; with his peculiar ſuperintendance and guidance; It was therefore in our Saviour a ſignal act of ſubmiſſion to God's authority and juſtice, becoming the perſon which he ſuſtained of our proxy and redeemer, to undergoe ſuch a judgment, and ſuch a puniſhment; whereby he received a doom as it were from God's own mouth, uttered by his Miniſters; and bare the ſtroak of juſtice from God's hand, repreſented by his inſtruments; wherefore very ſeaſonably and pertinently did he reply to Pilate, avowing his authority under God in thoſe words, Thou hadſt no power over me (or againſt me) except it were given thee from above; implying, it was in regard to that originally ſupreme authority of God his Father, and to his particular appointment upon that occaſion, that our Saviour did then freely ſubject himſelf to thoſe inferiour and ſubordinate powers, as to the proper miniſters of divine juſtice; Had he ſuffer'd in any other way, by any private malice or paſſion of men, God's ſpecial providence in that caſe had been leſs viſible, and Chriſt's obedience not ſo remarkable; And if he muſt die by publick hands, it muſt be as a criminal, under a pretence of guilt and demerit; there muſt be a formal proceſs, how full ſoever of mockery and outrage; there muſt be teſtimonies produced, however falſe and groundleſs; there muſt be a ſentence pronounced, although moſt partial and corrupt; for no man is perſecuted by authority without ſome colour of deſert; otherwiſe it would ceaſe to be publick authority, and become private violence; the proſecutour then would put off the face of a Magiſtrate, and appear as a murtherer, or a thief.

Deut. 1.
2 Chr. 19. 6.
Κατ' ἐμοῦ.
John 19. 11.

4. In fine, our Saviour perhaps in no other way, with ſuch advantage, could have diſplayed all kinds of vertue and goodneſs, to the honour of God, and the furtherance of our benefit, as in this: The Judgment-hall, with all the paſſages leading him thither, and from thence to execution, attended on by guards of ſouldiers, among the crouds and clamours of the people, were as ſo many theatres, on which he had opportune convenience viſibly, in the eye of the world, to act divers parts of ſublimeſt vertue; to expreſs his inſuperable conſtancy in atteſting truth and maintaining a good conſcience, his meekneſs in calmly bearing the greateſt wrongs, his patience in contentedly enduring the ſaddeſt adverſities; his entire reſignation to the will and providence of God; his peaceable ſubmiſſion to the law and power of man; his admirable charity in pitying, in excuſing, in obliging thoſe by his good wiſhes and earneſt prayers for their pardon, who in a manner ſo injurious, ſo deſpiteful, ſo cruel, did perſecute him; yea in willingly ſuffering all this for their ſalvation: all theſe excellent vertues and graces, by the matter being thus ordered, were in a degree moſt eminent, and in a manner very conſpicuous, demonſtrated to the praiſe of God's name, and the advancement of his truth; for the ſettlement of our faith and hope; for an inſtruction and encouragement of good practice to us. Upon ſuch conſiderations it might be expedient, that he ſhould ſuffer in this kind as a criminal.

Was Crucified.

SERMON XXVI.

1 COR. 1. 23.

But we preach Chriſt crucified.

IT is added in the Creed, under Pontius Pilate; ἐπὶ Ποντίȣ Πιλάτȣ; in which words the prepoſition ἐπὶ may either denote the circumſtance of time, when our Saviour's paſſion did happen in the time of Pontius Pilate his government, or preſidency over Judæa; ſo the word ἐπὶ is very frequently uſed; or it may alſo farther imply a reſpect to that perſon, as an inſtrument of our Saviour's paſſion; ſo that it might alſo be rendred, by, or under Pontius Pilate, as Preſident and Judge; thus is the word ſometimes uſed (as for inſtance, where in the Goſpel it is ſaid, ἐὰν ἀκȣσθῇ τȣ̃το ἐπὶ τȣ̃ ἡγεμόνος, if this be heard Matt. 28. 14. by the Governour, or if it come to the Governour's ear, as it is rendred in our Tranſlation.) Neither of theſe ſenſes were, I ſuppoſe, diſtinctly, but both rather conjunctly intended here; in relation to the Evangelical cal Hiſtory; the which (as to the main obvious paſſages) we are here ſuppoſed to know, and do profeſs to believe; neither do I think any thing more of myſtery deſigned here beyond the full and clear determination of our Saviour's Perſon; or the declaration of whom we do believe in by circumſtances moſt apt and ſutable to that purpoſe; the time when, the perſon under whom, and conſequently the place where, and manner how he ſuffered. However all theſe circumſtances are in themſelves conſiderable, and afford ſome matter of edification to our faith and practice: Let us therefore touch them.

1. The time, in it ſelf moſt fit, and moſt agreeable to divine predictions, doth illuſtrate the wiſdom of God in his providence, doth confirm his veracity, his conſtancy and his fidelity: For when the fullneſs of time was come; when the Sceptre of Legiſlation and Sovereign authority was juſt departed from Judah; while the Jewiſh Temple did ſtand, but was ſhortly to be deſtroyed; before the Jews were utterly unſettled, and diſperſed; when the LXX. hebdomades (of years) were near expiring, the time when the Meſſias ſhould be cut off; when Judaiſm Dan. 9. 26. was by numerous acceſſion of Proſelytes diffuſed over the world; the Sacred Writings being tranſlated, and legible every where; when the world was in the moſt general peace, and deepeſt calm; conſequently mens attention being then more ready, and their minds more capable of inſtruction and perſuaſion concerning divine truths; when the moſt conſiderable part of the world was united under one Empire (or under two, that of the Romans, and that of the Parthians) and thence more fit to be incorporated into a ſpiritual Common-wealth (to communicate in offices of piety, to impart and receive inſtruction) when mankind by learning and policy was generally better civilized than ever, more inquiſitive after knowledge, and more receptive of truth; when in ſhort all things were duly prepared, and ſuted for the great effects deſigned by God to proceed from our Saviour's paſſion, and other performances, then did he ſuffer, and doe what God had in his wiſdom and goodneſs predetermined, preſignified and predicted. I might add, that the time was fit to be ſet down, as a character apt to confirm the truth of the hiſtory; for direction to a fair inquiry and trial concerning it; to exclude all confuſion and uncertainty about it.

2. As for the Perſon under whom our Lord ſuffered; if we conſider him as a Roman-ſtranger (or Gentile) or as a Governour and Judge; or with regard to his perſonal qualities; or according to his deportment in this affair; ſomething in all theſe reſpects may preſent it ſelf obſervable by us.

He was an alien from the Common-wealth of Iſrael; ſo Jews and Gentiles conſpired in violence and injury againſt their common Saviour; that ſo in type and myſtery it might be ſignified how the ſins of all men did jointly bring him to his death; that every mouth might be ſtopped, and all the world might become guilty before God. Neither was Rom. 3. 19. it for nothing decreed by God, that the Jews ſhould (as our Saviour Matt. 20. 19. foretold) deliver him up (τοῖς ἔθνεσιν) to the Gentiles, to mock, and Matt. 27. 18. ſcourge, and crucifie him. The Jews out of envy and malice delivered him up, accuſed and proſecuted him, inſtigated and importuned againſt him; The Gentiles out of ignorance, profaneneſs and unjuſt partiality, condemned and executed him; whereby the ingratitude, iniquity and impiety of all mankind did in ſome ſort appear, and was aptly repreſented; and conſequently his immenſe goodneſs is demon- Rom. 5. 6, 8, 10. ſtrated, who for ſo impious, unjuſt and flagitious a generation, for ſo 1 Pet. 3. 18.

malicious enemies, for ſo cruel perſecutours of himſelf did willing ſuffer: them, who ſo combined in miſchief againſt him, he then deſigned to conjoin in reconciliation to God, and in mutual peace and charity toward one another; Eph. 2. 16. Col. 1. 20. reconciling both unto God in one body by the Croſs, having ſlain the enmity thereby.

A ſtranger alſo was proper for the management of this affair, as apt to be a more fair and indifferent Judge; doing what was deſigned and fit to be done in our Saviour's trial, for vindication of his perſonal innocence, and declaration of the iniquity practiſed againſt him.

Again, if we conſider Pilate as a Governour and Judge; (for ſo he was, Cæſar's Procurator, and Preſident of Judæa, ἐπίτροπος, and ἡγεμὼν Matt. 27. 2. &c. he is called) we therein may diſcern the wiſdom and ſpecial providence of God; puniſhing our Saviour for us by his own officer in a courſe of Juſtice; the loyal obedience of our Saviour ſubmitting both to God and to man, although in a caſe of a plain outrage and higheſt injuſtice againſt himſelf; the heinouſneſs of that wicked proceeding, wherein that ſacred power committed by God to men, and the venerable name of juſtice were ſo abuſed; for if ever, then one might have Eccleſ. 3. 16. ſaid with the Preacher, I ſaw the place of judgment, that wickedneſs was there; and the place of righteouſneſs, that iniquity was there.

As for Pilate's perſonal qualities; he is by the Hiſtorians writing near thoſe times reported to have been a man of a harſh and rough temper, willful and haughty in ſpirit, violent, rapacious and cruel in his proceedings, and was therefore a proper inſtrument of providence for execution of ſuch a buſineſs; ſo holy and gracious in God's purpoſe, ſo villanous and barbarous according to man's intention; Such a perſon deſerved to bear the guilt of a fact ſo execrably baſe; was worthy to be employed therein, and ready enough to undergoe it: It had not in it ſelf been ſo plauſible that ſuch an act ſhould, nor ſo credible that it could proceed from any perſon otherwiſe of good diſpoſition, or right intention; but for him it was proper, of him it could not be improbable; who by his former violences (ſuch as upon the complaints of this people Joſeph. Antiq. 18. 5. did ſoon after, as Joſephus telleth, remove him from his charge) had ſo incenſed the Jews, that he would not ſtick to gratifie them in a matter wherein they ſo earneſtly concerned themſelves; and which in ſemblance (ſetting aſide conſiderations of juſtice and honeſty, ſo little material in ſuch a perſon's regard) ſo little touched his own intereſt; in yielding up ſo poor, ſo as to outward ſhew inconſiderable a perſon, as a boon or ſacrifice to their importunate rage: Pilate (ſaith Saint Marc. 15. 15. Τὸ ἱκανὸν ποιῆσαι τῷ ὄχλῳ. Mark) willing to content the people, releaſed Barrabas unto them, and delivered Jeſus, when he had ſcourged him, to be crucified.

Such an one he was; and yet it is obſervable, that in compariſon to the furious Jews, he behaved himſelf with ſome moderation and ingenuity: He was ſo fair in examination of the caſe, as notwithſtanding their eager and clamorous proſecution, to diſcern the right, and to John 19. 6. Luc. 23. 14, &c. declare our Saviour guiltleſs: he was ſo far conſtant and true to his conſcience, as to expoſtulate with the Jews, and once, twice, a third time to challenge them, Why, what evil hath he done? as often did he John 19. 12. ἐζήτει. diſcover his inclination and readineſs (yea his will and intention, his Luc. 23. 20. earneſt deſire ——) to free the innocent perſon: Yet had he not the heart Acts 3. 13. Κρίναντος ἐκείνου ἀπολύειν. or the honeſty throughly to reſiſt their importunities; they were more obſtinate in their wicked deſigns, than he reſolute in his good purpoſes: So partly, out of fear to offend them, partly out of favour to oblige them (thoſe two uſual corrupters of right judgment) he yielded to them, unworthily ſuffering himſelf to be overborn by their wicked ſolicitations, ſo ſacrificing acknowledged innocence to his own private intereſt, and their implacable malice. Thus did the heathen Judge behave himſelf, ſerving divine providence, not onely in the publick and formal condemnation of our Saviour to the puniſhment due unto us, but in the ſolemn and ſerious abſolution of him from all blame deſerved by himſelf: In ſhew he condemned our Saviour, in truth he condemned himſelf, the corrupt Judge; and the Jews, the malicious accuſers: though he took away his life, yet he cleared his reputation; affording a teſtimony moſt valid and convincing of his innocence; ſuch as was requiſite to convince all Jewiſh ſlanders and aſperſions; and ſufficient to confirm our faith.

3. Farthermore, the name of Pontius Pilate intimateth the place of our Saviour's paſſion; he being well known to have been Governour of Judea, and to have his Tribunal of Juſtice at the mother-City thereof, Jeruſalem: at Jeruſalem, that bloudy City, as the Prophet calls it; whoſe character it was to be the killer of the Prophets, and the ſtoner of them who were ſent unto her; out of which it was (in a ſort) impoſſible, that a Prophet ſhould periſh; yet the place of all the world moſt favoured, and graced by God by ſpecial bleſſings and privileges; at Jeruſalem, his own peculiar ſeat; the City of God, the City of the great King it is ſtyled; the which he out of all the Tribes of Iſrael, out of all the people of the earth had choſen to put his name (to place his eſpecial preſence) there; the holy and beloved City; there at his own doors as it were, before his own ſacred Palace, where moſt eſpecial reſpect and veneration were due to him, was the King of heaven adjudged and executed; by procurement of his own ſervants, peculiarly related to him, the Chief Prieſts, and Elders of his choſen people, perſons wholly devoted to his ſervice, and highly dignified by him; whoſe office and eſpecial duty it was to maintain truth and encourage righteouſneſs, to procure, by their inſtruction and practice, honour to God and obedience to his commandments; which circumſtance conſidered as it highly advances the goodneſs of him, who willingly ſuffered there, and by ſuch perſons; ſo it much aggravateth man's ingratitude and iniquity.

Ezek. 22. 2: 24. 6.
Luc. 13. 33, 34.
Pſ. 48. 2. 87. 3.
Deut. 12. 5:
Neh. 9. 1.
Ezr. 6. 12.
1 King. 11. 32.
Mat. 4. 5. 27, 53.
Apoc. 20. 9, &c.

I ſhall now proceed to handle the reſt of the Particulars which I propoſed in the beginning of the laſt Diſcourſe.

II. We may conſider that his ſuffering was moſt bitter and painfull. We may eaſily imagine, what acerbity of pain muſt be endured by our Lord in his tender limbs being ſtretched forth, racked and tentered, and continuing a good time in ſuch a poſture; by the piercing his hands and his feet, parts exquiſitely ſenſible, with ſharp nails (ſo that as it is ſaid of Joſeph, the iron entred into his ſoul) by abiding expoſed to the injuries of Sun ſcorching, wind beating upon, whether ſearching his grievous wounds and ſores: Such a pain it was, and that no ſtupifying, no tranſient pain, but a pain very acute, and withall lingring: for we ſee that he, and thoſe who ſuffered with him, had both preſence of mind, and time to diſcourſe; even ſix long hours did he continue under ſuch torture, ſuſtaining in each minute of them beyond the pangs of an ordinary death. But as the caſe was ſo hard and ſad, ſo the reaſon thereof was great, and the fruit anſwerably excellent; Our Saviour did embrace ſuch a paſſion, that in being thus ready to endure the moſt grievous ſmarts for us, he might demonſtrate the vehemence of his love; that he might ſignifie the heinouſneſs of our ſins, which deſerved that from ſuch a perſon, ſo heavy puniſhment ſhould be exacted; that he might appear to yield a valuable compenſation for thoſe everlaſting tortures which we ſhould have endured; that he might thoroughly exemplify the hardeſt duties of obedience and patience. Farther,

Pſal. 105. 18. O. T.
Marc. 15. 25. 34.

III. We may conſider this ſort of puniſhment as moſt ſharp and afflictive, ſo moſt vile and ſhamefull; being proper to the baſeſt condition of the worſt men, and unworthy (as Lactantius ſaith) of a freeman, however nocent, or guilty. It was ſervile ſupplicium, a puniſhment never by the Romans, under whoſe Law our Lord ſuffered, legally inflicted upon freemen, but onely upon ſlaves, that is upon people ſcarce regarded as men, having in a ſort forfeited or loſt themſelves; and among the Jews likewiſe, that execution, which moſt approached thereto, and in part agreed with it (for they had no ſo inhumane puniſhment appointed by their Law) hanging up the dead bodies of ſome who had been executed, was deemed moſt infamous and execrable; for curſed, ſaid the Law, is every one, that hangeth upon a tree; curſed, that is devoted to reproach and malediction; accurſed of God, it is in the Hebrew; that is, ſeeming to be deſerted by God, or to be expoſed to affliction by his ſpecial order.

Quod etiam homine libero quamvis nocente videatur indignum. Lact. 4. (p. 436.)

Deut. 21. 23. Gal. 3 16. Τοῦτο γὰρ μόνον τῆς τελευτῆς τὸ εἶδος ὑπὸ ἀρᾶς ἔκειτο. Chryſ. Tom. 6: Or. 61.

Indeed, according to courſe of things, to be raiſed on high, and for continuance of time, to be objected to the view of all that paſs by, in that calamitous poſture, doth breed ill ſuſpicion, doth provoke cenſure, doth invite contempt, ſcorn and obloquy; doth naturally draw forth language of deriſion, deſpight and deteſtation, eſpecially from the inconſiderate, rude and hard-hearted vulgar; which commonly doth think, ſpeak, deal with men according to event and appearance (—ſequitur fortunam ſemper & odit Damnatos) whence θεατρίζεσθαι, to be made a gazing ſtock, or object of reproach to the multitude, is accounted by the Apoſtle as an aggravation of the hardſhips endured by the primitive Chriſtians: And thus in the higheſt degree did it happen to our Lord; for we read that the people did in that condition, mock, jeer and revile him; ἐξεμυκτήριζον, ἐνέπαιζον, ἐβλασφήμουν, they drew up their noſes, they ſhot out their lips, they ſhaked their heads at him; they let out their wicked and wanton tongues againſt him; verifying that prediction in the Pſalm, I am a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people; all they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn; they ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head, ſaying, he truſted in the Lord, that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighted in him; In this caſe the ſame perſons, who formerly had admired his glorious works, who had been raviſhed with his excellent diſcourſes, who had followed and favoured him ſo earneſtly; who had bleſſed and magnified him (for he, ſaith S. Luke, did teach in their Synagogues, δοξαζόμενος ὑπὸ πάντων, being glorified by all) even thoſe very men did then behold him with pityleſs ſcorn and deſpight; εἱστήκει ὁ λαὸς θεωρῶν, the people, ſaith Saint Luke, ſtood gazing upon him, in correſpondence to that in the Prophet, they look and ſtare upon me; they looked in a ſcornfull manner, venting contemptuous and ſpitefull reproaches, as we ſee reported in the Evangelical Hiſtories.

Heb, 10. 33. Luc. 23. 35, 36. Matt. 27. 38. Pſal. 22. 6, 7. Matt. 9. 33. 21. 9. 12, 23. Luc. 4. 15, Luc. 23. 35. Pſalm 22. 17.

Thus did our Saviour endure the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame; deſpiſing the ſhame, that is, not ſimply diſregarding, or diſeſteeming it, as no evil, with a Stoical haughtineſs, or Cynical immodeſty; but not eſchewing it, or not valuing it as ſo great an evil, that for declining it he would neglect the proſecution of his great and glorious deſigns. There is in man's nature an averſation and abhorrency from diſgracefull abuſe, no leſs ſtrong than are the like antipathies to pain; whence cruel cruel mockings and ſcourgings we find coupled together, as ingredients Heb. 11. 36. of the ſore perſecutions ſuſtained by Gods faithfull Martyrs; and generally men will more readily embrace, and more contentedly ſupport the latter than the former; pain not ſo grievouſly affecting the lower ſenſe, as being inſolently deſpiſed, doth grate on the fancy and wound the mind; for the wounds of infamy do as the Wiſe man telleth us, goe down into the innermoſt parts of the belly, piercing the very hearts of Prov. 18. 8. men, and touching the ſoul to the quick. We need not therefore doubt, 12. 18. but that our Saviour (as a man, endewed with humane paſſions and infirmities) was ſenſible of this natural evil; and that ſuch indignity did add ſomewhat of bitter and loathſomneſs to his cup of affliction; eſpecially conſidering that his great charity diſpoſed him to grieve, obſerving men to act ſo very indecently, ſo unworthily, and ſo unjuſtly toward him; yet in conſideration of the glory that would thence accrue to God, of the benefit that would redound to us, of the joy that was ſet before him, when he ſhould ſee of the travail of his ſoul, and be Heb. 12. 2. ſatisfied, he did moſt willingly undertake and gladly undergo it: He Iſa 53. 11. became, as the Apoſtle ſaith, a curſe for us, or was expoſed to malediction Gal. 3 13. and reviling; he endured the contradiction (or obloquy) of ſinfull men, he was deſpiſed, rejected and diſeſteemed of men; he in the Heb. 12. 13. common apprehenſions of men did ſeem deſerted by God, according to Iſa. 53. 3. 4. that of the Prophet, We did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmitten of God, and afflicted; he did himſelf in a manner ſeem to concur in that opinion, as by that wofull outcry, Lama ſabacthani, doth appear; So did he become a curſe for us, that as the Apoſtle ſubjoyneth, we might be redeemed from the curſe of the Law, that is, that we might be ſaved from that exemplary puniſhment due to our tranſgreſſions of the Law; with the diſpleaſure of God appearing therein, and the diſgrace before Phil. 2. 7. men attending it: He choſe thus to make himſelf of no reputation (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) being contented to be dealt with as a wretched ſlave and wicked miſcreant, that we might be exempted not onely from the torment, but alſo from the ignominy we had deſerved; that we together with our life, and ſafety, and liberty, might recover even that honour which we had forfeited.

Heb: 12. 2.

But leſt any one ſhould be tempted not ſufficiently to value theſe ſufferings of our Lord, as things not ſo rare, but that other men have taſted the like; or ſhould be ready to compare them with the ſufferings of other vertuous men, as Celſus did with thoſe of Anaxarcus and Epictetus; I ſhall by the bye interpoſe ſomewhat obſervable concerning them. We may then conſider, that not onely the infinite excellency of his perſon, and the perfect innocency of his life, did enhance the price of his ſufferings, but ſome endowments peculiar to him, and ſome circumſtances, did encreaſe their force: He was not onely, according to the frame and temper of humane nature, ſenſibly affected with the pain and ſhame, and all the reſt of evils apparently waiting on his paſſion; as God (when he did inſert ſenſe and paſſion in our nature, ordering objects to affect them) did intend that we ſhould be, and as other men in like outward circumſtances would have been, but in many reſpects beyond that ordinary rate; No man, we may ſuppoſe, could have felt ſuch grief from them as he did, no man did ever feel any thing comparable to what he did endure; it might be truely applyed to him, Behold and ſee if there be any ſorrow like to my ſorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger as that extraordinary Lam. 1. 22. ſweating great lumps of bloud may argue; as the terms expreſſing his Luc. 22. 44.

affliction

Περίλυπος. ἕως θανάτου. Matt. 26. 37. 38. Luc. 22. 44. ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ γίνεσθ. Joh. 13. 21. 12. 27. Marc. 14. 33.

affliction do intimate; for in regard to preſent evils his ſoul is ſaid to have been exceedingly ſorrowfull unto death; he is ſaid ἀδημονεῖν, to be in great anguiſh and anxiety; and to be in an agony, or pang; In reſpect to miſchiefs which he foreſaw coming on, he is ſaid ταράττεσθαι τῷ πνεύματι, to be diſordered, or diſturbed in ſpirit, and ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, to be amazed, or diſmayed at them; to ſuch exceſſive height of paſſion did the ſenſe of incumbent evils, and the proſpect of impendent diſaſters, the apprehenſion of his own caſe, and reflexion upon our ſtate raiſe him: And no wonder, that ſuch a burthen, the weight of all the ſins (the numberleſs heinous ſins and abominations) which he did appropriate to himſelf, that ever have been, or ſhall be committed by mankind, lying upon his ſhoulders, he ſhould feel it heavy, he ſhould ſeem to crouch and groan under it; Innumerable evils (ſaid Iſa. 40. 12. he in the myſtical Pſalm) have compaſſed me about, mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, ſo that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of my head, therefore my heart faileth me. God's indignation ſo dreadfully flaming out againſt ſin might well aſtoniſh and terrifie him; to ſtand before the mouth of hell belching out fire and brimſtone upon him, to lie down in the hotteſt furnace of divine vengeance, to undertake with his heart-bloud to quench all the wrath of heaven, and all the flames of hell (as he did in regard to thoſe, who will not rekindle them to themſelves) might well in the heart of a man beget unconceivable and unexpreſſible preſſures of anguiſh; when ſuch a Father (ſo infinitely good and kind to him, and whom he ſo dearly loved) did hide his face from him, did angrily frown on him, How could he otherwiſe than be ſorely troubled? It is not ſtrange, that ſo hearty a love, ſo tender a pity contemplating our ſinfullneſs, and ſuſtaining our wretchedneſs, ſhould be deeply affected thereby; any one of thoſe perſons, who fondly do pretend to, or vainly glory in a ſtupid Apathy, or in a ſtubborn contempt of the evils incident to our nature and ſtate, would in ſuch a caſe have been utterly dejected; the moſt reſolved Philoſopher would have been daſhed into confuſion at the ſight, would have been cruſhed to deſpair under the ſenſe of thoſe calamities which aſſaulted our Lord. With the greatneſs of the cauſes, the goodneſs of his conſtitution might alſo conſpire to augment his ſuffering; for ſurely as his complexion was moſt pure and delicate, his ſpirit moſt vivid and apprehenſive, his affections moſt pliant and tractable; ſo accordingly ſhould the impreſſions upon him be moſt ſenſible; and conſequently the pains which he felt both in ſoul and body moſt ſharp and afflictive. That we in like caſes are not alike affected, that we do not tremble at the apprehenſions of God's diſpleaſure, that we are not affrighted with the ſenſe of our ſins, that we do not with ſad horrour reſent our own danger, or our miſery; doth ariſe from that we have very glimmering and faint conceptions of thoſe things, or that they do not in ſo clear and lively a manner ſtrike our mind and fancy; (not appearing in their true nature and proper ſhape, ſo heinous and ſo hideous, as they really in themſelves, and in their conſequences are) or becauſe that we have but weak perſuaſions about them; or becauſe we do but ſlightly conſider them; or from that our hearts are hard and callous, our affections cold and dull, ſo that nothing of this nature (nothing beſide groſs material affairs) can eaſily move or melt them; or for that we have in us ſmall love to God, and little regard to our own true welfare; for that briefly in reſpect to ſpiritual matters, we are neither ſo wiſe, ſo ſerious, ſo ſober; nor ſo good and ingenuous in any reaſonable meaſure, as we ought to be: But our Saviour in all theſe reſpects was otherwiſe diſpoſed; he moſt evidently diſcerned the wrath of God, the grievouſneſs of ſin, the wretchedneſs of man moſt truely, moſt fully, moſt ſtrongly repreſented to his imagination and ſpirit; he moſt firmly believed, yea moſt certainly knew all that God's law had declared about them; he thoroughly did conſider and weigh them; his heart was moſt ſoft, and ſenſible, his affections were moſt quick, and eaſily excited by their due objects; He was full of dutiful love to God his Father, and moſt ardently deſirous of our good, bearing a more than fraternal goodwill toward us; whence 'tis not marvellous, that as a man, as a tranſcendently good man, he was ſo vehemently affected by thoſe occurrences; that his imagination was ſo troubled, and his affections ſo mightily ſtirred by them; ſo that he thence truely did ſuffer in a manner, and to a degree unconceivable; according to that ejaculation in the Greek Liturgies, διὰ τῶν ἀγνώστων σου παθημάτων ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, Χριστὲ, By thy unknown ſufferings, O Chriſt, have mercy on us. But farther,

IV. We may conſider, that this way of ſuffering had in it ſome particular advantages conducing to the accompliſhment of our Lord's principal deſign.

Its being very notorious, and laſting a competent time were good advantages; for if he had been privately made away, or ſuddenly diſpatched, no ſuch great notice would have been taken of it, nor would the matter of fact it ſelf have been ſo fully proved to the confirmation of our faith, and conviction of infidelity; nor had that his excellent deportment under ſuch bitter affliction (his moſt divine patience, meekneſs and charity) ſo illuſtriouſly ſhone forth: Wherefore to (prevent all exceptions, and excuſes of unbelief, and for other collateral good purpſoes) divine providence did ſo manage the buſineſs, that as the courſe of his life, ſo alſo the manner of his death ſhould be moſt conſpicuous and remarkable; Theſe things (as S. Paul told King Agrippa) were not done in a corner; and, I, ſaid our Lord himſelf, ſpake freely to the world; and in ſecret have I done nothing; ſo were the proceedings of his life, not cloſe or clancular, but frank and open; not preſently huſhed up, but carryed on leiſurely in the face of the world; that men might have the advantage to obſerve and examine them. And as he lived ſo he died moſt publickly and viſibly, the world being witneſs of his death, and ſo prepared to believe his reſurrection, and thence ready to embrace his doctrine; according to what he did himſelf foretell, I being lifted up from the earth ſhall draw all men unto me; he drew all men by ſo remarkable a death to take notice of it, he drew ſome from the wondrous conſequences of it to believe on him: And, As, ſaith he again, Moſes did exalt the Serpent in the wilderneſs, ſo muſt the Son of man be exalted; the elevation of that myſterious Serpent upon a pole did render it viſible, and attracted the eyes of people toward it; whereby God's power inviſibly accompanying that Sacramental performance, they were cured of thoſe mortiferous ſtings which they had received; ſo our Lord being mounted on the Croſs, allured the eyes of men to behold, and their hearts to cloſe with him; whereby the heavenly virtue of God's ſpirit cooperating, they become ſaved from thoſe deſtructive ſins, which by the Devil's ſerpentine inſtigations, they had incurred.

Acts 26. 26.
John 18. 20.
John 12. 32.
John 13. 14.

Another advantage of this kind of ſuffering was, that by it the nature of that Kingdom, which he intended to erect, was evidently ſignified; that it was not ſuch as the carnal people did expect, an external, earthly, ly, temporal Kingdom, conſiſting in domination over the bodies and Eſtates of men, dignified by outward wealth and ſplendour, managed by worldly power and policy, promoted by force and terrour of arms, affording to men the advantages of outward ſafety, peace and proſperity; but a kingdom purely ſpiritual, heavenly, eternal; conſiſting in the government of mens hearts and ſpirits; adorned with endowments of piety and vertue, adminiſtred by the grace and guidance of God's Holy Spirit, maintained and propagated by meek inſtruction, by vertuous example, by hearty devotion and humble patience; rewarding its loyal ſubjects with ſpiritual joys and conſolations here, with endleſs reſt and bliſs hereafter; Rom. 14. no other kingdom could he be preſumed to deſign, who ſubmitted to this dolorous and diſgraceful way of ſuffering; no other exploits could he pretend to atchieve by expiring on a Croſs, no other way could he govern who gave himſelf up to be managed by the will of his enemies; no other benefits would that forlorn caſe allow him to diſpenſe; John 18. 36. ſo that well might he then aſſert, My kingdom is not of this world, when he was going in this ſignal manner to demonſtrate that great truth. It was a touch-ſtone to prove mens diſpoſition, and to diſcriminate the ingenuous, well-diſpoſed, humble and ſober perſons, who would entertain our Lord's heavenly doctrine with acceptance, notwithſtanding theſe diſadvantages, not being offended in him, from thoſe perverſe, vain, proud, profane people, who being ſcandalized at his adverſity would reject him.

Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 61. Another advantage was this, that by it God's ſpecial providence was diſcovered, and his glory illuſtrated in the propagation of the Goſpel, for how could it be, that a perſon of ſo low parentage, of ſo mean garb, of ſo poor condition, who underwent ſo woful and deſpicable a kind of death, falling under the pride and ſpite of his adverſaries, ſhould ſo eaſily gain ſo general an opinion in the world (among the beſt, the wiſeſt, the greateſt perſons) of being the Lord of life and glory; How (I ſay, could it be, that ſuch a miracle ſhould be effected without God's aid and ſpecial concurrence? that Herod, who from a long reign in a flouriſhing ſtate, with proſperous ſucceſs in his undertakings, got the name of Great; or that Veſpaſian, who triumphantly did aſcend the Imperial throne, ſhould either of them by a few admirers of worldly vanity, ſeriouſly or in flattery, be deemed the Meſſias, is not ſo very ſtrange; but that one who ſo miſerably was trampled on, and treated as a wretched caitiffe, ſhould inſtantly conquer innumerable hearts, and from ſuch a depth of extreme adverſity ſhould attain the ſublimeſt pitch Pſal. 118. 22. of glory; that the ſtone, which the builders with ſo much ſcorn did refuſe, ſhould become the head ſtone of the corner, this (with good aſſurance we may ſay) is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. 2 Cor. 4. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 27. It may well be ſo, and thereby the excellency of divine power and wiſedom was much glorified; by ſo impotent, ſo implauſible and improbable means, accompliſhing ſo great effects; ſubduing the world to his obedience, not by the active valour of an illuſtrious Heroe, but through the penitent ſubmiſſion of a poor, abuſed and oppreſſed perſon; reſtoring Mankind to life by the death of a crucified Saviour.

Again, this kind of ſuffering to the devout Fathers did ſeem many ways ſignificant, or full of inſtructive and admonitive emblemes; being Extendit in paſſione manus ſuas, &c. Lact. IV. p. 437. a rich and large field, for a devout fancy to range with affectionate meditation.

His poſture on the Croſs might repreſent unto us that large and comprehenſive charity which he bare in his heart toward us, ſtretching forth his arms of kindneſs, pity and mercy, with them as it were to embrace the world, receiving all mankind under the wings of his gracious protection.

It might exhibit him as earneſtly woing, and intreating us to return unto God, accepting the reconciliation which he then was purchaſing, and did then offer to us: I have ſpread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, ſaid God of old, doing it then mediately and figurately by his Prophets, but he did ſo now immediately and properly by himſelf; the Croſs being as a Pulpit, from which our Lord God bleſſed for ever, did himſelf in perſon earneſtly preach the overtures of grace, did exhort to repentance, did tender the remiſſion of ſin, with action moſt pathetical and affecting.

Iſa. 65. 2.

His aſcent to the Croſs might ſet forth his diſcharging that high office of univerſal high-Prieſt for all Ages, and all People; the Croſs being an Altar, whereon he did offer up his own fleſh, and pour forth his blood, as a pure and perfect ſacrifice, propitiating God and expiating the ſins of mankind.

Levit. 9. 22.
2 Chr. 4. 1.
Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 82.
Quod unquam ſacrificium ſacratius fuit, quàm quod verus Pontifex altari crucis per immolationem ſuæ carnis impoſuit? Leo M. Ep. 83.

His elevation thither may ſuggeſt to our thoughts, that ſubmiſſion to God's will, ſuffering for truth and righteouſneſs, the exerciſes of humility and patience are conjoyned with exaltation, do qualify for, and in effect procure true preferment; ſo that the lower we ſtoop in humility, the higher we ſhall riſe in favour with God, the nearer we ſhall approach to heaven, the ſurer we ſhall be of God's bleſſing, according to that Aphoriſm of our Lord, Whoſoever humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted. The Croſs was a Throne, whereon humility and patience did ſit in high ſtate and glorious Majeſty, advanced above all worldly pride and inſolence; It was a great ſtep, a ſure aſcent unto the celeſtial throne of dignity ſuperlative; for becauſe our Lord was obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs, therefore did God far exalt him above all dignity and power in heaven and earth, as S. Paul doth teach us.

Luc. 18. 4.
Matt. 23. 12.
1 Pet. 5. 5.
Jam. 4. 10.
Phil. 2. 8, 9.

O the fallacy of humane ſenſe! O the vanity of carnal judgment! nothing ever was more auſpicious, or more happy than this event which had ſo diſmal an aſpect, and provoked ſo contemptuous ſcorn in ſome, ſo grievous pity in others; The Devil thought he had done bravely, when he had by his ſuggeſtions brought the Son of God into this caſe; the World ſuppoſed it ſelf highly proſperous in its attempts againſt him; but O how blind and fooliſh is malice, which then doth moſt hurt it ſelf, when it triumpheth in the miſchief which it doeth to others! How impotent is wickedneſs, which is never more thoroughly ruined than by its own greateſt ſucceſs? for by thus ſtriving to debaſe our Lord, they moſt highly did advance him; by thus croſſing our ſalvation they moſt effectually did promote it.

Farther, looking up to the Croſs may admoniſh us how our ſalvation is acquired, and whence it doth proceed; not by caſting our eyes downward, not from any thing that lyeth upon earth; but our help cometh from above, our ſalvation is attained by looking upwards; we muſt lift up our eyes to behold our Saviour procuring it, we muſt raiſe up our hearts to derive it from him.

Our Lord's crucifixion may alſo intimate to us, how our fleſh muſt be dealt with, and to what uſage we muſt ſubmit it; for we muſt not only imitate our Saviour in his holy life, but in ſome manner ſhould reſemble him in his gaſtly death; being (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) conformable to his death, and planted together with him in the likeneſs of it; mortifying

Συμμορφούμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ.

Phil. 3. 10.
Rom. 6. 5.
Gal. 2. 20.
5. 24.
Col. 3. 5.
Rom. 8. 13.

mortifying our earthly members, crucifying the fleſh with its affections and luſts; having our old man crucified together with Chriſt, that the body of ſin may be deſtroyed. His death may fitly ſhadow our death to ſin, his grievous pain the bitterneſs of our repentance, wherein our ſouls ſhould be pierced with ſharp compunction, as his ſacred fleſh was torn with nails; his ſhame that confuſion of mind, which regard to our offences ſhould produce within us.

Paſſio ipſa per ſe acerba & amara ſpecimen nobis futurorum tormentorum dabat, quam in hoc ſeculo morantibus virtus ipſa proponit —— Lact. lib. 4.
* 1 Theſ. 3. 3.
† Rom. 8. 29.
Acts 14. 22.
2 Tim. 3. 12.

Reflecting on him we may alſo diſcern our ſtate here; wherein, if we will be truely and thoroughly vertuous, we muſt be expoſed to envy and hatred, to cenſure and obloquy, to contempt and ſcorn, to affliction and hardſhip; Every good man muſt hang on ſome croſs; εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα, * We are, ſaith S. Paul, appointed to this, 'tis our lot and portion aſſigned to us by divine immutable decree; being † predeſtinated to a conformity with this image of God's ſon. We muſt, as he did, by many tribulations enter into the Kingdom of God; All that will live godlily in Chriſt Jeſus ſhall certainly ſuffer perſecution, one way or other partaking of his croſs.

Divers ſuch analogies and reſemblances devout meditation might extract from this matter, ſuggeſting practical truths, and exciting good affections in us.

V. We may (for the confirmation of our faith, and begetting in us a due adoration of the divine wiſdom and providence) obſerve the correſpondency of this our Saviour's manner of ſuffering to the ancient Prophecies foretelling, and the typical repreſentations foreſhewing it.

Iſa. 53. 12, 5, 3. ——
Marc. 15. 28.

That moſt famous, clear and complete Prophecy concerning the paſſion, doth expreſs him ſuffering as a malefactour (he was reckoned among the tranſgreſſours) ſuffering in a manner very painful (he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and bruiſed for our iniquities) ſuffering in a moſt ignominious way (he was deſpiſed, and rejected of men, as a man of ſorrow, and acquainted with grief) which circumſtances could ſcarce ſo punctually agree to any other kind of ſuffering, or puniſhment then uſed, as to this.

Pſal. 22. 15, 16.

In the 22d Pſalm, the Royal Prophet deſcribeth an afflicted and forlorn condition, ſuch as by no paſſages in the ſtory concerning him doth in the full extent, and according to the literal ſignification of his words, appear ſutable to his perſon, which therefore is more properly to be accommodated unto the Meſſias, whom he did repreſent; and in that deſcription, among other paſſages agreeing to our Lord, theſe words do occur, Thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death; for dogs have compaſſed me, the aſſembly of the wicked have encloſed me; they pierced my hands and my feet; which words how patly and livelily do they ſet out our Saviour's being nailed to the croſs, and treated in that cruel, and in that ſhameful way by his malicious adverſaries?

Zech. 10. 20.
John 19. 37.

In the Prophet Zechariah, God ſpeaking in his own name, They (namely ſome of the Jews, being ſenſible of what they had acted, and penitently affected for it, they) ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced; which words need no violence to wring from them the right meaning, no comment to explain them, in accommodation to that matter, to which the Evangeliſts do apply them, and to which they are ſo literally congruous.

Gen. 22.

The ſame was alſo fitly prefigured by appoſite types. Iſaac, the immediate heir of the promiſe, in whom the faithful ſeed was called and conveyed down, and ſo a moſt apt type of our Saviour, being devoted and offered up to God, did himſelf bear the wood by which he was to be offered; So did our Saviour, the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations ſhould be bleſſed, himſelf bear the croſs by which he was to ſuffer, and to be offered up a ſacrifice to God.

Rom. 9. 8.
Jam. 2. 21.
Heb. 11. 17.

Thoſe who were dangerouſly bitten by fiery Serpents, were, by looking upon a brazen Serpent ſet upon a pole, preſerved in life, which (according to moſt authentick expoſition) did repreſent the ſalvation, which ſhould proceed from our beholding and believing on him lifted up upon the croſs to us, who had been mortally ſtruck and ſtung by that old Serpent's poiſonous inſinuations.

Tert. c. Jud. cap. 10.

The Paſchal Lamb was a moſt congruous embleme of Chriſt our Paſſover (that moſt innocent and meek, moſt unblemiſhed and ſpotleſs Lamb, ſlain for the ſins of the world.) It was to be killed by the whole aſſembly of the congregation of Iſrael, its bloud was to be daſhed on the ſide-poſts and croſs-beams of every door; its body was not to be eaten raw, nor ſodden with water, but roaſted whole, and dreſſed upon a ſpit; nor were any of its bones to be broken; which circumſtances, with ſo exact caution and care preſcribed, how they juſtly ſute and fitly adumbrate this manner of our Saviour's paſſion, I need not otherwiſe than by the bare mention of them declare; every one eaſily being able to compare and adapt them.

1 Pet.
Exod. 12. 5, 6, 9, 46.

VI. Laſtly, the conſideration of our Lord's thus ſuffering is applicable to our practice; being moſt apt to inſtruct and affect us; admoniſhing us of our duty, and exciting us to a conſcionable performance thereof: No contemplation indeed is more fruitfull, or more efficacious toward the ſanctification of our hearts and lives, than this of the croſs; For what good affection may not the meditation on it kindle? What vertue may it not breed and cheriſh in us?

1. How can it otherwiſe than enflame our heart with love toward our Lord, to think what acerbity of pain, what indignity of ſhame he did willingly undertake, and gladly endure for us? No imagination can deviſe a greater expreſſion of charity and friendſhip; and if love naturally is productive of love, if friendſhip meriteth a correſpondence in kindneſs, What effect ſhould the conſideration of ſuch ineffable love, of ſo incomparable friendſhip have upon us?

Joh. 15. 13.
Eph. 5. 2, 25.
Gal. 2. 20.
Apoc. 1. 5.
Eph. 3. 19.

2. How can a reflection on this caſe otherwiſe than work hearty gratitude in us? Suppoſe any perſon for our ſake (that he might reſcue us from the greateſt miſchiefs,and purchaſe for us the higheſt benefits) willingly ſhould deprive himſelf of all his eſtate, his honour, his eaſe and pleaſure, ſhould expoſe himſelf to extremeſt hazards, ſhould endure the ſoreſt pains, and moſt diſgracefull ignominies, ſhould proſtitute his life, and loſe it in the moſt hideous manner: Should we not then be monſtrouſly ingratefull if we did not moſt deeply reſent ſuch kindneſs, if upon all occaſions we did not expreſs our thankfulneſs for it; if we did not ever readily yield all the acknowledgment, and all the requital we were able? the caſe in regard to our Lord is the ſame in kind, but in degree whatever we can ſuppoſe doth infinitely fall below the performances for us of him who ſtooped from the top of heaven, who lade aſide the felicity and Majeſty of God, for the ſorrows and infamies of the croſs, that he might redeem us from the torments of hell, and procure to us the joys of heaven; ſo that our obligation to gratitude is unexpreſſibly great, and we are extremely unworthy if the effects in our heart and life be not anſwerable.

3. What ſurer ground of faith in God, or ſtronger encouragement of hope can there be, than is hence afforded to us? for if God ſpared not his own ſon, but delivered him up for our ſake to the ſuffering of theſe bitter pains and contumelies; How can we in any caſe diſtruſt his bounty, or deſpair of his mercy? How, as S. Paul argueth, ſhall he not alſo with him freely give us all things? What higher favour could God expreſs, what lower condeſcenſion could he ſhew; how more plainly or ſurely could he teſtifie his willingneſs and his delight to doe us good, than by ordering the Son of his love to undergo theſe moſt grievous things for us? How conſequently could there be laid a ſtronger foundation of our hope, and entire confidence in God?

Rom. 8. 32.

4. What greater engagement (in general) can there be to obedience, than to conſider how readily and chearfully our Lord did ſubmit to the will of God, in bearing the moſt heavy yoke that could be impoſed on him, in drinking the moſt bitter cup that could be tempered for him: how that he did humble himſelf, being obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs? How dearly he did purchaſe his property in us, and dominion over us?

Phil. 2. 8.

What deteſtation of our ſins muſt the ſerious conſideration of this event produce in us? of our ſins, that brought ſuch tortures and ſuch reproaches on our bleſſed Redeemer. Judas the wretch who betray'd him; the Jewiſh Prieſts who did accuſe and proſecute him; the wicked rout which abuſed and inſulted over him; thoſe cruel hands that ſmote him, thoſe pitileſs hearts that ſcorn'd him, thoſe poiſonous tongues that mocked and reviled him; all thoſe, who any-wiſe were inſtruments or abetters of his affliction; How do we loath them? How do we deteſt and curſe their memories? But how much greater reaſon have we to abominate our ſins, which were the principal cauſes of all that wofull tragedy? He was delivered for our offences, they were indeed the traitours, which by the hands of Judas delivered him up: He that knew no ſin was made ſin for us; that is, was accuſed, was condemned, was executed as a ſinner for us; it was therefore we who by our ſins did impeach him, the ſpitefull Prieſts were but our advocates; we by them did adjudge and ſentence him, Pilate (againſt his will and conſcience) was but our ſpokeſman; we by them did inflict that horrid puniſhment on him, the Roman Executioners were but our agents therein. He became a curſe for us, that is, all the mockery, deriſion and contumely he endured did proceed from us; the ſilly people were but properties, acting our parts; our ſins were they that cried out crucifige (crucifie him, crucifie him) with clamours more loud and more effectual, than did all the Jewiſh rabble; it was they, which by the borrowed throats of that baſe people, did ſo outragiouſly perſecute him; He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and bruiſed for our iniquities; it was they which by the hands of the fierce ſouldiers and of the rude populacy, as by ſenſeleſs engines, did buffet and ſcourge him; they by the nails and thorns did pierce his fleſh, and rend his ſacred body; upon them therefore it is moſt juſt and fit that we ſhould turn our hatred, that we ſhould diſcharge our indignation.

Rom. 4. 25.
2 Cor. 5. 21.
Gal. 3. 13.
Iſa. 53. 5.

5. And what in reaſon can be more powerfull to the breeding in us remorſe and penitent ſorrow, than reflection upon ſuch horrible effects proceeding from our ſins? How can we but earneſtly grieve, when we conſider our ſelves by them to have been the betrayers, the ſlanderers, the murtherers of a perſon ſo innocent and lovely, of one ſo great and glorious, of God's dear Son, and the Lord of all things, of our own beſt friend, and moſt kind Saviour?

6. If ingenuity will not operate ſo far, and hereby melt us into (Matt. 27. 45, 51. Luc. 23. 44.) contrition, yet ſurely this conſideration muſt needs produce ſome fear within us; For can we at leaſt otherwiſe than tremble to think upon the heinous guilt of our ſins, upon the fierceneſs of God's wrath againſt them, upon the ſeverity of divine judgment for them, all ſo manifeſtly diſcovered, all ſo livelily ſet forth in this diſmal ſpectacle? If the view of an ordinary execution is apt to beget in us ſome terrour, ſome dread of the Law, ſome reverence toward Authority, What awfull impreſſions ſhould this ſingular example of divine juſtice work upon us? How greatly we ſhould be moved thereby, we may learn from the deportment of the moſt inaminate creatures; The whole World did ſeem affected thereat with horrour; the frame of things was diſturbed, all nature did feel a kind of compaſſion and compunction for it; the Sun (as out of averſion, or ſhame) did hide his face, leaving the earth covered for three hours with mournful blackneſs; the bowels of the earth did yern and quake; the rocks were rent; the veil of the Temple was torn quite through; graves did open, and the bodies did wake; And can we (who are moſt concerned) be more ſtupid than the earth, more obdurate than rocks, more drowſie than buried carcaſſes, the moſt inſenſible and immoveable things in nature?

7. How alſo can it but hugely deter us from wilfull commiſſion of ſin, to conſider, that by it we do (as the Apoſtle teacheth) re-crucifie (Ἀνασαυροῦν. Heb. 6. 6.) the Son of God, and again expoſe him to open ſhame; bringing up on the ſtage, and acting over all that direfull Tragedy; renewing (as to our guilt) all that pain, and that diſgrace to him; that we thereby (as he telleth us) do trample upon the Son of God, and prize the blood of the covenant (Heb. 10. 29.) (that moſt ſacred and precious blood, ſo freely ſhed for the demonſtration of God's mercy, and the ratification of his gracious intentions toward us) as a common thing; of no ſpecial worth, or conſideration with us; deſpiſing all his ſo kind and painful endeavours for our ſalvation, defeating his moſt gracious purpoſes and earneſt deſires for our welfare; rendring all his ſo bitter and loathſome ſufferings, in regard to us, altogether vain and fruitleſs; yea indeed hurtful and pernicious; for if the croſs do not ſave us from our ſins, it will ſorely aggravate their guilt, and augment their puniſhment; bringing a ſeverer condemnation, and a ſadder ruin on us.

8. It may alſo yield great conſolation and joy to us, to contemplate our Lord upon the croſs, expreſſing his immenſe goodneſs and charity toward us; tranſacting our redemption; expiating our ſins, and ſuſtaining our miſeries; combating and defeating all the adverſaries of our ſalvation.

Is it not comfortable and pleaſant to behold him there ſtanding erect, not only as a reſolute ſufferer, but as a glorious conquerour; where having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſolemn ſhew, triumphing over them? (Col. 2. 15.) No Conqueror loftily ſeated in his triumphal chariot did ever yield a ſpectacle ſo gallant or magnificent; no tree was ever adorned with trophies ſo pompous or precious: to the external view and carnal ſenſe of men our Lord was then expoſed to ſcorn and ſhame; but to ſpiritual and true diſcerning, all his and our enemies did there hang up as objects of contempt, quite overthrown and undone: there the Devil, ὁ ἰσχυρὸς, that ſtrong and ſturdy one did hang bound and (Matt. 12. 29. Luc. 11. 22.) fettered, diſarmed and ſpoiled, utterly baffled and confounded; there death it ſelf hung gaſping, with its ſting plucked out, and all its ter-

rours

Heb. 2. 14. rours quelled; his death having prevented ours, and purchaſed immor-
1 Cor. 15. 54. tality for us. There the world with its vain pomps, its counterfeit 2 Tim. 1. 10. beauties, its fondly admired excellencies, its bewitching pleaſures, did hang up all diſparaged and defaced; as it appeared to S. Paul, God for- bid (ſaid he) that I ſhould glory, ſave in the Croſs of Chriſt, by which the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. There our ſins, those ᾿Ανήνεγκεν. ἐπὶ τὸ ξύλον 1 Pet. 2. 24. ſins, which (as S. Peter ſaith) our Saviour did carry up unto the gib- bet, did hang, as marks of his victorious proweſs, as objects of our hor-Rom. 8. 3. rour and hatred, as malefactours by him condemned in the fleſh. There that manifold enmity (enmity between God and man, between one man and another, between man and his own ſelf or conſcience) did hang aboliſhed in his fleſh, and ſlain upon the croſs; by the blood whereof Col. 1. 20. Eph. 2. 15, 16. he made peace, and reconciled all things in heaven and earth. The blood of the croſs was the cement, joining the parts of the world: There together with all our enemies did hand all thoſe cauſes of woe and miſery to us, thoſe yokes of bondage, thoſe inſtruments of vexation, thoſe hard laws, which did ſo much burthen and encumber men, did ſet them at ſuch diſtance and variance, did ſo far ſubject them to guilt and condemnation; all that bond of ordinances, inducing Col. 2. 14. our obligation to ſo grievous forfeitures and penalties, was nailed to the croſs, being cancelled and expunged by our Saviour's performances there.

9. This conſideration is a ſtrong inducement to the practice of charity toward our neighbour: for can we forbear to love thoſe, toward whom our Lord bore ſuch tender affection, for whom he did ſuſtain ſo wofull tortures and indignities? Shall we not in obedience to his moſt urgent commands, in conformity to his moſt notable example, in gratefull return to him for his benefits, who thus did ſuffer for us, diſcharge this moſt ſweet and eaſie duty toward his beloved friends?
Shall we not comport with an infirmity, or bear a petty neglect, or forgive a ſmall injury to our brother, whenas our Lord did bear a croſs for us, and from us, obtaining pardon for our numberleſs moſt heinous affronts and offences againſt God? 'tis S. Paul's reaſoning, We that are ſtrong
Rom. 15. 1.-- ought to bear the infirmities of the weak — for even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, but as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell on John 15. 12. me. Can we hear our Lord ſay, This is my command, that ye love one
13. 35. another, as I have loved you, and Hereby ſhall all men know, that ye are Epheſ. 5. 2. my diſciples, if ye love one another? Can we hear S. Paul exhorting, Walk in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us, and hath given himſelf for us, an offering and a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour? Can we con-1 John 11. 3. 16. ſider S. John's arguing, Beloved, if God ſo loved us, then ought we alſo to love one another; Hereby we perceive the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us, wherefore we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren?
Can, I ſay, we conſider ſuch diſcourſes, without being diſpoſed to comply with them for the ſake of our crucified Saviour; all whoſe life and 1 Pet. 4. 1. death were nothing elſe but one continual recommendation and enforcement of this duty?

10. Farthermore, What can be more operative than this conſiderati-on, toward breeding a diſregard of this world with all its deceitfull vanities and miſchievous delights, toward reconciling our minds to the worſt condition, it can bring us into, toward ſupporting our hearts under the heavieſt preſſures of affliction it can lay upon us; How can we refuſe, in ſubmiſſion to God's pleaſure, to bear contentedly a ſlight grievance, when he, as he gladly did, bore a croſs infinitely more grievous to carnal will and ſenſe, than any that can befall us? Can we expect, can we affect, can we deſire great proſperity, when as the Son of God, our Lord and Maſter did only taſte ſuch adverſity? Who can admire thoſe ſplendid trifles which our Lord did never regard in his life, which at his death did only ſerve to mock and abuſe him? Who can reliſh thoſe ſordid pleaſures, of which he living did not vouchſafe to taſte, and the contraries whereof he dying choſe to feel in all extremity? Who will dare to vilifie, to diſdain, to reject a ſtate of ſorrow, or diſgrace, which he by a voluntary ſuſception of it hath ſo dignified and graced; by which we reſemble, and become conformable to him; by which we concur and partake with him: yea by which we may promote, and in a ſort complete his deſigns; filling up (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in our fleſh? Who now can much prefer being eſteemed, applauded, approved or favoured by men, before infamy, reproach, deriſion or perſecution from them, eſpecially when theſe do follow conſcientious adherence to righteouſneſs? who can be very ambitious of worldly honour, or repute, covetous of wealth, or greedy of pleaſure, who obſerveth the onely Son of God chuſing rather to hang upon a croſs, than to ſit upon a throne; inviting the clamours of ſpite and ſcorn, rather than acclamations of bleſſing and praiſe, deveſting himſelf of all ſecular pomp, plenty, conveniences and ſolaces; embracing the garb of a ſlave, and the repute of a malefactour, before the dignity and reſpect of a Prince, which were his due, and which he eaſily could have obtained? Can we imagine it a very happy thing to be high and proſperous in this world, to ſwim here in affluence and pleaſure; can we take it for a miſery to be mean and low, to conflict with any wants or ſtraits here, ſeeing the fountain of all happineſs did himſelf condeſcend to ſo forlorn a ſtate, and was pleaſed to become ſo deep a ſufferer? If with the eyes of our mind we do behold our Lord hanging naked upon a gibbet, beſmeared with his own blood, groaning under extream anguiſh of pain, encompaſſed with all ſorts of diſgraceful abuſes, yielding (as the Prophet foretold of him) his back to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to them who plucked off the hair, hiding not his face from ſhame and ſpitting; will not the imagination of ſuch a Sight dim the luſtre of all earthly grandeurs and beauties, damp the ſenſe of all carnal delights and ſatisfactions, quaſh all the glee which we can find in any wild frolicks, or riotous merriments?

Rom. 8 17.
Phil. 3. 10.
Apoc. 1. 9.
1 Pet. 4. 13.
Col. 1. 24.
Ἀνταναπληροῦν τὰ ὑστερήματα.

Cogitemus crucem ejus, & divitias lutum putabimus. Hier. Ep. 2. (ad Nepot.)

Quis beatam vitam eſſe arbitretur in iis, quæ contemenda eſſe docuit filius Dei? Aug. de Ag. Ch. c. 11.

Iſa. 50.

11. It is ſurely a great commendation of afflictions, and a ſtrong conſolation under them to ponder well this point; for if hardſhip was to our Lord a ſchool of duty, he (as the Apoſtle ſaith,) learning obedience from what he ſuffered; if it was to him an inſtrument of perfection, as the ſame Apoſtle implyeth, when he ſaith, that it became God to perfect the Captain of our ſalvation by ſuffering; if it was a means of procuring the divine favour even to him, as thoſe words import, Therefore the Father loveth me, becauſe I lay down my life; if it was to him a ſtep unto glory, according to that ſaying, Was not Chriſt to ſuffer, and ſo to enter into his glory? yea if it was a ground of conferring on him that ſublimeſt pitch of dignity above all creatures as we are taught; for becauſe (ſaith S. Paul) he was obedient to death, even the death of the croſs, therefore did God exalt him, and gave him a name above every name; and, We ſee Jeſus (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) for the ſuffering of death crowned with glory and honour; and, worthy (cryeth out the heavenly ſociety in the Revelations) is the Lamb that was ſlain (and who redeemed us to God by his blood) to receive power, and riches,

Ἔμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε.
Heb. 5. 8.
Heb 2. 10.
Joh. 10. 17.
Luc. 24. 26.
Phil. 2. 9.
Heb. 2. 9.
Rev. 5. 12. (9.)

Rom. 5. 3. Col. 1.24. Matt. 5.12. Luc. 6. 23. Phil. 1. 29. Act. 5. 41. Jam. 1. 2. Heb. 10. 34. 1 Pet. 1. 7. Heb. 12. 1 Cor. 1. 4.

riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing; if affliction did miniſter ſuch advantages to him; and if by our conformity to him in undergoing it with like ſubmiſſion, humility and patience, it may afford the like to us, what reaſon can there be that we ſhould any-wiſe be diſcompoſed, diſcouraged or diſconſolate under it:
much more reaſon ſurely there is, that with S. Paul, and all the Holy Apoſtles, we ſhould boaſt, rejoice and exult in our tribulations; far more cauſe we have with them to eſteem it a favour, a privilege, and an ornament to us, than to be diſcontented, or diſpleaſed therewith.
To doe thus is a duty incumbent on us as Chriſtians; for He (ſaith Luc. 14. 27. 9. 23. Matt. 10. 38. 16. 24. onr Maſter) that doth not take up his croſs and follow me, is not worthy of me; He that doth not carry his croſs, and go after me, cannot be my diſciple: He that doth not willingly take the Croſs, when it is preſented to him by God's hand, he that doth not contentedly bear it, when it is by providence impoſed on him, is no-wiſe worthy of the honour to wait on Chriſt, he is not capable to be reckoned among the diſciples of our heavenly Maſter; He is not worthy of Chriſt, as not having the courage, the conſtancy, the ſincerity required of a Chriſtian; of one pretending to ſuch great benefits, ſuch high privileges, ſuch excellent Matt. 11. 29. rewards, as Chriſt our Lord and Saviour doth propoſe; He cannot be ὑπογραμμὸν ὑπολιμπάνων. Chriſt's diſciple, ſhewing ſuch incapacity to learn thoſe needful leſſons of humility and patience dictated by him; declaring ſuch an indiſpoſi-1 Pet. 2. 21. tion to tranſcribe thoſe copies of ſubmiſſion to divine will, ſelf-denyal and ſelf-reſignation ſo fairly ſet him by the inſtruction nnd example of 1 Pet. 4. 1. Chriſt: For as much then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind; and, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving 1 Pet. 2. 21. us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps, ſaith S. Peter.

Naz. Or. 38. ad fin. 12. The willing ſuſception, and the chearful ſuſtenance of the croſs is indeed the expreſs condition, and the proper character of our Chriſtianity; in ſignification whereof it hath been from immemorial time a conſtant uſage to mark thoſe who enter into it with the figure of the croſs. The croſs, as the inſtrument, by which our peace with God was Τὸ τρόπαιον τοῦ σταυροῦ. Apoſt. Conſt. 8. 12. wrought, as the ſtage whereon our Lord did act the laſt part of his miraculous obedience, conſummating our redemption; as the field, wherein the Captain of our ſalvation did atchieve his noble victory, and erect his glorious trophees over all the enemies thereof, was well aſſumed to be the badge of our profeſſion, the enſign of our ſpiritual warfare, the pledge of our conſtant adherence to our crucified Saviour; in relation to whom our chief hope is grounded, our great joy and ſole Ἐμοὶ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι. Gal. 6. 14. glory doth conſiſt; for God forbid, ſaith S. Paul, that I ſhould glory ſave in the croſs of Chriſt.

1 Cor. 1. 23. Let it be to the Jews a ſcandal, or offenſive to their fancy prepoſſeſſed with expectations of a Meſſias flouriſhing in ſecular pomp and proſperity; let it be folly to the Greeks; or ſeem abſurd to men imbued (puff'd up, corrupted) with fleſhly notions and maximes of worldly craft, diſpoſing men to value nothing, which is not grateful to preſent ſenſe or fancy; that God ſhould put his own moſt beloved Son into ſo very ſad and deſpicable a condition; that ſalvation from death and Orig. in Celſ. lib. 2. p. 79. miſery ſhould be procured by ſo miſerable a death; that eternal joy, glory and happineſs ſhould iſſue from theſe fountains of extream ſorrow and ſhame; that a perſon in external ſemblance, devoted to ſo opprobrious and ſlaviſh uſage, ſhould be the Lord and Redeemer of mankind, the King and Judge of all the World; Let this doctrine, I ſay, be

be ſcandalous and diſtaſtful to ſome perſons tainted with prejudice, let it appear ſtrange and incredible to others blinded with ſelf-conceit; let all the proud, all the profane, all the inconſiderate part of mankind ſlight and reject it; yet to us it muſt appear grateful and joyous; to us, it is πιςὸς λόγος, a faithful (and credible) propoſition, worthy of all acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the world thus to ſave ſinners; to us, who diſcern by a clearer light, and are endued with a purer ſenſe, kindled by the divine ſpirit; from whence with comfortable ſatisfaction of mind we may apprehend and taſte, that God could not in a higher meaſure, or a fitter manner illuſtrate his glorious attributes of goodneſs and juſtice; his infinite grace and mercy toward his poor creatures; his holy diſpleaſure againſt wickedneſs; his impartial ſeverity in puniſhing iniquity and impiety; or in vindicating his own honour and authority; than by thus ordering his Son to ſuffer for us; that alſo true vertue and goodneſs could not otherwiſe be taught, be exemplifyed, be commended and impreſſed with greater advantage.

1 Tim. 1. 15.
2 Tim. 2. 11.

Grot. de Ver. 4. 12.

We might alledge the ſuffrages of eminent Philoſophers, perſons eſteemed moſt wiſe by improvement of natural light; who have declared, that perfection of vertue can hardly be produced, or expreſſed otherwiſe than by undergoing moſt ſharp afflictions and tortures; and that God therefore, as a wiſe Father, is wont with them to exerciſe thoſe whom he beſt loveth; we might alſo produce inſtances of divers perſons, even among Pagans, moſt famous and honourable in the judgment of all poſterity for their ſingular vertue and wiſdom, who were tryed in this furnace, and thereby ſhone moſt brightly; their ſuffering by the iniquity and ingratitude, by the envy and malignity of their times in their reputation, liberty and life; their undergoing foul ſlanders, infamamous puniſhments, and ignominious deaths, more than any other practices of their life, recommending them to the regard and admiration of future ages; although none of them, as our Lord, did ſuffer of choice, or upon deſign to advance the intereſts of goodneſs, but upon conſtraint, and irreſiſtible force put on them; none of them did ſuffer in a manner ſo ſignal, with circumſtances ſo rare, and with events ſo wonderful; yet ſuffering as they did was their chief glory; whence it ſeemeth, that even according to the ſinцereſt dictates of common wiſdom this diſpenſation was not ſo unaccountable; nor ought the Greeks in conſiſtency with themſelves, and in reſpect to their own admired Philoſophy, to have deemed our doctrine of the croſs, fooliſh, or unreaſonable.

Plat. de Rep. 2. (p. 594.)

Magnum exemplum, niſi mala fortuna non invenit. —— Sen. de Prov. 3.

Plut. de Stoic. contr.p. 1931.

Socrates, Phocion, Thraceas, Ariſtides, &c.

Vid. Ælian. Var. 11. 9. 2. 43.

Cicuta Socratem magnum fecit, &c. Sen. Ep. 13. & 67, & 104.

(Sen. Ep. 81. Ep. 113.

Rutilii innocentia ac virtus lateret, niſi accepiſſet injuriam; dum violatur effulſit.
Sen. Ep. 79.

To conclude; ſince thereby a charity and humanity ſo unparallell'd (far tranſcending theirs who have been celebrated for devoting their lives out of love to their Country, or kindneſs to their friends) a meekneſs ſo incomparable, a reſolution ſo invincible, a patience ſo heroical were manifeſted for the inſtruction and direction of men; Since never were the vices, and the vanities of the world (ſo prejudicial to the welfare of mankind) ſo remarkably diſparaged; ſince never any ſuffering could pretend to ſo worthy and beneficial effects; the expiation of the whole worlds ſin, and reconciliation

ciliation of mankind to God, ſuch as no performance beſide, nor any other ſacrifice did ever aim to procure, ſince, in fine, no vertue had ever ſo glorious rewards, or Sovereign dignity to him that exerciſed it, and eternal happineſs to thoſe who imitate it; Since, I ſay, there be ſuch excellent uſes, and fruits of the croſs born by our Bleſſed Saviour, we can have no reaſon to be offended at it, or aſhamed of it; but with all reaſon heartily we ſhould approve, and humbly adore as well the deep wiſdom of God, as all other his glorious attributes, illuſtriouſly diſplayed therein; to whom therefore as is moſt due let us devoutly render all thanks, all praiſe and glory.

Apoc. 1. 5. And, Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God, and his Father, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever.

Apoc. 5. 13. Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever, Amen.

Dead and Buried.

SERMON XXVII.

1 COR. XV. 3.

For I delivered unto you firſt of all, that which I alſo received, how that Chriſt died for our ſins, according to the Scriptures.

SAint Paul meaning in this Chapter to maintain a very fundamental Point of our Religion (the reſurrection of the dead) againſt ſome Infidels or Hereticks, who among the Corinthians, his ſcholars in the faith, did oppoſe it; doth, in order to the proof of his aſſertion, and refutation of that pernicious errour, premiſe thoſe doctrines, which he having received both from relation of the other Apoſtles, and by immediate revelation from God himſelf, had delivered unto them, ἐν πρώτοις, in the firſt place, or among the prime things; that is as moſt eminent and important points of Chriſtian doctrine; the truths whereof conſequently (ſtanding upon the ſame foundations with Chriſtianity it ſelf, upon Divine Revelation, and Apoſtolical teſtimony) could nowiſe be diſputed of, or doubted by any good Chriſtian. Of which doctrines (the collection of which he ſtyleth the Goſpel; that Goſpel, by embracing and retaining which, they were, he ſaith, to be ſaved) the firſt is that in our Text, concerning the death of our Lord) undergon by him for our ſalvation: which point as of all others in our Religion it is of peculiar conſequence, ſo it much concerneth us both firmly to believe it, and well to underſtand it; for it is by faith in his bloud that we are juſtified, and by knowing Chriſt crucified we ſhall be chiefly edified; the word imparting this knowledge being the power of God to ſalvation. It therefore I mean now, by God's aſſiſtance, to explain and apply; the which I ſhall doe generally and abſolutely; without any particular accommodation of my diſcourſe to the words of this Text; yet ſo as to comprehend all the particulars obſervable in them. The death of our Lord then is my ſubject, and about it I ſhall conſider, 1. Its nature, or wherein it did conſiſt. 2. Some peculiar adjuncts and reſpects thereof, which commend it to our regard, and render it conſiderable to us. 3. The principles and (impreſſive and meritorious) cauſes thereof. 4. The ends which it aimed at; together with the fruits and effects of it. 5. Some practical influences, which the conſideration thereof may, and ſhould have upon us.

Rom. 3. 25.
1 Cor. 2.2.
1.
Rom. 1. 16.
Philip. 3. 10.

1. As for the nature of it we muſt affirm, and believe aſſuredly, that it was a true and proper death; in kind not different from that death, to the which all we mortal creatures are by the law and condition of our nature ſubject, and which we muſt all ſome time undergo; for, What man is he that liveth and ſhall not ſee death; that ſhall deliver his ſoul from the hand of the grave? that death, which is ſignifyed by ceſſation from vital operations (of all motions natural, or voluntary, of all ſenſe and knowledge, appetite and paſſion) that death, which is cauſed by violent diſunion, or diſlocation, by diſtempering, or however indiſpoſing the parts, humours, ſpirits of the body, ſo that the ſoul can no longer in them and by them continue to exerciſe thoſe functions, for which its conjunction thereto was intended, and cannot therefore fitly reſide therein; that death, which is ſuppoſed to conſiſt in the diſſolution of that vital band, whatever it be, whereby the ſoul is link'd and united to the body; or in that which is thereupon conſequent, the ſeparation, department and abſence of the ſoul from the body; each of that couple, upon their divorce, returning home to their original principles as it were; the body to the earth from whence it was taken, and the ſpirit unto God who gave it. Such cauſes antecedent are ſpecifyed in the ſtory; ſuch ſigns following are plainly implyed, ſuch a ſtate is expreſſed in the very terms, whereby our death is commonly ſignifyed: the ſame extremity of anguiſh, the ſame dilaceration of parts, the ſame effuſion of bloud, which would deſtroy our vital temper, quench our natural heat, ſtop our animal motions, exhauſt our ſpirits, and force out our breath, did work upon him; neceſſarily producing the like effects on him, as who had aſſumed the common imperfections and infirmities of our nature; in regard to which violences inflicted upon him, he is ſaid, ἀποκτείνεσθαι, to be killed or ſlain; διαχειρίζεσθαι, to be diſpatched, ἀναιρεῖσθαι, to be made away, ἀπολέσθαι, to periſh, or be deſtroyed; ἐξολοθρεύεσθαι, to be cut off (as it is in Daniel) σφάττεσθαι, to be ſlaughtered; θύεσθαι, to be ſacrificed; which words do all of them fully import a real and proper death to have enſued upon thoſe violent uſages toward him.

Pſal. 89. 48.

—— Ἐπεί κε πρῶτα λίπῃ λεύκ' ὀστέα θυμός,
Ψυχὴ δ' ἠΰτ' ὄνειρος ἀποπταμένη πεπότηται.
Hom. Odyſs. λ.

Geneſ. 3. 19.
Eccleſ. 12. 7.
Pſal. 104. 29.

Act. 3. 15. 8. 33. Dan. 9. 26. Iſa. 53. 8. Joh. 18. 4. 11. 5. Apoc. 5. 9.

And

Joh. 19. 33.
Mark. 14. 41.
Luc. 23. 27.
John 19. 25.

And by the ordinary ſigns of death, apparent to ſenſe, the ſoldiers judg'd him dead, and therefore, ὡς εἶδον ἤδη τεθνηκότα, ſeeing him already dead, they forbare to break his legs; by the ſame all the World was ſatisfy'd thereof, both his ſpitefull enemies, that ſtood with delight, waiting for this utmoſt ſucceſs of their malicious endeavours to deſtroy him, and his loving friends, who with compaſſionate reſpect attended upon him through the courſe of his ſuffering; and thoſe who were ready to perform their laſt offices of kindneſs, in procuring a decent interment of his body.

Mark 15. 37.
Matt. 27. 50.
Joh. 19. 30.
Luc. 23. 46.
Παρατίθεμαι.
John 15. 13.
10. 15, 18.
13. 37.
1 Joh. 3. 6.

His tranſition alſo, and abiding in this ſtate, are expreſſed by terms declaring the propriety of his death, and its agreement with our death: S. Mark telleth us, that ἐξέπνευσε, animam efflavit, he expired, breathed out his ſoul, or his laſt breath; S. Matthew ἀφῆκε τὸ πνεῦμα, animam egit, he let go his ſpirit, or gave up the ghoſt; S. John, παρέδωκε τὸ πνεῦμα, he delivered up his ſpirit into God's hand; the which Saint Luke expreſſeth done with a formal reſignation, Father, ſaid he, into thy hands I commend (or I depoſe) my ſpirit; he doth alſo himſelf frequently expreſs his dying by laying down his life, and beſtowing it as a ranſome, which ſheweth him really to have parted with it.

Luc. 9. 31.
2 Pet. 1. 15.
Ἄφιξις. Act. 20. 29.
Joh. 13. 1.
Joh. 2. 19.
Matt. 26. 61.
2 Cor. 5. 1.
2 Pet. 1. 14.

His death alſo (as ours is wont to be denoted by like phraſes) is termed ἔξοδος, exceſſus è vivis, a going out of life, or from the ſociety of men (for Moſes and Elias are ſaid to tell, τὴν ἔξοδον αὐτȣ̃, his deceaſe, which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem) and μετάβασις, a paſſing over, or tranſlation from this into another world (When, ſaith S. John, Jeſus knew that his time was come, ἵνα μεταβῇ, that he ſhould depart from this world.) His death alſo was enigmatically deſcribed by the deſtruction, or demoliſhment of his bodily Temple, anſwerable to thoſe circumlocutions concerning our ordinary death; the diſſolution of our earthly houſe or tabernacle, or tranſitory abode, in S. Paul, the ἀπόθεσις τȣ̃ σκηνώματος, laying down, or putting off our tabernacle, in S. Peter.

1 Tim. 4. 6.
Phil. 1. 23.
Luc. 2. 29.
2 Cor. 5. 8.
Acts 13. 36.

Gen. 25. 8. 49. 33, &c. Pſal. 39. 13. 52. 5. 28. 1. 143. 7. 88. 4. Jer. 11. 19. Iſa. 38. 18. 26. 19. Ezek. 26. 20. Dan. 12. 12. Job 7. 21. 17. 16, 20. 11, 21. 26. 17. 13.

It were alſo not hard to ſhew, how all other phraſes, and circumlocutions, by which humane death is expreſſed, either in Holy Scripture, or in uſual language, or among Philoſophers, and more accurate ſpeakers, are either expreſly applyed, or by conſequence are plainly applicable to the death of our Saviour, ſuch for inſtance as theſe in Scripture; ἀνάλυσις, being reſolved into our principles, or the returning of them thither whence they came; ἀπόλυσις, a being freed, licenſed, or diſmiſſed hence; ἐκδημία ἐκ τȣ̃ σώματος, a going, or abode abroad; a peregrination, or abſentment from the body; an ἔκδυσις, putting off, or being deveſted of the body; an ἀφανισμὸς, diſappearance, or ceſſation in appearance to be; a going hence, and not being ſeen; a falling on ſleep, reſting from our labours, ſleeping with our fathers, being added, and gathered to our fathers; being taken, or cut off out of the land of the living; going down into the pit; lying down, reſting, ſleeping in the duſt; making our bed in darkneſs: theſe and the like phraſes occurring in ſcripture (which might be parallell'd out of vulgar ſpeech, and out of learned diſcourſes) deſcribing either the entrance into, or the abiding in the ſtate of that death, to which all men are obnoxious, might eaſily be ſhewed applicable to the death of our Saviour. His reſurrection doth imply the reality of his death; for otherwiſe it had not been miraculous, it had not been a pledge of our reſurrection. But I will not farther needleſly inſiſt upon explicating, or confirming a point ſo clear, and never miſunderſtood, or queſtion'd, except by ſome wild and preſumptuous Hereticks.

Our Saviour's death then was a true, real and proper death, ſutable to that frail, paſſible and mortal nature, which he vouchſafed to undergo for us; to the condition of ſinfull fleſh, in the likeneſs whereof he did Rom. 8. 3. appear; ſevering his ſoul and body, and remitting them to their original ſources; his paſſion was indeed ultimum ſupplicium, an extreme capital puniſhment, the higheſt in the laſt reſult, which in this world either the fierceſt injuſtice, or the ſevereſt juſtice could inflict: for, to kill the body is (as our Lord himſelf taught) the utmoſt limit of all Matt. 10, 28. humane power and malice; the moſt and worſt that man can doe; they Luc. 12. 4. have not περισσότερον τι, any thing beyond that which they can attempt upon us; and ſo far did they proceed with our Lord. Such was the nature of his death; ſuch indeed as was requiſite for the accompliſhment of the ends and effects deſigned thereby.

2. Let us now conſider thoſe peculiar adjuncts and reſpects of our Lord's death (together with his whole paſſion, whereof his death was the chief part, and final completion) the which do commend it to our regard, and amplify the worth thereof: ſuch are, 1. Its being a reſult of God's eternal reſolution and decree. 2. Its being a matter of free conſent and compact between God the Father and his onely Son. 3. Its being anciently prefigured and predicted. 4. Its being executed by God's hand and providence guiding and governing it; and by man's action concurring. 5. Its being the death of a perſon ſo holy and innocent, ſo high and excellent, of God's Son, of God the Son.

1. It was a reſult of God's eternal counſel and decree; it was no caſual event, no expedient ſuddenly deviſed, or ſlipt from providence, but a well-laid deſign, from all eternity contrived by divine wiſdom, reſolved upon by divine goodneſs. As God did (by the incomprehenſible perfection of his nature) from thence foreſee our lapſe, and miſery, ſo he did as ſoon determine our remedy and means of ſalvation. As the whole of that myſterious diſpenſation concerning Chriſt, ſo eſpecially did this main part thereof proceed κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, according to an eternal purpoſe (as S. Paul ſpeaketh;) for our Saviour Epheſ. 3. 11. was a Lamb ſlain (in deſignation irrevocably ſlain) from the foundati- Apoc. 13. 8. on of the world; as it is ſaid in the Revelation: And, we (ſaith Saint Peter) were redeemed by the pretious bloud of Chriſt, as of a lamb with- 1 Pet. 1. 19. out blemiſh, and without ſpot, προεγνωσμένου μὲν, fore ordained indeed before the foundation of the world. And our Saviour went (as he telleth us himſelf) to ſuffer, κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, according to what was Luk. 22. 22. determined; and, It was by the determinate counſel, and foreknowledge of God (ſaith S. Peter) that he was delivered up into thoſe wicked hands Acts 2. 23. 4. that ſlew him; nor did the conſpiracy of Herod and Pilate, with the 28. nation and people of the Jews effect any thing about it, beyond ὅσα ἡ χεὶρ, καὶ ἡ βουλὴ θεοῦ προώρισε γενέσθαι, whatever the hand and counſel of God (or God's effectual purpoſe) had predetermined to come to paſs. Such an eſpecial care, and providence of God, concerning this matter, ſo expreſsly and ſo frequently recommended to our obſervation, do argue the very great moment and high worth thereof. What God declareth himſelf to have had ſo early, and earneſt a care of, muſt be matter of higheſt conſideration and importance.

2. It was a matter of free conſent and compact between God and his Son. God did freely and graciouſly (out of mercifull regard to our welfare) proffer, that if he would pleaſe to undertake to redeem his (loſt and enſlaved) creature an honourable and comfortable ſucceſs to his enterpriſe; that he would accept his performances, and that the deſign ſhould proſper in his hand: he did willingly embrace the Iſa. 53. 9, 10. propoſal, and applyed himſelf to the performance: When thou ſhalt make thy ſoul an offering for ſin, thou ſhall ſee thy ſeed, and prolong thy days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in thy hand; thou ſhalt ſee of the travel of thy ſoul, and ſhalt be ſatisfied; that, in the Prophet's Heb. 10. 7, 8. language was God's propoſition; and Lo I come to doe thy will O God; that was our Saviour's reply in correſpondence and conſent thereto.

God, in conſideration of what our Lord would obediently ſuffer, did (as Luc. 22. 29. our Saviour telleth us) διατίθεσθαι βασιλείαν, covenant to him a kingdom; committing a ſovereign authority, aſſigning an univerſal dominion
Heb. 2. 9. to him; in virtue of which tranſaction it was, that Jeſus for the ſuffering
Iſa. 53. 12. of death, was crowned with glory and honour; that, becauſe he poured out his ſoul unto death, God divided him a portion with the great; that Phil. 2. 8, 9. Rom. 14. 9. he being obedient to the death, God exalted him, and gave him a name above all names. In this regard are God's elect and faithfull people ſaid to be given unto him as a retribution to him, who gave himſelf for them
John 17. 6. (Thine they were, ſaith our Lord to his Father, and thou gaveſt them me;)
Gal. 3. 13. hence are we ſaid to be bought with a price; hence is the Church purchaſed
1 Cor. 6. 20. by his bloud; there was therefore a covenant and bargain driven
1 Pet. 1. 19. between God and his Son concerning this affair; and of huge conſideration Act. 20. 28. ſurely muſt that affair be, wherein ſuch perſons do ſo deeply intereſt themſelves, trafficking, and (as it were) ſtanding upon terms with one another.

3. That the great excellency and efficacy of our Saviour's death and paſſion might appear, it was by manifold Types foreſhadowed, and in divers Prophecies foretold. Indeed moſt of the famous paſſages of providence (eſpecially the ſignal afflictions of eminent perſons repreſenting our Saviour) do ſeem to have been prefigurations of, or preludes
Gen. 4. 10. to his paſſion. The bloud of the righteous Protomartyr Abel, Luc. 11. 51. ſhed by an envious brother, for acceptable obedience performed by him to God's will, and crying to heaven, might prefigure that bloud, Heb. 12. 24. which cryed alſo, although with another voice, ſpeaking better things
11. 4. than the bloud of Abel; not ſad complaints, and ſuits for vengeance, but ſweet entreaties and interceſſions for mercy. Iſaac, the onely Son, Heb. 11. 7. 19. the ſon of promiſe, his oblation in purpoſe, or death in parable, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh, did plainly repreſent our Saviour, the promiſed ſeed, his being really offered, and afterward miraculouſly reſtored to life. Joſeph his being ſold, and put into ſlavery by his envious brethren, Pſal. 105. 18. being ſlanderouſly accuſed, and ſhut in priſon (whoſe feet they hurt with fetters, the iron entred into his ſoul) and this by God's diſpoſal, Gen. 45. 5. in order to his exaltation; and that he might be a means of preſerving life, and preparing a convenient habitation for the children of Iſrael, Luc. 24. 26. doth well reſemble him, who by ſuffering entred into his glory; who
Heb. 5. 9. thereby being perfected, became authour of ſalvation to his brethren, all true
Joh. 14. 2. Iſraelites; who went to prepare manſions of reſt and light, a heavenly Goſhen for them. David's perſecutions foregoing his royal dignity and proſperous Pſal. 18. 4. ſtate; which he expreſſeth in ſuch ſtrains as theſe; The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, and the flouds of ungodly men made me afraid; the ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about, and the ſnares of death prevented me; how they may adumbrate the more real extremities of our Lord's afflictions, previous to his glorious exaltation, I leave you to conſider; as alſo the reſt of ſuch paſſages having a myſterious importance accommodable to this purpoſe. However, all the ſacrifices of old inſtituted by God, we may with fuller confidence affirm to have been chiefly preparatory unto, and prefigurative of this moſt true and perfect ſacrifice; by virtue whereof indeed thoſe ὑποδείγματα, and σκιαὶ, umbratick repreſentations (or inſinuations) did obtain their ſubſtance, validity and effect: if they did not ſignifie this in deſign, they could ſignifie nothing in effect; for as without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion (God's anger would not be appeaſed, nor his juſtice ſatisfied without it; it being blood, which according to God's preſcription, did make atonement for the ſoul) as the appointment of thoſe ſacrifices did ſpeak and ſignify; ſo it was impoſſible that the blood of bulls, and goats, ſhould take away ſin; that thoſe legal gifts and ſacrifices ſhould perfect the conſcience of him that did the ſervice; that is, ſhould entirely aſſure him of pardon and impunity, or raiſe in him a ſtrong and clear hope of God's favour: the lives of beaſts were not in value anſwerable, nor could fitly be ſubrogated in ſtead of mens ſouls, which had offended, and thence were liable to death; the effuſion of their blood could not reaſonably ſatisfie a man's conſcience, ſenſible of guilt, and fearful of God's diſpleaſure, that by it God was fully appeaſed; they muſt therefore refer unto a κρείττων θυσία, a more excellent ſacrifice; one more ſufficient in it ſelf, and more acceptable to God; in virtue of which, and in regard thereto ſin might be thoroughly expiated, God's wrath might be propitiated, divine vengeance might be removed, the mind of man therefore might be comforted and contented. The High-Prieſts entrance once a year into the Holy of Holies, not without blood to atone for his own, and the peoples ignorances (or miſcarriages) did imply, that our great High-Prieſt ſhould make one bloody atonement for the offences of mankind, and paſſing through the veil of mortal fleſh, ſhould enter into the true Sanctum Sanctorum of heaven, there to appear in the preſence of God for us; exhibiting the virtue of his meritorious paſſion, together with his effectual interceſſion for mercy toward us. Eſpecially the Paſchal Lamb, in its ſubſtance (as a lamb, meek and gentle) in its quality (as without blemiſh and ſpot, pure and innocent) in its manner of preparation and dreſſing (being killed by all the aſſembly, having its blood ſprinkled upon the doors of every houſe, being roaſted with fire, having bitter herbs for its ſauce) with other obſervable circumſtances about it, was a moſt appoſite emblem of Chriſt, our Paſs-over; who not only by his death did ſignifie, and mind us of, but did really atchieve our deliverance from the myſtical Egypt, our ſtate of ſpiritual bondage. So did ancient types exhibit, and repreſent; plain predictions alſo did expreſs the ſame death and ſuffering of our Lord: Thoſe things (ſaith S. Peter) which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled; not one Prophet only, not ſome few; but all, ſaith he (that is, either plainly, or covertly, either directly or by conſequence) have foreſhewed (or foretold) it: it is our negligence, or ſtupidity, if we do not diſcern it in them; as our Lord intimated, when he thus ſpake to his diſciples: O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have ſpoken; ought not Chriſt (ought he not according to their preſignifications, and predictions) to have ſuffered theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory? That David, an illuſtrious repreſentative of the Meſſias, doth often deſcribe as belonging to himſelf, mortal agonies and ſufferings, not well applicable κατὰ λέξιν, or in direct hiſtorical meaning to his own perſon, and therefore in reaſon, according to a more high

Heb. 9. 23. 8. 5.

Heb. 9. 22.

Levit. 17. 11.

Heb. 10. 4. 9. 9, 15. 10, 11.

Heb 9. 23.

Heb. 9. 7. 10, 24.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

Acts 3. 18. Προκατήγγειλε.

Luc. 24. 25, 26. 18. 31.

Act. 13. 27. 26. 22.

Pſal. 22. 109, &c.

and perfect ſenſe, to be underſtood of the Meſſias himſelf; that Daniel plainly foretelleth, that in a certain time the Meſſias ſhould be cut off; that Iſaias doth in ſeveral places inſinuate; and in the famous 53. Chapter of his Prophecy doth clearly deſcribe the manner and kind of our Saviour's paſſion, is ſo evident, that even thoſe of the Jewiſh Doctors, who have been moſt earneſt oppoſers of our Lord, have been forced to acknowledge, that there is to be as well one Meſſias to ſuffer, as another to proſper, and reign in glory; being ſo groſs as not to apprehend, or ſo perverſe as not to acknowledge the conſiſtency between antecedent ſuffering, and conſequent glory; between a night of dark- Luc. 22. 53. neſs and ſorrow, and a day of light and joy breaking out from it; not being able, or willing to diſtinguiſh between an external pomp in this world, and an external majeſty in the future ſtate. But unto us God's ſo forward care, by the ſpirit of Chriſt in his Prophets, προμαρτύρεσθαι, to fore-witneſs (as S. Peter ſpeaketh, or to teſtifie before hand) the ſuf- 1 Pet. 1. 11. ferings of our Saviour, and the glories ſucceeding, doth imply, with what diligence of attention we ſhould regard; with what firmneſs of faith we ſhould embrace, with what ſatisfaction of heart we ſhould entertain this great and admirable diſpenſation.

4. We may conſider, that this death was compaſſed by God's eſpecial providence, directing and diſpoſing it, although not without the active concurrence of men: the treacherous diſpoſition, and covetous appetite of Judas; the envious humour, and blind zeal of the Scribes and Prieſts; the wanton fickleneſs, and wild rudeneſs of the people; the fearful and ſelfiſh temper of the Governour were but inſtruments, whereby God's own hand did inflict this ſore chaſtiſement upon his Son Acts 4: 28. for us: It was the Lord that laid upon him the iniquities of us all, by God Iſa. 53. 6, 4. he was ſtricken, ſmitten and afflicted; Pilate, 'tis ſaid, had no power to doe what he did, but what was given him from above; John 19. 11. The Jews with their Rulers proceeded raſhly and ignorantly; otherwiſe, as S. Paul af- 1 Cor. 2. 8. firmeth, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; but God advi- Acts 3. 17. 13. 27. ſedly, as S. Peter told them, did accompliſh it; He did not ſpare his own Rom. 8. 32. Son, but delivered him up for us: he as it were ſuſpended his bowels of pity toward him, he withdrew his face of kindneſs from him, out of compaſſion and benignity toward us; he uſed him ſeverely, that he might deal favourably with us.

Yet did man actively concur therein; all mankind in a ſort, by its repreſentatives, was involved as principally in the guilt for which, ſo in the guilt by which he ſuffered; there was a general conſpiracy of Jew and Gentile practiſed againſt the life of their common Saviour. Of a truth, ſaith S. Peter, againſt thy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, were gathered together both Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and Acts 4. 27. with the people of Iſrael: In the Jews the horrid ingratitude of men, in the Gentiles their wretched infirmity did appear; the which, by their active efficacy toward our Lord's death, did ſignifie the meritorious influence they alſo had upon it; that it was our iniquity and corruption which did cauſe it: ſo as a work of divine providence (the moſt admirable work ever accompliſhed by providence) as an act of humane pravity (the moſt heinous act ever committed by men) is the death of our Lord conſiderable.

5. But more immediately the quality and condition of our Saviour's perſon do moſt commend to us, and advance the worth of his death: Pſal. 116. 15. 72. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 19. If, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his ſaints; if the ſpotleſs candour, and unblemiſhed integrity of a Lamb do make its blood precious, and qualifie it for an acceptable ſacrifice; How valuable to God ſhall be the death of a perſon ſo perfectly holy and innocent; who did not ſo much as know ſin; in whoſe mouth no guile was ever found; who was holy, harmleſs, undefiled, removed (at infinite diſtance removed) from ſinners? who needed not to offer ſacrifices for his own ſins; whoſe death therefore for others were apt to be more available and acceptable. Again, If the life of a King be (as King David's people told him) worth ten thouſand lives; if it be a moſt enormous crime, and higheſt treaſon to imagine his death; How valuable muſt be the death of a perſon, ſo incomparably tranſcendent in dignity? of the Lord of glory, of the Prince of life; Ye denyed the Holy and the Juſt one; ye ſlew the Prince of life; —— They crucified the Lord of glory; ſo the Apoſtles do aggravate the buſineſs. But a farther height, a perfect immenſity indeed, of worth and efficacy, muſt needs accrue to the death of our Saviour, from his being the ſon of God; from his being God (One, and the ſame in nature with his Almighty, and All-glorious Father) for it is the blood of Chriſt, the ſon of God, which purgeth us, from all ſin; yea, God himſelf did (as S. Paul ſaith in the Acts) purchaſe the Church with his blood; it is the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity: and, Hereby (ſaith S. John) perceive we the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us: That the immortal God ſhould die, that the moſt High ſhould be debaſed to ſo low a condition, as it cannot be heard without wonder, ſo it could not be undertaken without huge reaſon, nor accompliſhed without mighty effect: Well indeed might ſuch a condeſcenſion ſerve to advance us from the baſeſt ſtate to any pitch of honour and happineſs; well might one drop of that Royal blood of heaven ſuffice to purchaſe many worlds, to ranſome innumerable lives of men, to expiate an infinity of ſins, however grievous and foul. But ſo much for the peculiar adjuncts, and reſpects of our Lord's death.

2 Cor. 5. 21.
1 Pet. 2. 22.
1 John 3. 5.
Iſa. 53. 9.
Heb. 7. 26, 27.
2 Sam. 18. 3.
21. 17.
Acts 3. 15.
1 Cor. 2. 8.
1 John 1. 7.
Apoc. 1. 5, 6.
Acts 20. 28.
Tit. 2. 14.
1 John 3. 16.

3. Let us now conſider the cauſes, and principles, whence it proceeded; which moved God to determine it, and our Lord to undertake it; they were in both acts moſt voluntary and free: of the Father it is ſaid, It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; and, Behold (ſaith our Lord in the Pſalm) I come to doe thy will, O God; that is, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews expoundeth it, to offer, not the blood of beaſts in ſacrifice, but my own body according to thy will and appointment; And, This commandment (ſaith he in S. John) I received of my Father, to lay down my life; and, The Cup (ſaith he again) which my Father hath given me, Shall I not drink it? ſo on the Father's part, and on our Saviour's likewiſe it was no leſs voluntary; for, None (ſaith he) taketh my life from me: (that is, It is not from any neceſſity or compulſion that I do part with it) but I lay it down of my ſelf; (with abſolute choice and freedom) I have power to lay it down, and I have power to reſume it; and, The bread, ſaith he, which I ſhall give, is my fleſh, which I ſhall give for the life of the world; The Son of man came to give his life a ranſome for many; the yielding his fleſh to death, the paying his life a ranſome, were deeds of gift, perfectly free: and that both in regard to God the Father, and the Son, this performance was voluntary, S. Paul together thus expreſſeth; Who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, according to the will of God, and our Father; ſo this death iſſued from the joint wills of God, and his Son: But as the volitions of every intelligent and wiſe agent do always proceed from ſome principle inclining, or are directed according to ſome impulſive

Iſa. 53. 10.
Pſ. 40. 7, 9.
Heb. 10. 7.
John 10. 18.
John 18. 11.
John 10. 18.
John 6. 51.
Matt. 21. 28.
Gal. 2. 20, &c.
Tit. 2. 14.
Gal. 1. 4.

cauſe moving to them, ſo divers principles, and cauſes of theſe voluntary acts are declared in Scripture; the chief of which are reducible to theſe two; one internally diſpoſing God's goodneſs; the other externally inviting man's diſtreſs: The caſe ſtood thus: Mankind lying in a ſad and forlorn eſtate, oppreſſed by Satan, enſlaved to ſin, ſubject to a rigorous law, expoſed to the ſeverity of juſtice, tormented by the ſenſe of guilt, fearful of divine wrath and due vengeance; in ſhort, by the ſentence of heaven, and by the ſuffrage of conſcience within, condemned to puniſhment unavoidable, and to intolerable miſery: Man, I ſay, lying in ſo deſperately uncomfortable a condition, God's infinite goodneſs regarded his poor creature, his bowels of compaſſion yerned toward him, a deſire of relieving ſprang up in his will; thence was he moved to provide ſuch a remedy, ſutable and ſufficient for his delivery; for the removing all thoſe miſchiefs, and curing all thoſe diſtempers: the main ſource of all this wonderfull performance (as of all other providential diſpenſations, and works ad extra) was that moſt excellent perfection of God; which, in regard to this matter, is ſometime termed χρηστότης, benignity or bounty; implying the great benefit and advantage we do thence receive; ſometimes grace, or favour, ſignifying the pure freeneſs in diſpenſing it, without any deſign of profit to himſelf, or any deſert on our part (By the grace of God he taſted death for every man) ſometimes mercy, denoting our bad deſerts, or obnoxiouſneſs to juſtice and puniſhment; ſometimes pity, ſignifying the great need we had thereof, by reaſon of our extream diſtreſs and miſery. Commonly alſo it is, by the moſt obliging and endearing name ſtiled love, and philanthropy, intimating the earneſt regard and benevolence God had to us as his creatures, and as capable of being benefitted and bettered by him: Herein (ſaith S. Paul) God commended his love toward us, in that we being yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us. And, God (ſaith S. John) loved us, and ſent his Son to be a propitiation for us; and, God (ſaith our Lord himſelf) ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son——that the world might be ſaved by him.

Διὰ σπλάγχνα ἐλέους. Luc. 1. 78.

Tert. 3. 4. Rom. 2. 4. Eph. 2. 7. Heb. 2. 9. Rom. 3. 24. 2 Cor. 8. 9. Eph. 2. 8, 5. Eph. 1. 7. Tit. 3. 5. Luc. 1. 78. Eph. 2. 4. Heb. 2. 17.

1 Tim. 2. 6. Tit. 3. 4. Rom. 5. 8. Eph. 2. 4. 1 John 4. 9, 10. John 3. 16, 17.

By the way it is worth obſerving, that there is diſtinguiſhable a three-fold love of God toward men, intimated in Scripture. 1. A general love to mankind, antecedent to the ſending our Lord, and his performances, being the ground of God's deſigning them; which may be called a love of pity, or mercy toward poor man lying under condemnation and diſtreſs; this is that φιλανθρωπία τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν θεοῦ, philanthropy of God our Saviour, which appeared in ſaving us (that is in granting us the capacity and means of ſalvation) not by works of righteouſneſs, which we had done, but by his mercy; the love which he commended, in that while we were ſinners Chriſt dyed for us. 2. A love, immediately conſequent upon our Lord's performances and ſufferings, and procured by them; whereby God is ſo far pleaſed with men, and reconciled to the world, that he deſireth all mens ſalvation, and offereth to them terms and means thereof; in regard to which our Lord is ſaid to be the Saviour of the world, and Redeemer of all men; of which love S. Paul, ſpeaketh, when he ſaith, that being enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; and that God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their ſins; and that God having made peace by the blood of his croſs, did reconcile by him all things unto himſelf, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven; the which may be called a love of reconciliation and favour; or the grace of God which came by Jeſus Chriſt.

Tit. 3. 4.

Rom. 5. 8.

1 Tim. 2. 4. Tit. 2. 11.

1 Tim. 2. 6, 4. 10. Rom. 5. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 19. Coloſ. 1. 20. John 1. 17. Acts 10. 33. Rom. 11. 32. Luc. 2. 14. 1 Tim. 2. 4.

3. A peculiar love of friendſhip, and complacence, which God beareth toward all thoſe, who do ſincerely turn, and ſtedfaſtly adhere to him, repenting of their ſins, and embracing the Goſpel; and perſiſting in obedience to his Laws; ſuch God is every where repreſented to affect with tendereſt love, as his faithful ſervants, his good friends, and dear children; being eſpecially the Saviour of them: this diſtinction is obſervable for our better underſtanding the paſſages of ſcripture concerning this matter; in which God is ſometime repreſented as bearing a general love to all men, ſometimes as more eſpecially loving the faithful and good men.

1 Tim. 4. 10.

The like principles and impulſive cauſes are ſaid to move our Lord to undertake, and undergo death for us; it was goodneſs, and love toward us that inclined him thereto: Chriſt (ſaith S. Paul) loved us, and delivered up himſelf for us an offering, and ſacrifice to God. He loved the Church, and delivered up himſelf for it; He loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood. Hereby we perceive the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us; I live (ſaith S. Paul again) by the faith of the ſon of God, who loveth me, and gave himſelf for me.

Eph. 5. 2.
Eph. 2. 25.
Apoc. 1. 5.
1 John 3. 16.
(John 15. 13.)
Gal. 2. 20.

Such were the principles diſpoſing, and cauſes in a ſort moving; to which we may add our ſins, as the meritorious cauſes of our Saviour's death: He died for our ſins; he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities. He died for us, not only as for men, not only as for wretched men, but as for unjuſt and ſinful men; as for enemies, and ſtrangers to God; ſuch as had grievouſly diſpleaſed God, had incurred heinous guilt, had deſerved, and were become obnoxious to ſevereſt puniſhment; ſo ſtanding in need of reconcilement, propitiation and redemption. Had we been innocent and guiltleſs, there had wanted ſufficient cauſe, or juſt reaſon for his death; God would not have been angry, juſtice could have had no pretence, or hold; we ſhould not have been liable to ſuffer our ſelves, nor could he have ſuffered for us. Death is the debt, or wages due to ſin; which he therefore payed, becauſe we owed it, and could not diſcharge it: All we (as it is ſaid in the Prophet) have gone aſtray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord (therefore) hath laid on him the iniquity of us all: Our ſins were not only indirect, or remote occaſions of his death, but did procure it in way of deſert: even as they would have been meritorious cauſes of our death had he not undertaken for us, ſo were they the like cauſes of his death, who died for us, and in our ſtead; who * was made ſin (that is, a ſinner, or a ſacrifice) for us; who gave himſelf ἀντίλυτρον, a ranſome in ſtead of us all; paying his blood a price for us, and redeeming us thereby from all the penalties and inconveniences we were liable to; buying us from the curſe, by becoming a curſe for us; who had upon him the chaſtiſement of our peace; and did offer up his ſoul an offering, and ſacrifice for our ſins; thereby expiating them, propitiating God's wrath, and reconciling God unto us, purging us from guilt, and procuring entire remiſſion for our ſins; the which conſiderations do ſufficiently argue our ſins in way of deſert, to have been the cauſes of his death.

1 Cor. 15. 3.
Heb. 10. 12.
Iſaiah 53. 5, 6.
2 Cor. 5. 15.
Rom. 5. 6, 8, 10.
1 Pet. 3. 16.
Rom. 6. 23.
Iſa. 53. 6, 4, 11.
* 2 Cor. 5. 21.
1 Tim. 2. 6.
Matt. 20. 28.
1 Cor. 6. 20. 7. 23.
Heb. 9. 12.
Gal. 3. 13.
1 Pet. 1. 18.
Rom. 3. 24.
2 Pet. 2. 1.
Eph. 1. 7.
Coloſ. 1. 14.

Iſa. 53. 5, 10. Heb. 10. 12. 1 John 2. 2. 4. 10. Rom. 3. 25. Heb. 2. 17. Rom. 5. 10, 11. 2 Cor. 5. 19. Eph. 2. 16. 1. 7. Heb. 9. 14, 23, 26. John 3. 36. Matt. 26. 28. Col. 1. 14. 1 John 1. 7. Apoc. 1. 5.

Now for the ends which our Lord's death aimeth at, and the effects which it produceth (theſe we joyn, becauſe in reality they are the ſame) they, in Scripture-reckoning and expreſſion, are various and many: the moſt general are theſe, comprehending divers others ſubordinate to them.

Rom. 3. 5.
Col. 1. 27.
Eph. 2. 7.
(Joh. 21. 20.)
Joh. 13, 31.
17. 4.

1. The illuſtration of God's glory, by demonſtrating and diſplaying therein his moſt excellent attributes and perfections, ſo doth S. Paul teach us: Whom God (ſaith he) hath ſet forth a propitiation by faith in his bloud, εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ, for a demonſtration of his righteouſneſs, that is, as I take it, of his goodneſs, his juſtice, his fidelity, his conſtancy, of all thoſe commendable perfections, which are expreſſed in dealing with others; and our Lord, his paſſion being inſtantly to follow, made this reflexion; Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him: and, I have glorified thee upon earth, I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to doe. God did therein ſhew himſelf moſt highly good and gracious, in ſo providing for the welfare of thoſe who deſerved nothing of him, who deſerved ill of him, who had offended and injured him very heinouſly: he manifeſted himſelf moſt ſtrictly juſt, in not ſuffering iniquity to go unpuniſhed, but rather than ſo, expoſing his own dear Son to puniſhment, and in him chuſing himſelf to ſuffer; he declared his wiſdom in contriving ſo admirable an expedient, whereby both his goodneſs might be exerciſed, and his juſtice not infringed; he ſhewed his veracity, fidelity and conſtancy, in executing by his providence what he before had deſigned and promiſed, although ſo grievous and bitter to the Son of his love; he therein alſo laid a ground of declaring his All-mighty power, in raiſing him from the dead, as likewiſe of his goodneſs and juſtice in exalting him: thus by our Saviour's death was the divine glory much illuſtrated, and our good conſequently promoted; for that we therein contemplating him ſo amiable for goodneſs, ſo terrible for juſtice, ſo venerable for all excellency, may be induced thence to love him, to dread him, to worſhip and reverence him, as it becometh us, and as it is neceſſary for us in order to our happineſs.

Joh. 13. 32.
17. 5.
Rom. 14. 9.
Heb. 2. 9.
Phil. 2. 8, 9.
Heb. 2. 10.
Heb. 12. 2.
Apoc. 5. 12, 9.
(Tit. 2. 14.)

2. The dignifying, and exaltation of our Lord himſelf; by acquiring unto him in a manner a new right unto, and enſtating him in an univerſal dominion, in a tranſcendent glory, in perfect joy accruing to him by remuneration for ſo excellent an inſtance of ſubmiſſion, and obedience to God's will. This is that which our Lord foreſaw, and foretold: If God was glorified in him, then will God glorifie him in himſelf; and ſhall ſtreightway glorifie him. And, To this end (ſaith S. Paul) Chriſt died, that he might be the Lord of the dead and living. And, For the ſuffering of death he was crowned with glory, and honour, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. And, He was obedient to the death, therefore God exalted him; and, the Prince of our Salvation was perfected by ſuffering; and, For the joy that was ſet before him he endured the croſs; and, He (ſaid the Prophet of him) ſhall ſee the travel of his ſoul, and be ſatisfied. And, Worthy (ſay the heavenly hoſt in the Apocalypſe) is the lamb that is ſlain (worthy is he, for that he was ſlain, and did redeem us to God by his bloud) to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing.

3. The ſalvation of mankind; the which he was deſigned to procure by his death, and in many reſpects he did promote it thereby.

Rom. 5. 8. 10.

He did it by appeaſing that wrath of God, which he naturally beareth toward iniquity, and reconciling God to men, who by ſin were alienated from him; by procuring a favourable diſpoſition, and intentions of grace toward us. While we were ſinners (ſaith S. Paul) Chriſt died for us (and ſinners, or wicked men God cannot like or endure: Thou art not, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, a God that haſt pleaſure in wickedneſs, neither ſhall evil dwell with thee; the fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight; thou hateſt all workers of iniquity: and, The wicked, and him that loveth violence, his ſoul hateth; yet for us, being ſuch, Chriſt died, removing thereby that juſt hatred and diſpleaſure; as S. Paul preſently after expreſſeth, and expoundeth it: When, ſaith he, we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son) and otherwhere, God (ſaith he) was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them; the non-imputation of our ſins is expreſſed as a ſingular effect, an inſtance, an argument of his being in mind reconciled, and favourably diſpoſed toward us: and again; He died to reconcile both (Jews and Gentiles) unto God in one body by the croſs, having ſlain the enmity thereby; that is, God being thereby reconciled to all people, they became thence united together in the common relation of friends, and fellow-ſervants to God; becoming, as it there follows, fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God (or allyed unto him by ſpiritual relations.)

Pſalm 5. 4. 11. 5. 34. 16.
Habak. 1. 3.
Iſaiah 3. 8.
2 Cor. 5. 19.
Eph. 2. 16.
Coloſ. 1. 20, 21, &c.
Eph. 2. 19.
Οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Again, It furthered our ſalvation, by purchaſing the remiſſion of our ſins, and juſtification of our perſons; our freedom from condemnation and puniſhment, our appearance as upright, and acceptable in God's ſight; upon the conditions of faith and repentance propounded in the Goſpel; in regard to which effects he is ſaid thereby to redeem us from our ſins, to bear them, to take them away, to expiate them, to cleanſe, to purge, to ſanctify us from them: Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Who ſhall condemn them? It is Chriſt that died: that is, Chriſt's death hath freed them from all liableneſs to guilt and condemnation. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the Law, being made a curſe for us; that is, he by undergoing an accurſed kind of death hath purchaſed an indemnity and impunity for the tranſgreſſors of God's law: and, Being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved by him from wrath; that is, from the effects of God's juſt diſpleaſure, condemnation and puniſhment: and, In whom (ſaith S. Paul again clearly) we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace: and, My blood (ſaith our Lord) is the blood of the New-Teſtament, which was ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins: and, Chriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) was once offered to bear the ſin of many (or of the many, the multitude of men) Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, for the abolition of ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf: and, Behold (ſaith S. John the Baptiſt) the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world: and, The blood of Chriſt doth (ſaith S. John) cleanſe us from all ſin; He loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood; He is a propitiation for our ſins, and not for our ſins only, but for the ſins of the whole world: and, Jeſus, that by his blood he might ſanctifie the people; did ſuffer out of the gate. He delivered himſelf up for the Church, that he might ſanctifie it —- that he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; but that it ſhould be holy, and without blemiſh.

Rom. 8. 34.
Gal. 3. 13.
(1 Pet. 2. 24.)
Rom. 5. 8.
Epheſ. 1. 7.
Col. 1. 14.
Matth. 26.28.
Heb. 9. 27.
26. 28. 7. 27.
John 1. 29.
Heb. 10. }
4. 11.
1 John 1. 7.
Apoc. 1. 5.
1 John 2. 2.
4. 10.
Heb. 13. 12.
Eph. 5. 25, 27.

Our Lord alſo by his death procured our ſalvation, as having thereby purchaſed for us means ſufficient to free us from the power and dominion of ſin, to purifie our hearts, and ſanctifie our lives; for, He gave himſelf

Tit. 2. 14.

himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie to himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works: and, He gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might redeem us from this preſent evil world; and, We were redeemed, not with corruptible things, with ſilver, or with gold; but with 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot, from our vain converſation, delivered from our fathers; and, He by his own
1 Pet. 2. 24. ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin ſhould
Rom. 6. 2, 6, 8, 11. live unto righteouſneſs. We are with him dead to ſin; our old man is cruci- fied with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.

In ſubordination to, coincidence, or concurrence with the principal deſigns and effects, our Lord alſo died for the reparation of God's honour, which we by contempt of his authority, and violation of his law had impaired, but our Saviour by ſo ſignal an obedience thereto did repair; for the recovery of God's right, which was infringed by withdrawing ſo great and noble a part of his creation from its due allegiance and ſervice; the which he recovered and reſtored to him; for the ſatisfaction to God's juſtice, provoked by ſo heinous impieties and iniquities;
the which was abundantly performed by ſo infinitely valuable a com-penſation, and ſacrifice offered thereto.

Heb. 10. 29 Matt. 26. 28. 1 Cor. 11. 25. Alſo for ratification of the new Covenant between God and us; whence his blood is called, the blood of the Covenant, the blood of the New Teſtament.

Coloſ. 1. 20. For the pacifying and reconciling all things in heaven and earth;
Eph. 2. 25. removing all cauſes of diſſention and diſtance; inducing obligations to concord and charity:

1 Cor. 15. 55. For pulling out the ſting, and removing the terrours of death; de-
Heb. 2. 14. Καταργήσας. ſtroying (or defeating) him that had the power of death, and deliver- ring them, who through the fear of death are all their life-time ſubject to death.

Coloſ. 2. 19. For the ſuppreſſing, vanquiſhing, and triumphing over the powers of John 12. 31. 16. 11. hell and darkneſs, the which he did, as S. Paul telleth us, atchieve upon his croſs: and by his death he telleth us, that the Prince of this world was condemned, and caſt out.

For engaging us to the practice of all righteouſneſs and obedience (eſpecially to the moſt excellent, high and hard parts thereof, charity, humility, meekneſs, patience, ſelf-denial, utmoſt conſtancy and perſeverance) both from our obligation in regard to what he ſuffered for us, and in imitation of his example. For, we ſhould run with patience the race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus, the author and finiſher of Heb. 12. 1, 2. our faith, who for the joy that was ſet before him endured the croſs, deſpi- ſing the ſhame: and, Chriſt having ſuffered for us in the fleſh, we ſhould (ſaith S. Peter) arm our ſelves with the ſame mind, —— ſo as no longer
1 Pet. 4. 1, 2. to live the reſt of our time in the fleſh to the luſt of men, but to the will of God.

Laſtly, for atteſtation unto, and confirmation of divine truth; ſealing by his blood that heavenly doctrine which he taught, and witneſ- 1 Tim. 6. 13. ſing before Pontius Pilate a good confeſſion: he was the Prince of Martyrs; who, as he for this end (as he told Pilate) was born, and for this John 18. 37. end came into the world, that he might bear witneſs to the truth, ſo he eſpecially did accompliſh that glorious deſign by his death; enduring Heb. 12. 3, 4. the contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, reſiſting unto blood in comba- ting againſt ſin; by his blood indeed all other witneſſes of truth, did (as Revel. 12. 11. it is ſaid in the Revelation) accompliſh their warfare, and obtain victo- ry:

ry: his blood purchaſed for them their reſolution and ſtrength; his promiſes ſupported them, his example did animate them, to the profeſſion and maintenance of truth, in the greateſt dangers, and moſt violent aſſaults.

Such ends did the death of our Lord regard, ſuch fruits did grow from it, which the time permitteth us but thus curſorily to touch.

5. Now for the practical influences the conſideration of this Point ſhould have upon us, they are many and great; but we now can onely name, or inſinuate them.

1. It ſhould beget in us higheſt degrees of love and gratitude toward God, and toward our Saviour, in regard to this higheſt expreſſion of love, and inſtance of beneficence toward us. Greater love God could not have ſhewed, than in thus deſtinating, and offering up his only deareſt Son to death (a moſt painful and ſhameful death) for our ſake; and, Greater love (he told us himſelf) than this hath no man, than that one ſhould lay down his life for his friends; no man hath greater, except himſelf, who even laid his life down for his enemies and perſecutors: And love ſo incomparably, ſo extreamly great, doth ſurely require correſpondent degrees of love and thankfulneſs. John 15. 13. Rom. 5. 10.

2. It ſhould raiſe in us great faith, and hope in God, excluding all diſtruſt and deſpair, that God will not beſtow upon us whatever is needfully, or conveniently good for us; for He, (as S. Paul argueth) who did not ſpare his own ſon, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?

3. Particularly, it ſhould comfort us, and ſatisfie our conſcience in regard to the guilt of our ſins, however contracted, ſuppoſing that we do heartily repent of them; for that there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit; and, that Being juſtified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by virtue of his death we ſincerely repenting are freed from all condemnation, we truely believing have a firm and ſure peace with God: Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Who is he that condemneth, ſeeing it is Chriſt that hath dyed? We are very blameably incredulous, if having ſuch an aſſurance from God, and ſuch an engagement upon him we diſtruſt his mercy. Rom. 8. 1. 5. 1. Rom. 8. 34.

4. It diſcovereth unto us the heinouſneſs of our ſins, and thence ſhould breed in us a vehement deteſtation, together with a great dread of them; a deteſtation of them, as having provoked God to ſuch a pitch of diſpleaſure, cauſing him to deal thus ſeverely with his own beloved Son; as having brought ſo heavy ſuffering upon a perſon ſo infinitely high in dignity, excellent in worth, kind and gracious to us; a dread of them, as expoſing us, if we do not avoid and forſake them, to the moſt grievous pains and miſeries; for, if theſe things were done to a green tree (if ſuch puniſhments were inflicted upon one ſo innocent, ſo worthy, ſo little obnoxious to the fire of divine wrath and vengeance) What ſhall be done to the dry? that is, What will become of us, who are ſo guilty, ſo combuſtible by that fire, if we by preſumptuous commiſſion of ſin, and impenitent continuance therein, do incenſe God againſt us? Luc. 23. 31.

5. It ſhould work in us a kindly contrition and remorſe for our ſins, which were indeed the murtherers of ſo good a friend, and loving a Saviour: others were but inſtruments, they were the principal authours of his death; they moſt truely betrayed him, they accuſed him, they condemned him, they lifted him up to the accurſed tree : they moved God, and enabled men to inflict this horrible puniſhment on him.

6. It ſhould deterr us from them, and engage us moſt carefully to avoid them, as thoſe which in a ſort do exact another death from Heb. 6. 9. 10. him ; crucifying him afreſh (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews telleth us)
29. vilifying and defiling the precious blood of the covenant (as he likewiſe teacheth.)

7. It ſhould engage us to a patient ſubmiſſion and reſignation of our ſelves to the will and providence of God ; foraſmuch as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, we ſhould (as S. Peter adviſeth) arm our ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind ; and, Let (exhorteth S. Paul) the ſame mind be in us that was in Chriſt Jeſus ; who being in the form of God humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs : We ſhould not diſdain, nor upon any account be diſpleaſed, or unwilling in bearing any croſs, or affliction, to follow the pattern of our Heb. 12. 1. great Maſter ; looking unto Jeſus, the authour and finiſher of our faith, who for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs.

8. It doth alſo oblige us to the deepeſt mortification in conformity Phil. 3. 20. to his death : we ſhould be with him (or after him) crucified to the Gal. 5. 24. luſts and affections of the fleſh, to the faſhions, glories, deſires and delights
Gal. 2. 20. of the world ; knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him ;
1 Pet. 4. 2. that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve
Col. 3. 3, 5.
Rom. 6. 5, 6. ſin.

9. It is alſo a ſtrong engagement to the fulleſt meaſure of charity toward 1 John 4. 11. our brethren ; for, If (ſaith S. John) God ſo loved us (as to give
3. 16. his own Son to die for us) then ought we to love one another, in a degree anſwerable to ſuch an obligation and pattern : If (added the ſame Apoſtle) he laid down his life for us, then ought we alſo to lay down our lives for the brethren.

10. In fine, we hence appear obliged to yield up our ſelves wholly to the ſervice of our Saviour ; to the promoting of his intereſt and glory
: ſince, we (as S. Paul admoniſheth us) are not our own, being bought 1 Cor. 6. 20. with a price ; and muſt therefore glorifie God in our body, and in our ſpirit,
7. 23. which are God's, by a purchaſe ſo dear and precious ; ſince, as that Apoſtle
2 Cor. 5. 15. again mindeth us, Chriſt died for all, that they which live might not
2 Pet. 2. 1. live to themſelves, but to him that died for them ; this being, let us not wrong the Lord who bought us, by witholding his due, the price of his deareſt blood ; let us not abuſe him, by defeating his purpoſe, no leſs advantagious to our ſelves, than honourable to him ; but as by being our Saviour, he hath deſerved to be our Lord, ſo in effect let him ever be ; let us ever believe him ſo in our heart, confeſs him with our mouth, and avow him in our practice ; which that we may doe, God of his infinite mercy, by his holy grace, vouchſafe unto us, through Jeſus Chriſt
our Lord. Amen.

Apoc. 1. 5. Now, Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God ; and his Father, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever.

Worthy is the lamb, that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſ-Apoc. 5. 12. dom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing.

Apoc. 5. 13. Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen.

He deſcended into Hell.

SERMON XXVIII.

ACTS II. 27.

Becauſe thou wilt not leave my ſoul in Hell.

SAint Peter in his Sermon to the Jews cites theſe words of the Pſalmiſt to prove the Reſurrection of Chriſt. And becauſe upon theſe words our Saviour's deſcent into Hell ſeem to be grounded, I ſhall from this Text take occaſion to diſcourſe of this Article of the Creed, Κατελθόντα εἰς ᾅδου, He deſcended into hell.

This Article is of later ſtanding in the Creed, and doth not appear to have had place in any of the moſt ancient ones publick or private; excepting that of Aquileia; into which alſo perhaps it might have been inſerted not long before Ruffinus his time; and the meaning thereof hath always (both in more ancient times among the Fathers, and afterwards among the Schoolmen, and lately among modern Divines) been much debated, having yielded occaſion to many prolix and elaborate diſcourſes; To recite the ſeveral opinions about it, or different explications thereof, with the reaſons produced to maintain or diſprove them, were a matter of greater time and pains than I can well afford; and to decide the controverſies about it, a matter of greater difficulty than I could hope to atchieve. Wherefore (both upon theſe accounts, and becauſe I rather chuſe to inſiſt upon matters more clear in their nature, and more practical in conſequence) I ſhould be willing altogether to wave this obſcure and perplexed ſubject; yet however ſomewhat to comply with expectation, I ſhall touch briefly upon ſome things ſeeming conducible to the clearing, or to the ending of the controverſies about it.

Now whereas there may be a three-fold inquiry; one concerning the meaning of theſe words (He deſcended into hell) intended by thoſe who inſerted them; another concerning the moſt proper ſignification of the words themſelves; a third concerning the meaning, they are in conſiſtency with truth capable of;

1. The firſt I reſolve, or rather remove, by ſaying, it ſeems needleſs to diſpute, what meaning they, who placed the words here, did intend; ſince, 1. It is poſſible, and by many like inſtances might be declared ſo, and perhaps not unlikely, that they might both themſelves upon probable grounds believe, and for plauſible ends propound to the belief of others this propoſition, without apprehending any diſtinct ſenſe thereof; as we believe all the Scriptures, and commend them to the faith of others, without underſtanding the ſenſe of many paſſages therein: And ſince, 2. Perhaps they might by them intend ſome notion not certain, or not true, following ſome conceits then paſſable among divers, but not built upon any ſure foundation (like that of the millennium; and the neceſſity of infants communicating, &c. which were anciently in great vogue, but are now diſcarded) and ſince, 3. To ſpeak roundly, their bare authority, whoever they were (for that doth not appear) could not be ſuch, as to oblige us to be of their minds, whatever they did mean or intend; they perhaps were ſuch, to whom we might owe much reverence, but ſhould not be obliged to yield entire credence to their opinions. But farther, 4. Were I bound to ſpeak my ſenſe, I ſhould ſay, that, ſuppoſing they had any diſtinct meaning, they did intend to affirm, that our Saviour's ſoul, did by a true and proper kind of motion deſcend into the regions infernal, or beneath the earth, where they conceived the ſouls of men were detained; for this appears to have been the more general, and current opinion of thoſe times, which it is probable they did comply with herein, whenceſoever fetched, however grounded.

2. As to the ſecond inquiry, concerning the ſignification of the words, what may be meant by He deſcended; whether our Saviour himſelf, according to his humanity, or his ſoul, or his body, called He by Synecdoche; what by deſcended, whether (to omit that ſenſe, which makes the whole ſentence an allegory, denoting the ſufferance of infernal or helliſh pains and ſorrows, as too wide from the purpoſe; whether, I ſay) by deſcending may be ſignified a proper local motion toward ſuch a term, or an action ſo called in reſpect to ſome ſuch motion accompanying it; or a virtual motion by power and efficacy in places below: what by Hell, whether a ſtate of being, or a place; if a place, whether that where bodies are repoſed, or that to which ſouls do go; and if a place of ſouls, whether the place of good and happy ſouls, or that of bad and miſerable ones; or indifferently, and in common of both thoſe; for ſuch a manifold ambiguity theſe words have, or are made to have; and each of theſe ſenſes are embraced, and contended for: I ſhall not examine any of them, nor farther meddle in the matter, than by ſaying,

1. That the Hebrew word Sheol (upon the true notion of which the ſenſe of the word Hell (or Hades) in this place is conceived to depend) doth ſeem originally, moſt properly, and moſt frequently (perhaps conſtantly, except when it is tranſlated, as all words ſometimes are, to a figurative uſe) to deſign the whole Region protended downward from the ſurface of the earth to a depth (according to the vulgar opinion, as it ſeems anciently over the world) indefinite and unconceivable; vaſtly capacious in extenſion, very darkſome, deſolate, and dungeon-like in quality (whence it is alſo frequently ſtiled the pit [a] the loweſt pit, [b] the abyſs, [c] the depths of the earth, [d] the darkneſs, * the depths of hell.) I need not labour much to confirm the truth of this notion, ſince it is obvious, that this Sheol (when moſt abſolutely and properly Nobis inferi—— in foſſo terræ & in alto vaſtitas, & in ipſis viſceribus ejus abſtruſa profunditas. Tertul. de An. 55.

’Απώλεια. Prov. 15. 11.

Διαφθορά. Prov. 27. 20.

[a] {Iſa. 38. 18. Pſal. 88. 6. Ecclus. 21. 11.}

[b] Pſal. 71. 20. John 2. 6. Rom. 10. 7.

[c] Pſal. 71. 20.

[d] Job 17. 13. Pſal. 143. 3. Eccl. 6. 4. 1 Sam. 2. 9.

* Prov. 9. 18.

taken, the circumſtances of diſcourſe about it implying ſo much) is commonly oppoſed to heaven, not only in ſituation, but in dimenſion and diſtance; as when Job ſpeaking of the unſearchableneſs of the divine perfections, ſaith; It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do; deeper than hell, what canſt thou know? and the Prophet Amos, Though they dig into hell, thence ſhall mine hand take them; though they climb into heaven, thence will I bring them down.

Job 11. 8.
Amos 9. 2. (Pſalm 139. 8.)
(Deut. 32. 22. Iſaiah 57. 9.)

2. I ſay farther, becauſe the bodies (or viſible remainders) of perſons dying do naturally fall down, or are put into the boſome of this pit, which is therefore an univerſal grave, and receptacle of them, therefore to dye is frequently termed καταβαίνειν εἰς ᾅδου, or κατάγεσθαι εἰς ᾅδου, to deſcend, or to be brought down into this hell; which hapning to all men without exception (for, as the Pſalmiſt ſays, there is no man that ſhall deliver his ſoul (or his life, or himſelf) from the hand of this all-graſping hell) therefore it is attributed promiſcuouſly to all men, good and bad alike; I will go down, ſaith good Jacob, unto the grave, unto my ſon mourning (καταβήσομαι εἰς ᾅδου, I will go down to Sheol, this common grave of mankind) and ſo frequently of others. Whence this Hell is apt figuratively to be put for, and to ſignifie equivalently with death it ſelf; and it is once by the LXX. ſo tranſlated (and S. Peter ſeems to uſe the phraſe * after them) for death, I ſay, or for the law, condition and ſtate of death: as in that of Hezekiah in the Prophet Eſay, * Sheol cannot praiſe thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth: where οἱ ἐν ᾅδου, and οἱ ἀποθανόντες (as the Greek renders Sheol, and death) are the ſame, and oppoſed to the living, of whom it is ſaid; The living, the living he ſhall praiſe thee.

Pſalm 89. 48.
Gen. 37. 35. 44. 29, 31.
* 2 Sam. 22. 6. Act. 2. 24. Ὠδῖνες θανάτου The ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about.
* Iſa. 38. 18.
Death and Hades are frequently joyned as ſynonymous.
(Eccluſ. 48. 5. Matt. 6. 23, &c.)

3. I ſay further, that this word, according to ancient uſe, ſeems not to ſignify the place, whither mens ſouls do go, or where they abide; for that

1. It can hardly be made appear, that the ancient Hebrews either had any name appropriated to the place of ſouls, or did conceive diſtinctly, which way they did go; otherwiſe than that, as the Preacher ſpeaks, they returned unto God who gave them; and that they did abide in God's hand; eſpecially the ſouls of the juſt, according to that in the Book of Wiſdom: The ſouls of the righteous are in the hand of God, and there ſhall no torment touch them. And for that,

Eccleſ. 12. 7.
Wiſd. 3. 1.
(Deut. 33. 3.)

2. It ſeems, they did rather conceive the ſouls of men, when they died, to go upward than downward; as the Preacher again intimates, when he differenceth the ſpirit of man dying from the ſoul of beaſts; the ſoul of beaſts deſcending with its body to the earth; the ſpirit of man aſcending unto God, to be diſpoſed by him according to his pleaſure and juſtice. And by Enos his being taken to God (whoſe ſpecial reſidence is expreſſed to be in heaven above) and by Elias his tranſlation up into heaven (as it is in the Text of the hiſtory) 'tis probable, they did rather ſuppoſe the ſouls of the righteous to aſcend, than to be conveyed downward into ſubterraneous caverns, thoſe μυχοὶ ᾅδου (cloſets of hell) as the Book of Wiſdom calls them; that βόθρος ᾅδου, (deep pit of hell) as it is in Ben-Sirach; to aſcend, I ſay, whether into the ſupreme heaven, or no, is not material; but ſome whither above, nearer unto God's moſt ſpecial reſidence, into a happy place.

Eccleſ. 3. 21.
Gen. 5. 24.
2 Kings 2. 11.
Sap. 17. 24.
Ecclus. 21. 10, 11.
Οὐρανὸς ἔτι ἄβατος ὤν. Chryſ. ad Heb. 9. 8.

3. I add, that if thoſe ancients had by Sheol meant the receptacle or manſion of ſouls, it is not likely they would have uſed ſuch expreſſions as thoſe: The grave (Sheol) cannot praiſe thee, death cannot cele-

Eph. 3. 15.
Heb. 11. 16. 12. 22.

brate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth; ſo Hezekiah Iſaiah 38. 18. ſpake; In death there is no remembrance of thee, in SHEOL who Pſalm 6. 6. ſhall give thee thanks? ſo David ſaid; and, There is no works, nor deviſe, Eccleſ. 9. 10. nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in SHEOL, whither thou goeſt; ſo the Preacher; who hardly it ſeems could ſay ſo, if by Sheol he meant the place of ſouls; except he ſhould alſo mean, that ſouls after death became deprived of all life and ſenſe. The ſon of Sirach likewiſe ſpeaks in the Eccleſ. 17.27. ſame manner: ὑψίστῳ τίς αἰνέσει ἐν ᾅδῃ; Who ſhall praiſe the moſt High in hell, in ſtead of them which live and give thanks? Thankſgiving periſheth from the dead, as from one that is not; the living and ſound in heart ſhall praiſe the Lord.

I muſt confeſs, that afterwards (even before our Saviour's time) the word ᾅδης was aſſumed by the Jews, to deſign (as it did among the Greeks) either the place of ſouls in common, or more ſtrictly the place of ſouls condemned to puniſhment and pain, for their bad lives here: Joſephus doth often uſe the word in the firſt of theſe ſenſes; and in the
Luc. 16, 23. New Teſtament it ſeems peculiarly applied to the latter; as in the parable of the rich man, who being ἐν τῷ ᾅδῃ, in hell and torments, did thence lift up his eyes, and behold a far off Lazarus in Abraham's boſome; but we cannot hence infer the ſame concerning the ancient meaning of the word Sheol; eſpecially conſidering how the Jews, after the prophetical days, in their diſperſions becoming acquainted with the world, did borrow ſome notions and expreſſions from elſewhere; which expreſſions our Saviour and his Apoſtles might well retain, when they were ſuitable and accommodable unto truth.

3. But however it be determined concerning the proper ſenſe in general of this principal word in the Propoſition, and of the reſt depending thereon, as to their ſignification here; I do thus, as to the preſent caſe, and the laſt main queſtion propounded about the meaning, whereof the words are capable with truth, anſwer briefly.

1. If we do interpret the deſcent into hell here affirmed of our Saviour's interment, or being laid in the boſome of that univerſal grave we before ſpake of; or, if (in a notion little differing from that) we take theſe words for a phraſe (taking its ground thence in the manner fore-mentioned) importing no otherwiſe than when it was ſpoken of Jacob and others, that our Saviour did really paſs into the ſtate of death; we are ſure therein not to err; the Propoſition ſo underſtood being moſt certainly true: we ſhall alſo hereby be able fairly to ſatisfy the firſt, and beſt (if not the only) reaſon of this Propoſition being commended to our belief. For that place in the Acts which ſeems to have been the occaſion, and the main ground of this Propoſition being aſſerted in theſe terms, doth not refuſe, but commodiouſly admits this interpretation: for, our Saviour's ſoul not being left in Hell, and not ſeeing corruption, is plainly by S. Peter himſelf interpreted of his reſurrection:
Acts 2. 31. David (ſaith he) foreſeeing this, ſpake of Chriſt's Reſurrection;
Acts 13. 34. and, in like manner, by S. Paul; As concerning, that he raiſed him from the dead, now no more to ſee corruption, he ſaid in this wiſe—— that ſpeech, I ſay, Our Saviour's ſoul not being left in Hell, and, not ſeeing corruption, is by the Apoſtles interpreted to denote our Saviour's reſurrection; that is, his being freed from the bands of death, and raiſed from the grave, before his fleſh had underwent corruption; and it is oppoſed unto David's continuing in death, and ſeeing corruption; his body being corrupted and conſumed in the grave; the Apoſtles not deſigning to aſſert or prove more, than our Lord's Reſurrection: Da- vid, argue they, fell on ſleep, and hath continued till now in that ſtate; David remained unto this day in the grave, and ſo his body being reduced to duſt ſaw corruption; ἐτελεύτησε καὶ ἐτάφη; he dyed, and was buried, without any reverſion; therefore that ſpeech of his in the Acts 2. 29. Pſalm muſt not fully and ultimately be underſtood of him, to whom they did not ſo exactly agree; but of ſuch an one, who did not abide in that deadly ſleep; whoſe fleſh, being opportunely raiſed, did avoid the ſight (or undergoing) of corruption. And whereas it is ſaid, τὴν ψυχήν μȣ, my ſoul, or my life; nothing can be thence drawn greatly prejudicial to this expoſition; for (to omit that bolder expoſition of Beza, who ſometime did by the ſoul underſtand the dead body, tranſlating the words, Non derelinques cadaver meum in ſepulchro) nothing is more uſual than both for the fleſh, and for the ſoul (each of them Exod. 31. 14. Synecdochically) to ſignifie the perſon, conſidered as ſometime endu- Levit. 7. 25, ed with life: Every one that ſinneth ſhall be put to death; and, that ſoul 27. 5. 2, &c. ſhall be cut off, are terms equivalent in the Law: the ſoul that eateth, the ſoul that toucheth, and the like phraſes do often occur; and thoſe expreſſions, to deliver their ſoul from death; God will redeem my ſoul Pſal 33. 19. from the power of the grave; What man is he that ſhall not ſee death, that 49. 15. 89.48. ſhall deliver his ſoul from the hand of the grave? do ſeem parallel to this, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoul in hell; which yet do import no more, than the perſons there ſpoken of reſpectively to be preſerved from death.

Again, taking ſoul for the living ſoul, or that faculty by which we live, and hell for the ſtate of death, the words mentioned, Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, will have this natural expoſition; agreeable to the Apoſtles deſign: thou wilt not ſuffer me to continue deprived of life, till my fleſh be corrupted. It is alſo obſervable, that S. Paul in the 13th of the Acts, neglecting the former part, Thou ſhalt not leave (Dr. H. Pr. C.) my ſoul in Hell, contents himſelf with the latter, Thou wilt not yield thy Holy one to ſee corruption, intimating both parts to ſignifie the ſame thing.

If it be objected as an inconvenience to this explication of the words here in the Creed, that admitting it, they ſignifie no more, than what was before expreſſed in plain words, Dead and buried; and ſo contain only a needleſs repetition; I Anſwer,

1. That this objection concerns them, who inſerted the words here; who yet, even ſuppoſing this expoſition to be good, might be excuſable, as ſuſpecting it poſſible, that our Saviour being ἐν ᾅδῃ, according to S. Peter, might imply more than this, although they knew not what diſtinctly; who alſo might perhaps intend ſomewhat by theſe words different from this ſenſe, but not ſo truely applicable to them, or agreeable to the truth of the thing; I anſwer,

2. That to ſay our Saviour did continue in the ſtate of death for ſome time, doth add ſomewhat above his being dead and buried; wherefore thus underſtanding the deſcent doth not render it altogether ſuperfluous.

3. That a greater inconvenience ſeems to ariſe from expounding them otherwiſe; the doing ſo, reflecting upon the more ancient compilers, both of this, and other Breviaries of faith, as the Nicene, and Conſtantinopolitan Councils, Irenæus, Tertullian, &c. who left them out; which they ſhould not have done, if they contain any thing highly material and different from what is here otherwiſe expreſſed; whoſe credit is (as I conceive) more to be tendred, than of their Juniours and followers unknown to us; and ſo much the more, for that in a matter of this kind, defect or omiſſion is leſs tolerable, than any redundance in expreſſion. Which inconvenience may ſeem in a manner to reach 1 Cor. 15. 4. higher, even to S. Paul himſelf; who in the 15th Chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, declaring the ſum of what he both learned and taught concerning our Saviour's laſt grand performances, only mentions his death, burial and reſurrection; I delivered unto you firſt, that Chriſt died for our ſins, according to the Scriptures, and that he was buryed, and that he roſe again the third day; which enumeration of his, we may, it ſeems, well acquieſce in, as ſufficient and complete, and may thence with great probability infer, that no other deſcent of our Saviour into Hell, beſide his death and burial, was by him underſtood, or delivered in his Catechetical diſcourſes and preachings as a point of faith; ſo that what is objected as an inconvenience, proves no ſmall advantage to this expoſition. But I ſay farther, to the main queſtion, that,

2. Interpreting Hell for the manſion, or habitation of ſouls departed hence (to omit, that Sheol, as I before noted, ſeems to ſignifie otherwiſe in the Old Teſtament, and conſequently thence the place in the Acts applyed out of the Pſalms, would not be proper to this purpoſe; whereby the main ground and ſupport of the aſſertion it ſelf, taken according to this ſenſe, were removed; waving I ſay, that conſideration, and taking ᾅδης, according to the meaning, which we muſt confeſs it ſometime to bear in the New Teſtament, yet) there ſeems to follow ſome inconvenience thereon. For then we muſt either take it for the place of damned ſpirits ſhut up in torment or deſpair (according to which acception the propoſition it ſelf would be moſt certainly uncertain, having no ſolid ground for it; and moſt probably falſe, for that it is affirmed, our Saviour's ſoul, the ſame day he died, did go into paradiſe; This day, ſaid he Luc. 23. 43. to the penitent thief, ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe) or we muſt take it for a place common to all ſouls, as well good and bleſſed; as bad and miſerable; (for that it in the New Teſtament at leaſt, comprehends the place of torment, is evident by the parable of the rich man and Lazarus.) But I think that S. Auſtin had reaſon to doubt, whether it were conſonant to the ſtyle of the New Teſtament, that Hades, relating to the ſtate of ſouls, ſhould there be ever taken in a good or middle ſenſe, at Apoc. 20. 14. leaſt, whereas 'tis ſaid in the Revelation, that thoſe two inſeparable companions, Death and Hades (that Hades, which is ſaid to render up its dead to judgment) were caſt into the lake of fire, 'tis hard to ſuppoſe, that Paradiſe was caſt in there; yea hard it were to ſay, that Hades was caſt in thither, ſuppoſing that word did then in its uſual latitude of ſignification (as Chriſtians underſtood it) comprehend paradiſe. Yea farther, this explication forces us upon this inconvenience, that we muſt ſuppoſe paradiſe to be ſeated in a place beneath us, or within the earth; that paradiſe, which is either the ſame with the third (or higheſt) heavens in * S. Paul, or confining thereto: it is, I ſay, hard to be forced by an interpretation of theſe words, to conſent, that paradiſe (that locus divinæ amœnitatis recipiendis Sanctorum Spiritibus deſtinatus; the place of divine comfort and amenity, deſtined to receive the ſpirits of the Saints) ſhould have its place in the darkſome

Εἰς ὃ πάντες οἴονται καθάπερ εἰς δοχεῖον ἐνθένδε τὰς ψυχὰς μετανίστασθαι. Gr. Nyſſ. de im. an.

Μετάβασις εἰς τὸ ἀειδὲς καὶ ἀφανές. Id.

* 2 Cor. 12.

Οὔτε γὰρ ἐν ὑποχθονίοις εἴποι τις ἂν τὸν παράδεισον, οὔτε ἐν παραδείσῳ τὰ ὑποχθόνια, &c. Greg. Nyſſ. T. 2. de Reſur. 1. Tertull. Apol. 47.

bowels of the earth; no commodious ſituation it ſeems for a garden, for delightſome walks and bowers: yet ſo it muſt be ſeated, that our Saviour's ſoul may (at leaſt in rigour and propriety of ſpeech) he ſaid to deſcend thereinto. The word deſcend taking hell for the ancient Sheol, is proper enough, and hath ground both in authentick uſe, and the nature of the thing; but taking hell in this ſenſe (for the place of ſouls) it is moſt probably improper, and hath no certain ground, or authority to commend it; for it is ſaid, that our Saviour's ſoul was in Hell, not that it deſcended thither; nor can it by conſequence be inferred ſo to have done, according to this meaning of hell. However,

3. I add, that ſeeing it is a moſt certain truth, that our Saviour's ſoul did immediately go into the place appointed to receive happy ſouls after their receſſion from the body, and reſignation into God's hands; if we take Hell in a general and common ſenſe for the place or the ſtate of ſouls departed; and deſcending for paſſing thereinto (by a falling as it were from life, or by going away together with the deſcent of the body; and thence ſtyled deſcending; what appeareth viſibly happening to the body, being accommodated to the ſoul) if, I ſay, we do thus interpret our Saviour's deſcent into Hell for his ſoul's going into the common receptacle and manſion of ſouls, we ſhall ſo doing be ſure not ſubſtantially to miſtake. And this ſenſe, I conceive, if the words can handſomely bear them, would be very proper to this place, as ſignifying ſomewhat diſtinct from what is otherwiſe expreſſed; and ſerving to the farther eſtabliſhment of thoſe great Articles adjoyning, our Lord's death and reſurrection; it implying the perfect accompliſhment of death for the ſoul to have deſerted the body, and to have been tranſlated into that ἀδυνάτον ᾅδην (as the Book of Wiſedom calls it) that inviſible region, ſo far diſtant thence, whence — revocare gradum ſuperaſque evadere ad auras, is a labour indeed, and a work not to be effected, but by the power of him, whoſe prerogative it is, to kill, and make alive, to bring down to hell, and to bring up; to lead unto the gates of hell, and to bring back again.

Sap. 17. 14.

1 Sam. 2. 6.
Deut. 32. 39.
Tob. 13. 2.
Sap. 16. 13.

This is all that I ſhall ſay about this intricate point; for I cannot well be at the pain to conſider, or examine thoſe conceits, which pretend to acquaint us why, and to what effect our Saviour deſcended into Hell.

That our Lord went thither to preach unto, convert and redeem from thence all, or ſome of the damned Souls (for ſome ſay, that he depopulated and emptyed that region of darkneſs; others are not ſo liberal as to free all thence, but only the fitter objects of compaſſion and favour; both ſaying that, which hath very weak, or no reaſons to maintain, very ſtrong and plain objections to aſſail it.)

Iren. 4. 45. 5. 31.
Euſeb. Hiſt 1. ult.
Clem. Str. 2. p. 163. 6. p. 271.

That he went to reſcue, and conduct into glory the ſouls of the Patriarchs, and other good perſons, from that infernal Limbus, in which till then they were detained; (a place by no likely means to be proved exiſtent otherwhere than in the fancy of its inventors) or, That he went to deliver the ſouls of the juſt, and Prophets, from the wicked powers, into whoſe power they had fallen (as J. Martyr in his Dialogue with Tryphon. p. 105.)

Euſeb. Demonſt. 10. 8.
Athan. Cont. Apollin.

That he went to affront, triumph over, and terrifie the powers of darkneſs upon their own ground, or in their own dominions.

Vid. Montac. Orig. Part. Poſt. p. 442. & in Appar. 1.

Theſe, and the like conceits ſeem enough diſcountenanced, by ſaying, the Scriptures no where plainly declare any ſuch thing, and that therefore they have no good ground to ſtand upon (they pretend only ly one or two difficult and obſcure places in the firſt Epiſtle of St. Peter, which are capable of fair expoſitions not favourable to them) whereas in teaching us, that our Lord preached upon earth ſalvation to them, who in this life ſhould be converted to believe upon him and obey his laws; damnation irrecoverable to them, who ſhould perſiſt in infidelity and diſobedience: that he merited by his obedience, and purchaſed by his blood, both a redemption from all future diſtreſs, and a tranſlation into bliſs; that he by his death vanquiſhed all the powers of hell, and triumphed over them upon the croſs; in theſe things the Scripture is very clear and copious: but concerning that redemption of ſouls beneath, that tranſlation of ſouls out of ſubterraneous cloſets, or * priſons (as they call them) that local triumph in the Devil's kingdom, it is quite ſilent, or very dark in expreſſion about them; whence we may well be ſomewhat backward in yielding aſſent to ſuch devices, of which, if any perhaps ſhould be true, yet could not the belief thereof be of neceſſity, or great importance to us: for what our Saviour ſo did below would not belong to the ſalvation of the living, which is abundantly provided for by his death and reſurrection, with what followed them; nor would it much refer to our practice, which is otherwiſe ſufficiently directed and encouraged. So that we may however ſafely be ignorant in regard to any of thoſe notions. But let it ſuffice to have diſcourſed thus far about this endleſs queſtion; except we will end it with that ſaying of S. Auſtin; Melius eſt dubitare de occultis, quam litigare de incertis: or with that more peremptory ſaying of Calvin: Atqui ſtultum, & temerarium eſt de rebus incognitis altius inquirere, quam Deus nobis ſcire permittit,

Heb. 2. 14. Coloſ. 2. 15.

* Bellarm.

Vid. Fidei Symbola in Codice Juſtinian. Tit. 1. De Gen. ad lit. 8. 5.

Calv. Inſt. 3. 25. 6.

SER-

He roſe again from the Dead.

SERMON XXIX.

ACTS I. 3.

To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion by many infallible proofs; being ſeen of them fourty days, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

THe moſt proper, and moſt uſual way of God, in confirming any truth of high moment in ſpecial manner revealed by him, is by lending unto them, whom he employs as meſſengers thereof, his powerful arm for the performance of works ſupernatural or miraculous. Of ſuch works there is none more certainly ſuch than raiſing a dead perſon to life; the doing which upon ſeveral accounts plainly ſurpaſſeth the power of any creature; not only as exceeding the ordinary law and courſe of nature eſtabliſhed and upheld by God, but for that the Souls of men departing hence do return into God's hand, or into a ſtate by high ſentence determined, whence no creature is able to fetch them down, or raiſe them up; becauſe alſo God hath reſerved the Prerogative of doing this unto himſelf; he holding (as it is expreſſed in the Revelation) the keys of hell, and of death; he having ſaid, I am he, and there is no God beſide me; I kill, and I make alive. Apoc. 1. 18. Deut. 32. 39. 1 Sam. 2. 6. Pſal. 68. 20.

There could alſo particularly be no more proper way of confirming our Religion to come from God, whether we conſider the perſons whom it was deſigned for, or the doctrines it propounded: The Jews were uncapable of conviction by any other way, than by miracle; no other reaſon would have been apprehended by them, or would have had any force upon them: The Jews (ſaith St. Paul) require a ſign; and Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders ye will not believe, ſaid our Saviour to them. 1 Cor. 1. 22. John 4. 48. The Gentiles alſo had been ſo uſed to the winding off and on the ſubtilties and the plauſibilities of diſputation, that nothing probably in that kind would have ſufficed to perſwade them; and therefore ſomewhat miraculous in the higheſt kind might be needful to convert them: Alſo the moſt peculiar and eminent doctrines of our Religion (ſuch as are, Our Lord Jeſus being the Meſſias, the Son of God and Saviour of the World, the future reſurrection, general judgment, and diſpenſation of rewards, anſwerable to mens practice in this life) cannot more immediately and directly be aſſured, than by the reſurrection from the dead of him, who principally did reveal them.

Wherefore Almighty God in confirmation of our Religion did perform this great work in raiſing Jeſus our Lord from the dead; and withal (for the conviction of the world, for rendring our faith reaſonable, and our infidelity inexcuſable) he did take eſpecial care, that the fact ſhould by very ſufficient teſtimony be conveyed unto us; to which purpoſe he did (as St. Peter ſaid) προχειροτονεῖν, predeſign, Acts 10. 41. pick out, and appoint a competent number of perſons, in all reſpects capable and fit to aſſert it; this is that which St. Luke in our Text doth in way of Hiſtorical narration affirm. And becauſe the truth thereof is in its kind the principal argument, whereby the truth of our Religion in groſs may be evinced, we ſhall for the confirmation of our Faith againſt all impreſſions of this incredulous (and therefore impious) age, endeavour by God's aſſiſtance now to declare, and maintain it. That Jeſus truly died, all the world could teſtify; no death was ever more ſolemn or remarkable; nor do any adverſaries conteſt it; that he after that death was by Divine power raiſed again to life is that which we believe and aſſert: Now whoever with reaſon ſhall doubt thereof or deny it, muſt do it, either becauſe of ſome repugnance in the fact it ſelf, implying that it could not well be done; or from deficiency of the teſtimony proving it, as to its authours, or circumſtances: but neither of theſe exceptions may reaſonably be admitted.

As for the fact it ſelf, or the notion of a reſurrection in general there cannot (admitting that, which as capable of antecedaneous proof, and as acknowledged by all perſons owning any Religion, may be preſuppoſed, the power and providence of God, together with his chief Attributes of wiſdom and goodneſs incomprehenſible) there cannot be any repugnance therein, or any incredibility. For it was neither in its nature impoſſible to God, or in its deſign worthy of him; it contained nothing apparently either beyond the power of God, or preſumeable to be againſt his will.

1. To raiſe a dead man to life, is indeed we confeſs and avow a work ſurpaſſing the power of any creature, not aſſiſted by God; but no reaſon can be aſſigned, why it ſhould go beyond the Divine power. The doing it doth not involve contradiction, and is therefore an object of power, and at leaſt is atchievable by Omnipotence: let the Soul be what it will, and in whatever life may be ſuppoſed to conſiſt, nothing can hinder that God may reduce the parts of a man into the ſame ſtate they ſometime before were in. And very eaſily it is conceiveable that He, who (according to the general notions, and current traditions of mankind) did firſt inſpire the Soul of man into his body, may reinfuſe it being ſeparated; that he who after death keepeth it in his hand, may thence reſtore it; who alſo (according to hiſtories received in all the principal Religions that have been in the world) hath often actually performed it. Pliny indeed doth reckon this among inſtances of things abſolutely impoſſible: It is ſaith he, a great ſolace of our imperfect nature, that even God cannot doe all things; for neither can he bring death upon himſelf, if he would, nor beſtow eternity on mortals, nor recall the dead to life: but 'tis no wonder, that he, who thought the Soul quite to periſh by death, ſhould conceive the reſtitution thereof impoſſible; although even ſuppoſing that, his opinion was not reaſonable; for even any thing how corruptible ſoever by diſſolution of its ingredients, or alteration of its temperament, may by recollecting and rejoining thoſe ingredients, or by re-eſtabliſhing the cauſes of ſuch a temperament be reſtored (as a houſe whoſe materials are diſperſed may be re-edified, or as a liquor by a new fermentation may be revived) which to effect may not be deemed hard to him, that made the whole world: however to ſuch as him we may ſay as our Saviour did to the Sadduces; yea err not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. Eſpecially to thoſe who acknowledge the immortality of the Soul, or its permanence in a ſeparate ſtate, and who admit the truth of the ancient hiſtories among the Jews, it is not onely moſt evidently poſſible, but very credible, that God upon any conſiderable occaſion ſhould perform it; with ſuch St. Paul might well thus expoſtulate; What doth it ſeem incredible to you that God ſhould raiſe the dead? to you that have ſuch previous notions and perſwaſions about God's omnipotency; (ſuch as the Prophet Jeremy expreſſeth when he ſaith, Ah Lord God, behold, thou haſt made the heaven, and the earth by thy great power, and ſtretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee) to you who avow God to be the Father of Spirits, who formeth the Spirit of man within him, and that when man dieth, his Spirit returneth to God who gave it; to you who believe that our Souls are ſpiritual ſubſtances, like unto Angels ſubſiſting after death, and deſtin'd to future rewards; to you in fine, who may in your Holy records find ſo many experiments of this power exerted by God in his Prophets; ſuch as that of Elias his reſtoring the widow of Sarepta's ſon; of Eliſha raiſing the ſon of the Shunamite; that of the dead man reviving when his body touched the Prophet's bones; to you therefore this fact cannot be in it ſelf incredible; nor indeed can it, for the reaſon ſuggeſted to any man reaſonably ſeem impoſſible.

Imperfectæ verò in homine naturæ præcipua ſolatia ſunt, nè Deum quidem poſſe omnia; nam neque ſibi poteſt mortem conſciſcere ſi velit (quod homini dedit optimum in tantis vitæ malis) nec mortales æternitate donare, nec revocare defunctos. Plin. II, 7.

Jer. 32. 17.
Matt. 22. 29.
Acts 26. 8.
Jer. 32. 17.
Zech. 8. 6.
Job 42. 2.
Heb. 12. 9.
Num. 16. 22.
Num. 27. 16.
Zech. 12. 1.
Iſa. 57. 16.
Eccleſ. 12. 1.
1 Kings 17. 21.
2 Kings 4. 35.
13. 21.

2. Nor was it apparently in its deſign unworthy of God, or inconſiſtent with his holy Will: For the ends thereof (ſuch as were pretended by the atteſters of it) were as very great and important, ſo moſt good and reaſonable; it aimed at no ſlight or trifling matter, but ſuch as in appearance highly concerned the glory of God, and conduced to the welfare of mankind, it profeſſing it ſelf to be a credential of the greateſt Embaſſy that ever came down from heaven to men, importing the complete revelation of God's will, and procurement of Salvation to the world; and did therefore in that reſpect well become the wiſdom and goodneſs of God to uſe it. It pretended to confirm a doctrine containing moſt true and worthy repreſentations of God, the beſt that could be; declaring moſt gracious intentions in God of mercy and kindneſs toward men; no leſs proper for him than grateful and needful for us; preſcribing moſt excellent rules and patterns of life (wherein the moſt genuine piety and vertue, moſt exact juſtice and hearty charity, moſt ſtrict purity and ſobriety are preſcribed) yielding the moſt effectual helps to the practice of all goodneſs, and tendering the beſt encouragement thereto; and upon this account therefore alſo moſt worthy of God. So that indeed God could not be conceived to perform ſuch a miracle to better purpoſe, than for promoting the deſigns it pretendeth, being ſo very great, and ſo very good: it could not be improper for the Divine power to be thus exerted in favour of a Religion ſo apt to promote his glory, and to procure our benefit.

If it be ſaid that it is abſurd or improbable, that God ſhould chuſe to perform this miracle upon a perſon of this ſort; one ſo mean and obſcure in the ſtate of his life, ſo wretched and infamous for the manner of his death; that God rather ſhould have choſen for the interpreter of his mind, and miniſter of his purpoſes a Perſonage more illuſtrious in rank, and clear in repute; I anſwer, firſt, that our ſhallow fancy is a bad and incompetent Judge of what is reaſonable or abſurd, convenient 1 Sam. 16. 7. or unfit in ſuch caſes, touching the counſels of God; who ſeeth not as

Iſ. 55. 8. 40. 13. man ſeeth; whoſe thoughts are not as our thoughts, nor ways as our ways;
2 Cor. 1. 25. whoſe folly is wiſer than men (that is, whoſe counſels, however ſeeming ſtrange to our dim apprehenſions, do yet far excell the reſults of our beſt Luc. 16. 15. wiſedom) before whom, whatever is high among men is abominable;
1 Cor. 5. 13. with whom the wiſedom of this world is folly; whoſe judgments are
Rom. 11. 33. unſearchable, and his ways are paſt finding out; as the Holy Scriptures
(Pſ. 92. 5. 36. 7.) teach us; and as good reaſon conſidering the vaſt diſtance between God Job 11. 7. and us, muſt acknowledge: ſo that no ſuch appearance of incongruity can bottom a good exception againſt this, or any ſuch matter; otherwiſe well atteſted. I ſay farther, that God's choice herein, being weighed by a pure and well diſpoſed mind, will appear upon many accounts full of admirable reaſon and wiſedom; all the Divine Oeconomy concerning our Lord, being rightly apprehended will ſoon appear wiſedom
1 Cor. 2. 6. 7. 14. to the perfect, and will be juſtified by the children of wiſedom; as that Matt. 11. 19. wherein God's tranſcendent goodneſs, and perfect juſtice and glorious power are with greateſt advantage diſplayed; whereby the hearts of men are moſt ſweetly comforted under their ſenſe of ſin, and fear of miſery; their minds are moſt clearly inſtructed in the ways of duty and happineſs, their affections are moſt ſtrongly excited and encouraged to the practice of all goodneſs: to ſuch purpoſes (for cauſes which were it now ſeaſonable, we could produce) our Saviour's low condition, and hard circumſtances did admirably ſerve; and therefore upon that ſcore it could not be unlikely, that God ſhould raiſe him from the dead.

3. But neither (which is the moſt conſiderable point) is the teſtimony aſſerting this fact any-wiſe defective or inſufficient, but hath all the conditions imaginably requiſite to the moſt entire aſſurance of any ſuch matter. The defect in the teſtimony, if any be, muſt ariſe from weakneſs or from wilfulneſs in the witneſſes (their want of knowledge, or miſtake, their want of honeſty or their unfaithfulneſs) or from ſome circumſtances belonging to their perſons, or their teſtimony, able to invalidate their atteſtation; but none of theſe things can with reaſon be ſuppoſed; they were in all reſpects more than competently qualified to atteſt, and all conſiderable circumſtances do aſſiſt in confirming their atteſtation; as by weighing the conſiderations following may appear.

1 As for their number, it was not one or two perſons (although one or two ordinarily do ſuffice for deciſion of the greateſt caſes among men) but many who conſpired in aſſerting it. He was (ſaith S. Paul, one who was converſant with theſe witneſſes, who of a zealous adverſary 1 Cor. 15.5,6. and fierce perſecutor of this teſtimony, did become an earneſt avoucher thereof) ſeen of Cephas, then of the twelve, after he was ſeen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain unto this Acts 2. 14,32. preſent. And, This Jeſus (ſay the twelve Apoſtles) hath God raiſed up, Acts 5. 32. whereof all we are witneſſes: Twelve there were who principally were
1. 22. 10. 39. deſigned, and did take it for their eſpecial duty to atteſt this matter beſide many others, who in their order were able and ready to do it.

2. Theſe witneſſes were no ſtrangers to Jeſus, but perſons by long John 15. 27. converſation moſt familiarly acquainted with him; who had (as it is ſaid, Acts 1. 21,22. and as it was notorious) been with him from the beginning, who went out and in with him all the time (that is for three years ſpace) from his baptiſm to his aſcenſion.

3. They did aver themſelves to be αὐτόπτας τοῦ λόγου, or αὐτηκόους, eye or ear witneſſes of the matter, as fully informed about it as ſenſes could make them: We cannot but ſpeak what we have heard and ſeen. What we did ſee with our eyes, and what our hands did handle of the word of life, that we report unto you; So St. John (the beloved diſciple, who conſtantly attended on his dear Maſter) expreſſeth his teſtimony. And, We have not followed cunningly deviſed fables, when we made known unto you the power and preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were eye-witneſſes of his Majeſty; So St. Peter affirmeth concerning the manner of their teſtifying theſe matters. They did, I ſay, hear and ſee him, and that with all advantage poſſible or needful, not once or twice, not in paſſing or at diſtance, not in way of glimpſe or rumour; but often, for a good time, thoroughly; many days converſing and interchanging diſcourſes with him; who (as S. Peter in the name of the reſt ſaith) did eat and drink with him after that he roſe from the dead. And, To whom (as S. Luke their companion, from their mouth in our Text ſaith) alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion by many infallible proofs, being ſeen of them fourty days, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; and He was (ſaith S. Paul, another familiar of theirs) ſeen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jeruſalem, who are his witneſſes to the people. And two of theſe witneſſes (S. John and St. Matthew) are in writings extant relaters of paſſages occurring in their converſation with him, very many, very ſenſible as can be.

Luc. 1. 2.
Acts 4. 20.
1 John 1. 1.
2 Pet. 1. 16.
Acts 10. 41.
Acts 1. 3.
Acts 13. 31.

4. We may alſo conſider that the chief of theſe witneſſes the Apoſtles themſelves were at firſt (as St. Luke of them, and from them confeſſeth) ſo far from being eaſy or credulous in regard to this matter, that hearing it from others, who before had ſeen our Lord riſen, they took it for a trifle or a fiction; and gave no credence thereto: their words (ſaith the Text) ἐφάνησαν ὡσεὶ λῆρος, did ſeem to them (a toy or) an idle tale, and they believed them not. Yea ſome of them would hardly confide in their own eyes, nor would yield aſſent unto the fact appearing to them, until by letting them touch him, and ſhewing them the marks of his crucifixion remaining on his body, he demonſtrated himſelf to be the very ſame perſon who had lived with them and died before them: They were terrified and affrighted, and ſuppoſed they had ſeen a Spirit —— And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondred, &c. are words in the hiſtory.

Luc. 24. 11.
Matt. 28. 17.
Luc. 24. 37. 41.
John 20. 27.

5. Upon theſe grounds as they profeſſed, they did without any mincing, heſitancy, or reſervation in the moſt full, clear, downright and peremptory manner, with firm confidence and alacrity concurrently aver the fact: They ſpake the word of God with boldneſs —— and with great power gave the Apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus.

Acts 4. 31, 33.
14. 3.

Which things being weighed, it will appear impoſſible, that the atteſters of this fact (ſuppoſing them in their wits and ſenſes; and certainly they were ſo, as preſently we ſhall ſhew, and as the thing it ſelf plainly ſpeaks) could not be ignorant therein, or miſtaken about it. For if all the ſenſes of ſo many perſons in a matter ſo groſly ſenſible, ſo often and for ſuch a continuance of time, can be diſtruſted; if the Apoſtles could imagine they ſaw their friend and Maſter, whom they ſo long had waited upon, when they did not ſee him; that they heard him making long diſcourſes with them, when they did not hear him; that ἡμεῖς πιστεύομεν, διὸ καὶ λαλοῦμεν. 2 Cor. 4. 3.

that they did walk, eat and drink with him, did touch, and feel him when there was really no ſuch thing, what aſſurance can we have of any thing moſt ſenſible? what teſtimony can be of any validity or uſe; on that hand therefore the teſtimony is impregnable, the witneſſes cannot be accounted ignorant, or miſtaken in the caſe; for number, or for ability they cannot be excepted againſt.

It muſt be therefore onely their ſeriouſneſs, honeſty, or fidelity that remains queſtionable in them; they muſt be ſaid to have wilfully deceived and impoſed upon the world; ſelf-condemned hypocrites, impudent liars and egregious impoſtours they muſt have been, if their teſtimony was falſe; but that they were not ſuch perſons, that they could not, and would not doe ſo, there are inducements to believe as forcible as can be required, or well imagined in any ſuch caſe.

1. They were perſons, who did (with denunciation of moſt heavy judgments from God on the contrary practices) preach and preſs conſtantly and earneſtly all kinds of goodneſs, veracity and ſincerity, together with humility, modeſty, ingenuity and equity, as main points of that Religion, which they by this teſtimony confirmed. All their diſcourſes plainly breathed a moſt ſerious and ſprightly goodneſs and charity toward men, very inconſiſtent with a baſe plot to delude them; their doctrine utterly condemned all malice, all falſhood, craft and hy-Apoc. 22. 15. pocriſie, detruding into the bottomleſs pit all that love or make a lye:
21. 27. Conſider theſe ſayings and rules of theirs; As we have opportunity let
Gal. 6. 10. us doe good unto all men; Let your moderation (or equity) be known to all
Phil. 4. 5. Tit. 3. 2. men; Shew all meekneſs to all men; Laying aſide all malice, and all guile, and hypocriſies, and envies, and evil ſpeakings, as new-born babes deſire
1 Pet. 2. 1. the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby. Putting aſide all
Eph. 4. 25. lying, ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour. Lye not to one another,
15. Coloſ. 3. 9. ſeeing ye have put off the old man with his deeds. Brethren, be not chil-
1 Cor. 14. 20. dren in underſtanding; however in malice be ye children; but in under-
Tit. 2. 7, 8. ſtanding be perfect men: ſuch were their precepts diſcountenancing all malice, and all fraud; propounded in a manner as ſerious and grave and ſimple as can be imagined; all the tenour of their doctrine conſenting to them: wherein alſo they earneſtly declare againſt and prohibit all vanity of mind, and perverſeneſs of humour, all affectations of novelty and ſingularity, all peeviſh factiouſneſs and turbulency, all fond credulity, ſtupidity and precipitancy, all inſtability and giddineſs of mind, all ſuch qualities which diſpoſe men without moſt ſure and evident grounds either to introduce or to embrace any new conceits, practices or ſtories: ſuch was their diſcourſe, no-wiſe ſounding like the language of impoſtours, deceit could hardly ſo diſguiſe or ſo thwart and ſupplant it ſelf.

2. Their practice was anſwerable to their doctrine, exemplary in all ſorts of vertue, goodneſs and ſincerity; ſuch indeed whereby they did in effect conciliate much reſpect, and authority to their words. Ye are witneſſes (they could, appealing to the obſervers of their demeanour,
1 Theſſ. 2. 10. and to the all-knowing God, ſay) and God alſo, how holily and juſtly, and unblameably we behaved our ſelves among you that believe. And, We have renounced the hidden things of diſhoneſty, not walking in craftineſs, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifeſtation of the truth com-
2 Cor. 4. 2, 6. mending our ſelves to every man's conſcience in the ſight of God. Such a
2 Cor. 2. 17. Phil. 3. 17. lively ſenſe of goodneſs ſhining forth in a long courſe of practice; ſo to bridle appetites, ſo to moderate paſſions, ſo to eſchew all the allurements of pleaſure, profit and honour, to bear adverſities ſo calmly and ſweetly, to expreſs ſo much tender kindneſs and meekneſs toward all men, to be continually employed in heavenly diſcourſes and pious works, exhorting men by word, leading them by example to all ſorts of goodneſs indiſputably ſuch; to live thus, long and conſtantly, doth no-wiſe ſute unto perſons utterly debauched in mind, and of a profligate conſcience; who had deviſed, and did then earneſtly drive on the propagation of a vile cheat: The life, I ſay, they lead was not the life of wicked impoſtours, but worthy of the divineſt men; fit to countenance and carry on the beſt deſign, ſuch as they pretended theirs to be.

3. Farther, they were perſons of good ſenſe; yea very wiſe and prudent; not in way of worldly or fleſhly wiſdom, in skill to contrive or compaſs projects of gain, honour, or pleaſure to themſelves, to the commendation of them and of their teſtimony, they diſclaimed being wiſe or skilful that way; having no practice therein nor caring for it (for they looked not much on things temporal and tranſitory; they did not mind earthly things; they had not their converſation, or intereſt here, but above, as citizens of another world, deeming themſelves as but ſojourners and pilgrims here) but endued they were with a wiſdom as in it ſelf far more excellent, ſo more ſuitable to the perofns they ſuſtained; with great perſpicacy, and ſound judgment in the matters they diſcourſed about, and in the affairs they purſued: ſuch their writings, according to acknowledgment of innumerable moſt wiſe and learned perſons, fraught with admirable wiſdom, and heavenly Philoſophy (rude indeed and ſimple in expreſſion, but moſt exact and profound in ſenſe) do manifeſt them to have been; ſuch the tenour of their doctrine evidenced them, ſhining with that luſtre and beauty, compacted with that ſtrength and harmony, that whoever will not confeſs it to have proceed from God, muſt, upon conſideration, however allow, that it could not have been deviſed by Idiots or mean perſons, but did come from perſons of much ſubtilty and great reach: they muſt be no fools who could frame a Religion merely by its own plauſibility, without any external help, able preſently to ſupplant all the Religions in the world; and to ſtand durably firm upon the foundations laid by them. Such alſo the notable conduct of their great affair, (notwithſtanding ſo mighty diſadvantages and difficulties) together with the prodigious efficacy their endeavours had upon men, do evince them to have been: they ſurely could not be weak men, who in a plain and peaceable way confounded all the wit and policy, all the learning and eloquence, all the force and violence that withſtood them: Experience did atteſt to the truth of what St. Paul ſaith; The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations and every thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt.

1 Cor. 1. 20. 2. 5, 6.
2 Cor. 1. 12. 11. 6.
2 Cor. 4. 18.
Col. 3. 2.
Phil. 3. 20.
1 Pet. 1. 11.
2 Cor. 11. 6.
1 Cor. 2. 1. 13.
Πῶς αὐτὸ κατώρθωσαν μαινόμενοι ϗ ἐξεστηκότες, &c. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 5. elegantiſſimé.
Act. 6. 10.
1 Cor. 1. 27.
2 Cor. 10. 4.

4. So were they qualified in their minds; it muſt be farther alſo conſidered as to their purpoſes in this caſe, that in falſly venting and urging this teſtimony, they could not have any deſign gainful or beneficial to themſelves; but muſt therein to no end be miſchievous to themſelves and others; abuſing others indeed, but far more harming themſelves; they muſt be ſuppoſed voluntarily to have embraced all ſorts of inconvenience, and deſignedly to have rendred themſelves miſerable; courting adverſity, chuſing naked and barren evil for its own ſake: For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanneſs, nor in guile: For neither at any time uſed we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetouſneſs, God is witneſs: neither of men ſought we glory. Profit, honour,

Vid. Chryſ. ib.
1 Theſſ. 2. 3, 5.

or pleaſure (thoſe baits which entice men to doe evil, and ſet them upon wicked attempts) or any worldly advantage thence to accrue to themſelves they could have no deſign upon; for all thoſe things wittingly and willingly they did abandon; for the ſake of this very teſtimony incurring extremities of loſs, of diſgrace, and of pain: They did plainly foreſee what entertainment their teſtimony would find, and how in proſecution thereof they ſhould be forced to indure all kinds of indignity, Joh. 16. 33. of damage, and of hardſhip from men; That in this world they
15. 20. 16. 2. ſhould have tribulation; that men ſhould deliver them up to be afflicted, and Matt. 24. 9. Luc. 21. 12. ſhould kill them; and that they ſhould be hated of all nations for his name ſake; their Maſter expreſly had forewarned them, That all who would 2 Tim. 3. 12. live godlily in Chriſt Jeſus (that is, all profeſſours of faith in him, Act. 14. 22. eſpecially the Teachers thereof) muſt ſuffer perſecution; and muſt through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God; That bonds and impriſonments Act. 20. 23. did abide them in every place; That God had ſet forth the Apoſtles
1 Cor. 4. 9. as appointed unto death, and expoſed them as ſpectacles of ſcorn and obloquy to the world; that they were called to ſuffering, and appointed 1 Pet. 2. 21. 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. to this very thing, as to their office, and their portion; theſe were the rules and meaſures they went by; theſe the expectations they had from 1 Cor. 4. 11. the world: according unto which it did in effect happen to them: Even to this preſent hour, we both hunger, and thirſt, and are naked, and have no certain dwelling place; and labour working with our hands; being reviled 2 Cor. 4. 8. we bleſs, being perſecuted we ſuffer it; being defamed we intreat, we are made as the filth of the world, and as the off-ſcouring of all things unto this day: So doth S. Paul deſcribe the Apoſtles condition.

5. All theſe afflictions, as they knowingly did object themſelves to for the ſake of this teſtimony, ſo they did endure them with contentedneſs Act. 5. 41. and joy; when they had been beaten, they departed rejoycing, that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for the name of Jeſus; rejoycing
1 Pet. 4. 13. Phil. 1. 29. that they were made partakers of Chriſt's ſufferings; deeming it a privilege
1 Pet. 4. 14. that was given them not only to believe in him, but to ſuffer for his
Heb. 10. 34. name; thinking themſelves happy in being reproached for the name of Phil. 3. 9. Chriſt, taking joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, counting all things but loſs
(1 Pet. 1. 6. Rom. 5. 3. for the excellency of the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt their Lord, for whom they Jam. 1. 2.) ſuffered the loſs of all things.

6. Whence it is evident enough, that the ſatisfaction of their conſcience, and expectation of future reward from God for the diſcharge of their duty herein, was all the argument which did induce them to undertake this atteſtation, all the reaſon that could ſupport them in it; neither of which could be conſiſtent with the reſolved maintenance of ſuch a falſhood. They could not indeed but grievouſly be tormented with remorſe in their minds, they could not but dread ſevere vengeance from heaven, had they been conſcious to themſelves of ſo villanous a deſign of mocking God (whoſe name and expreſs command they pretended, Act. 4. 19. 5. 29. whoſe teſtimony and judgment they appealed to in this affair)
2 Cor. 2. 17. and together of abuſing the world with ſuch an impoſture. Such muſt
4. 2. have been their inward ſenſe, and ſuch their expectations, had they proceeded 2 Cor. 9. 16. with guilty conſcience in this buſineſs; but they do ſeriouſly profeſs otherwiſe, and the condition of things might aſſure us they were 1 Tim. 4. 10. in good earneſt: εἰς τοῦτο, For this end (ſaith S. Paul) we both labour and ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, who is the Saviour of all 2 Cor. 1. 12. men, ſpecially of thoſe that believe. And our rejoycing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God we have had our converſation in the world: And,

Knowing the fear of the Lord (that is, being ſenſible of our duty toward 1 Cor. 5. 11.
God, and fearful of his judgment, if we tranſgreſs it) we perſuade men; but are made manifeſt unto God; ſo they declare what principle it was that moved them to this practice, and the hope encouraging them in it they often expreſs: If (ſaid they) we ſuffer with Chriſt we ſhall be Rom. 8. 17.
glorified together with him. And, We always bear about in the body, the 2 Cor. 4. 10.
dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the life alſo of Jeſus may be made manifeſt in our body. And, It is a faithful ſaying, if we are dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him; if we ſuffer with him, we ſhall alſo reign with him; if we deny him, he alſo will deny us. And, I have fought a good 2 Tim. 2. 11.
fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith; henceforth there (1 Pet. 1. 7. 4. 13.)
is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge 2 Tim. 4. 8.
ſhall give me at that day. So they profeſs concerning the grounds and reaſons of their maintaining this teſtimony (and the points connected therewith) with ſo great preſent inconvenience to themſelves; and the ſtate of things rendreth their profeſſion moſt credible; for they appear not ſo blind as not to ſee thoſe inconveniences, nor ſo fond as to like them for themſelves, or upon no conſiderable account: they confeſs, that they ſhould be very ſtupid and ſenſeleſs people, if they had incurr'd and underwent all this to no purpoſe, or without hope of good recompence for it after this life; If Chriſt be not riſen (ſaith S. Paul) then is our preaching vain, and your faith is alſo vain; yea and we are 1 Cor. 15. 14, found falſe witneſſes of God, that he raiſed up Chriſt; —— then we have only 15, 19, 30, 31.
hope in this life; and, If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſerable.

7. And how indeed is it conceivable, that ſuch perſons ſhould be ſo bewitched with ſo paſſionate an affection, or ſo mighty a reſpect toward a poor dead man (one, who was born ſo obſcurely, who lived ſo poorly, who died ſo miſerably and infamouſly, as a malefactour; who indeed ſo died to their knowledge moſt deſervedly, ſuppoſing they did know their teſtimony to be falſe; one who never was capable to oblige them or to recompence them for their actings or ſufferings in any valuable meaſure) that merely for his ſake, or rather not for his ſake, but only for a ſmoak of vain opinion about him (which could no-wiſe profit either him or them) they ſhould with an inflexible obſtinacy defie all the world; expoſe themſelves to all the perſecutions of the world, and to all the damnations of hell. S. Paul ſurely had another opinion of Jeſus, when he ſaid, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, Rom. 8. 35, &c. or ſword? Nay, in all theſe things we are more than conquerours through him that loved us; for I am perſwaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any creature ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord; could they, think we, ſpeak thus who knew Jeſus to be a wicked deceiver, worthily hated of God and men? No aſſuredly, their ſpeech and behaviour do palpably ſhew, that therefore they did bear ſo vehement an affection, and ſo high a reſpect toward Jeſus, becauſe as with their mouths they openly Rom. 10. 9.
profeſſed, ſo they were in their hearts thoroughly perſwaded that he was the Son of God moſt dear unto him; who died for their ſake, who was to their knowledge raiſed again; who alſo, according to his promiſes would recompence their faithful adherence to him with eternal joy and bliſs.

8. Again, we may conſider theſe witneſſes to have of themſelves been perſons very unlikely to deviſe ſuch a plot, very unfit to undertake it, very unable to manage and carry it through: Perſons they were of no reputation for birth, for wealth, for any worldly intereſt; perſons of no education, no improvement, no endowments of mind (natural or artificial) any-wiſe conſiderable: they were as to condition and manner of life fiſhermen, publicans, and mechanicks; as to abilities of mind, they were (as they report themſelves) ἀγράμματοι καὶ ἰδιῶται, illiterate and ſimple; they were alſo men of no great natural ſpirit or courage, but rather irreſolute and timorous; as their deſerting their Maſter, their renouncing him, their flying and ſculking, reported by themſelves, declare: the baſe or ignoble, the deſpicable or abject, the weak, the fooliſh things of the world, they did ſtyle themſelves; and in that no adverſary will, I ſuppoſe, contradict them. And is it poſſible, that a few (in this reſpect, I mean very few) perſons thus condition'd and qualified, ſhould have the wit to contrive, or the courage to maintain a forgery of ſuch importance? what hope they could frame to themſelves of any ſucceſs therein, upon ſo extreme diſadvantages, is to any man very obvious. No kind of friends in all the world could they imagine ready to back them, or yield them any encouragement; but heaven, hell, and earth they had reaſon to expect all to be combined in oppoſition to them and their deſign: They had all reaſon to fear, that God himſelf would croſs them and blaſt their wicked endeavours to propagate the belief of ſuch a lye, which moſt profanely they dared to father on him, and to vent in his name. They could not hope the father of lyes himſelf, or any powers of darkneſs would be favourable or helpful to them; whoſe intereſt they ſo manifeſtly impugned; that the ſucceſs of their doctrine, whether true or falſe, could not but much prejudice their Kingdom; as in effect we ſee that it did in a manner quite ſubvert it: they were ſure among men to encounter the moſt potent, and moſt earneſt adverſaries that could be; all the Grandees of the world, both Political and Religious, deeply concerned in honour and intereſt to labour with all their power the detection of their cheat, and overthrow of their deſign: Whence it muſt be a boldneſs more than humane, more than gigantick that could bear up againſt all theſe adverſaries; if their teſtimony was in their conſcience falſe; againſt all thoſe oppoſitions and diſadvantages what could thoſe poor men have to confide in, beſide the natural prevalence of truth, and divine aſſiſtance thereto; being in their hearts aſſured of the former, and therefore greatly hoping for the latter?

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61. p. 61.

Ὄυτε γὰρ λόγων ἰσχυῒ, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 64 τινι θαῤῥήσαντες; ἆρα τῷ καλάμῳ καὶ τῷ ἀγκίστρῳ, ἢ τῇ σμίλῃ καὶ τῷ τρυπάνῳ, &c. ibid.

Act. 4. 13.
Matt. 26. 56.
Joh. 20. 19.
1 Cor. 1. 27. 28.
ὀστράκινα σκεύη.
2 Cor. 4. 7.

Καὶ οὐκ ἂν οὕτως εὐτελέσι καὶ ταπεινοῖς πλάσαι τὶ τοιοῦτον ἐπῆλθέ ποτε, πλὴν εἰ μαίνεσθαί τις αὐτοὺς φαίη καὶ παραπαίειν, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 64. in Babylam.

And how indeed could ſuch a cheat, contrived and conducted by ſo, to humane eſteem, weak and ſilly a knot of people, ſo eaſily proſper, and obtain ſo wonderful a progreſs, ſo as preſently to induce very many perſons, μυριάδες πεπιστευκότων (Myriads of Believers, as it is Act. 21. 20.) many of them conſiderable (even πολὺν ὄχλον ἱερέων, A great crowd or company of Prieſts, as 'tis ſaid in the Acts) to embrace it, together with all the croſſes and damages attending it? ſo as to eſcape all inquiſition about it, and overbear all perſecution againſt it, being neither convincible by proof, nor controllable by force; but in deſpight of all aſſaults holding its ground, and running forward with huge ſucceſs: according to that in the Acts: So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

Act. 6. 7.

2 Theſſ. 3. 1.
Act. 19. 20. 6. 7. 12. 20.
κατὰ κράτος ηὔξανε, grew by main force

10. The matter of their teſtimony (if we conſider that as we ſhould do) and its drift were very implauſible, ſuch as no impoſtours would be likely to forge, and no hearers, without great evidence of truth, would be ready to admit. It was no fine ſtory apt to pleaſe the luſts, to flatter the humours, or to gratify the fancies of men; but rather very diſtaſtful to fleſh and blood (whoſe inclinations it mainly thwarted) likely to offend the ears of all men, who would hear it; apt to raiſe fierce anger and indignation in Jews, great contempt and ſcorn in Gentiles toward it. The Jews, to whom it was firſt addreſſed, it did plainly charge with heinous iniquity and impiety in cruelly murthering a Perſon moſt innocent, moſt excellent in vertue and dignity, moſt dear to God; it withal defeated their longings for a gaudy Meſſias, who ſhould reſtore and rear them into a lofty ſtate of temporal proſperity, ſubſtituting in the room a Spiritual King, with overtures of felicity inviſible and future, little ſuiting their groſs conceit and carnal guſt of things; it alſo imported the abrogation of thoſe ritual Laws, and revolution of thoſe ſpecial privileges wherein they did ſo pleaſe and pride themſelves; it opened the encloſures of God's favour and grace, making them common to all people: Vid. Act. 22. 21, 22. it croſſed their ſecular intereſts of emolument and honour annexed to the preſent outward frame of Religion, which it diſſolved; it menaced ſevere vengeance and horrible deſolation to their Nation and City: and was ſuch a report likely to be entertained by them otherwiſe than with diſpleaſure, and deteſtation? Neither unto the Gentiles was it likely to be acceptable; for it did alſo ſubvert all the Religion eſtabliſhed among them by law and cuſtom, deſtroying conſequently all the intereſts of thoſe who were concerned in upholding thereof; ſuch as thoſe who made that famous uproar, crying out, Great is Diana of the Epheſians: it ſeemed to thwart the Act. 19. 28, 34. common maxims of policy, and dictates of worldly prudence; it could not but appear to men prepoſſeſſed with admiration of ſecular wealth, power and glory, a ſtory moſt ridiculouſly extravagant, that ſo pitiful and wretched a perſon, as Jeſus ſeemed in the eye of the world to have been, ſhould in this miraculous way be declared the Son of God, and Lord of all things, Author of life and Salvation to all men; Sovereign object of all worſhip and obedience: ſuch a ſtory therefore it was not likely that any men in their ſenſes ſhould conſpire to forge, ſhould offer to obtrude on the world, ſo uncapable of it, ſo averſe from embracing it; and being ſuch it were ſtrange that by a general repulſe it ſhould not preſently be ſtifled and quell'd.

Τί δὲ περὶ αὐτοῦ λέγοντες ἐδόκουν ἂν εἶναι πιθανοί; &c. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or 5.

Si rem credibilem crediderunt, videant quam ſint ſtolidi qui non credunt. Si autem res incredibilis credita eſt, etiam hoc utique incredibile eſt, ſic creditum eſſe quod incredibile eſt, &c. Aug. de Civ. D. 22. 5.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 61.

Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων ἐκβεβηκότων —— ὅμως εἰσί τινες μετὰ τοσαῦτα τεκμήρια, καὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης, ὡς εἰπεῖν, ἁπάσης τὴν μαρτυρίαν οἱ διαπιστοῦσι τοῖς γεγενημένοις· καὶ πολλοὶ οὕτως ἀβασανίστως καὶ ἀνεξετάστως, τίς ἂν παρὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν μήτε πράγματα θεασάμενος, μήτε μαρτυρίας ἀξιοπίστους τούτων ἔχων ταύτην ἂν τὴν πίστιν ἐδέξατο ψυχή; Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 64.

Τίς οὕτως ἐμεμήνει τῶν ταῦτα ἀκουόντων ὡς ψιλοῖς ῥήμασι πιστεῦσαι περὶ πραγμάτων τοιούτων; Ibid.

11. One would indeed think that this report had it been falſe, might eaſily have been diſproved, and quaſh'd: they who were mightily Act. 5. 28. concerned, and as eagerly diſpoſed to confute it, wanted no means of doing it: they were not ſurprized in the matter; but were forewarned of it, and did forebode it coming; they were not drowſy, or neglectfull, but very apprehenſive, carefull and cautious in preventing it that it ſhould not be produced, or being ſo, that it might be defeated; for to this purpoſe they cauſed the Sepulchre of our Lord to be ſealed Matt. 27. 64. up, and guarded by Souldiers; that being Maſters of his body, they might by exhibiting it diſprove any report that ſhould be made about his reſurrection: they had full opportunity of examining the matter to the bottom; it being freſh and preſently divulged after its being reported done; they having alſo all the power and authority on their ſide, in furtherance of the diſcuſſion of the buſineſs; we may accordingly ſuppoſe them very zealous, diligent and active in thoroughly ſifting it, and ſtriving to detect the falſhood therein: they did ſo certainly, and thereto they added ſtrict prohibitions, fierce menaces, and bloudy perſecutions toward the ſuppreſſion thereof; yet could they not by all their induſtry confute it, nor by all their fury quell it: Why? becauſe it was not confutable; becauſe truth proſecuted with vigorous integrity, and conſtancy, or rather ſupported by Divine protection and bleſſing, is invincible. Put caſe there were now the like fact by ſo many people, reported done within theſe two months, wherein the Church and State were in like manner exceedingly concerned, and ſhould therefore employ all their power and care to diſcover the truth, one would think it impoſſible, that were it an impoſture it ſhould eſcape detection, and being ſoon, with the general ſatisfaction of men quite blown away and exploded; this is the fate of all falſhood, ſtanding merely upon its own legs, and not propped by worldly power; but truth, as in this preſent caſe, is able to ſubſiſt by its own ſtrength, eſpecially heaven being concerned to aid it.

Act. 4. 17. 18. 5. 28.

'Ουδεμιᾶς γὰρ δεῖται βοηθείας ἡ τῆς ἀληθείας ἰσχὺς, ἀλλὰ κἂν μυρίους ἔχῃ τοὺς σβεννυῶτας αὐτὴν, οὐ μόνον οὐκ ἀφανίζεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' αὐτῶν τῶν ἐπηρεάζειν ἐπιχειρούντων φαιδροτέρα καὶ ὑψηλοτέρα ἄνεισι, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 64.

12. As alſo this teſtimony had no power to ſuſtain it, ſo it uſed no ſlight to conveigh it ſelf into the perſwaſions of men: it did not creep in dark corners, it did not grow by clandeſtine whiſpers; it craved no blind faith of men: but with a barefaced confidence it openly proclaimed it ſelf, appealing to the common ſenſe of men, and provoking the world to examine it; daring all adverſaries here to confront it, defying all the powers beneath to withſtand it; claiming onely the patronage of heaven to maintain it.

1 Theſ. 5. 21.

13. Farthermore, the thing it ſelf had it been counterfeit, was in all probability apt to fall of it ſelf; the witneſſes claſhing together, or relenting for their crime. That advice of Gamaliel had much reaſon in it; Refrain (ſaid he) from thoſe men, and let them alone, for if this counſel, or this work be of men, it will come to nought; καταλυθήσεται, it will of it ſelf be diſſolved or deſtroyed: For how indeed could it be, that among ſo many confederates in a juggle, not one either checked by conſcience, or daunted by hazards, or wearied and worn out by ſufferings; ſhould flinch and fall off, ſo as to detect the plot, diſavow his fault, and retire from perſecution, but that each one ſhould perſiſt ſtedfaſt in ſo high a ſtrain of vile diſſimulation? If one had fallen off, he had certainly ſpoiled all the plot, opened all mens eyes, and prevented the faith of any one perſon to the ſtory, and what cement could firmly combine ſuch a pack of men to God, and to all the world, that they ſhould continue invincibly ſtiff in their faith to one another, and conſtantly true to ſo vain a deſign, good to no man, worſt to themſelves? that, I ſay, twelve ſuch perſons, every one for along time, during their whole life, ſhould perſevere immovable in ſo extravagant a reſolution of lying, ſo as by no regrets, or diſſatisfactions from within, no threats, no perils, no troubles, or pains from without to be ever driven out of it, but ſhould die with it in their mouths, yea, rejoyce and glory in dying for it; ſhould dying carry it into the preſence of God, and dare with it to appear at his judgment; is exceedingly ſtrange and incredible: It muſt therefore ſurely be truth alone that could ſet them on this deſign, and could uphold them ſteady in it; ſo unanimous a conſent, ſo clear a confidence, ſo firm a reſolution; ſo inſuperable a conſtancy and patience nothing but a ſenſe of truth could inſpire men with, nothing but a perfectly good conſcience could ſuſtain. Poſſible it is, that in matters of ſpeculation and ſubtilty men upon ſlender grounds may be peremptorily opinionative, and deſperately pertinacious: (this experience ſheweth) but in a matter of this nature (a matter of plain fact, and groſs ſenſe) none can well be imagined (none eſpecially ſo qualified, in ſuch circumſtances, to ſuch purpoſes can be imagined) to be ſo wretchedly ſtupid, or deſperately obſtinate.

Acts 5. 8.

14. He then who doubts of the ſincerity of theſe Witneſſes, or rejects their teſtimony as incredible, muſt in ſtead of it admit of divers ſtranger incredibilities; refuſing his faith to one fact, devious from the natural courſe of things, but very feaſible to God; he muſt thence allow it to many others, repugnant to the nature of man, and to the courſe of humane things; performed without God, yea againſt him. It is credible that perſons otherwiſe through all their lives ſtrictly blameleſs, and rigidly vertuous (even in the more heavenly parts of goodneſs, in humanity, meekneſs, peaceableneſs, humility and patience) ſhould againſt cleareſt dictates of conſcience, peremptorily and perſeveringly commit ſo palpable villainy, as to broach and propagate ſuch an impoſture; that they, all whoſe demeanours and diſcourſes evidently did tend to the advancement of God's glory, and promoting goodneſs, ſhould ſo in their hearts utterly defy God, and deteſt goodneſs; or that perſons in a ſtrain incomparably ſolemn and ſerious ſhould ſo plainly teach, ſo ſtrongly preſs, ſo otherwiſe uniformly practiſe higheſt good will and beneficence toward all men, while they were with all their mind and might ſtriving to gull and abuſe men? Is it conceivable, that men otherwiſe in all their actions ſo wiſe, and well adviſed (able to manage and to perform ſo great matters) ſhould ſo zealouſly drive on a moſt vain and ſenſeleſs project, with more unwearied induſtry labouring to maintain, and diſperſe a lye, than any men beſide did ever ſtrive in behalf of truth? Is it not marvellous that men in all reſpects ſo impotent, without any arms or aids, ſhould adventure on ſo high an enterpriſe, ſhould with ſo happy ſucceſs atchieve it; that naked weakneſs ſhould boldly aſſault, and thoroughly over-power the greateſt might; pure ſimplicity ſhould conteſt with and baffle ſharpeſt wit, ſubtle policy, and deepeſt learning; that rude ſpeech (void of ſtrength or ornament) ſhould effectually perſwade an uncouth and unpleaſant tale, againſt all the fineſt, and ſtrongeſt Rhetorick in the world? Is it not ſtrange that a crew of vile and baſe perſons ſhould ſo inſeparably be linked together with no other hands, than deceit and diſhoneſty; no truth, no vertue, no common intereſt helping to combine, or contain them together? Is it to be believed that men of ſenſe ſhould gratis, for no conſiderable end or advantage, voluntarily embrace and patiently endure all that is diſtaſtful to humane nature, freely expoſing themſelves they knew not why, only for the ſake of a ſtory, to the fury of earth and flames of hell; eagerly ſacrificing their fortunes, credits, lives, and ſouls themſelves to the Ghoſt of a forlorn wretch, and infamous caitif? Is it not in fine prodigious, that ſo implauſible a falſhood upon all greateſt diſadvantages ſhould encounter, vanquiſh and triumph over truth; theſe are incredibilities indeed, able to choak any man's faith; yet he that rejects this teſtimony muſt ſwallow and digeſt them, together with others like them of as hard concoction.

Aug. de Civ. D. 22. 5.

15. To theſe things we may add, that God himſelf did ſignally countenance, and ratify this teſtimony; not only by conferring on the avowers thereof extraordinary graces (invincible courage, irreſiſtible wiſdom, indefatigable induſtry, inflexible conſtancy and patience; admirable ſelf-denial, meekneſs, charity, temperance, and all virtues in an eminent degree) not only farther by a wonderful ſucceſs and bleſſing beſtowed upon their endeavours; but by induing them with ſupernatural gifts, and enabling them to perform miraculous works openly and
Act. 2. 43. 5. 12. frequently; So that by the hands of the Apoſtles many wonders, and ſigns were done among the people —— The Lord giving teſtimony unto the word of
Act. 14. 3. 19. 11. his grace, and granting ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands; ſo that
Act. 4. 33. with great power gave the Apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus, and great grace was upon them all; (that is, there was a great appearance of the divine favour toward them, and of the divine operation in and by them.) Yielding which kind of atteſtation was the ancient and uſual method of God in authorizing his meſſengers, and approving the declaration of his mind by them; (the Seal as it were put to the Letters credential from heaven) nor could God afford more convincing ſigns than theſe of his approbation to any perſon or deſign: that God did thus συνεπιμαρτυρεῖν atteſt (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews Heb. 2. 4. ſpeaketh) together with theſe Witneſſes, if the Apoſtolical hiſtory (bearing in it all the characters of a ſimple, faithful and upright narration) did not relate; yet the effect of this teſtimony, ſo ſpeedily and eaſily prevailing every where, would render it highly probable, ſince in likelyhood; no humane endeavour, without divine aſſiſtence, could accompliſh a buſineſs ſo great and difficult: if they did no miracles, τοῦτο μέγιστον σημεῖον, this (as S. Chryſoſtome ſays) was the greateſt miracle that could be, that ſuch a teſtimony ſhould without any miracle prevail.

Ἀμήχανον γὰρ ἀνθρωπίνην ἰσχὺν δυνηθῆναι τοσαῦτα ποτὲ. Chryſ. in Act. 1. 3. Vid. in 1 Cor. Or. 5.

Si per Apoſtolos —— iſta miracula facta eſſe non credunt, hoc nobis unum grande miraculum eſt, quod ea terrarum orbis ſine ullis miraculis credidit. Aug. de Civ. D. 22. 5.

16. Now for concluſion all theſe things being conſidered, it is ſufficiently apparent, that this teſtimony is above all exception; that no matter of fact ever had, or well could have in any conſiderable reſpect, a more valid and certain proof: the greateſt affairs in the world (concerning the rights and reputations, the eſtates and the lives of men) are decided by teſtimonies in all regards leſs weighty; ſo that to refuſe it, is in effect to decline all proof by teſtimony, to renounce all certainty in humane affairs, to remove the grounds of proceeding ſecurely in any buſineſs, or adminiſtration of juſtice; to impeach all hiſtory of fabulouſneſs, to charge all mankind with inſufficiency, or extreme infidelity (for if theſe perſons were not able, or not honeſt enough, what men can ever be ſuppoſed ſuch; who can by greater arguments aſſure their ability, or their integrity in reporting any thing?) to thruſt God himſelf away from bearing credible atteſtation in any caſe (for in what caſe did he ever or can he be conceived to yield an atteſtation more full or plain, than he did in this? what farther can he perform needful to convince men endued with any competency of reaſon and ingenuity or to diſtinguiſh them from men of contrary diſpoſition, unreaſonably and unworthily incredulous?) in fine, to diſtruſt this teſtimony is therefore in effect to embrace the vanity of the moſt wanton or wicked Sceptick.

The Uſe of all is in ſhort this, that he ſhould heartily thank God for ſo clear and ſtrong an aſſurance of the truth of our Faith; that we therefore firmly embrace it, and ſteadily perſevere therein; that we obey it, and bear fruits worthy thereof in our practice; that ſo doing we may obtain the bliſsful rewards which upon thoſe terms it propoundeth and promiſeth; that we may all ſo doe, God of his mercy grant, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe. Heb. 10. 23. 4. 14.

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great Shepherd of the ſheep, through the blood of the everlaſting covenant, make us perfect in every good work to doe his will, working in us that which is well pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Heb. 13. 20, 21.

The third day he roſe again, &c.

SERMON XXX.

LUKE XXIV. 46.

And he ſaid unto them, Thus it is written; and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day.

THE words of men leaving this world (as proceeding from a depth of ſerious concernedneſs, and influenced by a ſpecial providence) are uſually attended with great regard, and a kind of veneration, theſe are ſuch, even the words of our departing Lord; the which therefore deſerve and demand our beſt conſideration.

They reſpect two points of grand importance, the paſſion and the reſurrection of our Lord; of which I ſhall only now conſider the latter, as being moſt agreeable to the preſent ſeaſon: and whereas there be divers particulars obſervable in them, I ſhall confine my diſcourſe to one, being the main point; couched in thoſe words, thus it behoved; which import the needfulneſs, and expediency of our Lord's reſurrection: Of which I ſhall endeavour firſt to declare the truth, then to ſhew the uſefulneſs, by a practical application thereof.

The reſurrection of our Lord may appear to have been needful and expedient, upon ſeveral good accounts.

1. It was needful to illuſtrate the veracity, wiſdom and providence of God, by making good what he had ſignified in the ancient Scriptures concerning it; either in myſtical adumbrations, or by expreſs predictions; underſtood according to thoſe infallible expoſitions, which the Apoſtles did receive from the inſtruction of our Lord, or from illumination of that Spirit which dictated the Scriptures: the particular inſtances, as being obvious, and requiring large diſcourſe, I now forbear to mention.

2. It was needful in congruity to other events foretold, and in order to the accompliſhment of thoſe deſigns which our Lord was to manage: the whole œconomy and harmony of the Evangelical diſpenſation, as it is repreſented by the Prophets, doth require it: It was, according to their predictions, deſigned, that Chriſt ſhould erect a ſpiritual Kingdom, and adminiſter it for ever, with perfect equity, in great peace and proſperity; that he ſhould in our behalf atchieve glorious exploits, ſubduing all the adverſaries of our ſalvation(ſin, death and hell ;) that he ſhould eſtabliſh a new Covenant, upon better promiſes, of another eternal moſt happy life, aſſuring to the embracers thereof an entire reconciliation and acceptance with God ; that he ſhould convert the world to faith in God, and obſervance of his will: In execution of theſe purpoſes, it was declared that he ſhould undergo ſuffering, and be put to death in a moſt diſgracefull and painfull manner; It conſequently muſt be ſuppoſed, that from ſuch a death he ſhould conſpicuouſly and wonderfully be reſtored to life; how otherwiſe could it appear, that he did reign in glory, that he had obtained thoſe great victories, that he had vanquiſhed death, that the former curſes were voided, God appeaſed, and mankind reſtored to favour by him? Had the grave ſwallowed him up, had God left his ſoul in hell, had he reſted under the dominion of common mortality, had after his diſmal paſſions no evidence of ſpecial favour toward him ſhone forth; What ground had there been to believe thoſe great things? Who would have been perſuaded of them? The Scripture therefore, which foretelleth the ſufferings of our Lord, and the glories following them; which ſaith, that having drunk of the brook in the way he ſhould lift up his head; that when he had made his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhould prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in his hand; that becauſe he had poured out his ſoul unto death, God would divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhould divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong; that unto him whom man deſpiſed, to him whom the nation abhorred, Kings ſhould look and ariſe, Princes ſhould worſhip; the Scripture, I ſay, foretelling theſe events, doth conſequentially imply the needfulneſs of his reſurrection.

1 Pet. 1. 11. Luc. 24. 26. Pſal. 110. 7. Iſa. 53. 10, 12.

Iſa. 49. 7.

3. It was requiſite in it ſelf; or in reſpect to the many great ends for which it ſerveth, and the excellent fruits, which it is apt to produce: as will appear by reflecting on thoſe, which are ſuggeſted in the New Teſtament.

I paſs by its particular uſefulneſs in regard to our Lord's Apoſtles and Diſciples; its ſerving to reinforce their faith, and rear their hopes, being ſtaggered by his paſſion; to comfort them in thoſe ſorrowful apprehenſions, and deſpondencies of heart, which aroſe from the frightfull events befalling him; to enlighten their minds by more perfect inſtruction, removing their ignorance, and reforming their miſtakes concerning him, and the things of his kingdom; to furniſh them with inſtructions and orders requiſite for managing the employments committed to them; to arm them by conſolatory diſcourſes and gracious promiſes of ſupport againſt the difficulties, hazards and troubles they were to encounter, in the profeſſion and propagation of his doctrine; in fine, by all his admirable deportment with them, and his miraculous departure from them to confirm them in their faith, and encourage them in their duty: theſe particular uſes, I ſay, we ſhall paſs over, inſiſting only upon thoſe more common ends and effects in which our ſelves and all Chriſtians are more immediately concerned.

4. A general end of it was the production and corroboration of faith in us concerning all the Doctrines of our Religion; for that by it the truth of all our Lord's declarations concerning his own perſon, his offices, his power, his precepts and his promiſes (to the higheſt pitch of conviction and ſatisfaction) was aſſured; it being hardly poſſible, that any miracle could be greater in it ſelf for confirmation of the whole, or more proper for aſcertaining the parts of our Religion. But more particularly;

Μάλιστα πάντων σημεῖον ἱκανὸν καὶ τοὺς ἀναισχυντοῦντας ἐπιστομίζειν. Chryſ. in Rom. 1. 4.

5. Firſt, From it the dignity of our Lord's perſon, and his eſpecial dearneſs to God (to the voidance of all exceptions, and ſurmiſes againſt him) did appear.

If the meanneſs of his birth and parentage, if the low garb and dim luſtre of his life, if the bitter pains and ſhameful diſgraces of his death (however accompanyed with rare qualities ſhining in him, and wonderful deeds atchieved by him) in perſons ſtanding at diſtance, caſting ſuperficial glances on things, and judging by external appearances, might breed diſadvantageous apprehenſions, or ſuſpicions concerning him, whether he were indeed as he pretended, the Son of God, deſigned by him to be the Saviour of mankind, the Lord of all things, the Judge of the world; the wonderful power, and ſignal favour of God demonſtrated in his reſurrection, ſerved to diſcuſs thoſe miſts, and to correct ſuch miſtakes, evincing thoſe temporary depreſſions to have been only diſpenſations preparatory toward his greater exaltation in dignity, and apparent favour with God; for though (ſaith S. Paul) he was crucified out of weakneſs, yet he liveth by the power of God; that is, although in his ſufferings the infirmity of our nature aſſumed by him was diſcovered, yet by his recovering life the divine power attending him was eminently declared; it was indeed an exceſſive grandeur of power, an energy of the might of ſtrength, which God did exert in the raiſing of Chriſt from the dead, as the Apoſtle laboureth to expreſs the unexpreſſible eminency of this miracle; and being ſo high an inſtance of power, it was conſequently a ſpecial mark of favour; God not being laviſh of ſuch miracles, or wont to ſtretch forth his arm in behalf of any perſon, to whom he doth not bear extraordinary regard: the which conſequence alſo, by reflecting on the circumſtances, and nature of this event, will farther appear.

Joh. 7. 24.

2 Cor. 13. 4.

Eph. 1. 19. ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος τῆς δυνάμεως— ἐνέργεια τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος.

He was perſecuted and put to death as a notorious malefactour, and an enemy to God, to true Religion, to the common peace, to goodneſs; and his being delivered up to ſuffer was an enforcement of that pretence; for his adverſaries thence did argue, that God had diſavowed, and deſerted him; they inſulted over him as one in a forlorn condition, eſteeming him (as the Prophets foretold) ſtricken, ſmitten of God, and afflicted: but God thus, by his own hand, undoing what they had done againſt him, did plainly confute their reaſonings, did evidence their accuſations to be falſe, and their ſurmiſes vain, did in oppoſition to their ſuggeſtions approve him a friend and favourite of God, a patron of truth, a maintainer of piety and peace; one meriting, becauſe obtaining, the ſingular countenance and ſuccour of God.

Iſa. 53. 4. Pſal. 71. 11. 22. 8.

And if yielding our Lord over to death (which being a total incapacity of enjoying any good, doth ſignifie an extremely bad ſtate) might imply God's diſpleaſure or diſregard toward him; (as indeed it did in a ſort, he ſtanding in our room to undergo the inflictions of divine wrath and juſtice;) then anſwerably reſtoring him to life (which, as the foundation of enjoying any good, doth repreſent the beſt condition) muſt demonſtrate a ſingular tenderneſs of affection, with a full approbation and acceptance of his performances: this indeed far more pregnantly doth argue favour, than that could imply diſpleaſure; for that may happen to the beſt men upon other grounds, this can bear no other than a favourable interpretation.

Farther, to give life doth ground that relation, which is deepeſt in nature, and importeth moſt affection; whence in the Holy ſtyle, to
Act. 13. 33. raiſe up to life, is termed to beget; and the regeneration is put for the reſurrection; ſo that it being a paternal act, ſignifieth a paternal regard:
Matt. 19. 28. and thence perhaps S. Paul telleth us, that our Lord was declared, or defined
Rom. 1. 4. to be the Son of God, by his reſurrection from the dead.

6. Secondly, By our Lord's reſurrection we may be aſſured concerning the efficacy of his undertakings for us: for conſidering it we may not doubt of God's being reconciled to us: of obtaining the pardon of our ſins, and acceptance of our perſons, of receiving all helps conducible to our ſanctification, of attaining final happineſs, in caſe we are not on our parts deficient; all thoſe benefits by our Lord's reſurrection, as a certain ſeal, being ratified to us, and in a manner conferred on us.

As God, in the death of our Lord, did manifeſt his wrath toward us, and execute his juſtice upon us; ſo in raiſing him thence correſpondently God did expreſs himſelf appeaſed, and his law to be ſatisfied; as we in his ſuffering were puniſhed (the iniquity of us all being
Iſa. 53. 6. laid upon him) ſo in his reſurrection we were acquitted and reſtored to grace; as Chriſt did merit the remiſſion of our ſins, and the acceptance of our perſons by his paſſion; ſo God did conſign them to us in his reſurrection; it being that formal act of grace, whereby, having ſuſtained the brunt of God's diſpleaſure, he was ſolemnly reinſlated in favour, and we repreſentatively, or virtually in him; ſo that (ſuppoſing our due qualifications, and the performances requiſite on our parts) we thence become completely juſtified, having not only a juſt title to what juſtification doth import, but a real inſtatement therein; confirmed by
Rom. 4. 25. the reſurrection of our Saviour: whence He was (ſaith S. Paul) delivered for our offences, and raiſed again for our juſtification; and who then (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle) ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?
Rom. 8. 33. 34. it is God that juſtifieth; Who is he that condemneth? it is Chriſt that died,
2 Cor. 5. 15. yea rather that is riſen again: Our juſtification and abſolution, are (ye ſee) rather aſcribed to the reſurrection of Chriſt, than to his death; for that indeed his death was a ground of beſtowing them; but his reſurrection did accompliſh the collation of them for ſince (doth the Apoſtle argue) God hath acknowledged ſatisfaction done to his juſtice, by diſcharging our ſurety from reſtraint, and from all farther proſecution; ſince in a manner ſo notorious, God hath declared his favour toward our proxy; What pretence can be alledged againſt us, us, what ſuſpicion of diſpleaſure can remain? Had Chriſt only died, we ſhould not have been condemned, our puniſhment being already undergone; yet had we not been fully diſcharged, without that expreſs warrant and acquittance, which his riſing doth imply; ſo again may S. Paul be underſtood to intimate, when he ſaith, If Chriſt be not raiſed, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your ſins: Death (or that obligation to die, to which we did all for our tranſgreſſions ſtand devoted) was condemned, and judicially aboliſhed by his death; but it was executed and expunged in his reſurrection; in which trampling thereon he cruſhed it to nothing; wherefore therein mankind revived, and received the gift of immortality; that being a clear pledge, and full ſecurity, that as in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive: He (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) by his reſurrection diſſolved the tyranny of death, and with himſelf raiſed up the whole world; By the pledge of his reſurrection (ſaith S. Ambroſe) he looſed the bands of hell; Thereby (ſaith S. Leo) death received its deſtruction, and life its beginning: Therein not only the natural body of Chriſt was raiſed, but the myſtical body alſo, each member of his Church was reſtored to life, being throughly reſcued from the bondage of corruption, and tranſlated into a ſtate of immortality; ſo that God (ſaith S. Paul) hath quickened us together with Chriſt, and raiſed us together, and made us to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus.

1 Cor. 15. 7.

Heb. 2. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Rom. 8 3 5. 18. 6. 23. 1 Cor. 15. 14.

Morte calcatâ ſurrexit. Hier. Ep. 129.

1 Cor. 5. 21.

Διὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τοῦ θανάτου τυραννίδα κατέλυσε. Chryſ. Rom. 1.4.

Τὴν οἰκουμένην ἑαυτῷ συνανέστησε. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 84.

Dominus ſuæ reſurrectionis pignore vincula ſolvit inferni, &c. Ambr. ad Grat.

Per reſurrectionem Chriſti & mors interitum, & vita accepit initium. Leo. M. Ep. 81.

Epheſ. 2. 5, 6. Rom. 8. 21.

Hence in our Baptiſm (wherein juſtification, and a title to eternal life are exhibited to us) as the death and burial of Chriſt are ſymbolically undergone by us; ſo therein alſo we do interpretatively riſe with him; being (ſaith S. Paul) buried with Chriſt in Baptiſm, in it we are alſo raiſed together with him; and Baptiſm (St. Peter telleth us) being the antitype of the paſſage through the floud, doth ſave us by the reſurrection of Chriſt, preſented therein.

Coloſ. 2. 13, 14.

1 Pet. 3. 21.

It alſo miniſtreth hopes of ſpiritual aid, ſufficient for the ſanctification of our hearts and lives; for that he, who raiſed our Lord from a natural death, thence doth appear both able and willing to raiſe us from a ſpiritual death, or from that mortal ſlumber in treſpaſſes and ſins, in which naturally we do lie buried, to walk in that newneſs of life to which the Goſpel calleth us; and in regard to which, God (ſaith S. Peter) having raiſed his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs us, in turning every one of us from his iniquities.

Eph. 2. 10. Apoc. 20. 6. Acts 3. 26.

The ſame conſequently is a ſure earneſt of our ſalvation; for, If (ſaith S. Paul) when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life.

Rom. 5. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 21.

7. Thirdly, By our Lord's reſurrection, the verity of his doctrines, and the validity of his promiſes concerning the future ſtate of men are demonſtrated; in a way moſt cogent, and moſt pertinent: Any miracle, notoriouſly true, doth indeed ſuffice to confirm any point of good doctrine; but a miracle in kind, or involving the matter conteſted, hath a peculiar efficacy to that purpoſe: So did our Lord's reſurrection, in way of palpable inſtance, with all poſſible evidence to ſenſe, directly prove the poſſibility of our reſurrection, together with all points of doctrine coherent thereto; (the ſubſtantial diſtinction of our ſoul from the

(Joh. 20 31.)

the body, its ſeparate exiſtence after the diſſolution, and conſequently its immortal nature, God's wiſe and juſt providence over humane affairs in this ſtate, the ſcrutiny and judgment of our actions hereafter, with diſpenſation of recompences anſwerable;) thoſe fundamental ingredients of religion, moſt powerful incentives to vertue, and moſt effectual diſcouragements from vice; the which (before much liable to doubt and diſpute, little ſeen in the darkneſs of natural reaſon, and greatly clouded in the uncertainty of common tradition) as our Lord 2 Tim. 1. 10. by his doctrine, firſt brought into clear light, ſo by his reſurrection he
Act. 26. 23. fully did ſhew that light to be ſincere and certain: Infinitely weak and unſatisfactory were all the arguments, which the moſt careful ſpeculation could produce, for aſſerting thoſe important verities, in compariſon to that one ſenſible experiment atteſting to them: For if our Lord, a man as our ſelves, did ariſe from the dead (his ſoul, which from the croſs deſcended into the inviſible manſions, returning into his body) then evidently our ſouls are diſtinct from our bodies, and capable of ſubſiſtence by themſelves; then are they apt to exiſt perpetually; then may they be put to render an account for what is acted here, and accordingly may be dealt with: Hence may we ſee, that S. Paul diſ-
Act. 17. 31. courſed reaſonably, when he told the Athenians, that Now God hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by the man whom he hath ordained, πίστιν παρασχὼν πᾶσιν, exhibiting an argument moſt perſuaſive to all, having raiſed him from the dead; that S. Peter alſo might well aver, that God hath regenerated us to a lively hope of an incorruptible
1 Pet. 1. 3, 4. inheritance, reſerved in heaven for us, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead.

Credentes reſurrectionem Chriſti, in noſtram quoque credimus, propter quos & ille obiit & reſurrexit. Tert. de Pat. 9.

Reſurrectionem carnis per ſemetipſum primus initiavit. Cyp. Ep. 73.

Apoc. 1. 5. Col. 1. 18.
1 Cor. 15. 20.
Acts 3. 15. 5. 31.
Heb. 6. 20. 1 Cor. 15. 23.
Luc. 20. 36.

Particularly the reſurrection of our bodies, reſtoring our perfect manhood to us (a point wholly new to the world, which no Religion had embraced, no reaſon could deſcry) was hereby ſo exemplified, that conſidering it, we can hardly be tempted to doubt of what the Goſpel teacheth about it; that he preceding as the firſt-born from the dead, and the firſt-fruits of them which ſleep, as our fore-runner, and, the Captain of life; we ἐν ἰδίῳ τάγματι, in our due rank and ſeaſon, as younger ſons of the reſurrection, as ſerving under his command and conduct, in reſemblance and conformity to him, ſhall follow;
Rom. 8. 11. ſo that, If the ſpirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, dwelleth in us; he that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken our mortal
Rom. 6. 5. bodies, by his ſpirit that dwelleth in us; that, If we have been planted with him in the likeneſs of his death, we ſhall alſo grow up in the likeneſs
1 Cor. 15. 22. 49. of his reſurrection; that, As we have born the image of the earthly man, ſo we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly; ſo that God, who raiſed
1 Cor. 6. 14. our Lord, ſhall alſo raiſe us by his power; for we cannot but allow that conſequence to be reaſonable, which S. Paul doth imply, when he ſaith,
1 Theſſ. 4. 14. If we believe that Jeſus died and roſe again; even ſo them alſo, which ſleep through Jeſus, will God bring with him, reducing them into a ſtate conformable to his; by re-union of their body and ſoul.

8. Fourthly, It was a deſigned conſequence of our Lord's reſurrection, that he thereby ſhould acquire a juſt dominion over us; for, to this
Rom. 14. 9. end (ſaith S. Paul) Chriſt both died, and roſe, and revived, that he might be the Lord both of the dead and living: By the obedience of his death he did earn that dominion, as a worthy recompence thereof; He did

by his blood purchaſe us to be his ſubjects and ſervants: but from his reſurrection he began to poſſeſs that reward, and to enjoy his purchaſe; it being the firſt ſtep of his advancement to that royal dignity and preeminence over all fleſh; to which, in regard to his ſufferings, God did exalt him; concerning which, before his aſcenſion, he ſaid to his diſciples, All power is given me in heaven and earth: On ſo many great accounts was our Lord's reſurrection behoofeful; ſo that it is no wonder, if God took ſuch eſpecial care to aſſure its truth, and recommend its belief to us; appointing ſo many choice perſons by their teſtimony to aſſert, and inculcate it; to doe ſo being often expreſſed a main part, and peculiar deſign of the office Apoſtolical. Nor is it ſtrange, that to the hearty belief, and ingenuous profeſſion of this one Article (it enfolding, or inferring the truth of all other Chriſtian doctrines) ſalvation is annexed, according to that aſſertion of S. Paul; The righteouſneſs of faith ſaith thus (or this is the purport of the Chriſtian Inſtitution) that if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thy heart, that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved. Nor is it much, that a conſideration of this point ſhould be ſo continually preſent to the minds of the ancient Chriſtians, that when ever they did meet, they ſhould be ready to ſalute one another with a χριστὸς ἀνέστη, Chriſt is riſen, it importing ſo great benefits, and producing ſo excellent fruits; in regard whereto S. Paul expreſſeth his ſo ardent deſire, and high eſteem of knowing Chriſt, and the power of his reſurrection; as the moſt valuable of all knowledges; which having in ſome meaſure declared, I come now briefly to apply.

Act. 20. 28.
Joh. 17. 2.
Phil. 2. 9.
Matt. 28. 18.
Acts 1. 22. 10. 41. 13. 31.
Rom. 10. 6, 9.
Phil. 3. 10.

1. Firſt then; The conſideration of our Lord's reſurrection ſhould ſtrengthen our faith, and quicken our hope in God, cauſing us firmly to believe his word, and confidently to rely upon his promiſes, eſpecially thoſe which concern our future ſtate. God having thereby, as by a moſt ſenſible proof, againſt all objections of our feeble reaſon, demonſtrated himſelf able, as by a moſt ſure pledge declared himſelf willing to beſtow upon us a happy immortality, in gracious reward of our obedience: for ſeeing by ſo illuſtrious an inſtance, God hath manifeſted that he is thoroughly reconcileable to ſinners, that he bountifully rewardeth obedience, that death and hell are vincible, What reaſon can we have to diſtruſt his fidelity, to doubt of his power, or to deſpair of his mercy? Surely, He that was ſo faithful in raiſing our Lord from the grave, ſo notably rewarding his obedience and patience (in advancing him to Supreme dignity and glory at his right hand) will not fail alſo to confer on us (walking in the footſteps of his piety) the promiſed inheritance of everlaſting life and bliſs, the never fading crown of righteouſneſs and glory: Surely, by this noble experiment we are clearly informed, and ſhould be fully perſuaded, that nothing can deſtroy us, nothing can harm us, nothing can ſeparate us from our God, and our happineſs; that no force, no fraud, no ſpite of men, or rage of hell can finally prevail againſt us; What then reaſonably can be dreadfull, or diſcouraging to us? What ſhould be able to drive us into diſtruſt, or deſpair?

2. This point affordeth matter of great joy, and an obligation thereto. If the news of our Saviour's firſt birth were (as an Angel called them) good tidings of great joy to all people, how much more may the news concerning this ſecond nativity of him be hugely gladſome? for in that birth he did but aſſume our fleſh, in this he did advance it; then he began to ſuſtain our infirmities, now he ſurmounted them; by his incarnation

Luc. 2. 10.
Phil. 2. 8.

1 Cor. 50. 57. incarnation he became ſubject to death, by his reſurrection death was ſubdued to him; at that he entred into the field, and ſet upon the bloody conflict with our foes; in this he returned a triumphant conquerour, having utterly vanquiſhed and quelled them; the fury of the world, the malice of hell, the tyranny of ſin, the Empire of death, all of them combined to render us miſerable, he did in his reſurrection perfectly triumph over; And doth it not then become us to attend his glorious victories with our joyful gratulations? Is it not extremely comfortable to behold our gallant champion (the only champion of our life and welfare) after all the cruel blows which the infernal powers laid on him, after all the Ghaſtly wounds which humane madneſs did inflict; after he had paſſed through the ſcorching flames of divine wrath and juſtice, after he had felt the ſoreſt pangs of death, perfectly recovered from all thoſe diſtreſſes; ſtanding upright, and trampling on the necks of his proud enemies? Are not moſt ſprightful expreſſions of gratitude, are not moſt chearful acclamations of praiſe due from us to the invincible Captain of our ſalvation? Shall we not with great alacrity of mind contemplate the happy ſucceſs of that mighty enterpriſe, wherein no leſs our welfare, than his glory was concerned? Is it not a pleaſure to conſider our ſelves ſo exempted from that fatal doom, to which all humane race was ſentenced; to ſee life and immortality ſo ſpringing forth upon us; to view our ſelves, the children of duſt and corruption, from hence in age and dignity, ſo nigh equalled to the firſt-born ſons of the creation?

Σήμερον ἡμῶν τὰ λαμπρὰ νικητήρια γέγονε σήμερον ἡμῶν ὁ δεσπότης τὸ κατὰ θανάτου τρόπαιον στήσας, καὶ τοῦ διαβόλου τὴν τυραννίδα καταλύσας τὴν διὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως ὁδὸν ἡμῖν εἰς σωτηρίαν ἐχαρίσατο.

Ἡ ποθεινὴ καὶ σωτήριος ἑορτὴ — ἡ τῆς εἰρήνης ὑπόθεσις, ἡ τῆς καταλλαγῆς ἀφορμὴ, ἡ τῶν πολέμων ἀναίρεσις, ἡ τοῦ θανάτου κατάλυσις, ἡ τοῦ διαβόλου ἧττα —— Chryſ. Tom. 5. Orat. 85.

It is ſaid of the firſt diſciples, that although they ſaw, and felt our Lord riſen, yet for joy they could not believe it; ſo incredibly good was the news to them; exceſs of love and delight choaked, or rather ſuſpended their faith; we cannot be ſuch infidels from ſurprize, but let us be as faithful in our joy.

Luc. 24. 41.

Quod credunt tardius, non eſt perfidiæ, ſed amoris. Chryſoſt. Serm. 81.

3. Great conſolation ſurely it ought to breed in us, to conſider, that by this event our redemption is completed, and we become entirely capable of ſalvation; that in it a full diſcharge is exhibited from the guilt, and from the puniſhment of all our ſins, whereof we do truly repent; that God's juſtice appeareth ſatisfied, and his anger pacified; that his countenance ſhineth out clearly with favour and mercy toward us; that our condemnation is reverſed, our ranſome is accepted, our ſhackles are looſed, and our priſon ſet open; ſo that with full liberty, ſecurity and hope, we may walk forward in the paths of righteouſneſs toward our better country, the Region of eternal felicity. Farther,

4. This conſideration ſhould be a forcible engagement upon us to
Rom. 14. 9. obedience and holy life. Our Lord did by his reſurrection gain a dominion over us, unto which if we do not ſubmit, we ſhall be very injurious and wicked; unto which if we do not correſpond by all humble
Act. 3. 26. obſervance, we ſhall be very ingrateful and undutiful: He was raiſed to bleſs us, in turning every one of us from our iniquities; and no leſs unhappy, than unworthy we ſhall be, if we defeat that gracious purpoſe; It is the condition of our obtaining the happy fruits and benefits of his reſurrection, that we ſhould our ſelves riſe with him unto righteouſneſs neſs and newneſs of Life; by not complying therewith, we ſhall render Rom. 6. 4.

his Reſurrection unprofitable to us, becoming unworthy and uncapable of any good advantage thereby. Awake (ſaith the Apoſtle) thou that Eph. 5. 14. ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee life. To awake from our ſpiritual ſlumber, to ariſe from dead works, are the terms on which Chriſt doth offer that eternal happy life: for as the pains and ignominies of his death will nowiſe avail thoſe, who are not conformable to his death in dying to ſin, and mortifying their Luſts, ſo will Phil. 3. 10.
not they be concerned in the joys and glories of his Reſurrection, who Rom. 6. 5.
are not planted in the likeneſs thereof by renovation of their minds, and reformation of their lives; for as he died, ſo he was alſo raiſed for us, 2 Cor. 5. 15.
that we ſhould not henceforth live to our ſelves, but unto him who died and roſe again for us. Our ſins did ſlay him, it muſt be our repentance that reviveth him to us, our obedience that maketh him to live in our behalf: for Chriſt is not in effect riſen to impenitent people; as they continue dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, as they lie buried in corruption of heart and life, ſo their condemnation abideth, and Death retaineth its entire power over them; they ſhall not καταντᾷν εἰς τὴν ἐξανάστασιν, attain unto that happy Reſurrection, whereof our Lord's Reſurrection Phil. 3. 11.
was the pledg and pattern; ſo did our Lord aſſure in his Preaching:
He (ſaid our Lord) that believeth in the Son (that is, who with a Joh. 3. 36, ſincere, ſtrong and lively faith, productive of due obedience, believeth 15.
in him) hath everlaſting life; but ὁ ἀπειθῶν, he that diſobeyeth (or with a practical infidelity disbelieveth) the Son, ſhall not ſee life, but the wrath of God abideth on him; whence we may well infer with St. Paul, Therefore, Brethren, we are debters, not to the fleſh, to live after Rom. 8. 13.
the fleſh: for if we live after the fleſh, we ſhall die; but if through the ſpirit we do mortify the deeds of the body, we ſhall live; that is, aſſuredly by obeying God's Will we ſhall obtain, by diſobedience we muſt forfeit all the benefits of our Lord's Reſurrection.

5. Laſtly, The contemplation of this Point ſhould elevate our thoughts and affections unto Heaven and heavenly things, above the ſordid Pleaſures, the fading Glories, and the unſtable Poſſeſſions of this World: for him we ſhould follow whitherſoever he goeth; riſing with him, Rev. 14. 4.
not only from all ſinful Deſires, but from all inferiour Concernments, Eph. 2. 6.
ſoaring after him in the contemplation of our Minds, and Affections of our heart; that although we are abſent from the Lord in the body, we 2 Cor. 5. 6.
may be preſent with him in ſpirit, having our converſation in Heaven, Phil. 1. 23. Phil. 3. 20.
and our heart there where our treaſure is; for if our Souls do ſtill grovel Mat. 6. 21.
on the earth, if they be cloſely affixed to worldly intereſts, deeply immerſed in ſenſual delights, utterly enſlaved to corruption, we do not partake of 2 Pet. 2. 19.
our Lord's Reſurrection, being quite ſevered from his living Body, and Rom. 8. 21. (Gal. 6. 8.
continuing in vaſt diſtance from him: I ſhall therefore conclude, recommending Apoc. 3. 1.
that admonition of St. Paul; If ye then be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek 1 Tim. 5. 6.)
thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God; Col. 3. 1.
ſet your affections on things above, not on things on the earth; for you are dead, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God; that when Chriſt who is our life ſhall appear, then ye may alſo appear with him in glory. Amen.

Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great ſhepherd of the Sheep, through the Blood of the everlaſting Covenant, make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

He aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand, &c.

SERMON XXXI

MARK XVI. 19.

He was received up into Heaven, and ſate on the right hand of God.

OUR Lord after his Reſurrection having conſummated what was requiſite to be done by him upon earth, for the confirmation of our Faith, and the conſtitution of his Church; having for a competent time converſed with his Diſciples, enlightning their minds with knowledg of the truths concerning him, and in right underſtanding of the Scriptures relating to him; eſtabliſhing their faith in immovable conviction, enflaming their Affections by pathetical Diſcourſe, comforting their minds with gracious promiſes againſt tribulations enſuing, and arming their hearts with courage and patience againſt all oppoſitions of Earth and Hell; directing and preſcribing to them how they ſhould proceed in the inſtruction of men, and converſion of the world to the belief of his doctrine, the acceptance of his Overtures, the obſervance of his Laws; furniſhing them with authority, and giving them orders to atteſt the truth concerning him, to diſpenſe the grace and mercy procured by him, and to promulgate the whole will of God to mankind; promiſing them ſpiritual gifts and aids (both ordinary and extraordinary) neceſſary or conducible, either to the common edification, or to the particular welfare of Christians, ordering them to collect and compact the ſociety of faithful Believers in him, which he had purchaſed with his Blood; in fine, imparting to them his effectual Benediction, and a promiſe of continual aſſiſtance in the proſecution of thoſe great and holy deſigns which he committed to their management; having, I ſay, accompliſhed all theſe things, which St. Mark in this verſe expreſſeth briefly by the words μετὰ τὸ λαλῆσαι ἀυτοῖς, after he had ſpoken to them, and which St. Luke compriſeth in the words ἐντειλάμενος αὐτοῖς, that is, having imparted to them all needful inſtructions, and impoſed all fitting commands upon them, He in their preſence departed away into the poſſeſſion of his glorious ſtate; He was (ſaith St. Mark in our Text) received up into Heaven, and ſate on the right hand of God. Acts I. 2.

Which words of the Evangeliſt do contain two grand points of our Faith, the aſcenſion of our Lord to Heaven, and his ſeſſion there at God's right hand; the right underſtanding and due conſideration whereof [as it is now peculiarly, when the Church recommendeth theſe points to be the ſubjects of our Devotion moſt ſeaſonable, ſo perpetually] is of great uſe for the edification of our Souls, and the direction of our practice:

tice: in order to which purpoſes, I ſhall endeavour to explain them, to confirm the truth of them, to ſhew the ends and effects of them, and practically to apply them.

I. He was received into Heaven; this is the firſt point: wherein we may obſerve the act, and its term: The act, ἀνελήφθη, he was aſſumed, or taken up (ſaith St. Mark here) ἀνεφέρετο, he was elevated or carried up, and ἐπήρθη, he was born up (ſaith St. Luke) ἐπορεύθη, he went Luk. 24. 51. into Heaven, ſaith St. Peter; which phraſes do import that he was according Act. 1. 9. to his humanity (or that his body and ſoul united together were) 1 Pet. 3. 22. tranſlated by the divine power into Heaven; or that he as God (by the divine power immanent in him) did transfer himſelf as man thither; ſo that he both was carried, and did go with a proper local motion, the term whereof was Heaven.

And what is meant by Heaven, in the proper ſenſe adequate to this matter, may appear from other places equivalent, by which this action, or the reſult thereof are expreſſed: it is called aſcending to his Fa- Joh. 20. 17. ther, and paſſing out of this world to his Father, that is, departing hence 13. 1. into the place of God's more eſpecial preſence and reſidence; where he Ἐμφανίζεται τῷ προσώπῳ θεοῦ. (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſaith) appeareth to the face of God; being (as St. Peter ſpeaketh) exalted to the right hand of God (that is Heb. 9. 24. to the greateſt proximity, and therefore higheſt eminency with God.) Acts 2. 33. 5. 31. It is termed being taken up into glory, and entring into his glory, that 1 Tim. 3. 16. is, into a moſt glorious place, and ſtate peculiar to him; that place, which Luk. 24. 26. St. Peter calleth μεγαλοπρεπῆς δόξα, the magnificent, or moſt excellent glo- 2 Pet. 1. 17. ry. It is ſtiled entring εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, into the Heb. 6. 19. 9. 12. moſt inward part behind the veil; and into the τὰ ἅγια, the eſpecially holy places; that is, into the inmoſt receſſes of glory, inacceſſible, and Διεληλυθέναι τοὺς οὐρανούς. in degree incommunicable to any other. He is ſaid to have paſſed Heb. 4. 14. through the Heavens (that is, through all places inferiour to the higheſt Eph. 4. 10. top of glory and felicity) to have aſcended ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, Ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν. over above all the Heavens, to have become higher than the Heavens, Heb. 7. 26. or advanced above them; by which expreſſions it appeareth, that the term of our Saviour's aſcent, called Heaven here, was that place of all places in the Univerſe of things in ſituation moſt eminent, in quality moſt holy, in dignity moſt excellent, in glory moſt illuſtrious; the inmoſt ſanctuary of God's temple above not made with hands; the moſt Heb. 9. 11, 22. auguſt chamber of preſence in the Celeſtial Court: and whereas there are (as our Lord telleth us) many manſions, or apartments in the houſe of God, the chief and beſt of them our Lord hath taken up for his re- Joh. 14. 2. ſidence; whereas Heaven is a place of vaſt extent, to the utmoſt top thereof our Lord hath aſcended; even into that φῶς ἀπρόσιτον, inac- 1 Tim. 6. 16. ceſſible Light where God dwelleth.

And there, as it followeth, He ſitteth at God's right hand; the meaning of which words it is not difficult to find out; it being obvious and clear, that the ſtate of things above in the other bleſſed world, is in the Scripture repreſented to us by that ſimilitude, which is moſt apt to beget in us reverence toward God, and which indeed really doth moſt reſemble it; by the ſtate of a King here, ſitting upon his Throne, being ſurrounded with Perſonages of higheſt rank, worth, and reſpect; his neareſt Relations, his deareſt Favourites, the chief Officers of his Crown, and Miniſters of his affairs there attending upon him: ſo that yet for diſtinction, ſome place more eminent, and ſignally honourable, is aſſigned to that perſon, to whom the King pleaſeth to declare moſt eſpecial fa-

Pſa. 118. 16. vour and regard; the which place by cuſtom, grounded upon obvious reaſon, hath been of old, and continueth ſtill determined to the next place at the right hand; (the next place, becauſe nearneſs yieldeth opportunity for all kind of converſation and addreſs; at the right hand, becauſe that hand hath advantage for ſtrength and activity acquired by uſe, and therefore hath a ſpecial aptitude to offer any thing, or to receive, as occaſion doth require) hence for inſtance of the cuſtom among thoſe from whom the phraſe is taken, when Bathſheba King Solomon's
1 King. 2. 19. Mother did come unto him, 'tis ſaid, The King——ſate down upon his throne, and cauſed a ſeat to be ſet for the King's Mother, and ſhe ſate on his right hand. Thus our Lord, as Man, in regard to his perfect obedience and patience, being raiſed by God to the ſupreme pitch of
Act. 5. 31. favour, honour and power with him; God having advanced him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael and remiſſion of ſins;
Phil. 2. 9. having ſuperexalted him, and beſtowed on him a name above all names, to which all knees in heaven, in earth, and under the earth muſt bow; having
Eph. 1. 20. ſeated him in heavenly places above all principality and authority, and power, and domnion, and name that is named, either in the preſent world,
Mat. 28. 18. Joh. 3. 35. 13. 3. 17. 2. Heb. 1. 2. 2. 8, 9. 1 Pet. 3. 22. or in that which is to come, having committed to him all Authority in heaven and upon earth, and given all things into his hand; having conſtituted him heir of all things, and ſubjected all things under his feet, and crowned him with Sovereign Glory and Honour; having, in fine, given unto him all that which in the Revelation the innumerable hoſt of Heaven ac-
Apoc. 5. 2. knowledgeth him worthy of; Power, and Riches, and Wiſdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Glory, and Bleſſing; that is, all good and excellency conceivable in the moſt eminent degree, ſo that γίνεται ἐν πᾶσι
Col. 1. 18. πρωτεύων, he in all things becometh to have the preeminence: God having, I ſay, conferred all theſe preeminences of dignity, power, favour
Eph. 1. 20. Matth. 26. 64. Mark 14. 62. Luke 22. 69. and felicity upon our Saviour, is therefore ſaid to have ſeated him at his right hand; at the right hand of power (ſay the Goſpels) that is, ſo at the right hand of the Almighty Potentate, that all power is imparted to him for the governance and preſervation of his Church, at the right hand of the Majeſty on high, and at the right hand of the throne of God (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) that is, ſo at the right hand of the Soveraign King of the world, that Royal dignity is communicated to him, in regard to which all honour and worſhip, all ſervice and obedience are due to him from all Creatures.

Thus much plainly the whole ſpeech, ſitting at God's right hand, doth import; the which matter is otherwiſe more generally and ſimply ex-
1 Pet. 3. 22. preſſed by being at God's right hand, Who, ſaith St. Peter, is gone into Heaven, and is at the right hand of God, Angels and Authorities and Powers
Rom. 8. 34. being made ſubject to him; and, It is Chriſt, ſaith St. Paul, that dyed, yea rather that is riſen again, who is alſo at the right hand of God. Sometimes Apoc. 5. 6. 14. 1. Act. 7. 55, 56. alſo our Lord is repreſented ſtanding at God's right hand, as in the Revelation ſeveral times, and in the viſion of St. Stephen, who ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding at the right hand of God; the which poſture doth then ſeem purpoſely aſſigned to him, when he is repreſented aſſiſting his Servants, or in readineſs to atchieve ſome great Work for the good of his Church; but moſt commonly, as in our Text, it is called ſitting; the which word in ordinary uſe denoteth an abode, or permanency in any ſtate: but there is perhaps ſome peculiar emphaſis deſigned in attributing to our Lord that poſition; it implying the ſolid ground, the firm poſſeſſion, the durable continuance, the undiſturbed reſt and quiet of that glorious condition, wherein he is enſtated: the term ſitting may alſo ſeem to augment the main ſenſe, for that ſitting is the moſt honourable poſture, and therefore implieth to the utmoſt that eminency of favour and regard, which our Lord enjoyeth in God's ſight. It may farther alſo denote the nature, quality and deſign of our Lord's preferment; his being conſtituted our Ruler and our Judg; ſitting being a poſture moſt proper and peculiar to ſuch perſons; whence this expreſſion repreſenteth him as ſeated upon a throne of Majeſty, or upon a tribunal of Juſtice.

Sedere judicantis eſt, ſtare pugnantis; Stephanus ergò in labore certaminis poſitus ſtantem vidit, quem adjutorem habuit; ſed hunc poſt aſcenſionem Marcus ſedere ſcribit, quia poſt aſcenſionis ſuæ gloriam Judex in fine videbitur. Leo M.

I ſhall only farther obſerve, that the attainment, and ſettlement of our Lord in this high ſtate, is by one word frequently in Scripture called his glorification. The Spirit (it is ſaid) was not yet, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified; and when Jeſus was glorified, then they remembred that theſe things were written of him; and, The hour is come, that the Son of man ſhould be glorified; and, Now Father, prayeth our Saviour, glorify me with thee, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was; that is, conſtitute me as Mediator in glory ſupereminent above all Creatures, accordingly as in my divine nature I was eternally with thee moſt glorioully happy. And, The God of your fathers, ſaith St. Peter to the Jews, hath glorified his child Jeſus, whom ye delivered up; and, We ſee Jeſus, who was made a little lower than the Angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. So much for explication of theſe points.

Joh. 7. 39.
12. 16.
23. 13, 32.
17. 1, 5.
Act. 3. 13.
Heb. 2. 9.

II. The confirmation of them may be drawn partly from ocular teſtimony, partly from rational deduction, partly from their correſpondence to antient preſignifications, and predictions.

The aſcenſion of our Lord toward Heaven was teſtified by the Apoſtles, who were eye-witneſſes thereof; for βλεπόντων αὐτῶν, they beholding, he was (ſaith St. Luke) taken up, and a cloud received him out of their ſight.

Act. 1. 9.

His arriving at the ſupreme pitch of glory, and ſitting there, is deduced from the authority of his own word, and of his inſpired Diſciples, the which ſtandeth upon the ſame grounds with other points of Chriſtian faith and doctrine; the which it is not ſeaſonable now to inſiſt upon.

Luk. 22. 69.
Matth. 26. 64.

But it may be proper and uſeful to conſider how they (as all other important events, and performances belonging to our Saviour) were by the Holy Spirit in the antient Prophets, many ways preſignified and predicted; that they were ſo, our Lord telleth us; Ought not Chriſt, ſaid he, according to what the Prophets had ſpoken, to ſuffer, and ſo to enter into his glory? And St. Peter aſſureth us, that The ſpirit of Chriſt which was in the Prophets, did teſtify beforehand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glories after the ſame: ſo indeed there were many ſignal types repreſenting them, and many notable paſſages reſpecting them, interpreted according to analogy, with other myſtical repreſentations.

Luk. 24. 25, 26.
1 Pet. 1. 11.

Iſaac, the Heir of promiſe, after his being devoted for ſacrifice, and received from Death in a parable, was ſettled in a proſperous ſtate of life, God being with him, and bleſſing him in all things. Joſeph being freed from that death, to which by his envious Brethren he was deſigned, and raiſed from that burial in priſon, into which by the Egyptian Gentiles he was caſt, was advanced thence unto flouriſhing dignity, and eſtabliſhed in chief authority over the King's houſe, and over all the land; which

Heb. 11. 19.
Gen. 26. 3, 12, &c.
Gen. 41. 40.

perſons, as they were in other things, ſo may they well be conceived in theſe reſpects to have been Types of our Lord's Aſcenſion and Glorification. Joſhua (who in name and performances was the moſt exact Type of our Lord) being preſerved from the common fate of the people, and with miraculous Victory over all the accurſed Enemies of God's People, entring as Captain of Iſrael into the poſſeſſion of the promiſed Land, the ſure Type of Heaven, doth fitly repreſent the glorious Aſcenſion of our Lord into Heaven, and his everlaſting poſſeſſion thereof, together with the good people which follow his conduct. The great afflictions and depreſſions of David, with his reſtauration from them unto a mighty height of royal ſplendour and proſperity (all enemies foreign and domeſtick being ſubdued) may be alſo ſuppoſed to typify the ſame; his expreſſions in acknowledgment and thankſgiving for them ſeeming to allude hither, and to be more congruouſly applicable to our Lord, than to himſelf; ſuch for inſtance as thoſe are in the 21*ſt Pſalm*; Pſ. 21. 4, 5, 6. He asked life of thee, and thou gaveſt it him, even length of days for ever and ever; his glory is great in thy ſalvation, Honour and Majeſty haſt thou laid upon him; for thou haſt made him moſt bleſſed for ever, thou haſt made him exceedingly glad with thy countenance, &c. Enoch having walked with Gen. 5. 24. Heb. 11. 5. God (that is, in conſtant devotion, and in faithful obedience to God's will) and having received teſtimony that he pleaſed God, was taken unto God, thereby prefiguring the aſcenſion of the Well-beloved, in whom God 2 King. 2. 11. was moſt well-pleaſed: So was alſo the tranſlation of Elias into Heaven in the preſence of Eliſha, and other his Diſciples, after he moſt zealouſly had ſerved God in declaration of his Will, and maintenance of his Truth, a manifeſt prelude of our Lord's like tranſlation, after he had been employed in the like ſervice, though far more high and important, and performed it in a more eminent manner.

The High Prieſt was a certain Type of our Lord, and the Jewiſh Temple Heb. 9. 24. a ſhadow of Heaven, and the Holy of Holies a figure of the higheſt place in Heaven; wherefore the High Prieſt's ſole, and ſolemn entry once only in the year into the moſt holy place, after having by a Levit. 16. 16, 34. bloody Sacrifice made atonement for all the tranſgreſſions of the Children Exod. 30. 10. of Iſrael, and his there ſprinkling the blood of the Sacrifice upon the Mercy Heb. 9. 7. Seat, and before the Mercy Seat (the emblem of God's ſpecial preſence) doth certainly prefigure our Lord's aſcending into Heaven, and ſitting there at God's right hand; there, by repreſentation of his merits and paſſion performing the office of a moſt holy Prieſt, and gracious Media- Heb. 9. 14, 24. 10. 12. tor for us: By his own blood (ſaith the divine Apoſtle) he entred once into the Holy Place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. He is entred, not into the holy places made with hands, which are Figures of the true, but into Heaven it ſelf, now to appear in the preſence of God for us.

Thus were theſe points aptly ſignified; they were alſo predicted: for David in the 68*th Pſalm*, celebrating the glorious Triumphs of God over Huc etiam. the enemies of his People, and in conſequence upon them his ſolemn entrance and ſeating himſelf in Sion, the Hill which he delighteth to dwell Pſa. 68. 18. in (the uſual emblem of Heaven) ſubjoineth; Thou haſt aſcended on high (למרום, to the high place of Heaven) thou haſt led captivity captive, thou haſt received gifts for men, yea for the rebellious alſo, that the Lord God might dwell among them; which words appoſitely ſute to our Lord's triumphant aſcenſion, after having ſubdued all the enemies of his Church, and upon which he liberally diſpenſed wonderful gifts Eph. 4. 8. and graces to his people, and are by the unerring interpretation of St. Paul applyed thereto.

The Aſcenſion of our Lord ſeemeth alſo (at leaſt according to myſtical Expoſition reaſonably grounded) to be reſpected in the 24th Pſalm, as generally throughout, ſo particularly in thoſe words, Lift up your heads O ye gates, and be ye lift up ye everlaſting doors, and the king of glory ſhall come in; where according to the firſt, and more literal ſenſe, the entrance of the Ark (the ſymbol of our Lord himſelf, in whom God is moſt ſpecially preſent, in whom all the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelleth bodily) into the Temple is deſcribed; but in a ſecond more elevate, more proper, and more full meaning the entrance of our Lord (the true Shechinah) into Heaven ſeemeth denoted; the doors of that Temple not made with hands, into which he, the Lord of Glory, at his Aſcenſion did enter, being indeed moſt truly the everlaſting doors; and the doors of the earthly Temple being only ſuch as typified them.

Pſa. 24.7,8,9.
Coloſ. 2. 9.

Again, The Seſſion of our Lord at God's right hand is expreſly foretold by David; The Lord (ſaith he) ſaid unto my Lord, ſit at my right hand, until I have made thine enemies thy footſtool: Who but the Meſſias could be that Lord of David, unto whom God ſpake? Who but he could be an eternal Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec? Not only therefore our Lord himſelf expoundeth that place of the Meſſias, but the antient Jews did commonly underſtand it to concern him; as appeareth by their tacit conſent, and forbearing to contradict our Lord ſo interpreting it.

Pſal. 110. 1.
Mat. 22. 44.

In fine, all the Prophecies, which are very many, that concern the ſpiritual and eternal Kingdom of the Meſſias (his being inveſted with, and exerciſing regal Dignity and Power over God's People for ever) do in effect declare the Aſcenſion and Seſſion of our Lord; particularly thoſe of David; I have ſet my King upon my holy Hill of Sion; and, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the ſceptre of thy Kingdom is a right ſceptre: and that of Daniel; I ſaw, in the night viſions, one like the Son of Man came with the Clouds of Heaven, and came to the antient of days, and they brought him near before him; and there was given him Dominion and Glory, and a Kingdom, that all People, Nations and Languages ſhould ſerve him; his Dominion is an everlaſting Dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his Kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed. So were theſe points foreſhewed and foretold, to the manifeſtations of God's Wiſdom, and the confirmation of our faith.

{Pſa. 2. 6, 8.
{Heb. 1. 5.
Pſa. 45. 6.
Heb. 1. 8.
Dan. 7. 13.

III. Now for the ends and effects of our Lord's Aſcenſion, and his abode in Heaven at God's right hand (I join them together as coincident or ſubordinate) they are in the Scripture declared to be chiefly theſe.

In general, our Lord by them was inveſted in the complete exerciſe of all the offices, and in the full enjoyment of all the privileges belonging to him as perfect Mediator, Sovereign King, High Prieſt, and Arch-Prophet of God's Church and People: He did initially, and in part exerciſe thoſe functions upon earth; and a ground of enjoying thoſe preeminencies he laid here, but the entire execution and poſſeſſion of all, by his Aſcenſion into Heaven, and in his Seſſion there, he did obtain particularly.

1. Our Lord did aſcend unto, and doth reſide in Heaven at the right hand of divine Majeſty and Power, that as a King he might govern us, protecting us from all danger, relieving us in all want, delivering us from all evil; that he might ſubdue and deſtroy all the enemies of his Kingdom and our Salvation; the Devil with all his Retinue, the World, the Fleſh, Sin, Death and Hell; whatever doth oppoſe his Glory, his Truth, his Service, whatever conſequently by open violence or fraudulent Pſal. 110. 1. practice doth hinder our Salvation: The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, ſit thou Mat. 22. 44. on my right hand, until I have made thine enemies thy footſtool; ſo God Heb. 1. 13. by the Holy Spirit in David did ſpeak unto him; whence St. Peter doth Acts 2. 36. thus infer: Therefore let all the Houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made him Lord and Chriſt; that is, his being ſeated in that place of ſpecial eminency is an infallible argument of his Royal Majeſty and Sovereignty; and, This Man (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) after he Heb. 10. 12, 13. had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, for ever ſate down at the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his Enemies be made his footſtool; and 1 Cor. 15. 25. accordingly, He muſt (as St. Paul ſaith) reign, until he hath put all his enemies under his feet. By various Combats in his life our Lord did worſt and weaken his and our Enemies; and in the laſt great Battle on his Croſs, he did thoroughly rout and overthrow them; but by his triumphant Eph. 4. 8. aſcenſion into Heaven he led Captivity captive, enjoying the glory and benefit of his Victory; by ſitting at God's right hand he keepeth them down in irrecoverable ſubjection under his feet, ſo that none of them can make any ſucceſsful Inſurrection againſt him: for no power certainly ſhall ever be able to withſtand his Will and Command, who ſitteth at the helm of Soveraignty immenſe, and omnipotent; at that right hand, which can do any thing, which wieldeth and moderateth all things every where; no Fraud can elude, no ſecret Conſpiracy can eſcape his Knowledg, who ſitting in that heavenly Watch-tower of infinite Wiſdom and Omniſcience, beholdeth whatever is done, ſaid, or thought in all the World.

He ſo there with Royal Might protecteth us, and with Royal Goodneſs, Munificence and Clemency he doth alſo thence diſpenſe grace and mercy to his faithful Subjects: for all good Gifts and Graces beſtowed on the Church in general for common edification, and to each Member Eph. 4. 7, 8. thereof ſingly for its particular benefit, which are uſeful for perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edification of Chriſt's Body in Truth, Holineſs, Order and Peace, are expreſſed to proceed from our Lord's Aſcenſion: To every one of you (ſaith St. Paul) is given Grace according to the meaſure of the Gift of Chriſt; that is, to every one of you proportionably according to the quality of your employment, rank, or ſtation in the Church, and according to the particular exigency of your needs, as Chriſt in wiſdom ſeeth fit, Grace is afforded, in correſpondence (addeth he) to the Pſalmiſt's Propheſy concerning our Saviour; Having aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

Particularly in virtue, or conſequence of his Aſcenſion and Glorification, to all true penitents and converts unto God, mercy and pardon for their ſins are diſpenſed: that repentance ſhould be acceptable to God, and available for attainment of Mercy, our Lord did indeed merit for us by his ſuffering; but he effectually diſpenſeth it in God's name, being now enſtated in glory, as a noble Boon of his royal Clemency: God, Acts 5. 31. ſaith St. Peter, exalted him as a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance Luk. 24. 47. unto Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins.

2. Our Saviour did aſcend, and now ſitteth at God's right hand, that he may, in regard to us, there exerciſe his Prieſtly function. Having in this outward tabernacle once offered up himſelf a pure and perfect Sacrifice for the expiation of our ſins, he entred within the veil, into the Heb. 10. 12. moſt Holy Place, there preſenting his blood before God himſelf, to the full effect of obtaining mercy for us, and reſtoring us to God's favour: He is (ſaith the Apoſtle) entred into heaven it ſelf, there to appear in Heb. 9. 24. the preſence of God for us; ſo that whenever we by our frailty do fall into ſin, and do heartily by repentance turn unto God, invoking his mercy, our Lord is ready by applying the virtue of his ſacrifice, and pleading our cauſe with God, upon the terms of that gracious Covenant purchaſed and ratified by his bloud, to procure mercy for us: for, If any man ſin, we have (ſaith S. John) an advocate with the Father, Je- 1 Joh. 2. 1, 2. ſus Chriſt the righteous, who is a propitiation for our ſins, and for the ſins of the whole world: And, who (ſaith S. Paul) is he that condemneth? Rom. 3. 34. it is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us; that is, ſeeing our Lord hath offered a well-pleaſing ſacrifice for our ſins, and doth at God's right hand continually renew it, by preſenting it unto God, and interceding with him for the effect thereof; What, ſuppoſing us qualified for mercy, can hinder us from obtaining it?

Our Lord alſo doth at God's right hand diſcharge the Princely miniſtry of praying for us, and ſo interceding in our behalf, as thereby to acquire from God to be conferred on us whatever is needful, or conducible to our ſalvation: He (ſaith the Apoſtle) is able to ſave to the Heb. 7. 25. uttermoſt thoſe that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for us. More particularly he, by his mediation there, doth procure for us a free acceſs to God in devotion, a favourable reception of our petitions and ſervices, a good ſucceſs of them in the ſupply of all our needs; for, Through him we have acceſs by the Spirit unto the Eph. 2. 8. Father, and, Having a great High-Prieſt, that is paſſed into the heavens, Heb. 4. 14. 7. 25. Jeſus the Son of God——let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace in the time of need, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. And He, as he is repreſented in the Apocalypſe, is that Angel of the Covenant, who at the golden Altar before Apoc. 8. 3. God doth offer up the prayers of the Saints, incenſed by his mediation and merits.

Hence in his name, and through him it is, that we are enjoyned to (Joh. 10. 9. 14. 6. Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 3. 12. Heb. 10. 19. Eph. 5. 20. Joh. 14. 13. 15. 16. 16. 23, 24.) preſent our Prayers, our thankſgivings, and all our ſervices; * doing all whatever we do in the name of the Lord Jeſus. *Col. 3. 17.

3. Again, Our Lord telleth us, that it was neceſſary he ſhould depart hence, and enter into this glorious ſtate, that he might there exerciſe his Prophetical office, by imparting to us his holy Spirit for our inſtruction, direction, aſſiſtance and comfort. Behold (ſaid he upon his departure) I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you, but tarry ye in the City Luk. 24. 49. of Jeruſalem, until ye be endued with the power from on high; this he promiſed then to his diſciples, but did not perform until his exaltation: Being therefore (ſaith S. Peter) exalted to the right hand of God, and ha- Act 2. 33. ving received of the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, he hath ſhed forth this which ye now ſee and hear. He did not, and indeed (in conſiſtence with the divine purpoſe, and the deſigned œconomy of things) could not perform this until then; It is (ſaid he) expedient for you Joh. 16. 7. that I go away, for if I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will ſend him to you; that is, God, for promoting our Saviour's honour, and for the glory of his undertaking, had in his wiſdom determined, that ſo incomparably excellent a gift ſhould be the reward of his obedience, the conſequence of his triumph, the effect of his interceſſion above, an ornament of his Royal ſtate, a pledg of his Princely munificence: it was reſerved as a moſt rich and majeſtick gratuity, fit to be conferred at his coronation, then when he ſolemnly was inaugurated to ſoveraign Dignity, and inveſted with power ſuperlative: whence, The Holy Spirit ('tis ſaid in St. John) was not yet (that is, it was not yet poured forth, or beſtowed in that conſpicuous manner, and copious meaſure, as God intended it ſhould be afterwards) becauſe Joh. 7. 39. Jeſus was not yet glorified: It was from Jeſus being received into glory, and advanced to God's right hand, that ſo tranſcendent a boon was in God's purpoſe, and according to his promiſe deſigned to come down.

4. Again, Our Lord himſelf telleth us, that he went to Heaven, Joh. 14. 2. there to prepare a place for his faithful ſervants, to prepare manſions of Pſal. 16. 11. joy and bliſs in God's preſence, where is fulneſs of joy; at his right hand, where are pleaſures for evermore. He accordingly hath (as the Apoſtle Heb. 6. 20. ſaith) entred as our πρόδρομος, our fore-runner into Heaven; as an honourable Harbinger having diſpoſed things there for our reception and entertainment; or rather as the ſon and heir of that great houſe, he by his authority and intereſt there procured leave for us to enter, and Joh. 17. 24. 14. 3. 12. 26. reſide there, or carryeth us as his retinue thither; It is my will (ſaith he) that where I am, there ſhould ye be alſo, that ye may contemplate my glory, and conſequently may partake thereof. It was indeed our Lord's aſcenſion, which did unlock the gates of heaven, before ſhut upon us by our ſins, which quenched the flaming ſword, and diſcharged the mighty Cherubin, which guarded Paradiſe from all acceſs to men.

Flammea illa rhomphaa, cuſtos paradiſi, & præſidentia foribus Cherubim Chriſti reſtincta, & reſerata ſunt ſanguine. Hier. Ep. 3.

The antient Fathers generally were of opinion, that Heaven, before our Lord's aſcenſion, was inacceſſible; and that no man had ever ſet foot therein, until our Lord, by his actual aſcent and ingreſs, did open the paſſage thither, and removed the bars there: to prove this, they alledg that of our Lord Joh. 3. 13. in St. John, No man hath aſcended up into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the ſon of man, who is in heaven; and the forecited Joh. 14. 2. place, I go to prepare a place for you: which ſeemeth to imply heaven before unfit to receive men; and thoſe places, wherein our Lord af- Joh. 10. 7. 14. 6. firmeth himſelf to be the gate of the ſheep; and, the way to the Father; and that of the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, concerning the Patriarchs, and Heb. 11. 39. other good men before Chriſt's Incarnation; And theſe all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promiſe, God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be perfect. Pſal. 24. 7, 9. Hither alſo they referred that of the Palſmiſt, Lift up your heads O ye gates, and be ye lift up ye everlaſting doors, and the King of glory ſhall come in; which words they interpreted to ſignifie the gates of Heaven then to have been firſt opened, when our Lord did aſcend thither. Joſhua (a moſt congruous type of our Lord) leading God's people into the land of promiſe, did alſo to their ſenſe imply our Lord's firſt entring into Heaven. The High Prieſt alone entring into the Sanctuary, did, as they deemed, argue the ſame; the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſeeming much to favour their ſen- Heb. 9. 7. timent, when he ſaith, Into the ſecond (Tabernacle) went the High Prieſt alone once every year not without blood, which he offered for himſelf, and the errors of the People; the Holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, that the way into the Holyeſt of all was not yet made manifeſt, whilſt the firſt tabernacle

'Ουρανὸς ἔτι ἦν ἄϐατος. Chryſ. ad Heb. 9. 8.

Ante Chriſtum Abraham apud inferos, poſt Chriſtum latro in paradiſo, &c. Hier. in Epitaph. Nepot. Ep. 3.

Ὅταν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνέστη χριστὸς, καὶ ἀνέϐη εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν, κελεύονται οἱ ἐν οὐρανῷ ταχθέντες ἄγγελοι ἀνοίξαι τὰς πύλας τῶν οὐρανῶν. Juſt. M.

bernacle was yet ſtanding. The ſame alſo was (ſay they) ſignified by thoſe perſons, who for offences wide of malice, were detained in the cities of refuge, and prohibited to return home until the death of the High Prieſt, but were afterward reſtored to the land of their poſſeſſion; thereby, ſay they, being intimated, that until after our Saviour's death, no man could return into Paradiſe, his primitive home, from which man for his ſin had been excluded; but that henceſorth all perſons, in an Evangelical account, not malicious or wicked, had a right and liberty to return thither. Upon theſe and the like grounds did the Fathers commonly ſuppoſe no perſon before our Lord's aſcenſion to have entred heaven; but however it were as to the time, yet aſſuredly in order of nature and cauſality it was he that did firſt aſcend thither, and by virtue of his aſcenſion it is, that any man ever did, or ſhall ever come thither: His Blood was (as St. Hierom ſaith) the key of Paradiſe, the efficacy of which he carrying up with him did unlock it, ſo that thenceforth it doth ſtand wide open to thoſe who can ſore up thither, following his ſteps in perſevering obedience: Having therefore (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) boldneſs to enter into the Holieſt by the blood of Jeſus, by a new and living way, which he hath conſecrated for us through the veil, that is to ſay his fleſh; and having a High Prieſt over the houſe of God, let us draw near with a true heart——and, He being (perfected, or conſummated in his ſtate of glory) became to all that obey him the Author of everlaſting ſalvation; being denominated by God a High Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec.

Numb. 35. 28.

Quid eſt quod homicida poſt mortem Pontificis abſolutus ad terram propriam redit? niſi quod humanum genus, quod peccando ſibi mortem intulit, poſt mortem veri ſacerdotis, id eſt Chriſti, peccatorum vinculis ſolvitur, & in paradiſi poſſeſſionem reparatur. Greg. M. Hom. in Ezech.

Sanguis Chriſti eſt clavis paradiſi. Hier. Ep. 129.

Heb. 10. 19, 20.

Heb. 5. 9.

5. It was indeed an effect of our Lord's aſcenſion and glorification, that all good Chriſtians are with him in a ſort tranſlated into heaven, and advanced into a glorious ſtate; being thence by him made Kings and Prieſts to God. We have (ſaith Tertullian) in Chriſt Jeſus ſeized on Heaven; and the Apoſtle ſaith as much: Us (ſaith he) who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, God hath quickned together with Chriſt, and hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus. In many reſpects we thereby are raiſed to heaven and eminent glory.

Apoc. 1. 6. 5. 10.

Uſurpavimus cœlum, & regnum Dei in Chriſto Jeſu. Tert. de Reſ. c. 51.

We thence even as men become greatly dignified, our nature being ſo highly advanced thereby: we thereby get the honour of being brethren or kinſmen to the world's great Lord and King; ſo that any of us may ſay with St. Auſtin, Where my fleſh reigns, there I believe my ſelf to reign: hence, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews teacheth us, is that of the Pſalmiſt verified concerning man; Thou haſt crowned him with glory and honour, and haſt ſet him over the works of thy hands.

Ubi caro mea regnat, ibi me regnare credo. Aug. Med.

Pſal. 8. 5.
Heb. 2. 7.

We alſo more as Chriſtians are elevated thereby by our near relation to him, and our participation with him as our head: for where the head is, there the body is; they are inſeparably connected, there can be no breach, no diſtance between them; and the honour confer'd on the head, doth neceſſarily accrue to the members; according to St. Paul's rule; If one member be glorified, all the members do rejoyce

Ἔνθεν ἡ κεφαλὴ, ἐκεῖ ϗ τὸ σῶμα· οὐδὲν γὰρ μέσον διείργεται ἡ κεφαλὴ ϗ τὸ σῶμα. Chryſ. in Eph. λ. 3.

1 Cor. 12. 26.

with it, or do partake of its joyful ſtate. Chriſti aſcenſio noſtra eſt provectio, The aſcenſion of Chriſt is our preferment; and whither the Glory of the head is gone before, thither likewiſe is the hope of the body called, ſaith a devout Father.

Chriſti aſcenſio noſtra eſt provectio; & quo præceſſit gloria capitis, eo ſpes vocatur & corporis. Leo P.

We alſo are by our Lord's glorification advanced and advantaged, in that his being ſo glorified is a ſure pledg and an earneſt of that glorious reward, which all good Chriſtians ſhall receive. Chriſt being made heir of all things, did in his aſcenſion, adire hæreditatem, take poſſeſſion of that inheritance, and we conſequently as coheirs with him; and having a ſhare in the inheritance of the Saints in light, do ſeiſe thereon, acquiring therein a right and propriety at preſent, being aſſured in due time (if by our miſcarriages we do not forfeit our title) of an actual poſſeſſion thereof: As (ſaith Tertullian) Chriſt did leave to us the earneſt of the Spirit, ſo he received from us the earneſt of the fleſh, and carryed it into heaven as a pledg of the whole ſum to be ſometime brought in thither.

Heb. 1. 2.
Rom. 8. 17.
Eph. 1. 11.
Col. 1. 12.

Quemadmodum Chriſtus nobis arrhabonem Spiritûs reliquit, ità & à nobis arrhabonem carnis accepit, & vexit in cœlum pignus totius ſummæ illuc quandoque redigendæ. Tertull. de Reſurr. c. 51.

We do alſo in a manner aſcend with Chriſt to heaven, in regard that by his aſcenſion our principal concernments, our only conſiderable intereſts (that κρέιττων ὕπαρξις καὶ μένουσα, better and enduring ſubſtance) the true objects of our affection, and all our hope are transferred thither; whence heaven becometh our only true country, our abiding city, our real home: We having here no true reſt, no ſetled manſion, no certain eſtate; but indeed being ſtrangers, ſojourners, and Pilgrims upon earth. Our πολίτευμα, our politick capacity relates to heaven, or we are citizens thereof, ſaith S. Paul; we are fellow-citizens of the Saints, and domeſticks of God; are Proſelytes to mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God, the Metropolis of the Saints, the heavenly Jeruſalem; we are tranſlated into the Kingdom of God's beloved Son, are called into his Kingdom and glory, have our hope laid up for us in heaven, are dead to the world, and our life is hid with Chriſt in God: and where we are ſo concerned, there eſpecially in ſpirit and heart we may be ſuppoſed to be.

Heb. 10. 34.
Heb. 13. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 11. 1. 17. 2 Cor. 5. 6.
Phil. 3. 20. Eph. 2. 19. Heb. 12. 22.
Προσεληλεύθαμεν.
Coloſ. 1. 13. 1 Theſ. 2. 1, 2.
Coloſ. 1. 5. Gal. 6. 14. 2. 20.
Col. 3. 3.

6. I might add, that God did thus advance our Saviour to declare the ſpecial regard he beareth to piety, righteouſneſs and obedience, by his ſo amply rewarding, and highly dignifying the practice thereof: We (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſee Jeſus for the ſuffering of death crowned with glory and honour: We ſee him, not only as an object of our contemplation, but as a pattern of our practice, and as a ground of our encouragement; Looking up (ſaith that Apoſtle again) unto Jeſus the captain and the perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was ſet before him endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of God: God it ſeemeth did intend, and he doth propound our Lord's exaltation for an engagement and motive to us of following him in the way by which he attained it; giving us aſſuredly to hope for the like rewards of Glory and Joy, in proportion anſwerable to our imitation of his exemplary obedience and patience.

Heb. 2. 9.
Heb. 12. 2.

Such are the principal ends and effects of our Lord's aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at God's right hand; the conſideration of which points may have great uſe, and ſhould have much influence upon our practice.

1. It may ſerve to guard us from divers errours, which to the dangerous prejudice and diſparagement of our Religion (introducing into it notions thwarting reaſon and ſenſe, charging it with needleſs and groundleſs incredibilities, expoſing it to difficulties and objections ſo maſſy, that the foundations of Chriſtian truth are ſcarce able to ſupport them) have been, and are aſſerted by divers perſons, or by ſects of men profeſſing Chriſtianity, ſuch as are that of the old Eutychians, who held that the humane nature of our Lord was converted into his Divinity, or ſwallowed up thereby; that of the German Vbiquitaries, who ſay, that our Lord according to his humane nature corporally doth exiſt every where; that of the Lutheran Conſubſtantialiſts, and of the Roman Tranſubſtantiators, who affirm, that the body of our Lord is here upon earth at once preſent in many places (namely in every place where the Hoſt is kept, or the Euchariſt is celebrated) which aſſertions by the right underſtanding of theſe points will appear to be falſe. For our Lord did viſibly in humane ſhape aſcend to Heaven (which to do is inconſiſtent with the inviſible, omnipreſent and immoveable nature of God) and therefore he continueth ſtill a man; and as ſuch he abideth in heaven, and therefore he doth not exiſt every where, or other-where. It is the property of a Creature to have a definite exiſtence, or to be only in one place at one time; for could it be in divers places at once, it might by like reaſon be in any, or in every place, and conſequently it might be immenſe; nor can we conceive a thing to be at once in ſeveral diſtant places, without its being multiplyed in eſſence; it eſpecially is repugnant to the nature of a Body at once to poſſeſs ſeveral places, ſeeing its ſubſtance and quantity do not really differ, or are inſeparably combined, whence it cannot be multiplyed in dimenſions, anſwerable to many localities, without being multiplied in ſubſtance; wherefore ſince our Lord as man did by a proper local motion aſcend, paſs through, and enter into the heavens (being, as it is ſaid in Holy Scripture, in the viſible form and dimenſions of his Body, taken, carryed, lifted up, gone into heaven, parting from his Diſciples, going away from us, leaving the world and going to the Father; being where no man here can come, or can follow him, being to be no more in the world, ſo that we have him not always with us; being there, where we being in the Body, are abſent from him; ſeeing he doth now reſide in heaven, which muſt (as S. Peter affirmed) receive (or hold) him, until the reſtitution of all things: where he conſtantly appeareth in God's preſence for us, and ever liveth to make interceſſion for us; whence alſo we do expect that in the like viſible manner as he went, that he ſhall come again, deſcending (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) from heaven, and coming in the clouds of heaven, at the laſt reſurrection and judgment, which is therefore commonly termed his preſence, and appearance here) Since, I ſay, according to the tenour of Scripture, our Lord did thus as man in his fleſh go into heaven, and there perpetually doth abide in glory, until he ſhall thence return

Heb. 9. 24. 4. 14.
Act. 1. 2, 9, 10, 11.
Luk. 24. 50, 51.

Mark 16. 19.
Matt. 26. 11. 1 Pet. 3. 22.
Joh. 16. 5, 7. 14. 25. 13. 3. 7. 33, 34. 8. 21. 13. 36. 17. 11.
2 Cor. 5. 6.
Ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν δέχεσθαι. Act. 3. 21.

Heb. 7. 25. 9. 24.

Act. 1. 11. 1 Theſ. 4. 16. 1. 10.
2 Theſ. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 15. 47.
Phil. 1. 20. Apoc. 1. 7.
Matt. 24. 30.
(Εἰς ἀπάντησιν κυρίου. 1 Theſ. 4. 17.)

Παρουσία. Ἐπιφάνεια.

Secundum majeſtatem ſuam, ſecundum providentiam, ſecundum ineffabilem & inviſibilem gratiam impletur quod ab eo dictum eſt, Ecce ego vobiſcum —— ſecundum carnem vero —— non ſemper habebitis me vobiſcum. Aug. in Joh. Tract. 50.

return hither to judg the world, we muſt not ſuppoſe him to be any where corporally upon earth: He is indeed every where by his divinity preſent with us; he is alſo in his humanity preſent to our faith, to our memory, to our affection, he is therein alſo preſent by myſterious repreſentation, by ſpiritual efficacy, by general inſpection, and influence upon his Church; but in body, as we are abſent 2 Cor. 5. 6. Phil. 1. 23. 1 Theſſ. 4. 17. from him, ſo is he likewiſe ſeparated from us; we muſt depart hence, that we may be with him, in the Rom. 10. 6. place whither he is gone to prepare for us: Who ſhall aſcend into heaven to bring Chriſt down thence? ſaith St. Paul, intimating where he doth immoveably abide, in excluſion to all other places. Theſe things (beſide many other ſtrong reaſons) if we do conſider, it will ſuffice to guard us from thoſe rampant abſurdities, which ſo long with ſuch impudence, and ſuch violence have outbraved plain reaſon and ſenſe: But to leave this, and to come to more practical applications.

2. Is Chriſt aſcended, and advanced to this glorious eminency at God's right hand? then let us anſwerably behave our ſelves toward him, rendring him the honour and worſhip, the fear and reverence, the ſervice and obedience ſuitable, and due to that his ſtate. In regard hereto Heb. 1. 6. all the Angels of God are commanded to adore him, and they willingly ſubmit thereto, acknowledging him to deſerve the higheſt worſhip; Apoc. 5. 12, 13. Every creature ('tis in the Revelation) in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, doth in its way ſend up acclamations of bleſſing and praiſe unto him: And ſhall we then refuſe, or neglect to do the like? we, who of all creatures in equity and gratitude are moſt obliged, who in reaſon and intereſt are moſt concerned to honour him, as our ſelves receiving moſt honour and advantage from his exaltation? Shall we be backward in yielding obedience to him, who is in nature ſo nearly related to us, and in affection ſo well diſpoſed toward us; who out of tender good-will toward us, hath undertaken this high charge, and exerciſeth it with deſign to do us good; who therefore eſpecially is pleaſed to ſit at the helm, that he may protect us from all the enemies of our welfare, and that he may ſettle us in the enjoyment of happineſs? Shall we dare to oppoſe his will, and not dread to diſpleaſe him, to Matth. 28. 18. whom all power in heaven and earth is given; whoſe will is executed by the irreſiſtible right hand of God; who therefore can eaſily check us in our bad courſes, and will ſurely chaſtiſe us for our diſobedience. We do plainly hereby incur the heinous guilt, and ſhall ſurely undergo the grievous puniſhment of rebellion; this being the ſentence, which Luk. 19. 27. refuſing ſubjection to him, we ſhall one day hear, and feel; Thoſe mine enemies, that would not have me reign over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me.

3. Theſe points do afford ground and matter of great joy and comfort to us: Have we not cauſe to rejoyce, that our Lord hath obtained ſo abſolute and glorious a victory over all our cruel enemies? Should we not with joyful gratulation applaud the triumphs of goodneſs over wickedneſs, of charity over malice, of mercy over wrath, of life and happineſs over death and miſery? Is it not matter of huge ſatisfaction, that one of our kind and kindred, who beareth toward us the bowels of a man, and the affection of a brother, who hath yielded ſo wonderful expreſſions of good-will and charity toward us, who ſo loved us, as to lay down his life for us, is raiſed to ſuch preferment? Shall we not be pleaſed, that we have ſo good a friend in ſo high place, and ſo great power; or that he who is ſo willing, is alſo ſo able to do us good? Have we not great cauſe to acquieſce in our ſubjection to ſo juſt, ſo mild, ſo gracious a Governour; the Sceptre of whoſe Kingdom is a right Sceptre, whoſe yoke is eaſy, and burden light? Shall we not be glad, conſidering, that we have ſo merciful, and ſo kind an interceſſor always reſident with God, always ready to do good offices for us at the throne of Grace? Conſidering this, What is there that can be, or happen in the World, that ſhould diſpleaſe, diſcourage, or diſturb us? What enemies ſhould we fear, ſince all our enemies lie proſtrate under his feet? What good can we fear to want, ſince all things are at his diſpoſal, and all good is diſpenſed by him? What events ſhould trouble us, ſince all things are managed and ordered by his good hand? Will he ſuffer any thing to hurt us? Will he ſee us need any convenience? Will he let us be oppreſſed by any miſchief or diſtreſs, whoſe office it is, and continual care to protect and ſuccour us? Have we not, in contemplation of theſe things, abundant reaſon to comply with that precept, of rejoycing in the Lord always? Phil. 4. 4. 3. 1.

Be our caſe in this world what it will, conſidering where our Lord is, we have great cauſe to be cheerful, according to that injunction of our Lord, enforced by this conſideration: In the world ye ſhall have tribulation, but Joh. 16. 33.
be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

4. The conſideration of theſe things ſerveth to cheriſh, and ſtrengthen all kind of faith and hope in us. If the reſurrection of our Saviour might beget in us a ſtrong perſwaſion concerning the truth of our Lord's Doctrine, and a lively hope of Salvation from his undertakings and performances for us, his aſcenſion and ſeſſion in glory (confirmed by the ſame indubitable teſtimonies and authorities) muſt needs nouriſh, improve and corroborate them. We cannot ſurely diſtruſt the accompliſhment of any promiſes declared by him, we cannot deſpair of receiving any good from him, who is aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of divine wiſdom and divine power, thence viewing all things done here, thence ordering all things every where for the advantage of thoſe who love him and truſt in him.

It eſpecially doth ſerve to quicken in us that bleſſed hope, as St. Paul Tit. 2. 13.
calleth it, of a joyful and happy reſt after the troubles and ſorrows of this wretched life; which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure Heb. 6. 19.
and ſtedfaſt, and which entreth into that within the veil, where the forerunner is for us entred, even Jeſus, made an High Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

5. Theſe points do likewiſe ſerve to excite and encourage our devotion; for having ſuch a Mediator in heaven, ſo near God's preſence, ſo much in God's favour, having ſo good and ſure a friend at court, having ſuch a maſter of requeſts ever ready to preſent up, to recommend and to further our petitions, what ſhould deter, what ſhould any-wiſe withhold us from cheerfully, upon all occaſions, by him addreſſing our ſelves to God? We may therefore, as we are exhorted by the Apoſtle, come to the throne of grace with boldneſs, that we may re- Heb. 4. 16.
ceive mercy, and find grace for ſeaſonable aid. We cannot, conſidering this, any-wiſe doubt of thoſe promiſes being effectually made good to us: Whatever ye ſhall ask in prayer believing, ye ſhall receive: Whatſo- Mat. 21. 22. 7. 8.
ever ye ask in my name, that will I do: There is nothing, which Mark 11. 24.
he enjoying ſuch power cannot do for us; and there is nothing which

1 John 5. 14. which he our loving and merciful brother will not do that is good
Joh. 14. 13. for us, if we do with humble confidence apply our ſelves to him for
15. 7. 16, 23. it: And what greater incitement can there be to devotion, than an aſſurance ſo firmly grounded of fair acceptance and happy ſucceſs thereof? yea, what an extreme folly, what a huge crime is it not to make uſe of ſuch an advantage, not by ſo obliging an inducement to be moved to a conſtant practice of this ſo beneficial, and ſweet kind of duties?

6. It may encourage us to all kind of obedience, to conſider what a high pitch of eternal glory and dignity our Lord hath obtained, in regard to his obedience, and as a pledg of like recompence deſigned to us, if we tread in his footſteps, running the race that is ſet before us, and looking up to Jeſus, who for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, and is ſet at the right hand of the throne of God. As God in reſpect to what he ſhould perform, did offer to him ſo high a promotion, ſo doth he likewiſe upon condition of our obedience to his commandments, oblige himſelf to put us into a like excellent and happy
Luk. 22. 29. ſtate; ſo our Lord himſelf declared, when he ſaid, I covenant to you a Kingdom, as my Father covenanted to me a Kingdom: it goeth before, Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations, there is the condition, faithful and conſtant adherence to Chriſt in doing and ſuffer-
Apoc. 1. 6. 5. 10. ing, upon performance of which condition our Lord tendereth that glorious reward of an eternal Kingdom: And the divine covenant being thus effectually fulfilled unto him, doth aſcertain us, that his overture
2 Tim. 2. 11, 12. will likewiſe be made good to us: It is, ſaith S. Paul, a faithful ſaying (that is, a word upon which we may confidently rely) if we be dead with him (dead to ſin and vanity) we ſhall alſo live with him (live with him in glory and joy) if we endure (or perſevere in obedience and patience after him) we ſhall alſo reign with him. And, To him (ſaith Apoc. 3. 22. our Lord in the Revelation) that overcometh, will I grant to ſit with me on my throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with my Father in his throne.

7. Laſtly, the conſideration of theſe points ſhould elevate our thoughts and affections from theſe inferior things here (the vain and baſe things of this world) unto heavenly things; according to that of S. Paul; If
Col. 3. 1. ye be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek the things above, where Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of God. To the head of our body we ſhould be joyn'd, continually deriving ſenſe and motion, direction and activity from him: where the maſter of our Family is, there ſhould our minds be, conſtantly attentive to his pleaſure, and ready to ſerve him; where the city is, whoſe denizons we are, and where our final reſt muſt be, there ſhould
Heb. 11. 16. our thoughts be, careful to obſerve the laws and orders, that we may enjoy the immunities and privileges thereof: In that country, where only we have any good eſtate, or valuable concernment, there our mind ſhould be, ſtudying to ſecure and improve our intereſt therein: our Pſal. 121. 1. reſolution ſhould be conformable to that of the Holy Pſalmiſt, I will
Col. 3. 4. lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help. Chriſt is our
Gal. 2. 20. life, ſaith S. Paul; And ſhall our ſouls be parted from our life? Chriſt
1 Tim. 1. 1. (ſaith he again) is our hope; And ſhall our mind and hope be aſunder?
Col. 1. 27. Chriſt is the principal object of our love, of our truſt, of our joy, of all Animus eſt, ubi amat. our beſt affections; And ſhall our affections be ſevered from their beſt objects? By his being in heaven all our treaſure becometh there; and where our treaſure is, there (if we apprehend and believe rightly, there naturally) our hearts will be alſo: if they be not, 'tis a ſign we take him not for our beſt treaſure. We do in our bodies ſojourn from the Lord, as St. Paul ſaith; but in our ſpirits we may, and ſhould be ever preſent, ever converſant with him; contemplating him with an eye of faith, faſtning our love upon him, repoſing our confidence in him, directing our Prayers and Thankſgivings to him; meditating upon his good Laws, his gracious Promiſes, his holy Life, and his merciful Performances for us. We ſhould not, by fixing our hearts and deſires upon earthly things (upon the vain delights, the ſordid intereſts, the fallacious and empty glories, the ſinful enjoyments here) nor by a dull and careleſs neglect of heavenly things, avert, eſtrange, or ſeparate our ſelves wholly from him. No, ſurſum corda, let us, unlooſing our hearts from theſe things, and with them ſoaring upward, follow and adhere to our Lord; ſo ſhall we anticipate that bleſſed future State, ſo ſhall we aſſure to our ſelves the poſſeſſion of heaven; ſo here enjoying our Lord in affection, we ſhall hereafter obtain a perfect fruition of his glorious and bliſsful preſence; the which God of his mercy by his grace vouchſafe us, through the ſame our ever bleſſed Saviour, to whom be for ever all glory and praiſe. Amen.

O God the King of Glory, who haſt exalted thine own Son Jeſus Chriſt with great triumph unto thy Kingdom in heaven; we beſeech thee leave us not comfortleſs, but ſend thine Holy Ghoſt to comfort us, and exalt us to the ſame place, whither our Saviour Chriſt is gone before; who liveth and reigneth with thee, and the Holy Ghoſt, one God world without end. Amen.

From thence He ſhall come to judg the quick and the dead.

Sermon XXXII.

THE Reaſonableneſs and Equity OF A FUTURE JUDGMENT.

ECCLES. 3. 17.

I ſaid in my heart, God ſhall judg the righteous and the wicked.

THESE words are the reſult of a ſerious contemplation upon the ſtate of human affairs, and common occurrences in this world: the Royal Philoſopher having (as he telleth us) given his heart to ſeek, and ſearch out by wiſdom concerning all things, that were done under heaven; what was the proper nature, what the juſt price of each thing; what real benefit or ſolid comfort each did afford; how every perſon did fare in the purſuit, and ſucceſs of his deſigns; did, after full examination, and careful balancing all things, reſolve upon ſuch concluſions as theſe, Eccl. 1. 13.

1. 8. 2. 11. That no kind of undertaking here did in effect yield any conſiderable profit, or complete ſatisfaction, but all in the iſſue did prove vain and vexatious.

2. 11. 9. 11. 11. 6. That no man from his care and induſtry, in any courſe of life, could promiſe himſelf any certain ſucceſs, or reap anſwerable reward.

That altho between wiſdom and folly (or between goodneſs and wickedneſs) there is ſome intrinſick difference of worth (one excelling the other, as light doth excel darkneſs) yet as to external advantages, and as to final event here, there is no great odds diſcernible; for that events (proſperous and adverſe) did appear to fall out, not according to the qualifications, or to the practices of men, but indifferently, according to the ſwinge of time and chance, and for that death and oblivion alike do ſeize upon all, ſo that apparently in that reſpect, a man hath no preeminence over a beaſt. 2. 13. 2. 15. 7. 15. 9. 1, 11. 2. 16. 3. 19.

That in common life nothing doth appear better, than for a man with the beſt advantage he can, to enjoy ordinary ſenſible delights and comforts, which his condition doth afford.

Eccleſ. 2. 24. 3. 12. 5. 18. 8. 15. 11. 10.

That in regard to the preſent things here, life were not deſirable to any man, the inconveniences and troubles thereof outweighing its benefits; ſo that even the wiſeſt, greateſt and happieſt perſons (ſuch as he himſelf was) had cauſe to hate life, and all their labour which they had taken under the ſun.

4. 2, 3. 2. 17, 18.

That the mind and affection of God toward men are very reſerved; the courſe of providence very abſtruſe, the reaſon of events unſearchable to the wit or ſtudy of men; ſo that we can hardly from appearances here deſcry any conſpicuous marks of God's favour, or his diſpleaſure.

3. 11. 8. 17. 11. 5.

From theſe obſervations, as from ſo many arguments, he doth both here and otherwhere in ſeveral places of this Book infer, that there ſhall be a divine judgment, paſſing upon all men, both righteous and wicked; whereby theſe ſeeming incongruities in the providential adminiſtration of things ſhall be ſalved; and in regard whereto our preſent opinions of things may be rectified: this he interpoſeth here, I ſaid in my heart (that is, by the conſideration of things I was perſuaded) that God ſhall judg the righteous and the wicked; this he ever now and then toucheth as incident to his meditations; this he in the cloſe of all propoſeth as the grand inducement to piety, and obedience to God's commandments; For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

11. 9. 12. 14. 5. 8. 8. 12. 7. 18. 2. 14.

This judgment he expreſſeth indefinitely, ſo as not to determine the kind or time thereof; and as to the abſolute force of his words, it may ſignifie the decree of God, to reward or puniſh men here in this life according to their deſerts, the which in holy Scripture is commonly ſtiled God's judgment: but the force of his arguments (or at leaſt of ſome of them) plainly doth infer a future judgment after death; and ſo therefore I ſhall take his ſenſe to be, grounding thereon this obſervation, That from a wiſe conſideration of humane affairs, and obvious events here, we may collect the reaſonableneſs, the equity, the expediency, the moral or prudential neceſſity of a future judgment, according to which men ſhall receive due recompences, anſwerable to their demeanour in this life. This obſervation it ſhall be my endeavour by God's help to declare, and prove by arguments deduced from the reaſon and nature of things.

Firſt, then I ſay, it is reaſonable and equal that there ſhould be a future judgment; this will appear upon many accounts.

1. Seeing all men come hither without any knowledge or choice, having their life as it were, obtruded on them; and ſeeing ordinarily (according to the general complaints of men) the pains of this life do over-balance its pleaſures; ſo that it ſeemeth, in regard to what men find here, a puniſhment to be born; it ſeemeth alſo thence equal, that men ſhould be put into a capacity, upon their good behaviour in this troubleſom ſtate, of a better ſtate hereafter, in compenſation for what they endure here; otherwiſe God might ſeem not to have dealt fairly with his creatures, and we might have ſome colour to expoſtulate with Job; Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery, and life to the bitter in ſoul? Why dyed I not from the womb? Why did I not give up the Ghoſt, when I came out of the belly?

Vitam non mehercule quiſquam accepiſſet, niſi daretur inſciis. Sen. ad Marc. 22.

Nemini contigit impune naſci. Sen. ad Marc. 15.

Eccleſ. 4. 3, 4. 2. 17.
Job 3. 3. 15. 10.
Jer. 20. 14, &c.

Job 3. 20, 11.

2. Seeing man is endued with a free choice, and power over his actions, and thence by a good or bad uſe thereof is capable of deſerving well or ill, it is juſt that a reſpective difference be made, according to due eſtimation; and that men anſwerably ſhould be proceeded with either here or hereafter, reaping the fruits of what they voluntarily did ſow. There is a natural relation between merits and rewards, which muſt come under taxation, and find effect, otherwiſe there would be no ſuch thing as juſtice and injuſtice in the world.

Job 4. 8.
Prov. 22. 8.
Jer. 32. 19.

3. Seeing there is a natural ſubordination of man to God, as of a creature to his Maker, as of a ſubject or ſervant to his Lord, as of a client or dependent to his Patron, Protectour and Benefactour, whence correſpondent obligations do reſult; it is juſt that men ſhould be accountable for the performance, and for the violation or neglect of them; ſo as accordingly either to receive approbation, or to be obliged to render ſatisfaction; reſpectively as they have done right, and payed reſpect to God, or as they have offered to wrong and diſhonour him; otherwiſe thoſe relations would ſeem vain and idle.

4. Seeing alſo there are natural relations of men to one another, and frequent tranſactions between them, founding ſeveral duties of humanity and juſtice; the which may be obſerved or tranſgreſſed; ſo that ſome men ſhall do, and others ſuffer much injury, without any poſſible redreſs from other-where, it is fit that a reference of ſuch caſes ſhould be made to the common patron of right, and that by him they ſhould be ſo decided, that due amends ſhould be made to one party, and fit correction inflicted on the other; according to that of S. Paul; It is a righteous thing with God to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled reſt with us in the revelation of our Lord Jeſus.

2 Theſ. 1. 6.

5. Whereas alſo there are many ſecret good actions, many inward good diſpoſitions, good wiſhes, and good purpoſes, unto which here no honour, no profit, no pleaſure, no ſort of benefit is annexed, or indeed well can be (they being indiſcernible to men) there are likewiſe many bad practiſes, and deſigns concealed, or diſguiſed, ſo as neceſſarily to paſs away without any check, any diſgrace, any damage or chaſtiſement here: it is moſt equal that hereafter both theſe kinds ſhould be diſcloſed, and obtain anſwerable recompence.

6. There are alſo perſons, whom, although committing grievous wrong, oppreſſion, and other heinous miſdemeanours, offenſive to God and man, yet, by reaſon of the inviolable ſacredneſs of their authority, or becauſe of their uncontrolable power, no juſtice here can reach, nor puniſhment can touch; who therefore ſhould be reſerved to the impartial, and irreſiſtible judgment of God; and fit it is, that (for ſatisfaction of juſtice, and diſtinction of ſuch from thoſe, who contrariwiſe behave themſelves well) a Tophet ſhould be prepared for them.

Iſa. 30. 33.

7. Upon theſe and the like accounts equity requireth, that a judgment ſhould paſs upon the deeds of men; and thereto the common opinions of men, and the private dictates of each man's conſcience do atteſt: for all men ſeeing any perſon to demean himſelf brutiſhly and unworthily, committing heinous diſorders and outrages, are apt to pronounce it unfit, that ſuch an one ſhould eſcape with impunity; likewiſe when innocent and good perſons (who do no harm, and do what good they can) do ſuffer, or do enjoy no benefit thence, it is a pity, will any indifferent perſon be ready to ſay, that ſuch a man's caſe ſhould not be conſidered; that ſome reparation, or ſome reward ſhould not be allotted to him: the which apprehenſions of men are in effect the verdicts of common ſenſe concerning the equity of a judgment to be.

8. Every man alſo having committed any notable miſdemeanour (repugnant to piety, juſtice, or ſobriety) doth naturally accuſe himſelf for it, doth in his heart ſentence himſelf to deſerve puniſhment, and doth ſtand poſſeſſed with a dread thereof; ſo, even unwillingly, avouching the equity of a judgment, and by a forcible inſtinct preſaging it to come. As likewiſe he that hath performed any virtuous or honeſt action, doth not only reſt ſatisfied therein, but hath raiſed in him a ſtrong hope of benefit to come from heaven in recompence thereof; the which apprehenſions, and hopes do involve an opinion, that it is reaſonable a judgment ſhould be. All which conſiderations (ſeeing it is manifeſt that there is not generally or frequently any ſuch exact judgment, or diſpenſation of rewards in this life, nor perhaps without changing the whole frame of things, and courſe of providence, can well be) do therefore infer the fitneſs, and equity of a future judgment.

It is farther, upon divers accounts, requiſite and needful, that men ſhould have an apprehenſion concerning ſuch a judgment appointed by God, and conſequently that ſuch an one ſhould really be. It is requiſite toward the good conduct of humane affairs here; or to engage men to the practice of virtue: It is neceſſary to the maintaining any belief concerning Religion, or ſenſe of piety; without it therefore no convenient Society among men can be well upheld.

1. It is, I ſay, needful to engage men upon the practice of any virtue, and to reſtrain them from any vice; for that indeed without it, no conſideration of reaſon, no proviſion of law here, can be much available to thoſe purpoſes. He that will conſider the nature of men, or obſerve their common practice (marking what apprehenſions uſually ſteer them, what inclinations ſway them, in their elections and purſuits of things) ſhall, I ſuppoſe, find, that from an invincible principle of ſelf-love, or ſenſuality, deriving it ſelf through all their motions of ſoul, and into all their actions of life, men generally do ſo ſtrongly propend to the enjoyment of preſent ſenſible goods, that nothing but a preſumption of ſome conſiderable benefit to be obtained by abſtinence from them, or of ſome grievous miſchief conſequent on the embracing them, can withhold them from purſuing ſuch enjoyment. From hence (ſeeing fancy, reaſon and experience do all prompt men to a foreſight of events, and force them to ſome regard of the conſequences of things) it followeth, that hope and fear are the main ſprings, which ſet on work all the wheels of humane action: ſo that any matter being propounded, if men can hope, that it will yield pleaſant, or profitable (that is, tending to pleaſant) fruits, they will undertake it; if they do fear its conſequences will be diſtaſteful, or hurtful, they will decline it: very rare it is to find, that the love or liking of a thing, as in it ſelf amiable to the mind, or ſutable to reaſon, doth incline men thereto; that honeſt things, bare of preſent advantages, and barren of hopeful fruits, are heartily purſued; that any thing otherwiſe averteth us from it ſelf, than as immediately preſenting ſome miſchief, or dangerouſly threatning it. When goodneſs therefore doth claſh with intereſt, or pleaſure, humane wiſdom (τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκός, natural ſenſe of the fleſh, which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, as oppoſite to virtue) will diſpoſe men to take part with theſe, and except ſome higher aid come in to ſuccour goodneſs, 'tis odds, that ever they will prevail over it. If it do appear, that virtue can pay Rom. 8. 6.

me

men well for their pains, they perhaps may be her Servants; but they'l will hardly wait on her in pure courteſie, or work in her ſervice for nothing; if ſhe bringeth viſibly a good dowry with her, ſhe may be courted; but her mere beauty, or worth will draw few ſuitors to her. Who will forgo ſenſible pleaſures, or wave ſubſtantial profit? who will reject the overtures of power, or honour, for her ſake? And if vice, how ill ſoever it look or lear, do offer fairly, how many perſons will be ſo nice, or ſqueamiſh, as merely out of fancy, or in deſpight, to her to refuſe or renounce her? In ſhort, as men are baited with pleaſure, or bribed with profit, ſo they purſue; as they are ſtung with pain, or curb'd with fear, ſo they eſchew things: it is a gift (or a ſpecious appearance of ſome good offered) which perpetually moveth the greateſt part, which often blindeth the eyes, and perverteth the heart of the wiſeſt ſort of men.

Deut. 16. 19. Exod. 23. 8.

It is farther to common ſenſe very obvious, that this life cannot promiſe, or afford to virtue any rewards apparently ſo conſiderable, as in the common judgment of men to overpoiſe the pains and difficulties required to the procurement and maintenance thereof (the pains and difficulties to be overgone in maſtering ſtubborn inclinations, in moderating greedy appetites, in reſtraining violent paſſions, in encountring frequent and ſtrong temptations, in abſtracting our minds and affections from ſenſible things, in aſſiduous watching over our thoughts, words and actions) together with the manifold inconveniences, croſſes and troubles, which do attend the ſtrict practice of virtue; that likewiſe here there are not ordinarily any ſuch diſcouragements affixed to vice, which do much weigh down the pleaſures with which it is tempered, and the advantages waiting on it.

As for human laws, made to encourage and requite virtue, or to check and chaſtiſe vice, it is alſo manifeſt that they do extend to caſes in compariſon very few; and that even as to particulars, which they touch, they are ſo eaſily eluded, or evaded, that without intrenching upon them, at leaſt without incurring their edg, or coming within the verge of their correction, men may be very bad in themſelves, extremely injurious to their neighbours, and hugely troubleſom to the world; ſo that ſuch laws hardly can make tolerable citizens, much leſs throughly good men, even in exteriour demeanour and dealing. However, no laws of men can touch internal acts of virtue or vice; they may ſometimes bind our hands, or bridle our mouths, or ſhackle our feet, but they cannot ſtop our thoughts, they cannot ſtill our paſſions, they cannot bend or break our inclinations; theſe things are beyond the reach of their cognizance, of their command, of their compulſion, or their correction; they cannot therefore render men truly good, or hinder them from being bad.

Upon which and the like conſiderations, it is plain enough, that ſetting aſide the perſuaſion of a future judgment, all other incentives to virtue, and reſtraints from vice, which either common experience ſuggeſteth, or Philoſophical ſpeculation may deviſe, are very weak and faint, and cannot reaſonably promiſe conſiderable effect: the native beauty, and intrinſick worth of virtue; or its ſutableneſs to reaſon, and the dignity of our nature; the grace and commendation with which it decketh the practiſers of it; its goodly, pleaſant and wholeſom fruits of manifold conveniences, of health to ſoul and body, of peace and amity among men, of tranquillity and ſatiſfaction in mind, if they do not reach beyond this tranſitory life, cannot to the common apprehenſions of men appear ſo conſiderable, or prove ſo efficacious, as to engage men cloſely and conſtantly to adhere thereto. Neither will the worſt of evils innate or acceſſory to vice (its eſſential deformity and turpitude, or its being diſagreeable to reaſon, and diſhonourable to human nature, together with the diſtempers, the damages, the diſgraces, the diſturbances apt to ſprout from it) if no more hereafter is to be feared in conſequence thereof, be ſufficient to deter or diſcourage men from it: the peril of death it ſelf (the worſt evil which men pretend to inflict, and that which our nature ſeemeth moſt to abhor) will not import much toward the diverting indigent, ambitious, or paſſionate men from the moſt deſperately wicked attempts; it is the obſervation of Cicero, from which he inferreth the need of ſuppoſing future puniſhments, as the only effectual reſtraints from ſuch actions. That, ſaith he, there might be in this life ſome fear laid upon wicked men, thoſe antients did think good that there ſhould be ſome puniſhments appointed in hell for impious perſons; becauſe indeed they underſtood, that ſetting theſe apart, death it ſelf was not to be feared.

Ut aliqua in vita formido improbis eſſet, apud inferos ejuſmodi quædam illi antiqui ſupplicia impiis conſtituta eſſe voluerunt, quod videlicet intelligebant his remotis non eſſe mortem ipſam pertimeſcendam. Cic. Catil. 4.

There have been indeed vented ſuch fine and ſtately notions as theſe; that Reaſon ſimply, however attended, doth challenge obedience to it ſelf; that Virtue is abundantly its own reward, and Vice a complete puniſhment to it ſelf; that we ſhould not in our practice be mercenary, regarding what profit or detriment will accrue from it, but ſhould be good abſolutely and gratis; that moral goods are the only deſirable goods, and moral evils the only evils to be grieved at; that nothing can happen amiſs to good men, and whatever their condition is they are perfectly happy; that nothing can truly benefit ill men, or exempt them from miſery. But theſe, and the like notions, frequently occurring in Philoſophers, as they are (being rightly underſtood, or taken in a qualified ſenſe) ſuppoſing Religion and a future judgment, evidently reaſonable and true (as alſo perhaps, even abſtracting from that ſuppoſition, they may have in them a kind of ſlim and dusky truth, diſcernible to one in a thouſand, who is very ſharp-ſighted, and looketh moſt wiſtly on them; as they may be reliſhed by a few perſons of very refined ſpirit, or of ſpecial improvement) ſo to the common herd of people (unto whoſe inclinations and capacities, it is fit that the general rules of practice, and the moſt effectual inducements thereto ſhould be ſquared) to men, immerſed in the cares, the toils, and the temptations of the world, they plainly are unſutable; their groſſer conceit cannot apprehend, their more rugged diſpoſition will not admit ſuch fine notions; they in effect, by the generality of men, have been ſlighted and exploded as incongruous to common ſenſe and experience, as the dictates of affectation or ſimplicity; as the dreams of idle perſons, addicted to ſpeculation, and regardleſs of the world, ſuch as it really doth exiſt, and will ever perſiſt, while men continue endued with the ſame natural inclinations, and affections: ſo that from ſuch notions little ſuccour can be expected toward promoting Virtue, or reſtraining Vice in the world.

Cic. de Fin. 3. Tuſc. 5.

Cic. de Leg. 1.

Sen. de Clem. 1. 1.

Neque bona, neque mala quæ vulgus putet; multos qui conflictari adverſis videantur beatos, ac pleroſque quanquam magnas per opes miſerrimos, ſi illi gravem fortunam conſtanter tolerent, hi proſperâ inconſultè utantur. Tac. Ann. 6.

Upon theſe conſiderations the neceſſity, or great uſefulneſs of ſuppoſing a Judgment doth appear; that it being caſt into the ſcales may to the common underſtanding of men evidently render Virtue more conſiderable and eligible than Vice; as even in conſequential profit and pleaſure far ſurpaſſing it.

2. Whence manifeſtly the ſame ſuppoſition is alſo needful for the welfare of human ſociety; the which, without the practice of juſtice, fidelity, and other virtues, can hardly ſubſiſt; without which practice indeed, a body of men would be worſe than a company of Wolves or Foxes; and vain it were to think, that it can any where ſtand without conſcience; and conſcience, without fear checking, or hope ſpurring it on, can be no more than a name: all ſocieties therefore we ſee have been fain to call in the notion of a future judgment to the aid of juſtice, and ſupport of fidelity; obliging men to bind their teſtimonies by oaths, and plight their troth by Sacraments; implying a dread of that divine judgment, to which they ſolemnly do then appeal, and make themſelves accountable.

Deos agere curam rerum humanarum, ex uſu vitæ eſt; pœnaſque maleficii, aliquando ſeras, nunquam autem irritas eſſe, &c. Plin. II. 7.

3. But farther, the perſuaſion concerning a future judgment, is upon peculiar accounts, moſt requiſite to the ſupport of Religion, and defence of Piety.

It is certain, that no authority, upon whatever reaſon or equity grounded, if it do not preſent competent encouragements to obedient ſubjects, if it do not hold forth an armed hand, menacing chaſtiſement to the refractory, will ſignify any thing, or be able to ſuſtain the reſpect due to it; that no laws, however in themſelves equal or commodious, if a certain account or trial, back'd with a diſpenſation of valuable rewards, and infliction of formidable puniſhments, be not annexed to them, will obtain any force, ſo as to be obſerved or regarded; that no obligation whatever, of duty or gratitude, will prevail upon men, if they do not apprehend themſelves under a conſtraint, to render an account, ſo as to be forced either to do reaſon, or to ſuffer for not doing it; ſo it is generally; and ſo it is even in regard to God, the Sovereign King and Governour of the world, as piety doth ſuppoſe him; his authority will never be maintained, his Laws will never be obeyed, the duties towards him will never be minded, without influence upon the hopes and fears of men; they will not yield to him any reverence, they will nowiſe regard his commands, if they may not from their reſpect and obedience expect good benefit, if they dread not a ſore vengeance for their rebellion or neglect; nothing to them will ſeem more fond, than to ſerve him, who doth not well requite for the performance, than to revere him, who doth not ſoundly puniſh for the neglect of his ſervice.

Foraſmuch alſo as piety doth require duties ſomewhat high and hard, as much croſſing the natural inclinations and deſires of men, it peculiarly for the over-ruling ſuch averſion, doth need anſwerably great encouragements to the practice, and determents from the tranſgreſſion of what it requireth; upon which ſcore it may alſo farther appear, that temporal judgments, and recompences here are not ſufficient to procure a due obedience to the laws of piety; for how indeed can he that for the ſake of piety doth undergo diſgrace, loſs, or pain, expect to be ſatisfied here? What other benefits can he preſume upon beſide thoſe, which he doth preſently forfeit?

Of this particular God may ſeem deſignedly to have ſet before us a pregnant inſtance or experiment, worthy our conſideration: God in a very notorious and affecting manner declared his will and law to the Jews;

Jews; and to engage them to obedience, he not only recommended it to them as very good in it ſelf, and very convenient for them to obſerve, but he enforced it with promiſes of the greateſt bleſſings concerning this life, that men are capable of, if they ſhould obey; and with curſes or menaces of the moſt diſmal miſchiefs imaginable in reference to this life, in caſe of diſobedience; that he both could and would in both reſpects make his word good, he did by miraculous diſpenſation of ſignal mercies and judgments moſt evidently ſhew and aſſure them: Yet what was the effect? it was that (as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth it) They deſpiſed the pleaſant land——and hearkened not unto the voice of the Pſal. 106. 24, 25. 78.37,56. Lord; Their heart was not right with God, neither were they ſtedfaſt in his covenant; they tempted and provoked the moſt high God, and kept not his teſtimonies: they did not ſo value thoſe benefits, they could not ſo dread thoſe penalties, as in regard to them to perſiſt for any time in a ſteady obedience; as not eaſily in deſpight of them to be drawn into the worſt of crimes prohibited to them: the ſweeteſt enjoyment of thoſe good things could not hold them cloſe to their duty, nor was the ſaddeſt ſmart of thoſe evils able to reclaim them from ſin; but even that very people (we may farther obſerve) having afterward (by ſparks of light darted from the Prophets, or otherwiſe) obtained ſome clearer notions, and ſtronger perſuaſions concerning a future ſtate, and rewards diſpenſed therein of higher conſideration than any temporal ones here, became thereupon very conſtant and reſolute in obſervance of their law; they proved valiant and fierce in defence thereof; they choſe rather to endure the moſt grievous afflictions, than to tranſgreſs it, as the hiſtory 2 Mac. 6. 26. 7. 23, 29. of the Maccabees doth inform us: they (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews remarked of them) waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight the Ar- Heb. 11. 34, 35. mies of the aliens; they alſo were tortured, not accepting a deliverance, 2 Mac. 7. 7. that they might obtain a better reſurrection; this hope it was, which then did raiſe them to ſo vigorous reſolution, and ſo chearful patience. From the ſame Apoſtle we alſo learn, that it was a ſenſe of our being Heb. 11. 26. here in a tranſitory ſtate, and having an eye to the recompence of reward after this life, which did engage the good Patriarchs and Prophets of the Old Teſtament ſo readily upon all occaſions to comply with God's will, and to perform the moſt difficult commands by him impoſed on them: theſe things they did, not, ſaith the Apoſtle, having indeed received the Heb. 11. 13. promiſes (that is, not having the Evangelical Promiſes concerning a future life in ſo formal and expreſs a manner, as we now have propoſed to them;) but yet having ſeen them afar off, and having been perſwaded of them, and having embraced them, and having (in declaration of thoſe perceptions and perſwaſions) confeſſed that they were ſtrangers, and pilgrims upon earth.

The like obſervation might be made even concerning the Pagans, who while the perſwaſions concerning judgments and rewards after this life were retained in common vogue, did live more innocently and virtuouſly; but after thoſe generally were diſcarded, ſo that the Satyriſt could ſay, that ſcarce boys did believe any Ghoſts, or ſubterraneous Judicatures, then did all wickedneſs mainly prevail and overflow.

Eſſe aliquos manes, & ſubterranea regna——
Vix pueri credunt. Juv. Sat. 2.

Comparing which things we may diſcern, as the weakneſs of conſiderations merely regarding this preſent life, ſo the force of thoſe, which concern a future ſtate, in order to the procuring obedience to God's Laws; ſuppoſing both entertained with the ſame faith or perſuaſion of mind; from whence the neceſſity of that judgment, which we ſpeak of, toward the maintenance of piety doth appear.

But beyond theſe things this point is very needful to ſecure the very foundations of all Religion and Piety, the exiſtence of God, and his providence over human affairs: the belief of a Deity, according to any tolerable notion thereof, and of a providence over us, apt to engage or encourage us to religious performances; without ſuppoſition of a judgment, and of a diſpenſation according to it of future rewards, cannot be well maintained; the objections aſſailing them would ſtrike too hard, and pierce to deep, were we not furniſhed with this good ſhield to receive and repel them.

Τὸ ῥᾷστον εἶπας, αἰτιάσασθαι θεοὺς. Eurip.

Eccl. 9. 1, 2. To find that of the Preacher certified by experience; No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before him; all things come alike to all; there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that ſacrificeth, and to him that ſacrificeth not: As is the good, ſo is the ſinner; and he that ſweareth, as he that ſweareth not.

Eccl. 10. 4. To behold virtue groveling on the ground, and trampled on, while vice is mounted on the perch, and ſitteth proudly domineering; to view innocence and right ſadly groaning under oppreſſion, while fraud and violence do triumph and inſult: which ſights are obvious in the world, as the Preacher obſerved; (Eccl. 3. 16.) I ſaw, ſaid he, under the ſun, the place of judgment, that wickedneſs was there, and the place of righteouſneſs, that iniquity was there; (Eccl. 4. 1.) I conſidered all the oppreſſions that are done under the ſun; and behold the tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed; on the ſide of their oppreſſors there was power, but they had no comforter. So did Job alſo take notice, when he ſaid, (Job 12. 7.) The tabernacles of the robbers proſper, and they that provoke God are ſecure; and the Pſalmiſt complained of wicked oppreſſors, (Pſal. 17. 10.) They are encloſed in their own fat, and with their mouth they ſpeak proudly: and, the Prophet Malachy; (Mal. 3. 15.) Now we call the proud happy, yea they that work wickedneſs are ſet up, yea they that tempt God are delivered.

Sed cùm res hominum tantâ caligine volvi
Adſpicerem, lætoſque diu florere nocentes
Verſarique pios, rurſus labefacta cadebat Religio, &c. Claud. in Ruff. 1. init.

To obſerve it frequently to happen, that moſt innocent and virtuous perſons do conflict all their days with hardſhips and croſſes; and ſometime after all die ſadly in pain, and under ignominy, while perſons moſt outragious in lewdneſs and iniquity do flouriſh and rant it out in a long undiſturbed courſe of proſperity, and in the end depart hence fairly and quietly; according to that in Eccleſiaſtes; (Ecclеſ. 6. 15.) There is a juſt man that periſheth in his righteouſneſs, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in wickedneſs: the former was the caſe of Socrates, of Phocion, of Regulus, of many other remarkably gallant and worthy perſons; the latter, as Cicero obſerved, of Dionyſius, who after thirty years of unjuſt and cruel domination, in much ſplendor, died quietly in his bed.

Dies deficiat ſi velim numerare, quibus bonis malè evenerit, nec minùs ſi commemorem, quibus improbis optimè. Cic. de Nat. D. 3.

Dionyſius 30 annos Tyrannus fuit opulentiſſimæ, & beatiſſimæ civitatis——atque in ſuo lectulo mortuus. Cic. ib.

Thus, I ſay, to ſee and conſider, that commonly to juſt men it happeneth according to the work of the wicked, and to wicked men according to the work of the righteous (Eccleſ. 8. 14.) (as the Preacher ſpeaketh) that here piety with its beſt friends do ſuffer deeply, and impiety with its worſt abetters do notably thrive; yea that not only good men ſuffer, but often ſuffer for being good (from envy and malignity of men that hate goodneſs) and that bad men not only proſper, but proſper by their wickedneſs (by their fraud, and violence) hath been a huge ſcandal to religion, which hath cauſed many to ſtumble, hath caſt ſome quite down into the gulf of Atheiſm, or Epicuriſm; hath brought ſome men to doubt, hath induced others flatly to deny, that there is a God (that is, a moſt wiſe, powerful, juſt and good Being, every where preſent) or that he being, doth preſide over, or any-wiſe concern himſelf in our affairs. From this ſource did flow all thoſe impious conceits, which Seneca thus expreſſed: One objecteth to the Gods neglect of us, another iniquity; another caſts them out beyond his world, and leaves them forlorn as lazy and dull, without any light, or any work. From hence it hath been, that in all places and times, there have been perſons ready to ſay with thoſe in the Pſalms, How doth God know, is there knowledg in the moſt High? The Lord doth not ſee, neither doth the God of Jacob regard it; God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, and will never ſee it.

Improborum proſperitates, ſecundæque res redarguunt (ut Diogenes dicebat) vim omnem Deorum & poteſtatem. Cic. ibid.

Ἢ χρὴ μηκέθ' ἡγεῖσθαι θεοὺς, εἰ τἄδικ' ἔσται τῆς δίκης ὑπέρτερα. Eurip. Elect.

Vid. Luc. in Jup. Confut. Plut. de placitis, &c. Plin. 11. 7.

Alius illis objicit negligentiam noſtri, alius iniquitatem; alius illos extra mundum ſuum projicit, & ignavos hebeteſque illos ſine luce, ſine ulla opere deſtituit. Sen. de Benef. 7. 31.

Pſal. 73. 10. Pſal. 94. 7. Pſal. 10. 11.

And not only upon blind Pagans and profane perſons, but even upon the moſt pious of God's people theſe conſiderations have made impreſſion, extorting from their hearts and mouths expoſtulations like that of Jeremy; Wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper, wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherouſly? and that of Job, Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, and are mighty in power? their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight, their houſes are ſafe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them——they ſpend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave; and that, Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldſt oppreſs, that thou ſhouldſt deſpiſe the work of thine hand, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? Such queſtions did this kind of obſervations draw forth, and it ſhrewdly tempted them to a diſſatisfaction in their pious practice, that they were ready to ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; or with thoſe in the Prophet, It is vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord? ſo that hence, their feet were almoſt gone, and their ſteps had well nigh ſlipped into a diſtruſt of God's wiſe and juſt providence; they were moved to ſuſpect, that God did not indeed bear that ſpecial regard to goodneſs, and affection to good men, that great hatred of iniquity, and diſpleaſure toward the lovers of it, which religion ſuppoſed, as the main grounds of piety: thus, I ſay, have men, both good and bad, upon ſuch occaſions been induced, or tempted to doubt concerning thoſe fundamental points; and that not without apparently weighty cauſe, admitting that all accounts are made up here in this life, between God and men; or that there is no reckoning be-

Quippe ſapientiſſimos veterum, quique ſectam eorum æmulantur, diverſos reperies; ac multis inſitam opinionem non initia noſtri, non finem; non denique homines Diis curæ; ideò crebèrrima & triſtia in bonos, læta apud deteriores eſſe. Tac. Ann. VI.

Jer. 12. 1. Job 21. 7.

Job 10. 3.

Pſal. 73. 13.

Mal. 3. 14.

Pſal. 73. 2.

hind to be adjuſted in another world by divine juſtice and goodneſs; then indeed that ſaying, 'tis a reproach to the Deity that bad men do proſper, and good men ſuffer, hath a plauſible ſemblance of truth; then he that affirmed, there was no God, and heaven to be a void place, proving his aſſertion hence, that while he thus affirmed, he found himſelf in a good caſe, did argue ſmartly; then Diagoras, from an unpuniſhed perjury, collected probably, that God did not exiſt, or did not mind what was done here; for that being, and regarding things, he would not have endured himſelf to be ſo affronted, and thoſe under his care ſo abuſed; then had Dionyſius ſome reaſon to juſtifie his ſacrilege by his proſperous navigation from committing it; and with fair colour Diogenes might ſay, that Harpalus his ſucceſsful treachery and rapine, did, teſtimonium dicere adverſos deos, bear teſtimony againſt the Gods, as guilty of injuſtice, or careleſsneſs: theſe ſort of diſcourſes would, I ſay, upon excluding the ſuppoſition of future judgment, have ſome validity, or ſpeciouſneſs; and for want of that ſuppoſition we may obſerve the Apologies for providence, elaborately compoſed by ſome Philoſophers, to be very lame and unſatisfactory. But ſuppoſing a judgment hereafter deſigned by God, and a proceeding with all men according thereto, all difficulty in theſe caſes vaniſheth, all objections have plainly no moment or force: Then God's preſent connivence, or patient indulgence toward wicked men will ſignifie no more, than what moſt becometh him as God and Governour of the world, his moſt excellent goodneſs and admirable clemency toward his creatures and ſubjects, in waiting to be gracious, and providing for their return to a better mind; affording them time, and means of reforming their minds and manners, that ſo they may eſcape the ſtroak of final vengeance; ſo in moſt caſes, and in ſome alſo ſignifying his wiſe juſtice in ſuffering bad men to proceed forward to an inexcuſable pitch of guilt, in order to their more clearly juſt condemnation, and ſevere puniſhment hereafter; that being κατηρτισμένοι εἰς ἀπώλειαν, throughly fit (as S. Paul ſpeaketh) or ripe for perdition, being prepared (as the Prophet Jeremy expreſſeth it, or ſanctified) for the ſlaughter, being by their preſent eaſe, and abuſed proſperity, become fat and fair, they may fall more proper victims to divine ſeverity.

Θεῶν ὄνειδος τοὺς κακοὺς εὐδαιμονεῖν.

Nullos eſſe Deos, inane cœlum,
Affirmat Selius, probátque quòd ſe
Factum, dum negat hæc, videt beatum.
Mart. 4. 20.

—Sunt nobis nulla profectò
Numina, cum cœlo rapiantur ſecula caſu
Mentimur regnare Jovem, &c.
Luc. VII. 445.

Rom. 2. 4. 9. 22.
2 Pet. 3. 9, 15.

Rom. 9. 22. Jer. 12. 3.

Ἄγνισον αὐτοὺς εἰς ἡμέραν σφαγῆς αὐτῶν. 70.

Ut victimæ ſaginantur, ut hoſtiæ coronantur. Min. Fel.

Then alſo from God's permitting good men to ſuffer, how ſmartly ſoever, nothing can be inferr'd prejudicial unto divine goodneſs, or juſtice; ſince they are thereby made fitter for, and do attain a ſurer title to thoſe excellent rewards, which he upon ſuch tryal and approbation of their virtues doth intend to confer upon them; eſpecially conſidering, that afflictions are neceſſary both as means of rendring men good, and as occaſions of expreſſing their goodneſs; that ſcarce any virtue could ſubſiſt, or could appear without them.

Juſtis quicquid malorum irrogatur, non eſt pœna criminis, ſed virtutis examen. Aug.

Experitur, indurat, ſibi ipſum præparat. Sen. de Prov. 1.

There could be no ſuch thing as Patience, if there were no adverſities to be endured; no ſuch thing as contentedneſs, if there were no wants to be felt; no ſuch thing as induſtry, if there were no pains to be taken; no ſuch thing as humility, if ſenſible infirmities and croſſes did not prompt us to ſober thoughts, and ſhew us what we are. There would be no true wiſdom, no clear knowledg of our ſelves, or right judgment of things, without experiencing the worſt half of things. We ſhould never learn to maſter our paſſions, or temper our appetites, or wreſt our inclinations to a compliance with reaſon, if that diſcipline were away, which the Holy Pſalmiſt intimateth, ſaying; It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy ſtatutes. How much we do love God, how ſubmiſſive we are to God's will, how little we do value theſe mean things here, we cannot otherwiſe, than by willingly undergoing, or patiently bearing afflictions, well expreſs; without it no ſure trial of virtue can be, without it no excellent example of goodneſs had ever been. As therefore it is neceſſary, that good men, even that they may be good, ſhould ſuffer here; ſo it is, ſuppoſing a future judgment, very juſt that they ſhould do ſo; that they may acquire a title to the rewards following it; rewards far outweighing the light afflictions they are put to endure here.

Vid. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. α.

Semper eſſe felicem, & ſine morſu animi tranſire vitam, ignorare eſt rerum naturæ alteram partem. Sen. de Prov. 4.

Pſal. 119. 67, 71, 75.

No Martyrs, if no Perſecution.

Magnum exemplum niſi mala fortuna non invenit. Sen. de Prov. 3.

2 Cor. 4. 17. Rom. 8. 18.
Mat. 5. 12.

In reference therefore to the preſent impunity of bad men, and letting iniquity to prevail, or to proceed here, that which cured David, Job and Solomon, may ſatisfie us; going into the ſanctuary, and underſtanding the end of thoſe men; conſidering that the wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction, and ſhall be brought out to the day of wrath; that after all their jollity and pleaſure, God for all theſe things will bring them into judgment. In regard to the righteous being afflicted here, that of S. Paul may ſuffice, ſaying of them; It is a manifeſt inſtance of God's righteous judgment, that they may be made worthy of the Kingdom of God, for which they ſuffer; that of our Saviour, Bleſſed are ye, when men ſhall hate you, and ſhall reproach you; rejoyce ye in that day, and leap for joy, for behold your reward is great in heaven; that of Solomon, Though a ſinner do evil a hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet ſurely I know, that it ſhall be well with them that fear God: In reſpect to both ſorts of men, that of S. Peter will reſolve all doubt; God knoweth how to deliver the godly out of trials, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed; all ſcores will be fully quitted by the execution of that ſentence pronounced by our Judg himſelf: The wicked ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, but the righteous into life eternal.

Pſal. 73. 17.
Job 21. 30.
Rom. 2. 5.
Eccleſ. 11. 9.
2 Theſ. 1. 5.
Luk. 6. 22, 23.
Eccleſ. 8. 12.
Iſa. 3. 10, 11.
2 Pet. 2. 29.
Matt. 25. 46.

This Hypotheſis doth indeed even to our common ſenſe throughly ſolve moſt of thoſe appearances in the courſe of things here, which otherwiſe might ſeem intricate or ſtrange; clearing providence from all miſpriſions, and ſatisfying our minds ſo far as is needful, concerning the reaſons of moſt occurrences here: from it we may learn, Διὰ τοῦτο ἀπω κρίσις, ἵνα κοινῇ πάντες στεφανωθῶμεν, ἵνα ἀπὸ πονηρίας πολλοὶ μεταβληθῶμεν εἰς ἀρετήν. Chryſ. in Matt. Or. 11.

That God in this great drama, made up of his providence, and our free-will concurrently or interchangeably acting doth mean, in order to this cataſtrophe of judgment in the laſt and chief Act, to let men go on, playing their parts undiſturbedly, according to their inclinations and humours, yet within certain limits, and under the check of his hand, in proper ſeaſons, to prevent confuſion of all, interpoſing it ſelf.

That it is not therefore fit now by open ſignifications, either of approbation or diſlike, often to interrupt the proceſs of human actions; eſpecially conſidering that the final doom concerning perſons, is not to be grounded upon ſingle paſſages, or the particular acts of one time, but upon the whole body of action paſſing through the courſe of each man's part, in the place and time allotted to him; and that he, who now acteth laudably, may, before all is done, come to faulter: he that now behaveth himſelf untowardly, may afterward learn to do better, and in the end come off well.

Eccleſ. 3. 11. 8. 17. 11. 5. That hence it is not to be wondred, that God here ſhould be ſomewhat reſerved in diſpenſing teſtimonies of favour to thoſe, who at preſent do ſeem good, ſomewhat ſparing in declaring wrath toward thoſe, who now appear bad; that he ſhould not miraculouſly pour down golden ſhowers on the heads of the righteous, nor ſend fire from heaven, as Luk. 9. 55. angry man would have him, upon every provocation, to conſume ſinners.

That this life is not a time of reaping, but of ſowing; not of approbation, but of trial; not of triumph, but of combat: this world is not a place of enjoyment, but of work; our condition here is not a ſtate of ſettlement, but of travel: whence no man ſhould expect more of encouragement, than is needful to ſupport him in this work and way; ſhould look to receive wages before his task is done; to get the prize, before he hath gone through the race; to gather the ſpoils, before he hath fought out the battle; to enjoy reſt, before he is at his journeys end; to be put in full poſſeſſion of happineſs, before his right and title thereto is completely aſſured: That no man alſo ſhould preſume or pleaſe himſelf upon preſent impunity for his misbehaviour or ſloth (like thoſe of whom the Preacher ſaith, Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work Eccleſ. 8. 11. is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil) ſeeing this is the ſeaſon of mercy and patience, when God commonly doth not farther inflict croſſes on us, than may ſerve to mind us of our duty, or urge us to the performance of it; and ſeeing the longer vengeance is withheld, the more heavy it will at laſt fall on us, if we deſpiſe the preſent ſeaſon of grace, and proceed to the end in impenitence: That preſent impunity therefore is a ſore puniſhment, and correction here a really great favour.

That ordinarily temporal proſperity and adverſity, as in compariſon to things relating to our future ſtate, they are plainly inconſiderable, ſo they can be no arguments of God's ſpecial favour or diſpleaſure; whence it appeareth to be no ſmall raſhneſs to conclude how God ſtands affected to any perſon from what befalleth him here (as thoſe who infer'd concerning the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate mixed with their ſacrifices; and concerning thoſe Jews, upon whom the Tower in Siloam did Luk. 13. 1, &c. fall, that they were more ſinners than others of their Nation) yea, that if we muſt be interpreting God's mind from theſe occurrences, it is rather more reaſonable to conceive, that God diſliketh them whom he doth not check, and approveth them whom he chaſtiſeth; whence the proſperity of bad men is rather pitiable, than invidious, as that which aggravateth and ſtrengthneth their wickedneſs, which accumulateth guilt, which draweth them forward, and plungeth them deeper into perdition; that the adverſity of good men is no miſery, but a bleſſing and happineſs to them; as exerciſing and fortifying their virtues, enſuring their ſtate, endearing them to God: however,

Prov. 3. 12. Job. 5. 17.

Heb. 12. 7. Apoc. 3. 19.

Prov. 23. 17. Luk. 16. 25.

That God plainly doth mean to vilify theſe preſent things, appearing to our ſenſe good or evil, by ſcattering them abroad with an indifferent hand; ſo that his friends taſte as little good, and as much evil, as his enemies.

Nullo modo poteſt Deus magis concupita traducere, quàm ſi illa in turpiſſimos deſert, ab optimis abigit. Sen. de Prov. 5.

That there is no reaſon to wonder, or to complain, that things here do not go on in a courſe ſo ſmooth and ſtreight, as they ſhould do; for that vanity and iniquity have their part and time to act upon this ſtage, yea are allowed ſometimes a ſeeming reign; but Juſtice, tho at preſent it ſeemeth to ſleep, or to wink at things, will at length awake, and effectually beſtir it ſelf; that Right, although here it may be ſometime croſſed, or foiled, yet it can never be quell'd or overthrown; it may be ſuſpended, but cannot be ſuppreſſed; it may be ſomewhat eclipſed, but it cannot be quite extinguiſhed; yea infallibly in the end it will triumphantly prevail.

Dantur bonis nè putentur mala, dantur malis nè putentur ſumma bona. Aug.

That no good deſign ſhall be undertaken, nor any honeſt labour can be ſpent in vain, ſeeing although they chance to find no ſucceſs, or to yield no fruit here, yet they cannot fail to obtain a happy iſſue, and a plentiful reward hereafter.

That how ſmall ſoever the difference doth now appear between wiſe men, and fools (or between virtuous and vicious perſons) there will be hereafter a vaſt diſcrimination made, when in conſequence of that upright trial one ſhall enter into eternal bliſs, the other ſhall fall into an abyſs of miſery.

That this life is not contemptible, nor all things here utterly vain; ſeeing that upon this life is founded our eternal ſtate; ſeeing theſe occurrences have influence upon our eternal joy, or wo; ſeeing all things here will conduce to the illuſtration of divine mercy, or juſtice. That God is indeed here Deus abſconditus (as the Prophet ſtileth him) a God that hideth himſelf; adviſedly ſuffering his goodneſs and juſtice to be under a cloud, that at length they may break out more glorioully in that day, when (as St. Paul ſaith) his δικαιοκρισία, his moſt righteous dealing (both in governance of all affairs now, and in deciding of all caſes then) ſhall be revealed, and made conſpicuous to all the world.

Iſa. 45. 15.

Rom. 2. 5.

Thus doth it, upon many accounts, appear fit and needful, that there ſhould be a future judgment; the apprehenſion thereof being the ſharpeſt ſpur to virtue, the ſtrongeſt curb from vice, the ſureſt fence of human ſociety, the ſafeſt bulwark of Religion (ſecuring the authority of God, and guarding his providence, together with all his holy attributes, from all batteries, all ſiniſter aſperſions, all profane miſconſtructions) in ſhort, the moſt effectual means, if it be heartily embraced, to render men in their minds, and in their enjoyments ſober, juſt in their dealings toward their neighbour, and in all their life pious toward God; there being indeed no conſideration, whereof the mind of man is capable, more apt to beget in him a care and conſcience of what he doeth, than this; that after a very ſhort and tranſitory life, all his actions muſt undergo a ſtrict ſcrutiny, according to the reſult whereof he ſhall be either approved and rewarded, or condemned and puniſhed; whereof any man being throughly perſwaded, and any-wiſe conſidering it, he cannot ſurely but accuſe himſelf of extreme folly, and madneſs, if he doth not provide for that account, and order all his practice with a regard thereto. The which uſe of this point God by his grace diſpoſe us to make, for the ſake of Jeſus our bleſſed Redeemer, to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe.

1 Theſ. 5. 23. Now the very God of peace ſanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole ſpirit, and ſoul, and body, be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

From

From thence He ſhall come to judg the quick and the dead.

Sermon XXXIII.

THE CERTAINTY and CIRCUMSTANCES OF A Future Judgment
FROM Divine Revelation.

ACTS 10. 42.

And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to teſtify, that it is he which was ordained by God to be judg of quick and dead.

THeſe words are part of a Sermon preached by St. Peter to Cornelius and his friends, wherein the Apoſtle briefly declareth unto them the chief particulars in the hiſtory of Chriſt, together with ſome main points of Chriſtian doctrine moſt fit for them to know; particularly he doth in theſe words expreſs the point concerning the future Judgment; reporting that our Lord eſpecially did charge his Apoſtles to preach unto the people and teſtify, that is, firſt publickly to declare and explain, then by convenient proofs, eſpecially by divine atteſtations, to evince and perſwade this point; the importance whereof, and eminence among other Chriſtian doctrines doth hence plainly appear, that the author of our faith did make ſo ſpecial proviſion, and gave ſo expreſs charge concerning the promulgation and probation thereof: the which circumſtance is indeed remarkable and weighty, but I ſhall not inſiſt on it, meaning immediately to ſet upon conſidering the point it ſelf, as it is here laid down in theſe terms——that it is he which was ordained by God to be Judg of quick and dead: in which words are couched three particulars moſt conſiderable;

1. A judgment ordained by God, and to be declared to men.
2. The Judg by whom immediately that judgment is adminiſtred, He; Jeſus, our Lord and Saviour.
3. The extent of that judgment, or its adequate object, quick and dead.

Theſe particulars I ſhall in order touch, inſerting ſome material conſiderations about the nature, and manner of this judgment, with ſome reaſons why it ſhould be thus managed; then I ſhall adjoin ſome practical applications.

I. There is a judgment ordained by God, and to be declared to men; that is, concerning the perſons and actions of men performed in this life. How juſt and fit it is that there ſhould be ſuch a judgment, how uſeful and requiſite the declaration thereof is upon ſeveral accounts (for engaging men upon the practice of Virtue, and reſtraining them from Vice; for the preſervation and maintenance of human Society, for the ſupport and defence of Religion, for the vindication of divine Providence, and illuſtration of all God's holy Attributes) I have already endeavoured to declare; and in that regard I ſhall content my ſelf now to ſay, that as upon the apparent equity and uſefulneſs of this doctrine, all nations commonly have ever embraced the general ſubſtance thereof, as a fundamental principle of their Religion (all men commonly with a ready inclination having avowed it reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that every man after this life ſhall be brought unto a juſt and impartial bar, where his doings ſhall be exactly ſcan'd, and his perſon anſwerably doomed unto a comfortable or afflictive recompence) ſo our Religion in a peculiar manner doth moſt expreſly aſſert, moſt clearly deſcribe, and moſt vigorouſly inculcate it, with all poſſible advantage, both for the clearing God's dealings and attributes, and for the excitement of men to a virtuous and pious life; the nature, manner, proceſs and reſult of the future judgment are in the Holy Scripture moſt punctually ſet down.

Juſt. M. p. 1. & p. 106.

1. It teacheth us, that God hath appointed a determinate time for this judgment: God (ſaith St. Paul) hath appointed a day, in which he will judg the world in righteouſneſs; that which is called the day of judgment, the laſt day, the day of the Lord, the great, and the illuſtrious day; and by ſignal excellency, The day; and, That day; intimating, beſide the certainty of the thing it ſelf, the moſt eſpecial regard, that men are concerned to bear thereto.

Act. 17. 31.
Act. 2. 20.
Jud. 6.
2 Tim. 1. 18.
4. 8.
1 Theſ. 5. 4.
Heb. 10. 25.

2. That in order to this judgment all the actions of men are with greater exactneſs regiſtred in books (the books of divine omniſcience, ſeeing all things preſent, and retaining all things paſt, which nothing can eſcape) The books ('tis ſaid in the Revelation) were opened, and the dead were judged from the things written in the books, according to their works.

(Job 13. 27.
14. 17.)
Rev. 20. 12.
Dan. 7. 10.

3. That in order thereto, there ſhall be effected by Divine Power and Command a general reſurrection of all perſons, both juſt and unjuſt:

The hour (ſaith our Lord) is coming, in which all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice, and ſhall come forth; they that have done good to the reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the reſurrection of damnation.

Act. 24. 15. Joh. 5. 28.

4. That then all perſons ſo raiſed ſhall be preſented at the bar of our Lord to anſwer and undergo their trial. I ſaw (ſaith S. John) the great and ſmall ſtanding before God's Throne; and, We muſt all (ſaith S. Paul) be made appear, and be ſet forth at the judgment ſeat of Chriſt; and, The ſon of man (ſaith our Lord) ſhall ſit upon the throne of his glory, and all nations ſhall be gathered together before him.

Revel. 10. 12. Rom. 14. 10. φανερωθῆναι. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Παρίστασθαι. Matt. 25. 31, 32.

5. That then and there every thought, every word, every work of men ſhall be throughly diſcloſed and diſcuſſed; ſo that it, together with its due quality and deſert, ſhall plainly appear; all the deſigns and pretences of men ſhall be laid bare; every caſe ſhall be conſidered, every plea heard and ſcan'd, the merits of every cauſe weighed in an even ballance, according to truth and equity; Mens neglects and omiſſions of duty ſhall alſo come under conſideration; an account will be exacted of all the talents entruſted to any man (of the abilities, opportunities and advantages he ever had of doing God ſervice) and of what improvemenis anſwerable he hath made; what men have done themſelves, and what they have done by others from the influence of their advice, their perſuaſion, or their example, ſhall be ſearcht out, and poiſed; God (ſaith S. Paul) will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of hearts; and, Of every idle word, that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall render an account at the day of judgment, ſaith our Lord; and, After a long time (ſaith he again) the Lord of thoſe ſervants cometh, and reckoneth with them, &c. and, Every work (ſaith the Preacher) God ſhall bring into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

1 Cor. 4. 5. Rom. 2. 29. 1 Pet. 4. 5. Matt. 12. 36. Mat. 25. 18. Eccleſ. 12. 4.

6. That upon each man, according to the true quality of his doings, thus detected, examined, and ſtated, a definitive ſentence ſhall paſs, whereby he ſhall be acquitted, and approved, or condemned and reprobated; τότε ὁ ἔπαινος γενήσεται ἑκάστῳ, then (ſaith S. Paul) praiſe ſhall be to each one; praiſe, that is generally (by an εὐφημισμός, or favourable manner of ſpeech) a due taxation and eſteem, according to merit; then, Well done good and faithful ſervant; and, O thou bad, and ſlothful ſervant, ſhall be pronounced to one, or t'other ſort of men, reſpectively, according to their demeanour here.

1 Cor. 4. 5. Matt. 25. 21, 26.

7. That according to the purport of this ſentence a diſcrimination ſhall be made; and to one party a gracious reward, correſpondent to the quality and meaſure of their good works in a bliſsful place, to the other a ſorer puniſhment, in proportion to their demerits, in a place of miſery; to the one everlaſting joy and glory above in heaven, to the other endleſs ſorrow and ſhame beneath in hell, ſhall be aſſigned, and diſpenſed effectually. The ſon of man ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his Angels, and then he ſhall reward every man according to his works; He will ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats; and he ſhall ſet his ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left; then the King ſhall ſay unto them on his right hand, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the World——and, Then he ſhall ſay alſo unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye curſed into everlaſting fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels. And, The good and faithful ſervant ſhall enter into his Maſter's joy, the bad and ſlothful ſhall be caſt into utter Μισθαποδοσία. Heb. 11. 26. Matt. 16. 27. Matt. 25. 32, &c. Matt. 25. 21, 30.

darkneſs, where is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; ſo our Lord himſelf expreſſeth it; and S. Paul thus, We muſt, ſaith he, all appear before the 2 Cor. 5. 10. tribunal of God, ἵνα κομίσηται ἕκαστος, that each one may bear away the Rom. 2. 6. things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good, or bad; and, God will render to every man according to his works.... to them, who by patient continuance in well doing ſeek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doeth evil: and even of old the Dan. 12. 2. Prophet Daniel thus briefly did expreſs this different doom; Many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake; ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt. Hence in regard to Act. 3. 19. one party is the time of judgment ſtiled the ſeaſon of refreſhment, the Eph. 4. 30. Luc. 14. 12. day of redemption, the time of recompence; in reference to the other,
Col. 3. 24. the day of wrath, the day of deſtruction, the time of vengeance; when
Rom. 2. 5. our Lord will, as S. Paul ſaith, take vengeance on them that know not God,
2 Pet. 3. 7. 2 Theſ. 1. 8. and obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

8. We are alſo farther taught, that all this ſhall be tranſacted in a regular, publick, and moſt ſolemn manner, in open court, in the face and audience of all the world, before Angels and men.
2 Theſ. 1. 7. Luk. 9. 26. For our Lord is deſcribed coming to judgment with Matt. 25. 31. 16. 27. Jud. 14. attendance of all the Holy Angels; and the Saints, 1 Cor. 6. 2. Matt. 19. 28. being themſelves firſt approved, ſhall become aſſeſſors there; and all men are repreſented as preſent Luk. 12. 8, 9. at the trial, or as Spectators and Auditors thereof: Whoſoever (ſaith Matt. 10. 32. our Lord) ſhall confeſs me before men, him ſhall the Son of man alſo con- feſs before the Angels of God; but he that denyeth me before men, ſhall be Luk. 12. 2. denyed before the Angels of God. And, There is nothing covered that ſhall not be revealed; neither hid, that ſhall not be known: whatſoever ye have ſpoken in darkneſs ſhall be heard in the light, and that which ye have ſpoken in cloſets ſhall be proclaimed upon the houſe tops.

9. That alſo the judgment ſhall paſs to the full conviction, and entire ſatisfaction of all that are preſent; ſo that each one concerned therein ſhall be forced in conſcience to acquieſce in his doom, as moſt juſt and equal; the condemned ſtooping with awe to his juſtice; the abſolved adoring with humble reverence his mercy; the ſpectators applauding with admiration his holy wiſdom: for that day will be, as Rom. 2. 5. S. Paul calleth it, a day of revelation of God's righteous judgment; and Rom. 14. 11. God in regard thereto is repreſented ſpeaking thus; To me, as I live
ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue ſhall give glory 2 Theſ. 1. 10. to God; and our Lord, in that day, ſaith S. Paul, will be glorified in his Saints, and admired in all them that believe; and, He will then (as it Jud. 15. is in S. Jude) convince all that are ungodly of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodlily committed, and of all the hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. So that thereupon thoſe confeſſions, and acclamations of praiſe in the Revelation ſhall be reſounded Revel. 19. 2. through heaven; Allelujah, ſalvation and glory, and power be to the 16. 7. 7. 10. Lord our God, for true and righteous are his judgments. Salvation be un-
15. 3. to our Lord, that ſitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb: Great and wonderful are thy works, O Lord God almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, O thou King of Saints.

Thus do the Holy Pandects of our Religion ſet out that judgment, which all men hereafter muſt undergo; wherein all the attributes of God ſhall be conſpicuouſly glorified; his wonderful clemency ſhall be ſweetly diſplayed, his exact juſtice ſhall be terribly demonſtrated, his perfect wiſdom ſhall be clearly unfolded; wherein the knotty intrigues of providence ſhall be looſed, and the myſterious depths of the divine counſels ſhall be laid open; and God's honour, which now by the bold and raſh judgments of men is often attack'd, ſhall be throughly cleared and repaired, to the joyful ſatisfaction of all pious men, and ſad confuſion of the impious; wherein the great wiſdom of thoſe, who before all things chuſe to be good, and to ſerve God, and the extreme folly of thoſe, who ſcorn or neglect piety, ſhall be moſt evidently apparent; wherein finally all ſcores, that now ſo undiſcernibly run on, ſhall be exactly quitted, and even; impartial right ſhall be done; every man ſhall have his due aſſigned and rendred to him.

But let ſo much ſuffice concerning the Judgment appointed; we proceed to the next particular, The Judg ordained, He, that is, Jeſus our Lord and Saviour.

II. The original right, and abſolute power of judging doth inſeparably pertain to God Almighty, whoſe creatures, whoſe ſervants, whoſe ſubjects we are, and conſequently to whoſe judgment we ſtand obnoxious. As he is naturally the Sovereign Lord and King of the world, ſo he is, as the Apoſtle calleth him, κϱιτὴς ϖάντων, the Judg of all perſons and things; and particularly Judg of all the earth, or of all men, as Abraham did ſtyle him. As upon the grounds ſpecified we do owe obedience to the Laws he preſcribeth us, performance of the ſervice he allotteth us, and improvement of the talents he committeth to us; ſo we do thence ſtand obliged to render an account to him of our correſpondent behaviour, and due management in thoſe reſpects, and are liable to the judgment he ſhall make thereof: all judgment therefore muſt be exerciſed either immediately by God himſelf, or in ſubordination to him; in his name and right, and by virtue of authority derived from him; otherwiſe that of S. Paul, Who art thou that judgeſt anothers ſervant, might be alledged againſt any, who without licence, or commiſſion from him ſhould preſume to judg us.

Heb. 12. 13.
Gen. 18. 29.
Rom. 14. 4.

Now that immediately God ſhould adminiſter any judgment, is incongruous to his nature, and to ours; it is particularly unſutable to the manner of this judgment, which God deſigneth to be ſuch, as may paſs openly before all the world, to the conſpicuous declaration of his glorious juſtice and mercy, to the clear ſatisfaction and conviction of all perſons intereſted therein: which that it might be, it was fit (as S. Auſtin ſaith) that they who are to be judged ſhould ſee their judg; it is fit, that the aſſiſtants, and ſpectators, or witneſſes thereof ſhould diſcern the proceſs: but the glorious and dreadful preſence of God cannot be diſcernible by us, or would not be ſupportable: He (ſaith S. Paul) inhabiteth inacceſſable light, ſo that no man hath ſeen, or can ſee him; and, Thou canſt not ſee my face (ſaith he to Moſes) for there ſhall no man ſee me and live: that Majeſty, before which the pureſt Seraphims, being dazled with its infinite brightneſs, are conſtrained to veil their faces; that preſence, of which the Prophet ſaith, The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt

Etenim ea quæ judicantur, oportebat videre judicem & ſcire hunc à quo judicantur, &c. Iren. 3. 9.

Rectum erat; ut judicandi viderent judicem. Aug.

1 Tim. 6. 16.
Exod. 33. 20.
Iſa. 6. 2.
Nah. 1. 5.
(Pſ. 104. 32.
18. 18.)

Pſ. 76. 7.
133. 5.
143. 2.
Jer. 10. 10.
Pſ. 46. 6.
Job 26. 11.
(1 Cor. 15. 27.)
Act. 17. 31.
Rom. 14. 10.
2 Cor. 5. 10.
1 Cor. 4. 4.
Joh. 5. 22, 27.
2 Tim. 4. 1.

burnt in his preſence; yea the world, and all that dwell therein. How ſhould frail and impure fleſh ſuſtain? How ſhould guilty ſinners appear before him? Who may ſtand in his ſight when he is angry? when he is angry, at whoſe wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation: What ear of mortal man could endure that voice, at which the earth melteth, that reproof, at which the Pillars of heaven are aſtoniſhed? It being therefore from the divine excellency impoſſible, or inconvenient, that God himſelf immediately, as ſuch, ſhould exerciſe judgment, it hath pleaſed him, in his ſtead, to conſtitute one moſt fit for that imployment: as he for particular temporal judgments here hath appointed Princes and Governours viſibly to manage them as his Miniſters and Vicegerents, in his name and behalf; ſo that univerſal, and ultimate judgment, he hath (for his own greater glory, and our ſpecial benefit) committed unto his loving Son Jeſus, our bleſſed Mediator and Saviour; the ſame, who with the moſt admirable condeſcenſion of grace and charity, did once come hither in our nature to reſcue us from ſin and miſery; who underwent ſo many croſſes and troubles for us; who freely laid down his life to redeem and ſave us; he it is, who is ὡρισμένος ὑπὸ τȣ͂ θεȣ͂ κριτὴς, decreed and determined by God (or under him, as his ſubſtitute and deputy) to be our Judg; ſo in our Text; and ſo again S. Paul, God hath appointed a day in which he will judg the world in righteouſneſs, ἐν ἀνδρὶ ᾧ ὥρισεν, by the man, or in the man, whom he hath ordained; whence it is called, the judgment ſeat of Chriſt, before which we muſt appear; and, The Father (ſaith our Lord himſelf) judgeth no man (that is immediately and ſeparately) but hath given all judgment to the Son; and, The Father (he addeth) hath given to the Son the authority, and to execute judgment, becauſe he is the Son of man; that is, God hath conferr'd on him the Sovereign Regal authority, and hath particularly committed to him that prime branch thereof, Judicial power, even as he is the Son of man: ſo that as in our nature he performed all that was requiſite to ſave us, as in our nature he was exalted to God's right hand to rule and bleſs us; ſo for conſummation of all done in our regard, he ſhall in our nature appear to judg us; awarding to us the rewards he purchaſed for us, or puniſhments for the contempt of his favours.

——Illa forma videbitur Filii, quam ſibi per ſacramentum incarnationis univit, &c. Proſp. Sent. 337.

Dan. 7. 13, 14.
Iſa. 7. 14.
9. 6, 7. 11. 3.
42. 1, 3.

And indeed that he under this name and notion was deſigned to this office, even the anitent Prophets did foreſhew; for it was one like the Son of man, whom Daniel did behold coming with the clouds of heaven, having all royal dominion and power given unto him; and it was according to Eſay's predictions, the Son, born and given unto us, upon whoſe ſhoulder the government ſhould be, and to whom the Kingdom ſhould be aſſigned, to order it, and eſtabliſh it, with judgment and juſtice for ever.

The point then is manifeſt, that our Savior Jeſus, by deſignment and deputation from God, is inveſted with this eminent office and power. And why it ſhould be ſo, many reaſons, many fair congruities may be aſſigned.

1. It was requiſit (as we before touched) that the Judg ſhould be viſible, and audible; ſuch whom the parties concerned might (without extreme ſurprize and amazement) diſcern and converſe with, in order to their clearer and fuller ſatisfaction, or conviction: ſuch our Lord, the Son of man, clothed with glorified fleſh, will be; his mild and ſweet, though bright and ſtately aſpect, all men in ſome manner may be capable of ſeeing; his calm and clear voice all men may hear: Him the juſt may with chearful ſatisfaction behold ſmiling on them with gracious kindneſs; and the wicked alſo with ſad confuſion may view frowning toward them with juſt diſdain; thoſe with comfortable joy may hear him acquitting, commending and bleſſing them; theſe with due regret alſo may hear him convincing, reproving, and denouncing the fatal curſe on them; ſo that hereupon the former with humble thankfulneſs ſhall willingly acknowledg and praiſe his grace, the latter with ſhameful horror conſtrainedly ſhall confeſs their guilt before him: Behold (ſaith St. John, with an emphatical regard it ſeems to this conſideration) he cometh in the clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, even they who pierced him; and, They, ſaith our Lord himſelf, ſhall ſee the Son of man coming upon the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and, our Lord is repreſented in judgment, ſpeaking and arguing the caſe with all parties concerned, receiving their plea, and expreſſing his mind to them: This is a kind of natural capacity qualifying him for this employment, but there are conſiderations of a higher nature peculiarly fitting him for it.

Apoc. 1. 7.
Mat. 24. 30. 26. 64., 25. 34, &c.

2. It was indeed a good part of that Regal Office, which God, in reward of his obedience, and to declare his acceptance thereof, did confer upon him; giving him a power over all fleſh, all authority in heaven and earth: whence it is by St. Paul called his Kingdom; I charge thee, ſaith he to Timothy, before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judg the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom: He being then our King, and as ſuch the fountain of all juſtice, muſt either himſelf in perſon, or by ſome delegate adminiſter it; but that he ſhould immediately do it, divers ſpecial reaſons do ſuggeſt themſelves.

Joh. 17. 2.
Mat. 28. 18.
2 Tim. 4. 1.

3. It is an office of too great eminence and dignity to be imparted to any other: He alone who ſubſiſts in union with God, who is the Son of God, who hath moſt highly pleaſed God, who hath merited a Soveraignty over us, and a ſupreme eminency above all creatures, is capable of the honour to determine thoſe points of the higheſt importance concerning the final doom of God's Creatures, and the ſalvation of thoſe ſouls whom he hath purchaſed: Worthy is he alone to receive the book (of Judgment) and to open the ſeals thereof, becauſe he was ſlain, and hath redeemed us to God by his blood: Worthy is the Lamb (worthy excluſively, and ſolely) that was ſlain, to receive the power, and honour, the glory and bleſſing, annexed to this high office.

Apoc. 5. 9, 12.

As there is nothing more apt to beget in us veneration toward him, than conſidering that he ſhall be our Judg, upon whoſe ſentence our fate and felicity muſt depend; ſo it is therefore moſt fit, that it incommunicably, and ſolely ſhould belong to him; eſpecially ſeeing God with eſpecial regard to his honour did aſſign the judicial office to him; the Father, 'tis ſaid, hath committed all judgment to the Son, that all men might honour the Son, as they do the Father.

Joh. 5. 22, 23.

4. He alone alſo hath capacities proper for this judicature: he only hath that divine faculty of ſearching mens hearts; he only is furniſhed with wiſdom to know all matters of fact that ever were, and to diſcern the right in every caſe; he above all being abſolutely good, is endued with perfect equity of mind, and immutable love of right, always diſpoſing him to judg moſt juſtly; he alone can have in him that μετριοπάθεια, or exact temperament of affection toward men, which is requiſite to the diſtribution of equal juſtice toward them, according to due meaſures of mercy and ſeverity; the higheſt

Διὰ τȣ̃το γὰρ καὶ μόνος κριτὴς, ὅτι ἀναμάρτητος μόνος. Clem. Al. Pæd. l. 2.

Heb. 5. 2.

eſt Angel in heaven were incapable ſo rightly to diſtinguiſh the ſtrict bounds of theſe things. Wherefore in regard to theſe diſpoſitions peculiar to him, we are even by the antient Prophets informed, that this office
Ia. 11. 2, 3. is allotted to him; The Spirit of the Lord, ſaith Eſay, ſhall reſt upon him, the ſpirit of wiſdom——and ſhall make him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the Lord; and he ſhall not judg after the ſight of his eyes, nor reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteouſneſs ſhall he judg the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And, A bruiſed reed (ſaith God in the ſame Prophet, intimating his incomparable ſaga-Iſa. 42. 3. city, equity and temper, as it were, for this purpoſe) ſhall he not break, and the ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench; he ſhall bring forth judgment unto Pſal. 45. 7. truth. And, Thou, ſaith the Pſalmiſt concerning him, loveſt righteouſneſs, and hateſt iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows.

5. By this deſignation the glory of God is eſpecially promoted, his moſt excellent attributes being much illuſtrated thereby: his wiſdom appeareth in conſtituting one ſo in all reſpects moſt fit to diſcharge the office; and his goodneſs moſt clearly ſhines therein: for ſince it was requiſite that a judgment ſhould paſs upon us, how could the terror thereof be better allayed, than by putting it into the hands of his Son? to whoſe cognizance, were the choice permitted to us, ſhould we rather ſubmit our actions, than to his? to whom rather ſhould we freely commit all our life and welfare, than to him, who by nature is ſo nearly allied to us, and hath
Mat. 11. 29. not diſdained to call us brethren? who in diſpoſition of ſpirit is ſo meek and
Heb. 2. 17. lowly, ſo merciful and compaſſionate? who here was viſibly in diſpoſition
4. 15. and demeanour a Lamb, and is repreſented to us continuing ſuch; than to him, who by ſo many ſignal experiments hath expreſſed an exceſs of kindneſs towards us, and tenderneſs of our welfare; who hath conſpicuouſly evidenced himſelf to be the beſt friend to mankind; that he ardently deſireth the ſalvation of all men, even of his worſt enemies, for whom he willingly did ſpend his blood, for whom he dying earneſtly prayed; whom he continually wooeth to reconciliation and repentance, and conſequently to the enjoyment of greateſt happineſs? how then could God more plainly expreſs his goodneſs toward us, than in aſſigning ſuch a Judg for us?

How alſo could he exhibit a more illuſtrious inſtance of his juſtice, and love to righteouſneſs, than in advancing him to ſo glorious an office, who out of perfect compliance to his will did freely ſtoop ſo low, and gladly undergo ſo much? Worthy of God it was, and a
Apoc. 5. 12. congruous retribution to place the Crown on his head, to put the Sceptre into his hand, who willingly bore a croſs, who patiently ſubmitted to a ſcourge; to conſtitute him the Judg, who out of abundant piety to God, and charity to God's creature, was contented to be arraigned, to be ſentenced, to be executed as a malefactor: he dearly
Rom. 14. 9. purchaſed the right to be Lord of dead and living, and juſt it was that in effect he ſhould obtain it.

6. Juſt it likewiſe was, that to him, immediately and ſolemnly, ſhould be conſigned a power to acknowledg and reward his faithful friends and ſervants; thoſe who had believed his word, had obſerved his laws, had out of love and reſpect done much, and ſuffered much for him.

Juſt alſo it was, that he ſhould be impowered to do himſelf right upon his proud and ſpightful enemies; that he ſhould ſee them lying under his feet, and at his diſpoſal, who had ſo ſcornfully inſulted on him, and ſo cruelly miſuſed him; that he righteouſly ſhould judg them, who ſo maliciouſly had accuſed, and ſo injuriouſly condemned him; ſhould chaſtiſe them ſeverely, who moſt unmercifully had afflicted and ſlaughtered him; ſhould worthily reprobate all thoſe, who had unworthily rejected him; in fine, that he ſhould render a due recompence to all wicked perſons, who by diſtruſting his word, by deſpiſing his overtures of grace and mercy, by reſiſting his will, and rejecting his authority, by trampling upon his holy doctrine and laws, had wronged, had diſhonoured, had diſclaimed him.

7. This appointment of Jeſus for our Judg is farther very conducible to our edification, in way of excitement to the practice of our duty, and encouragement thereto; in way of conſolation and ſatisfaction to our Soul.

It conſidered is apt to raiſe in us a high reverence and dread of our Saviour; and conſequently to diſpoſe us to the obſervance of his laws, and imitation of his example.

It is matter of ſpecial comfort and encouragement to conſider, that hence aſſuredly we ſhall find a fair and favourable trial; ſince 'tis no enemy, not one diſaffected, yea, not one indifferently affected toward us, who ſhall judg us, but our beſt friend; from whom we may expect not only juſtice and equity, but all the favour and kindneſs our cauſe will bear.

It alſo duly pondered is moſt proper to work in us an earneſt care, and fear of ſinning, and thereby of becoming obnoxious to condemnation; for what an aggravation will it yield to our whether fooliſh perverſeneſs, or ſlothful negligence? how extreme diſingenuity, how wretched ingratitude will it argue in us to be caſt and condemned by ſuch a judg; a judg ſo fair and equal, ſo mild and gentle, ſo benign and favourable to us; ſo willing to acquit us, ſo deſirous to ſave us? With what face think we, having tranſgreſſed his moſt good and righteous laws, having rejected all his gracious tenders of mercy and favour, having defeated all his moſt ſerious purpoſes, and fruſtrated his moſt painful endeavours for our welfare; having violated our manifold obligations and engagements to him; having abuſed his ſo unexpreſſibly great love and good will toward us; having hence deplorably forfeited all his favour, and incurred his moſt grievous diſpleaſure; with what face, I ſay, having done all this ſhall we appear in his preſence? how then ſhall we bear the frowns of his tender love changed into fierce diſdain, of higheſt patience turned into extreme fury, of ſo terrible a Majeſty provoked by ſo heinous affronts? with what heart ſhall we hear that once moſt ſweet and charming voice, which in ſo pleaſant and affectionate a ſtrain did ſound forth words of peace and comfort in our ears, that ſo kindly invited us to reconciliation, ſo meekly ſued 2 Cor. 5. 20.
us to a compliance with him, ſo liberally offered to us the beſt things in the world upon ſo gentle terms, now only uttering toward us bitter complaints, and ſore rebukes; thundring forth words of indignation and terrour, denouncing moſt horrible menaces and curſes upon us?

Thus, and to ſuch purpoſes is Jeſus our Lord appointed to be our Judg: I ſhall only farther touch the manner of his exerciſing, and executing this Office, or the way of his addreſs and proceeding thereto; the which in Holy Scripture (for the begetting in us a regard, veneration and awe ſutable thereto) is deſcribed to be with greateſt glory, ſtate and ſolemnity. Our Lord came once in a meek humility to ſhew us our duty, but he ſhall come again with a dreadful μυριάσιν, Heb. 12. 22. majeſty to exact an account thereof; taking his progreſs from the higheſt Heavens in moſt royal magnificent equipage, attended upon Matt. 25. 31. with a numerous, or with a numberleſs, and moſt pompous train of Jud. 14. Angels, (with all the holy Angels, it is expreſly ſaid) accompanied 1 Theſ. 4. 16. with triumphal ſhouts and acclamations; a trumpet of God (that is, a wonderfully and unconceivably ſonorous trumpet, blown as it were 2 Theſ. 1. 7. by the mouth of God) and the voice of an Arch-angel reſounding before him an Univerſal ſummons, with a noiſe ſo loud and piercing, as 1 Cor. 15. 52. ſhall immediately (in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye) ſhake all the earth, and rouſe all the dead out of their mortal ſlumber; the irreſiſtible breath of that all-powerful voice waſting them, together 1 Theſ. 4. 17. with all ſurviving people, thro the clouds into the preſence of their Matt. 25. 31. Judg, conſpicuouſly ſeated in moſt glorious State on his Royal Tribunal.

Act. 1. 11. This ſame Jeſus (ſaid the two Angels to the Apoſtles, expreſſing this matter in the moſt ſimple and plain manner) ſhall come in like manner as ye have ſeen him go into heaven; a cloud took him up from their eyes then, and the clouds, as they imply, ſhould reſtore him to their Apoc. 1. 7. ſight; for, Behold, ſaith S. John, he cometh with the clouds, and every Matt. 24. 30. eye ſhall ſee him. And, They ſhall ſee the Son of man coming upon 16. 64. the clouds of heaven in power and great glory; and, When the Matt. 25. 31. Son of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him, 16. 27. then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory, ſaith our Lord himſelf
2 Theſ. 1. 17. ſomewhat more explicitely; but S. Paul with moſt punctuality deſcribeth
1 Theſ. 4. 16 the manner of his appearance: The Lord, ſaith he, *ſhall deſcend
1 Cor. 15. 52. from heaven with a ſhout* (ἐν κελεύσματι, with an exciting or commanding ſummons) with the voice of an Arch-angel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt: then we, which are alive and remain, ſhall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and ſo we ſhall ever be with the Lord. In ſuch manner to the purpoſe of exciting due reſpect and dread within us, is our Lord repreſented at the end of the World to come down from Heaven, for the exerciſing this judgment.

III. I proceed to the laſt particular obſerved in the Text, which is the objects, or the extent of the judgment ordained; whom is our Lord ordained to judg? how many ſhall they be? it is reſolved, all without exception, expreſſed here by the words quick and dead; and 2 Tim. 4. 1. Rom. 14. 9. otherwhere by S. Paul, I charge thee, ſaith he to Timothy, before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judg the quick and dead at his 1 Pet. 4. 5. appearing and his Kingdom; and by S. Peter likewiſe; Who (ſaith he concerning prophane men) ſhall render an account to him that is ready to judg both the quick and dead. Which places evidently do confirm the truth of the propoſition, that all men are obnoxious, and ſhall be ſubjected to this judgment; but yet ſo that the words themſelves, quick and dead, may ſeem to need ſome explication: for it being a common law, to which all men by nature, ſuch as it now ſtands after the curſe, are Heb. 9. 27. ſubject to undergo death; for thence It is, as the Apoſtle ſaith, apἀπόκειται. pointed for men once to die, and after death judgment; and what man Pſal. 89. 48. is he, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, that ſhall not ſee death? and that being ſo, why ſhould not the dead comprehend all that are to be judged?
Apoc. 20. 12. accordingly as we ſee it expreſſed in the Revelation; I ſaw the dead great and ſmall, ſtanding before God——and the dead were judged for the things written in the Books, according to their works: the dead were judged, no mention is made of the living; wherefore to evade this objection, ſome have interpreted the dead and living not for a diſtinction of perſons, but of parts in men, of the living ſouls and dead bodies of men; others have taken the words as ſignifying metaphorically the living, that is, righteous men, ſay they, or perſons endued with a ſpiritual life; and the dead, that is, perſons dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; or Eph. 2. 1. void of ſpiritual ſenſe and activity. But the difficulty is not ſo mighty as to force us upon ſo remote and abſonous interpretations, St. Paul having plainly enough ſhewed us how to underſtand his words, and how to ſolve the knot propounded; that by the living are to be underſtood thoſe, who ſhall be found as it were ſurprized alive at our Lord's coming; by the dead all other perſons, who from the beginning before that time had deceaſed, and ſhould be raiſed up at the ſound of the laſt trump: This we ſay to you (ſaith he to the Theſſalonians) in the word of 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. the Lord, that we which live, remaining at the preſence of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep. Our Lord is therefore ſuppoſed by the Apoſtle to find ſome alive at his coming, wherefore that which is affirmed concerning all men being appointed to taſte death (being otherwiſe, as the inſtances of Enoch and Elias ſhew, liable to exception) is to be underſtood by a Synecdoche very ordinary in ſuch caſes, for the incomparably greater part of men, for all indeed but one generation; or with this abatement, all but thoſe, whoſe death ſhall be prevented by our Lord's appearance (the which is ſet out as very ſudden and unexpected, like the coming of a thief in the night) even thoſe men alſo being in nature and condition mortal like others, although accidentally thus eſcaping the actual ſtroke of death. Neither ſhall even thoſe perſons be ſo exempted from death, but that they muſt undergo ſomewhat equivalent thereto; a change, which ſhall render them alike prepared for judgment with thoſe who had undergone death; for, Behold, ſaith, St. Paul again to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 15. 51. I tell you a myſtery; we ſhall not all fall aſleep, but we ſhall all be changed in an inſtant, in the twinkling of an eye: which words alone do with ſufficient evidence declare the meaning of this diſtinction between quick and dead. The ſum is, that all perſons, none excepted, of what condition or quality, what nation or time, what ſex, or what age ſoever, ſhall be expoſed to the judgment; high and low, rich and poor, wiſe and ſimple, learned and ignorant, good and bad; the mightieſt Princes and Lords no leſs than the meaneſt Subjects and Slaves; the ſubtleſt Stateſmen and deepeſt Scholars no leſs than the ſillieſt idiots: in a word, moſt univerſally All without any diſtinction, any privilege, any acceptance of perſons, all and every one muſt certainly appear at this bar, muſt undergo this trial, muſt here receive their ſentence and doom, muſt undergo reward, or puniſhment accordingly.

IV. The doctrinal part I have thus gone through of this grand point, it remaineth to make ſome application thereof. The conſidering it is indeed moſt neceſſary, and exceedingly profitable in many reſpects: there is no kind of virtue or good practice, which the ſerious conſideration thereof is not apt to produce; no good affection, which it may not ſerve to excite; no good duty to which it doth not powerfully engage us; there is likewiſe no ill paſſion, which it may not help to quell or repreſs; no bad deſign or action, which it may not effectually deter or diſcourage us from. Of ſo many particular uſes I ſhall only touch thoſe, which are moſt obvious; eſpecially thoſe unto which the Scripture doth expreſly apply the conſideration thereof.

1. It greatly doth engage us to be very circumſpect in all our converſation, and vigilant over our ways; for ſince by irreverſible decree it is appointed, that we muſt render an account of every thought ariſing in our mind (at leaſt of thoſe which find harbour and entertainment there) of every word that paſſeth through our mouth, of every action which we do undertake, what exceeding reaſon Mat. 25. 13. have we with moſt attentive, and accurate regard to mind whatever 24. 42, 44. we do? Since it is certain that for all theſe things we ſhall be judged, but uncertain to us when we ſhall be called thereto; how Rev. 3. 3. 16. 15. watchful are we concerned to be, that we be not ſurpriſed, and found unready to yield a good account? How obſervant in all reaſon ſhould we be of our Lord's admonition in the Goſpel; Watch, for ye do not know the day, nor the hour when the Son of man cometh? How affected ſhould we be with that warning, or menace in the Revelation; If thou doſt not watch, I ſhall come upon thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know when I come upon thee? It may be, as we ſee intimated, the next day, for all we can know, or the next hour, when death ſeizing on us ſhall carry us into that priſon or place of durance, where we ſhall be detained until the time of our being preſented at the bar; and what an unexpreſſible miſery then will it be to be found unprepared for the trial, and unable to render a good account? If we be quite aſleep in a total neglect of our duty, or if we be drowſy in a careleſs and ſluggiſh performance thereof, or if our ſenſes reſt amuſed upon other cares and buſineſſes impertinent to this account, in what an extreme danger do we abide? as our Luk. 21. 34. Saviour again doth warn, adviſing thus, Take heed to your ſelves, leſt 1 Theſſ. 5. 3. at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. You Mat. 25. 8. know what the fortune was of the fooliſh Virgins, whoſe lamps were gone out for want of oil; that is, whoſe Souls were deſtitute of true goodneſs, and whoſe lives conſequently did not ſhine with good works; how being ſurprized in that caſe by the Bridegroom's coming, they were unfit to meet him, they were excluded from his favour, they were rejected with an, I know you not. The Mat. 24. 48. like fate you know of that bad ſervant, who ſaying in his heart, Luk. 12. 45. my Lord delayeth to come, (that is, not believing, or not conſidering his ſtate in relation to the future judgment) began to beat his fellow ſervants, aud to eat and drink with the drunken (that is, did live in the practice of injuſtice, uncharitableneſs, and intemperance) his fate ſhall be this; The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of, and ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint his portion with the hypocrites: the ſame, if we do live in groſs neglect, or in heinous violation of our duty, will be our doom; Let therefore (as our Lord again doth injoin, and inculcate) our loins be girded about, and our lamps burning; and we our Luk. 12. 35, 36. ſelves like men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh, we may open unto him immediately. Let us, as St. Peter exhorteth, gird up the loins of our mind, be ſober, 1 Pet. 1. 13. and hope to the end for the grace that (in caſe of our faithful and conſtant obedience) ſhall be brought unto us, at the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. In fine, conſidering theſe things, What manner of perſons then 2 Pet. 3. 12. ought we to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs, looking for, and haſting unto the coming of our Lord? as that great Apoſtle doth again admoniſh and argue.

2. The conſideration of this point is the moſt effectual means poſſible to beget, and preſerve ſincerity in us; diſpoſing us to live ſimply without diſſimulation or deceit, ſpeaking as we think, doing what we profeſs, performing what we promiſe, being as we ſeem: for ſeeing our hearts muſt be thorowly ſearched and ſifted; ſince our moſt retired thoughts muſt be diſcloſed; ſince our moſt ſecret deſigns, and our deſires muſt come to light, and be expoſed to the publick view of Angels and men; ſince the day approacheth, when (all vizards being taken off, all varniſh of pretence being wiped away) every perſon ſhall appear ſtark naked in his own true ſhape and colours; every thing ſhall ſeem what it really is, deveſted of falſe gloſſes, what profit can it be now to diſſemble, to conceal, or to diſguiſe our thoughts or doings? To what purpoſe doth it ſerve to palliate our ambitious or covetous intents with ſpecious garb of zeal or conſcience? what comfort can we find in driving on our ſelf-intereſts, or ſatisfying our private reſentments, in diſturbing the peace of mankind, or fomenting ſtirs and factions in the world under ſuch masks? what a folly is it to delude men with falſe appearances, or rather by them to abuſe themſelves; ſeeing they ſoon will be rightly informed, and we grievouſly diſgraced for it? What other ſatisfaction indeed can we have, than in real goodneſs, and pure integrity in heart and life; whereby we may now approve our conſciences unto God, and ſhall afterward by his unqueſtionable judgment be approved to all the world? Our true wiſdom is to be εἰλικρινεῖς ϗ ἀπρόσκοποι (as St. Paul ſpeaketh, that is) ſimple and inoffenſive toward the day of Chriſt; that is, without any indirect regard or deſign conſcionably to perform our duty toward God and man, in order to the rendring a good account at the laſt judgment: our beſt comfort will prove that of St. Paul——the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity, and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God we have had our converſation in the world.

Phil. 1. 10.

2 Cor. 1. 10.

3. The conſideration of this point ſhould render us very ſober and ſerious in all our thoughts, our opinions, our affections, our actions; ſuppreſſing all proud and haughty conceits, all admiration of theſe tranſitory things, all vicious exceſſes, all vain curioſities, all wanton joys, and ſatisfactions: For,

Why ſhould any apprehenſion of worldly ſtate, of wealth, of honour, of wit, of any natural or acquired endowment puff up our minds, ſeeing the day is near at hand, which in theſe regards will quite level men, and ſet them all upon even ground before an impartial bar, where no ſuch things ſhall be had in any conſideration or regard; when all ſecular and external advantages being laid aſide, the moral qualities of men only ſhall be taxed and eſtimated; a day wherein all theſe admired vanities ſhall vaniſh into nothing; all our empty tumours ſhall be depreſſed; all the fond arrogance of man ſhall be confounded; ſo that the proud and profane ones of the world ſhall be conſtrained to ſay after the Wiſe-man, What hath pride profited us, or what good hath riches with our vanting brought us? all theſe things are paſſed away as a ſhadow, and as a poſt that haſted by.

Ὀυ πλούσιος, ὀυ πένης, ὀυ δυνάςης ὀυκ ἀσθενὴς, ὀυ σοφοὶ, ὀυκ ἄσοφος, ὀυ δοῦλος, ὀυκ ἐλεύθερος, ὀυδεὶς φανεῖται ἀλλὰ τῶν προσωπείων τούτων συντριβέντων, ἡ τῶν ἔργων ἐξέτασις ἔςαι μόνη. Chryſ. in Mat. 17. 9.

Sap. 5. 3.

And why ſhould we much value thoſe ſplendid toys, or that ſordid traſh, which men here do ſo eagerly ſcrape, and ſcramble, and ſcuffle for; which then evidently will be diſcountenanced, will at leaſt appear worthleſs and unprofitable to us? what indeed in this world, ſuppoſing this judgment, being truly rated, can ſeem great, or worthy to affect us?

And why having affairs on foot of ſo immenſly vaſt importance, ſhould we amuſe our ſelves with trivial matters, impertinent at leaſt, if not prejudicial to our main accounts?

And how ſhall we dare to embrace the ſerpent of ſinful exceſs, conſidering beſide the poiſon in its body what a dreadful ſting it carryeth in the tail thereof; how theſe flaſhes of pleaſure do kindle a flame, that will ſcorch us to eternity? One thought of judgment mixt with any brutiſh enjoyments were enough one would think to allay their ſweetneſs, to render them indeed not only inſipid, but diſtaſtful and bitter to us.

And how can we be eaſily tranſported into wild merriments, ſuffering our minds to be ruffled, and the tone of our reaſon to be ſlackened by them, if we conſider how infinitely ſerious buſineſs lieth upon us; what a diſmal hazard we ſtand in, how nearly our everlaſting welfare lieth at ſtake? If here in this world we were bound in few days to undergo a trial concerning our life, all our eſtate, and all our reputation, we ſhould deem it ſeaſonable to be ſomewhat intent, to be indeed very ſolicitous about what we ſhould plead, and how we ſhould get off, rather than to be lightly ſporting at, and looſening our minds in little pleaſant humours; much more rather than to be looſing our minds, and baniſhing all ſober thoughts away in exorbitant frolicks; extremely wild or ſtupid would he ſeem, who in ſuch a caſe ſhould ſo behave himſelf: it is plainly the caſe of us all, in a degree infinitely more high than we can ſuppoſe any other to be; wherefore reflecting thereon ſhould methinks quaſh all extravagant and diſſolute mirth, apt to beat out of our minds and hearts the care of our Souls; ſhould compoſe our minds into a very ſerious frame, ſhould preſently drive us into, and conſtantly hold us in a ſober ſadneſs of heart; it is a duty which both in wiſdom 2 Cor. 5. 11. and piety we do owe to this great matter (the terror of the Lord, as St. Paul calleth it) to fear and dread it; with which diſpoſition of ſpirit exceſſive tranſports of carnal joy are ſcarce conſiſtent: however let us hear (let us I ſay whoſe ſpirits are high, and fancies ſtrong, hear) what the great obſerver of the world, the Preacher doth admoniſh: Eccleſ. 11. 9. Rejoyce (ſaith he) O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes; but know, that for all theſe things God will bring thee to judgment.

4. The conſideration of this point ſhould engage us carefully to improve all the talents by God's providence and grace committed to us; that is, all the means and abilities, all the advantages and opportunities afforded us of doing good, or ſerving God. Hath God beſtowed wealth upon us? this will engage us ſo to uſe it, as not therewith to cheriſh our pride, or pamper our luxury, not merely to gratify our pleaſure or humour; but to expend it in ſuccouring our indigent neighbour, or otherwiſe promoting God's ſervice. Hath God inveſted us with power? this ſhould induce us to uſe it moderately and fruitfully, not therewith to domineer or inſult over our brethren, not any-wiſe to wrong or miſuſe them; but to yield protection, aid, and comfort to them; to afford patronage and ſuccour to right;

to miniſter encouragement, ſupport and defence to virtue; remembring that we have alſo a Lord in heaven, and a Judg, to whom we muſt be accountable. Eph. 6. 9. Hath God vouchſafed us any parts, any wit, any knowledg? this ſhould move us to employ them not ſo much in contriving projects to advance our own petty intereſts, or in procuring vain commendation to our ſelves, as in ſetting forth God's praiſe, in recommending goodneſs, in drawing men with the moſt advantage we can to the practice of virtue and piety. Hath God conferred on us any thing of honour, or credit among men? this may oblige us not to build high conceits upon it, or to find vain complacences therein, but to uſe it as an inſtrument of bringing honour to God, of miniſtring aid or countenance to the intereſts of piety: to thoſe purpoſes, I ſay, this conſideration greatly ſerveth; for that it is plainly declared that we are but Stewards of theſe things, having received them in truſt, not to uſe them according to our pleaſure, but to employ them with the beſt advantage for God's ſervice; and accordingly ſhall in the laſt judgment be ſtrictly accountable for them; Matt. 25. 14. 24. 45. ſo that if we have embezelled oe perverted them to abuſe, it will then appear far worſe for us, than if we never had received them; much better indeed it will be for us, that we had been pooreſt beggars, ſillieſt ideots, moſt deſpicable wretches here, than not to have duly improved our wealth, parts and honour to God's ſervice; To whomſoever much is given, from him much ſhall be required, Luk. 12. 48. is the rule that punctually in that great Audit will be obſerved.

5. The conſideration of this point may induce us to the obſerving ſtrict juſtice and equity in all our dealings: there are in this world many advantages of doing injury and iniquity ſafely in reſpect to men, without intrenching upon humane laws, without incurring any check, or any correction from them; they reach to very few caſes, they retrench only ſome great outrages, and puniſh ſome enormous crimes, apparently noxious to the peace or welfare of common Society; the ſtroke of humane law may alſo (even where it taketh cognizance, where it maketh proviſion to ſecure right, or repair wrong) often be evaded by power, or eluded by ſlight, by gift, by favour: But as the divine law doth extend univerſally to the prohibition of all iniquity whatever (ſmall as well as great, ſecret no leſs than viſible) ſo the Divine judgment inevitably will reach to all; the leaſt wrongful word, by which we hurt the good name of our neighbour, the leaſt exaction or hard dealing with him, the leaſt overreaching him by craft (however blameleſs theſe things may ſeem here, however they may paſs with commendation, as inſtances of wit or ability) will ſurely then be condemned and puniſhed: Let no man, ſaith S. Paul, go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, 1 Theſ. 4. 6. διότι ἔκδικος ὁ κύριος ϖερὶ ϖάντων τούτων, becauſe God will judg and avenge for all theſe things; ſo that (as the ſame Apoſtle teacheth us) the unjuſt, the wrongful, the revilers, the rapacious ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God; 2 Cor. 6. 9. that day will detect all wicked fraud and cozenage, will defeat all unjuſt might and oppreſſion; no power ſhall be able to break through, no wit ſhall skill to decline, no friendſhip or favour will help to keep off the impartial ſentence, and the irreſiſtible ſtroke of that judgment; There is no darkneſs or ſhadow of Job 34. 22. death

Quàm anguſta innocentia eſt ad legem bonum eſſe? quanto latiùs officiorum patet, quàm juris regula? Sen. de Ir. 2. 27.

death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves from being detected, from being proſecuted and puniſhed. The poor, the meek, the ſimple, who rather chuſe to ſuffer than do wrong, ſhall there find a certain patronage, and a full redreſs; that ſtrict abſtinence from wrong, which here may paſs for ſimplicity, ſhall then be approved for the beſt wiſdom; and this over-reaching craft, which now men are ſo conceited of, will then appear wretched folly, when all ill gotten profits with ſhameful regret ſhall in effect be refunded, yea ſhall bring grievous damages and ſore penalties for them: In fine, then it will be moſt evident, that he who injureth another, doth indeed chiefly hurt himſelf; he that cheateth his neighbour, doth really gull himſelf, and abuſe his own ſoul.

6. The conſideration of this point is apt to breed Charity in us; Charity of all ſorts; Charity in giving, Charity in forgiving, Charity in judging and cenſuring of men.

1. It ſhould incline us freely to impart our goods, and to contribute our endeavours for the relief of our poor neighbour; for that the laſt judgment will in eſpecial manner proceed upon a regard to the performance, or the neglect of this duty; it ſhall be the Teſt of Piety, and a ground of recompence at the laſt day. To charitable perſons, who had relieved him in his poor brethren, and members, our Lord himſelf telleth us, that he will ſay, Becauſe I was hungry, and
Matt. 25. 34. ye gave me meat; I was thirſty and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger and ye took me in; I was naked and ye clothed me; I was ſick and ye viſited me; I was in priſon and ye came unto me; therefore, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, enter into the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: to them, who contrarily had neglected to ſuccour, and comfort their poor brethren, he will pronounce the contrary doom; Depart from me ye curſed into everlaſting fire, prepared
14. Ver. for the Devil and his Angels; for I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat, &c. and what argument can there be imagined more forcible to engage us on the practice of this duty?

2. It ſhould likewiſe diſpoſe us readily to forgive all injuries, and diſcourteſies received from any man; for ſince we ſhall at that trial need abundance of favour and mercy from God, we ſhould in all reaſon and duty be willing to ſhew the like to others for God's ſake, and at his command; eſpecially ſince he hath appointed the doing ſo for an indiſpenſable condition, without which we ſhall not receive mercy, or pardon from him; ſo that infallibly, if we will be rigorous and hard to others in this caſe, we muſt expect the like extremity and ſeverity from God; for the laws and rules of God's proceeding
Jam. 2. 13. then are theſe: He ſhall have judgment without mercy, that hath Matt. 6. 15. ſhewed no mercy; If ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will God forgive you your treſpaſſes: And by a lively example, in way of hiſtory or parable, our Lord in the Goſpel hath expreſſed, what words (in caſe of our refuſing to remit to our neighbour his debts and treſpaſſes againſt us) we ſhall hear, what uſage we ſhall find at that Matt. 18. 32. day; O thou wicked ſervant (will God ſay to any ſuch unmerciful perſon of us) I forgave thee all that debt, becauſe thou deſiredſt me, ſhouldſt not thou alſo have had compaſſion on thy fellow ſervant, even as I had pity on thee? And the Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he ſhould pay all that is due unto him.

3. It likewiſe ſerveth to reſtrain us from all undue, all raſh and harſh cenſure concerning the perſons, the actions, the ſtate of our neighbour; whereby we do invade our Lord's office, making our ſelves Judges in his room; whereby we uſurp his right, exerciſing juriſdiction over his Subjects; whereby we arrogate to our ſelves his Attributes, who alone is able to know, and judg rightly; Why, ſaith St. Paul, doſt thou judg thy brother, or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand at the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt. It is the office of Chriſt, which we muſt not encroach upon; and, Who art thou (doth he again expoſtulate) that judgeſt another's ſervant? to his own Maſter he ſtandeth or falleth; we wrong our Lord, in aſſuming authority over his ſervants; we wrong our brethren, in making our ſelves their maſters; and, Judg nothing before the time, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, until the Lord come, who ſhall enlighten the hidden things of darkneſs, and manifeſt the counſels of hearts. We blind wretches in effect do make our ſelves Gods, and ſacrilegiouſly aſſert his incommunicable perfections to our ſelves, when we preſume to ſearch the hearts, or pretend to know the ſecret intentions of our brethren: again, There is (ſaith another Apoſtle) one Lawgiver, who can ſave or deſtroy; who art thou, that judgeſt another? that is, how intolerably raſh, unjuſt and arrogant art thou, who ſeateſt thy ſelf upon God's tribunal, and thence doſt adventure to pronounce doom upon his people? Did we indeed well conſider this Judgment, we ſhould rather think it adviſeable to be mindful of our own caſe, than to paſs ſentence upon that of others; obſerving how liable our ſelves are, we ſhould ſcarce have the heart to carp at others; finding what great need our actions will then have of favourable interpretation, we ſhould ſurely be more candid, and mild in cenſuring other mens actions; eſpecially conſidering, that by harſh Judgment of others, we make our own caſe worſe, and enflame our reckoning; we directly thence incur guilt, we aggravate our own offences, and render our ſelves inexcuſable; we expoſe our ſelves upon that ſcore to condemnation; for, With what judgment we judg we ſhall be judged; and with what meaſure we mete, it ſhall be meaſured to us again, our Lord doth ſay: and Inexcuſable, ſaith St. Paul, thou art O man, whoever thou art that judgeſt; for wherein thou judgeſt another thou condemneſt thy ſelf: and, μὴ στενάζετε κατ' ἀλλήλων, Do not (ſaith St. James) grudg (or make moanful complaint) againſt one another, leſt you be condemned; behold the Judg ſtandeth before the doors.

Rom. 14. 10.
Rom. 14. 4.
Jam. 4. 12.
Mat. 7. 2.
Luk. 6. 37.
Rom. 2. 1, 3.
Jam. 5. 9.

7. It ſerves alſo to ſupport and comfort us as againſt all other wrongful dealing, ſo againſt injuries of this kind; againſt all unjuſt and uncharitable cenſures, groundleſs ſlanders and ſurmiſes, undeſerved ſcorns and reproaches of men; for that aſſuredly at that judgment right will be done to him, that ſuffereth in this kind; his innocence will be cleared, his good name will be vindicated and repaired: God will bring forth his righteouſneſs as the light, and his judgment as the noon day; whence approving his conſcience to God in well-doing, he may chearfully ſay with St. Paul, With me it is a very ſmall thing, that I ſhould be judged of you, or of man's judgment. If our heart do not condemn us, we may (whatever the opinions or diſcourſes of man be concerning us) have a chearful boldneſs, and comfortable hope in regard to God: the obloquy of men is a part of that croſs, which every good man here is appointed to bear, and aſſuredly ſhall meet with; for the Devil and the World do nothing, if they cannot by impudent aſſaults daſh, or by malicious ſug-

Pſal. 37. 6.
1 Cor. 4. 3.
1 Joh. 3. 21.

Κἂν πάντες δικάζωσιν, ὁ δὲ δικαστὴς ἀποψηφίζηται, οὐδεὶς μοὶ λόγος τῆς ἐκείνων ψήφου, κἂν ἅπαντες ἐπαινέσωσι καὶ θαυμάσωσιν, ἐκεῖνος δὲ μὴ καταδικάζῃ, οὐδὲν μοὶ πάλιν ὄφελος τῆς ἐκείνων κρίσεως. Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 98.

geſtions blaſt the practice of goodneſs; but this conſideration may eaſily raiſe us to bear it with patience, or with reſolution to ſurmount it, it thence appearing, that it no-wiſe can harm us; for if God is our Judg, what can the fancies or the tattles of men concern us? I will not fear the judgment of men, who ſhall have God for my judg, was with good reaſon ſaid by St. Hierom.

Non timebo hominum judicium, habiturus judicem Deum. Hier.

8. It upon the like ground ſhould preſerve us from being deluded and poiſoned by the more favourable opinions of men: there are viſibly two great rocks, upon which frequently men do ſplit, and make ſhipwrack of good conſcience, compliance with the practice and regard to the opinions of others; men out of complaiſance accompany others in doing ill; it is called good nature, it is deemed good manners to do it, ſo very civilly and genteely, very nobly and gallantly they go on to perdition, giving up their ſalvation in complement and courteſy to one another; then 'tis but natural for this moſt debonair and generous dealing to requite one another with good words at leaſt, or with ſome demonſtrations of eſteem; and 'tis no leſs natural for thoſe who are thus flattered to comply with the opinions of others, and to judg of themſelves accordingly, thinking themſelves good becauſe they are called ſo; but to keep our ſelves from being upon ſuch occaſions, or upon any the like grounds perniciouſly cozened, we ſhould conſider, that in the great judgment the eſteem of men will import nothing of advantage to us: things will paſs there as they are in themſelves, not as they are rated here, according to real truth, and intrinſick worth, not according to the conceits or affections of ignorant and partial men; even the things that appear faireſt here, may prove foul there; perſons much approved and applauded now, may then be condemned and rejected; for God ſeeth not as man ſeeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart. God then will ſearch the hearts, and weigh the ſpirits of men; he will ſcan their deſigns and intentions; he will cloſely examine their tempers, and exactly poiſe their circumſtances; he will conſider many things inſcrutable to men, upon which the true worth of perſons, and real merit of actions do depend: wherefore moſt vain and unſafe it is to rely upon the uncertain opinions of men; or to pleaſe our ſelves with them; they neither can out of blindneſs, or will out of paſſion, intereſt, partiality judg truly.

Nihil omninò agimus, qui nos per exempla multitudinis defendimus, & ad conſolationem noſtram aliena ſæpe numerantes vitia, deeſſe nobis dicimus, quos debeamus ſequi. Hier.

Quæ eſt hæc tanta levitas animi, quæ tanta vanitas, relictâ propriâ conſcientiâ, alienam opinionem ſequi, & quidem fictam atque ſimulatam, rapi vento falſæ laudationis gaudere ad circumventionem ſuam, & illuſionem pro beneficio accipere? Hier. ad Celantiam.

1 Sam. 16. 7.
Joh. 7. 24. Iſa. 11. 3.
Prov. 16. 2. 1 Sam. 2. 3.
Pſal. 103. 14.

9. If we deſire to judg reaſonably about our ſelves, or to know our true ſtate, the only way is to compare our hearts and lives with the Law of God, judging our ſelves by that rule, according to which God will judg us; if we find in our hearts the love of God and goodneſs (ſincere, although imperfect) if we perceive our ſelves diſpoſed to keep God's commandments (to live piouſly, righteouſly and ſoberly in this world) then may we have a ſatisfactory hope concerning our ſtate; then we may (as St. John ſaith) have confidence toward God——becauſe we keep his commandments, and do thoſe things that are pleaſing to him; but if we do not find

1 Joh. 3. 21, 22.

that

find that mind in us, and that practice; we in conceiting well of our ſelves upon any other grounds do but flatter, and impoſe upon our ſelves; if all the world ſhould account us good, and take us to be in a good caſe, we ſhould not at all believe them, or mind them; for Let no man deceive us; he that doth righteouſneſs, he (and he alone) is righteous, is the moſt faithful advice, and unqueſtionable ſentence of S. John. It is therefore (that by reſting on ſuch falſe bottoms we be not abuſed, and drawn thence to neglect the amendment of our hearts and ways, in order to our final account) a duty incumbent on us thus to ſearch our hearts, and try our ways, and accordingly to judg our ſelves; the doing which with care and conſcience would diſpoſe us to prepare for the judgment we ſpeak of; for If, ſaith S. Paul, we would judg our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged, or not condemned.

1 Joh. 3. 7.
1 Cor. 4. 4.
1 Cor. 3. 31.
Gal. 6. 3.
Pſ. 77. 6, 10.

10. The conſideration of this point will guard us from infidelity, and from impatience in regard to the providential diſpenſation of affairs here; conſidering it, we ſhall not be offended at paſſages otherwiſe unaccountable, and ſcandalous to providence; we ſhall not wonder that ſo many diſorders occur in the world, that right is perverted, that fraud and violence do prevail, that vice doth reign: We ſhall not complain of the adverſities incident to good men, nor repine at the proſperities of bad men; we ſhall not be diſſatisfied with any event here befalling our ſelves or others; ſince from hence it doth moſt evidently appear, that all theſe things are conſiſtent with the wiſdom, goodneſs and juſtice of God; and do aſſuredly tend to the declaration of thoſe glorious Attributes; yea that conſequently the worſt accidents here, if we are faithful to God and to our ſelves, will finally conduce to our advantage and benefit, according to that of the Apoſtle, We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.

Rom. 8. 28.

11. In fine, there is no conſideration able to promiſe ſo much efficacy toward the rouzing our paſſions, or duly ordering and ſetling them upon religious practice: it eſpecially is apt to ſet on work thoſe two grand Engines and mighty Springs of activity, hope and fear; and with them to raiſe their reſpective companions joy and grief: for how, if we have been very culpable in the tranſgreſſion or neglect of our duty, can we reflect on this point without being ſeized with an hideous dread of coming to ſo ſtrict a trial, of falling under ſo heavy a ſentence? how can we think of it without a bitter remorſe? hard as rocks ſurely we muſt be, if ſuch thoughts do not pierce us; utterly dead and ſenſeleſs muſt our hearts be, if they do not feel the ſting of ſuch conſiderations; more ſtupid and ſtony we then are, than the diſſolute Felix, who could not without affrightment hear a plain diſcourſe concerning the judgment to come; yea more inconſiderate and inſenſible we appear, than thoſe obſtinate ſons of darkneſs, the Devils themſelves, who believe and tremble thereat.

Act. 24. 25.
Ἔμφοβος γενόμενος.
Jam. 2. 29.

If on the other hand we are conſcious to our ſelves of having ſeriouſly and carefully endeavoured to pleaſe God, and obey his commandments, how can we think of it without a comfortable hope of finding mercy and favour in that day? If in our hearts we can ſay with S. Paul, I have combated the good combat, I have finiſhed (or I have continued) the race, I have kept the faith; then may we hopefully ſay after him, as he ſaid confidently before us, From henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which in that day

2 Tim. 4. 7, 8.
1. 18.

day the Lord, the righteous Judg, ſhall render unto me. If by virtue of the ſaving grace of God, which hath appeared to all men, and according to its holy inſtructions, we have denied ungodlineſs, and worldly
Tit. 2. 12, 13. luſts, living ſoberly, righteouſly and piouſly in this preſent world; then may we joyfully expect the bleſſed hope, and the appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; then may we indeed heartily wiſh, chearfully hope, and earneſtly pray for that day; doing which is the character, and hath been the practice of the beſt men: The Lord, ſaith
1 Cor. 1. 7. St. Paul, will render the crown of righteouſneſs to all them who love his Phil. 3. 20. appearance; and, looking for and haſtening to the preſence of the day of God,
Tit. 2. 9. ſaith St. Peter, intimating the practice of the primitive Chriſtians;
2 Tim. 4. 8. and, Yea come, O Lord Jeſus, is St. John's petition in the cloſe of the 2 Pet. 3. 12. Apoc. 22. 20. Revelation, and may be the prayer of thoſe who have the like conſcience and affections with him.

I conclude, wiſhing and exhorting, that the meditation of this moſt important affair may be continually preſent to our minds; that we may ſeem with that devout man always to hear the laſt trump ſounding in our ears, and through our hearts; that ſo with a pious awe, and with a well grounded hope we may expect the coming of our Lord, and may love his appearance; that from hence being effectually reſtrained from all impious and vicious converſation, being induced to a circumſpect and watchful purſuit of all piety and virtue, guiding our lives inoffenſively in all good conſcience toward God and Man, we may in the end be able to render a good account; and with comfort unexpreſſible may at that day from the mouth of our Judg hear thoſe happy words, Well done good and faithful ſervants, enter into your Maſter's joy; Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the World: Unto the poſſeſſion whereof Almighty God in his infinite mercy by the grace of his Holy Spirit vouchſafe to bring us, through the merits of our bleſſed Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe. Amen.

1 Theſſ. 5. 23. The very God of peace ſanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole ſpirit, and ſoul, and body, may be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt.

Sermon XXXIV.

THE DIVINITY OF THE Holy Ghoſt.

1 COR. 3. 16.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

MY purpoſe is at this time for our edification in Chriſtian knowledg concerning that grand object of our faith, and Author of our ſalvation, the Holy Ghoſt; and for arming us againſt erroneous opinions about him, ſuch as have been vented in former ages, and have been revived in this; to explain briefly the name, nature and original of the Holy Ghoſt (according to what appears diſcovered of him in the ſacred Writings;) to conſider alſo the peculiar characters, offices and operations, which (according to the myſterious œconomy revealed in the Goſpel) are aſſigned, and attributed to him; ſo that incidentally by teſtimonies of Scripture, and arguments deduced thence, I ſhall aſſert the principal doctrines received in the Church, in oppoſition to the moſt famouſly Heterodox Dogmatiſts that have appeared. For the doing which this Text of St. Paul doth miniſter good occaſion; for the full explication thereof doth require a clearing of the particulars mentioned, and it ſelf affordeth good arguments againſt the principal errors about this matter. His being called the Spirit of God may engage us to conſider his nature and original; his being ſaid to dwell in us, doth imply his perſonality; his divinity appears in that Chriſtians are called the Temple of God, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt dwelleth in them; his ſanctifying virtue may be inferred from his conſtituting us temples, by his preſence in us. I ſhall then in order proſecute the points mentioned; and laſtly ſhall adjoin ſomewhat of practical application.

1. Firſt then for the Name of the Holy Spirit; whereby alſo his nature and origine are intimated.

Of thoſe things, which do not immediately incur our ſight, but do by conſpicuous effects diſcover their exiſtence, there is ſcarce any thing in ſubſtance more pure and ſubtile, in motion more quick and nimble, in efficacy more ſtrong and powerful, than wind (or ſpirit.) Hence in common uſe of moſt languages the name of wind or ſpirit doth ſerve to expreſs thoſe things, which from the ſubtilty or tenuity of their nature being indiſcernible to us, are yet conceived to be moved with great pernicity, and to be endued with great force: ſo Naturaliſts we ſee are wont to name that which in any body is moſt abſtruſe, moſt agile, and moſt operative in Spirit: Hence it comes that this word is transferr'd to denote thoſe ſubſtances, which are free of matter, and removed from ſenſe, but are endued (as with underſtanding, ſo) with a very powerful activity, and virtue: Even among the Pagans theſe ſort of Beings were called Spirits: The ſouls of men are by them ſo termed; (anima hath its derivation from ἄνεμος, wind.) Our life (ſaith Cicero) is contained by (or comprized in) body and Spirit: And, We (ſaith he again) are at the ſame time received into the light, and endued with this heavenly ſpirit (that is, with our ſoul.) Particularly the Stoicks uſed to apply this name to our ſoul: I alledg the Stoicks (ſaith Tertullian) who call the ſoul a ſpirit, almoſt therein agreeing with us Chriſtians. They likewiſe frequently did attribute this appellation to God:

Vita corpore, & ſpiritu continetur. Cic. Or. pro Mar.

Eodem tempore ſuſcipimur in lucem, & hoc cœleſti ſpiritu augemur. De Aruſp. reſp.

Stoicos allego, qui ſpiritum dicunt animam, penè nobiſcum. Tert. de Anim. 5.

Æn. 6.

—Cœlum & terram campoſque liquentes,
Lucentemque globum terræ, Titaniaque aſtra Spiritus intus agit—

ſaid the Prince of their Poets; by the word Spirit underſtanding (as Lactantius and Macrobius do interpret him) God himſelf, that pierceth and acteth all things; yea he ſo otherwhere expoundeth his own mind, when he to the ſame purpoſe ſings, Lact. 1. 5.

Georg. 4.

—Deum ire per omnes
Terraſque tractuſque maris, cœlumque profundum..

And the Orator, in his Dialogues, maketh Balbus to ſpeak thus: Theſe things truly could not, all the parts of the world ſo conſpiring together, be ſo performed, if they were not contained (or kept together) by one divine and continued Spirit: and Seneca clearly; God (ſaith he) is nigh to thee, he is with thee, he is in thee: I tell thee (O Lucilius) a Holy Spirit reſideth within us, an obſerver and guardian of our good and our bad things (or doings) who as he hath been dealt with by us, ſo he dealeth with us; there is no good man (or no man is good) without God: and, Zeno defined God thus; God is

Hæc ità fieri omnibus inter ſe continentibus mundi partibus profectò non poſſent, niſi ea uno, & divino continuato ſpiritu continerentur. De Nat. D. II. p. 60.

Prope eſt à te Deus, tecum eſt, intus eſt; ità dico, Lucili, ſacer intra nos ſpiritus ſedet, malorúmque bonorúmque noſtrorum obſervator, & hic prout à nobis tractatus eſt, ità nos ipſe tractat; bonus vir ſine Deo non eſt. Sen. Ep. 41.

Θεός ἐστι πνεῦμα, διῆκον δι' ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου. Zeno.

a Spirit, paſſing through the whole world: Poſidonius alſo more largely; God is an intellectual and fiery Spirit, not having ſhape; but changing into what things he will, and aſſimilated to all things.

Θεὸς ἐστι πνεῦμα νοερὸν, καὶ πυρῶδες, οὐκ ἔχον μορφὴν, μεταβάλλον δὲ εἰς ἃ βούλεται, καὶ ἐξομοιούμενον πᾶσιν. Poſid. apud Stob.

In like manner hence the Holy Scriptures, with regard to our capacity and manner of conceiving, do with the ſame appellation adumbrate all thoſe kind of ſubſtances, void of corporeal bulk and concretion; human Souls, all the angelical Natures, and the incomprehenſible Deity it ſelf. And to God indeed this name is attributed, to ſignify his moſt ſimple nature, and his moſt powerful energy; but to other ſubſtances of this kind it ſeemeth alſo aſſigned to imply the manner of their origin; becauſe God did by a kind of ſpiration produce them: for which cauſe likewiſe (at leaſt in part) we may ſuppoſe, that the Holy Scripture doth more ſignally and in a peculiar manner aſſign that name to one Being, that moſt excellent Being, which is the ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe: the which is called the Spirit of God (that is of God the Father, who by reaſon of his priority of nature is often called God in a perſonal ſignification) the good Spirit of God; the Spirit of Chriſt; the Holy Spirit; and often abſolutely in way of excellence, the Spirit.

The ſame is alſo called the Power or Virtue of God; about the reaſon of which appellation we may briefly obſerve, that whereas in every intellectual being there are conceived to be three principal faculties, will, underſtanding, efficacy; and correſpondent to theſe three perfections, Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Power; a certain one of theſe (according to that myſtical œconomy or husbandry of Notions, whereby the manner and order of ſubſiſting and operation, proper to each perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, is inſinuated) is in a certain manner appropriated to each perſon (ſo I now by anticipation ſpeak, being to warrant theſe terms hereafter) namely to the Father it is aſcribed, that he freely decreeth what things ſhould be done; to the Son, that he diſpoſeth them in a moſt wiſe method and order toward their effecting; to the Holy Ghoſt, that he with a powerful force doth execute and effect them: whence as God is ſaid, according to his pleaſure, to decree and determine things [and τὸ θέλημα, the will, is a name by ſome Writers aſſigned to him; particularly Ignatius doth in his Epiſtles frequently ſo ſtile him; and ſo St. Paul may be underſtood, where he ſaith: καὶ γινώσκεις τὸ θέλημα, And thou knoweſt the will; that is, knoweſt Rom. 2. 18. God the Father; and St. Peter, For it is better, that ye (εἰ θέλει τὸ 1 Pet. 3. 17. θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ) if the will of God pleaſeth, do ſuffer for well doing, than for evil doing] as the Son is called the wiſdom of God, ſo the Holy Spirit is named the power of God; his ſubſtantial power, as we ſhall Luk. 1. 35. ſhew. To this Being, whatever it is, 'tis manifeſt that properly 24. 49. and primarily the name of Holy Spirit is appropriated; but (which we ſhould conſider) from thence (as is uſual in other caſes and matters) by figurative deflection of ſpeech (or by metonimy) the manner of that operation which that Holy Spirit doth exert, his influence and efficacy, and alſo any ſort of effects proceeding from him, do commonly aſſume, or partake of this name. So when from this Spirit, in a very conſpicuous manner, an excellent virtue of performing miraculous works, was liberally imparted to the Apoſtles, that virtue (or the manifeſt communication thereof, the manifeſtation of the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 12. 7. as St. Paul calleth it) is named the Holy Ghoſt: as when in St. John's

Goſpel

Joh. 7. 39. Goſpel it is ſaid, The Holy Spirit was not yet, that is, the Apoſtles had not yet received that excellent gift; or that marvelous efficacy of the Holy Spirit had not yet diſcovered it ſelf in them; as alſo when Act. 19. 2. in the Acts ſome Diſciples are ſaid not to have heard, whether there were any Holy Spirit; that is, they were not acquainted concerning that peculiar efficacy thereof. When alſo there are mentioned the Spirit Rom. 8. 5. of prophecy, the Spirit of revelation, the Spirit of wiſdom (which Eph. 1. 7. Kings 2. 9. ſort of Spirits are ſaid to be encreaſed, to be taken away, to be quench-1 Theſſ. 5. 19. ed) it is plain, that by thoſe phraſes not the Holy Spirit of God it ſelf 1 Cor. 12. (which in no ſenſe is liable to ſuch accident) but gifts, fruits or ef-Gal. 5. 22. fects thereof are denoted; ſome of which ſometimes are in the plural number called πνεύματα, Spirits; as when St. Paul enjoineth the Corinthians to be Zealous (or earneſtly deſirous) of Spirits, that is of 1 Cor. 14. 12, 32. ſpiritual gifts, or graces, or revelations; and when the diſcerning of Spirits (that is, of divine revelations, true or counterfeit) is ſaid to be 1 Cor. 12. 10. granted to ſome; and where the Spirits of Prophets are ſaid to be ſubject or ſubordinate to Prophets (that is, one Prophet had a right, and ability to judg about the revelations made to another, or pretended to be ſo) but theſe, and the like figurative ſenſes being excluded, we diſcourſe about the Holy Spirit in its moſt proper and primary ſenſe, as it is in and from God.

Which things being premiſed concerning the Name of the Holy Spirit; for explication of his Nature,

I. We do firſt aſſert, that it is a being in ſome ſenſe truly diſtinct from the Father and the Son; hereby rejecting the opinion of Sabellius, Noetus, Hermogenes and Praxeas; which confounding the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, and deſtroying their ſubſtantial properties, did of them all make but one perſon, under ſeveral names; affirming ἐν μιᾷ ὑποστάσει τρεῖς ὀνομασίας, in one perſon three appellations, and making τὴν τριάδα συναλοιφὴν, the Trinity to be a coincidence, as Epiphanius ſpeaks. [I ſaid, truly diſtinct; for this word diſtinction is by the Schoolmen conceived more commodiouſly applied to this myſtery, than others of near ſignification; thoſe of diverſity and difference ſeeming to intimate ſomewhat prejudicial to the unity of eſſence: In divinis (in the myſtery of the Trinity) we muſt, ſaith Aquinas, avoid the name of diverſity, and of difference, but we may uſe the name of diſtinction, becauſe of the relative oppoſition: which caution yet the antient Fathers do not ſo preciſely obſerve; for ſometimes in them προσώπων ἑτερότης and διαφορὰ (the diverſity and difference of the perſons) ſometimes alſo the word διαίρεσις, the diviſion of them do occur; although they ſeem more willingly to uſe the word διάκρισις, diſtinction; that which we ſimply affirm is, that the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt τοῖς ἰδιώμασι διακρίνονται, are diſtinguiſhed in properties (as Greg. Nyſſen ſpeaks) are ἄλλος ϗ ἄλλος, (as Greg. Naz. ſays) that is, truly more than in mere name or conception diſtinguiſhed by their properties and relations.]

Ὡς μήτε τὴν Σαβελλίου νόσον χώραν λαβεῖν, συγχεομένων τῶν ὑποστάσεων, εἴτουν τῶν ἰδιοτήτων ἀναιρουμένων. Patres Conc. Conſtant. Epiſt. ad Conc. Rom. Theod. 5. 9.

In divinis vitare debemus nomen diverſitatis, & differentiæ, poſſumus autem uti nomine diſtinctionis, propter oppoſitionem relativam. Thom.

Δίδασκε τοσοῦτον εἰδέναι μόνον, μονάδα ἐν τριάδι προσκυνουμένην, παράδοξον ἔχουσαν ϗ τὴν διαίρεσιν, ϗ τὴν ἕνωσιν. Naz. Or. 23.

Apud Aug. perſonæ ſæpe diverſæ dicuntur.

The Holy Ghoſt is, I ſay, truly diſtinct from the Father, and the Son; this we ſhall firſt ſhew ſeparately, then jointly in regard to both.

He is diſtinguiſhed from the Father; for,

1 Cor. 2. 10, 11, &c. 1. He is called the Spirit of the Father; which relation ſurely is not deviſed by fancy, or wants a real foundation; and therefore its terms are truly diſtinct. 2. The Holy Spirit is ſaid ἐκπορεύεσθαι, that is to go out, or proceed from the Father; Joh. 15. 26. he is therefore another from him; for a thing cannot be deemed really to proceed from another, from which it only is diſtinguiſhed in name or conceit. 3. It is alſo ſaid to be ſent, conferr'd, given by the Father; Joh. 14. 26, 16. 1 Cor. 2. 12. Gal. 4. 6. which ſurely argueth ſome kind of true diſtinction. 4. Divers things are attributed to the Spirit, which do not well agree to the Father; as particularly that he appeared εἴδει σωματικῷ, in a bodily form; Luk. 3. 33. that he deſcended, and reſted upon our Lord, the Baptiſt beholding him; I ſaw (ſaith St. John) the Spirit deſcending as a Dove, and it abode on him. Joh. 1. 32, 33. But, God the Father, no man (ſaith St. John) ever ſaw; Joh. 1. 18. nor (addeth St. Paul) can any man ſee him. 1 Joh. 4. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 16. 5. The Holy Spirit is our advocate with God, crying in our hearts, and interceding with the Father for us (ὑπερεντυγχάνων, ſaith St. Paul) that office, that act does manifeſtly ſuppoſe a true diſtinction. Rom. 8. 15, 16. Gal. 4. 6.

For like reaſons he is alſo diſtinguiſhed from the Son; for, 1. He is called the Spirit of the Son; and that relation implies a real ground. Gal. 4. 16. 2. He is ſent by the Son; ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ἀποστέλλω, Behold (ſaith our Lord) I ſend him: Luk. 24. 49. And, If I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will ſend him unto you. Joh. 16. 7. 3. He deſcended upon Chriſt, and abode on him; he filled him, he led or acted him; Luk. 4. 1. he anointed him; by his operation Chriſt did aſſume fleſh; Joh. 3. 34. wherefore he is diſtinguiſhed from the Son. 4. Chriſt plainly diſtinguiſhes between ſpeaking againſt the Son, and blaſpheming againſt the Holy Ghoſt; Luk. 12. 10. Mat. 12. 32. which ſuppoſes them two objects. 5. The Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to receive from the Son, that which he ſhould tell to Chriſt's Diſciples, and thence to glorify the Son. Joh. 16. 14. 6. The Son did, and ſuffered many things perſonally, which cannot agree, and cannot be attributed to the Holy Ghoſt, as that he was incarnated, and aſſumed man's nature; that he ſuffered, roſe again, aſcended into heaven. 7. He is expreſly ſaid to be diſtinct from the Son: I (ſaith he) will ask the Father, and he will give you another comforter. Joh. 14. 16. So ſeparately may the Holy Spirit be ſhewed diſtinct from each; and jointly in ſeveral places that diſtinction is ſignified. For to thoſe three, by a conſtant œconomy, a certain order is aſſigned, ſome proper offices, and peculiar energies are aſcribed; which it is not reaſonable to think done without a real foundation; By Chriſt (ſaith St. Paul) we have an acceſs in one Spirit to the Father. Eph. 2. 18. Why muſt we proceed by this circuit, in this certain method, if the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt are only diſtinguiſhed in name? Wherefore alſo doth the ſame Apoſtle bleſs thus: The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the love of God, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Spirit be with you all. 2 Cor. 13. 13. To what end alſo doth he diſtinctively aſſign a peculiar diſpenſation of operations to the Father, of miniſteries to the Son, of gifts to the Holy Ghoſt? 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. wherefore likewiſe doth St. Peter aſcribe our election to the Father predeſtinating, to the Son propitiating, to the Holy Ghoſt ſanctificating? 1 Pet. 1. 2. Doth it agree to the gravity, ſimplicity and ſincerity of the divine Oracles, ſo in a perpetual tenour to propound thoſe three, as three, divers not only in names, but in reality, in manner of being, in manner of operation, if there be no other under all but a nominal, or notional diſtinction? what would this be but not only to yield us an occaſion, but to impoſe a neceſſity of erring? ſhall we think thoſe principal maſters of truth purpoſely argute, perplexed and obſcure in their ſpeech? Farthermore, St. John affirms in his firſt Epiſtle (at leaſt if there the text be authen-

1 Joh. 5. 7.
Joh. 8. 18.
Joh. 15. 26.

tick) that there are three which bear witneſs in heaven, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; the which alſo undoubtedly (although not ſo conjoinedly, as in his Epiſtle) he aſſures in his Goſpel; for, I am he, ſaith Chriſt, who bear witneſs of my ſelf, and the Father, which ſent me, beareth witneſs of me; and, when the comforter ſhall come, he will bear witneſs of me: ſo there are, we ſee, three witneſſes, which our Lord appealeth to; but three names (as for inſtance, Marcus, Tullius, Cicero) or the ſame thing having three names, will not conſtitute three witneſſes. In fine, the form of Baptiſm evinceth this diſtinction; for at our Baptiſm we profeſs to acknowledg the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt; we perform worſhip, and promiſe obedience to them all; which doing Sabellius would have us do, as if ſubjects ſhould be required to oblige their Faith to Caius, Julius, and Cæſar; which kind of proceeding it ſeems abſurd to ſuppoſe, that God ſhould ſolemnly inſtitute. This may be ſufficient to overthrow the Sabellian errour.

Rationalis naturæ individua ſubſtantia.
Heb. 1. 2.
Hier. Epiſt. ad Damaſ. Aug. de Trin. 5. 8, 9.
Unde non audemus dicere unam eſſentiam, tras ſubſtantias, ſed unam eſſentiam (vel ſubſtantiam) tres perſonas.
Naz. Orat. 39. 32.

II. Again, we affirm the Holy Spirit to be a perſon. By a perſon we underſtand a ſingular, ſubſiſtent, intellectual being; or (as Boethius defines it) an individual ſubſtance of a rational nature. The Greek writers uſe the word ὑπόστασις (which word being of wider ſignification, doth comprehend alſo things void of underſtanding, importing) ſubſtance, concretely taken, or a thing ſubſiſtent (τὸ ἐνυπόστατον) which term is extant even in the Scripture, where the Son of God in reſpect to his Father is called χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ (the character of his ſubſtance or perſon) whence there was leſs cauſe that S. Hierom and other Latin antient writers ſhould ſo avoid, or timidly admit the word hypoſtaſis; as fearing that by uſe thereof they ſhould ſeem to acknowledg three eſſences; ſeeing (as St. Auſtin notes) according to moſt common acception ſubſtance denoted the ſame with eſſence; whence, ſaith he, we dare not ſay one eſſence, three ſubſtances; but one eſſence (or ſubſtance) three perſons: but this (as Gregory Nazianzen did conſider) was nothing elſe, but περὶ λεξειδίων ζυγομαχεῖν; to conteſt about ſyllables; or περὶ τὸν ἦχον μικρολογεῖν, to mince about ſounds; ſeeing whether we call it either perſon or ſubſiſtence, we mean the ſame thing. We however affirming the Holy Spirit to be a perſon, do thereby intend to exclude the opinion of Socinus and his followers, which aſſerts the Holy Spirit to be only an accident, or an accidental thing; to wit, a divine power, virtue or efficacy, reſident in God, or derived from him.

1. Now this we perſuade firſt from thoſe things, which we before did ſhew concerning the diſtinction of the Father and the Holy Spirit; for that ſlender (or rather no) diſtinction, ſuch as may be conceived to be between any being and its efficacy (eſpecially in this caſe, attending to the moſt ſimple nature of God, and his moſt ſimple manner of acting) doth not well reach the buſineſs, nor doth ſuffice to found that diſtinction, which the Scripture doth (as we ſhewed) conſtitute between the Father and holy Spirit. Indeed Socinus as to this point (however it be, that he ſometimes objecteth Sabellianiſm to the Catholicks) doth ſcarce himſelf differ from Sabellius: for Sabellius himſelf did avow the Son and Holy Spirit to be divers energies of the Father, and that they are diſtinguiſhed from him as Light and Heat from the Sun, which did not hinder the Fathers from refuting him, as putting no true diſtinction between them; as indeed God in the thing it ſelf (or beyond the manner of our conception and expreſſion) is not diſtinguiſhed from his power and efficacy.

2. Again, this may be collected from the very name of Spirit, the which primarily is impoſed upon ſubſtances, both corporeal and incorporeal; belonging to God eſſentially underſtood, to Angels, to humane Souls; all which things are ſubſtances; whence it is probable, that to the Being, of which we treat, becauſe it in like manner is a ſubſtance, this name of Spirit is aſſigned by God, the beſt Author of words; the epithet Holy being adjoined for diſtinction ſake. This is confirmed from that whereas God eſſentially is a Spirit (as is expreſſed John 4. 24. in St. John's Goſpel) his efficacy cannot aptly aſſume the ſame name; as becauſe our Soul is eſſentially a Spirit, it were incongruous to call any virtue thereof a Spirit. The ſame is farther hence confirmed, for that the evil Spirit, which is oppoſed to the good Spirit of God, is not 1 Sam. 16. 14. an efficacy of God; but a ſubſiſtent Being; which argueth the good Spirit alſo to be likewiſe ſubſiſtent. The ſame is corroborated from the 1 Cor. 2. 10, 11. Apoſtle's comparing the Spirit of God to that Spirit, which being in man doth ſearch and diſcern his inward counſels and purpoſes; but the Spirit of man is a ſubſtantial thing; wherefore 'tis intimated, that correſpondently the Spirit of God is ſuch a Being. We add to theſe things, that power, virtue, efficacy are aſcribed to the Holy Spirit; that you may (ſaith St. Paul) abound in hope by the power of the Holy Ghoſt; but Rom. 15. 13, 19. that power ſhould be attributed unto power, or efficacy to efficacy, is not congruous.

3. The Holy Scripture (to whoſe ſpeech it becometh us to ſute our conceptions) doth commonly deſcribe the Holy Spirit as a perſon, enjoying perſonal titles, offices, attributes and operations; and thoſe ſuch which neither in ſound or ſenſe do agree to mere efficacy.

1. Speaking of the Holy Ghoſt, it purpoſely and carefully (as it were) doth accommodate the article agreeing to a perſon: Not it, but he is the article commonly aſſigned to the Spirit; and that with marks of doing it ſtudiouſly: Ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐκεῖνος, τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας, when he John 16. 13. (in the maſculine gender) comes, the ſpirit of truth (in the neuter) 14. 26. 'tis ſaid in St. John's Goſpel: and τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν (none, in the 15. 2, 6. maſculine gender again, knoweth the things of God, but the Spirit of God) 1 Cor. 2. 11. why, otherwiſe beſide analogy of Grammar, ſhould the ſtile be ſo tempered or inflicted, but to inſinuate the Holy Spirit's perſonality? If he were nothing elſe but the virtue of God, there were no need, or rather it would be inconvenient, ſo to phraſe it.

2. Again, the Scripture attributes perſonal offices to the Holy Spirit; the office of a Maſter (He ſhall teach you) of a Leader, or Guide John 14. 16. (He ſhall lead you into all truth) of a Monitor (He ſhall bring all things John 16. 13. to your remembrance) of a Witneſs (He ſhall teſtify concerning me) yea, John 15. 26. which more ſtrongly evinceth, of a Legate, who declareth God's mind, not as from himſelf, but as deputed and furniſhed with Inſtructions from the Father and the Son: He ſhall not ('tis ſaid) ſpeak from him- Joh. 16. 13, 15. ſelf; but whatever things he ſhall hear, he ſhall ſpeak; and he will tell you things to come: All things that the Father hath, are mine; therefore, ſaid I, that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you: Which expreſſions do in no ſort well agree to the divine power, or efficacy, but evidently reſpect a perſon; for what is performed by any agent, to ſay that of its efficacy, as diſtinct from it, is beſide the reaſon and manner of Speech; and doth eſpecially diſagree with the nature and genius of the divine Scripture, which undertaketh moſt ſimply and plainly to inſtruct us. That God's efficacy ſhould be ſent from the Father and Son; that it ſhould ſpeak, that it ſhould hear from the Father ther and the Son, how ſtrangely hard and obſcure a manner of ſpeaking is that? from them, not from himſelf: what himſelf can they imagine, who diſtinguiſh him not from God, and allow him no perſonality? why ſhould we without neceſſity aſperſe the Holy Scripture, made clearly to inſtruct us, with ſuch miſtyneſs and darkneſs? Likewiſe to the Holy Spirit is attributed the office of a Paraclete, or Advocate, who pleadeth our cauſe with God, praying and interceding with God for us: but that God's efficacy (which can hardly be conceived, which ſhould not be conceived diſtinct from God) ſhould ſpeak to God, ſhould interpoſe it ſelf between us, is, as the reſt, too perplexed and intricate a ſaying.

Rom. 6. 26.

3. Farthermore, the Holy Scripture doth to the Holy Spirit attribute faculties and operations annexed to him plainly perſonal: ſuch are Underſtanding (the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea the deep things of God: The things of God none knoweth, but the Spirit of God) Will (He divideth to every one as he willeth) Affections; of Grief (Grieve not the Holy Spirit) and Anger (They provoked his Holy Spirit) Senſe (what he ſhall hear, he will ſpeak) Speech, there and in many other places: (It is not you, ſaith our Saviour, that ſpeak, but the ſpirit of your Father that is in you: and The Spirit ſaid, ſeparate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them; and again, very emphatically; while Peter thought on the viſion, the Spirit ſaid unto him, behold three men ſeek thee.) Now theſe and the like faculties and acts are clearly perſonal; not repreſenting any quality, or energy, but a live and intellectual ſubſtance. To interpret all theſe things as ſpoken by fiction or dramatically, what is it but to transform God's oracles into Pythian riddles, and of Theology to frame a Mythology? that ſometime for emphaſis ſake, in matters leſs dark or high, the Holy Scripture may ſometime uſe ſuch ſchemes, nothing I confeſs doth hinder; but that perpetually it ſhould involve ſuch a moſt-grave and ſublime matter with ſuch tortuous forms of ſpeech, doth in truth not ſeem conſentaneous to its moſt holy and ſimple Majeſty: As more ſimply, more clearly and more intelligibly, ſo more compendiouſly it might have been ſaid, God knoweth, God willeth, God is thus or thus affected, God ſpeaketh; than, God's virtue knoweth, God's power willeth, God's efficacy ſpeaketh; if theſe manners of ſpeech did not otherwiſe differ, at leaſt the former would be more clear, ſimple and expedite, nor would it ſo yield occaſion to errours and doubts; and therefore more worthy it would be of the Holy Writ. However ſuch Proſopopæia's ſhould not be inept, but ſuch as moſt appoſitely ſhould agree to the matter propoſed, which would not happen in this caſe; for of thoſe perſonal attributes ſome at leaſt do ſcarce admit thoſe figurate ſenſes, or do plainly refuſe them; 'tis hard to ſay that a divine power doth know, or hear; and who will ſay that a divine efficacy is affected with anger, or ſorrow?

1 Cor. 2. 10, 11.
2 Cor. 12. 11.
John 3. 8.
Epheſ. 4. 30.
Iſa. 63. 10.
John 16. 13.
Mat. 10. 20.
Acts 13. 2. & 10. 19.

I add, that when the ſin of blaſphemy is ſaid to be committed againſt the Holy Spirit juſt in the ſame form of ſpeech as againſt the Son, it is ſignified that the Holy Spirit is in the ſame manner a perſon as the Son is a perſon; otherwiſe the compariſon would not ſeem to be well framed.

4. The Holy Spirit in the ſame manner, and by like right as the Father and Son, is the object of our faith, worſhip, obedience; the which as by divers other ways (as afterwards we may ſhew) ſo eſpecially doth appear from the form of Baptiſm inſtituted and preſcribed by our Lord;

where we as well are baptized into the name of the Holy Spirit, as of the Father and Son; wherein is ſignified, and by a ſolemn conteſtation ratified, on the part of God, that thoſe three joined and confederated (as it were) are conſpiringly propitious and favourable to us; that they do receive us into their diſcipline, grace and patronage; that they are ready, and by virtue of promiſe in a manner bound, to beſtow on us excellent benefits and privileges (on us, I ſay, performing the laws and conditions of the covenant then entred into) On our part, that we do with ſound and firm faith equally (that is thorowly and entirely) acknowledg and confeſs thoſe three; that we repoſe an equal (that is a moſt firm) hope and confidence in them; that we do moſt highly reverence all and each of them; that we do ſincerely and ſeriouſly undertake and promiſe a perpetual (and neareſt, to what we are able, a perfect) obedience to them: doing which things, we do (as Athanaſius, or an antient writer under his name obſerveth) yield more than a ſimple adoration to the Holy Spirit: (Since, ſaith he, they that are catechized in order to Baptiſm, are not before they are Baptized, perfect Chriſtians, but being Baptized are conſummated; Baptiſm therefore imports more than adoration) Hence who ſees not in this firſt and principal myſtery of our religion the Holy Spirit is exhibited to us as a perſon, that about him as ſuch this excellent part of our duty, this eximious worſhip is converſant? Attending to this point we may alſo ſee the adverſe opinion to be urg'd with many inconveniences: for if the Holy Spirit be not a perſon, not aptly (or rather very incongruouſly) he is put into the ſame rank with the other two perſons; not rightly are things ſo wholly differing in kind (things ſubſiſtent and not ſubſiſtent) conjoined, and juſt in the ſame form propoſed as like objects of worſhip; yea ſuperfluouſly and to no purpoſe doth the Holy Spirit ſeem to be adjoined, if by it nothing beſide the divine efficacy is deſigned: for acknowledging the Father, we do withal acknowledg his power and efficacy, congruous to the divine nature; worſhipping the Father, we do together adore his power; devoting our ſelves in obedience to the Father, we do likewiſe ſubject our ſelves to his power: as if one hath promiſed faith and loyalty to the King, he therein hath abundantly ſatiſfied his duty; ſo that there is no farther need to profeſs himſelf devoted to the King's power or efficacy: who ſees not that in ſuch a caſe it is ſuperfluous and idle to ſever the King from his royal power? One may alſo ask, why with as good reaſon we ſhould not be conſecrated into the name of the divine goodneſs, of the divine juſtice, of the divine wiſdom, or of any other divine attribute, as into the name of the divine power? The Socinian expoſition therefore doth caſt ſtrange clouds and incongruities upon this auguſt myſtery: which yet in decency ſhould be moſt clearly and ſimply propounded, leſt in the very entrance of our Chriſtian profeſſion an occaſion ſhould be given of ſtumbling into great errour.

Εἰ δὲ μὴ εἰσὶ τέλειοι χριστιανοὶ οἱ κατηχούμενοι πρὶν ἢ βαπτισθῶσι, βαπτισθέντες δὲ τελειοῦνται· τὸ βάπτισμα ἄρα μεῖζόν ἐστι τῆς προσκυνήσεως. Athan. Dial. 1. contra Maced. p. 265.

5. The perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt is alſo perſpicuouſly evinced, from its being repreſented under the viſible ſhape of a ſubſiſtent * thing. A ſubſtantial thing is no proper ſymbol, or repreſentative of a thing accidental; nor commodiouſly may aſſume its name: to a thing having no ſubſiſtence it doth not well ſute to deſcend like a Dove, and to reſt upon Chriſt: ſuppoſing the Spirit were only the efficacy of God the Father, ſeeing the effects of faculties and operations are moſt aptly attributed to the perſons having or exerting them, it could have been ſaid (and that more rightly and properly) that the Father himſelf did appear appear in a corporeal figure, that the Father deſcended, that the Father ſate upon Chriſt, that the Father was ſeen by the Holy Baptiſt; the which it were raſh to affirm.

* Ἐν εἴδει σωματικῷ, in a bodily ſhape, as it is ſaid in the Goſpel.

Cur non hîc accipiamus viſibiliter inſinuatam per creaturam viſibilem Trinitatis æqualitatem, atque in tribus perſonis unum, eandémque ſubſtantiam. Aug. de Trin. 2. 11, 12.

I forbear to alledg, that the Holy Spirit is reckoned among the three that bear witneſs in heaven; that the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is diſtinguiſhed from the ſin againſt God the Father. I alſo paſs over, that a Trinity of Perſons (as many of the Fathers conceive) was repreſented in the apparition to Abraham, where it is ſaid, Gen. 18. 1. The Lord appeared, and Three men appeared to him; as alſo that the Eſ. 6. 3. Apoc. 4. 8. Hymn [Triſagias] (in Eſay and the Apocalypſe) does inſinuate it likewiſe that the phraſes Creavit Elohim (Gods in the plural, did create in the Deut. 6. 4. ſingular) Faciamus hominem, let us make man; Jehovah Elohim, the Lord our Gods; and the like may well hither be referred. For from what hath been ſaid, the Socinian error may ſeem abundantly confuted.

III. We thirdly now aſſert (ſuppoſing his perſonality) that the Holy Spirit is God, coeſſential to God the Father, and God the Son; or that the one divine nature (with all its attributes and perfections) is common to him with the Father; or that (which is the ſame) the Holy Spirit is God, that moſt High God, moſt abſolutely and properly ſo called (for, ſeeing the Holy Scriptures do frequently inculcate that there is but one God, if the Holy Spirit be God, he muſt neceſſarily be coeſſential to the Father and the Son.) Now that he is God, we againſt the Macedonians, or Semi-Arians, do aſſert, and by theſe Arguments prove:

I. The moſt proper names of God, and the moſt divine titles are every where (according to juſt interpretation, and by perſpicuous conſequence) attributed unto the Holy Spirit: inaſmuch as often (almoſt ever) upon various occaſions the ſame words, works and acts are referr'd to God and the Holy Spirit; ſo that whatever God is ſaid to have ſpoken, to have performed, to have made, that alſo is reported, ſaid, tranſacted, produced by the Holy Ghoſt; and reciprocally, whatever doth any way regard the Holy Spirit, that is referr'd to God; the which doth argue, that between the beings denoted by the names God and Holy Spirit an eſſential identity, or unity doth intercede. Of the Pſal. 78. 56. Iſraelites being wickedly incredulous and refractory it is ſaid: They tempted and provoked the moſt High God, and kept not his teſtimonies; the ſame Iſa. 63. 10. Eſay thus expreſſeth: They rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit. In Eſay Acts 28. 25. (6. 9.) God is ſaid to ſend the Prophets; St. Paul reporting it ſaith, the Holy Ghoſt ſent them. St. Peter chargeth Ananias, that he had lied to the Holy Spirit; and thence that he had lied to God: Acts 5. 3, 4. Ananias (ſaith he) why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie unto the Holy Ghoſt? preſently he ſubjoins, Thou haſt not lied unto men, but unto God; he plainly by thoſe names deſigneth the ſame things, and more than intimates it to be the ſame thing to lie to God, and to lie to the Spirit. Our Lord as man was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and for that reaſon was the Son of God: Luc. 1. 35. The Holy Ghoſt (ſaid the Angel) ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee; therefore that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee ſhall be called the Son of God. What conſequence were there of this, if the Holy Ghoſt is not God? Our Lord alſo is ſaid to have performed his miracles by the power of God, and by the power of the Holy Spirit indifferently: If I (ſaith he in Saint Matthew) by the Spirit of God caſt out Devils: In Saint Luke he ſaith; If I by the finger (that is by the power) of God caſt out Devils; and both Phraſes Saint Paul doth equipollently expreſs by the power of the Holy Ghoſt: and Saint Peter ſays, that God did the miracles by him. The Holy Scripture, becauſe dictated by the Holy Spirit, is ſaid to be θεόπνευστος, or inſpired by God. The Spirit ſpake in the prophets (ſaith Saint Peter, and the other holy writers commonly) God ſpake in them, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, and others likewiſe, ſo often as the Holy Scripture is called the word of God. The Holy Spirit doth ſhed abroad and work charity in our hearts; we are thence ſaid to be θεοδίδακτοι, taught by God to love one another; yea every virtue, all holineſs is promiſcuouſly aſcribed to God and the Holy Ghoſt as its immediate authors: To be led by the Spirit of God, and God worketh in us to will and to do, do ſignifie the ſame thing. Every faithful Chriſtian is therefore called a temple (that is a place conſecrated to God) becauſe the Holy Spirit in a ſpecial manner is preſent in him: Know ye not, that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? (ſaith Saint Paul in our Text) know ye not that ye are God's temple? whence ſhould we know it? from hence, that God's Spirit inhabiteth you, becauſe the inhabitation of the Spirit is the ſame with the inhabitation of God. The ſame Apoſtle again: In whom ye are alſo builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit; for an habitation of God in the Spirit, that is therefore an habitation of God, becauſe the Spirit dwelleth in you; how could the Divinity of the Holy Spirit be more expreſly declared? we may add that Saint Paul calleth the Holy Spirit, Lord, ὁ δὲ κύριος τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστι, but the Lord is that Spirit; which Spirit in the words immediately following is called the Spirit of the Lord; the which alſo before (as Saint Chryſoſtom noteth) is called the Spirit of the living God: the Spirit therefore of the Lord is the Lord himſelf, unto whom the Jews, when the veil covering their minds is taken off, ſhall return. (Laſtly, Saint John affirms the Father, Son and Holy Spirit to be one; and therefore the Holy Ghoſt is God.)

Matt. 12. 28.
Luc. 11. 19.
Rom. 15. 19.
Act. 2. 22.
2 Tim. 3. 16.
1 Pet. 1. 11.
Heb. 1. 1.
2 Pet. 1. 21.
Luc. 1. 70, &c.
Rom. 5. 5.
1 Theſ. 4. 8, 9
Rom. 8. 14.
Phil. 2. 13.
2 Cor. 3. 16, 17. 6. 19.
2 Cor. 6. 16.
Rom. 8. 9.
Eph. 2. 22.
2 Cor. 3. 17, &c.
1 Joh. 5. 7.

Hence (for corollary to this argument) we ſee how we may retund the importunity of the Macedonians, who did nothing but ask where in Scripture the Holy Ghoſt is called God: where ſay you is he called God? where not, ſay I? almoſt every where he in effect is ſo called: ſeeing when all about in the ſame deed, or in the ſame hiſtory, the ſame words and acts are reported of Cæſar and of the Emperour, it may rightly be pronounced, that Cæſar is there called Emperour; which no man, I ſuppoſe, will contradict. The caſe is here plainly the ſame between the Holy Spirit and God.

Dial. adverſ. Maced. apud Athan.

2. To the Holy Spirit are moſt expreſly attributed all the incommunicable perfections of God, the eſſential characters and properties of the divine nature. The very Epithet of Holy (abſolutely, in way of excellence characteriſtically put) is one of them: for (as it is in Hannah's ſong) There is none holy as the Lord; neither is there any beſide thee: there is none beſide God abſolutely and perfectly Holy (that is, by a moſt remote diſtance ſevered from all things, far exalted above all things, peculiarly venerable and auguſt in majeſty) whence ὁ ἅγιος, the Holy one, is a diſtinctive title of God. Yea the name of Spirit it ſelf (abſolutely and eminently put, and ſo importing higheſt purity purity and perfecteſt actuality) doth ſeem to imply the ſame. Alſo eternity, immenſity, omniſcience, omnipotency (than which no more high perfections, or more proper to God can be conceived) are attributed to the Holy Spirit. Eternity; for the Apoſtle to the Hebrews Heb. 9. 14. calls him αἰώνιον πνεῦμα, the eternal Spirit. (How much more, ſaith he, ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who by the eternal Spirit offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience?) Immenſity; Whither (ſaith the Pſal. 139. 7. Pſalmiſt) ſhall I go from thy Spirit? and whither ſhall I fly from thy face?

1 Sam. 2. 2.

The queſtion involveth a negation; and ſignifieth a manifeſt reaſon thereof: I cannot fly any whither from thy Spirit, becauſe it is every 2 Cor. 2. 10, 11. where preſent. Omniſcience; The Spirit, ſaith St. Paul, doth ſearch all things (that is, it perfectly comprehendeth all things) even the deep things of God; τὰ βάθη, the depths, or deepeſt things of God, and conſequently all things, which God knows, or can be known) even thoſe things, which to comprehend doth as far exceed the condition of a creature, as it goeth beyond the capacity of one man to diſcern the cogitations and affections of another man; for ſuch a compariſon St. Paul Luk. 10. 21. doth make. Our Saviour in the Goſpel ſaith, None knoweth who is the Son, but the Father; nor who is the Father, but the Son: but the Holy Spirit did queſtionleſs know who was the Father, and who the Son; he had a knowledg therefore moſt divine and incommunicable.
Particularly to the Holy Spirit is aſſigned the knowledg of future contingencies; which knowledg is peculiarly high and moſt proper to God, and is therefore called divination; the which peculiarly is appropriated to the Holy Spirit, as its immediate principle; whence he is Eph. 3. 5. called the Spirit of prophecy, the Spirit of revelation, the Spirit of wiſ-
1. 17. dom, the Spirit of truth; and from him all the Prophets are ſaid to Rev. 19. 10. Joh. 15. 26. derive their foreknowing power. To theſe may be adjoined other no leſs divine attributes of the Holy Spirit; as Independency in will and 1 Cor. 12. 11. operation; for, All theſe things (ſaith St. Paul, that is the production of thoſe excellent graces, the diſtribution of thoſe wonderful gifts)
Joh. 3. 8. doth one and the ſame Spirit work, dividing to every one as he willeth.
And as the wind bloweth where it willeth,
nor can be determined or hindred by any thing, ſo (as our Lord inſinuates in the Goſpel) the Holy Spirit according to his pleaſure worketh every where. Abſolute goodneſs, which belongeth Mat. 19. 17. only to God (for, there is none good but one, God himſelf) but, Thy Pſal. 143. 10. Neh. 9. 20. Spirit (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) is good, lead me into the land of uprightneſs.
Moſt abſolute veracity (which alſo doth imply both perfect knowledg, and extreme goodneſs) the which is ſignified by the title of truth abſtractedly 1 Joh. 5. 6. aſſigned to him: It is (ſaith St. John) the Spirit that beareth witneſs, becauſe the Spirit is truth; that is, moſt abſolutely and perfectly veracious. In fine, omnipotency doth belong to the Holy Spirit, as by his works doth appear, which we ſhall immediately propound in the next argument. For,

Εἰ μὴ ἦν τῆς οὐσίας τοῦ μόνου ἀγαθοῦ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, οὐκ ἂν ἀγαθὸν ἐκλήθη, ὁπότε κύριος παρῃτεῖτο τὸ καλεῖσθαι ἀγαθὸς, καθὸ ἄνθρωπος γέγονε. Athan. contra Apoll. T. 1. p. 607.

3. Moſt divine operations (tranſcending the power of any created thing) are aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt: ſuch are; to create things, and make the world; for it was the Spirit which reſting upon the unſhapen Job 26. 13. maſs did hatch the world: By his ſpirit (ſaith Job) he hath gar- Pſal. 33. 6. niſhed the heavens. [And, By the world of the Lord, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, were the heavens made, and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth, Heb. 3. 4. or by his Spirit.) But he (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſaith) who Pſal. 104. 30. made all things, is God. To conſerve things: Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they

they are created, and thou reneweſt the face of the earth, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking about the continued production or conſervation of things. Particularly to produce Man both at firſt and continually: for the ſoul of the Protoplaſt was derived from the Spirit of God; and good Elihu profeſſeth of himſelf, The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life; yea (which worthily may be deemed ſomewhat greater and more difficult) to create men again or renew them, being marr'd and deformed, unto the image of God (quickning a man's Spirit in a manner dead, enlightning his blind mind, reforming his perverſe affections) which to effect as it is aſcribed to God, ſo alſo to the Holy Spirit in places numberleſs. Alſo (which is connected with that) to juſtify a man, to remit ſins (not miniſterially, but, which is proper to God, principally and abſolutely) for, ye are (ſaith St. Paul) juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God. To animate the Church by his influence, to govern it by his power and guidance, to preſcribe laws unto it, to ſet rulers over it, to diſpenſe gifts and graces requiſite for the building, propagation and preſervation thereof, are works of his, and together the moſt proper and principal works of divine power. To perform miracles, that is works contrary or ſuperiour to the laws of nature, and therefore only congruous to God; the doing of which is peculiarly attributed to God's Spirit; particularly to raiſe the dead, which is the higheſt of miracles; If (ſaith St. Paul) he that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. In fine, there is no work either of nature, or of providence, or of grace, ſo ſublime, or ſo difficult, which is not aſcribed to the efficacy of the Holy Spirit; the which doth ſhew his ſoveraign authority, and his Almighty power; for ſurely by no more plain and cogent arguments, than by theſe, can the omnipotence of the ſupreme Deity it ſelf be demonſtrated.

Job 33. 4.
Ἡ κτίσις οὐκ ἁγιάζει κτίσιν. Baſ.
Eph. 4. 24.
2. 10.
2 Cor. 4. 6.
5. 17.
Col. 3. 10.
Tit. 3. 5.
Luk. 5. 21.
1 Cor. 6. 11.
Rom. 8. 2.
Tit. 3. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 13.
Act. 15. 28.
Act. 20. 28.
Eph. 4. 11.
1 Cor. 12.
Heb. 2. 4.
Rom. 8. 11.

4. The Divine Majeſty of the Holy Spirit may alſo be aſſerted from the divine Worſhip which is duly to be yielded to him. It by God's appointment is yielded to him, when being ſolemnly baptized in his name we do profeſs to place our faith and hope upon him, we do proteſt our reverence and obedience to him. The ſame is then exhibited, when (according to the rule of St. Paul) together with the grace of our Lord Jeſus, and the love of God the Father, we implore the communion of the Holy Spirit. The ſame is not obſcurely ſignified whenever (that which often occurs) in the execution of divine (moſt excellent and admirable) offices and works, the Holy Ghoſt is put in conjunction and co-ordination with the Father and the Son: For that by God moſt jealous and curious (as it were) of his Honour (who more than once profeſſeth that he will not impart his glory to another) ſhould be allowed to any creature, to march in even rank, to ſeem advanced to an equal pitch of dignity with himſelf, is no-wiſe credible, or agreeable to reaſon. (What communion can there be between a Creature and his Creator? why ſhould that which is made be numbred together with his Maker, in the performing of all things? ſaith St. Athanaſius well) Moreover, what dignity belongs to the H. Spirit, what reverence is due to him, appears clearly from that the blaſphemy againſt him is peculiarly unpardonable, whenas the faults committed againſt God the Father, and obloquy againſt the Son are

2 Cor. 13. 13.
Eſ. 42. 8.
48. 11.

Ποία γὰρ κοινωνία τῷ κτίσματι πρὸς κτιστήν; διά τι τὸ πεποιημένον συναριθμεῖται τῷ ποιήσαντι εἰς τὴν τῶν πάντων τελείωσιν; Ath. Orat. in Ar.

Ἀσεβὲς οὖν ἐστι λέγειν κτιστὸν, ἢ ποιητὸν τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁπότε πᾶσα γραφὴ παλαιά τε καὶ καινὴ μετὰ πατρὸς καὶ υἱοῦ συναριθμεῖ αὐτὸ, καὶ δοξάζει. Id. περὶ ἐνσάρκου ἐπιφ. Tom. 1. p. 600.

capable of remiſſion; for the nature of things doth ſcarce bear, that to detract from a creature ſhould be a crime ſo capital, or receive ſuch aggravation; it cannot well be conceived that the honour of a creature ſhould in ſuch a manner be preferr'd to the honour of God himſelf. How, ſaith St. Ambroſe, can any one dare to reckon the Holy Ghoſt among creatures? or who doth ſo render himſelf obnoxious, that if he derogate from a creature, he may not ſuppoſe it to be relaxable to him by ſome pardon?

Quomodo inter creaturas audet quiſquam Spiritum S. computare? aut quis ſic ſe obligat, ut ſi creaturam derogaverit, non putet ſibi hoc aliquâ veniâ relaxandum? Ambroſ.

Phil. 2. 9. Eph. 1. 21.
Quomodo creatura dicitur, qui Domini Creator ex Maria comprobatur? Aug. Serm. 6. Mat. 1. de Temp.

5. Again, whereas Chriſt even as a man is elevated in dignity and eminence above all creatures (above every Name, far above all principality, authority and power, as the Apoſtle teaches us) he is yet in that reſpect inferiour, and gives place to the Holy Spirit. For as ſuch he did receive his nature from the Holy Spirit; That which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt, ſaith the Evangeliſt; and, more honour than the houſe hath he that made it, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. Chriſt was ſent by the Holy Spirit; The Lord God (ſaid the Prophet of him) and his Spirit hath ſent me, But, The Apoſtle (ſaith he himſelf) is not greater than he that ſent him; the Sent is not greater, that is (by a λιτότης, or μείωσις, the figure of diminution) he is inferiour to the Sender. Chriſt was conſecrated, and inaugurated into his offices by the Holy Spirit: The Spirit of the Lord (foretold Eſaias of Chriſt, as the Evangeliſts interpret) is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me: But, without controverſy the leſſer is bleſſed by the greater, ſaith the Apoſtle. Chriſt was by the Holy Ghoſt endowed with excellent gifts abundantly and beyond meaſure; but, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive, is an Aphoriſm out of our Lords own mouth. In fine, our Lord did by virtue of the Holy Spirit perform miracles; by the eternal Spirit he offered himſelf to God; by the Spirit he was raiſed from the dead: which things are manifeſt arguments that the Holy Spirit doth excel Chriſt as man; wherefore ſeeing beſide God only, nothing is in worth or dignity ſuperiour to Chriſt, it neceſſarily follows that the Holy Spirit is God.

Heb. 3. 3.
Iſa. 48. 16.
Joh. 13. 16.
Iſa. 61. 1, 12.
Luk. 4. 48.
Heb. 7. 7.
Joh. 3. 34.
Luk. 4. 1, 2. 40. 52.
Act. 21. 35.
Mat. 12. 28.
Heb. 9. 14.
Rom. 1. 4. 8. 11.

6. I add, that whereas upon divers occaſions the Ranks and Orders of Creatures are mentioned in Scripture (as where all the Quire of them is ſummon'd and cited to ſing the praiſes of God; namely the Angels, the heavens, the earth, men, beaſts, plants; when Catalogues are recited of things made by Chriſt, and ſubject to him, among which Angels, Thrones, Dominations, Dignities and Powers are mentioned) it is ſtrange, that this top of creatures (if a creature he be) this leader of the Quire ſhould wholly be pretermitted. It is very probable, that if the Prophets had known, nor the Apoſtles had thought this, they would have not been ſilent about it, they would, as reaſon had required, have ſet him in the head of all; which if they had done, they would have exempted us from theſe ſcruples and errours in ſo high a point: but they could not do it, becauſe indeed the Holy Spirit is not in the order of creatures; the which we do ſeem ſufficiently to have proved.

Pſal. 103. 148. &c.
1 Pet. 3. 22.
Col. 1. 16.
Eph. 1. 21.
Rom. 8. 38.

To all the premiſed points no ſmall acceſſion of weight doth come from the authority of ſo many Holy Fathers and Councils; and from the conſent of the Church, running down through ſo many ages; to oppoſe which, without very weighty and manifeſt reaſons, doth as much recede from prudence, as it is far from modeſty.

III. The next point we ſhall conſider is the Original of the Holy Spirit; the which we do aſſert to be in way of proceſſion jointly from God the Father, and God the Son; meaning hereby, that to this divine perſon in a peculiar manner (incomprehenſible indeed and ineffable, but which in ſome manner by this term proceſſion may be ſignified) the divine Eſſence which he hath, is communicated from the Father and the Son.

That the Holy Spirit is not from himſelf, as the Father is, is plain; for that being ſuppoſed, there would be more firſt principles than one, and conſequently more Gods than one; which is contrary to the whole tenour of Scripture: neither did any ever affirm ſo much.

ὐκ ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ λαλήσει. Joh. 16. 13.

That he proceedeth from the Father, appeareth from that the Father is the fountain and firſt principle of all Eſſence: and by our Saviour the Spirit is ſaid ἐκπορεύεσθαι, to go out from the Father; and he is called τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, The Spirit that is out of God (the Father) by S. Paul: and this is generally confeſſed.

Novat. de Trin. 31.
Joh. 15. 16.
1 Cor. 2. 12.

That alſo he doth proceed from the Son (which is by the modern Greeks denied) may be proved.

1. Becauſe as he is called the Spirit of the Father, ſo he is alſo often ſtyled the Spirit of the Son; which ſignifies he is in a like manner related to the Son as to the Father; and that both therefore in a like manner conſpire to his production.

Matt. 10. 20.
Gal. 4. 6.
Rom. 8. 9.
1 Pet. 1. 11.
Phil. 1. 19.

2. He is ſaid to be ſent as from the Father, ſo alſo from the Son. But miſſion and proceſſion do not ſeem to differ, except in manner of ſpeech (one more eſpecially denoting the name whence, the other the act or effect of the ſame thing) Nor doth it agree to the Holy Spirit, who (as we have ſhewed) is God, to go out, or be ſent otherwiſe than by reception of eſſence.

3. The Son ſaith of the Holy Spirit, ἐκ τοῦ ἐμοῦ λήψεται, he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you; and to the ſame purpoſe, whatſoever he ſhall hear, he ſhall ſpeak; by which ſaying it is intimated that the Holy Spirit doth receive knowledg from the Son; the which, being God, he cannot otherwiſe do, than by receiving his eſſence from the Son.

Joh. 16. 13, 14.

4. The Holy Spirit is a perſon third in order; ſeeing then the Son before him in order (in order I ſay, not in time) obtaineth the divine nature; ſo that, when the Holy Spirit doth proceed, it is common to both Father and Son, he cannot receive it from the Father ſeparately, or without alſo deriving it from the Son. Thus our Lord himſelf ſeemeth to have argued, when he ſaith: All things that the Father hath are mine, therefore ſaid I that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

Joh. 16. 15. 17. 10.

5. Laſtly, our Saviour (as St. Auguſtine and Cyril conceive) did ſignifie this proceſſion from himſelf, when breathing on his diſciples he ſaid, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt.

Joh. 20. 22.

6. To theſe Arguments may be added the conſentient authority of the Latin Fathers, Hilary, Ambroſe, Auſtin, and the reſt; which explicitely teach this doctrine. Alſo the more antient Greeks, Athanaſius, Baſil, both the Gregories, Epiphanius, Cyrillus Alexandrinus do (although ſeldom expreſly in terms, yet equipollently, and according to ſenſe) ſay the ſame.

Deus Pater co-æternum ſibi.
Τος, πηγὴ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος Athan. contra Apol. T. 1. p. 601.

We proceed now to the peculiar offices, functions and operations of the Holy Spirit: Many ſuch there are in an eſpecial manner attributed, or appropriated to him; which as they reſpect God, ſeem reducible to two general ones: the declarations of God's mind, and the execution of his will; as they are referr'd to man (for in regard to other Beings, the Scripture doth not ſo much conſider what he performs, it not concerning us to know it) are eſpecially, the producing in us all qualities and diſpoſitions, the guiding and aiding us in all actions requiſite or conducible to our eternal happineſs and ſalvation; to which may be added the interceſſion between God and man, which jointly reſpecteth both.

Joh. 15. 26.
Eph. 1. 17.
Rev. 19. 10.
Veritas ubicunque eſt, à Spiritu Sancto eſt.
Luk. 1. 70.
2 Pet. 1. 21.

1. Firſt, it is his eſpecial work to declare God's mind to us: Whence he is ſtyled the ſpirit of truth, the ſpirit of prophecy, the ſpirit of revelation; for that all ſupernatural light and wiſdom hath ever proceeded from him. He inſtructed all the Prophets that have been ſince the world began to know, he enabled them to ſpeak the mind of God concerning things preſent and future. Holy men (that have taught men their duty, and led them in the way to bliſs) were but his inſtruments, ſpeaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

1 Tim. 3. 16.
Joh. 16. 13.
Eph. 3. 5.
1 Cor. 2. 11.

By his inſpiration the Holy Scriptures (the moſt full and certain witneſs of God's mind, the law and teſtimony by which our life is to be directed and regulated) were conceived. He guided the Apoſtles into all truth, and by them inſtructed the world in the knowledg of God's gracious intentions toward mankind, and in all the holy myſteries of the Goſpel: That which in other ages was not made known unto the ſons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy Apoſtles and Prophets by the Spirit. Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, ſaith Saint Paul. All the knowledg we can pretend to in theſe things doth proceed meerly from his Revelation, doth wholly rely upon his authority,

Luk. 1. 35. 24. 49.
Luk. 11. 20.
Matt. 12. 28.
Pſal. 33. 6.
Gen. 1. 1.
Job 26. 13.

2. To him it eſpecially belongs to execute the will of God in matters tranſcending the ordinary power and courſe of nature. Whence he is called the power of the moſt high (that is, the ſubſtantial power and virtue of God) the Finger of God (as by comparing the expreſſions of S. Matthew and S. Luke may appear) and whatever eminent God hath deſigned, he is ſaid to perform by him; by him he framed the World, and (as Job ſpeaketh) garniſhed the Heavens. By him he governeth the World, ſo that all extraordinary works of providence (when God beſide the common Law, and uſual courſe of nature, doth interpoſe to do any thing) all miraculous performances are attributed to his Energy. By him our Saviour, by him the Apoſtles, by him the Prophets are expreſly ſaid to perform their wonderful works; but eſpecially by him,

3. God manages that great work, ſo earneſtly deſigned by him, of our ſalvation; working in us all good diſpoſitions, capacifying us for ſalvation, directing and aſſiſting us in all our actions tending thereto.

We naturally are void of thoſe good diſpoſitions in underſtanding, will and affection, which are needful to render us acceptable to God, fit to ſerve and pleaſe him, capable of any favour from him, of any true happineſs in our ſelves: Our minds naturally are blind, ignorant, ſtupid, giddy, and prone to error, eſpecially in things ſupernatural, ſpiritual, and abſtracted from ordinary ſenſe. Our wills are froward and ſtubborn, light and unſtable, inclining to evil, and averſe from what is truly good; our affections are very irregular, diſorderly and unſetled: to remove which bad diſpoſitions (inconſiſtent with God's friendſhip and favour, driving us into ſin and miſery) and to beget thoſe contrary to them, the knowledg and belief of divine truth, a love of goodneſs and delight therein, a well compoſed, orderly and ſteady frame of ſpirit, God in mercy doth grant to us the Virtue of his H. Spirit; who firſt opening our Hearts, ſo as to let in and apprehend the light of divine truth, then by repreſentation of proper Arguments perſuading our reaſon to embrace it, begetteth divine knowledg, wiſdom and faith in our minds, which is the work of illumination and inſtruction, the firſt part of his office reſpecting our ſalvation.

Act. 16. 14.
1 Cor. 12. 8, 9.

Then by continual impreſſions he bendeth our inclinations, and mollifieth our hearts, and tempereth our affections to a willing compliance with God's will, and a hearty complacence in that which is good and pleaſing to God; ſo breeding all pious and vertuous inclinations in us, reverence toward God, charity to men, ſobriety and purity as to our ſelves, with the reſt of thoſe amiable and heavenly vertues of ſoul, which is the work of ſanctification, another great part of his Office.

Both theſe operations together (enlightning our minds, ſanctifying our will and affections) do conſtitute, and accompliſh that work, which is ſtiled the Regeneration, Renovation, Vivification, New-creation, Reſurrection of a man; the faculties of our ſouls being ſo improved, that we become, as it were, other men thereby; able and apt to do that for which before we were altogether indiſpoſed, and unfit.

Tit. 3. 5.
Col. 2. 12, 13.
Eph. 2. 5. 4. 23, 24. 2. 10.
2 Cor. 5. 17.

He alſo directeth, and governeth our actions, continually leading, and moving us in the ways of obedience to God's holy will and law. As we live by him (having a new ſpiritual life implanted in us) ſo we walk by him, are continually led and acted by his conduct, and help. He reclaimeth us from error and ſin; he ſupporteth and ſtrengtheneth us in temptation; he adviſeth, and admoniſheth, exciteth and encourageth us to all works of piety and vertue.

Gal. 5. 25.
Rom. 8. 14.

Particularly, he guideth, and quickneth us in devotion, ſhewing us what we ſhould ask, raiſing in us holy deſires, and comfortable hopes, diſpoſing us to approach unto God with fit diſpoſitions of mind, love and reverence, and humble confidence.

Rom. 8. 26, 27.
1 Joh. 15. 14.

It is alſo a notable part of the Holy Spirit's office to comfort and ſuſtain us, as in all our religious practice, ſo particularly in our doubts, difficulties, diſtreſſes and afflictions; to beget joy, peace and ſatisfaction in us, in all our performances, and all our ſufferings, whence the title of Comforter belongeth to him.

Rom. 15. 13.
Heb. 3. 6.
1 Pet. 1. 8.

It is alſo another part thereof, to aſſure us of God's gracious love and favour, and that we are his children; confirming in us the hopes of our everlaſting inheritance. We feeling our ſelves to live ſpiritually by him, to love God, and goodneſs, to thirſt after righteouſneſs, and to delight in pleaſing God, are thereby raiſed to hope God loves and favours us; and that he having by ſo authentick a ſeal ratified his word and promiſe, having already beſtowed ſo ſure a pledg, ſo precious an earneſt, ſo plentiful firſt-fruits, will not fail to make good the remainder deſigned and promiſed us, of everlaſting joy and bliſs.

Rom. 8. 23.
2 Cor. 1. 22. 5. 5.
Eph. 1. 14.

4. The Holy Ghoſt is alſo our interceſſor with God; preſenting our ſupplications, and procuring our good. He cryeth in us, he pleadeth for us to God. Whence he is peculiarly called παράκλητος, he Advocate; that is, one who is called in by his good word, or countenance to aid him, whoſe cauſe is to be examined, or petition to be conſidered.

5. To which things we may add, that the Holy Ghoſt bears the office of a ſoul to God's Church, informing, enlivening and actuating

2 Cor. 12. 12, 13.

the whole body thereof; connecting and containing its members in ſpiritual union, harmony, order, peace and ſafety; eſpecially quickning the principal members (the Governors and Paſtors) thereof; conſtituting them in their function, qualifying them for the diſcharge Act. 20. 28. thereof, guiding and aiding them in it: Take heed (ſaid S. Paul to Eph. 4. 12. the Elders of Epheſus) unto your ſelves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers: And, all theſe things 1 Cor. 12. 11. worketh that one, and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every man ſeverally as he willeth.

We have thus paſſed over the ſeveral main doctrines concerning the Bleſſed Holy Spirit; the application of which to practice briefly ſhould be this; the uſes which the conſideration of theſe points may have, are theſe.

1. We are upon the premiſes obliged to render all honour, and adoration, to the Majeſty of the divine Spirit.

2. The conſideration of theſe things ſhould work in us an humble affection, and a devout thankfulneſs to God for ſo ineſtimable a favour conferr'd upon us, as is the preſence and inhabitation, the counſel, conduct and aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit in us. Him we gratefully muſt own and acknowledg as the Author of our ſpiritual life, of all good diſpoſitions in us, of all good works performed by us, of all happineſs that we are capable of; to him therefore we muſt humbly render all thanks and praiſe, aſſuming nothing to our ſelves.

3. We ſhould earneſtly deſire, and pray for God's Spirit, the fountain of ſuch excellent benefits, ſuch graces, ſuch gifts, ſuch privileges, ſuch joys and bleſſings ineſtimable. If we heartily invite him, if we fervently pray for him, he aſſuredly will come to us; for ſo our Lord hath Luc. 11. 13. promiſed, That our heavenly Father will give the Holy Spirit to them which aſk it.

4. We ſhould endeavour to demean our ſelves well toward the Holy Spirit; yielding to that heavenly gueſt, when he vouchſafeth to arrive, a ready entrance, and a kind welcome into our hearts; entertaining him with all poſſible reſpect and obſervance; hearkning attentively to his holy ſuggeſtions, and carefully obeying him; not quenching the divine light, or the devout heat which he kindleth in us; not reſiſting his kindly motions and ſuaſions; not grieving, or vexing him, that ſo with ſatisfaction he may continue, and reſide in us, to our infinite benefit and comfort. It ſhould engage us to cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh, and ſpirit; that we may be fit temples for ſo holy, and pure a ſpirit to dwell in; leſt he, by our impurities, be offended, loath and forſake us.

5. It is matter of comfort, and encouragement (exceedingly needful and uſeful for us) to conſider that we have ſuch a guide, and aſſiſtant in all our religious practice and ſpiritual warfare. If our luſts be ſtrong, our temptations great, our enemies mighty; we need not be diſheartned, having this All-wiſe, and All-mighty friend to adviſe, and help us: his grace is ſufficient for us againſt all the ſtrength of hell, the fleſh, and the world. Let our duty be never ſo hard, and our natural force never ſo weak; we ſhall be able to do all things by him, that ſtrengtheneth us: if we will but faithfully apply our ſelves to his aid, we cannot fail of good ſucceſs.

THUS ſar the Author's Sermons upon the Creed. As to the remaining Articles, he hath only left a ſhort Explication of them, like to that upon the Lord's Prayer, &c. And there needed not much more, conſidering that the Subſtance of theſe Articles had been treated of before: That of the Holy Catholick Church, and of the Communion of Saints in his Diſcourſe of the Unity of the Church, at the end of his Treatiſe of the Pope's Supremacy; and that of the Forgiveneſs of Sins, in his Sermons of Juſtification; and that of the Reſurrection of the Body, in his Sermon of the Reſurrection of Chriſt.

The Holy Catholick Church.

THIS Article was, I conceive, adjoined, or inſerted here, upon occaſion of thoſe many Hereſies and Schiſms, which from the beginning continually ſprang up, to the danger of Chriſtian doctrine, and diſturbance of the Church; the introducers thereof meaning thereby to ſecure the truth of Religion, the authority of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, the peace and unity of the Church, by engaging men to diſclaim any conſent or conſpiracy with any of thoſe erroneous, or contentious people (who had deviſed new conceits, deſtructive or dangerous to the Faith, againſt the general conſent of Chriſtians, or drave on troubleſom factions, contrary to the common order, and prejudicial to the peace of the Church.) Their meaning of this Article therefore was, I take it, this: I believe, that is, I do adhere unto (for belief, as we at firſt obſerved, is to be taken as the nature of the matter requireth) or I am perſwaded that I ought to adhere unto that Body of Chriſtians, which diffuſed over the world retains the Faith which was taught, and the Diſcipline which was ſettled, and the Peace which was enjoyned by our Lord, and his Diſciples; I acknowledg the Doctrines generally embraced by the Churches, founded and inſtructed by the Apoſtles; I am ready to obſerve the received cuſtoms, and practices by them derived from Apoſtolical Inſtitution; I ſubmit to the laws and diſciplines by lawful authority eſtabliſhed in them; I do perſiſt in charity, concord and communion with them.

And that men antiently ſhould be obliged to profeſs thus, there is ground both in Reaſon, and Scripture. In reaſon, there being no more proper or effectual argument to aſſure us, that any doctrine is true, or practice warrantable; no means more proper to convince Sectaries (deviating from truth or duty) than the conſent of all Churches, of whom (being ſo diſtant in place, language, cuſtoms, humour; ſo independent, or coordinate in power) it is not imaginable, that they ſhould ſoon, or eaſily conſpire in forſaking the doctrines inculcated by the Apoſtles, or the practices inſtituted by them; it is the argument which Irenæus, Tertullian, and other defenders of Chriſtian truth and peace do preſs, and it may in matters of this kind paſs for a demonſtration.

It hath alſo ground in Scripture; which as it foretels, that pernicious hereſies ſhould be introduced, that many falſe Prophets ſhould ariſe, and ſeduce many; that grievous wolves ſhould come in, not ſparing the flock; that men ſhould ariſe ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw diſciples after them; as they warn us to take heed of ſuch men, to reject and refuſe hereticks, to mark thoſe which make diviſions and ſcandals, beſide the doctrine which Chriſtians had learnt, and to decline from them; to ſtand off from ſuch men, as do ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, that is, teach things different from Apoſtolical Doctrine, the Doctrine according to Godlineſs; as it injoins us to hold faſt the form of ſound words, heard from the Apoſtles; to continue in the things, which we have learned, and been aſſured of, knowing of whom we learnt them; to obey from the heart, that form of doctrine, into which we were delivered; to keep the traditions, as the Apoſtles delivered them to us; to ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which we were taught, whether by word or writing; to ſtrive earneſtly for the faith once delivered to the Saints; as it enjoins us to walk orderly, to obey our guides, or rulers; to purſue peace, to maintain concord, to abide in charity with all good Chriſtians; as it declareth hereſies, factions, contentions and ſeparations to be the works of the fleſh, proceeding from corrupt diſpoſitions of ſoul, (pride, covetouſneſs, vanity, raſhneſs, inſtability, perverſeneſs, craſt, hypocriſy, want of conſcience) ſo it alſo deſcribes the univerſality of them, who ſtick to the truth and obſerve the Law of Chriſt, keeping the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace; to be one body, knit together, and compacted of parts, affording mutual aid and ſupply to its nouriſhment and welfare; joined to, and deriving life, motion, ſenſe from one Head; informed by one ſpirit: as one houſe built upon the foundation of Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt himſelf being the corner ſtone, in whom all the building is fitly framed and connected; as one family under one Maſter; one City under one Governour; one flock under one ſhepherd; one nation or people ſubject to the ſame Law and Government, uſed to the ſame ſpeech, cuſtom and converſation; laſtly, as one Church or Congregation: for as ſometimes every particular Aſſembly of Chriſtians, and ſometimes a larger collection of particular Societies, combined together in one order, and under one Government, are termed Churches; ſo the whole aggregation of all particular Churches, or of all Chriſtian people, is frequently called the Church; even as the whole body of thoſe who lived in the profeſſion of obedience to the Jewiſh Law (which was a type of the Chriſtian Church) is called קהל ἐκκλησία, the Congregation.

1 Tim. 6. 3.
2 Tim. 1. 13, 14. 3. 14.
Rom. 6. 17.
1 Cor. 11. 2.
2 Theſſ. 2. 15. 3. 6.
Jud. 3.
Eph. 4. 4.
Ubi tres ſunt etiam Laici, ibi Eccleſia eſt. Tertul. Exh. Caſt.

In relation to which Society, theſe are the duties which we here profeſs our ſelves obliged to, and in effect promiſe to obſerve:

1. That we do, and will perſiſt in the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, delivered by our Saviour and his Apoſtles, atteſted unto by the general conſent of all Chriſtians; avoiding all novelties of opinion deviating from Apoſtolical Doctrine.

2. That we are obliged to maintain a hearty charity and good affection to all good Chriſtians.

3. That we are bound to communicate with all good Chriſtians, and all Societies ſincerely profeſſing faith, charity and obedience to our Lord; ſo as to join with them, as occaſion ſhall be, in all offices of piety; to maintain good correſpondence and concord with them.

4. That we ſhould ſubmit to the diſcipline and order, ſhould preſerve the peace, and endeavour the welfare of that part thereof wherein in we live; for what of good or harm is done to a member thereof, is alſo done to the whole.

5. That we ſhould diſavow and ſhun all factious combinations whatever, of perſons corrupting the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, or diſturbing the peace of the Church, or of any part thereof.

6. In fine, that we ſincerely ſhould wiſh in our hearts, earneſtly pray for, and by our beſt endeavours promote the peace and proſperity of the whole Catholick Church; whereof we profeſs our ſelves members and children; following (as S. Paul directs) righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace with thoſe that call upon our Lord, with a pure heart. 2 Tim.2.22.

The Communion of Saints.

THESE words were not extant in any of the antient Creeds, but were afterward inſerted; nor as I conceive doth the meaning of them much differ from what was intended in the precedent Article; and perhaps it was adjoyned for interpretation thereof; for the meaning of them is, as I take it, that all the Saints (that is all Chriſtians, either in legal preſumption, or according to real diſpoſition of heart ſuch) do, in effect, or ſhould, according to obligation, communicate, partake, joyn together, conſent, and agree in what concerneth Saints, or members of the Holy Catholick Church; in believing and acknowledging the ſame heavenly truth, in performance of devotions, or offices of piety with and for one another, in charitable good will and affection toward one another, in affording mutual advices, aſſiſtances and ſupplies toward the good (either ſpiritual or temporal) of each other; in condolency and compaſſion of each others evils, in congratulation and complacency in each others good; in minding the ſame thing for one another; and bearing one anothers burdens; ſo that if one member ſuffers, all the members ſuffer with it; or if one member be honoured, all the members rejoyce with it. This briefly ſeems to be the meaning of this point; and I need not to inſiſt on clearing the truth, or ſhewing the uſes thereof; the doctrine ſo manifeſtly carrying its obligation and its uſe in the face thereof.

The Forgiveneſs of Sins.

Luke 24.47. And that repentance and remiſſion of ſins, &c.

THAT men are naturally apt to tranſgreſs the laws of God and the dictates of Reaſon; that ſo doing they incur guilt, and are expoſed to vengeance (from the great Patron of right and goodneſs, who is injured and diſhonoured thereby) that hence they are ſubject to reſtleſs fears, and ſtinging remorſes of conſcience; that they cannot be exempted from ſuch obnoxiouſneſs, otherwiſe than by the free grace and mercy of God, nor be freed from ſuch anxieties otherwiſe than by an aſſurance of pardon from him, are points, to natural light, ſufficiently manifeſt.

Of ſuch a diſpoſition or will in God to remit offences, that all men have ever had a preſumption, their application to him in religious practice doth ſhew (for no man would addreſs himſelf in ſervice to God Heb. 11. 6. without a hope, that God is reconcilable to him, and that his ſervice therefore may be acceptable) particularly that general practice of offering ſacrifice for expiation of ſin, and appeaſing God's wrath, doth plainly declare the ſame.

But this was indeed but a preſumption, or conjecture, partly drawn from the neceſſity of their caſe (which admitted no other remedy beſide that hope) and from man's nature, apt to preſume that which moſt pleaſeth; partly grounded upon experience of God's forbearance to puniſh, and the continuance of his bounty toward men; upon which grounds no man could build a full confidence that he ſhould find mercy; much leſs could he be ſatisfied, upon what terms it would be granted, in what manner it ſhould be diſpenſed, or how far it ſhould extend;
theſe things merely depending on the will of God, and the knowledg of them only upon revelation from him.

The Jewiſh diſpenſation (which was particular and preparatory to Chriſtianity) did indeed appoint and accept expiations for ſome leſſer faults, committed out of ignorance and infirmity; but it pretended not to juſtifie from all things; nor upon any terms did it promiſe remiſſion Numb.15.30. of great ſins wilfully committed, but threatned remedileſs exciſion Deut. 27. 26. for them; pronouncing dreadful imprecations not only upon the Gal. 3. 10. tranſgreſſors of ſome particular laws, but againſt all thoſe who continued not in all things written in the law to do them; ſo that the remiſſion tendred by Moſes was of a narrow extent, and could hardly exempt any man from obligation to puniſhment, and from fear thereof; although indeed (to prevent deſpair, and that which naturally follows thereon, a total neglect of duty) God was pleaſed by his Prophets, among that people, occaſionally to ſignifie ſomewhat of farther grace (beyond what he was tyed to by the terms of the Covenant with that people) reſerved for them, and that he was willing (upon condition of hearty repentance, and real amendment) to receive to mercy even thoſe, who had been guilty of the moſt heinous offences:
but theſe diſcoveries, as they were ſpecial, and extraordinary, ſo were they preparatory to the Goſpel, and diſpenſed upon grounds only declared therein.

It is the Goſpel only, which explicitely teacheth and tendreth remiſſion of all ſins, ſhewing for what reaſons, upon what conditions, to what purpoſes it is diſpenſed by God. It clearly, and fully declares, how God in free mercy and pity toward us (being all involved in ſin and guilt, and lying under a condemnation to death and miſery; all our works being unworthy of acceptance, all our ſacrifices being unable in the leaſt part to ſatisfie for our offences) was pleaſed himſelf to provide an obedience worthy of his acceptance, and thoroughly pleaſing to him (in effect imputable to us, as performed by one of our kind, and race, and for our ſake willingly undertaken, according to his gracious pleaſure) to provide a ſacrifice in nature ſo pure, in value ſo pretious, as might be perfectly ſatisfactory for our offences; in regard to which obedience, God is become reconciled, ſo as to open his arms of grace to mankind; in reſpect to which ſacrifice he doth offer remiſſion of ſins to all men, who ſhall upon the terms propounded be willing to embrace it; namely, upon condition of faith, and repentance; that is, upon ſincerely profeſſing the doctrine of Chriſt, and heartily reſolving

reſolving to obey his laws. This is that great doctrine ſo peculiar to the Goſpel, from whence eſpecially it hath its name, and is ſtyled the word of grace; this is that great bleſſing, which Zachariah in his Prophetical Hymn did praiſe God for, The giving knowledg of ſalvation to God's people in the remiſſion of their ſins: according to the tender mercies of our God, in which the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us; Luk. 1. 77, 78. this is the good tidings of great joy to all people, which the Angels Luk. 2. 10 did celebrate at our Saviour's birth; this is that main point which our Lord eſpecially charged his Apoſtles to declare and teſtifie, that in his name repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached to all nations; Luk. 24. 47. that God had exalted him to his right hand, as a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance unto Iſrael and remiſſion of ſins; (to give repentance, that Act. 5. 31. is, to give, as Clemens in his Epiſtle well expoundeth it, μετανοίας τόπον, a place for repentance in order to mercy; or that it ſhould be acceptable, and available for the remiſſion of our ſins, as all that on our part is required toward it) all which points (together with the nature of this remiſſion, its cauſes, its grounds, its ends, its conditions, its means and way of conveyance) are admirably couched in thoſe words of St. Paul: All men (ſaith he) have ſinned, and are come ſhort of the Glory of God; but we are juſtified freely by his grace, by the redemption which is in Chriſt Jeſus; whom God hath propoſed a propitiatory by faith in his blood, for the demonſtration of his righteouſneſs, toward the forgiveneſs of forepaſt offences. Rom. 3. 4, &c.

The conſideration of which point is of exceedingly great uſe and influence:

1. It ſhould engage us to admire the great goodneſs of God, and with grateful hearts to praiſe him for ſo great a favour: that God being ſo grievouſly affronted and wronged by our ſins (loaded with extreme aggravations) ſhould be at ſuch charge to purchaſe for us the means of pardon, ſhould offer it ſo freely, ſhould ſo earneſtly invite and intreat us to accept it; How inexpreſſible a clemency doth it demonſtrate? How great thankfulneſs doth it require from us?

2. It ſhould beget in us an ardent love to God, anſwerable to that love which diſpoſed him to beſtow on us ſo ineſtimable a benefit. We ſhould imitate the debtor in the Goſpel, who moſt loved him, who had forgiven him moſt; and the good Penitent St. Magdalene; who, becauſe much was forgiven her, did love much. Luk. 7. 41. Luk. 7. 47.

3. It is matter and ground of hope and of comfort to us, (is preventive of deſpair, and immoderate ſadneſs) for that our caſe cannot be ſo bad, but there is an aſſured remedy at hand, if we pleaſe to have recourſe thereto; the mercy of God upon our true repentance; whereby we infallibly ſhall obtain that happy ſtate, of which it is ſaid, Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven——bleſſed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth no iniquity. Pſal. 32. 1, 2.

4. It is a great ingagement to obedience; for that it greatly aggravates our diſobedience, and endangers our eſtate. Having once from God's mercy obtained a cure and ſtate of health, we by relapſing into ſin do incur deeper guilt, and expoſe our ſelves to greater hazard; Behold (ſaith our Lord in like caſe) thou art made whole, ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come upon thee. Joh. 5. 14.

5. Laſtly, it ſhews us how much (in conformity to God, and compliance with his will) we ſhould bear with, and forgive the offences, or injuries done to us. You know how ſtrongly our Lord in the Goſpel preſſeth the conſideration of God's free pardon beſtowed on us to this

Matt. 18. 35, &c. Matt. 6. 14. this purpoſe; how he ſets out the extreme unreaſonableneſs and diſingenuity of thoſe, who (notwithſtanding this dealing of God with them) are hard hearted, and unmerciful toward their fellow-ſervants; how he threatens implacable ſeverity toward them, who do not from their hearts forgive to their brethren their treſpaſſes; and promiſeth remiſſion of ſins to them, who (according to what they profeſs to do in their prayers) ſhall forgive to men the offences committed againſt them; making it not only an indiſpenſable condition, but a ſufficient means of obtaining the divine favour and mercy.

Act. 26. 20. 3. 19. I ſhall only farther take notice, that although it be true, that God in the Goſpel doth generally propound remiſſion of ſins (upon account of our Lord's performances, and in his name) to all that truly repent, and turn unto him; chiefly granting it on this conſideration, and not withholding it from any, upon a blameleſs default of other performances; yet he requires (and complying with his will therein, is part of the duty, which repentance diſpoſes to, and is declared by) that (as well for publick edification, and the honour of his Church, as for the comfort and advantage of perſons concerned therein) this repentance ſhould be ſolemnly declared and approved by the Church; that this remiſſion ſhould be formally diſpenſed by the hands of God's Miniſters; being declared by expreſs words, or ratified by certain ſeals, or ſignified by myſterious repreſentations appointed by God. And to remiſſion of ſins, as thus diſpenſed, I doubt not but this Article hath an eſpecial reference; it being in St. Cyprian's form of profeſſion at Baptiſm expreſſed by, Credo remiſſionem peccatorum in Eccleſia: but becauſe the Church's remitting of ſins thus, is by virtue of that authority, which Chriſt imparted to his Church, called the Power of the Keys; I ſhall upon this occaſion here briefly explain the nature of that Power.

THE

Power of the Keys.

THIS Power in part is founded upon (and this name of it was wholly drawn from) thoſe words of our Lord to S. Peter;

Matt. 16. 19. And I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of heaven. Where that which our Lord doth promiſe to S. Peter (not to him perſonally, but, as the Fathers interpret it, repreſentatively; he then ſignifying the Church, and ſtanding in the place of its Governours, however not excluſively; for it) is by a parity of reaſon to be extended to all the Apoſtles, and after them to all the Governours of the Church; unto whom the ſame power is other-where in terms equivalent committed, and by whom it was exerciſed; as may appear from comparing the practice of the Apoſtles, and of the Church in continual ſucceſſion from them, with the nature or intent of this power; the which it is now our buſineſs very briefly to explain.

It is expreſſed in a metaphorical term; and it is therefore to be underſtood according to the analogy it beareth with the thing aſſumed to reſemble it; as the nature of the object thereof doth require, or admit. Wherefore it being the main property of a key, by opening, to give ingreſs, and egreſs; (admittance into a place, or emiſſion from it) or by ſhutting to exclude from entrance, or to detain within; this power may be ſuppoſed to imply a right, or ability to perform ſuch actions in reference to its object, which is the Kingdom of heaven.

By the kingdom of heaven is underſtood the ſtate of religion under the Goſpel; in diſtinction (as it ſeems) from the conſtitution and condition thereof under the Moſaical Law. In the times of the Law, God's Law was in a manner terreſtrial; he being King of the Jewiſh Nation particularly; Jeruſalem being his Royal ſeat; and the Temple his throne; where he was ſerved with external and viſible performances; where he expreſly promiſed earthly benefits and privileges (long life and proſperity in the land of Canaan) and threatned puniſhments anſwerable. But in the Goſpel God is worſhipped univerſally, as reſident in heaven, as requiring ſpiritual ſervices, addreſſed to heaven; as conferring rewards, and inflicting penalties relating to the future ſtate there. This ſtate therefore aptly is called the kingdom of heaven, of which all Chriſtians are ſubjects; the Body of whom conſequently may alſo be named the kingdom of heaven: for the word kingdom ſometime denoteth the conſtitution of things in, or under which a certain people do live, ſometimes the people themſelves.

Now whereas this ſtate hath two degrees, or the perſons under it two conditions, one here preſent upon earth in tranſition, and acquiſition; the other hereafter of reſidence, and fruition in heaven (one like that of the Iſraelites travelling in the wilderneſs, the other like their poſſeſſion of Canaan) in this caſe we may well underſtand both; but chiefly the firſt (the Kingdom of Grace here) wherein immediately this power is exerted; although its effects do finally refer and reach to the other (the Kingdom of Glory hereafter.)

Let us then conſider how this Kingdom may be opened, or ſhut by the Governours of the Church: this evidently may be performed ſeveral ways.

1. The Kingdom of heaven may be opened by yielding real helps, inducing to enter into the Church; it may be ſhut, by the ſame means inducing perſons to continue within it. So by inſtruction, advice, perſuaſion, admonition, reproof; by affording fit means, and occaſions; by preſcribing laws and rules conducing to thoſe purpoſes, the Governours are obliged to open and ſhut the Kingdom of heaven; and the doing ſo therefore may be conceived an ingredient of this power.

2. The kingdom of heaven may be opened by interceſſion, or imprecation from God of fit diſpoſitions qualifying perſons to enter, together with a mind willing to do ſo. Thus, as all Chriſtians in their way may open the Kingdom, ſo particularly the Governours by their office and function are obliged to do it, as the publick mouths of the Church. Wherefore St. Paul injoyns, that Supplication be made for all men; becauſe God would have all men to be ſaved, and to have them come to the knowledg of the truth; or would have all men brought into this Kingdom. 1 Tim. 2. 1, &c.

3. The Kingdom of heaven may be opened or ſhut by prudent diſcrimination of perſons, who are fit to be received into the Church (εὔθετοι εἰς βασιλείαν, well-diſpoſed for the kingdom, as St. Luke ſpeaks) or who deſerve to be rejected from it.

Thus the Governours of the Church do open and ſhut the kingdom, when they determine who ſhall be admitted to Baptiſm (which is Eccleſiæ janua, and porta gratiæ, as St. Auſtin calls it) and who ſhall be refuſed; they admitted, who appear competently inſtructed in Chriſtian Doctrine, and well reſolved to obey it; they refuſed, who ſeem in thoſe points ignorant, or ill reſolved.

4. The Kingdom of heaven may be opened or ſhut by judicial acts; whereby unworthy perſons (whoſe converſation may be infectious, or whoſe continuance in the Church may be infamous thereto) are excluded from it, or kept without; or whereby perſons upon ſufficient preſumption of repentance and amendment, are reſtored to communion.

Thus, conſidering the ſenſe of the words with the nature of the matter, the Power of the Keys may be underſtood.

The ſame may be farther cleared by conſidering and explicating the Phraſes equivalent, by which it is expreſſed, or interpreted: Such are eſpecially, Binding, and Looſing; Remitting, and Retaining ſins.

By Binding and Looſing, our Lord himſelf interpreteth this power: I will (ſaith he) give unto thee the Keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth ſhall be bound in heaven; whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven. For underſtanding the ſenſe of which phraſes, we may conſider, that things or perſons may be ſeveral ways bound and looſed.

1. Binding may denote any ſort of determination, reſtriction or detention impoſed on perſons and things; and Looſing anſwerably may ſignifie the contrary effects. So by juſt authority to command, or prohibit a thing (whereby its moral quality is determined, it is made good or bad) is to bind that thing, and the perſons ſubject to that authority. Alſo to abrogate a law, or to diſpenſe with its obſervation, is to looſe the matter of that law, together with the perſons concerned in it. Thus it is ſaid, Matt. 23. 4. that the Scribes, by preſcribing many unprofitable obſervances, did bind heavy burdens on the people. Again likewiſe,

2. To interpret the ſenſe of a law or doctrine, is a kind of ligation, or ſolution: it binds by declaring what is commanded, or prohibited, and conſequently to what men are obliged: It looſes, by ſhewing what is permitted, or remains indifferent, ſo leaving men to their freedom. Quam verò clavem habebant Legis doctores, niſi interpretationem legis? ſaith Tertullian. In Mark. lib.-- cap. 27. To bind and looſe thus, doth plainly belong to the Paſtors of the Church, they by office being the interpreters and teachers of God's law.

3. The exerciſe of any juriſdiction doth aſtringe the offender to puniſhment, or ſatisfaction; or doth abſolve him from them: it conſequently may be called Ligation, or Solution reſpectively.

4. The bringing perſons under any contract is a tying them to performance thereof. Thus do the Paſtors of the Church bind thoſe, whom they receive into the Church at Baptiſm, upon undertaking the conditions of Chriſtianity; and thoſe, whom after excluſion from Chriſtian Communion they abſolve, upon engagement to lead a better life.

5. The detention of a perſon in any ſtate, or under any power, is called Ligation; and a deliverance out of ſuch a ſtate, or power, Solution. So he that (by withholding means, or aſſurance of pardon) is detained under the guilt of ſin, is thereby bound; but he that hath the means and overtures of pardon conferr'd on him, is looſed: and thus do the paſtors of the Church bind and looſe; by retaining and remitting ſin; the doing which is an inſtance of this power, expreſly granted by our Lord: Whoſeſoever ſins (ſaith he) ye remit, they are remitted to them; whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained. John 20.

Now they may be underſtood to remit, or retain ſins divers ways.

1. They do remit ſins diſpoſitivè; by working in perſons fit diſpoſitions, upon which remiſſion of ſins, by God's promiſe, is conſequent; the diſpoſitions of faith and repentance.

2. They remit (or retain) ſins declarativè; as the Ambaſſadors of God, in his name pronouncing the word of reconciliation to the penitent, and denouncing wrath to the obſtinate in ſin.

3. They remit ſins impetrativè; obtaining pardon for ſinners by their prayers; according to that of St. James; Is any man ſick among you, let him call the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him—And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. Jam. 5. 14, 15.

4. They remit ſins diſpenſativè, by conſigning pardon in adminiſtration of the Sacraments; eſpecially in conferring Baptiſm, whereby, duly adminiſtred and undertaken, all ſins are waſhed away; and in the abſolving of Penitents, wherein grace is exhibited and ratified by impoſition of hands; the which S. Paul calls χαρίζεσθαι, to beſtow grace, or favour upon the penitent.

By conſidering all theſe things, we may competently underſtand wherein this Power of the Keys doth conſiſt. We might farther illuſtrate it, by obſerving the exerciſe thereof by the Apoſtles, and in the Primitive Church; by viewing the practice of a like power under the Law (which might perhaps be the riſe and pattern hereof) by conſidering the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of ſuch a power: but I cannot inſiſt on thoſe particulars, but proceed to the next Article.

The Reſurrection of the Body, or Fleſh.

THE doctrine of the immortality of the ſoul (whereby men are capable of rewards or puniſhments, according to their doings in this life) hath, in all Religions, been deemed a neceſſary Principle, and for ſuch (as Cicero and Seneca expreſly tell us) hath been embraced by all Nations; having indeed probably from original Tradition been conveyed over all the world. The ſame alſo divers Philoſophers (Socrates eſpecially, and his followers) did by natural reaſon ſtrive to evince true. But Tradition being too ſlippery, and Reaſon too feeble throughly to perſwade it; Chriſtianity by a clear and full proof (of miraculous works, and ſenſible experiments) doth aſſure us of it: The certainty thereof we owe to his inſtruction, who brought life and 2 Tim. 1. 10. immortality to light by the Goſpel. It plainly ſhews, that when we dy, we do not (like brute beaſts, or other natural bodies, when they appear diſſolved) wholly periſh; that our ſouls do not vaniſh into nothing, nor are reſolved into inviſible principles, but do return into God's hand, or into the place by him appointed for them, there continuing in that life which is proper to a ſoul. Neither only thus much doth it teach us concerning our ſtate after this life, but it farther informs us, that our bodies themſelves ſhall be raiſed again out of their duſt and corruption, that our ſouls ſhall be reunited to them, and that our perſons ſhall be reſtored into their perfect integrity of nature: the bringing of which effects to paſs, by divine power, is commonly called, the reſurrection of the dead, or, from the dead (ἐκ νεκρῶν) and ſimply the Reſurrection; as alſo being raiſed, being reduced from the dead—Sometimes alſo it is called, the Regeneration (or iterated nativity) and being born from the dead; which terms imply a reſpect to the body, and to the perſon of a man, as conſtituted of body and ſoul; for the mere permanency of our ſouls in being and life could not (with any propriety or truth) be called a reſurrection; that which never had fallen could not be ſaid to be raiſed again; that which did never die, could not be reſtored from death; nor could men be ſaid to riſe again but in reſpect to that part which had fallen, or that ſtate which had ceaſed to be. And as to be born at firſt doth ſignifie the production and union of the parts eſſential to a man; ſo to be born again implies the reſtitution and reunion of the ſame; a man thereby becoming entirely the ſame perſon that he was before. The ſame is alſo ſignified in terms more formal and directly expreſſive; the quickning of the dead; the vivification of our mortal bodies; the redemption of our body; the corruptible (τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο, this very ſame corruptible body) putting on incorruption, and this mortal putting on immortality; thoſe who are in the graves hearing Chriſt's voice, and proceeding forth to reſurrection, either of life, or judgment; the awaking of them which ſleep in the duſt of the earth; the ſea, the death, the hell (or univerſal grave) reſigning their dead; which expreſſions, and the like occurring, do clearly and fully prove the reparation of our bodies, and their reunion to our ſouls, and our perſons becoming in ſubſtance completely the ſame that we were. Which truth of all perhaps that Chriſtianity revealed, as moſt new and ſtrange, was the hardlieſt received, and found moſt oppoſition among Heathens, eſpecially Philoſophers: Hearing the reſurrection of the dead, ſome of them mocked, others ſaid, we will hear thee again of this matter. So was St. Paul's diſcourſe about this point entertained at Athens; they neglected or derided it, as a thing altogether impoſſible, or very improbable to happen (as Pliny ſomewhere counts the revocation of the dead to life impoſſible to to be performed, otherwhere calls it, puerile deliramentum, a childiſh dotage to ſuppoſe it.) But why it ſhould be deemed either impoſſible to divine power, or improbable upon accounts of reaſon, no good argument can be aſſigned. To recollect the diſperſed parts of a man's body, to range and diſpoſe them into their due ſituation and order; to reduce them into a temper fit to diſcharge vital functions; to rejoyn the ſoul to a body ſo reſtored; why ſhould it be impoſſible, or ſeem difficult to him, who did firſt frame, and temper our body out of the duſt, and inſpired the ſoul into it; to him, who out of mere confuſion digeſted the whole world into ſo wonderful an order and harmony; to him, who into a dead lump of earth inſerted ſuch numberleſs varieties of life; who from ſeeds buried in the ground and corrupted there, doth cauſe ſo goodly plants to ſpring forth; who hath made all nature to ſubſiſt by continual viciſſitudes of life and death; every morning, in a manner, and every ſpring, repreſenting a general Reſurrection? (Well might the Prophet Jeremy ſay, Ah Lord God, thou haſt made the heaven and the earth, by thy great power, and ſtretched out arm; and there is nothing too hard for thee: there is indeed nothing too hard for omniſcient Wiſdom to contrive, for omnipotent Strength to execute.) And, what difficulties ſoever fancy may ſuggeſt; Can we doubt of that being poſſible, which experience atteſteth done? Ezekiel ſaw dry bones rejoynted, and reinſpired with life; divers inſtances of dead perſons reſtored to life are recorded in the Prophetical Writings, and more in the New Teſtament; but moſt remarkable is that paſſage at our Saviour's death, when it is ſaid, that many tombs were opened, and many bodies of ſaints that had departed roſe, and coming out of the tombs, after our Saviour's Reſurrection, entred into the Holy City, and did appear to many (or publickly to the many, τοῖς πολλοῖς) which was a moſt full and manifeſt experiment of a miraculous Reſurrection, like to that which we believe: but of all, our Lord's own Reſurrection doth irrefragably confirm the poſſibility of our Reſurrection; ſo that St. Paul, with higheſt reaſon, might thus expoſtulate with the incredulous upon this account: And if Chriſt be preached (or aſſured by teſtimony) that he roſe from the dead, how ſay ſome, that there is no reſurrection of the dead? that is, how can any man deny that to be poſſible, which is ſo palpably exemplified?

UMI

Act. 17. 32.
Plin. Hiſt. II. 7. VII. 55.
Jer. 32. 17.
Ezek.
Mat. 27. 56.
1 Cor. 15. 12.

Neither can the point be ſhewed improbable, or implauſible; but it is rather very conſonant to the reaſon of the thing; and good cauſes may be aſſigned why it ſhould be. Man, according to original deſign and frame, doth conſiſt of ſoul and body; theſe parts have a natural relation, an aptitude, and an appetite (as it ſeems) to cohabit, and cooperate with each other; many actions very proper to man's nature cannot be performed without their conjunction and concurrence; many capacities of joy and comfort (with their oppoſites) do reſult thence: the ſeparation of them we ſee how unwilling, violent and repugnant it is to nature; and we are taught that it is penal, and conſequent upon ſin, and therefore cannot be good and perfect. Wherefore 'tis no wonder that God deſigning to reſtore man to his antient integrity, yea to a higher perfection; rewarding him with all the felicity his nature is capable of (on the one hand I mean, as on the other hand juſtly to puniſh and afflict him according to his demerit) ſhould raiſe the body, and rejoin it to the ſoul, that it might contribute its natural ſubſerviency to ſuch enjoyments, and ſufferings reſpectively. Not to omit the congruity in juſtice, that the bodies themſelves, which did communicate in works of obedience and holineſs, or of diſloyalty and profaneneſs (which in St. Paul's language, were either ſervants of righteouſneſs unto ſanctity, or ſlaves to impurity and iniquity) ſhould alſo partake in ſutable recompences; that the body which endured grievous hardſhips for righteouſneſs, ſhould enjoy comfortable refreſhments; or that thoſe, which did wallow in unlawful pleaſures, ſhould undergo juſt afflictions.

Many other things might be ſaid to this purpoſe, but I paſs to the next point annexed to this, as in nature, ſo in order here.

The Life Everlaſting.

THE immediate conſequent of the Reſurrection (common, as Act. 24. 15. St. Paul expreſſeth, to juſt, and unjuſt) is, as we have it placed in the Catalogue of Fundamentals, ſet down by the Apoſtle to the
Heb. 6. 2. Hebrews, κρίμα αἰώνιον, that judgment or doom, by which the eternal ſtate of every perſon is determined; and accordingly every man
2 Cor. 5. 10. muſt (as St. Paul ſays) bear the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or evil. Now this ſtate generally taken (as reſpecting both the righteous and bleſſed, the wicked and curſed perſons) for that it doth ſuppoſe a perpetual duration in being and ſenſe, may be called everlaſting life; although life (as being commonly apprehended the principal good, and becauſe all men naturally have a moſt ſtrong deſire to preſerve it; with reference alſo, probably, to the law, wherein continuance of life is propoſed as the main reward of obedience) is uſed to denote peculiarly the bleſſed ſtate; and death (the moſt abominable and terrible thing to nature, the moſt extreme alſo of legal puniſhments threatned upon the tranſgreſſors of Joh. 5. 29. the law) is alſo uſed to ſignify the condition of the damned; the re-
Mat. 25. 46. ſurrection of life, and reſurrection of damnation; everlaſting life, and
Dan. 12. 2. everlaſting puniſhment being oppoſed: although, I ſay, life be thus
Phil. 3. 11.
Luk. 20. 35. commonly taken (as alſo the reſurrection it ſelf, by an ἐυφημισμὸς, is ſometimes appropriated to the righteous) yet the reaſon of the caſe requires, that here we underſtand it generally ſo as to comprehend both ſtates: both being matters of faith equally neceſſary, and of like fundamental conſequence; both yielding the higheſt encouragements to good practice, and determents from bad. For as on the one hand, what can more ſtrongly excite us to the performance of our duty, than an aſſurance of obtaining hereby ſo happy a ſtate? What can more efficaciouſly withdraw us from impiety, than being certain thereby to loſe, and fall ſhort of it? ſo on the other hand, What can more vehemently provoke us to obedience, than being perſuaded, that we ſhall thereby avoid eternal miſery? What can more powerfully deter us from ſin, than conſidering, that by the commiſſion of it we ſhall expoſe our ſelves to that wretched ſtate? Infinitely ſtupid and obdurate we muſt be, if the conſideration what theſe ſtates are doth not produce theſe effects.

What is the ſtate of life? It is a ſtate of higheſt dignity, and glory; of ſweeteſt comfort and joy; of joy full in meaſure, pure in quality, perpetual in duration, in all reſpects perfect to the utmoſt capacity of our nature; wherein all our parts and faculties ſhall be raiſed to their higheſt pitch of perfection, our bodies ſhall become free from all corruptibility and decay, all weakneſs and diſeaſe, all groſneſs and unweildyneſs, all deformity and defilement; for they ſhall (as St. Paul teaches us) be rendred incorruptible, ſtrong, healthful, glorious and ſpiritual; our ſouls alſo ſhall in their faculties be advanced, in their inclinations rectified, in their appetites ſatisfied; the underſtanding becoming full of light, clear and diſtinct in knowledg of truth, free from ignorance, doubt and errour; the will being ſteddily inclined to good, ready to comply with God's will; free from all weakneſs, and all perverſeneſs; our affections being ſet in right order and frame; with a conſtant regularity tending unto that which is really beſt, and taking a full delight therein: wherein we ſhall enjoy the bliſsful ſight of God, ſmiling in love and favour upon us; the preſence of our gracious Redeemer, embracing us with moſt tender affection; the ſociety of the Holy Angels, and of the juſt made perfect; whoſe company and converſation, how unconceivably ſweet and delightful muſt it be? wherein nothing adverſe, or troubleſom can befal us; no unpleaſant or offenſive object ſhall preſent it ſelf to us; no want or need of any thing ſhall appear; no care, or fear, or ſuſpicion; no labour or toil; no ſorrow or pain, no diſtaſte or regret, no ſtir or contention, no liſtleſneſs or ſatiety ſhall be felt, or ſhall come near us; where God (as it is in the Apocalypſe) will wipe every tear from our eyes (of them who ſhall come there) and death ſhall be no more; nor ſorrow, nor clamour, nor pain any more: it is in fine a ſtate in excellency ſurpaſſing all words to expreſs it, all thoughts to conceive it; of which the brighteſt ſplendours, and the choiceſt pleaſures here are but obſcure ſhadows, and faint reſemblances; comparable to which no eye hath ſeen, nor ear hath heard any thing; nor hath it aſcended into any heart of man to conceive the like; as St. Paul out of the Prophet Eſay telleth us. Which ſtate, ſeeing by a pious life we certainly do acquire a right unto, and ſhall enjoy a poſſeſſion of; but from an impious life do forfeit all pretence thereto, and ſhall infallibly be deprived of it: Are we not infinitely mad, are we not extremely enemies, and injurious to our ſelves, if we do not embrace the one, and eſchew the other?

Apoc. 21. 4.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

Again, What is the other ſtate, that of death? What but a ſtate of loweſt diſgrace and ignominy; of utter ſhame and confuſion; of intolerable pains and miſeries, without any eaſe or reſpit, without any hope or remedy, without any ceſſation or end; wherein we ſhall not only for ever be ſecluded from God's preſence and favour; not only be deprived of all reſt, comfort and joy; but detruded into utmoſt wretchedneſs, into a condition far more dark and diſmal, more forlorn and diſconſolate than we can imagin; which not the ſharpeſt pain of body, nor the bittereſt anxiety of mind, which any of us hath ever felt, can in any meaſure repreſent; wherein our bodies ſhall be afflicted continually ly by a ſulphureous flame, not only ſcorching the skin, but piercing the inmoſt ſinews, our ſouls ſhall inceſſantly be gnawed upon by a worm (the worm of bitter remorſe for our wretched perverſneſs and folly, the worm of horrid deſpair ever to get out of that ſad eſtate) under which unexpreſſible vexations, always enduring pangs of death, always in ſenſe and in deſire dying, we ſhall never be able to die: which miſerable ſtate, ſince it is by performing our duty ſurely avoided, ſince by neglecting, or tranſgreſſing God's laws it is inevitably incurr'd; if we do not accordingly chuſe to demean our ſelves, how infinitely careleſs are we of our own good, how deſperately bent to our own ruin?

If theſe conſiderations make no impreſſion on us; What can any reaſon effect? What can any words ſignify? how monſtrouſly ſottiſh, or wild do we appear to be? I conclude with Prayer to Almighty God, That according to his infinite mercy, he by his gracious aſſiſtance leading us in the ways of piety and righteouſneſs, would bring us to everlaſting life and happineſs; that he by the ſame powerful grace withdrawing us from impiety and iniquity, would reſcue us from eternal death, and miſery: To him, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt, be for ever all glory and praiſe. Amen.

A TABLE

Of Things, or the Chief Matters contained in the Expoſition of the CREED.

The SECOND VOLUME.

A.

AFflictions. Whence ſupport under them, 137, 345, 346.
Benefits thereof, 347, 379, 420.
Almah, as ſpoken of the Virgin Mary, tranſlated ἀπόκρυφος by Aquila, 322.
Almighty; Why no other Attributes of God expreſſed in our Creed than that of Almighty, 154.
Angels. The Philoſophers Notions of them, 115. Their Account of their Quality and Production, 130. In Scripture ſtiled the Sons of God, 129. The manner of their Creation, why not manifeſtly expreſſed in Scripture, 156. The Heathens opinions of their Original, 157. Their Creation, 162.
Ambition, contrary to Chriſtian Religion, 10.
Anointing. The Uſe, Antiquity, and Perſons Conſecrated by it among the Jews, 216, 217.
Apoſtacy of the Devil, from Infidelity, 14.
Apoſtles. Their Method of teaching the Chriſtian Religion, 56. The Character of their Lives, and Doctrine, 375.
Apparitions. The Truth, and Reality of them, 121. Exceptions againſt them anſwered, in ſeq.
Ariſtotle, the leaſt credulous or fanciful of Philoſophers, 102. His Notions concerning God, ibid.
Aſcenſion of Chriſt, 394, 395, 433.
Aſſent. Proper grounds of it, 24.
Aſſent and Judgment, Their Relation to one another, 27.
Atheiſts. Their Principles, 12, 13.
S. Auguſtines opinion of Juſtifying Faith, and conſequence of that his opinion, 62, 63.

B.

BAptiſm. In which Juſtification diſpenſed, 78. Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt ſhewed from thence, 452.
Bellarmine and Grotius their Allegations about Juſtifying Faith conſidered, 76.
Bellarmine, his improper Compariſons concerning the Union of the two Natures in Chriſt, 310.
Beza, notatur, 367.

C.

CAreleſneſs, a cauſe of infidelity, 3.
Cenſuring, how regulated, 439. And by what means ſupported under it, 441.
Ceremonies of the Church, 206.
Chaldeans, Phœnicians and Egyptians, their Antiquity, 112.
Chaldee Paraphraſes, their Antiquity, 219.
Chance. The Abſurdities from imagining Chance to have produc'd any part of the World, 82, 90.
Chance and Neceſſity the ſame, 83, 90
Charity derived from Faith, 41.
Charity to one another, how promoted, 139.
Charity. The many great Advantages thereof, 204.
Charity to our Neighbour, how wrought in us, 251, 270, 440.
Charity to the Poor, whence learnt, 323, 439.
Chriſt. The Import, and Reaſon of the Name, 216. The Propheſies concerning his Appearance, and Offices in the World, 221. Porphyry's Objection againſt the Time of his coming anſwered, 222. Chriſt's Genealogy not conteſted, ibid. Nature of the Prophecies concerning Him, 252. Character of his Converſation, 227. Offices, 272, 399, 400. Divinity, 280. In what regard called the Son of God, 278. Whence ſtiled our Lord, 291. To be the Judg of quick and dead, 429, &c. His Dominion, 294, &c. His Divinity ſhewed by his Conception by the Holy Ghoſt, 318. Manner of his Conception, Reaſons and Uſe of it, 317. Incarnation, ibid. how performed, 319. The influence it ought to have on our Practice, 320, 321. The great Benefits hereof, 315. Chriſt's Sufferings, 326. Time thereof, 330. Advantages ariſing from the manner of them, 337, &c. Correſpondence with antient Prophecies, 340. His Death, the Nature, and Adjuncts of it, 344, 351. Prophecies, Cauſes and Effects thereof, 352, 355, 358. vid. Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt.

Chriſtian Religion, The Truth and Divinity thereof, 171. Excellence and Perfection of it, 199. Directions therein for the Government of Life, 205.

Chriſtian Religion. Manner of its Propagation, 377, &c.

Church. The Holy Catholick Church, 463, 464. Obligations from Belief thereof, ibid.

Collyridians, the firſt that attempted worſhipping the Virgin Mary, 325. The Primitive Fathers deteſtation and reproof of this Error, ibid.

Communion of Saints, 465.

Complyance. Baſe Complyance, how avoided, 442.

Computation. Antient Manners, and Original hereof, 111.

Conſcience, beſt ſatisfied by Chriſtian Religion, 209.

Conſcience. A good Conſcience, whence obtained, 361.

Conſent. Univerſal Conſent. The great Author thereof, 105.

Conſubſtantialiſts, 405.

Contentedneſs, from Faith, 44, 136.

Covetouſneſs. An Enemy to Chriſtian Religion, 9. ſprings from Infidelity, 13.

Council of Trent, their falſe Notions of Juſtifying Faith, 61.

Creation. The Order, and Beauty thereof, 163. Manner and Reaſon of it, 164.

Credulity and Incredulity compared, 122. the former leſs dangerous, ibid.

Croſs of Chriſt, vid. Chriſt's Sufferings.

Cuſtom. The Authority thereof, 99.

Cuſtom of Sinning, The Authority and Miſchiefs thereof, 12.

D.

Death. Chriſt's death, Nature thereof, 345, &c.

Diſputes. When moſt abounding in the Church, 67.

Dominion. Who have titles to it, 296.

Dreams. 121.

E.

Education. Good Education, its Advantages, 100.

Effects. Supernatural Effects wrought for divers cauſes, with an enumeration of them, 117. v. Miracles.

Enchantments, 121.

Enemies of Chriſtian Religion, who and how conquered, 30.

Enemies. Arguments to love them from Chriſt's ſufferings, 344.

Envy. Oppoſite to Chriſtian Religion, 10.

Epicurus, his Opinion of the Production of Man, 94.

Eutychians. Their Hereſy of Chriſt's Humane Nature converted into his Divinity, confuted by Chriſt's Aſcenſion, 405.

Exiſtence. What doth in a lower degree ſomewhere exiſt, doth probably otherwhere exiſt in higher perfections, 97.

F.

Faith. The Power, Reaſonableneſs and Benefits of it, 15, 36. Objections againſt it, with anſwers to them, 16. Nature of Faith, 17. The value thereof as implying Divine Knowledg, 17. Faith and a good Conſcience inſeparable, 9. Faith and Works conjoyned, 14, 47. Faith gives clear and certain Knowledg, 17. Faith without Reaſon impoſſible, 21. implies a good uſe of reaſon, 19. and compliance with the Providence and Grace of God, 22, 23.

Faith. The original and increaſe thereof, 22. proceeds from ſincerity and ſoundneſs of Judgment, 26. is increaſed by diligence and attention, ib. and by reſolution, 30. is voluntary, 32. The dangerous miſtakes about Faith, ib. the Antients deſcription of it, 33. the effects and influences of Faith, 37. Faith previous to Pardon, 61. Examples of its power, 83. increaſed from conſideration of Chriſt's ſufferings, 342. and reſurrection, &c. 383.

Faith, and Hope in God, whence wrought in us, 361.

Father. On what grounds the Title of Father attributed to God, 128. and what influence it ought to have on us, 134.

Fear. A cauſe of Infidelity, 8, 9. Power thereof, 413.

Fidelity. The manifold miſchiefs ariſing from contempt of it, 13.

Forgiveneſs of Sins, 465.

Fortune. Her pretended power diſclaimed.

Fortune. The character thereof, 180.

G.

German Ubiquitaries confuted from Chriſt's Aſcenſion, 405.

Gnoſtick Hereſy concerning two Gods, 163.

God. The benefits of having right conceptions of him, 25. theſe repreſented by Chriſtian Religion, 111, 112. His Exiſtence proved from the frame of the World, 80, 97. and of humane Nature, 92. from Univerſal conſent, 104. from ſupernatural Effects, 117. from Belief of a future Judgment, 418, 420. His Works unſearchable, 91. His Eternity, Immutability, &c. 115. proved from the making and governing the World, ibid. His Unity declared from that harmony which is in the world, and from the common ſuffrage of Mankind, 115. Plurality of Gods among the Philoſophers how to be underſtood, 116.

God. Names of him, their import, 140.

Goſpel. Doctrine thereof, and Benefits made void by infidelity, 2.

Goſpel. The unjuſt prejudices againſt it, 5.

Goſpel. Tenour thereof, 70. Perfection of it, 230.

Government. Civil Government deſtroy'd by Atheiſts, 13.
v. Societies.

Grace, Falling from it, 62.

Gratitude, learnt from Chriſt's ſufferings, 341.

Grief and Pain, 165, 166.

H.

Hades. Interpretation thereof, 363, &c.

Hamakom, A name applied to God by the Jewiſh Doctors, 145.

Happineſs. Future Happineſs, 474, 475.

Hardneſs of heart. The miſchiefs of it, 5.

Heaven. The extent of the ſignification of the word, 156.

Heaven by the Antient Fathers thought inacceſſible before Chriſt's Aſcenſion, 402. The grounds of this Suppoſition, ibid.

Heavens. Their wonderful Frame diſcovers infinite Wiſdom, and Power, 91. Three Heavens according to the Jewiſh Notion, 158.

Heaven ſometimes in Scripture taken for the place of God's more eſpecial preſence, 395.

Hell. Chriſt's deſcent thither explained, 363. The vain conceits about about the ſame, enumerated, and rejected, 369.

Hell Torments, 475.
Hermogenes's Error concerning the Creation of the World, 163.
Holy Ghoſt. Effuſion thereof a great Atteſtation to the Chriſtian Religion, 268.
Holy Ghoſt. The miraculous Efficacy thereof in our Bleſſed Saviour's conception, 317.
Holy Ghoſt. The Offices peculiarly attributed to him, 318, 319. His Divinity, 445. Perſonality, 446. Name, ibid. & in ſeq.
Holy Ghoſt. The Efficacy of the Holy Ghoſt in Scripture ſtiled the Holy Ghoſt, 447. The Holy Ghoſt is God, 453, &c. Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, 459, 460. His Offices and Operations, ibid. Whence called παράκλητος, 461.
Hope. Power thereof, 38, 53, 413.
Humility increaſeth Faith, 28. proceeds from Faith, 38. Acceptableneſs thereof to God, 60. Wrought in us by the conſideration of our Dependence upon God, 136. and of Chriſt's aſſuming humane Nature, 313, 323.
Humour. Delicacy and Niceneſs thereof, 6. a cauſe of Infidelity, ibid.
Hypoſtaſis. Why the word not admitted by the Latin Fathers, 450.

I.

Idolatry. The Goſpel hath ſhewn how to deſtroy it, 240.
Idolatry of the Church of Rome in worſhipping the Virgin Mary, 325.
Jehovah, Attributed to Chriſt, 294.
Jeſus, The true Meſſias, 213. Why the Name given to Chriſt, 214.
Jewiſh Religion. The imperfection thereof, 186. No imputation upon God from thence, 191.
Infidels. viz. Such as do not good Actions, 13.
Infidelity. The folly thereof, 122. The chief cauſe of Sin, 1. Character thereof, ibid.
Injuries. How we may learn to forgive them, 441.
Intemperance, An Enemy to Chriſtian Religion, 42.
Joſhua, A Type of Chriſt, 214.
Judaiſm. Antient Judaiſm no where to be found, 198.
Judg (Upright) his Character, 26.
Judgment. Bad Judgment a cauſe of Infidelity, 4.
Judgment. Future Judgment, what influence it hath on our Lives, 38.
Judgment. Future Judgment will clearly diſcover the Events of this Life, and juſtifie the Divine proceedings, 126.
Judgment. A Future Judgment, the Reaſonableneſs and Equity thereof, 419. Belief hereof the greateſt incentive to Virtue, 414.
Judgment. A Future Judgment, the certainty and circumſtances thereof from Divine Revelation, 425.
Judgment. The laſt Judgment, Solemnity thereof, 433. Juſtice of God, Frequent inſtances thereof in this life, and on whom often executed, 123, 124.
Juſtice in our dealings, 439.
Juſtifie. That Word in prophane Writers ſeldom, or never applied to perſons as it is in Scripture, 69.
Juſtification, 359. The Divine Acts to which that Term is applicable, 67. What it imports, ibid. The Fathers and Schoolmen did not differ about it, ibid. Diſputes about it when they began, and how to be reconciled, in ſeq. The differences relate principally to the Notion of the Word, 69. Is not learnt from mere Grammarians, ibid. Nature thereof explained from S. Paul's Epiſtles, 70, 75. Is not an infus'd quality, Bellarmine and Grotius's Allegations inſufficient in this point, 76. On what account S. Auſtin and ſome other Fathers may ſeem to uſe the word Juſtification fication according to the ſenſe of the Tridentine Council, 77. Of the Time when the Act is performed or diſpenſed, ibid.

Juſtification, and Sanctification ſometimes in Scripture equivalent Terms, 78. when it is we deprive our ſelves of the Benefits of it, 79.
Juſtifying Faith. Embracing thereof ſuppoſes a virtuous mind, 31. The Nature of Juſtifying Faith, 50, &c. Errors concerning the ſame refuted, 63, 64. Whence the Jews and Gentiles objected againſt it, 77.
J. Martyr, notatur.

K.

Keys. Power of the Keys, 468.
Kingdom of Heaven. The phraſe explained, 469. and what meant by opening the ſame, 470.
Knowledg. Divine Knowledg, the excellence of it, 16, 28. attained by Faith, ibid. Perfection thereof, 18.
Knowledg. Humane Knowledg, uncertainty of it, 18.
Knowledg. The natural deſire thereof, and Argument of the Soul's Immortality, and Original from God, 100.

L.

Laws. Humane Laws, the Nature and Obligation of them, 414, 416.
Limbus Patrum, 369.
Life Everlaſting, 474.
Love of God to men. A threefold manner thereof expreſſed in Scripture, ibid.
Love to God, wrought in us from conſideration of Chriſt's death, 361.

M.

Macedonians, or Semi-Arians, their Hereſy concerning the Holy Ghoſt, 454, &c.
Magicians, 256.
Magiſtrates. Their Authority from God, 382. their Power to inflict Puniſhment, ibid.
Malice, 339.
Mahometaniſm, 128.
Man, his Creation by God evidenced from Reaſon, 93. Abſurdities of the contrary, 96.
Manichæus, his vain Opinion of the Creation of the World, 155. and Two firſt Cauſes of Things, 164.
Marcion. His Hereſy of two Gods, 155, 163.
Mary. The Virgin Mary, her Relations, and Qualifications, 323. by whom firſt worſhipped, 325.
Matrimony. Original thereof, whence, 112.
Matter. The Philoſophers Opinions of it, 158.
Meekneſs; Faith productive of it, 22.
Merit, diſclaimed, 60.
Meſſias. The Names attributed to Him in Scripture, 213. Why the Name not openly expreſſed in the Antient Traditions, ibid.
Miracles. Their Power, Certainty and Original, 167, 252, 261. Divers cauſes, why wrought, 132. Not ceaſed, if there were neceſſary occaſion for the working of them, 268.
Miracles. True Miracles demonſtrate Divine Power, 120. and that they no wiſe depend upon Matter, ibid. Miracles, why beſtowed, 371.
Moſes's Hiſtory, moſt antient and credible, 112.
Mythology of the Heathen, 110, 111.

N.

Names antiently given by Divine Providence to Perſons anſwerable to their Employments, 214. The excellent uſe thereof, ibid.
Nations, which moſt antient, 11.
Nativity of Chriſt, how to be ſolemnized, 314, 315.
Nature. Union of the two Natures in Chriſt, 311, 312.
Nature. Humane Nature, the Dignity thereof, 314.
Neceſſity and Chance the ſame, 83.
Negligence, a Cauſe of Infidelity, 3.
Neſtorius's Hereſy concerning the two Natures in Chriſt, 319, 320.

Netſer (or the Branch) the Name why attributed to the Meſſias, 214.

O.

O*Aths*, how conducive to the Preſervation of humane Societies, 416.
Obedience to God, whence learnt, 134, 135, 341, 393.
Oracles; Their Antiquity, 119.
Original Sin, 73, 74, 297, 321, 356.

P.

P*Aganiſm*, 198.
Pain and Grief, 166, 167.
παντοκράτωρ. That Title, why proper to God, 141, 142.
Paradiſe, loſt by Infidelity, 14.
Paradiſe. Seat thereof, 369.
Paſſion, a cauſe of Infidelity, 8. contrary to the Chriſtian Religion, 10.
Patience, acceſſory to Faith, 30. proceeds from Faith, 44, 45.
Peace, how advanced by Chriſt's Kingdom, 239.
Perfection. Some degrees thereof among the Creatures, and whence ſo wiſely appointed, 164.
Philoſophers, Their abſurd Aſſertions, 105. Their Obſcure Notions about Religion, 17, 18, 175. Their Precepts, how little uſeful to promote Virtue, or reſtrain Vice, 415.
Philoſophers and Poets. Their Opinions concerning Man's Original, compared with the Scripture Account, 109, 110.
Philoſophy, and Chriſtianity farther compared, 207.
Plants. The great Power, and Wiſdom of God in making them, 82, 84.
Pliny, his Opinion of a Reſurrection, and Cauſe of his Error therein, 372.
Poets. The beſt Interpreters of the Popular Opinions, 114.
Pontius Pilate. A Character of him, 331.
Porphyrius. His acknowledgment of the Certainty of ſome Predictions, 120.
Poſſible. What is in kind poſſible, is in any Perfection of Degree poſſible, 97.
Power, and Wiſdom of God in the Creation, 83.
Predictions. Their Original, Antiquity and Authority, 119.
Prejudice. A Cauſe of Infidelity, 5.
Pride, a Cauſe of Infidelity, 5. Oppoſition thereof to Chriſtian Religion, 6, 7.
Probability. The Degrees thereof, according to Ariſtotle, 105.
Proof of Things, how to be managed, 122.
Propheſie, 118.
Providence of God. Disbelief thereof makes Covetous, 13.
Providence viſible in the Conſtitution and Preſervation of Societies, 103, 123.
Providence of God, 117, 147, 148, 151.
Providence vindicated by Belief of a Future Judgment, 418.
Prudence, Companion of Faith, 31.
Purgation and Sacrifices from Inſtitution, 111.
Puniſhment. Cauſes and Conſequences of it, 2, 13. What Influence Temporal Puniſhment hath to the purſuit of Virtue, or avoiding Vice, 417.

Q.

Q*Uick* and Dead. The Phraſe explained, 435.

R.

R*Eaſon*. Uſe thereof in Religion, 6, 19, 33, 172. Miſchiefs ariſing from abuſe thereof in Religion, 81.
Reaſon and Conſcience determine the Excellence of the Goſpel, 28.
Reaſon. The due Exerciſe thereof makes every part of the Creation uſeful to us, 88.
Redemption of the World. God's Infinite Love in it, 24. Myſtery, and Reaſons thereof, 309, &c.
Regeneration, how wrought, 320, 461. Neceſſity thereof, ibid.
Religion ſupported from Belief of a Future Judgment, 416.

Religion. The Atheiſts Objections againſt it, 11.

Religion. Chriſtian Religion recommended to Reaſon and Experience, 20. Perfection of it, 231. Correſponds with antient Predictions, ibid. Teſtimonies given by God to it, 252, 270.

Repentance, whence wrought, 361.

Reſignation, 29, 136, 304.

Reſolution. Want thereof a cauſe of Infidelity, 8, 28, 44.

Reſurrection of Chriſt, 344, 366, 371, 386. The great Atteſtation it gave to the Chriſtian Religion, 267, 389. Expediency thereof, 385. An Act of the Divine Love, 388. Aſſurance of our Reſurrection, ibid. vid. 371, & in ſeq.

Reſurrection of the Body, 472. Sometimes called Regeneration, ibid.

Revelation. Divine Revelation, the Neceſſity and Benefits thereof, 175. Character of it, 180, 186, 189.

Revenge, contrary to Chriſtian Religion, 10.

Rewards and Puniſhments, v. Judgment.

Right hand of God, The Import of that Phraſe, 395, 396.

Romans, 5 Ch. 16, 18. vid. Bellarmine's Miſtakes about the Interpretation of them, 74.

S.

Sabellius and Socinus, not differing in their Notions concerning the Holy Spirit, 450.

Saboath, A Name of God, 141.

Sabbath, Whence Inſtituted among the Jews, 155.

Sacrifices, Their Original from Inſtitution, 111.

Sacrifices. Expiatory Sacrifices, 465.

Sacrifices. Jewiſh Sacrifices Prefigurative of Chriſt's Death, 352, 353.

Sacrifice of Chriſt. Sufficiency thereof, 287.

Sanctification and Juſtification are in Scripture ſometimes equivalent Terms, 78.

Scepticiſm; the unreaſonableneſs and miſchiefs of it, 123.

Scripture. Stile thereof, 210.

Self-denial, 25.

Sheol. Interpretation of that word, 364.

Sin. Whence it proceeds, 166. heinouſneſs thereof, 361.

Sin. Wilful Sin, how prevented, 343.

Sincerity, 42, 444. attained and practiſed by conſideration of a Future Judgment, 437.

Sloth, A cauſe of Infidelity, 4.

Societies deſtroy'd by Atheiſts, 13.

Societies evince the Being of a God, 102. Love thereof natural, ibid. Advantages of the ſame, 103. Preſerved by belief of a Future Judgment, 415.

Soul and Body, their Union, 311.

Soul's Immortality, 94, 97, 373, 390, 472. Excellence and Operations, 95, 109. Creation by God, 162. Heathens Opinions of the State of Souls after their departure, 363, 364. Jewiſh account hereof, 365. various acceptations of the word Soul in Scripture, 366.

Spirit. The uſe of that Appellation. 446.

Spirit. A fierce Spirit, a Cauſe of Infidelity, 9.

Spirits. vid. Apparitions.

Spirits. Evil Spirits, 256, 257, 266.

Stupidity, a Cauſe of Infidelity, 4.

Sufferings of Chriſt, 326. The inconſiſtency of the Philoſophers in objecting againſt them, 343.

T.

Talmudiſts. The Seven Things they ſay were conſtituted before the World, 214.

Temperance, 42.

Tithes, Of what ſort they were paid in antient Times, 111. the Quantity allow'd, ibid.

Tradition. Whence corrupted, 113. this corruption no Argument againſt the Truth and Authority thereof, ibid. Agreement ment thereof in Man's Original, and Creation of the World, 161.

Tranſubſtantiation. Abſurdity thereof from Chriſt's Aſcenſion, 405.
Trinity. The Bleſſed Trinity, 447, 448.
Truth. Excellence thereof, 16, 36. attained by Faith, ibid.
Truth. Want of Love to it a cauſe of Infidelity, 6. how obſtructed, 23. Power and Plainneſs thereof, 36.

V.

VAlentinus and Followers, their Hereſy concerning Chriſt's Conception, 318.
Ubiquitaries. German Ubiquitaries confuted from Chriſt's Aſcenſion, 405.
Virgin Mary. The manner of our Bleſſed Saviour's being born of her, 320.
Virtue. The Practice, and Inſtances thereof even in this degenerate State, 98, 99.
Viſions. Their Reality, and by what Authority confirmed, 121.
Unbelief. vid. Infidelity.
Volkelius. His Error of the Creation of the World, 163.

W.

THE Will, τὸ ϑέλημα, a N
by ſome Writers aſſig
God, 447.
Will. Perverſeneſs thereof a c
Infidelity, 5.
Will. Freedom thereof, 32, 9
Words. How uſed by the Writers, 77.
World. Deluge thereof from I lity, 14.
World. Teſtimonies of Natu concerning the frame thereof
Hence God's Exiſtence pr
86, 87. Every part ſub to Man, 88. Manner of its C tion, and reaſon thereof
Philoſophers Opinions
ſubject refuted, 159, 160.
World. The imperfection of tient Hebrew Language
preſs it, 344.
World. Contempt thereof
from Chriſt's Sufferings,

Z.

ZEAL. Blind Zeal a c
Infidelity, 9.
Ζεὺς Ζαϐϐάσιος.

The End of the Second Volume.

THE WORKS
Of the Learned
Iſaac Barrow, D.D.
Late Maſter of Trinity Colledge in Cambridge.

Publiſhed

By his Grace Dr. JOHN TILLOTSON,

Late Arch-Biſhop of CANTERBURY.

The Third Volume, CONTAINING
ty Five SERMONS, upon ſeveral Occaſions.
Completing His Engliſh WORKS.

The Third Edition Corrected.

LONDON,
nted by J. R. for Brabazon Aylmer, at the Three Pigeons, over againſt the Royal Exchange, in Cornhill. MDCC.

TO Her Royal Highneſs
THE PRINCESS
ANNE
OF DENMARK,

THOMAS BARROW,
The Authour's Father,
Humbly Dedicateth theſe SERMONS.

The Contents.

SERM. I.

Of doing all in the Name of Chriſt.

COLOSS. III. 17.

And whatſoever ye do in word, or in deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jeſus. pag. 1.

SERM. II.

Of Being Imitatours of Chriſt.

1 COR. IV. 16.

I beſeech you be followers; or, I exhort you be imitatours of me. p. 13.

SERM. III.

Abiding in Chriſt to be demonſtrated by walking as Chriſt did.

1 JOHN II. 6.

He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk as he walked. p. 25.

SERM. IV.

Of Submiſſion to the Divine Will.

LUKE XXII. 42.

Nevertheleſs let not my will, but thine be done. p. 34.

SERM. V, VI, VII, VIII, IX.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. IV. 11.

I have learned in whatever ſtate I am, therewith to be content. p. 43, 54, 62, 72, 86.

SERM. X.

Of Patience.

1 PET. II. 21.

Becauſe alſo Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye ſhould follow his ſteps. p. 97.

SERM. XI.

Rejoyce evermore.

1 THESS. V. 16.

Rejoyce evermore. p. 109.

SERM. XII, XIII.
Keep thy Heart with all diligence, &c.
PROV. IV. 23.
Keep thy heart with all diligence, &c. p. 118, 125.

SERM. XIV, XV.
The Conſideration of our Latter End.
PSAL. XC. 12.
So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto Wiſdom. p. 136, 149.

SERM. XVI, XVII.
The danger and miſchief of delaying Repentance.
PSAL. CXIX. 60.
I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. p. 161, 171.

SERM. XVIII, XIX.
Of Induſtry in General.
ECCLES. IX. 10.
Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. p. 180, 191.

SERM. XX, XXI, XXII.
Of Induſtry in our General Calling, as Chriſtians, as Gentlemen, as Scholars.
ROM. XII. 11.
Not ſlothful in buſineſs. p. 201, 217, 218.

SERM. XXIII.
The unſearchableneſs of God's Judgments.
ROM. XI. 33.
How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out? p. 228.

SERM. XXIV, XXV, XXVI, XXVII.
Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governours.
HEB. XIII. 17.
Obey them that have the rule over you. p. 238, 247, 256, 265.

SERM. XXVIII.
Of Self-love in General.
2 TIM. III. 1.
For men ſhall be lovers of themſelves. p. 274.

SERM. XIXX.
Of Self-conceit.
2 TIM. III. 2.
For men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, &c. p. 280

SERM. XXX.
Of Self-confidence, Self-complacence, Self-will and Self-intereſt.
2 TIM. III. 2.
For men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, &c. p. 289.

SERM. XXXI.
Of Vain-glory, Arrogance, Talking and Thinking of ones ſelf.
2 TIM. III. 2.
For men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, &c. p. 297.

SERM. XXXII, XXXIII.
Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men.
ROM. XII. 17.
Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men. p. 303, 315.

SERM. XXXIV, XXXV.
Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men.
2 COR. VIII. 21.
Providing for honeſt things not onely in the ſight of the Lord, but in the ſight of Men. p. 326, 336.

SERM. XXXVI, XXXVII.
Of the Goodneſs of God.
PSAL. CXLV. 9.
The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. p. 348, 356.

SERM. XXXVIII.
No reſpect of Perſons with God.
ROM. II. 11.
For, there is no reſpect of perſons with God. p. 364

SERM. XXXIX, XL, XLI, XLII.
The Doctrine of Univerſal Redemption aſſerted and explain'd.
1 TIM. IV. 10.
—The living God who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe. p. 380, 393, 404, 414.

SERM.

The CONTENTS.

SERM. XLIII.
The Nativity of our Lord tidings of great joy.

LUKE II. 10.
And the Angel ſaid unto them, Fear not, for Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people. p. 423.

SERM. XLIV.
The Sufferings of Chriſt foretold in the Old Teſtament.

ACTS III. 18.
But thoſe things, which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled. p. 437.

SERM. XLV.
A Whitſunday*-Sermon of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.*

ACTS II. 38.
—— And ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. p. 448.

IMPRIMATUR,

Feb. 11. 168⅚.
C. Alſton, R. P. D. Hen. Epiſc.
Lond. a Sacris.

SERM.

Vol. III.

SERMON I.

Of Doing all in the Name of Chriſt.

COLOSS. 3. 17.

And whatſoever ye do in word, or in deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jeſus.

W*Hatſoever ye do in word, or deed:* A Duty we ſee the Apoſtle injoyns us of a large extent, and therefore ſurely of a great Importance; indeed of an univerſal concernment; ſuch as muſt go along with, muſt run through all our Words and all our Actions. We are therefore much obliged, and much concerned to attend thereto, and to practiſe it carefully. But firſt we muſt underſtand what it is; the doing whereof depends upon underſtanding the ſenſe of that phraſe (doing in the name of Jeſus) being ſomewhat ambiguous, and capable of divers meanings; which both in common uſe, and in H. Scripture we find it to bear different, according to the variety of matters or occaſions to which it is applyed; moſt of which are comprehended, and (as it were) complicated in that general one, according to which we may be ſaid to do that in another perſon's name, which we do with any kind of reference or regard to him; ſuch as our relations, or our obligations to that perſon do require; and the particular nature of the action doth admit. And according to this acception I conceive it ſafeſt and beſt to interpret Saint Paul's meaning here, ſuppoſing it to comprehend all the more ſpecial, and reſtrained meanings of this phraſe, truly applicable to the preſent matter; of which meanings I ſhall endeavour in order to propound the chief; and together, both to unfold and to inculcate the ſeveral reſpective branches of this duty. Yet firſt of all rejecting one or two, which cannot well be applied to this purpoſe.

To do in another's name, doth ſometimes denote the aſſuming another's Perſon, or pretending to be the ſame with him, the very He. So, many ſhall come in my name, (Propheſied our Saviour) ſaying, I am Chriſt: To do thus in Jeſus his Name, is the part of an Antichriſt, and an Impoſtor. That ſence therefore hath nothing to do here.

Matt. 24. 5.

Again; to do in anothers Name, doth often imply doing alterius loco, or vice; in another's Name, or ſtead, as a deputy, or ſubſtitute; repreſenting the Perſon, or ſupplying the office of another. So did the Prophets

Jer. 7. 13. 26. 5. 14. 14. come, and ſpeak in God's Name ; what they declared, or injoined, being
Jam. 5. 10. therefore ſaid to be declared, and injoined by God himſelf : I ſpake unto you, Jo. 5. 34. riſing up early, and ſpeaking (viz. by the Prophets, whom he ſent, and Matt. 10. 4. who are ſaid to come and ſpeak in his Name.) And thus the Apoſtles Ezr. 5. 1. 2 Cor. 5. 20. ſpake in Chriſt's Name : We are Ambaſſadours for Chriſt ; we pray you in
Rom. 13. 4. Chriſt's ſtead, be reconciled. Thus alſo Princes govern, and Magiſtrates Deut. 1. 17. execute Juſtice in God's Name ; whence they are ſtiled Gods, as being his Lieutenants, adminiſtring that Judgment, which belongs originally and principally to him. Now for this ſenſe, neither is it ſo proper, or convenient here ; it agreeing only to ſome particular Perſons, and to ſome peculiar Actions of them ; inſomuch, that others preſuming to act, according to that manner or kind, in Jeſus his Name, ſhall thereby become uſurpers and deceivers. We (and to us all this Precept is directed) ſhall heinouſly tranſgreſs our duty, doing any thing thus in his Name, without his Letters of Credence ; without being ſpecially called or ſent ; or being duly by him authorized thereto.

Theſe, and ſuch like ſenſes the preſent matter doth not well admit ; the reſt that ſuit thereto I ſhall with ſome diſtinction in order repreſent.

I. To do in another's Name ſometimes doth ſignify to do it out of affection or honour to another ; for anothers ſake, becauſe we love, or Comp. Mark 9. 41. eſteem him ; ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι being equivalent to ἕνεκα τοῦ ὀνόματος, and διὰ τὸ ὄνομα.
Thus it is ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of Water to drink in my name ; Matt. 10. 41. becauſe ye are Chriſt's (is added by way of interpretation, that is, out of 24. 9. reſpect to Chriſt, becauſe of your relation to him) ſhall not loſe his reward.
19. 29. And thus ſurely we ought to do every thing in Jeſus his Name ; all our Matt. 18. 5. Actions ought to proceed from a Principle of grateful love, and reverence 1 Cor. 16. 14. towards our gracious Redeemer. Let all your Actions be done in Charity, ſaith the Apoſtle ; if in Charity to our Neighbour, then much more in love to him, for whoſe ſake we are eſpecially bound to love our Neighbour. Upon any undertaking, or applying our ſelves to action, we ſhould ſo reflect thereupon as to conſider, whether that we are going about be apt to pleaſe him, and conducible to his honour ; if ſo, remembring what he hath done and ſuffered for us, (what excellent Bleſſings he hath purchaſed for us, what exceeding Benefits he hath conferr'd upon us) we ſhould out of love and reſpect to him readily perform it ; but if it otherwiſe appear diſpleaſing, or diſhonourable to him, we ſhould, from the ſame Principles, carefully decline it. The duty is certain, and the reaſon thereof evident ; for inducement to the practice thereof obſerve St. Paul's example ; who thus repreſents himſelf in the main imployment of his life, acting, The love of Chriſt conſtrains us ; judging this, that he died for Φιλοτιμέμεθα αὐτῷ εὐάρεστοι εἶναι. all, that they who live might not live to themſelves, but to him that died and roſe for them : The love of Chriſt, begot and maintained by a conſide-1 Cor. 5. 9. ration of his great benefits conferr'd on him, was the ſpring that ſet St.
14. Paul on work, that excited, and urged him forward to action. Thus do-
1 Theſs. 2. 6. ing, we ſhall do in Jeſus his Name ; but if we act out of love to our ſelves Tit. 1. 11. (to promote our own intereſts, to gratify our own deſires, to procure 1 Pet. 5. 2. Philip. 1. 15. Credit or Praiſe to our ſelves) we act onely in our own Names, and for Matt. 23. 5. our own ſakes ; not in the Name, or for the ſake of Jeſus.

II. To do in another's Name implies doing (chiefly) for the intereſt, or advantage of another ; upon another's behalf or accompt ; as the ſervants, or factours of another. For, when the buſineſs is another's, and the fruit, or benefit emergent belong to another, he that proſecutes that buſineſs may well be, and is commonly ſuppoſed to act in that other's name. Thus our Saviour is in St. John's Goſpel expreſſed to come, to ſpeak, to act in God's Name; becauſe he did God's buſineſs (the work which God Joh. 7. 18. 8. gave him to accompliſh) and entirely ſought the glory of God, as he there him- 54. 10. 25.

ſelf often avouches and profeſſes. And thus (in imitation of him) 5. 43. 36. 6.
ought we alſo to do all things in his Name; remembring that we are not 28. 9. 3, 4.
our own Men, but the Servants of Jeſus, (Servants to him not only by na- 1 Cor. 6. 19.
ture, as to our Maker and Preſerver; but by purchaſe, as to our Redeem- 7. 23.
er, who bought us with the greateſt Price; and by compact alſo, we ha- Heb. 5. 12.
ving freely undertaken his Service, and expecting wages from him) that 1 Pet. 1. 18.
we have therefore no buſineſs or imployment properly our own, but that Rom. 14. 8, 9.
all our buſineſs is (or ſhould be) to ſerve him, and promote his glory;
Whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, we ſhould do all to the glory of our 1 Cor. 10. 31.
Lord. Whatever I ſay, we do, we therefore ſhould perform it with this formal reference, as it were, toward Jeſus, as his Servants, from conſcience of the duty we owe to him; with intention therein to ſerve him; in expectation of reward onely from him. So doth St. Paul (in proſecution of this ſame Precept) beneath in this Chapter injoyns us, that what- Col. 3. 22, 23.
ever we do, we perform it heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men, knowing (or conſidering) that from the Lord we ſhall receive the recompence of the inheritance; for that we ſerve the Lord Chriſt. In like manner otherwhere Eph. 6. 6, 9.
he teaches us to do what we do not as pleaſers of men (not upon any inferiour accompts) but as Servants of Chriſt, knowing and conſidering that we have a Maſter in Heaven. But,

III. Doing in another's Name imports frequently doing by the appointment and command, or by the commiſſion and authority of another.
Ἐν ποίᾳ δυνάμει ϗ ἐν ποίῳ ὀνόματι, By what power, and in what name have ye done Act. 4. 7.
theſe things, ſay the High Prieſts to the Apoſtles? that is, Who did appoint or authorize you to do thus? their anſwer was ready; In the Name Joh. 5. 36, 37, of Jeſus, who had ſent, commiſſionated, and commanded them to Preach, 43. 14. 54. 17. 18.
and propagate that Doctrine. And thus we are alſo bound to do all things Luc. 24. 47.
in the Name of Jeſus, regulating all our actions by his Law; conform- 2 Cor. 5. 20.
ing our whole Lives to his Will; acting, not only out of good Principles 1 Cor. 6. 11.
(Principles of Love and Conſcience) but according to right Rules; the 2 Theſſ. 3. 6.
Rules of his Word and Example, which he hath declared, and preſcribed to us: for what is done beſide his Warrant and Will, cannot be rightly eſteemed done in his Name; will not as ſo be avowed, or accepted by him; no unjuſt or impious action will he upon any terms countenance or patronize. It was once a famous ſaying, All Miſchief begins in nomine Joh. 16. 2.
Domini; and much ſurely, more than one way, hath been done under the like Notion or Pretence; but this will not ſerve to excuſe the doing of that, in the day of final reckoning for our actions. For, there will be many Matt. 7. 23.
(we are taught) that ſhall in that day by ſpecious profeſſions of having done this or that in Chriſt's Name, veil their tranſgreſſions, and their neglects of duty, ſaying, Lord, Lord, have we not in thy Name propheſied; and in thy Name caſt out devils, and in thy Name done many wonderful things? who yet, our Lord himſelf aſſures us, ſhall have this reply made to them, I never knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquity. There will be thoſe Luc. 13. 26.
that ſhall claim acquaintance with Chriſt in ſuch terms: Lord, we have eaten and drank before thee; and thou haſt taught in our Streets; whom yet our Lord will diſclaim with a Depart ye from me, all ye workers of iniquity: 'Tis not, we ſee, Propheſying in Chriſt's Name (or Preaching about him) nor frequent attendance upon thoſe who do ſo; nor ſpeaking much or hearing much concerning him; 'tis not having great gifts or endowments conferr'd by Chriſt (not even ſo great as that of working Miracles) 'tis not familiar converſe with Chriſt; or making frequent addreſſes to him, that can ſanctify all a Man's actions, or ſo entitle them to the Name of Chriſt, as to ſecure his Perſon from being diſavowed and rejected by Chriſt; 'tis onely the conforming all our Actions to his holy Laws, that can aſſure us to be acknowledged and accepted by him. This I could wiſh they would conſider, who ſeem, by ſuch pretences, to commend, or excuſe their actions, although otherwiſe irregular and plainly contrary to the laws of Chriſt; ſuch as thoſe of being meek and charitable toward all Men; living peaceably our ſelves, and endeavouring to promote Peace among others; abſtaining from raſh and hard cenſures; from reviling and defaming others; paying reverence and obedience to Superiours; and the like Laws of Chriſt, not only expreſs and manifeſt, but even of the higheſt rank and conſequence among them; being mainly conducing to that which our Lord eſpecially tenders, the publick welfare and benefit of Mankind; the violation whereof cannot be juſtified by pretending any ſpecial regard whatever to Chriſt, or any collateral performance done, whether truly or ſeemingly, in his Name. We do but deceive our ſelves, if we conceit, that becauſe we think much, or ſpeak much of Jeſus; or have a zeal for ſomething good, all our actions are done in his Name; No; it only can be juſtly impreſſed upon, can warrant and ſanctify actions truly good and agreeable to his Law; it were an abuſe and forgery to do it, like ſtamping the Kings Name (or Image) on counterfeit metal; upon braſs or tin, inſtead of gold or ſilver. Good Intention and good Principles are indeed (as it were) the form and Soul of good Actions; but their being juſt and lawful are the body and matter of them; neceſſarily alſo concurring to their eſſence and integrity; they cannot ſubſiſt without it, but muſt paſs (as it were) for ghoſts and ſhadows. We are therefore concerned in all our doings to have an eſpecial regard to Chriſt's Law as their rule; that will render them capable of Chriſt's Name, and denominate them Chriſtian.

IV. Hereto we may add, that what we do in imitation of Jeſus, and in conformity to his Practice (that living rule and copy propoſed to us) we may be ſaid peculiarly to do in his Name. As a Picture uſeth to bear his Name, whom it was made to repreſent, and whom it reſembles; ſo if we ſet Chriſt's Example before us, and endeavour to tranſcribe it; if our life in the principal lineaments of ſanctity and goodneſs do reſemble his holy life; they may well bear his Name. But if our practiſe be unlike and unſutable to his, we cannot affix his Name thereto without great preſumption and abuſe; ſuch as would be committed, if to a draught of foul hue, and ugly features, we ſhould attribute the Name of ſome moſt handſome and goodly Perſon, of high worth and quality. To do thus in Jeſus his Name (with ſuch a regard to him) is a duty often preſcribed unto us, not only as relating to ſome caſes and actions, (as when his Charity, his Patience, his Humility, his Meekneſs are ſignally commended to our imitation) but generally, He, that ſaith he abideth in him, ought as he walked, ſo himſelf alſo to walk; that is, whoever profeſſes himſelf a Chriſtian ought to conform the whole tenour of his Converſation to that of Jeſus; to endeavour in every imitable Perfection to reſemble him. So that whenever we undertake any action, we ſhould do well to look upon this Pattern, thus (as it were) examining and inquiring of our ſelves; What did my Maſter in this or the like caſe; do I do the ſame thing, do I act from the ſame Principles, do I proceed in the ſame manner as he did; am I herein his Diſciple and Follower? if ſo, in his Name let me go on chearfully, if not let me forbear. Doing this will not be only according to our duty, but an eſpecial help and furtherance of good practice.

Eph. 5. 1, 2.
1 Cor. 10. 1.
Joh. 15. 12.
13. 34.
Heb. 12. 2.
Joh. 13. 15.
Phil. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 2. 21.
1 Joh. 2. 6.

V. To do in another's Name doth ſometimes import doing by any power derived, or virtue imparted by another; for that a thing ſo done may be imputed, ſhould be aſcribed to that other. So, Through thee (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) will we puſh down our Enemies, in thy Name will we throw down thoſe that hate us, (through thee, and in thy Name ſignify the ſame thing.) So did the Apoſtles caſt out Devils, and perform their other Miracles in Jeſus his Name (διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος, by his Name, 'tis ſometime expreſſed) that is by a divine virtue imparted from him. To this I add another acception, ſcarce different (at leaſt as to our purpoſe) from that, according to which doing in another's Name ſignifies doing it in truſt, or confidence repoſed upon another, with expectation of aid, or hope of good ſucceſs from another. So, we reſt on thee, (ſaid good King Aſa) and in thy name we go againſt this multitude; in thy Name, that is, hoping for aſſiſtance and ſucceſs from thee. And thus it is ſaid, that David went out againſt Goliah in the name of the Lord of hoſts; that is, confiding in God's help as his onely weapon and defence: Thus alſo did the H. Apoſtles work their Miracles in Jeſus his Name; ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, by faith in his Name, (ſaith St. Peter) his name hath made this Man ſtrong; that is, we did only truſt in his divine Power, and it was that Power of his which reſtored that weak Perſon to his ſtrength. And thus alſo it is our duty to do all things in our Saviours Name; with faith and hope in him; wholly relying upon him for direction and aſſiſtance; expecting from him only a bleſſing and happy iſſue of our undertakings. What we do in confidence of our own wiſdom or ability; or in affiance upon the help of any other Perſon or thing, we do in our own Name, or in the Name of that thing (or that Perſon) in whom we ſo confide; to our ſelves, or to ſuch auxiliaries we ſhall be ready to attribute the ſucceſs, and to render the glory of the Performance; glorying in our own arm, and ſacrificing to our Net. But what we undertake onely depending upon our Lord for ability, and ſucceſs, may therefore bear his Name, becauſe our faith derives the Power from him, which enables us happily to perform it; ſo that the performance may truly be attributed to him, and to him we ſhall be apt to aſcribe it. And thus, I ſay, we are certainly obliged to do every thing in his Name; (in his Name alone;) retaining a conſtant ſenſe both of our own infirmity, and of the impotency of all other created things; and conſequently a total diffidence both in our ſelves, and in them; but repoſing all our truſt in the direction, and aſſiſtance of our All-wiſe, and Allmighty Lord; of Jeſus, to whom all power in heaven and earth is given, (who indeed had it originally by Nature as God; but alſo farther hath acquired it by deſert and purchaſe) into whoſe hands all things are given; and all things are put under his feet; who hath obtained this Power in deſign to uſe it for our good; and is thereby always ready to help us in our need, if we have recourſe unto him, and rely upon him; making him what St. Paul ſtiles him, Our hope; our onely hope; renouncing all other confidences not ſubordinate to him. To do ſo is a duty evidently grounded as well upon the reaſon of the thing, as upon the will and command of God; to do otherwiſe is no leſs a palpable folly, than a manifeſt injury to God. For, in truth, neither have we, nor any other created thing any power, other than ſuch as he is pleaſed freely to diſpenſe; and which is not continually both for its being and its efficacy ſubject to him, ſo that he may at his pleaſure ſubtract it, or obſtruct its effect: No King is ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt; a mighty man is not delivered by much ſtrength; a horſe is a vain

Ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι LXX. Pſal. 44. 4. 89. 24.
Matt. 7. 22. Mar. 9. 38. Act. 3. 6. 4. 10, 30. Joh. 17. 11.
2 Chro. 14. 11.
1 Sam. 17. 45.
Act. 3. 16.
Hab. 1. 16.
Mat. 28. 18. Joh. 3. 35. 13. 3. 17. 2. Heb. 1. 2. 2. 8. Eph. 1. 22. 1 Cor. 15. 27. Phil. 2. 9. Apoc. 5. 12.
1 Tim. 1. 1.

Eccl. 9. 11. The race is not to the ſwift, nor the battle to the ſtrong.

By ſtrength ſhall no man prevail. 1 Sam. 2. 9.
Pſal. 33. 17. 146. 3. 44. 3.
Iſa. 36. 6.

Iſa. 43. 11. —— Beſide me there is no Saviour.
Hoſ. 13. 4, 10. Pſal. 106. 21.
Jer. 14. 8.

Pſal. 146. 5. 40. 4. 44. 6. 33. 18. 147. 11. 34. 22. 125. 1. 34. 22. 31. 19. 61. 4. 91. 4. 118. 8. 78. 22. 66. 2. 112. 7.

Iſa. 51. 5. 57. 13. 50. 7. 26. 3.
Jer. 14. 8.
Jer. 17. 5, 6, &c.

Matt. 10. 29, 30.
Jam. 4. 13.

thing for ſafety : Whence 'tis plain, that we cannot, upon any created power, ground a ſolid aſſurance of ſucceſs in any undertaking ; it will be leaning upon a broken reed (which cannot ſupport us, and will pierce our hands) both a vain and a miſchievous confidence; that will abuſe us, bringing both diſappointment and guilt upon us; the guilt of wronging our Lord many wayes; by arrogating to our ſelves, or aſſigning to others what he only doth truly deſerve, and what peculiarly of right belongs to him ; withdrawing the ſame from him; implying him unable or unwilling to aſſiſt us, and do us good ; neglecting to uſe that ſtrength which he ſo dearly purchaſed and ſo graciouſly tenders ; ſo diſappointing him, and defeating (as it were) his purpoſes of favour and mercy toward us. On the other ſide, truſting onely upon our Saviour, we act wiſely and juſtly ; gratefully and officiouſly ; for that in doing ſo, we build our hopes upon moſt ſure grounds ; upon a wiſdom that cannot be deceived ; upon a ſtrength that cannot be withſtood ; upon a goodneſs that hath no limits ; upon a fidelity that can never fail. For that we act with an humility, and ſobriety of mind ſutable to our condition, and to the reaſon of things ; for that we thereby declare our good opinion of him as onely able, and very willing to do us good ; for that we render him his juſt honour and due ; we comply with his earneſt deſires , we promote his gracious deſigns of mercy and kindneſs toward us. Hence it is that every where in H.Scripture God ſo highly commends, ſo greatly encourages this duty of truſting alone in him ; that he ſo ill reſents, and ſo ſtrongly deters from the breach or omiſſion thereof; Thus ſaith the Lord, Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord ; for he ſhall be like the heath in the deſart ; and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, but ſhall inhabit the parched places in the wilderneſs ; in a ſalt land and not inhabited. Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord, and whoſe hope the Lord is ; for he ſhall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that ſpreadeth out her roots by the river ; and ſhall not ſee when heat cometh ; but her leaf ſhall be green ; and ſhall not be careful in the year of drought, neither ſhall ceaſe from yielding fruit : thus in that place, thus in innumerable others we are threatened not onely with diſappointment, and bad ſucceſs in our undertakings, but with ſevere puniſhment, if we betake our ſelves to other ſuccours, and neglect or diſtruſt, or (in ſo doing) deſert God ; but are encouraged, not only with aſſurance of proſperous ſucceſs, but of additional rewards, if intirely in our proceedings we depend upon and adhere to God. Thus we ſhould do in all (even our moſt common and ordinary) affairs, which no leſs than the reſt are ſubject to his power, and governed by his care. For you know how St. James doth reprehend it as a piece of naughty boaſting and arrogance, to ſay, The morrow we will go to this City, and ſtay there a year, and trade and gain ; inſtead of ſaying, if the Lord will, we will live, and do this or that ; that is, to reſolve upon, undertake, or proſecute any affair without ſubmiſſion to God's will, and dependance on his Providence : But eſpecially we ought, in matters and actions more ſpiritual, to practiſe this duty ; for that to the performing of theſe, we have of our ſelves a peculiar impotence and unfitneſs ; needing therefore a more ſpecial aſſiſtance from our Lord ; that the ſucceſs of them more particularly depends upon him ; that the glory of them in an eſpecial manner is appropriate, and (as it were) conſecrate to him.

If it be a folly and a crime, to think we can do any thing without God, 'tis much more ſo to think we can do any thing good without him; 'tis an arrogance, 'tis an idolatry, 'tis a ſacriledge much more vain and wicked to do ſo. To imagine that we can, by the force of our own reaſon and reſolution, atchieve any of thoſe moſt high and hard enterprizes, to which, by the rules of vertue and piety we are engaged; that we can, by our own conduct and prowеſs, encounter and withſtand, defeat and vanquiſh thoſe ſo crafty, ſo mighty enemies of our ſalvation (our own fleſhly deſires; the menaces and allurements of the World; the ſlights and powers of Darkneſs) is much a worſe preſumption, than in other affairs of greateſt difficulty to expect ſucceſs without the divine aſſiſtance and bleſſing; than in other moſt dangerous battels, to think we can, by our own bow, and by our own ſpear ſave our ſelves; that we can obtain victory otherwiſe, than from his hand and diſpoſal, who is the Lord of Hoſts. Reaſon tells us, and experience alſo ſhews, and our Saviour hath expreſly ſaid it, That (in theſe things) without him (without his eſpecial influence and bleſſing) we can do nothing; he tells us, that we are but branches, inſerted into him; ſo that, without continually drawing ſap from him, we can have no life or vigour ſpiritual. The wiſeſt and beſt of Men, have, by their practice, taught us to acknowledge ſo much; to depend wholly upon him, to aſcribe all to him in this kind. Why (ſay St. Peter and St. John) do ye wonder at this; or why gaze ye upon us, as if by our own power or piety, we had made this man walk? —— His name (the name of Jeſus) through Faith in his name, hath made this man ſtrong: that acknowledgment indeed concerns a miraculous work; but ſpiritual works are in reality no leſs, they requiring as much or more of virtue ſupernatural, or the preſent interpoſition of God's hand to effect them; they make leſs ſhew without, but need as great efficacy within; ſo our Saviour, it ſeems, did imply, when he ſaid, He that believes in me, the works that I do he ſhall do, and greater works than theſe. Every good and faithful Man doth not work Miracles, yet ſomewhat greater, it ſeems, by the grace of Chriſt, he performs: However, to theſe St. Paul referr'd, when he affirmed, I can do all things in Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth me; nothing was ſo hard that he feared to attempt, that he deſpaired to maſter and go through with by the help of Chriſt; and, Not (ſaith he again) that we are ſufficient of our ſelves to think any thing of our ſelves; but our ſufficiency is of God: He was as ſenſible of his own inability, as he was confident in the gracious help of Chriſt. Thus ſhould we do all things in the Name of Jeſus; and 'tis not onely a duty to do it, but it may be a great encouragement to us, that we are capable of doing it; a great comfort to conſider, that in all honeſt undertakings, we have ſo ready, and ſo ſure an aid to ſecond and further us in them; confiding in which, nothing is ſo difficult, but we may eaſily accompliſh (a grain of faith will be able to remove mountains;) nothing is ſo hazardous, but we may ſafely venture on (walking on the Sea, treading upon Serpents and ſcorpions; daring all the power of the enemy.) In his Name we may, if our duty or good reaſon calls us forth (how ſmall and weak ſoever, how deſtitute ſoever of defenſive arms, or weapons offenſive) naked and unarmed, with a ſling and a ſtone, go out againſt the biggeſt, and beſt armed Philiſtine, nothing doubting of victory: Our weakneſs it ſelf (if we be humbly conſcious and ſenſible thereof) will be an advantage to us (as it was to St. Paul) to all effects and purpoſes, the grace of our Lord will be ſufficient for us, if we apply it, and truſt therein. But farther, Οὔτε γὰρ ἀνθρώπινον τι ἄνευ τῆς ἐπὶ τὰ θεῖα συναναφορᾶς δεῖ πράξεις. Ant. 3. 13.

Pſal. 44. 6.

Joh. 15. 5.

Act. 3. 12, 16.

Joh. 14. 12.

Phil. 4. 13.

2 Cor. 3. 5.

Οὐδὲν ἀδυνατήσει ὑμῖν. Mat. 17. 20. 21. 21. Luk. 17. 6.

Matt. 14. 29.

Luk. 10. 19.

2 Cor. 9. 21.

VI. To do in another's Name may denote, to do it with ſuch regard to another, that we acknowledge (that, I ſay, we heartily and thankfully acknowledge) our hope of proſpering in what we do; our expectation of acceptance, favour, or reward to be grounded on him; that they are procured by his merits and means, are beſtowed only for his ſake. Thus Joh. 14. 13. 15. 16. 16. 23, 24. our Saviour bids us to offer our prayers in his name; that is, repreſenting unto God his meritorious performances in our behalf, as the ground of our acceſs to God, of our hope to obtain from him what we requeſt. So alſo Eph. 5. 20. 3. 21. we are injoined to give thanks in his name; that is, with perſwaſion and acknowledgment, that only in reſpect to him we become capable to receive, or enjoy any good thing; that in effect, all the bleſſings by divine mercy vouchſafed us have been procured by him for us, are through him conveyed unto us. And thus alſo we ſhould do all things in the name of Jeſus, offering all our deeds to God, as ſacrifices and ſervices unworthy of acceptance, both in themſelves, and as proceeding from us; but pleaſing, and acceptable to God onely for his ſake. We ſhould do well, upon all occaſions, to remember our natural condition, and the general ſtate of mankind; ſuch as it was before he did undertake, ſuch as it would have Rom. 3. 23. 11. 32. Gal. 3. 22. continued ſtill, had he not undertaken for it; That our race had forfeited, and was fallen from God's favour; having injured him beyond all power of making him any reparation or ſatisfaction; that thence it was ſecluded from all means and hopes apparent of happineſs, was expoſed and tended downright unto miſery; that we conſequently had no ground to hope, that God (from whom no leſs in mind and in deed, than by reaſon of our guilt and ſtate of condemnation we were eſtranged) would, in kindneſs, beſtow any good upon us, or from us accept favourably any thing we ſhould do. But that, by our Saviour's performances, the caſe is altered; He, by his entire obedience, having ſo pleaſed God, by his patient ſubmiſſion to God's will, having ſo appeaſed his anger, and ſatisfi'd his juſtice, that God is not only reconciled, but hath an eſpecial favour, bears an earneſt good-will toward us. That now the good things we poſſeſs, we may truly eſteem as bleſſings, and enjoy them with real comfort, as proceeding Acts 3. 46. from mercy and kindneſs; now what we honeſtly endeavour, we may hope ſhall pleaſe God; now we have a free acceſs to God, and may Eph. 2. 17. 3. 12. Ἐν πεποιθήσει. Eph. 1. 6. chearfully preſent our ſacrifices of duty and devotion, with a full perſwaſion that they ſhall be accepted. But all this happineſs, all theſe favours and priviledges, we muſt alwaies remember to come from the continued procurement and mediation of the Beloved; ſo as ever to be ready to acknowledge it, and to return our thanks therefore. To this ſenſe that our Apoſtle here had an eſpecial regard, the words immediately following imply —— Doing all in the name of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God, and the Father by him; that is, in all things we do, taking occaſion to render thanks to God, as for his ſake being merciful and bountiful to us; beſtowing upon us the good we enjoy, bleſſing our endeavours, accepting our performances. We muſt not conceit, that any regard, any mercy, any favour, any reward is due to us in equity, is in effect conferr'd upon us upon our perſonal ſcore (for, how mean things are we in compariſon of his greatneſs; how vile and filthy things muſt we appear to his moſt pure, and all-diſcerning eyes; how unworthy of his regard and of his affection muſt we needs take our ſelves to be, if we do but well conſider, and are acquainted with our ſelves?) But that in him (i. e. for his ſake, and Eph. 1. 3, 6. by his means) God hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings, in him ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, God hath favoured, and caſt his Grace upon us; valuing us notwithſtanding all our imperfections; loving us notwithſtanding the ſpots with which we are defiled; notwithſtanding all the offences we have committed; for the relation and alliance we have to Jeſus. Nor muſt we look on our ſervices (the beſt we are able to perform) as in themſelves grateful or ſatisfactory: For all of them, if we mark them well, we ſhall find not only quite unprofitable to God, but very defective in many reſpects; for, Who can ſay, he performs any thing both in kind, in manner, in degree throughly right and good; with that ardency of love he owes to God, with that purity of intention, with that earneſt vigour of ſpirit, with that undiſtractedneſs of mind, with which he ſhould perform it? No; in all our flock we cannot pick out a ſacrifice entire and unblemiſhed; ſuch as God requires, ſuch as duty exacts of us. They need therefore (all our ſervices need) to be commended and compleated by the beloved Son his perfectly well-pleaſing performances; they need to be cleanſed and hallowed, by paſſing through the hands of our moſt Holy and undefiled high-Prieſt: to become ſweet and ſavoury (or to receive that ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, which St. Paul ſpeaks of) from being offered up in his cenſer. In fine all our actions ſhould, in our intention, be works of religion dedicated to God's ſervice and honour; ſacrifices, as it were, of gratitude and homage to God; ſo they ought all to be offered up in the Name of Jeſus. I add farther,

Heb. 7. 26.
Eph. 5. 2.
Rev. 8. 3, 5.

VII. Laſtly, that we do in the Name of Jeſus, may well imply doing with invocation of him: thus we may underſtand that place of St. James, where the Elders are adviſed to pray, and anoint the ſick in the Lord's name; for, to anoint them, imploring our Lord's bleſſing upon them, and upon thoſe means uſed for their cure. And thus St. Chryſoſtome expounds the words; do all in Jeſus his Name, that is ſaith he, imploring him for your helper in all things; alwaies firſt praying to him, undertake your buſineſs. Doing thus, will indeed Chriſten, and conſecrate our actions; for all things (ſaith our Apoſtle) are ſanctified by the word of God, and prayer; that is, by God's bleſſing implored, and obtained by prayer; or, if God's word be there taken for his law, or revealed will, it is there ſignified, that our actions are not only ſanctified by their lawfulneſs, or conformity to that good rule, Gods declared will; but alſo by the invocation of his name; however, all our actions, it ſeems, are unhallowed and profane, if not accompanied with devotion. That to do thus is our duty, appears by thoſe frequent injunctions, to pray indefinently, to pray alwaies, to abide inſtantly in prayer; which do not onely import, that we ſhould pray often, and continue with Patience, and earneſtneſs in Prayer; but that we ſhould annex it to, or interpoſe it among all our actions, undertaking nothing (at leaſt of conſideration or moment) without it. We ſhould do it (our Saviour commands) ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, that is, on every occaſion; and Saint Paul gives the ſame direction, Praying, ſays he, ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, on all opportunities, with all prayer and ſupplication in ſpirit; (in ſpirit, that is, I take it, * in our hearts at leaſt, and with ſecret elevations of our mind, if not with our mouth and voice.) And (more explicitely otherwhere ſaith he) Be careful for nothing, but in every thing (in all your affairs) by prayer and ſupplication, with thankſgiving, let your requeſts be made known to God. And thus to do (to accompany all our undertakings with Prayer) we are indeed concern'd upon many accompts. We need God's direction (being our ſelves very blind and ignorant)

Jam. 5. 14.

In locum.
Αὐτὸν καλῶν βοηθὸν, ἐπὶ πάντων πρότερον αὐτῷ εὐχόμενος ἅπτου τῶν πραγμάτων.

1 Tim. 4. 5.

Δεῖ πάσης τῆς πράξεως προηγεῖσθαι τὴν προσευχήν. M. Erem.

Μηδὲν μήτε ποιῶμεν μήτε λέγωμεν πρὶν ἢ τὸν Θεὸν καλέσαι καὶ παρακαλέσαι συνεφάψασθαι τῶν ἐν χερσὶν ἡμῖν ἁπάντων. Chryſ.

Τοῦτο δή γε πάντες ὅσοι καὶ κατὰ βραχὺ σωφροσύνης μετέχουσιν ἐπὶ πάσῃ ὁρμῇ καὶ σμικροῦ καὶ μεγάλου πράγματος Θεὸν ἀεί που καλοῦσιν Plato. Tim.
Vid. Epiſt. 8. Arr. Epict. 11. 18.
1 Theſ. 5. 17. Luk. 18. 1.
Rom. 12. 12. Coloſ. 4. 2.

Ἐκτενῶς.

Luk. 11. 36.
Eph. 6. 18.
* Eph. 5. 19.
Ἐν καρδίᾳ.
Phil. 4. 6, 7.

Ἐν παντί.
Bene ac ſapienter majores inſtituerunt, ut rerum agendarum, ita dicendi initium a precationibus caperetur; quod nihil rite, nihilque providenter homines ſine Deorum immortalium ope, conſilio, honore auſpicarentur. Plin. in Paneg.

in the choice of what we attempt; that our ends and Job 18. 7. Iſa. 30. 1. Hoſ. 10. 6. Prov. 1. 25, 30. Pſal. 106. 13. 16. 7. 73. 24. 107. 11. deſigns may be good; conducible to God's honour and our own true advantage. For, as the Prophet tells us,
The way of man is not in himſelf, neither is it in man that
Jer. 10. 23. walketh to direct his ſteps; And, as the Wiſe man adds, Prov. 20. 24. 16. 9. Man's goings are of the Lord, how then can a man underſtand his own way? (implying, ſince God only knows what is beſt for us, that we of our ſelves without his direction, know not what to do, whether to go:) The H. Pſalmiſt ſignifies the ſame in thoſe Pſal. 25. 12, 9. words (very encouraging to the practice of this duty) What man is he that feareth the Lord? (that feareth him, that is, who worſhippeth him, and ſeeketh his guidance) him ſhall he teach in the way that he ſhall chuſe. We need alſo (being our ſelves not onely weak and infirm, but inconſtant and unſtable) Gods aſſiſtance, and upholding hand in the purſuance of our well-choſen deſigns (that we may uſe the beſt means, and proceed in a ſtreight courſe; that we may perſiſt upright and ſteady in our Proceedings) that which the Wiſe man ſeems to call, the eſtabliſhing of our thoughts, and promiſes, as a conſequence, upon our ſeeking God's aſſiſtance in our Prov. 16. 9. actions, and relying thereon; Commit, ſaith he, thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed; (thou ſhalt drive on thy good purpoſes ſteadily, without ſtumbling or falling; at leaſt irrecoverably. So the Pſal. 37. 23, 24. 17. 31. Pſalmiſt aſſures us concerning a good man: The ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide; though he fall he ſhall not utterly be caſt down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. We alſo farther, as to the final ſucceſs of our affairs, ſtand in need of Gods bleſſing;
that he, upon whoſe will altogether depends the diſpoſal of all events, ſhould beſtow a good iſſue unto our endeavours, that they prove not matter Pſal. 37. 5. 119. 5. 133. of diſcouragement, or diſcomfort to us; that which alſo the Pſalmiſt aſſures us of obtaining, upon condition of our imploring and depending upon God for it; Commit thy way (ſaith he) unto the Lord; truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. We do thus need in all our affairs, the direction, aſſiſtance and bleſſing of our Lord; Luke 11. 9, 10. Joh. 14. 13. Pſal. 9. 10. but ſhall not have them without Prayer; for, the rule is, Ask and have, ſeek and find; without asking we are not likely to obtain thoſe gifts; without ſeeking we muſt not hope to find thoſe benefits from God. If we are ſo proud, as to think we do not need them, or ſo negligent, as not to mind them; or ſo diſtruſtful of the divine power or goodneſs, that we imagine he cannot or will not afford them to us; we are like to be ſo unhappy as to want them. God expects from us, that we ſhould, in whatever we do, acknowledge him; ('tis the Wiſe man's expreſſion, In all thy waies acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy paths;) acknowledge him as the only faithful guide and counſellour; as the only ſufficient helper and protectour; as the only free arbitratour and donour of good ſucceſs. Nothing therefore is well done, which is not thus done; we cannot be ſatisfied in what we do; we cannot hope for a comfortable end thereof; we cannot expect a bleſſing from God, if we have refuſed, or if we have neglected the recommending our proceedings to his care. We can, I ſay, do nothing; not eat, not ſleep, not trade, not travel, not ſtudy with any true content, any reaſonable ſecurity, any ſatisfactory hope, if we have not firſt humbly implored God's favour; committing our ſelves, and our buſineſs into his hand, that hand which diſpenſeth all good, which alone can keep off all danger
Gen. 23. 7. and miſchief from us. God ſhall ſend his Angel before thee: ſo did our Father Abraham ſend his ſervant about his buſineſs; having queſtionleſs before fore commended it to God by Prayer. God Almighty give you mercy before the man : ſo did Jacob give his ſons their diſpatches toward Ægypt : In ſuch a manner did we enter upon all our affairs, we could not but be full of hope, and void of care concerning them ; for that commonly we are ſo full of anxiety about the event of what we undertake, whence doth it ariſe, but from a neglect of this duty? for, having committed our buſineſs into ſo ſure a hand, how could we farther be ſolicitous about it? Had we, according to St. Peter's advice, Caſt our care upon the Lord ; or, caſt our burden upon him (as the Pſalmiſt exhorts us) had we duly ſought and invoked him, who never faileth them that ſeek him, who is nigh to all them that call upon him ; we ſhould not have ſuch a load of troubleſome care reſting upon us ; our hearts would be light, and free as to all theſe things ; we ſhould be ſecure, that nothing very bad, or diſaſtrous, could befal us ; we ſhould experience it true, what the Prophet affirms in that Prayer or Pſalm to God ; Thou ſhalt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee : Be careful for nothing, Saint Paul bids us, but in every thing let your requeſts be made known to God ; if we perform the latter part, the former will naturally be conſequent thereon. Thus, in the laſt place, ſhould we do all things in the name of Jeſus (upon all occaſions praying to him, or which is all one, to God in his name) which that we may do, (that we are allowed and encouraged to do it) is alſo a privilege, and an advantage unvaluable.

Gen. 43. 14.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
Pſal. 55. 22.
Pſal. 9. 10. Old Tranſl.
70. 4.
Pſal. 145. 18.
Pſal. 112. 7, 8.
Iſa. 26. 3.
Phil. 4. 6, 7.

In ſo many ways and particular reſpects may we, and ought we to perform all we do in the name of Jeſus : We ſhould do every thing out of grateful affection and reſpect to him, as our chief Principle ; every thing as his ſervants, aiming eſpecially at the pleaſing of him and promoting his honour, as our principal end ; every thing according to his will and commandment, as our conſtant rule ; every thing after his example, as our beſt pattern ; every thing, in confidence of his gracious aſſiſtance and bleſſing, as our onely ſtrength and ſupport ; every thing with hope of acceptance purely upon his accompt ; every thing with thankful ſenſe and acknowledgment to God for the mercies and favours conveyed unto us by his means, conferred upon us for his ſake ; every thing with humble invocation of him, or with prayer to God in his name : In ſum, every thing with a due and proper regard had to him ; ſo that he be not paſſed over or left out in any thing we undertake ; but come always into conſideration, according as our relations to him, and our obligations to him do require. In the performances of which duties the life indeed of our religion (of all our good practiſe, of all our devotion) doth conſiſt.

To all this I ſhall only ſubjoin the mention of one general duty, implied in all and each of thoſe we have propounded, which is this ;

VIII. That our Lord Jeſus ſhould be frequently (and in a manner continually ; always, as to the habitual diſpoſition of our ſouls, actually upon all fit occaſions) preſent to our minds and thoughts. This, I ſay, is plainly implied in the former duties. For, how is it poſſible we ſhould perform all our actions (yea, utter all our words) with any ſort of regard to him, if we ſeldom think of him? Such is the nimbleneſs and activity of our minds, that it is feaſible enough to do thus ; and, in reſpect to other objects, we commonly experience it done ; for animus eſt ubi amat ; what ever we affect, our mind, however otherwiſe imployed, will be thinking on it, 'tis hard to reſtrain our thoughts from it ; (the covetous man's heart will be among his bags ; the voluptuous man's mind will be in his diſhes ; the ſtudious Perſon will be muſing on his notions, do he what he can.) Why then may we not as well, as often direct our minds toward our Lord, and mix the remembrance of him with all other employments or entertainments of our thoughts? to do ſo is ſurely very requiſite, and very expedient toward our good practice. Things far diſtant, or long abſent, can have ſmall efficacy, or influence; 'tis ſo we ſee in natural, and 'tis no leſs ſo in moral cauſalities; wherein repreſentation to the fancy and memory have a force anſwerable to that, which real conjunction and approximation have in nature. As the heat and light of the Sun, the farther he goes, and the longer he ſtays from us, do the more (proportionably) decreaſe; ſo according to our leſs frequently, and leſs ſeriouſly thinking upon any object, our affection and our reſpect thereto decay. If therefore we deſire, according to our duty, to maintain in our hearts ſuch diſpoſitions (due affection and due reverence) toward Jeſus; if we intend to ſuit our actions accordingly with due regard to him; we ſhould, in order to thoſe purpoſes, apply this ſo neceſſary and uſeful mean, of frequently bending our minds toward him; the doing of which in likelihood, will conduce much to the ſanctifying our affections, and to the governing our actions in a conſtant performance of our duty. For we can hardly ſure (admitting we do ſeriouſly believe him to be ſuch as we profeſs to believe him) with any competent attention think of him; but that thought will be apt to reſtrain us from doing ill, to incite us to do well; ſince together with that thought, ſome of his excellent Perfections, ſome of our principal relations, and ſome of our great obligations to him (each of which hath much vertue and force to thoſe purpoſes) Act. 10. 38. will interpoſe and repreſent themſelves. Frequently thinking of him, we ſhall ſometimes apprehend him with inceſſant toil, labouring in the ſervice of God, and in promoting the welfare of men; ſometime we ſhall imagine him undergoing all kind of contumelies and bitter pains; ſuffering by the cruel hands and tongues of ſpiteful men; we ſhall (as it were) behold him bleeding under the ſcourge, and hanging upon the croſs for our ſakes. Sometimes he will appear to our minds crowned with Majeſty, reigning in Sovereign Power and glory, having all things in ſubjection under his feet; ſometimes alſo he will be repreſented as our Judge, before whoſe tribunal we muſt all ſhortly ſtand, and be obliged to render an accompt of all our doings; which thoughts paſſing through our minds, will be apt to make ſome impreſſion upon our hearts, to have ſome influence upon our actions. For, can that moſt amiable and moſt venerable Idea of a Perſon ſo entirely pure and holy, ſo meek and humble, ſo full of benignity and charity toward all men (particularly towards our ſelves) be otherwiſe then apt to forget ſome eſpecial love and reverence toward him; than incline us ſtrongly to do well, yea than teach us what and how we ſhould do ſo, in conformity to ſuch a Pattern ſet before us? it occurring to our thoughts, that he is our Lord and Maſter (who made us and maintains us, who purchaſed us to himſelf, and redeemed us from miſerable ſlavery by his own heart-blood) how can it fail to raiſe in us ſome awe, ſome ſence of duty toward him? Will not the apprehenſion of what he did and what he ſuffered for us powerfully mind us, that according to all juſtice and equity, in all ingenuity and gratitude we are bound to do only that which will pleaſe him? If we think of Jeſus, when we are ſetting upon any action, ſhall we not thereupon be apt thus to interrogate our ſelves? Shall I do otherwiſe than he did, or would have done, ſo rendring my ſelf unlike, or contrary to him? Shall I be ſo unfaithful to my glorious Maſter, as to diſſerve him, or to neglect his ſervice? Shall I be ſo unworthy toward my gracious Redeemer, my beſt Friend, my moſt bountiful Benefactour, as to diſoblige him, to wrong him, to diſhonour him, to grieve him by thus doing? Shall I be ſo vain and raſh as to croſs him who is my King, able to controll and ſubdue me; as to offend him who is my Judge, reſolved to condemn and puniſh me? Shall I wilfully forfeit that friendſhip and favour of his, upon which all my happineſs doth depend? Shall I procure his diſpleaſure and enmity, from which my utter ruin muſt inevitably follow? Such conſiderations have a natural connexion with our frequent thinking upon, and the Preſence (as it were) of our Bleſſed Saviour to our minds, which therefore may be commended to us as an excellent inſtrument of bettering our hearts and our lives.

To conclude; Let us all alwayes remember, and conſider, that we are Chriſtians, related unto Chriſt Jeſus, and called by his name, and as ſo, in his name, let us do all things.

Lord of all power and might; who art the Authour and giver of all good things; graft in our hearts the love of thy name; increaſe in us true religion; nouriſh us with all goodneſs; and of thy great mercy keep us in the ſame; through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

SERMON II.

Of Being Imitatours of Chriſt.

1 COR. 4. 16.

I beſeech you be followers of me: or, I exhort you be imitatours of me.

Παρακαλῶ ὑμᾶς μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε.

SAint Paul by an impartial reflexion upon his heart and life being well aſſured, that he by the divine Spirit was enlightened with a certain knowledge of all neceſſary truth, and endued with plentiful meaſures of divine grace; being conſcious of a ſincere zeal in himſelf to honour God and benefit men; being ſatisfi'd, that with integrity he did ſuit his converſation to the dictates of a good conſcience, to the ſure rule of God's Law, and to the perfect example of his Lord; that his intentions were pure and right; his actions warrantable, and the tenour of his life conſpicuouſly blameleſs, doth, upon all occaſions (not out of any ſelf-conceitedneſs, arrogance, or oſtentation, from which he, by frequent acknowledgment of his own defects and his miſcarriages, and by aſcribing all the good he had, or did, to the grace and mercy of God, doth ſufficiently clear himſelf; but from an earneſt deſire to glorify God, and edifie his diſciples) deſcribe, and ſet forth his own Practice, propoſing it as a Rule, preſſing it upon them as an argument, an encouragement, an obligation to the performance of ſeveral duties. So by it he directeth and urgeth the Epheſians to a charitable compliance, or complaiſance; a ſweet and inoffenſive demeanour toward other: Give no offence (ſaith he) neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God; even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking my own profit, but the profit of many,

1 Cor. 4. 32, &c. 10. 1.

that they may be ſaved; be ye followers of me : ſo he guides and provokes the Philippians to endeavours of proficiency in grace, and the ſtudy of Phil. 3. 16,17. Chriſtian Perfection : Neverthelеſs (ſaith he to them) whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the ſame rule, let us mind the ſame thing : brethren, be followers together with me, and mark ſuch as walk ſo, as ye have us for an example. By the like inſtance and argument, he moveth the Theſſalonians to a ſober and orderly converſation, to induſtry in their calling, 2 Theſſ. 3. 7. to ſelf-denyal, and a generous diſregard of private intereſt : For your ſelves (ſaith he) know how ye ought to follow us ; for we behaved not our ſelves diſorderly among you ; neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, but wrought with labours and travail day and night, that we might not be chargeable to any of you ; not becauſe we have not power, but to make our ſelves an example to you to follow us : The ſame Perſons he commendeth, as having by this 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. means been induced to a patient conſtancy in faith and good works : Ye know (ſaith he) what manner of men we were among you for your ſake, and ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction : The practice of all virtue and goodneſs, he alſo thus recom- Phil. 4. 8, 9. mendeth under this rule and obligation : Thoſe things, which ye have learned and received, and heard, and ſeen in me, do, and the God of Peace ſhall be with you. Thus in our Text, (referring it to the context) he urgeth the Chriſtians, his diſciples at Corinth, to fidelity and diligence in the charges and affairs committed to them, to humility, patience and charity; wherein he declareth himſelf to have ſet before them an evident and exact Pattern. Which Practice of Saint Paul doth chiefly teach us two things: That we be careful to give; and that we be ready to follow good example: the latter of which duties more directly and immediately agreeth to the intent of this place; and it therefore I ſhall only now inſiſt upon : the ſubject and ſcope of my diſcourſe ſhall be to ſhew, that it is our duty and concernment to regard the Practices of good men, and to follow their example. To which purpoſe we may obſerve.

I. That it is the manner of the Apoſtles, upon all occaſions, to incul- Jam. 5. 10. cate this duty : we heard St. Paul : hear St. James : Take (ſaith he) my brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the name of the Lord for an ex- Jam. 5. 11. ample of ſuffering affliction : Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy; Heb. 6. 11. and the Apoſtle to the Hebrews : We deſire (ſaith he) that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence to the full aſſurance of hope unto the end ; that ye be not ſlothful, but followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the pro- Heb. 12. 1. miſes : and again ; Wherefore ſeeing we are alſo compaſſed about with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes, let us lay aſide every weight, and the ſin which doth ſo ea- 1 Pet. 3. 1, 6. ſily beſet us, and let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us. And St. Peter : Ye wives be in ſubjection to your own husbands ; even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord. And wherever the eminent deeds of holy men are mentioned, it is done with an intimation at leaſt, or tacite ſuppoſition, that we are obliged to follow their example.

II. We may conſider that to this end (that we might have worthy Patterns to imitate) the goodneſs of God hath raiſed up in all ages ſuch excellent Perſons, furniſhing them with rare endowments, and with continual influences of his grace aſſiſting them, to this purpoſe, that they might not onely inſtruct us with wholeſome doctrine, but lead us alſo by good example in the Paths of righteouſneſs. For certainly what St. Paul ſaith concerning the ſins and puniſhments of bad men, is no leſs appli- 1 Cor. 10. 11. cable to the vertuous deeds and happy examples of good men : All theſe things happened unto them for enſamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

III. They are written for our admonition; It was a ſpecial deſign of God's Providence in recording and recommending to our regard the divine hiſtories: They were not framed as monuments of a fruitleſs memory and fame to them; they were not propoſed to us as entertainments of our curioſity, as objects of wonder, as matters of idle diſcourſe; that unconcernedly we ſhould gaze upon them, or talk about them; as Children look on fine Gays; but they are ſet before us, as copies to tranſcribe; as lights to guide us in our way to happineſs: So that if we will not ingratefully fruſtrate the intentions of Divine Providence for our good, we muſt diſpoſe our ſelves to imitate thoſe illuſtrious Paterns of Vertue and Piety.

Μεγίστη δὲ ὁδὸς πρὸς τὴν τοῦ καθήκοντος εὕρεσιν καὶ ἡ μελέτη τῶν θεοπνεύστων γραφῶν· ἐν ταύταις γὰρ καὶ αἱ τῶν πράξεων ὑποθῆκαι εὑρίσκονται, καὶ οἱ βίοι τῶν μακαρίων ἀνδρῶν ἀνάγραπτοι παραδεδομένοι οἷον εἰκόνες τινὲς ἔμψυχοι τῆς κατὰ θεὸν πολιτείας, τῷ μιμήματι τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔργων πρόκεινται. Baſ. ad Greg. Ep. 2.

IV. We may farther conſider that in the nature of the thing it ſelf good example is of ſingular advantage to us, as being apt to have a mighty virtue, efficacy and influence upon our practice: which conſideration ſhould much ingage us to regard it, applying it as an inſtrument of making our ſelves good, and conſequently of becoming happy. Good example is, as I ſay, of exceeding advantage to practice upon many accounts.

1. Examples do more compendiouſly, eaſily and pleaſantly inform our minds, and direct our practice, than precepts, or any other way or inſtrument of diſcipline. Precepts are delivered in an univerſal and abſtracted manner, naked, and void of all circumſtantial attire, without any intervention, aſſiſtance, or ſuffrage of ſenſe; and conſequently can have no vehement operation upon the fancy, and ſoon do fly the memory; like flaſhes of lightening, too ſubtile to make any great impreſſion, or to leave any remarkable footſteps, upon what they encounter; they muſt be expreſſed in nice terms, and digeſted in exact method; they are various; and in many disjointed pieces conſpire to make up an entire body of direction; they do alſo admit of divers caſes, and require many exceptions, or reſtrictions which to apprehend diſtinctly, and retain long in memory, needs a tedious labour, and continual attention of mind, together with a piercing and ſteady judgment: But good example with leſs trouble, more ſpeed, and greater efficacy cauſes us to comprehend the buſineſs, repreſenting it like a Picture expoſed to ſenſe, having the Parts orderly diſpoſed, and completely united, ſuitably cloathed and dreſſed up in its circumſtances; contained in a narrow compaſs, and perceptible by one glance, ſo eaſily inſinuating it ſelf into the fancy, and durably reſting therein: In it you ſee at once deſcribed the thing done, the quality of the actour, the manner of doing, the minute ſeaſons, meaſures and adjuncts of the action; with all which you might not perhaps by numerous rules be acquainted; and this is the moſt facile, familiar and delightful way of inſtruction, which is by experience, hiſtory and obſervation of ſenſible events. A ſyſteme of Precepts, though exquiſitely compacted, is in compariſon but a Skeleton, a dry, meagre, lifeleſs bulk, exhibiting nothing of perſon, place, time, manner, degree, wherein chiefly the fleſh and blood, the colours and graces, the life and ſoul of things do conſiſt; whereby they pleaſe, affect, and move us: But example imparts thereto a goodly corpulency, a life, a motion, renders it conſpicuous, ſpecious and active, transforming its notional univerſality into the reality of ſingular ſubſiſtence. This diſcourſe is verified by various experience; for we find all Maſters of Art and Science explicating, illuſtrating and confirming their general Rules and Precepts by particular examples: Mathematicians de-monſtrate their Theorems by Schemes and Diagrams, which in effect are but ſenſible inſtances; Oratours back their Enthymemes (or rational Argumentations) with Inductions (or ſingular Examples;) Philoſophers alledge the Practice of Socrates, Zeno, and the like Perſons of famous Wiſdom and Vertue to authorize their doctrine: Politicks and civil Prudence is more eaſily and ſweetly drawn out of good hiſtory, than out of Books de Republica. Artificers deſcribe Models, and ſet Paterns before their Diſciples, with greater ſucceſs, than if they ſhould deliver accurate Rules and Precepts to them: For who would not more readily learn to build by viewing carefully the Parts and Frame of a well contrived ſtructure, than by a ſtudious enquiry into the rules of Architecture; or to draw by ſetting a good Picture before him, than by merely ſpeculating upon the laws of Perſpective; or to write fairly and expeditely by imitating one good copy, than by hearkening to a thouſand oral Preſcriptions; the underſtanding of which, and faculty of applying them to practice, may prove more difficult, and tedious, than the whole practice it ſelf as directed by a copy? Neither is the caſe much different in Moral concernments; one good example may repreſent more fully, and clearly to us the nature of a vertue, than any verboſe deſcription thereof can do: in ſooner time, and with greater eaſe we may learn our duty by regarding the deportment of ſome excellent Perſon, than by attending to many Philoſophical diſcourſes concerning it: for inſtance, if we deſire to know what Faith is, and how we ſhould rely upon the Divine Providence, let us propoſe to our conſideration the practice of Abraham; wherein we may ſee the Father of the Faithful leaving a moſt pleaſant countrey, the place of his nativity, and queſtionleſs moſt dear unto him under that notion; deſerting his home and fixed habitation, his eſtate and patrimony; his kindred and acquaintance, to wander he knew not where in unknown Lands, with all his Family, leading an uncertain and ambulatory life in Tents, ſojourning and ſhifting among ſtrange People, devoid of Piety and Civility (among Canaanites and Egyptians) upon a bare confidence in the Divine Protection and Guidance: we may ſee him Aged 99 years, ſenſible of his own natural impotence, and an equal incapacity in his Conſort as to ſuch purpoſes, yet with a ſteady belief aſſuring himſelf, that from thoſe dead ſtocks a numerous Progeny ſhould ſpring, and that he who by all Power of Nature was unable to beget one Child, ſhould by virtue of God's Omnipotent Word become the Father of a mighty Nation: We may ſee him upon the firſt ſummons of the Divine Command without ſcruple or heſitancy, readily and chearfully yeilding up his onely Son (the ſole ground of his hope and prop of his Family, to whoſe very Perſon the promiſe of multiplication was affixed) to be ſacrificed and ſlain; not objecting to his own reaſon the palpable inconſiſtency of counſels ſo repugnant; nor anxiouſly labouring to reconcile the ſeeming contrariety between the Divine Promiſes and Commands; but reſolved as it were (with an implicit Faith in God) to believe things incredible, and to rely upon events impoſſible; contemplating theſe things let us ſay what Diſcourſe could ſo livelily deſcribe the nature of true Faith, as this illuſtrious Precedent doth.

Xen. Apomn. 4.

It was Xenoph. obſervation, grounded upon his own Experience that the memory of Socrates's Converſation did greatly profit his Acquaintance (τὸ μεμνῆσθαι Σ. μὴ παρόντος οὐ μικρὰ ὠφελεῖ τοὺς εἰωθότας αὐτῷ συνεῖναι) and Seneca ſaith, that the Crowd of Philoſophers, which followed the ſame Wiſe-man derived more of their Ethicks from his manners than his words (plus ex moribus, quam ex verbis Socratis traxit) Sen. Ep. 11. And he that ſhall reflect upon the Story concerning his behaviour, when he was by malicious envy perſecuted to death, may perhaps be more edified thereby, than by all his ſubtile diſcourſes about death, and the Souls ſtate after it.

Again, he that would learn how to demean himſelf in reſiſting the aſſaults of temptation, let him conſider that one carriage of Joſeph; of him, together withſtanding the courtſhips of an attractive beauty, and rejecting the ſolicitations of an imperious Miſtreſs, advantaged by opportunities of privacy and ſolitude; when the refuſal was attended with extream danger, and all the miſchiefs which the diſdain of a furious luſt diſappointed, of an outragious jealouſie provoked, of a loving Maſter's confidence abuſed, could produce; and all this by one of meaneſt condition in a ſtrange Place, where no interceſſion, favour, or patronage of friends could be had, no equal examination of his cauſe might be expected; of him doing this, merely upon Principles of Conſcience, and out of fear of God; (ſaying, How can I do this great evil and ſin againſt God?) and he that conſiders this example, how can he be ignorant of his duty in the like caſe?

Again, would we learn wiſdom, conſtancy and reſolution in the conduct of honeſt, and worthy deſigns, let us ſet before our eyes the Pattern of Moſes? and therein take notice, how he obeying divine inſtinct and direction, having embraced that noble Purpoſe of reſcuing his Countrymen from the Egyptian Bondage, of ſettling them in a method of happy Policy, and in bringing them into the promiſed Land of their enjoyment, did behave himſelf in the execution thereof; with how indefatigable induſtry he ſolicited their cauſe with a fickle, and deceitful, ſtupid, and hard-hearted King; enduring frequent diſappointments and repulſes, together with furious ſtorms of anger, and moſt terrible menaces from him: how having there ſurmounted all obſtacles, and effectually enlarged the People from their reſtraint in Egypt, he led them on foot through a valley, encompaſſed with mountains of Sea; and after that, undertook a tedious march (a march of 40 Years) through a wild, barren, and dry ſolitude, (where no water was, but ſuch as iſſued from the ſtony bowels of a rock; no food or means of ſubſiſtence, but ſuch as was ſupplyed by the miraculous purveyance of Heaven) in the mean while reſiſting the continual invaſions of open enemies, in great numbers with armed violence ſtriving to obſtruct his paſſage, and defeat his purpoſe; having alſo (which was more) his Patience conſtantly exerciſed in ſupporting the froward perverſeneſs of a moſt incredulous, and intractable People, which took all occaſions of complaint and mutiny againſt him; in conteſting with the factious rivality of envious Nobles, who repined at his ſucceſſes, and maligned his authority among them; in bearing the indiſcreet and untoward prevarications of his own moſt intimate friends and neareſt relations, complying with the wicked humours and deſires of the People; in ſuſtaining many other Perplexities and Croſſes; all which notwithſtanding he with inſuperable reſolution happily atchieved his glorious undertaking; and will not this example, attentively regarded, beyond the power of any other means or method, explain to us the way of induſtry, courage and perſeverance in good and worthy, though high and difficult enterprizes?

One inſtance more, and that of all moſt pertinent to our occaſion, Would you be inſtructed, how faithfully to diſcharge the miniſterial, or any other office? With a ſtedfaſt attention then behold the excellent Pattern of St. Paul; conſider how in all his deſigns he zealouſly and ſingly aimed at the honour and ſervice of God, neglecting his own ſafety, quiet, credit, and all worldly accommodations for the advancement of them. How affectionately he tendred the good and welfare of thoſe, the care of whoſe ſpiritual condition was commended to him, uſing all his ſkill, care and ſtrength in promoting their edification; declaring himſelf for their good to be content, not onely for a time to be abſent from the Lord, being deprived of that happineſs which he otherwiſe impatiently groaned for, and was fully aſſured of; but deſirous, as it ſeems, to be ſecluded for ever from his bliſsful preſence by a dreadful Anathema, for their ſake. How prudently, meekly and humbly he demeaned himſelf toward them; becoming all things to all men, forming himſelf into all allowable ſhapes and colours; undergoing all ſorts of cenſure and imputations (of a deſpicable, an ignorant, a fooliſh Perſon) tempering his ſpeech and deportment to their capacities and needs, bearing their miſcarriages, and complying with their weakneſſes; parting freely with his own juſt liberty, pleaſure and ſatisfaction, for their ſpiritual advantage. How generouſly he deſpiſed his own profit and eaſe, refuſing that ſupply he might with all reaſon and equity have required from them; chuſing to maintain himſelf with the labour of his own hands, and the ſweat of his brows, that he might render the Goſpel no-wiſe burdenſome, or offenſive to them. How vigilantly and couragiouſly he withſtood the miſchievous endeavours of falſe Brethren, and treacherous Seducers; earneſtly contending for the Churches peace and quiet againſt factious ſpirits, and for the ſubſtantial truths of the Goſpel againſt the pernicious devices of Hereticks and falſe Teachers. How patiently he ſuſtained all manner of Pains, Griefs, Travels, Wants, Loſſes, Hazards, Diſtreſſes, Diſappointments, Affronts and Reproaches for the Honour of God, the benefit of his ſpiritual Children, the diſcharge of his Duty, and ſatisfaction of his Conſcience: Theſe things, I ſay, regard, and then tell me, if he might not reaſonably inculcate this admonition, Imitate me; and if his example be not of rare uſe to inſtruct us, how faithfully we ſhould in our reſpective charges and employments demean our ſelves. I might in like manner inſtance how excellent a rule of Devotion the practice of the Royal Prophet may be unto us; how Elias his practice might teach us to be zealous Champions for truth and righteouſneſs; how they who would be good Judges, or honeſt Patriots may receive direction from the carriage of Samuel, Daniel and Nehemiah. But I proceed to ſay that farther, Ὑπομονῆς οὖν διδάσκαλος ἄριστος ὁ τοῦ μακαρίου Ἰὼβ βίος ἀνεξικακίας ὁ τοῦ Μωϋσέως, πραότητος ὁ τοῦ Δαβίδ, &c. Chryſ. T. V. . 655.

II. Good Examples do not only inform; but they perſwade and incline our reaſon to good practice, commending it to us by plauſible authority: a way of reaſoning the moſt plain, eaſie and ſuitable to all mens capacities; leſs ſubject to errour and doubt, than any other in particular caſes; whereby as it is always more eaſie to know what is good and fit, ſo commonly it is moſt ſafe: there being few who can ſo well diſcern what is good, as they may reſt in the judgments of others. For that wiſe and vertuous Perſons do any thing, is a very probable argument, that we are obliged, and concerned to do the like; ſeeing ſuch Perſons may in all their actions be ſuppoſed to have an unbiaſſed regard to the rules of truth and juſtice. He therefore who can ſay, that Abraham, or David, or St. Paul, did ſo in ſuch a caſe, ſuppoſeth that he hath no ſmall reaſon to do the like; it is accounted pardonable, yea almoſt commendable, to err with ſuch Perſons; becauſe it is done with good appearance of reaſon, ſeeing ſuch Perſons were themſelves unlikely to err: Will you (ſaith Cicero) commemorate to me Scipio's, and Cato's, and Lælius's, and ſay they did the ſame thing; though the thing diſpleaſes me, yet I cannot withſtand the authority of ſuch men: Their authority is ſo great, that it can cover even the ſuſpicion of a fault. 'Tis obvious in temporal concernments, how great a ſtroak this way of diſcourſe hath; how boldly men adventure their deareſt intereſts in following ſuch, whom they probably deem honeſt, and able to guide them; For Inſtance, in travelling, if one being ignorant or doubtful of his way happen to meet a Perſon, whom he conceives able, and no-wiſe concerned, or diſpoſed to miſlead him, Africanos mihi, & Catones, & Lelios commemorabis, & eos feciſſe idem dices, quamvis res mihi non placeat, tamen contra hominum authoritatem probare non potuero. Magna eſt hominum authoritas, & etiam tanta, ut delicti ſuſpicionem tegere poſſit. Cic. in Verr. 3.

him, he without ſcruple follows him, and confidently relies on his direction: In like manner, all good men in the way of vertuous practice tending directly toward happineſs (our common journies end;) it being their deſign, their intereſt, and their endeavour not to miſtake the way, not to defect from the right and neareſt courſe thereto, men are apt to think it reaſonable, and ſafe to accompany, in their Progreſs, or to preſs after them in their ſteps: and ſurely, next to a clear, and certain rule, there is not any more rational warrant for Practice, and conſequently no better inducement thereto, than ſuch good Precedents. Farther,

III. Examples do incite our Paſſions, and impel them to the performance of duty. They raiſe hope, they enflame courage, they provoke emulation, they urge upon modeſty, they awaken curioſity, they affect fancy; they ſet in motion all the ſprings of Activity. It may not be amiſs to ſhew how, particularly,

1. They raiſe hope, by diſcovering to us and aſſuredly proving the feaſibleneſs of matters propounded, or the poſſibility of ſucceſs in undertaking good deſigns, and that by the beſt and moſt convincing of arguments, experience. Nothing ſo depreſſeth hope, and advanceth deſpondency as an apprehenſion of impoſſibility, or which is equivalent thereto, an extream difficulty (appearing to ſurmount our preſent forces) in the buſineſs to be attempted: of ſuch a conceit deſperation ſeemeth a reaſonable conſequence. For τῶν ἀδυνάτων ἐφίεσθαι μανικὸν, 'tis a madneſs to aim at impoſſibilities; and ſuch conſidering the great infirmity of humane nature, its ſtrong propenſions to evil, and averſeneſs from good, together with the manifold impediments, and allurements objecting themſelves in the way of good practice, all duties as barely repreſented in Precepts, and preſſed by rational inducements might ſeem to be, if good example did not clearly demonſtrate them to be poſſible, yea ſometimes facile; even thoſe, which upon a ſuperficial view do ſeem moſt difficult, and inſuperable by our weak endeavour. The Stoical Doctrine, which deſcribed a fine and ſtately Portraicture of vertue; and inculcated very ſtrict rules (a cloſe following of God and nature, a perfect victory over ſelf, the ſubduing all Paſſions and over-ruling all corporeal Appetites; an entire freedom, compoſure and tranquillity of Mind; a total indifferency in reſpect of Fortune, and all external events; with the like duties, rarely practiſed, although upon all accounts acknowledged conformable to reaſon) was therefore by moſt rejected as uſeleſs, or exploded as ridiculous, as being preſumed to propound matters purely imaginary and unpracticable, yet he that had ſeen this doctrine in great meaſure exemplified by Zeno, the firſt Maſter of it, would have had no ſuch reaſon to contemn it, nor to deſpair of practiſing according to it, if he would ſeriouſly endeavour it: exemplified, I ſay, by Zeno, whereof we have an illuſtrious teſtimony from a ſolemn decree of the Athenians: ἐπειδὴ Ζήνων Μνασέου, &c. Laert. in Zen. Whereas Zeno the Son of Mnaſeas the Cittican, having many years profeſſed Philoſophy in this City, and as well in all other things hath demeaned himſelf like a good man, as particularly exhorting the young men, who went to be inſtructed by him, hath provoked them to vertue, and ſobriety; withal exhibiting his own life a pattern of the beſt things anſwerable to the diſcourſes he uſed to make; it is therefore auſpiciouſly decreed by the people, that Zeno the Son of Mnaſeas be ſolemnly praiſed and crowned (according to the uſage) with a golden crown; and that a monument be erected for him at the publick charge in the Ceramicum (the Place where thoſe were interr'd, who had bravely expoſed their lives for publick defence.) This was indeed a noble atteſtation, and a comely reſpect exhibited to a vertuous Converſation:

Chryſ. Tom. 1. p. 69.

making in ſome meaſure a ſatisfaction for the heinous affront done thereto, when inſtead of honouring it with a crown, they rewarded it with a cup of Poiſon, given to the excellent Socrates. Suitably to which teſtimony Seneca ſaith of Cleanthes, that his vertuous Practice depended more upon the obſervation of Zeno's life, than the information of his doctrine. Zenonem Cleanthes non expreſſiſſet ſi eum tantummodo audiſſet; vita ejus interfuit, ſecreta perſpexit, obſervavit illum an ex formula ſua viveret. Cleanthes (ſaith he) had not ſo nearly reſembled Zeno, if he had onely attended to his diſcourſes: he was preſent to his life, he took notice of his private carriage, he obſerved whether his practice did ſuit to his doctrine. So that Stoiciſm it ſelf which ſpeaketh ſuch Prodigies, was it ſeems founded not onely upon big words, the iſſues of a ſpeculative fancy, but more upon the good Practice of its firſt Maſter and Inſtitutour. And indeed he that would effectually perſwade the undertaking of any enterpriſe, muſt either ſuppoſe it, or prove it effectible; and the moſt eaſie, the moſt evident way of proving it is by Example. Men (ſaith Pliny Junior well) are better inſtructed by examples, which have in them chiefly this advantage, that they do prove the things may be done which they enjoyn. And, Humane infirmity ſaith (Salvian to the ſame purpoſe) requires the aſſiſtance of example, that it may more eaſily now perform that, which it knows others to have before done; all poſterity being admoniſhed by hearing that what hath once been done, may be done again: And, The Example (ſaith St. Bernard) of a work done is a lively and efficacious Oration, eaſily perſwading what we intend, by proving that feaſible, which we ſtrive to perſwade unto. Upon which ſcore we therefore are exceedingly obliged to thoſe holy men who by their Practice have aſſured us, that the higheſt duties exacted of us by our religion (the mortification of unreaſonable deſires, the ſuppreſſion of irregular paſſions; the loving and bleſſing our Enemies; the renouncing worldly vanities and pleaſures, the rejoycing in afflictions, the voluntary abdication of our eſtates in ſome caſes, yea, expoſing life it ſelf to inevitable hazard and loſs) are not chimerical Propoſitions of impoſſible Performances; but duties (if we ſhall ſeriouſly and vigorouſly apply our endeavours to them, and ſuffer our hopes to be elevated by their example) really practicable: Piety abſtractedly view'd in Precept may ſeem an aiery Project, a Name, a Notion; but it being ſeen in Example will prove a matter ſubſtantial, true and feaſible. A direct and pure ſpeculation thereof may dazle our ſight, and daſh our hopes; but as being reflected from Perſons practiſing it we may bear its luſtre, and hope to attain it.

Melius homines exemplis docentur, quæ imprimis hoc boni habent, quæ approbant, quæ præcipiunt fieri poſſe. Plin. Jun. Paneg.

Adjuvari ſe exemplis exoptat humana infirmitas, quo facilius ipſa nunc faciat, quæ alios feciſſe ante cognoſcat; dum admonetur auditu ætas omnis fieri poſſe, quod factum eſt. Salv. ad Eccl. Cath.

Sermo quidam vivus, & efficax exemplum operis eſt, facile perſuadens quod intendimus, dum factibile probat eſſe, quod ſuademus. Bern. de Reſur. Serm. 3.

Ex aliorum factis fieri poſſe credunt, quod forte cum putant fieri non poſſe pigreſcunt. Cyp. Ep. l. 2. 2.

2. Examples do enflame courage. So the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſignifieth, when to this purpoſe he intimateth that he mentioned and ſetteth before them the examples of the Patriarchs; that he thereby might excite their courage, and cauſe them reſolutely to undertake that obedience, and patiently to undergo thoſe afflictions, which they performed and ſuſtained; that (ſaith he) ye be not ſlothful, but followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promiſes. For that heat, and active Spirit, which in ſome degree reſideth in all mens breaſts, is by example kindled, as one flame is kindled by the contact, or approach of another. How many Perſons timorous, and averſe from dangerous undertakings, have notwithſtanding become very bold and adventrous in war by the diſcipline and influence of an exemplary valour? 'Tis Plutarch's obſervation concerning Cæſar's Souldiers, that they who in ſervice under other Commanders did not exceed the ordinary rate of courage, nor excel their fellows, did yet when he lead them become irreſiſtibly valiant, being animated and inſpired by his unparallel'd Gallantry; and who is there indeed ſo incurably heartleſs? ſo deſperately ſluggiſh or ſtupid, whom the ſight of a valiant Leader, marching before into the mouth of danger, will not infuſe fire and vigour into, and inſtigate forward into a participation of brave adventure? So example doth by a kind of contagion inſinuate courage, or inveagle men thereinto; beſide that it is a kind of daring, and proclaimeth him a Daſtard that will not imitate it; which imputation the loweſt courage of Man can hardly digeſt; and will therefore by doing ſomewhat anſwerable ſtrive to decline it.

Heb. 6. 12.

———Fortis in armis
Cæſareis Labienus erat.

3. Again, Examples provoke emulation; which is another ſtrong Principle of activity; moving us earneſtly to deſire, (and thence eagerly to purſue) whatever good, privilege, or advantage we ſee another to enjoy. To obſerve another of the ſame nature and capacities with our ſelves to have ſhone with an illuſtrious vertue, to be conſecrated to Poſterity by a laſting fame, and to be crowned with glorious rewards above; what other reflections of thought can it produce in us, than ſuch as theſe? ſhall he a man, like my ſelf, endued with the ſame faculties, appetites and paſſions; ſubject to the ſame infirmities, temptations, needs, cares and encumbrances of life, ſhall he by noble diſpoſitions of Soul, and worthy Performances render himſelf highly conſiderable; while I by ſordid qualities, and unworthy Practices debaſe, and render my ſelf deſpicable? ſhall he leave behind him monuments of eternal Praiſe, while I do nothing worthy of regard or memory? ſhall he enjoy the favour of the great God, and the comforts of a bleſſed Eternity, but I be wholly deprived of that joyful Eſtate, and plunged into endleſs ſorrows, and deſperate miſery? ſhall a Joſeph ſtoutly reſiſt and overcome the ſtrongeſt Temptations, and I be eaſily baffled by the leaſt ſolicitation of Vice? ſhall a ſtripling David gloriouſly triumph over Giants, while I baſely am vanquiſhed by Dwarfs? ſhall Job be ſtripped of all his Goods with contentedneſs, and endure the moſt grievous Pains with Patience, while I am diſcompoſed for any ſmall loſs, and diſmayed by the leaſt croſs accident? ſhall Abraham here by his faith, and obedience attain to be called the Friend of God, and reſt for ever in his glorious and happy Boſom, while I deſervedly am refuſed the honour and comfort of that Heavenly communion here, and ſhall hereafter be caſt out from that bliſsful Preſence into the diſmal manſions of wretched folly and wickedneſs? Did Paul, once a ſtubborn Jew, a blind Phariſee, a grievous Blaſphemer, a bloody Perſecutour, by a ſeaſonable Converſion repair his State, approve himſelf to God by an eminent zeal for his glory, undergo reſtleſs Pains, run deſperate hazards, and endure all ſorts of diſtreſſes for the propagation of Gods Heavenly truth, obtaining thence a never-fading crown of Glory in Heaven, and a perpetual renown upon Earth; and ſhall I then, who from my youth have been educated in the moſt true and holy religion, who have by ſolemn engagements devoted my ſelf thereto; who may without any trouble, or danger profeſs and practice according to that holy diſcipline, proceed in wicked courſes, provoking God's wrath, and attracting his vengeance upon me? No: ſince the capacities are alike, ſince the means are common, ſince the rewards of Piety are promiſcuouſly expoſed and offered unto all, why ſhould I by deplorable perverſeneſs or negligence ſuffer my ſelf to be deprived of it and its benefits? Why ſhall not I become Chryſ. T. 1. p. 77. T. 6. p. 148.

T. 5. Orat. 101.
Φύσει γὰρ φιλόκαλον οὖσαν τὴν φύσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων εἰδὼς ὁ Κύριος, &c.

as good, as commendable, as happy as any other man? Theſe are the conceits and voices of natural emulation, that mighty Paſſion (ſo often and by many effects it diſcovereth it ſelf to be) implanted in our original conſtitution to be as a ſpur and incentive, ſtimulating and enflaming us unto the ready undertaking, and vigorous purſuit of good purpoſes; the which perhaps hath produced more noble effects, than any other Paſſion, or Inclination of our Souls: for all manner of excellency in knowledge, in prowеſs, in vertue how often doth it iſſue from this ſource? Doth not the admired fame of men notable for Learning (recorded in Story, or ſubject to preſent obſervation) and a jealouſie of being ſurpaſſed in accompliſhments competent to humane nature, ſharpen the appetite, and rouſe the induſtry of moſt Scholars, whom neither the love of knowledge, nor its apparent uſefulneſs could any-wiſe perſwade to bear ſo much toil in acquiſt thereof? Do not all Hiſtories acquaint us, that the moſt gallant enterprizes and exploits of famous Warriours have derived their beginning from an emulation of the glory purchaſed by their Anceſtours? (wiſdom and valour have thus eſpecially been propagated; one Man's ſignal excellency being Parent to the like in many other.) And that this Paſſion may in like manner be ſubſervient to the Production of Vertue and Piety, is plain enough from parity of reaſon, and from experience; and we have (for farther argument thereof) the Apoſtles Practice uſing it to this purpoſe: St. Paul employed it as an engine for the converſion of his dear countreymen; whom by raiſing in them a jealouſie of being out-ſtripped (in God's favour, and its effects) by the Gentiles, he endeavoureth to provoke to the embracing of the Chriſtian Faith; I ſpeak to you Gentiles (ſaith he) in as much as I am the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnifie my Office, εἴ πως παραζηλώσω μου τὴν σάρκα, if by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my fleſh, and might ſave ſome of them. And St. James inſtigateth us unto fervency of Prayer, by minding us, that Elias was a man of like paſſions with our ſelves; yet was able by his Prayers to ſhut and open Heaven, to procure barrenneſs and fertility to the Earth. And the Apoſtle to the Hebrews chargeth us, to conſider one another, εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης, ϗ καλῶν ἔργων, ſo as to provoke one another (or by mutual emulation to ſharpen one another) to charity and good works.

—Tentanda via eſt, qua me quoque poſſim Tollere humo.—

Rom. 11. 14.
10. 19.

Jam. 5. 17.

4. Examples do work upon modeſty, that preſerver and guardian of vertue, as Cicero calls it. For every good action of another doth upbraid, reproach and ſhame him, who acteth not conformably thereto. Can we without a trembling heart, and bluſhing forehead view the Practices of the ancient Saints, if ours be altogether unlike them? If they to pleaſe God, and ſecure their ſalvation did undergo ſuch prodigious Pains in aſſiduous devotions, abſtinencies, watchings, and we contrary-wiſe are extreamly ſluggiſh, cold and negligent in the Performance of our ordinary duties; if they willingly renounced all ſenſual complacencies, and we either cheriſh our ſelves in a ſoft delicacy of life, or wallow in a profane diſſolution of manners; if they to free themſelves from diſtracting cares, voluntarily diſburthened themſelves of all needleſs encumbrances, and we are wholly buſie in heaping up wealth, and driving on worldly intereſts; if they gladly embraced and endured the ſharpeſt afflictions, and we are terrified by the thought, are overwhelmed by the ſenſe of the leaſt diſappointment, or diſtaſtful occurrence; how can we without extream regret of mind, and confuſion of face conſider their Practice, or compare it with ours? It is a profligate impudence of him that can daily hear, and read read the Stories of their doings, without being deeply ſenſible, and aſhamed at the diſſonance appearing between their courſe of life, and his.

Cuſtos omnium virtutum, dedecus fugiens, laudemque maxime conſequens vereсundia eſt. Cic. Part. Rhet.

5. Example awakens that curioſity, which is natural to us, and of no mean efficacy upon our actions. For whatever we ſee done, we are apt to be inquiſitive concerning it; why and to what purpoſe it is done, what the grounds are, and what the fruits of the Performance; eſpecially if the matter ſeem conſiderably important, and the action proceedeth from a Perſon deſerving reſpect; whereof having paſſed ſome competent judgment, we are by the ſame inſtinct of curioſity farther tranſported into a deſire of diſcerning by our trial and experience whether the event correſpondeth to our expectation; ſo are we eaſily induced to imitate the actions of others. By which means as vice ordinarily is conceived and propagated, (men by a prepoſterous and perverſe curioſity being inveagled to try what they ſee others affect or enjoy) ſo may vertue alſo by the ſame means be engendred and nouriſhed; the general ways of producing and maintaining thoſe contrary habits being alike. As therefore, 'tis a great blemiſh and reproach to humane nature, that,

——— Faciles imitandis Juven.
Turpibus & pravis omnes ſumus———

we (as the Satyriſt truly obſerveth of us) have a great proclivity to follow naughty examples; ſo there is from hence ſome amends, that we have alſo ſome inclination to imitate good and worthy Precedents; the which is ſomewhat more ſtrong and vigorous, becauſe countenanced and encouraged by the approbation of reaſon, our moſt noble faculty.

6. Examples alſo do pleaſe the mind and fancy in contemplation of them, thence drawing a conſiderable influence upon practice. No kind of ſtudious entertainment doth ſo generally delight as Hiſtory; or the tradition of remarkable examples: even thoſe who have an abhorrency or indiſpoſition toward other ſtudies (who have no genius to apprehend the more intricate ſubtilties of Science; nor the patience to purſue rational conſequences) are yet often much taken with hiſtorical narrations; theſe ſtriking them with a delectable variety of accidents, with circumſtantial deſcriptions, and ſenſible repreſentations of objects, do greatly affect and delight their fancies; eſpecially the relation of notable adventures, and rare accidents, is wont to be attended with great pleaſure and ſatisfaction. And ſuch are thoſe, which preſent to us the lives and examples of holy men, abounding with wonders of providence and grace: no attempts ſo gallant, no exploits ſo illuſtrious as thoſe, which have been atchieved by the faith and patience, by the prudence and courage of the ancient Saints; they do far ſurpaſs the moſt famous atchievements of Pagan Heroes. It was (I dare ſay) more wonderful, that Abraham with his retinue of Houſhold Servants ſhould vanquiſh four potent and victorious Kings; and that Gideon with three hundred unarmed men ſhould diſcomfit a vaſtly numerous hoſt; than that Alexander with a well appointed army of ſtout and expert Souldiers ſhould overturn the Perſian Empire. The Siege of Jericho is ſo far more remarkable, than thoſe moſt famous ones of Numantia, and Saguntus, as it is more ſtrange, that the blaſt of Trumpets, and the noiſe of People ſhouting ſhould demoliſh Walls, than the ſhaking them with Rams, or diſcharging maſſy Stones againſt them. And he that carefully will compare the deeds of Sampſon and Hercules, ſhall find, that one true exploit performed by the former doth much in force and ſtrangeneſs ſurmount the twelve fabulous labours of the other:

No triumphs indeed are comparable to thoſe of Piety; no trophies are ſo magnificent and durable, as thoſe which victorious faith erecteth: that hiſtory therefore which reports the res geſtæ, the acts and ſufferings of moſt pious men, muſt in reaſon be eſteemed not only the moſt uſeful, but alſo the moſt pleaſant; yeilding the ſweeteſt entertainment to well diſpoſed minds; wherein we ſee vertue expreſſed, not in bare idea only, but in actual life, ſtrength, motion; in all its beauty, and ornaments: than which no ſpectacle can be more ſtately; no object more grateful can be preſented to the diſcerning eye of reaſon.

7. We may farthermore conſider, that God hath provided and recommended to us one example, as a perfect ſtandard of good practice, The example of our Lord; the which declareth the uſe and efficacy of good example, as one principal inſtrument of Piety. That indeed is the moſt univerſal, abſolute and aſſured Pattern; yet doth it not ſuperſede the uſe of other examples: Not onely the valour and conduct of the General, but thoſe of inferiour officers, yea, the reſolution of common Souldiers do ſerve to animate their fellows: The Stars have their ſeaſon to guide us, as well as the Sun; eſpecially when our eyes are ſo weak, as hardly to beer the day. Even, conſidering our infirmity, inferiour examples, by their imperfection ſometime have a peculiar advantage. Our Lords moſt imitable practice did proceed from an immenſe vertue of divine grace, which we cannot arrive to; it in it ſelf is ſo perfect and high, that we may not ever reach it; looking upon it may therefore ſometimes dazle, and diſcourage our weakneſs; but other good men had aſſiſtances in meaſure, ſuch as we may hope to approach unto; they were ſubject to the difficulties, which we feel; they were expoſed to the perils of falling, which we fear: we may therefore hope to march on in a reaſonable diſtance after them; we may, by help of the ſame grace, come near in tranſcribing their leſs exact Copy.

To conclude, ſince upon ſo many accounts we are obliged to follow good examples; ſince they are of ſo great uſe toward our proceeding in the way to happineſs; thence they conduce to the clear inſtruction of our underſtanding, to the forcibly inclining our reaſon, to the vehement excitement of our Paſſions, to the delightfully affecting our imagination in ſubſerviency to good practice; let us make that due and profitable uſe of them, which we ſhould and may do. Let us with diligent attention peruſing the ſacred hiſtory meditate upon the lives of holy men therein propounded as Patterns of a perſevering Faith in God, and conſcionable obedience to his commandments. Let the light of their exemplary practice in all kind of piety and vertue continually ſhine upon our ſouls, to direct our minds, to inflame our affections, to quicken our reſolutions, to detect the errours, and correct the faults of our lives, that we imitating their vertuous and pious converſation, may partake of thoſe comfortable rewards; of that joy, and bliſs, whereof they reſt poſſeſſed: The which God Almighty, and our Bleſſed Saviour the authour and finiſher of our Faith, by his gracious aid and bleſſing grant unto us; to whom be all glory and praiſe for ever and ever. Amen.

SERM.

SERMON III.

Abiding in Chriſt to be demonſtrated by walking as Chriſt did.

1 JOHN 2. 6.

He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk as he walked.

TO abide in Chriſt, to be in Chriſt, to put on Chriſt; and reciprocally Chriſt's being in us, living, dwelling, being formed in us; and the like expreſſions occurring in H. Scripture, do not denote any Phyſical inherence, or Eſſential conjunction between Chriſt and us (ſuch as thoſe who affect unintelligible miſteries rather than plain ſenſe, would conceit) but onely that mutual relation accruing from our profeſſion of being Chriſt's Diſciples, our being inſerted into his body the Church, being governed by his Laws, partaking of his Grace, with all the privileges of the Goſpel, relying upon his promiſes, and hoping for eternal ſalvation from him. By vertue of which relation we may be ſaid in a myſtical, or moral manner to be united to him, deriving ſtrength and ſuſtenance from him, as the members from the head, the branches from the tree, the other parts of the building from the foundation; by which ſimilitudes this myſterious union is uſually expreſſed in Scripture; in effect briefly, to be in, or to abide in Chriſt implyeth no more, but our being truly, in faith and practice, Chriſtians; ſo that the meaning of St. John's words ſeemeth plainly and ſimply to be this; Whoever pretends to be a Chriſtian (that is, to believe the Doctrine, and embrace the Diſcipline of Chriſt) ought to walk (that is, is obliged to order the whole courſe of his life and actions) as Chriſt walked (that is, as Chriſt did live and converſe in the World :) Or, it is the duty of every one, profeſſing Chriſtianity, to conform his life to the pattern of Chriſt's life, to follow his example, to imitate his practice. This is the importance of the words, this the ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe.

Rom. 8. 10.
Gal. 2. 20.
Eph. 3. 17.
Gal. 4. 19.

I. For illuſtration and confirmation of which point, we may obſerve, that the H. Apoſtles do, upon all occaſions, aſſume this ſuppoſition, when they would perſwade their Diſciples to the practice of any vertue, or performance of any duty; enforcing their exhortations, by repreſenting the practice of Chriſt, as an unqueſtionable ground of obligation, and an effectual inducement thereto. Hence they incite them to holineſs : But (ſaith St. Peter) as he that hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation; to Charity : And walk in love (ſaith Saint Paul) as Chriſt alſo loved us: to Patience; Becauſe (ſaith St. Peter) Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps. And Let us

1 Pet. 1. 15.
Eph. 5. 2.
1 Pet. 2. 21.

Heb. 12. 1. (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) run with patience the race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus the authour and finiſher of our faith, who for the joy that Phil. 2. 2. was ſet before him endured the croſs : to humility ; Let (ſaith St. Paul) the ſame mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus, who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God, but made himſelf of no reputation : to charitable compliance, and inoffenſive demeanour toward o- 1 Cor. 10. 33. 11. 1. thers, intimated by St. Paul, when he ſays, Even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking my own profit, but the profit of many, that they might be ſa- Rom. 15. 2. ved ; Be ye followers of me, as I am of Chriſt ; and again, Let every one pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification ; for even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf. Thus do the Apoſtles take all occaſion, from the like practice of Chriſt, to perſwade the performance of duty ; and the ſtrength of their argument lyeth upon the evidence of this ſuppoſition, that all profeſſing themſelves Chriſtians are eſpecially obliged to imitate Chriſt's example. And their authority may be backed and inforced by ſeveral reaſons.

II. Doing ſo hath a reaſonableneſs and decency grounded upon our relations to Chriſt : it is fit and comely that the manners of the Diſciple ſhould be regulated by thoſe of his Maſter ; that the Servant ſhould not, in his garb and demeanour, diſſent or vary from his Lord; that the Subject ſhould conform his humour to the faſhion of his Prince ; eſpecially that we ſhould thus comply and conform to ſuch a Maſter, ſuch a Lord, ſuch a Prince, whom (upon higheſt conſiderations) by a moſt voluntary choice, and in a moſt ſolemn manner we have abſolutely devoted our ſelves unto : This Joh. 13. 13. reaſon our Lord doth himſelf urge : Ye (ſaith he to his Diſciples) call me Maſter, and Lord, and ye ſay well, for ſo I am ; if I then your Lord and Maſter have waſhed your feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one anothers feet.

III. Following Chriſt's example is requiſite to demonſtrate the ſincerity of our faith, love and reverence to him. It is the moſt natural way of teſtifying affection and reſpect to imitate the manners of thoſe perſons, who are the objects of thoſe acts and diſpoſitions ; to eſteem what they approve, to delight in what they affect, and conſequently (ſince actions do proceed from affections) to do as they do. Contrary actions are plain arguments of contrary judgments, inclinations and affections : Who can imagine we ſincerely believe in Chriſt, or heartily love him, or truly honour him, that ſeeth us to loath what he liked, or affect what he deteſted; to contemn what he prized, or value what he deſpiſed ; to neglect what he purſued, or embrace what he avoided ? but if our lives reſemble his, any Man will thence collect our reſpect and affection to him : this argu- Joh. 13. 35. ment our Saviour doth alſo intimate : By this (ſaith he) ſhall all men know ye are my diſciples, if ye love one another ; that is, it will be an evident ſign and ſtrong argument, that ye really do believe in, love and honour me, if ye imitate me in my charity.

IV. By pretending to be Chriſtians we acknowledge the tranſcendent goodneſs, worth and excellency of our Saviour ; that he was incomparably better, and wiſer than any perſon ever was, or could be; that he alwayes acted with the higheſt reaſon, out of the moſt excellent diſpoſition of mind, in order to the beſt purpoſes ; and that his practice therefore reaſonably ſhould be the rule and pattern of ours. For the beſt and exacteſt in every kind is the meaſure of the reſt. All that would obtain exquiſite skill in any Art, or Faculty, think beſt to imitate the works of the beſt Maſters therein ; A Painter to draw after the pieces of Zeuxis or Apelles (of Raphael, or Titian) an Oratour to ſpeak in the ſtyle of Cicero, or Demoſthenes ; a Souldier to emulate the military Atchievements of Hannibal, or Cæſar : in like manner, reaſon requireth, if we would live well and happily, that we ſhould endeavour to conform our practice to that of our Saviour, the moſt perfect mirrour of all vertue and goodneſs.

V. The practice of our Saviour did throughly agree with his Doctrine and Law; he requireth nothing of us which he did not eminently perform himſelf. He fulfilled in deed as well as taught in word all righteouſneſs. He was not ignava opera, Philoſopha ſententia; like thoſe Maſters of Philoſophy, ſo frequently taxed and derided by the Satyriſts; who, by a horrid garb, ſupercilious looks, and loud declamations, would ſeem to diſcountenance thoſe vices which themſelves practiſed; nor like thoſe hypocritical Lawyers in the Goſpel, who laded other men with heavy burthens, ſuch as themſelves would not touch with one of their fingers: No, he impoſed nothing on us, which he did not firſt bear upon his own ſhoulders: the ſtrictneſs of his life did, in all reſpects, correſpond with the ſeverity of his Precepts; or rather did indeed much exceed them. They therefore who pretend to believe his doctrine, and avow themſelves bound to obſerve his Law, are conſequently engaged to follow his practice, in which his Doctrine and Law are ſignally exemplified.

Οὐδὲν ψυχρότερον τοῦ κατὰ λόγους φιλοσοφοῦντος. Chryſ.

Ὧν τὸ βῆμα τοῦ τρόπου κατήγορον. Naz.

Luc. 11. 46.

VI. It being the deſign of divine goodneſs, in ſending our Saviour, to render us good and happy, to deliver us from ſin and miſery, to inſtruct us in the knowledge, and excite us to the practice of all vertue; and thereby to qualify us for the enjoyment of a bleſſed immortality; effecting all this in a way agreeable to our natural condition and capacity; there could not be deviſed any more powerful means, or more convenient method of accompliſhing thoſe excellent purpoſes, than by propounding ſuch an example, and obliging us to comply therewith: the which may appear, 1. by conſidering in general the advantage and efficacy that good example is apt to have upon practice; 2. by weighing the peculiar excellency of our Saviour's example above all others, in order to thoſe ends; and 3. by ſurveying the particular inſtances of imitable goodneſs repreſented in the life of our Saviour.

1. Good example is naturally an effectual inſtrument of good practice; for that it doth moſt compendiouſly, pleaſantly and eaſily inſtruct; repreſenting things to be done at one view, in a full body, cloathed with all their modes and circumſtances; it recommends them to us, by the moſt plain and plauſible way of reaſoning, (and withal the moſt ſure and ſafe) the authority of wiſe and good men; it encourageth, by evidently declaring the practicableneſs of rules preſcrib'd; it kindleth and rowſeth mens courage, by a kind of contagion, as one flame doth kindle another; it raiſeth a worthy emulation of doing laudable things, which we ſee done; or of obtaining a ſhare in the commendations and rewards of vertue. It urgeth modeſty, breeding ſhame and regret in them who act contrarily thereto; it awakeneth curioſity, thereby producing a deſire to make trial of what it propoſeth; it affecteth and pleaſeth the fancy, thereby inſinuating an approbation, admiration and liking of the good things, which it repreſenteth; briefly, it exciteth and engageth all our paſſions, ſetting on work all thoſe powerful ſprings of activity, it conſequently is, in its own nature, an efficacious mean of good practice. This we may, in general, ſay of all good examples; but,

2. More eſpecially the example of Chriſt doth in efficacy and influence upon good practice, ſurpaſs all others; upon ſeveral accompts.

Firſt, In that it is a ſure and infallible rule; an entire and perfect rule of practice; deficient in no part, ſwerving in no circumſtance from truth and right, which priviledges are competent to no other example. The Practice of the beſt men is not always to be imitated, nor ever abſolutely as a certain ground of action; it is to be (ſo far as we have ability) conſidered, examined and compared to more certain rules; (the Divine Laws, and the Principles of right Reaſon) according to their agreement with which they are to be followed; they are indeed (before trial of the caſe) probable arguments of what is done by them being good and lawful; they do outweigh ſlender and obſcure reaſonings about the goodneſs of things; they may, when opportunity, leiſure, or ability of farther enquiry and judgment about things are wanting, ſerve to direct us; but they are not throughly ſure rules, or perfect meaſures of our duty. We ſhould beware leaſt we be ſeduced even by holy perſons; and therefore with circumſpection and caution ſhould peruſe their ſtory, and contemplate their demeanour; whereof thoſe which are explicitely commended, or allowed by the divine judgment, we may, being aſſured that we are in the ſame circumſtances, ſafely follow (taking them for monitories, encouragements and excitements to our duty) but thoſe that are directly condemned by the ſame ſentence, or apparently devious from God's Law, we as carefully ſhould avoid; ſuch as are of a doubtful and unaccountable nature we are to ſuſpend about, and not to ground upon; nor to argue from the fact to the rightfulneſs of them; the ſafeſt way being always (as we are able) to have recourſe to the ſimple, plain and perſpicuous precepts of God, and dictates of reaſon. For the beſt men have been always ſubject to errours and infirmities; the fountain of original corruption in them was never ſo dried up, or cloſely ſtopped, but that ſome impure ſtreams have bubbled forth; the fire of natural concupiſcence was never ſo utterly quenched, but that ſometimes it would blaze, or ſmoke out in bad actions; that inteſtine enemy (the fleſh) was never throughly ſubdued, nor the body of ſin quite ſlain and mortified in any other mortal man: Good men have ever had ſome foul ſpots, or deforming wrinkles appearing in the beauteous face of their converſation; they have had their inequalities and indiſpoſitions of humour; their ebbs of devotion; their fits of ſloth; their wanton freaks; their ſlips often, and ſometimes their falls; they have been ſubject to be deluded by miſtake, to be ſurprized by inadvertency, to be tranſported by paſſion, to be ſwayed by temper, to be biaſſed by intereſt, to be allured by temptation into falſe and unwarrantable proceedings; they might ſometime fail in the ſubſtance, oftner in the degree, in the manner, in the circumſtances of action; we find them often complaining of their proneneſs to do amiſs, bemoaning the wretched frailty of their ſtate; yea often repenting and bitterly mourning for their actual tranſgreſſions: There hardly is any Saint, recorded in Scripture, without ſome blemiſh in his actions; which ſhews our weakneſs, and ingageth us to be wary. They were indeed endowed with ſufficient competencies of divine light and graces ſutable to their private needs, or to the publick exigencies of their times, places, occaſions and affairs; but not with the perfection and extream degrees thereof, requiſite to preſerve them from all miſcarriage; ſo that we are not alwayes, or in all caſes, to conform our actions to their examples: We muſt not learn to equivocate of Abraham, nor to circumvent of Jacob, nor to be cholerick of Moſes, (ſo as in our exceſs of paſſion to break the Tables of the Divine Law) nor of Eli to be fondly affectionate, or indulgent to our relations, nor of David to utter uncharitable imprecations; nor to diſſemble of St. Peter; nor of St. Paul to revile Magi-

It was ill ſaid of Seneca: Catoni ebrietas objecta eſt, & facilius efficiet, quiſquis objecerit hoc crimen, honeſtum, quam turpem Catonem.

Magiſtrates: The uſe we are to make of many practices, of moſt eminently pious men, is not to be miſguided by them into wrong paths; not by them to authorize, or excuſe our preſumptuous miſdeeds; but to make us to admire, and to relye upon the Divine Mercy, which ſo graciouſly did overlook and pardon their offences; to provoke us to an imitation of their repentance; to render us watchful in ſhunning thoſe rocks, upon which perſons, ſo skilful in the conduct of their lives, have daſhed; to engage us to humility, by conſidering ſo manifeſt arguments of our frailty, and our being obnoxious to greater and more frequent miſcarriages.

But as to our Saviour's example, the caſe is quite different; for though he did Miracles as God, he commanded as Christ; he did many heroical things in diſcharge of his office, &c. in which things, we cannot, or may not imitate him; yet whatever in his life was in its own nature imitable by us, which did not exceed our natural powers, nor diſagree with our condition and quality; whatever he as Man, in a private capacity, as ſubject to the divine Law, with regard thereto performed, we may with all freedom, confidence and ſecurity imitate; nor can ſo doing incur any danger of errour, or guilt; for we cannot, without great folly and impiety, ſuſpect any fault, or imperfection in his moſt pure, righteous and innocent life: He was holy, harmleſs, undefiled, and ſeparated from ſinners: He was a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot; He was in all points tempted as we are, yet without ſin. He did no ſin, nor was any guile found in his mouth. God gave him of his Spirit not by meaſure: theſe are the voices and elogies of the Sacred Oracles concerning him. The heavenly extraction, even of his humanity, derived no original contagion from our polluted ſtock, and rendred him free from the common incentives of evil concupiſcence. The inſeparable preſence of the Divinity with him (for God was with him, as St. Peter expreſſed it) and the unreſtrained effuſion of the H. Spirit upon him did preſerve him from all defilements of infectious converſation in this World; a clear evidence of divine light always ſhining in his Soul, directed him infallibly in the paths of truth and righteouſneſs: No tempeſt of croſs accidents without, nor any eſtuations of internal paſſion could diſcompoſe the ſteady calm and ſerenity of his mind; no allurement of worldly pleaſure, nor temptation of profit could pervert his practice, or ſeduce his heart, being enflamed with moſt intenſe love of God, and entire charity to men: ſo that his example muſt needs be a perfect rule and ſure direction to us. Which conſideration cannot but yeild great encouragement and comfort in following him; freeing us from all anxious doubt, and ſuſpicion of miſtake in our ſpiritual progreſs; like the preſence of a ſure guide to the bewildred Traveller; like the appearance of a Star to the weather-beaten Mariner; like that miraculous Pillar of Fire, which ſafely conducted the wandring Iſraelites through the unknown and unfrequented Paſſages of a wild Deſart. But farther,

Heb. 7. 26.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
Heb. 4. 15.
1 Pet. 2. 22.
Joh. 3. 34.
Act. 10. 38.

Secondly, The peculiar excellency of our Lord's Example appears, in that he was, by the Divine Providence, to this very purpoſe deſigned, and ſent into the World, as well by his Practice as by his Doctrine, to be the guide and maſter of holy life, and obedience to all men; and did accordingly propound to himſelf this end of his actions, that he might be imitated by his diſciples. So he declareth himſelf, as to ſome conſiderable paſſages of his life, and thence, by reaſonable inference, we may ſuppoſe the ſame of the reſt, ſo far as they might be conducible to the ſame end; eſpecially, ſince of ſome performances, no other, or no ſo probable accompt

Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ αὐτὸς ἐνήστευσεν οὐκ αὐτὸς ταύτης δεόμενος, ἀλλ' ἡμᾶς παιδεύων. Chryſ. Tom. 2. p. 81.

accompt can be given, as that they were done for exemplarity: For why ſhould he faſt, who had no ſins to be repented of, no rebellious fleſh to be tamed, no intemperate deſires to be mortifi'd, no coldneſs of devotion to be enlivened thereby? And why did he offer himſelf to be Baptized, who had no original ſtain to be cleanſed of, no fault to be forgiven, no want of ſpecial grace to be conferr'd? Why, but by his exemplary fulfilling all righteouſneſs, to teach us ready obedience to all Divine Inſtitutions, and peaceable compliance with all laudable cuſtoms: So an ancient Writer wiſely deſcanteth upon thoſe Practices of our Saviour: He was (ſaith that Writer) Baptized, and faſted, not becauſe he had need of any cleanſing, or faſting, who in nature was pure and holy; but that he might atteſt to the truth of St. John, and might exhibit a pattern to us. What induc'd him to condeſcend to ſuch a mis-beſeeming employment to appearance, as the waſhing of his diſciples feet, he doth himſelf tell us: If I then (ſaith he) your Lord and Maſter have waſhed your feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one anothers feet; for I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done unto you. This was his profeſſed ſcope and drift, in that admirable deportment of his, to teach us humility, charity and condeſcenſion toward the meaneſt of our Brethren. What did thoſe exuberant inſtances of charity, Practiſed by him, import? this eſpecially, that we ſhould imitate them; hither he drives them; This (ſaith he) is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Why was he, in his diſpoſition, ſo meek and gentle, in his converſation ſo humble and lowly? to this purpoſe, that we might of him learn thoſe excellent qualities: Learn of me (ſaith he) for I am meek and lowly in heart. And St. Peter ſaith, That Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps; ſignifying, that he deſigned his patience to be exemplary to us. If then our Saviour, in his humility, his charity, his meekneſs, his patience, intended his life to be exemplary, and expreſly propounded it as ſuch; then certainly, in his devotion, his ſelf-denial, his juſtice, in all other vertues he had the ſame intention; and what he intended, God deſigned to be; and what God deſigned to be, was doubtleſs eminently conducible to the end deſigned; and therefore our Saviour's life was moſt exemplary. Other Saints indeed were of very exemplary converſation, but either proved to be ſo, according to ordinary courſe of providence, without any peculiar deſignation thereto (their free choice conſpiring, with God's Grace, in producing good works ſhining before men) or at moſt, by a reſtrained determination to ſome particular time, place or people; as Moſes was choſen and appointed to conduct the Iſraelites; David was taken from the ſheepfold, and following the ewes great with young, to feed Jacob God's people, and Iſrael his inheritance; Jeremy was ſanctified from his birth, and ordained to be a Prophet of the Nations in his times, and St. Paul was ſeparated from the womb to be a Preacher of the Chriſtian Faith: theſe, and ſuch like eminent perſons, Almighty God, in his goodneſs, was pleaſed to raiſe up, to be, in their generations, as it were partial and temporary Saviours, as by declaring his will, and revealing his truth to men, ſo by guiding them with a remarkable example; theſe burning and ſhining * Lamps (as St. John the Baptiſt is called) were indeed, like lamps ſet up in ſome particular families, with a competent luſtre, to diſpel the preſent darkneſs, ſhining within their definite ſphere, and for a determinate time; but our Saviour, like the Sun, fixed in a higher orb, was ordained with a perpetual and unconfined ſplendour to illuminate the Univerſe; to cauſe a general and everlaſting day of healthful and comfortable knowledge over the face of the whole earth. He was Ἐβαπτίσθη καὶ ἐνήστευσεν οὐκ αὐτὸς ἀπορυπώσεως ἢ νηστείας χρείαν ἔχων ἢ καθάρσεως ὁ τῇ φύσει καθαρὸς καὶ ἅγιος, ἀλλ' ἵνα Ἰωάννῃ ἀλήθειαν προσμαρτυρήσῃ καὶ ἡμῖν ὑπογραμμὸν παράσχηται.

John 15. 12.

Mat. 11. 2.
1 Pet. 2. 21.

Acts 7. 35.
Pſal. 106. 23.
Pſal. 78. 70.
Jer. 1. 5.

Joh. 5. 35.
* Λύχνος ὁ καιόμενος καὶ φαίνων.

was that true light, which enlighteneth every man coming into the world; He was prepared before the face of all people, to be a light to lighten the Nations (not Iſrael onely, but the Nations indefinitely, or all Nations.) He was ordained, not Commander of a ſingle Regiment, or Party, but Captain-General of all Mankind, to conduct all thoſe who were diſpoſed to follow him, by a victorious obedience, into that triumphant ſtate of everlaſting joy and happineſs. His example doth belong unto us all without exception, by divine ordination; for we, all of us, were (to uſe St. Paul's expreſſion) predeſtinated to be conformed to the image of God's Son; that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren. So it was, and ſo it became the infinite goodneſs, and philanthropy of God, to beſtow upon mankind one perfectly good example, inviting to all vertue, and ſo fit to countervail all thoſe many bad ones, wherewith we converſe, enticing to vice; to ſet forth, among ſo many imperfect ones, one accompliſhed piece of his heavenly workmanſhip, able to attract the eyes, and raviſh the hearts of all men with admiration of its excellent worth and beauty; to offer to our view ſome diſcernible repreſentation of his inviſible perfections; that ſo we might better be induced and inured to apprehend, love, reverence and imitate himſelf, by contemplation of that moſt exquiſite image of him; to give an evident proof, that the higheſt vertue is not unpracticable, that humane nature, by aid and guidance of the Divine Spirit, may arrive to the ſublimeſt pitch of perfection in goodneſs; in fine, to expoſe ſuch a common, ſweet and lovely pattern, as we with aſſurance, joy and comfort may follow.

John 1. 9.
Luc. 2. 31,32.
Heb. 2. 10.
Rom. 8. 29.
Joh. 5. 10. Ἃ γὰρ ἂν ἐκεῖνος ποιῇ ταῦτα καὶ ὁ υἱὸς ὁμοίως ποιεῖ.

Thirdly, Our Saviours example is eſpecially influential upon practice, in that it was, by an admirable temperament, more accommodated for imitation than any others have been. That the perfect copy of his moſt holy life ſeems more eaſie to be tranſcribed, than the ruder draughts of other holy Men; for though it were written with an incomparable fairneſs, delicacy and evenneſs; not ſlurred with any foul blot, nor any where declining from exact ſtreightneſs; yet were the lineaments thereof exceeding plain and ſimple; not by any gaudy flouriſhes, or impertinent intrigues rendred difficult, to ſtudious imitation; ſo that even women and children, the weakeſt and meaneſt ſort of people, as well as the moſt wiſe and ingenuous, might eaſily perceive its deſign, and with good ſucceſs write after it. His was a gentle and ſteady light, bright indeed, but not dazling the eye; warm, but not ſcorching the face of the moſt intent beholder; No affected ſingularities, no ſupercilious moroſities, no frivolous oſtentations of ſeemingly high, but really fruitleſs performances; nothing that might deter a timorous, diſcourage a weak, or offend a ſcrupulous diſciple, is obſervable in his practice: but on the contrary, his converſation was full of lowlineſs and condeſcenſion, of meekneſs and ſweetneſs, of openneſs and candid ſimplicity; apt to envite and allure all men to approach toward it, and with ſatisfaction to enjoy it. He did not ſeclude himſelf into the conſtant retirements of a Cloiſter, nor into the farther receſſes of a Wilderneſs (as ſome others have done) but converſed freely and indifferently with all ſorts of men, even the moſt contemptible and odious ſort of men, Publicans and Sinners; like the Sun, with an impartial bounty, liberally imparting his pleaſant light and comfortable warmth to all. He uſed no uncouth auſterities in habit, or diet, but complied, in his garb, with ordinary uſage, and ſuſtained his life with ſuch food as caſual opportunity did offer; ſo that his indifferency, in that kind, yielded matter of obloquy againſt him from the fond admirers of a humorous preciſeneſs. His devotions, (though exceedingly ſprightful and fervent) fervent) were not uſually extended to a tedious and exhauſting durance, nor ſtrained into ecſtatical tranſports, charming the natural ſenſes, and overpowering the reaſon; but calm, ſteady and regular, ſuch as Perſons of honeſt intention and hearty deſire (though not endued with high fancy, or ſtirring paſſion) might readily imitate. His zeal was not violent or impetuous, except upon very great reaſon, and extraordinary occaſion, when the honour of God, or good of Men, was much concerned. He was not rigorous in the obſervance of traditional rites and cuſtoms, (ſuch as were needleſly burthenſome, or which contained in them more of formal ſhew, than of real fruit) yet behaved himſelf orderly and peaceably, giving due reſpect to the leaſt inſtitution of God, and complying with the innocent cuſtoms of men; thereby pointing out unto us the middle way between peeviſh ſuperſtition and boiſterous faction; which as always the moſt honeſt, ſo commonly is the moſt ſafe and pleaſant way to walk in. He delighted not to diſcourſe of ſublime miſteries (although his deep wiſdom comprehended all) nor of ſubtile ſpeculations and intricate queſtions, ſuch as might amuſe and perplex, rather than inſtruct and profit his Auditors; but uſually did feed his Auditors with the moſt common and uſeful truths, and that in the moſt familiar and intelligible language; not diſdaining the uſe of vulgar ſayings, and trivial proverbs, when they beſt ſerved to inſinuate his wholeſome meaning into their minds. His whole life was ſpent in exerciſe of the moſt eaſie and pleaſant, yet moſt neceſſary and ſubſtantial duties; obedience to God, charity, meekneſs, humility, patience, and the like; the which, that he might practiſe with the greateſt latitude, and with moſt advantage for general imitation, he did not addict himſelf to any particular way of life, but diſentangled himſelf from all worldly care and buſineſs; chuſing to appear in the moſt free, though very mean condition; that he might indifferently inſtruct, by his example, perſons of all callings, degrees and capacities; eſpecially the moſt, that is the poor; and might have opportunity, in the face of the world, to practiſe the moſt difficult of neceſſary duties; lowlineſs, contentedneſs, abſtinence from Pleaſure, contempt of the World, ſufferance of injuries and reproaches. Thus ſuited and tempered by Divine Wiſdom was the life of our bleſſed Saviour, that all ſorts of men might be in an equal capacity to follow him, that none might be offended, affrighted, or diſcouraged, but that all might be pleaſed, delighted, enamoured with the homely Majeſty, and plain beauty thereof: And in effect ſo it happened, that ordinary people (the weakeſt, but ſincereſt, and unprejudic'd ſort of men) were greatly taken with, moſt admired and applauded his deportment; many of them readily embracing his doctrine, and devoting themſelves to his diſcipline; while onely the proud, envious, covetous and ambitious Scribes and Lawyers rejected his excellent doctrine, ſcorned the heavenly ſimplicity, and holy integrity of his life.

Fourthly, The tranſcendent excellency of our Lords example appeareth, in that it is attended with the greateſt obligations (of gratitude and ingenuity, of juſtice, of intereſt, of duty) mightily engaging us to follow it. For 'tis not the example of an ordinary, or inconſiderable Perſon, of a ſtranger, of one indifferent, or unrelated to us; but of a glorious Prince, of heavenly extraction; (the firſt-born Son of the Almighty God, ſole heir of eternal Majeſty) of our Lord and Maſter, to whom we are for ever bound, by indiſpenſable bands of duty and obedience; of our great Captain, who hath undertaken to ſubdue our enemies, and hath obliged us to follow his conduct, in a holy warfare, againſt them, by moſt ſolemn ſacraments and vows; of our beſt friend, from whom we have received the greateſt favours and benefits imaginable; of our moſt gracious Saviour, who, for our ſake, hath voluntarily ſuſtained moſt bitter pains, and ſhameful contumelies; having ſacrificed his deareſt heart-blood to redeem us from intolerable ſlaveries, and from extremities of horrible miſery; of him, to whom, in all reſpects, we do owe the higheſt reſpect, love and obſervance that can be: Now it is the nature and property both of reſpect and love (ſuch as upon ſo many grounds we owe to him) to beget in the perſon reſpecting and loving, an endeavour (anſwerable to the degrees of thoſe diſpoſitions) of conforming to, and reſembling the qualities and manners of the perſon reſpected, or beloved. We ſee how readily Children do comply with the cuſtoms of their Parents and Tutours; Servants of their Maſters and Patrons; Subjects of their Princes and Governours, with a ſtudious earneſtneſs compoſing themſelves to expreſs in their carriage, not onely their good or their indifferent faſhions and manners, but even their moſt palpable deformities and vices; inſomuch, that a whole family, a city, a nation may be debauch'd from its ſobriety, or reform'd from its diſſoluteneſs, even inſtantly, by the example of one perſon, who, by his place, power and authority, challengeth extraordinary reverence from men: and much greater influence hath hearty love to transform our manners into an agreement with the manners of him we love: What a man loves, that he imitateth ſo much as lies in his power, ſaith Hierocles, truly. For love being founded on a good eſteem, and a benevolent inclination thence reſulting, engageth the affectionate perſon to admire the qualities of him he affecteth, to obſerve his deportments, to make the moſt advantageous conſtruction of what he doeth; to fancy he doeth all things with beſt reaſon and diſcretion; to deem therefore, that all his actions deſerve and require imitation: hence doth love either find, or ſoon produce a competent ſimilitude in the parties, (a ſimilitude of mind, of will, of inclination and affection; an Eadem velle & nolle:) It doth forcibly attract as to a vicinity of place and converſe, ſo to an agreement of affections and actions; it uniteth the moſt diſtant, it reconcileth the moſt oppoſite, it turneth the moſt diſcordant natures into a ſweet conſent, and harmony of diſpoſition and demeanour. We then having the greateſt reaſon both to honour and love our Saviour, ſurely his example being duly ſtudied and conſidered by us, muſt needs obtain a ſuperlative influence upon our practice, and be very powerful to conform, and aſſimilate it to his.

Ὃ γὰρ ἀγαπᾷ τις καὶ μιμεῖται ὅσον δύναται. Hier.

Theſe conſiderations may ſuffice, to ſhew the peculiar excellency of our Saviour's example in vertue, and efficacy upon our practice; the ſame more abundantly might be deduc'd from a ſurvey of the moſt conſiderable particulars, in which we may and ought to imitate him. But the time will not ſuffer us to launch forth into ſo vaſt a ſea of diſcourſe. I ſhall onely therefore, from the premiſſes, exhort, That if any earneſt deſire of happineſs, any high eſteem of vertue, any true affection to genuine ſanctity do lodge in our breaſts, we ſhould apply this moſt excellent means of attaining them; the ſtudy and endeavour of imitating the life of our Lord: If we have in us any truth and ſincerity, and do not vainly prevaricate in our profeſſion of being Chriſt's Diſciples, and votaries of that moſt Holy Inſtitution, let us manifeſt it by a real conformity to the practice of him who is our Maſter, and authour of our faith: If we have in us any wiſdom, or ſober conſideration of things, let us employ it in following the ſteps of that infallible guide, deſigned by heaven to lead us in the ſtreight, even and pleaſant ways of righteouſneſs, unto the poſſeſſion of everlaſting bliſs: If we do verily like, and approve the practice of Chriſt, and are affected with the innocent, ſweet and lovely comelineſs thereof, let us declare ſuch our mind by a ſedulous care to reſemble it. If we bear any honour and reverence, any love and affection to Chriſt; if we are at all ſenſible of our relations, our manifold obligations, our duties to our great Lord, our beſt friend, our moſt gracious Redeemer; let us teſtify it by a zealous care to become like to him: Let a lively image of his moſt righteous and innocent, moſt holy and pious, moſt pure and ſpotleſs life be ever preſent to our fancies; ſo, as to inform our Judgments, to excite our affections, to quicken our endeavours, to regulate our purpoſes, to correct our miſtakes, to direct, amend and ſanctify our whole lives. Let us, with inceſſant diligence of ſtudy, meditate upon the beſt of hiſtories, wherein the tenour of his divine practice is repreſented to us; revolving frequently in our thoughts all the moſt conſiderable paſſages thereof, entertaining them with devout paſſions, impreſſing them on our memories, and ſtriving to expreſs them in our converſations; Let us endeavour continually to walk in the ſteps of our Lord, and to follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth; which that we may be able to do, do thou, O Bleſſed Redeemer, draw us, draw us by the cords of thy love; draw us by the ſenſe of thy goodneſs; draw us by the incomparable worth and excellency of thy perſon; draw us by the unſpotted purity and beauty of thy example; draw us by the merit of thy precious death, and by the power of thy Holy Spirit; Draw us, good Lord, and we ſhall run after thee. Amen.

Coll after Eaſter, 2. Almighty God, who haſt given thine onely Son, to be unto us, both a ſacrifice for ſin, and alſo an enſample of godly life; give us grace, that we may always moſt thankfully receive that his ineſtimable benefit; and alſo daily endeavour our ſelves to follow the bleſſed ſteps of his moſt holy life, through the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

SERMON IV.

Of Submiſſion to the Divine Will.

LUKE 22. 42.

Matt. 26. 39. Nevertheleſs let not my will, but thine be done.

THE great controverſie, managed with ſuch earneſtneſs and obſtinacy between God and Man, is this, whoſe will ſhall take place, his or ours: Almighty God, by whoſe conſtant protection and great mercy we ſubſiſt, doth claim to himſelf the authority of regulating our practice, and diſpoſing our fortunes; but we affect to be our own Maſters and Carvers; not willingly admitting any Law, not patiently brooking any Condition, which doth not ſort with our fancy and pleaſure: to make good his right, God bendeth all his forces, and applieth all proper means both of ſweetneſs and ſeverity (perſwading us by arguments, ſoliciting us by entreaties, alluring us by fair promiſes, ſcaring us by fierce menaces, indulging ample benefits to us, inflicting ſore corrections on us, working in us and upon us by ſecret influences of grace, by viſible diſpenſations of Providence) yet ſo it is, that commonly nothing doth avail, our will oppoſing it ſelf with invincible reſolution and ſtiffneſs.

Here indeed the buſineſs pincheth; herein as the chief worth, ſo the main difficulty of religious practice conſiſteth, in bending that iron ſinew; in bringing our proud hearts to ſtoop, and our ſturdy humours to buckle, ſo as to ſurrender and reſign our wills to the juſt, the wiſe, the gracious will of our God, preſcribing out duty, and aſſigning our lot unto us. We may accuſe our nature, but it is our pleaſure; we may pretend weakneſs, but it is wilfulneſs, which is the guilty cauſe of our miſdemeanours; for by God's help (which doth alwaies prevent our needs, and is never wanting to thoſe who ſeriouſly deſire it) we may be as good as we pleaſe, if we can pleaſe to be good; there is nothing within us that can reſiſt, if our wills do yeild themſelves up to duty: to conquer our reaſon is not hard; for what reaſon of man can withſtand the infinite cogency of thoſe motives, which induce to obedience? What can be more eaſie, than by a thouſand arguments, clear as day, to convince any man, that to croſs God's will is the greateſt abſurdity in the world, and that there is no madneſs comparable thereto? Nor is it difficult, if we reſolve upon it, to govern any other part or power of our nature; for what cannot we do, if we are willing? what inclination cannot we check, what appetite cannot we reſtrain, what paſſion cannot we quell or moderate; what faculty of our ſoul, or member of our body is not obſequious to our will? Even half the reſolution with which we purſue vanity and ſin, would ſerve to engage us in the ways of wiſdom and vertue.

Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 12. in 1 Cor. Or. 17. Tom. 5. Or. 28, 43.

Quodcunque ſibi imperavit animus obtinuit. Sen. de Ira. 2. 12.

Wherefore in overcoming our will the ſtreſs lieth; this is that impregnable fortreſs, which everlaſtingly doth hold out againſt all the batteries of reaſon and of grace; which no force of perſwaſion, no allurement of favour, no diſcouragement of terrour can reduce: this puny, this impotent thing it is, which grappleth with Omnipotency, and often in a manner baffleth it: And no wonder; for that God doth not intend to overpower our will, or to make any violent impreſſion on it, but onely to draw it (as it is in the Prophet) with the cords of a man, or by rational inducements to win its conſents and compliance; our ſervice is not ſo conſiderable to him, that he ſhould extort it from us; nor doth he value our happineſs at ſo low a rate, as to obtrude it on us, His victory indeed were no true victory over us, if he ſhould gain it by main force, or without the concurrence of our will; our works not being our works, if they do not iſſue from our will; and our will not being our will, if it be not free; to compel it were to deſtroy it, together with all the worth of our vertue and obedience: wherefore the Almighty doth ſuffer himſelf to be withſtood, and beareth repulſes from us; nor commonly doth he maſter our will otherwiſe, than by its own ſpontaneous converſion and ſubmiſſion to him: if ever we be conquer'd, as we ſhall ſhare in the benefit, and wear a crown; ſo we muſt join in the combat, and partake of the victory, by ſubduing our ſelves: we muſt take the yoke upon us; for God is onely ſerved by volunteers; he ſummoneth us by his Word, he attracteth us by his Grace, but we muſt freely come unto him.

Hoſ. 11. 4.

Ἐπεὶ τοῦτο καὶ αὐτὰ διαβάλλει τὰ ἀγαθὰ εἰ μὴ τοιαύτη αὐτῶν ἐστιν ἡ φύσις, ὡς καὶ ἑκόντας προσδραμεῖν, καὶ χάριν ἔχειν πολλήν. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Orat. 2.

Our will indeed of all things is moſt our own; the onely gift, the moſt proper ſacrifice we have to offer; which therefore God doth chiefly deſire, doth moſt highly prize, doth moſt kindly accept from us. Seeing then our duty chiefly moveth on this hinge, the free ſubmiſſion and reſignation of our will to the will of God; it is this practice, which our Lord (who came to guide us in the way to happineſs, not onely as a teacher by his word and excellent doctrine, but as a leader, by his actions and perfect example) did eſpecially ſet before us; as in the conſtant tenour of his life, ſo particularly in that great exigency which occaſioned theſe words, wherein, renouncing and deprecating his own will, he did expreſs an entire ſubmiſſion to God's will, a hearty complacence therein, and a ſerious deſire that it might take place.

For the fuller underſtanding of which caſe, we may conſider, that our Lord, as partaker of our nature, and, in all things (bating ſin) like unto us, had a natural humane will, attended with ſenſes, appetites and affections, apt from objects incident to receive congruous impreſſions of pleaſure and pain; ſo that whatever is innocently grateful and pleaſant to us, that he reliſh'd with delight, and thence did incline to embrace; whatever is diſtaſtful and afflictive to us, that he reſented with grief, and thence was moved to eſchew; to this probably he was liable in a degree beyond our ordinary rate; for that in him nature was moſt perfect, his complection very delicate, his temper exquiſitely ſound and fine; for ſo we find, that by how much any man's conſtitution is more ſound, by ſo much he hath a ſmarter guſt of what is agreeable or offenſive to nature: If perhaps ſometimes infirmity of body, or diſtemper of ſoul (a ſavage ferity, a ſtupid dulneſs, a fondneſs of conceit, or ſtiffneſs of humour, ſupported by wild opinions, or vain hopes) may keep men from being thus affected by ſenſible objects; yet in him pure nature did work vigorouſly, with a clear apprehenſion and lively ſenſe, according to the deſign of our maker, when into our conſtitution he did implant thoſe paſſive faculties, diſpoſing objects to affect them ſo and ſo, for our need and advantage; if this be deemed weakneſs, it is a weakneſs connexed with our nature, which he therewith did take, and with which (as the Apoſtle ſaith) he was encompaſſed. Such a will our Lord had, and it was requiſite he ſhould have it; that he thence might be qualified to diſcharge the principal inſtances of obedience, for procuring God's favour to us, and for ſetting an exact pattern before us; for God impoſing on him duties to perform, and diſpenſing accidents to endure, very croſs to that natural will, in his compliance and acquieſcence thereto, his obedience was throughly tried; his vertue did ſhine moſt brightly; therefore (as the Apoſtle ſaith) he was in all points tempted; thence, as to meritorious capacity, and exemplary influence, he was perfected through ſuffering.

Ἐπεὶ ϗ αὐτὸς περίκειται ἀσθένειαν. Heb. 5. 2.

Heb. 4. 15. 2. 10, 18.

Hence was the whole courſe of his life and converſation among men, ſo deſigned, ſo modelled, as to be one continual exerciſe of thwarting that humane will, and cloſing with the divine pleaſure: it was predicted of him, Loe I come to do thy will O God; and of himſelf he affirmed, I came down from Heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that ſent me; whereas therefore ſuch a practice is little ſeen in atchieving eaſie matters, or in admitting pleaſant occurrences; it was ordered for him, that he ſhould encounter the rougheſt difficulties, and be engaged in circumſtances, moſt harſh to natural apprehenſion and appetite; ſo that if we trace the footſteps of his life from the ſordid manger to the bloody croſs, we can hardly mark any thing to have befallen him apt to ſatisfy the will of nature. Nature liketh reſpect, and loatheth contempt; therefore was

Heb. 10. 7. Pſal. 40. 7. Joh. 6. 38. 5. 30. 4. 34.

he born of mean Parentage, and in a moſt homely condition; therefore did he live in no garb, did aſſume no office, did exerciſe no power, did meddle in no affairs, which procure to men conſideration and regard; therefore an impoſtor, a blaſphemer, a ſorcerer, a looſe companion, a ſeditious incendiary were the titles of honour, and the elogies of praiſe conferred on him; therefore was he expoſed to the laſh of every ſlanderous, every ſcurrilous, every petulant and ungoverned tongue.

Nature doth affect the good opinion, and good will of men, eſpecially when due in grateful return for great courteſie and beneficence; nor doth any thing more grate thereon, than abuſe of kindneſs; therefore, could he (the world's great friend and benefactor) ſay, the world hateth me; therefore were thoſe, whom he, with ſo much charity and bounty had inſtructed, had fed, had cured of diſeaſes (both corporal and ſpiritual) ſo ready to clamour, and commit outrage upon him; therefore could he thus expoſtulate, Many good works have I ſhewed you from my father, for which of thoſe works do ye ſtone me? therefore did his kindred ſlight him, therefore did his diſciples abandon him, therefore did the grand traitor iſſue from his own boſome; therefore did that whole Nation, which he chiefly ſought and laboured to ſave, conſpire to perſecute him, with moſt rancorous ſpite and cruel miſuſage.

Joh. 5. 18,25.
Joh. 10. 31.
Joh. 13. 18.

Nature loveth plentiful accommodations, and abhorreth to be pinched with any want; therefore was extream penury appointed to him; he had no revenue, no eſtate, no certain livelyhood, not ſo much as a houſe where to lay his head, or a piece of money to diſcharge the tax for it; he owed his ordinary ſupport to alms, or voluntary beneficence; he was to ſeek his food from a fig-tree on the way; and ſometimes was beholden for it to the courteſie of Publicans; δι' ἡμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε, he was (ſaith St. Paul) a beggar for us.

Mat. 8. 20.
17. 25. 21. 19.
Luc. 8. 3.
2 Cor. 8. 9.

Nature delighteth in eaſe, in quiet, in liberty; therefore did he ſpend his days in continual labour, in reſtleſs travel, in endleſs vagrancy, going about and doing good; ever haſtening thither, whither the needs of men did call, or their benefit invite; therefore did he take on him the form of a ſervant, and was among his own followers as one that miniſtreth; therefore he pleaſed not himſelf, but ſuited his demeanour to the ſtate and circumſtances of things, complied with the manners and faſhions, comported with the humours and infirmities of men.

Joh. 4. 16.
Matt. 4. 23.
8. 35.
Act. 10. 38.
Phil. 2. 7.
Luc. 22. 27.
Marc. 6. 6.
Matt. 21. 28.

Nature coveteth good ſucceſs to its deſign and undertakings, hardly brooking to be diſappointed and defeated in them: therefore was he put to water dry ſticks, and to waſh Negroes; that is, to inſtruct a moſt dull and ſtupid, to reform a moſt perverſe and ſtubborn generation; therefore his ardent deſires, his ſolicitous cares, his painful endeavours for the good of men did obtain ſo little fruit; had indeed a contrary effect, rather aggravating their ſins than removing them, rather hardening than turning their hearts, rather plunging them deeper into perdition, than reſcuing them from it: therefore ſo much in vain did he, in numberleſs miraculous works, diſplay his power and goodneſs, convincing few, converting fewer by them; therefore although he taught with moſt powerful authority, with moſt charming graceſulneſs, with moſt convincing evidence, yet, Who (could he ſay) hath believed our report? though he moſt earneſtly did invite and allure men to him, offering the richeſt boons that heaven it ſelf could diſpenſe, yet, Ye will not (was he forced to ſay) come unto me, that ye may be ſaved; although with aſſiduous fervency of affection he ſtrove to reclaim them from courſes tending to their ruin, yet how he proſpered, ſad experience declareth, and we may learn from that

Luc. 4. 22,23.
Joh. 12. 38.
Joh. 5. 40.

doleful

Luc. 13. 34. 19. 42. doleful complaint, How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, but ye would not : οὐκ ἠθελήσατε, your will did not concur, your will did not ſubmit.

Marc. 1. 13, 35. Luc. 5. 16. Joh. 4. 6, 31. Luc 6. 12. Matt. 14. 23. In fine, natural will ſeeketh pleaſure, and ſhunneth pain; But what pleaſure did he taſt; what inclination, what appetite, what ſenſe did he gratifie? How did he feaſt, or revel? How, but in tedious faſtings, in frequent hungers, by paſſing whole nights in prayer, and retirement for devotion upon the cold mountains? What ſports had he, what recreation 18. 12. did he take, but feeling inceſſant gripes of compaſſion, and weariſome roving in queſt of the loſt ſheep? In what converſation could he divert himſelf, but among thoſe, whoſe doltiſh incapacity and forward humour, 17. 17. did wring from his patience thoſe words, How long ſhall I be with you, how long ſhall I ſuffer you? What Muſick did he hear? What but the ratlings of clamorous obloquy, and furious accuſations againſt him? to be deſperately maligned, to be inſolently mocked, to be ſtiled a King, and treated as a ſlave; to be ſpit on, to be buffetted, to be ſcourged, to be drenched with gall, to be crowned with thorns, to be nailed to a croſs; theſe were the delights which our Lord enjoyed, theſe the ſweet comforts of his life, and the notable proſperities of his fortune: ſuch a portion was allotted to him, the which he did accept from God's hand with all patient ſubmiſſion, with perfect contentedneſs, with exceeding alacrity, never repining at it, never complaining of it, never flinching from it, or fainting under it; but proceeding on in the performance of all his duty, and proſecution of his great deſigns, with undaunted courage, with unwearied induſtry, with undiſturbed tranquillity and ſatisfaction of mind.

Had indeed his condition and fortune been otherwiſe framed; had he come into the world qualified with a noble extraction; had he lived in a ſplendid equipage, had he enjoyed a plentiful eſtate and a fair reputation, had he been favoured and careſſed by men; had he found a current of proſperous ſucceſs, had ſafety, eaſe and pleaſure waited on him; Where had been the pious reſignation of his will; where the precious merit of his obedience; where the glorious luſtre of his example? how then had our frailty in him become victorious over all its enemies; how had he triumphed over the ſolicitations and allurements of the fleſh; over the frowns and flatteries of the world; over the malice and fury of hell; how then could he have ſo demonſtrated his immenſe charity toward us, or laid ſo mighty obligations upon us?

Such in general was the caſe, and ſuch the deportment of our Lord; but there was ſomewhat peculiar, and beyond all this occurring to him, which drew forth the words of our Text: God hath tempered for him a potion of all the moſt bitter and loathſome ingredients that could be; a drop whereof no man ever hath, or could indure to ſip; for he was not Δι᾽ ἀγνώστων σου παθημάτων ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς κύριε. Lit. Gr. Lam. 2. 12. onely to undergo whatever load humane rage could impoſe, of ignominious diſgrace, and grievous pain; but to feel diſmal agonies of Spirit, and thoſe unknown ſufferings, which God alone could inflict, God onely could ſuſtain: Behold, and ſee, he might well ſay, if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, which is done unto me; wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger? He was to labour with pangs of Charity, and through his heart to be pierced with deepeſt commiſeration of our wretched caſe: he was to crouch under the burthen of all the ſins (the numberleſs moſt heinous ſins and abominations) ever committed by mankind: he was to paſs through the hotteſt furnace of Divine Vengeance, and by his blood to quench the wrath of Heaven flaming out againſt iniquity; he was to ſtand (as it were) before the mouth of Hell, belching fire and brimſtone on his face: his grief was to ſupply the defects of our remorſe, and his ſuffering in thoſe few moments to countervail the eternal torments due to us: He was to bear the hiding of God's face, and an eclipſe of that favourable aſpect, in which all bliſs doth reſide; a caſe which he that ſo perfectly underſtood, could not but infinitely reſent: theſe things with the cleareſt apprehenſion he ſaw coming on him; and no wonder that our nature ſtarted at ſo ghaſtly a ſight; or that humane inſtinct ſhould dictate that petition, Father if thou wilt, let this cup paſs from me; words implying his moſt real participation of our infirmity; words denoting the height of thoſe ſad evils which encompaſſed him with his lively and lowly reſentment of them; words informing us, how we ſhould entertain God's chaſtiſements, and whence we muſt ſeek relief of our preſſures (that we ſhould receive them, not with a ſcornful neglect or ſullen inſenſibility, but with a meek contrition of ſoul; that we ſhould entirely depend on God's pleaſure for ſupport under them, or a releaſement from them), words which in conjunction with thoſe following do ſhew how inſtantly we ſhould quaſh and over-rule any inſurrection of natural deſire againſt the command or providence of God. We muſt not take that prayer to ſignify any purpoſe in our Lord to ſhift off his paſſion, or any wavering in reſolution about it; for he could not any wiſe mean to undo that, which he knew done with God before the world's foundation; he would not unſettle that, which was by his own free undertaking, and irreverſible decree; He that ſo often with ſatisfaction did foretel this event, who with ſo earneſt deſire longed for its approach; who with that ſharpneſs of indignation did rebuke his friend offering to divert him from it; who did again repreſs St. Peter's animoſity with that ſerious expoſtulation, The cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it? who had adviſedly laid ſuch trains for its accompliſhment, would he decline it? Could that heart all burning with zeal for God and charity to men admit the leaſt thought or motion of averſeneſs from drinking that cup, which was the Sovereign medicine adminiſtred by divine wiſdom for the recovery of God's Creation? No; had he ſpake with ſuch intent, legions of Angels had flown to his reſcue; that word, which framed the worlds, which ſtilled the tempeſts, which ejected Devils, would immediately have ſcattered his enemies, and daſhed all their projects againſt him; wherefore thoſe words did not proceed from intention, but as from inſtinct, and for inſtruction; importing, that what our humane frailty was apt to ſuggeſt, that his divine vertue was more ready to ſmother; neither did he vent the former, but that he might expreſs the latter.

Ἐπιθυμία ἐπεθύμȣν. Luc. 22. 15.

Joh. 18. 11.

Matt. 26. 53.

He did expreſs it in real effect; immediately with all readineſs addreſſing himſelf to receive that unſavoury potion; he reached out his hand for it, yeilding fair opportunity and advantages to his perſecutours; he lifted it up to his mouth, innocently provoking their envy and malice; he drank it off with a moſt ſteady calmneſs, and ſweet compoſure of mind, with the ſilence, the ſimplicity, the meekneſs of a lamb, carried to the ſlaughter; no fretful thought riſing up, no angry word breaking forth, but clear patience, enlivened with a warm charity, ſhining in all his behaviour, and thorough every circumſtance of his paſſion.

Such in his life, ſuch at his death was the practice of our Lord; in conformity whereto we alſo readily ſhould undertake whatever God propoſeth, we gladly ſhould accept whatever God offereth, we vigorouſly ſhould perform whatever God enjoyneth, we patiently ſhould undergo whatever God impoſeth, or inflicteth how croſs ſoever any duty, any diſpenſation may prove to our carnal ſenſe or humour.

To do thus, the contemplation of this example may ſtrongly engage us, for if our Lord had not his will, can we in reaſon expect, can we in modeſty deſire to have ours? muſt we be cockered and pleaſed in every thing, when as he was treated ſo courſely, and croſſed in all things? can we grutch at any kind of ſervice, or ſufferance; can we think much (for our trial, our exerciſe, our correction) to bear a little want, a little diſgrace, a little pain, when the Son of God was put to diſcharge the hardeſt tasks, to endure the ſoreſt adverſities?

But farther to enforce theſe duties, be pleaſed to caſt a glance on two conſiderations. 1. What the Will is to which. 2. Who the Willer is to whom we muſt ſubmit.

1. What is the Will of God? Is it any thing unjuſt, unworthy, or diſhonourable, any thing incommodious or hurtful, any thing extremely difficult, or intolerably grievous that God requireth of us, to do or bear? No: he willeth nothing from us, or to us, which doth not beſt become us, and moſt behove us; which is not attended with ſafety, with eaſe, with the ſolideſt profit, the faireſt reputation, and the ſweeteſt pleaſure.

Two things he willeth; that we ſhould be good, and that we ſhould be happy; the firſt in order to the ſecond, for that vertue is the certain way, and a neceſſary qualification to felicity.

1 Theſ. 4. 3. The will of God, ſaith St. Paul, is our ſanctification; what is that? what, but that the decaies of our frame, and the defacements of God's Image within us ſhould be repaired; that the faculties of our ſoul ſhould be reſtored to their original integrity and vigour; that from moſt wretched ſlaveries we ſhould be tranſlated into a happy freedom, yea, into a glorious kingdom; that from deſpicable beggary and baſeneſs we ſhould be advanced to ſubſtantial Wealth, and ſublime dignity; that we ſhould be cleanſed from the fouleſt defilements, and decked with the goodlieſt ornaments; that we ſhould be cured of moſt loathſome diſeaſes, and ſetled in a firm health of ſoul; that we ſhould be delivered from thoſe brutiſh luſts, and thoſe deviliſh paſſions, which create in us a hell of darkneſs, of confuſion, of vexation; which diſhonour our nature, deform our ſoul, ruffle our mind, and wrack our conſcience; that we ſhould be endowed with thoſe worthy diſpoſitions and affections, which do conſtitute in our hearts a heaven of light, of order, of joy and peace; dignify our nature, beautify our ſoul, clarify and chear our mind; that we ſhould eſchew thoſe practices, which never go without a retinue of woful miſchiefs and ſorrows, embracing thoſe which alwaies yeild abundant fruits of convenience and comfort; that in ſhort, we ſhould become friends of God, fit to converſe with Angels, and capable of Paradiſe.

1 Tim. 2. 7.
2 Pet. 3. 9.
Ezek. 33. 11.

God (ſaith St. Paul again) willeth all men to be ſaved; he willeth not (ſaith St. Peter) that any man ſhould periſh; He ſaith in himſelf, yea, he ſweareth it, that he hath no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked ſhould turn from his way and live: And what is this will, what, but that we ſhould obtain all the good whereof we are capable; that we ſhould be filled with joy, and crowned with glory; that we ſhould be fixed in an immoveable ſtate of happineſs, in the perpetual enjoyment of God's favour, and in the light of his bliſsful preſence: that we ſhould be rid of all the evils, to which we are liable; that we ſhould be releaſed from inextricable chains of guilt, from incurable ſtings of remorſe, from being irrecoverably engaged to paſs a diſconſolate eternity in utter darkneſs, and extream Woe? Such is God's Will; to ſuch purpoſes every command, every diſpenſation of God (how grim, how rough ſoever it may ſeem) doth tend: and do we refuſe to comply with that good Will; do we ſet againſt it a Will of our own, affecting things unworthy of us, things unprofitable to us, things prejudicial to our beſt intereſts; things utterly baneful to our ſouls? Do we reject the Will that would ſave us, and adhere to a Will that would ruine us; a fooliſh and a ſenſeleſs Will, which ſlighting the immenſe treaſures of Heaven, the unfading glories of God's Kingdom, the ineffable joys of eternity doth catch at ſpecious nothings, doth purſue miſchievous trifles; a ſhadow of baſe profit, a ſmoak of vain honour, a flaſh of ſordid pleaſure; which paſſeth away like the mirth of fools, or the crackling of thorns, leaving onely ſoot, black and bitter behind it. Eccleſ. 7. 6.

But at leaſt e'er we do thus, let us conſider, whoſe Will it is, that requireth our compliance.

It is the Will of Him, whoſe Will did found the earth, and rear the Heaven; whoſe Will ſuſtaineth all things in their exiſtence and operation; whoſe Will is the great law of the World, which univerſal nature in all its motions doth obſerve; which reigneth in Heaven, the bleſſed Spirits adoring it, which ſwayeth in Hell it ſelf, the curſed Fiends trembling at it; And ſhall we alone (we pitiful Worms crawling on earth) preſume to murmur, or dare to kick againſt it? Pſal. 148. 5. Apoc. 4. 11.

It is the Will of our Maker, vvho together vvith all our other faculties did create and confer on us, the very povver of Willing: and ſhall vve turn the Work of his hands, the gift of his bounty againſt him?

It is the Will of our Preſerver, vvho together vvith all that vve are, or have continually, doth uphold our very Will it ſelf; ſo that vvithout employing any poſitive force, merely by letting us fall out of his hand, he can ſend us and it back to nothing: and ſhall our Will claſh vvith that, on vvhich it ſo vvholly dependeth; vvithout vvhich it cannot ſubſiſt one moment, or move one ſtep forvvard in action?

It is the Will of our Sovereign Lord, vvho upon various indiſputable accounts hath a juſt right to govern us, and an abſolute povver to diſpoſe of us: ought vve not therefore to ſay vvith old Eli, It is the Lord, let him do to me as it ſeems good to him? Is it not extream iniquity, is it not monſtrous arrogance for us, in derogation to his Will, to pretend giving lavv, or picking a ſtation to our ſelves? Do vve not manifeſtly incur high treaſon againſt the King of Heaven by ſo invading his office, uſurping his authority, ſnatching his Sceptre into our hands, and ſetting our Wills in his Throne? 1 Sam. 3. 8.

It is the Will of our Judge, from whoſe mouth our doom muſt proceed, awarding Life or Death, Weal or Woe unto us; and what ſentence can we expect, what favour can we pretend to, if we preſumptuouſly ſhall offend, oppoſe that Will, which is the ſupream Rule of Juſtice, and ſole Fountain of Mercy?

It is the Will of our Redeemer, who hath bought us with an ineſtimable price, and with infinite pains hath reſcued us from miſerable Captivity under moſt barbarous enemies, that obeying his VVill we might command our own, and ſerving him we might enjoy perfect freedom; And ſhall we, declining his call and conduct out of that unhappy ſtate bereave him of his purchaſe, fruſtrate his undertakings, and forfeit to our ſelves the benefit of ſo great Redemption?

It is the VVill of our beſt friend; who loveth us much better, than we do love our ſelves; who is concerned for our welfare, as his own deareſt intereſt, and greatly delighteth therein; who by innumerable experiments hath demonſtrated an exceſs of kindneſs to us; who in all his dealings with us purely doth aim at our good, never charging any duty on us, or diſpenſing any event to us, ſo much with intent to exerciſe his power Lam. 3. 39. over us, as to expreſs his goodneſs towards us; who never doth afflict or grieve us more againſt our Will, than againſt his own deſire; never indeed but when goodneſs it ſelf calleth for it, and even mercy doth urge thereto; to whom we are much obliged, that he vouchſafeth to govern and guide us, our ſervice being altogether unprofitable to him, his governance exceedingly beneficial to us: And doth not ſuch a Will deſerve regard, may it not demand compliance from us? to neglect or infringe it, what is it? is it not palpable folly, is it not foul diſingenuity, is it not deteſtable ingratitude?

So doth every relation of God recommend his Will to us; and each of his Attributes doth no leſs: for,

It is the Will of him, who is moſt holy, or whoſe Will is eſſential rectitude: how then can we thwart it, without being ſtained with the guilt, and wounded with a ſenſe of great irregularity and iniquity?

It is the Will of him who is perfectly juſt; who therefore cannot but aſſert his own righteous Will, and avenge the violation thereof: is it then adviſeable to drive him to that point by wilful provocation; or to run upon the edge of neceſſary ſeverity?

It is the Will of him, who is infinitely wiſe; who therefore doth infallibly know what is beſt for us, what doth moſt befit our capacities and circumſtances; what in the final reſult will conduce to our greateſt advantage and comfort: ſhall we then prefer the dreams of our vain mind before the oracles of his Wiſdom; ſhall we forſaking the direction of his unerring Will follow the impulſe of our giddy humour?

It is the Will of him, who is immenſely good and benign; whoſe Will therefore can be no other than good Will to us; who can mean nothing thereby but to derive bounty and mercy on us: Can we then fail of doing well, if we put our ſelves entirely into his hands; are we not our own greateſt enemies, in withſtanding his gracious intentions?

It is finally the Will of him, who is uncontrollably powerful; whoſe Will therefore muſt prevail one way or other: either with our Will, or againſt it, either ſo as to bow and ſatisfy us, or ſo as to break and plague Iſa. 46. 11. us: for My counſel (ſaith he) ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure. As to his diſpenſations, we may fret, we may wail, we may bark at them, but we cannot alter or avoid them: ſooner may we by our moans check the tides, or by our cries ſtop the Sun in his carriere, than divert the current of affairs, or change the ſtate of things eſtabliſhed by God's high decree; what he layeth on, no hand can remove; what he hath deſtined, no power can reverſe; our anger therefore will be ineffectual, our impatience will have no other fruit, than to aggravate our guilt, and augment our grief.

Dan. 5. 23. As to his commands, we may lift up our ſelves againſt him, we may fight ſtoutly, we may in a ſort prove Conquerors; but it will be a miſerable victory, the Trophies whereof ſhall be erected in Hell, and ſtand upon the ruines of our happineſs; for while we inſult over abuſed grace, we muſt fall under incenſed juſtice: If God cannot fairly procure his Will of us in way of due obedience, he will ſurely execute his Will upon us in way of righteous vengeance; if we do not ſurrender our Wills to the overtures of his goodneſs, we muſt ſubmit our backs to the ſtroaks of his anger: He muſt reign over us, if not as over loyal Subjects to our comfort, yet as over ſtubborn Rebels to our confuſion; for this in that caſe will be our doom, and the laſt words God will deſign to ſpend upon us, Thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me. Luc. 19. 27.

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great Shepherd of the ſheep, through the blood of the everlaſting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory for ever and ever : Amen. Heb. 13. 20.

SERMON V.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. 4. 11.

I have learned in whatever ſtate I am, therewith to be content.

Ἐγὼ γὰρ ἔμαθον ἐν οἷς εἰμὶ αὐτάρκης εἶναι.

IN theſe words by the example of an eminent Saint is recommended to us the practice of an excellent duty, or vertue: a practice in it ſelf moſt worthy, very grateful to God, and immediately of great benefit to our ſelves; being indeed neceſſary towards the comfortable enjoyment of our lives: It is Contentedneſs, the vertue, which of all other doth moſt render this World acceptable, and conſtituteth a kind of temporal Heaven; which he that hath, is thereby ipſo facto in good meaſure happy, whatever other things he may ſeem to want; which he that wanteth, doth, however otherwiſe he be furniſhed, become miſerable, and carrieth a kind of Hell within him: it cannot therefore but well deſerve our beſt ſtudy about it, and care to get it; in imitation of St. Paul, who had learned in whatever ſtate he was therein to be content.

Τὸ δ' αὔταρκες τίθεμεν, ὃ μονούμενον αἱρετὸν ποιεῖ τὸν βίον καὶ μηδενὸς ἐνδεᾶ. Ariſt. Eth. l. 7.

In diſcourſing upon which words I ſhall conſider two particulars; firſt the vertue it ſelf (Contentedneſs in every ſtate) the nature of which I ſhall endeavour to explain; then the way of attaining or producing it, implied by St. Paul in the words, I have learned.

I. For explication of the vertue: The word here expreſſing it is, αὐτάρκεια, which ſignifieth ſelf-ſufficiency, or having enough of ones ſelf; the which is not to be underſtood abſolutely, as if he took himſelf to be independent in nature, able to ſubſiſt of himſelf, not wanting any ſupport or comfort without himſelf (for this is the property and privilege of the great El-ſhaddai, who alone ſubſiſteth of himſelf, needing toward his being and felicity nothing without himſelf? this is repugnant to the nature of man, who is a creature eſſentially dependent for his being and ſubſiſtence, indigent of many things for his ſatisfaction and welfare) but relatively conſidering his preſent ſtate, the circumſtances wherein he was, and the capacities he had; which by Gods diſpoſal and providence were ſuch, that he could not want more, than he had in his poſſeſſion, or reach. He meant not to exclude God, and his Providence; but rather ſuppoſed that as the ground and cauſe of his ſelf-ſufficiency; according as otherwhere he expreſſeth it : Not as if we were ſufficient of our ſelves, but our ſufficiency is of God : Nor did he intend to exclude the need of other creatures otherwiſe than as conſidered without his poſſeſſion, or beyond his power; But he meaneth onely, that he did not deſire or lack more than what God had ſupplyed him with; had put into his hand, or had ſet within his reach; that his will did ſuit to his ſtate, his deſire did not exceed his power.

Τὸ δ' εὐδαιμονοῦν ἀπέχειν δεῖ πάντα ἃ θέλει πεπληρωμένῳ τινὶ ἐοικέναι· οὐ δίψος δεῖ προσεῖναι, οὐδὲ λιμόν. Arr. 3. 24.

2 Cor. 3. 5.

This is the meaning of the word, which the Apoſtle uſeth; but for the more full and clear underſtanding the vertue it ſelf, we ſhall firſt conſider the object, about which it is converſant, then the ſeveral acts, which it requireth, or wherein the exerciſe thereof conſiſteth.

1. The object of contentedneſs is the preſent ſtate of things whatever it be (whether proſperous or adverſe, of eminency or meanneſs, of abundance or ſcantneſs) wherein by divine Providence we are ſet : τὰ ἐν οἷς ἐσμὲν, the things in which we are, that is our preſent condition, with all its circumſtances: ſo it may be generally ſuppoſed, conſidering that it is ordinary, and almoſt natural for men (who have not learned as St. Paul had done, or are not inſtructed, and exerciſed in the practice of this duty) to be diſſatisfied, and diſquieted in every ſtate; to be always in want of ſomething; to find defects in every fortune; to fancy they may be in better caſe, and to deſire it earneſtly : If we eſtimate things wiſely, rich men are more liable to diſcontent then poor men. It is obſervable, that proſperity is a peeviſh thing, and men of higheſt fortune are apt moſt eaſily to reſent the ſmalleſt things : a little neglect, a ſlight word, an unpleaſing look doth affect them more than reproaches, blows, wrongs, do thoſe of a mean condition.

Proſperity is a nice and ſqueamiſh thing, and it is hard to find any thing able to pleaſe men of a full and proſperous ſtate, which being uncapable of bettering in ſubſtantial things they can hardly find matter of ſolid delight. Whereas a poor eſtate is eaſily comforted by the acceſſion of many things which it wanteth : a good meal, a ſmall gift, a little gain, or good ſucceſs of his labour doth greatly pleaſe a poor man with a very ſolid pleaſure : but a rich man hath nothing to pleaſe him, but a new toy, a puff of applauſe, ſucceſs at a horſe-race, at bowls, at hunting; in ſome petty ſport and paſtime, which can yeild but a very thin and tranſitory ſatisfaction to any man not quite brutified and void of ſenſe : whence contentedneſs hath place, and is needful in every condition, be it in appearance never ſo proſperous, ſo plentiful, ſo pleaſant. In the fulneſs of his ſufficiencies, he ſhall be in ſtraits.

Job 20. 22.

Chryſ. Tom. 7. p. 68.

The formal object thereof may indeed ſeem to be a condition diſtaſtful to our ſenſe, or croſs to our fancy; an adverſe or ſtrait condition; a condition of Poverty, of diſgrace, of any great inconvenience or diſtreſs incident to us in this World; but ſince the moſt men are abſolutely in ſuch a condition, expoſed to ſo many wants and troubles; ſince many more are needy comparatively, wanting the conveniencies that others enjoy, and which themſelves affect; ſince there are few, who in right eſtimation are not indigent and poor, that is, who do not deſire and fancy themſelves to want many things which they have not (for wealth conſiſteth not ſo much in the poſſeſſion of goods, as in apprehenſion of freedom from want, and in ſatisfaction of deſires) ſince care, trouble, diſappointment, ſatiety and diſcontent following them, do not onely haunt cottages, and ſtick to the loweſt ſort of people, but do even frequent palaces, and purſue men of higheſt rank; therefore any ſtate may be the object of contentedneſs; and the duty is of a very general concernment; Princes themſelves need to learn it; the leſſons teaching it, and the arguments perſwading it may as well ſuit the rich and noble, as the poor and the peaſant; ſo our Apoſtle himſelf doth intimate in the words immediately following our Text: I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound; Every where, and in all things I am inſtructed both to be full, and to be hungry: both to abound and to ſuffer need; he had the art not onely to manage well both conditions, but to be ſatisfied in either.

Phil. 4. 1

But ſeeing real adverſity, poverty and diſgrace have naturally the ſtrongeſt influence in diſturbing and diſordering our minds; that contentedneſs is plainly moſt needful in ſuch caſes, as the proper ſupport, or medicine of our mind in them; that other ſtates do need it onely as they, by fancy or infirmity, do ſymbolize or conſpire with theſe; therefore unto perſons in theſe ſtates we ſhall more explicitely apply our directions, and perſwaſions, as to the proper and primary ſubjects of contentedneſs; the which by analogy, or parity of reaſon may be extended to all others who by imaginary wants and diſtreſſes do create diſpleaſure to themſelves. So much for the object, or the ſubject, of the vertue.

2. The acts, wherein the practice thereof conſiſteth (which are neceſſary ingredients, or conſtant ſymptoms of it) belong either to the mind and underſtanding, or to the will and appetite, or to external demeanour and practice; being 1. right opinions and judgments of mind, 2. fit diſpoſitions and affections of heart, 3. outward good actions and behaviours, in regard to our condition and the events befalling us; the former being as the root and ſtock, the latter as the fruits and the flowers of the duty: unto which may be reduced the correſpondent negations, or abſence of bad judgments, affections and deportments in reſpect to the ſame objects.

(1.) As to our opinions and judgments of things contentedneſs requireth, that

1. We ſhould believe our condition whatever it be to be determined by God, and that all events befalling us, do proceed from him; at leaſt that he permitteth and ordereth them, according to his judgment and pleaſure: that ξὺν τῷ θεῷ πᾶς καὶ γελᾷ κὠδύρεται, all (as the Prophet ſingeth, both good and evil proceedeth out of the mouth of the moſt High; that affliction (as Job ſaid) cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground; as a thing ariſing ſpontaneouſly, or ſowed by the hand of ſome creature, but rather deſcendeth from him, who ſaith, I form the light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create evil; I the Lord do all theſe things.

Soph. Aj. Lor.
Lam. 3. 38.
Amos 3. 6.
1 Kings 12. 15, 24.
Eſ. 45. 7.

We are apt, when any thing falleth out unpleaſant to us, to exclaim againſt fortune, and to accuſe our ſtars; or to inveigh againſt the ſecond cauſes which immediately offend us, aſcribing all to their influence; which proceeding in us doth argue in us a Heatheniſh ignorance and infidelity, or at leaſt much inconſiderateneſs, and impotency of mind; that our judgment is blinded and clouded, or perverted and ſeduced by ill paſſions; for that in truth there is not in the world any occurrence meerly fortuitous, or fatal (all being guided and weilded by the powerful hand of the All-wiſe, and Almighty God) there is no creature which in its agency doth not depend upon God, as the inſtrument of his will, or ſubordinate thereto; wherefore upon every event we ſhould, raiſing our minds above all other cauſes, diſcern and acknowledge God's hand; as David did, when Shimei curſed him; Let him (ſaid the good King) curſe becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, Curſe David; as Job did when he was rifled of his goods, The Lord (ſaid he) gave, and the Lord hath taken away;

Atque Deos atque aſtra vocat crudelia mater.

2 Sam. 16.10.
Job 1. 21.

way; as our Saviour did, when in regard to the ſore hardſhips he was deſigned to undergo, he ſaid, The Cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink. Joh. 18. 11.

2. Hence we ſhould always judge every thing which happeneth to be throughly good and fit, worthy (all things conſidered) to be appointed, or permitted by that Governour of things; not entertaining any harſh thoughts of God, as if he were not enough wiſe, juſt, or benign in ordering us to be afflicted or croſſed; but taking all occurrences to be well conſiſtent with all God's holy Perfections and Attributes.

Παραχωρήσωμεν τοίνυν παρακαλῶ τῷ σοφῷ τοῦ παντὸς κυβερνήτῃ καὶ στέρξωμεν τὰ οἰκονομούμενα ὁποῖα ποτ' ἂν ᾖ, κἂν θυμήρη, κἂν λυπηρά. &c. Theod. Ep. 135.

We are apt to conceit, that the World is ill ordered, when we do not thrive and proſper therein; that every thing is irregular, which ſquareth not to the models of our fancies; that things had gone much better, if our deſigns had found ſucceſs; but theſe are vain and perverſe conceits; for that certainly is moſt good, which ſeemeth good to God; his will is a perfect ſtandard of right, and convenience, his eye never aimeth wrong, his hand never faileth to hit the mark of what is beſt; All his paths are mercy and truth; He is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works: So did King Hezekiah rightly judge, when upon denunciation of a ſad doom to his countrey and poſterity, he replied to the Prophet, Good is the word of the Lord, which thou haſt ſpoken; ſo even the Pagan Sage diſcerned, when he thus rebuked a male-content; You ſlave, do you forſooth deſire any thing, but what is beſt? and is not that onely beſt, which ſeemeth beſt to God?

Placeat homini quicquid Deo placuit, Sen. Ep. 75.

Στέργειν γὰρ χρὴ τὰ παρὰ τῆς ἀῤῥήτου σοφίας πρυτανευόμενα, καὶ ταῦτα πάντως νομίζειν συμφέροντα. Theod. Ep 15.

Οἶδε γὰρ ὡς σοφὸς τὸ συμφέρον, καὶ ὡς ἀγαθὸς τοῦτο ἡμῖν πραγματεύεται. Id. Ep. 18.

Pſal. 25. 10. 145. 17.

2 Kings 20. 19.

Ἀνδράποδον ἄλλο γὰρ θέλεις, ἢ τὸ ἄμεινον; ἄλλο οὖν ἄμεινον, ἢ τὸ θεῷ δοκοῦν; Arr. II. 7.

3. We ſhould even be ſatisfied in our mind that according to God's purpoſe all events do tend and conduce to our particular welfare; being not onely good to us as members of the world, and in order to more general ends, but ſerving towards our private benefit and advantage. We may be ready perhaps to confeſs, that whatever happeneth may be indeed juſt and fit in ſome diſtant, and occult reſpects, but hardly can we be induced to allow, that what we feel offenſive to our ſenſe or fancy, is really good for us, or was meant for our benefit; we cannot eaſily diſcern any thing of love or favour in ſuch matters: Thoſe ſort of Aphoriſms, in Holy Scripture, Happy is the man whom God correcteth; As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten; ſound ſtrangely, and are huge Paradoxes to us; ſuch is our blindneſs of mind, and dulneſs of apprehenſion: but God knoweth with ſo exact a skilfulneſs to manage things, that every particular occurrence ſhall be advantageous to the perſon, whom it toucheth; and accordingly to each one he diſpenſeth that which is moſt ſuitable to him; whence, as frequently it is neceſſary for our good that we ſhould be croſſed (for that indeed otherwiſe we ſhould often much harm, ſometimes we ſhould quite undo our ſelves) ſo it alwayes, when God ſo ordereth it, is to be deemed moſt profitable and wholeſome for us: we are therefore in reaſon obliged to take the ſaddeſt accidents, and ſharpeſt afflictions, coming upon us by providence, to be no other than fatherly corrections, or friendly rebukes, deſigned to render us good and happy; as arguments therefore and inſtances of eſpecial good-will toward us; conceiving under every diſpenſation that we do as it were hear God ſpeaking to us, as he did to thoſe in the Prophet: I know the thoughts, that I think toward you, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end.

Job 5. 17. Jam. 1. 12. Rev. 3. 19. Prov. 3. 12.

Jer. 29. 11.

4. Hence we are to believe, that our preſent condition (whatever it be) to carnal, or worldly ſenſe) is in right judgment, all things conſidered, the beſt; moſt proper, moſt deſirable for us; better than we, if it were at our diſcretion and choice ſhould put our ſelves into: for that God (the Saviour 1 Tim. 2. 4. of all men, who deſireth that no man ſhould periſh; who is good to all, and whoſe Ezek. 33. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9. tender mercies are over all his works; who exceedingly tendereth the welfare Pſal. 145. 9. of his children and ſubjects) doth ever (here in this life, the time of merit and trial) with a moſt wiſe good-will deſign our beſt good; and by the moſt proper methods (ſuch as do beſt ſuit our circumſtances and capacities) doth aim to draw us unto happineſs; and accordingly doth aſſign a ſtation for us moſt befitting in order to that great end; we therefore ſhould think our ſelves well-placed, becauſe we are where God doth ſet us, that we have enough, becauſe we have what God allotteth us.

There are other more particular judgments, which contentedneſs involveth, or which are required toward it; ſuch as theſe; that nothing originally is due to us, but all cometh purely from divine favour and bounty; that all adverſities are juſtly, and deſervedly inflicted on us, as the due wages, or natural fruits of our ſins; that our happineſs dependeth not on any preſent enjoyments or poſſeſſions, but may well ſubſiſt without them; that a competency (or ſo much as ſufficeth to maintain our life without intolerable pain) ought to ſatisfie our deſires; but theſe, and the like judgments will come opportunely to be conſidered as motives to the practice of the duty.

(2.) From ſuch acts of our mind or intellective parts concerning things incident to us, ſhould proceed the following diſpoſitions of will and affection.

1. We ſhould entertain all occurrences, how grievous ſoever to us, with entire ſubmiſſion, and reſignation of our will to the will of God; wholly acquieſcing in his good pleaſure; ſaying in our hearts after our Lord, Let Luk. 22. 42. not my will, but thine be done; with good Eli, It is the Lord, let him do what 1 Sam. 3. 18. ſeemeth him good; with David, Behold here I am, let him do to me as ſeemeth 2 Sam. 15. 26. good to him; even with Socrates, If ſo it pleaſeth God, ſo let it be; with Epictetus, I always chiefly will that, which cometh to paſs; for I account that better which God willeth than what I will my ſelf; I will adhere as a miniſter and follower to him, I purſue, I affect, I ſimply will with him: looking upon them as ſent from God we ſhould heartily bid them welcome, we ſhould kindly embrace them, we ſhould uſe them with all fair reſpect: ἀσπάζεσθαι τὰ συμβαίνοντα (to hug, or kindly to embrace things M. Anton. 3. incident) φιλεῖν τὰ ἀπονεμόμενα (to love things diſpenſed by providence) are precepts, 4. 2. 17. 10. 11. 12. 1. which even as dictated by natural reaſon Philoſophers do much inculcate.

Εἰ ταύτῃ θεοῖς φίλον ταύτῃ γενέσθω. Ἀεὶ μᾶλλον θέλω τὸ γινόμενον κρεῖττον γὰρ ἡγοῦμαι ὃ ὁ θεὸς θέλει ἢ ἐγώ· προσκείσομαι διάκονος καὶ ἀκόλουθος ἐκείνῳ συνορμῶ, ὀρέγομαι, ἁπλῶς συνθέλω. Arr. 3. 7.

This excludeth all rebellious Inſurrection, and ſwellings of mind againſt providence, ſuch as argue that we diſlike Gods government; that were we able we ſhould ſtruggle with Gods will; that we gladly would ſhake off his yoke; all ſuch ill reſentment and repining at our lot, which maketh Gods hand grievous, and his yoke uneaſie to us: ſuch affections as the wiſe man toucheth, when he ſaith, The fooliſhneſs of man perverteth his Prov. 19. 3. way, and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord.

2. We ſhould bear all things with ſteady calmneſs and compoſedneſs of mind, ſuppreſſing, or quelling thoſe tumults, thoſe ſtorms, thoſe exceſſes of paſſion, which the ſenſe of things diſguſtful is apt to excite; Let no man be moved by theſe afflictions; μηδένα σαίνεσθαι (i. e. θορυβεῖσθαι Chryſ.) 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. ſuch as are immoderate grief, fierce anger, irkſome deſpair, and the like. No adverſity ſhould ſo ruffle our minds, as to defeat and pervert the uſe of our reaſon ſo as to hinder us from perceiving, or performing what becometh us, ſo as to ingage us into any irregular, or unſeemly behaviour.

3. We ſhould indeed bear the worſt events with an εὐθυμία, that is,
with a ſweet and chearful diſpoſition of mind, ſo as Ἡ δὲ τοῦ κόσμου λύπη θάνατον κατεργάζεται 2 Cor. 7. 10. not to be put out of humour; not to be dejected, or quite diſcouraged by them, not to fall into that heavineſs, Prov. 12. 22. which (as the wiſe Man ſaith) maketh the heart of Εὐδοκῶ ἐν ἀσθενείαις ἐν ὕβρεσιν ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρείαις ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ. 2 Cor 12. 10. man to ſtoop; but rather finding delight and complacence in them, as conſidering whence they come, whithey εἰς πᾶσαν ὑπομονὴν καὶ μακροθυμίαν μετὰ χαρᾶς. Col. 1. 11. they aim and tend: ſuch was the diſpoſition and demeanour of the Apoſtles and primitive good Chriſtians in the midſt of their moſt grievous adverſities and Acts 5. 41. ſufferings; they rejoiced, &c. they did take joyfully the
Heb. 10. 34. ſpoiling of their goods, they did account it all joy, when they fell into divers tribulations:
Jam. 1. 2. they were ὡς λυπούμενοι, ἀεὶ δὲ χαίροντες, as grieved but alwaies rejoicing;
2 Cor. 6 10. their ſtate was grievous, but their heart was conſtantly chearful. Such a conſtant frame of mind we ſhould maintain, ſo continually prepared we ſhould be againſt all contingencies, that nothing ſhould happen amiſs to us, ſo as deeply to affect us, or to unſettle us in our humour; that every thing from Gods hand ſhould be acceptable; that no ſadneſs may ſeize on us, at leaſt that we do not indulge or cheriſh it; that in no wiſe we ſuffer any regret to quench that ſpiritual comfort and joy in God;
Pſal. 33. 1. which becometh the upright (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) and which we are ſo 97. 12. Phil. 4. 4. often enjoined perpetually to maintain, as in all caſes, ſo particularly under
3. 1. afflictions and trials. We cannot indeed hardly be content, if we
2 Cor. 13. 11. are not chearful; for it is hard to be altogether on the ſuffering and bearing 1 Pet. 4. 13. hand, without any pleaſure; the mind can hardly ſtand in a poiſe; ſo as neither to ſorrow or joy: we cannot digeſt adverſity, if we do not reliſh it; we ſhall not ſubmit to it as his will, if we do not take it for an 2 Cor. 12. 10. argument of his love: εὐδοκῶ, I (ſaith St. Paul) have a liking or pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſts ſake; for when I am weak then I am ſtrong.

4. We ſhould with faith and hope rely and wait on God for the removal, or eaſement of our afflictions; or however we ſhould confide in him for grace, and ſtrength to ſupport them well: as our Saviour did, when Luke 22 42. he prayed, Father, if thou be willing remove this Cup; as they did in the Iſa. 26. 8. Prophet, who ſaid, In the way of thy judgments, O Lord, we have waited on 33. 2. Lam. 3. 26. thee; according to that rule in the Lamentation; It is good that a man ſhould both hope, and wait quietly for the Salvation of the Lord; and thoſe Pſal. 37. 7. precepts in the Pſalms; Reſt in the Lord and wait patiently for him; wait
24. 17. upon the Lord, be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thine heart.

Pſal. 40. 1. We ſhould in any caſe be ready with the holy Pſalmiſt thus to interrogate, 33. 20. 62. 1. 25. 3 69. 6. and ſuſtain our ſelves, Why art thou caſt down, O my Soul, why art
44. 19. 16. 8. thou ſo diſquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I ſhall yet praiſe him, for Pſal. 42. 2. the help of his countenance.

Remembring, and conſidering, that (as we are expreſly taught in 2 Pet. 2. 3. Scripture, and as all our Religion doth clearly ſuppoſe) God knoweth to 1 Pet. 5. 7. reſcue the Godly out of tribulation, (he knoweth the proper ſeaſon, when it Matt. 6. 25. is fit to do it) that he is faithful, and will not ſuffer us to be tempted above
1 Cor. 10. 13. what we are able: but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that we may be able to bear it, reflecting, I ſay, on theſe certain points of Chriſtian 1 Theſ. 4. 13. Truth, we ſhould never ſorrow as thoſe who are without hope; we ſhould never deſpair of a good riddance from our adverſity, when it ſhall be ſeaſonable
Iſa. 40. 31. or beneficial for us; we ſhould always be aſſured of a comfortable Mic. 7. 7. ſupport under it, which is uſually better than deliverance from it; our minds ſhould never ſink into deſpondency, or diſconſolateneſs: that this is practicable in the worſt caſe, we have conſpicuous inſtances to aſſure us; it hath been the practice of moſt illuſtrious and excellent perſons, particularly of the holy Apoſtles; never was any condition, in outward 2 Cor. 4. 8. reſpects and appearance, more forlorn and diſmal than was theirs; yet in 1 Cor. 4. 11. no-wiſe bereaved them of hope, or courage; We (they could ſay) are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair, perſecuted, but not forſaken, caſt down, but not deſtroyed.

5. We ſhould indeed not ſo much as faint, or languiſh in our minds upon any ſuch occaſion; no adverſity ſhould impair the forces of our reaſon or our ſpirit; ſhould enervate our courage, or ſlacken our induſtry; ſhould render us ſick, or weak in heart; for, If (ſaith the wiſe Man) thou faint Prov. 24. 10. in the day of adverſity, thy ſtrength is ſmall; ('tis the ſign of an infirm mind) and μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, not to faulter or decay, μὴ ἐκλύεσθαι, not to be diſſolved 2 Cor. 4. 16. or disjointed in our ſouls (as the body is in ſcorbutick diſtempers) are Rev. 2. 3. 2 Theſſ. 3. 13. rules preſcribed to us in ſuch caſes: We do then indeed need a firm and Gal. 6. 9. robuſt conſtitution of ſoul; we ſhould then bear up moſt reſolutely and Heb. 12. 3. ſtoutly: the encouragement of Moſes to the people, entring into battel —nunc animis opus eſt, nunc pectore firmo. may well be accommodated to us, in regard to our conflicts with adverſities; Let not your hearts faint, fear not and do not tremble, neither be ye ter- Deut. 20. 3. rified becauſe of them.

6. We ſhould not be weary of our condition, or have irkſome longings for alteration; but with a quiet indifferency, and willingneſs of mind lie under it, during God's pleaſure; according to the Wiſe-man's advice; My ſon deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Lord, neither be weary of his correction; Prov 3. 11. and that of the Apoſtle, enforced by our Lord's example; Conſider him, Heb. 12. 3. that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, leſt ye be wearied and faint in your minds. We ſhould not think God ſlow, or his time long and tedious, as if he were forgetful of us, or backward to ſuccour us: as the Pſalmiſt was enclined to do, when in the day of trouble he brake forth into theſe conceits and expreſſions; Will the Lord caſt off for ever, Pſal. 77. 7, 10. and will he be favourable no more; is his mercy clean gone for ever, doth his promiſe fail for evermore; Hath God forgotten to be gracious; hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? Thus he in a ſad mood was apt to think and ſpeak; but recollecting himſelf he perceived it was his errour, and confeſſed it was his fault thus to imagine, I ſaid, it was mine infirmity; and it will be ours likewiſe, if we entertain ſuch conceptions and reſentments: we ſhould with the ſame mind endure our preſent ſtate, as we do paſs through a hard winter, or a time of foul weather, taking it for ſeaſonable and fit, becauſe the wiſe Authour of nature hath ſo appointed and ordered it.

7. We ſhould by adverſe accidents be rendred lowly in our own eyes, and ſober in our conceits of our ſelves; meek and gentle, tender and pliable in our temper and frame of ſpirit; ſenſible of our unworthineſs and meanneſs, of our natural frailty, penury and miſery, of our actual offences and miſcarriages; deeply affected in regard to the awful majeſty and power, to the perfect holineſs, and ſtrict juſtice of God: they ſhould quell our haughty ſtomach, they ſhould ſupple our ſtiff wilfulneſs, they ſhould ſoften our hard hearts, they ſhould mitigate our peeviſh humours; to effect theſe things is uſually the deſign of ſuch accidents, and it is ever the beſt fruit of them; this is that, which St. Peter adviſeth to, when he ſaith: Be humbled under the mighty hand of God; which God approveth 1 Pet. 5. 6. and encourageth with a gracious promiſe, when he ſaith; —To this man Iſa. 66. 2. will I look, even to him that is of a poor and contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word: this diſpoſition is an inſeparable adherent to contentedneſs; he that hath not his ſpirit thus broken or mollified, will hardly be content in any ſtate; he that is haughty in conceit, and ſturdy in humour will every where find that which will croſs and diſturb him.

Ita plerumque contingit, ut dum aliquos fratres noſtros in quantulacunque requie conſtitutos in mediis noſtris anxietatibus cogitamus, non parva ex parte recreemur, tanquam & nos ideo ipſi quietius tranquilliuſque vivamus. Aug. Ep. 144.

8. It is required that we ſhould, notwithſtanding any meanneſs, any hardneſs of our condition, be meekly and kindly affected toward others, being ſatisfied and pleaſed with their more proſperous ſtate. We ſhould not be angry with the World, becauſe we do not thrive or flouriſh in it; we ſhould not be ſullen, or peeviſh toward any man, becauſe his fortune is better than ours; we ſhould not repine or grudge at the good ſucceſs of any of our brethren, becauſe we Rom. 12. 15. want the like our ſelves, we ſhould rather rejoice with thoſe that rejoice; innocently filching ſome pleaſure from them, or borrowing ſome ſatisfaction from their enjoyments. It is humane thus to do, becauſe of the natural cognation and friendſhip of men; it is more eſpecially Chriſtian, becauſe of our ſpiritual conſanguinity; by vertue whereof we are ſo knit together, Rom. 12. 15. and made members each to other, that if (as St. Paul telleth us) one member 1 Cor. 12. 26. ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it, and if one member be honoured, all the members ſhould rejoice with it: We can hardly be content without thus appropriating the goods, and ſharing in the delights of others; he can never be content, who looketh with an evil eye upon other mens proſperity; he cannot do well himſelf, who loveth not to ſee his neighbour do well; numberleſs occaſions will happen to diſcompoſe and vex him.

Adverſity impatiently born is apt to ſour our ſpirits, and render us froward toward men; eſpecially when it proceedeth from the unkindneſs, ingratitude, or treachery of friends, or of perſons obliged to us for our good Will, or for benefits done to them; but nothing ſhould render us unkindly diſpoſed toward the World, nothing ſhould extinguiſh charity in us toward any man; ſo plain reaſon teacheth us, ſo great examples enforce, Moſes did not loſe his affection towards his Countreymen, becauſe he was by one of them threatened away into baniſhment and vagrancy; the Apoſtles became not diſaffected to the World, becauſe it miſuſed and perſecuted them; our Lord did continue moſt earneſtly to deſire, and laboriouſly to endeavour the good of thoſe who moſt deſpitefully uſed him; Like theirs, in all caſes, ſhould our diſpoſition be; we ſhould ever Pſal. 37. 8. obſerve the Pſalmiſt's advice; Ceaſe from anger, forſake wrath, fret not thy ſelf in any wiſe to do evil. Again.

9. Contentedneſs doth imply a freedom from all ſolicitude and anxiety of mind, in reference to proviſion for our needs, and conveniences of 1 Pet. 5. 7. life; according to thoſe rules and precepts of caſting our burthen and care Pſal. 37. 5. 55. 23. upon the Lord, of being careful for nothing, but commending our affairs to Phil. 4. 6. God's ordering; according to that moſt comfortable Precept of our Lord, Matt. 6. 31. Take no care, ſaying what ſhall we eat, or what ſhall we drink, or how ſhall we be cloathed; for your heavenly Father knoweth, that ye want all theſe things: If we do not thus, it is hardly poſſible that we ſhould be content; if we do not depend upon Providence, we cannot ſcape being often diſtracted with care, and perplexed with fear; we cannot chearfully hope for any thing we need, nor be quietly ſecure of any thing we poſſeſs.

Ἥδιστα πολυτελείας ἀπολαύουσιν οἱ ἥκιστα ταύτης δεόμενοι. Epic. ad Menœc.
Ventre nihil novi frugalius. Juv. Sat. 5.

10. It requireth alſo that we ſhould curb our deſires, and confine them in the narroweſt bounds we can; ſo as not to affect more in quantity, or better in quality, than our nature and ſtate do require: if we muſt have ſuperfluities, if we can onely reliſh dainties, we ſhall never be pleaſed; for as nature hath limits, and is content with little; as there is no ſtate in this World, the exigencies whereof may not be anſwered with a competence; ſo curioſity is an infinite, and inſatiable thing: He that loveth pleaſure ſhall be a poor man; he that loveth wine and oil ſhall not be rich; that is, he which is curious and nice in his deſires, will never have enough: The rule, which (according to St. Paul) ſhould regulate our deſires is this; Having food and rayment, let us with them be ſatisfied: if this will ſatisfy us, we may eaſily obtain ſatisfaction; a moderate induſtry with God's bleſſing, will procure ſo much; God hath promiſed to beſtow it; if this will not ſuffice, there is no ſure way of getting or keeping more; As God is no-wiſe obliged to provide us ſuperfluities, or concerned to relieve our extravagant longings; ſo we may fear that Providence will be ready to croſs us in our cares and endeavors tending to thoſe purpoſes; ſo that we ſhall be diſappointed in the procurement, or diſturbed in the fruition of ſuch needleſs things: However he that is moſt ſcant in his deſires, is likely to be moſt content in his mind: He (as Socrates ſaid) is neareſt the Gods (who needs nothing) that needeth feweſt things.

Prov. 21. 17.

Αἱ κατὰ φύσιν ὀρέξεις αὐταρκείᾳ περιορίζεται. Cl. Alex. Pæd 2. 1.

1 Tim. 6. 8.

Si ad naturam vives nunquam eris pauper; ſi ad opinionem, nunquam dives. Epic. Sen. Ep. 16.

Ὁ ἐλαχίστων δεόμενος ἔγγιστα θεῶν. Socr. in Xenoph. Apomn. 3.

In fine, contentedneſs doth import, that whatever our condition is, our minds and affections ſhould be modelled, and ſquared juſt according to it; ſo that our inclinations be compliant, our deſires be congruous thereto, ſo that eaſily we can comport with the inconveniences, can reliſh the comforts, can improve the advantages ſticking thereto; otherwiſe like an ill-made Garment, it will ſit unhandſome upon us, and be troubleſome to us. It is not uſually our condition it ſelf, but the unſutableneſs thereof to our diſpoſition and deſires (which ſoureth all its ſweets, and rendreth its advantages fruitleſs) that createth diſcontent; for (although it be very mean) others bear the ſame chearfully; many would be glad thereof; if therefore we will be content, we muſt bend our inclinations, and adapt our deſires to a correſpondence with our ſtate.

If we are rich, we ſhould get a large and bountiful heart, otherwiſe our Wealth will hang looſe about us; the care and trouble in keeping it, the ſuſpicion and fear of loſing it, the deſire of amplifying it, the unwillingneſs to ſpend or uſe it, will bereave us of all true ſatisfaction therein, and render it no leſs unſavoury to us, than unprofitable to others.

If we are poor, we ſhould have a frugal, provident, induſtrious mind, ſparing in deſires, free from curioſity, willing to take pains, able to digeſt hardſhips, otherwiſe the ſtraitneſs of our condition will pinch and gall us.

Are we high in dignity or reputation? we then need a mind well ballaſted with ſober thoughts, otherwiſe the Wind of Vanity will drive us into abſurd behaviours, thence will daſh us upon diſappointments, and conſequently will plunge us into vexation and diſcontent.

Are we mean and low? we need a meek and lowly, a calm and ſteady ſpirit: not affecting little reſpects, or reſenting the want of them; apt to paſs over or to bear quietly petty affronts and neglects; not apt to be moved by Words ſignifying contempt or diſdain; elſe (being fretted with ſuch things, which in this ill-natur'd and hard-hearted World we may be ſure often to meet with) we ſhall be uneaſie in our minds, and impatiently wiſh a change of our ſtate.

Theſe, and the like diſpoſitions and affections of ſoul this duty containeth, or requireth: from hence ſhould ariſe a correſpondent external demeanour, and ſuch actions as theſe which follow:

1. We ſhould reſtrain our Tongues from all unſeemly and unſavoury expreſſions, implying diſſatisfaction in God's proceedings, or diſpleaſure

Pſal. 78. 19.
Numb. 21. 5.

at his Providence; arguing deſperation or diſtruſt in God; ſuch as were thoſe of the diſcontented and impatient Iſraelites; They (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſpake againſt God; they ſaid, can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſs? behold he ſmote the rock that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed; can he give bread alſo, can he provide fleſh for his people? Such as they uſed, of whom the Prophet ſaith—— When they ſhall be hungry, they will fret themſelves, and curſe their King and their God; as thoſe in the Apocalypſe, who being afflicted with deſerved judgments, did blaſpheme the name of God, which had power over thoſe plagues —— blaſphemed the God of heaven becauſe of their pains and ſores. Into ſuch profane enormities of language is diſcontent apt to break forth, queſtioning the power of God, or his willingneſs to ſuccour us; venting wrath and diſpleaſure toward him; charging him fooliſhly with injuſtice, or with unkindneſs, or with negligence, or with impotency; the abſtaining from which behaviour, under the ſenſe of his bitter calamities, is a great commendation of Job; In all this ('tis ſaid) Job ſinned not, neither charged God fooliſhly.

Iſa. 3. 21.
Rev. 19. 9, 11, 21.

Job 1. 22.
Οὐκ ἔδωκεν ἀφροσύνην τῷ θεῷ.
Ἀλλ' ἔχε σιγῇ μῦθον, ἐπίτρεψον δὲ θεοῖσι. Hom. Od. τ'.

2. We ſhould indeed forbear any the leaſt complaint or murmuring, in regard to the diſpenſations of Providence; or upon diſſatisfaction in the ſtate allotted us: St. Jude ſaith, that God in the laſt day will come, to execute judgment, and to convince men of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him; theſe (ſubjoyneth he) are γογγυςαὶ, μεμψίμοιροι, murmurers, that complain of their lot: which ſignifieth the heinouſneſs and extreme dangerouſneſs of this practice. Wherefore doth the living man complain? is the Prophet's queſtion, implying it to be an unreaſonable and blameable practice Wherefore the advice of David is good; to ſuppreſs all complaint, to be ſtill and ſilent in ſuch caſes: Be ſtill (ſaith he) and know that I am God, and Be ſilent to the Lord; the which Precepts his practice may ſeem well to interpret and back; I was, ſaith he, dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe it was thy doing: and accordingly Job, Behold (ſaid he, after having conſidered all the reaſons he could imagine of God's proceedings) I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. And thus our Saviour, when he was oppreſſed and afflicted, opened not his mouth.

Jud: 15, 16.
Lam. 3. 39.
Pſal. 46. 10.
Pſal. 37. 7.
Pſal. 39. 9.
——σιωπῇ Πάσχειν ἄλγεα πολλὰ βίας ὑποδέγμενος ἀνδρῶν. Οδ. ν.
Job 40. 4.
Iſa. 53. 7.

Yea it is our duty, in theſe caſes, to ſpend our breath in declaring our ſatisfaction in God's dealing with us: acknowledging his wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſs therein; bleſſing and praiſing him for all that hath befallen us; each of us confeſſing after David; I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulneſs haſt afflicted me; imitating Job, who upon the loſs of all his goods did ſay no more than this; The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

Δόξα τῷ θεῷ πάντων ἕνεκεν. Οὐ γὰρ παύσομαι τοῦτο ἐπιλέγων ἀεὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι μοι τοῖς συμβαίνουσι. Chryſ. ad Olymp. Ep. 11.
Pſal. 119. 75.
Job 1. 21.

4. We ſhould abſtain from all irregular, unlawful and unworthy courſes toward the removal or remedy of our needs, or croſſes, chuſing rather to abide quietly under their preſſure, than by any unwarrantable means to relieve, or relax our ſelves; rather bearing patiently, than violently, like thoſe in the Prophet, breaking our yoke, and burſting our bands. Take heed, regard not iniquity; for this haſt thou choſen rather than affliction. We ſhould rather continue poor, than by couzenage, or rapine, endeavour to raiſe our fortune; we ſhould rather lye under diſgrace and contempt, than by ſinful or ſordid compliances ſtrive to acquire the reſpect and favour of men; we ſhould rather willingly reſt in the loweſt condition, than do

Jer. 5. 5.
Job 36. 21.

as thoſe, who by diſturbing the World, by fomenting diſorders and factions, by ſupplanting their neighbours Welfare, by venting ſlanders and diſtractions, do labour to amplify their eſtate : We ſhould rather endure any inconvenience or diſtreſs, than have recourſe to ways of evading them, diſallowed by God ; doing as the Jews did, who in their ſtraits, againſt the declared pleaſure of God, ſet their faces toward Ægypt, ſtrengthened themſelves in the ſtrength of Pharaoh, truſted in the ſtaff of that broken reed. In neglect or diffidence toward God, to embrace ſuch aids, is (as God in the Prophet declareth) a very blameable and miſchievous folly : Ephraim (ſaith he) is like a ſilly dove without heart ; they call to Ægypt, they go to Aſſyria——Wo unto them, for they have fled from me ; deſtruction unto them, becauſe they have tranſgreſſed againſt me. VVe may conſider how St. Paul reproveth the Corinthians for ſeeking a redreſs of wrong, ſcandalous and diſhonourable to the Church, Now therefore it is utterly a fault among you, that ye go to law one with another ; Why do ye not rather take wrong ; why do ye not rather ſuffer your ſelves to be defrauded? even to right your ſelves in a way, whereby any diſhonour may come to God, or damage to his Church is not to be approved ; and better it is in the Apoſtle's judgment, to bear any injury or damage our ſelves, Better it is (ſaith St. Peter) if the will of God be ſo, that we ſuffer for well-doing, than to do ill. And, Let them, who ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their Souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creatour ; is another wholeſom advice of that great Apoſtle.

Jer. 42. 15. 2. 18. 13.
Iſa. 30. 2. 3, 5. 6. 31. 1.
Ezek. 17. 15.
Hoſ. 7. 11, 13.
1 Cor. 6. 7.
1 Pet. 3. 17 4. 19.

5. VVe ſhould, notwithſtanding any adverſity, proceed in our affairs (ſuch as God requireth, or reaſon putteth us upon) with alacrity, courage and induſtry ; performing however, ſo far as our circumſtances do permit, what is good and fit for us : No diſappointment or croſs, no ſtraits or grievances of condition ſhould render us liſtleſs, or lazy, but rather it ſhould quicken and inflame our activity ; this being a good way to divert us from the ſenſe of our misfortunes, and to comfort us under their preſſure ; as alſo the readieſt way to remove or to abate them, τὸ παρὸν εὖ θέσθαι, to order the preſent well, whatever it be ; to make the beſt of a bad matter, to march forward whither reaſon calls (how difficultly ſoever, or ſlowly it be) in a rough or dirty way ; not to yeild to difficulties, but reſolutely to encounter them, to ſtruggle luſtily with them, to endeavour with all our might to ſurmount them ; are acts worthy of a manly reaſon and courage ; to direct ill accidents to good ends, and improve them to honeſt uſes, is the work of a noble vertue. If a bad game be dealt us, we ſhould not preſently throw up, but play it out ſo well as we can ; ſo perhaps we may ſave ſomewhat, we ſhall at leaſt be buſie till a better come. Put thy truſt in the Lord, and be doing good, is the Pſalmiſt's advice in ſuch a caſe ; and it is a practice neceſſary to the procuring and maintaining content : If we be not otherwiſe well employed, we ſhall be apt, in our thoughts, to melancholize, and dote upon our miſchances, the ſenſe of them will faſten upon our ſpirits, and gnaw our hearts.

Κερδαντέον τὸ παρὸν σὺν εὐλογιστίᾳ. Ant. 4. 26. 6. 2.

Τὸ παρὸν ἀπευθύνειν πρὸς ὁσιότητα καὶ δικαιοσύνην. Id. 12. 1.

Tu ne cede malis, ſed contra audentior ito.

Pſal. 37. 3.

6 VVe ſhould behave our ſelves fairly and kindly toward the inſtruments and abetters of our adverſity ; toward thoſe who brought us into it, and thoſe who detain us under it, by keeping off relief, and thoſe who forbear to afford the ſuccour we might expect ; forbearing to expreſs any wrath or diſpleaſure, to exerciſe any revenge or enmity toward them ; but rather, even upon that ſcore, bearing good will, and expreſſing kindneſs toward them ; not onely as to our brethren, whom, according to the general Law of Charity, we are bound to love, but as to the ſervants of God in this particular caſe, and the inſtruments of his pleaſure toward us; conſidering, that by maligning or moleſting them, we do expreſs ill re-ſentments of God's dealing with us, and in effect, through their ſides do wound his Providence; thus did the good King behave himſelf toward Shimei, when he was bitterly reproached and curſed by him; not ſuffer-ing (upon this accompt, becauſe he was God's inſtrument of afflicting 2 Sam. 16. 7. himſelf) that any harm ſhould be done unto him; thus the holy Apoſtles

1 Cor. 4. 12. being reviled did bleſs, being defamed did intreat; thus our Lord demeaned
1 Pet. 2. 23. himſelf toward his ſpiteful adverſaries; who, when he was reviled, did not
3. 9. revile again; when he ſuffered, he did not threaten, but committed it to him that judgeth righteouſly. In all theſe caſes we ſhould at leaſt obſerve the Prov. 24. 29. rules and advices of the wiſe Man; Say not, I will do ſo to him as he hath 20. 22. done to me, I will render to the man according to his work; Say thou not, I will recompence evil; but wait on the Lord, and he ſhall ſave thee.

Diſcontent uſually conſiſteth not ſo much in diſpleaſure for the things we ſuffer, as at the perſons who bring them on us, or who do not help to rid us from them; it is their preſumed injury or diſcourteſie which we do fret at; ſuch paſſions therefore toward men being diſcarded, our evils preſently will become ſupportable, and content eaſily will enſue. As men in any ſickneſs or pain, if their friends are about them (affording comfort or aſſiſtance) do not ſeem to feel any thing, and forbear complaining; ſo if the World about us doth pleaſe us, if we bear no diſaffection or grudge toward any perſon in view, our adverſity will appear leſs grievous, it will indeed commonly be ſcarce ſenſible to us.

In theſe and ſuch like acts, the duty and vertue of contentedneſs doth eſpecially reſide; or it is employed and exerciſed by them: And ſo much may ſuffice for the explication of its nature; I come now to conſider the way of attaining it, intimated by St. Paul here, when he ſaith, I have learned.

SERMON VI.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. 4. 11.

I have learned &c.

THESE Words ſignify how contentedneſs may be attained, or how it is produced: It is not an endowment innate to us; it doth not arrive by chance into us; it is not to be purchaſed by any price; it ſpringeth not up of its ſelf, nor ariſeth from the quality of any ſtate: but it is a product of diſcipline; I have learned.

It is a queſtion debated in Plato, εἰ διδακτὸν ἡ ἀρετή, whether Vertue be to be learned, St. Paul plainly reſolveth it in this caſe by his own experience and teſtimony. What Seneca ſaith in general of vertue (Nature giveth not Vertue ; it is an art to become good) is moſt true of this vertue ; it is an art, with which we are not born, no more than with any other art or ſcience ; the which, as other arts, cannot be acquired without ſtudious application of mind, and induſtrious exerciſe : No art indeed requireth more hard ſtudy and pain toward the acquiry of it, there being ſo many difficulties, ſo many obſtacles in the way thereto : We have no great capacity, no towardly diſpoſition to learn it ; We muſt, in doing it, deny our carnal ſenſe, we muſt ſettle our wild fancy, and ſuppreſs fond conceits ; we muſt bend our ſtiff and ſtubborn inclinations ; we muſt repreſs and reſtrain wanton deſires ; we muſt allay and ſtill tumultuous paſſions ; we muſt croſs our humour, and curb our temper ; which to do is a hard chapter to learn : Much conſideration, much practice, much contention and diligence are required thereto.

Non dat natura virtutem ars eſt bonum fieri. Sen. Ep. 89.

Virtus etiamſi quoſdam impetus ex natura ſumit, tamen perficienda doctrina eſt. Quintil. 12. 2.

Hence it is an art which we may obſerve few do much ſtudy ; and of the ſtudents therein few are great proficients ; ſo that Qui fit, Mecænas? Horace's queſtion, How comes it to paſs, that no body liveth content with the lot aſſigned by God? wanted not ſufficient ground.

However it is not like the Quadrature of the circle, or the Philoſophers Stone, an art impoſſible to be learned, and which will baffle all ſtudy : there are examples which ſhew it to be obtainable ; there are rules and precepts, by obſerving which we may arrive to it.

And it is certainly a moſt excellent piece of learning ; moſt deſerving our earneſt ſtudy : no other ſcience will yeild ſo great ſatisfaction, or good uſe ; all other ſciences, in compariſon thereto, are dry and fruitleſs curioſities ; for were we Maſters of all other knowledge, yet wanted the skill of being content, we ſhould not be wiſe or happy ; happineſs and diſcontent are ἀσύστατα (things incompatible.)

But how then may this skill be learned? I anſwer, chiefly (divine grace concurring) by theſe three ways. 1. By underſtanding the rules and precepts, wherein the practice thereof conſiſteth. 2. By diligent exerciſe, or application of thoſe rules to practice ; whereby the habit will be produced. 3. By ſeriouſly conſidering, and impreſſing upon our minds thoſe rational inducements (ſuggeſted by the nature and reaſon of things) which are apt to perſwade the practice thereof. The firſt way I have already endeavored to declare ; the ſecond wholly dependeth upon the will and endeavor of the learner ; the third I ſhall now inſiſt upon, propounding ſome rational conſiderations, apt (by God's help) to perſwade contentedneſs, and ſerving to cure the malady of diſcontent. They may be drawn from ſeveral heads ; from God, from our ſelves, from our particular condition or ſtate ; from the World or general ſtate of men here ; from the particular ſtate of other men in compariſon to ours ; from the nature and conſequences of the duty it ſelf : Every thing about us well examined and pondered, will miniſter ſomewhat inducing and aſſiſting thereto.

I. In regard to God we may conſider, that equity doth exact, and gratitude requireth, and all reaſon dictateth, that we ſhould be content ; or that in being diſcontented we behave our ſelves very unbeſeemingly and unworthily, are very unjuſt, very ingrateful, and very fooliſh toward him.

1 Sam. 3. 18.

1. Equity doth exact this duty of us, and in performing it we act juſtly toward God, both admitting his due right, and acknowledging his good

exerciſe

Matt. 20. 17. exerciſe thereof; That ſaying in the Goſpel, Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? is a moſt evident maxime of equity; it is therefore the natural right, and prerogative of God (as the Creator and Preſerver, and conſequently the abſolute Lord, Owner and Governour of all things) to aſſign his ſtation, and allot his portion to every perſon, as he judgeth good and convenient; it is moſt juſt that inviolably he ſhould enjoy this right; He being alſo infinitely wiſe and good, it is likewiſe moſt juſt to acknowledge that he doth perfectly well manage this right; Now by contentful ſubmiſſion to God's diſpoſal of things, we do worthily expreſs our due regard to both theſe, avowing his right, and approving his exerciſe thereof; but by diſcontent and regret at what happeneth, we do in effect injure God in both thoſe reſpects, diſavowing his right, and impeaching his management. We do thereby ſo renounce his right, as (ſo far as conceit and wiſh do reach) to invade it, and uſurp it to our ſelves: ſignifying, that in our opinion things ought not to be ordered according to his judgment and pleaſure, but after our fancy and humour; we claim to our ſelves the priviledge of controlling his eſtate, and diſpenſing his goods, ſo as to be our own carvers, and to aſſume to our ſelves ſo much as we think good; we imply, that, if we were able, we would extort the power out of his hands, and manage it our ſelves, modelling the World according to our conceits and deſires.

Multos inveni æquos adverſus homines, adverſus Deos neminem: Sen. Ep. 93.

We do alſo (ſince we cannot but perceive the other attempt of diſpoſſeſſing God to be frivolous and fruitleſs) in effect charge God with miſdemeanour, with iniquity or infirmity in his diſtribution and diſpoſal of things; intimating, that in our opinion he doth not order them ſo juſtly, or ſo wiſely as might be (not ſo well as we in our Wiſdom and Juſtice ſhould order them) for did we conceive them managed for the beſt, we could not but judge it moſt unreaſonable to be aggrieved, or to complain: ſo heinouſly inſolent, and unjuſt are we in being diſcontent. In earneſt, Which is moſt equal, that God ſhould have his Will, or we? For ſhame we ſhall ſay, God: Why then do we not contentedly let him have it?

Τὴν αὑτοῦ γνώμην ὑποτάσσειν τῷ διοικοῦντι τὰ ὅλα καθάπερ οἱ ἀγαθοὶ πολῖται τῷ νόμῳ τῆς πόλεως. Arr. 1. 12.

'Tis indeed, if we conſider it, the higheſt piece of injuſtice that we can be guilty of; exceeding that which we commit in any other ſort of diſobedience. For as in any State ſeditious Mutining is the greateſt crime, as moſt directly violating the Majeſty, and ſubverting the authority of the Prince; ſo in the World, none may be ſuppoſed more to offend and wrong its Sovereign Governour, than ſuch malecontents, who diſlike and blame his proceedings: Even a Heathen could teach us, that it is our duty to ſubject our mind to him that adminiſtreth all things, as good Citizens to the Law of the Commonwealth; if we do not, we are rebellious and ſeditious, which is the higheſt pitch of injuſtice toward our moſt gracious Sovereign.

Again, there can be no greater injury, or affront offered to God, than 1 John 5. 10. to give him the lie, by queſtioning his veracity or fidelity; this diſcontent plainly doth involve: for God hath expreſly declared himſelf ready upon Matt. 6. 25, 36. all occaſions to do us good; he hath promiſed to care for us, and never to Heb. 13. 5. forſake us, or leave us deſtitute; which Word of his if we did not diſtruſt, and take him to be unfaithful, we could not be diſcontent: As no man is diſpleaſed with his condition, or ſuſpicious of want, who knoweth that he hath abundant ſupply of all that he can need in a ſure place; that he hath a perſon moſt able, moſt willing, moſt faithful engaged to ſuccour him; ſo did we believe God to be true, who hath promiſed to help us, we could not be diſcontented for fear of any want.

We muſt at leaſt in ſo doing, ſuſpect God to be deficient in goodneſs toward us, or unwilling to help us, or we muſt apprehend him impotent, and unable to perform what he would, and what he hath promiſed, for us (like thoſe Infidels, who ſaid, Can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſs? Can he give bread alſo, can he provide fleſh for his people?) which conceits of God are alſo very unworthy, and injurious to him.

Pſal. 78. 19.

2. Gratitude requireth of us this duty: for we having no right, or title to any thing; all that we have coming from God's pure bounty; he having upon us all (whatever our condition comparatively is, or may ſeem to us) freely conferred many great benefits, common to all men among us (our being, life, reaſon, capacity of eternal happineſs, manifold ſpiritual bleſſings, incomparably precious and excellent) we in all reaſon ſhould be thankful for theſe, without craving more, or complaining for the want of other things. Whereas alſo all events (how croſs ſoever to our ſenſual conceits, or appetites) are by God deſigned, and diſpenſed for our good, gratitude requireth, that we ſhould thank God for them, and not murmur againſt them.

Iniquus eſt qui muneris ſui arbitrium danti non relinquit, avidus qui non lucri loco habet quod accipit, ſed damni quod reddidit, &c. Sen. ad Polyb. 29.

Surely if inſtead of rendring God thanks for all the excellent gifts which he moſt liberally (without any previous obligation to us, or deſert of ours) hath beſtowed on us, and continueth to beſtow, we fret, and quarrel, that he doth not in ſmaller matters ſeem to cocker us, we are extreamly ingrateful, and diſingenuous toward him: If any great Perſon here ſhould freely beſtow on us gifts of huge value (high preferment, or much Wealth) but with good reaſon, as we might preſume, ſhould withhold from us ſome trifle, that we fancy or dote upon, ſhould we not be very unworthy, if we ſhould take it ill and be angry with him for that cauſe? The caſe is plainly the ſame; God hath in the frankeſt manner beſtowed on us innumerable and ineſtimable goods, in compariſon whereto any comfort or convenience of our ſtate here is very trivial and deſpicable; Are we not therefore very ingrateful, if we heinouſly reſent the want of any ſuch things; if upon any ſuch accompt we diſguſt his Providence? Do we not deal, beyond all expreſſion, unworthily with God, in ſo much undervaluing the goods which he hath given us, or doth offer us, and hath put in our reach? He hath made us capable of the greateſt goods imaginable, and faithfully upon eaſie terms proffereth them to us; he even tendereth himſelf (himſelf, the immenſe and all-comprehending good, the fountain of all joy and bliſs) to be fully enjoyed by us; his Wiſdom he offereth to inſtruct and guide us, his power to protect and guard us, his fulneſs to ſupply us, his goodneſs to comfort us; he offereth his love and favour to us, in having which we virtually, and in effect have all things; becoming thereby, in the higheſt degree, rich and honourable and happy; And is it not then outragious unworthineſs to prize any other thing (any petty accommodation of this tranſitory life, any pitiful toy here) ſo much, as to be diſpleaſed for the want thereof; as if all this were not enough to ſatisfie our needs, or ſatiate our deſires; as if notwithſtanding all theſe immenſe effuſions (yea as it were profuſions) of bounty upon us, we could be indigent or unhappy? Shall we (to uſe that holy and moſt ingenuous conſideration of Job) receive ſo much good from the bountiful hand of God, and ſhall we not contentedly receive, or bear ſo ſmall evils from him? Evils indeed in name, and to groſs ſenſe, but not ſo in reality, not ſo in effect, at leaſt not ſo in God's deſign; but rather things very convenient and profitable for us; which is another aggravation of our ingratitude; for

Job 2. 10.

Εὐχαριστῶ σοι πάτερ ὦ ποιητὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων—ὅτι ἄκοντας ἡμᾶς εὖ ποιεῖς, &c. ſaid Philagrius in a grievous diſeaſe. Naz. Ep. 66.

Ἐπειδὰν τὸ μὴ πάσχειν οὐκ ἔχω τοῦτο γὲ τοῦ πάσχειν παρακερδαίνω τὸ φέρειν, καὶ τὸ εὐχαριστεῖν. Naz. de ſe. Ep. 63.

Are we not alſo very ingrateful in miſapprehending, and diſliking that, which God doeth out of very gracious intentions toward us; in loathing his fatherly and friendly diſpenſations; the fatherly chaſtiſements and friendly diſciplines, which he unwillingly is forced (is I ſay forced by his own great love, and by our preſſing needs) to inflict or impoſe upon us? Surely our ill opinion of or deſpiſing (as the wiſe-Man calleth it) theſe unpleaſant bleſſings is no ſmall fault; Neither will our not diſcerning (out of affected dulneſs, and ſtupid pravity not diſcerning) the wiſdom of God's methods, and the wholeſomeneſs of the means he uſeth to better us, excuſe us from foul ingratitude.

Prov. 3. 11.

Εὔχετο πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς ἁπλῶς τἀγαθὰ διδόναι ὡς τοὺς θεοὺς κάλλιστα εἰδότας ὁποῖα ἀγαθά ἐστι. Xenoph. de Socr.

Charior eſt illis homo quam ſibi.

3. Again, upon many accompts, reaſon farther dictateth in reſpect to God, that we ſhould be content: becauſe it is moſt reaſonable to acquieſce in God's choice of our ſtate, he being infinitely more wiſe than we, and infinitely better underſtanding what is good for us than we can do: becauſe he is well affected to us, and loveth us more than we do our ſelves; becauſe he hath a juſt right, and irreſiſtible power to diſpoſe of us, the which (whatever we can do, however we reſent it) he will effectually make uſe of; whence it is extremely fooliſh to be diſcontent: fooliſh it is to be diſſatisfied with the reſults of his Wiſdom, adhering to our vain apprehenſions, fooliſh to diſtruſt his goodneſs in compliance with our fond ſelf-love; fooliſh to conteſt his unqueſtionable right and uncontroulable power, having nothing but meer impotency to oppoſe againſt them; no leſs than downright madneſs it is to fret and fume at that which we can no wiſe help, to bark at that which lodgeth in heaven ſo far high above us, to ſolicite deaf neceſſity with our ineffectual Wailings; for if we think, that our diſpleaſure will affect God, that our complaints will incline him to alter our condition, or comply with our wiſhes, we do conceit vainly, and without any ground; ſooner may we, by our imagination, ſtop the Tides of the Sea, or turn the Streams of Rivers backward; ſooner, by our cries, may we ſtay the Sun, and change all the courſes of the Stars, than by our paſſionate reſentments or moanful clamours we can check the current of affairs, or alter that ſtate of things, which is by God's high decree eſtabliſhed: diſcontented behaviour will rather faſten our condition, or remove it into a worſe place; as it highly doth offend God, and encreaſeth our guilt, ſo it moveth God to continue, and to augment our evils. Thus lifting up our eyes to heaven, and conſidering the reference our diſpoſition and demeanour hath to God, will induce us to bear our caſe contentedly.

Οὐ γὰρ τις πρῆξις πέλεται κρυεροῖο γόοιο. I. ω

Σὺ δ' εἴκ' ἀνάγκῃ καὶ θεοῖσι μὴ μάχου. Eurip.

Lam. 3. 39.

II. Again, Reflecting upon our ſelves, we may obſerve much reaſon to be content with our ſtate; in whatever capacity we look upon our ſelves, it in reaſon becometh us, we in duty are obliged to be ſo.

As men and creatures we naturally are indigent and impotent; we have no juſt claim to any thing, nor any poſſeſſion maintainable by our power; all that we have, or can have, cometh from moſt pure courteſie and bounty; wherefore how little ſoever is allowed us, we have no wrong done us, nor can we juſtly complain thereat: Such beggars as we are muſt not pretend to be chuſers; if any thing be given us we may be glad, we ſhould be thanful. It is for thoſe who have a right and a power to maintain it, to reſent and expoſtulate, if their due be withheld; but for us that never had any thing, which we could call our own; that have no power to get or keep any thing; for us that came into the World naked and defenceleſs, that live here in continual, abſolute and arbitrary dependance for all our livelihood and ſubſiſtence, to conteſt with him that maintaineth us, or to complain of his dealing, is ridiculouſly abſurd and vain.

Upon a moral accompt we have leſs reaſon to challenge ought, or to complain of any thing; for we deſerve nothing but evil: If we rightly eſteem and value our ſelves, any thing will ſeem good enough for us, any condition will appear better than we deſerve; duly examining the imperfections and infirmities of our nature, the diſorder and depravedneſs of our hearts, the demeanours and enormities of our lives, we cannot but apprehend, that we are even unworthy of the crumbs which fall from our Matt 15. 17.
maſters table; we cannot but acknowledge with the good Patriarch, that we are leſs than the leaſt of God's mercies. Conſidering our natural un- Gen. 32. 10.
worthineſs, we ſhall ſee that we deſerve not ſo much as thoſe common benefits which all men enjoy, and without which we cannot ſubſiſt; ſo that in regard to them we ſhall be ready to acknowledge with the Pſalmiſt, Lord what is man that thou takeſt knowledge of him, or the Son of man, that Pſal. 44. 3.
thou makeſt accompt of him? Trying our hearts and examining our ways, Job 7. 27.
we ſhall ſoon diſcover it to be abundant mercy, that we are not utterly deprived of all good things, ſtript of all comforts, yea diſpoſſeſſed of our very being and life it ſelf; that we are obliged to acknowledge with thoſe in the Lamentations, It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not conſumed, be- Lam. 3. 22.
cauſe his compaſſions fail not. Were we far better than we are, yet it would not become us to conteſt with him, to whoſe diſpoſal and judgment we are ſubject; as Job teacheth us: Behold (ſaith he) God taketh Job 9. 12. &c. away, who can hinder him, who will ſay unto him, what doeſt thou? If he will *not withdraw his anger, the proud * helpers do ſtoop under him; how much leſs* * Κήτη ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my words to reaſon with him; whom though I were righteous, I would not anſwer, but I would make ſupplication to my judge; (Job 9. 32.)
but for us, men ſo unrighteous and guilty, to debate with, to queſtion the proceedings of our Judge, it is much more unſeemly.

Nothing can be more abſurd, than for men ſo deeply indebted, than for ſinners ſo very obnoxious to Wrath, to be aggrieved in any ſtate: Shall we, who are conſcious to our ſelves of ſo many great ſins againſt our God; who by wilful tranſgreſſions, or ſlothful neglects, have ſo much affronted and offended him; who have ſo little requited his love, and ſo much abuſed his patience; who have born ſo little fruit, and rendred him ſo little ſervice, ſhall we be angry that our humour is not pleaſed in all things? Shall we effect to ſwim in plenty, to wallow in pleaſure, to bask our ſelves in eaſe; to be fed with dainties, to be gaily clothed, to flouriſh in a brave and ſplendid condition, to be worſhipped and honoured, who deſerve not the meaneſt competence, or loweſt reſpect, to whom it is a great favour that we are permitted to ſubſiſt; whom ſtrict juſtice would often have caſt into utter miſery and diſconſolateneſs? It is not ſurely for ſuch perſons to be diſſatisfied with any thing in this World, but to bleſs God's exceeding mercy, that they abide there on this ſide of the bottomleſs pit; 'tis their part, with moſt ſubmiſſive patience, to bear whatever is inflicted on them, humbly ſaying with him in the Prophet, I Mic. 7. 9. will bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him. Seeing, whatever our croſſes or ſufferings be, vve cannot but confeſs to God with thoſe in Ezra, Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities deſerve; Ezr. 9. 13.
being gainers upon the matter, having ſo much of our debt remitted in effect, being in compariſon to vvhat vvas due to us very tolerably, yea very favourably dealt vvith, Why ſhould we be diſſatisfied? If in ſuch caſes men ſhould deal ſo favourably vvith us, vve ſhould be much pleaſed, and ready to thank them; Why then ſhould vve take it ill of God, vvhen he even in his hardeſt proceedings againſt us, expreſſeth ſo much indulgence and mercy?

Lam 2. 33.
Αὐθαίρετα πήματα.
Jer. 5. 25.
Pſal. 107. 17.
Jer. 17. 10.
21 14. 32.
19. 6. 19.
Lam. 3. 39. גבר

If we muſt be diſpleaſed, and luſt to complain, we have reaſon much rather to accuſe our ſelves, than to exclaim at Providence, to bewail our ſins, than to deplore our fortune: for our evils are not indeed ſo much the voluntary Works of God, who doth not afflict willingly, or grieve the children of men, as the natural products of our ſin, which we do wilfully commit: It is (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) our ſins that withhold good things from us; and bring evil things upon us: Fools, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquities, are afflicted. We make adverſity neceſſary, or expedient for us, then we cry out upon it: We labour in Planting, but cannot brook the fruit of our doings; we, like prodigals, fling away our eſtate in wanton profuſions, then complain of want; we affect and chuſe the cauſes, but loath, and cannot abide the certain conſequences; ſo fond in our conceits, ſo perverſe are we in our affections: Wherefore doth the living man complain, for the puniſhment of his ſins? ſo well might the Prophet demand and expoſtulate.

We may farther, looking on our ſelves, conſider our ſelves as ſervants to God, or rather as ſlaves, abſolutely ſubject to his diſpoſal; And ſhall any ſervant, ſhall a mere ſlave preſume to chuſe his place, or determine his rank in the family? Shall he appoint to himſelf what office he will diſcharge, what garb he ſhall go in, what diet he muſt have, what he will do, and how he ſhall be accommodated? Is it not fit that all theſe things ſhould be left to our Maſter's diſcretion and pleaſure? it is moſt reaſonable that we ſhould throughly acquieſce in his determination: even a Pagan Philoſopher could teach us, that this is reaſonable; who thus piouſly directeth his Speech to God: For the reſt uſe me to what thou pleaſeſt. I do conſent unto thee, and am indifferent. I refuſe nothing which ſeemeth good to thee; lead me whither thou wilt; put on me what garment thou pleaſeſt: Wilt thou have me to be a governour or a private man, to ſtay at home or to be baniſhed away, to be poor or to be rich? I will, in reſpect to all theſe things, apologize for thee with men; thus did Epictetus ſay, and ſuch ſpeech well becometh our relation to God: Servants ſhould be content with their Maſters appointments and allowances; they ſhould not onely themſelves forbear to find fault with, but be ready to maintain his proceedings againſt any, who ſhall preſume to reprehend or blame them. Eſpecially ſuch ſervants as we are, who, after we have done all things commanded us, muſt acknowledge that we are unprofitable ſervants; ſuch as can bring no conſiderable benefit to our Lord, or any-wiſe advance his ſtate; ſuch as therefore cannot challenge any Wages from him, more than he out of mere favour is pleaſed to allow: Could we, by our labours, enrich God, or raiſe him in dignity, or procure delight to him, it might ſeem congruous that he ſhould anſwerably reward us; but as he getteth nothing by us, ſo we cannot require any thing from him: our beſt ſervices do indeed rather need pardon, than deſerve any reward: No man hath lived ſo well, that he can pretend any thing from God, that he is not indeed much behind-hand in his accompts with God, having received from God far more of benefit than he can return to him in ſervice: No man, without extream preſumption and arrogance, can offer to preſcribe, in what meaſure, or what manner God ſhould reward him.

Χρῶ μοι λοιπὸν εἰς ὃ ἂν θέλῃς. Ὁμογνωμονῶ σοι, ἴσος εἰμί. Οὐδὲν παραιτοῦμαι τῶν σοι δοκούντων. Ὅπου θέλεις ἄγε· ἣν θέλεις ἐσθῆτα περίθες. Ἄρχειν με θέλεις, ἰδιωτεύειν μένειν φεύγειν, πένεσθαι, πλουτεῖν; ἐγώ σοι ὑπὲρ ἁπάντων τούτων πρὸς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἀπολογήσομαι. Arr. 2. 16.

Luc. 17. 10.

Again, if we conſider our ſelves as the children of God, either by birth or nature, or by adoption and grace, How can we be diſcontent for any thing? Have we not thence great reaſon to hope, or rather to be confident, that we ſhall never want any good thing (neceſſary or convenient for us) that no great evil ſhall ever oppreſs us? For is not God hence by paternal diſpoſition inclined, is he not in a manner, by paternal duty, engaged, in all needful occaſions, to ſupply and ſuccour us? Can we (without great profaneneſs, and no leſs folly) ſurmiſe, that he, which is ſo immenſly good, will be a bad (an unkind, or a neglectful) Father to us? No, as there is no other Father in goodneſs comparable to him, ſo none, in real effects of benignity, can come near him; ſo our Lord aſſureth us: If ye (ſaith he) being evil, know how to give good things to your children; How much more will your heavenly Father give good things to his children that ask him? Matt. 7. 11.

If we conſider our ſelves as Chriſtians, we have ſtill more reaſon to practiſe this duty: As ſuch, we are not onely poſſeſſed of goods abundantly ſufficient to ſatisfie our deſires; we have hopes able to raiſe our minds above the ſenſe of all preſent things; we have entertainments that ever may divert our minds, and fill our hearts with comfort; but we have alſo an aſſurance of competent ſupplies of temporal goods; for, Godlineſs is profitable to all things, having the promiſe both of the preſent life, and of that which is to come: 1 Tim. 4. 8. and, If we ſeek firſt the Kingdom of heaven, and its righteouſneſs, all theſe things ſhall be added unto us. Matt. 6. 33. It is indeed ſtrangely unhandſome for a Chriſtian ever to droop, or to be diſconſolate; for a friend of God, and an heir of heaven to think he wants any thing, or fear that he ſhall ever want; for him, whoſe treaſure and heart are above, to be ſo concerned with any thing here, as deeply to reſent it.

Again, if we reflect upon our ſelves as rational men, How for ſhame can we be diſcontent? Do we not therein much diſparage that excellent perfection of our nature? Is it not the proper work of reaſon to prevent things hurtful or offenſive to us, when that may be done; to remove them, if they are removeable; if neither of theſe can be compaſſed, to allay and mitigate them; ſo that we may be able well to ſupport them? Is it not its principal uſe to drive away thoſe fond conceits, and to quell thoſe troubleſome paſſions, which create, or foment diſquiet, and diſpleaſure to us? If it cannot do this, What doth it ſignifie? To what purpoſe have we it? Is not our condition really worſe than that of brute beaſts, if reaſon ſerveth only to diſcry the cauſes of trouble, but cannot enable to bear it? All the reaſons we have produced, and all that we ſhall produce againſt diſcontent, will, if we are reaſonable men, and reaſon availeth any thing, have this effect upon us.

Wherefore conſidering our ſelves, our capacities, our relations, our actions, it is moſt reaſonable to be content with our condition, and with whatever doth befal us.

SERMON VII.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. 4. 11.

I have learned in whatever ſtate, &c.

III. FArther, if we conſider, our condition (be it what it will, how poor, how mean, how deſpicable and forlorn ſoever) we can have from it no reaſonable ground of diſcontent.

1. Our condition in this World cannot (if rightly eſtimated, and well managed) be extremely bad, or ſorrowful; nothing here can occur inſupportable, or very grievous in it ſelf; we cannot, if we pleaſe, want any thing conſiderable, and the defect whereof may not be ſupplied, or ſupported by far better enjoyments. If we have high opinions of ſome things, as very excellent, or very needful for us, it's no wonder if we do want them, that our condition is unpleaſant to us; if we take other things for huge evils, then, if they be incumbent on us, we can hardly ſcape being diſpleaſed; but if we thoroughly look through ſuch things, and ſcan them exactly, valuing them, not according to fallacious impreſſions of ſenſe, or illuſive dreamings of fancy, but according to ſound dictates of reaſon, we may find, that neither abſence of the former, nor the preſence of the latter doth make our condition much worſe, or render our caſe deplorable.

We are, for inſtance, poor: that condition rightly weighed, is not ſo very ſad: for what is poverty? what but the abſence of a few ſuperfluous things, which pleaſe wanton fancy rather than anſwer need; without which nature is eaſily ſatisfied, and which if we do not affect, we cannot want? what is it but to wear coarſe clothes, to feed on plain and ſimple fare, to work and take ſome pains, to ſit or go in a lower place, to have no heaps of caſh, or hoards of grain, to keep no retinue, to have few friends, and not one flatterer? and what great harm in this? It is a ſtate, which hath its no ſmall conveniences and comforts, its happy fruits and conſequences; which freeth us from many cares and diſtractions, from many troubles and croſſes, from many encumbrances, many dangers, many temptations, many ſore diſtempers of body and ſoul, many grievous miſchiefs, to which Wealth is expoſed; which maintaineth health, induſtry and ſobriety; diſpoſeth us to feed heartily, to move nimbly, to ſleep ſweetly; which preſerveth us from luxury, from ſatiety; from ſloth and unwieldineſs. It yeildeth diſpoſition of mind, freedom and leiſure to attend the ſtudy of truth, the acquiſt of vertue. It is a ſtate, which Tert. de Pat. 7.

Τὰ δ' ἀργυρώματ' ἐστὶν ἤτε πορφύρα Εἰς τοὺς τραγῳδοὺς χρήσιμ' οὐκ εἰς τὸν βίον. Socrat.

Vid. Plut. in Ariſt.

Si vis vacare animo, aut pauper ſis oportet, aut pauperi ſimilis.

Multis ad Philoſophandum obſtitere divitiæ; paupertas expedita eſt, ſecura eſt. Sen. Ep. 17.

Sæpius pauper, & fidelius ridet. Sen. Ep. 80.

many have born with great chearfulneſs; many (very wiſe men) have voluntarily embraced; which is allotted by divine Wiſdom to moſt men; and which the beſt men often do endure; to which God hath declared an eſpecial regard, which the mouth of truth hath proclaimed happy; which the Son of God hath dignified by his choice, and ſanctified by his partaking deeply thereof; and can ſuch a condition be very loathſome; can it reaſonably diſpleaſe us?

Pſal. 10. 14. 35. 10. 68. 10. 69. 33. 72. 4. 13. 140. 12. 146. 7. 147. 2. Luk. 6. 20. Jam. 2. 5. Iſa. 66. 2.

Again, thou art ſuppoſe fallen into diſgrace, or from honour and credit art depreſſed into a ſtate of contempt and infamy? this alſo rightly prized is no ſuch wretchedneſs; for what doth this import? what, but a change of opinion in giddy men, which thou doſt not feel, which thou art not concerned in, if thou pleaſeſt; which thou never hadſt reaſon much to regard, or at all to rely upon? what is thy loſs therein? it is the breaking of a bubble, the ſinking of a Wave, the changing of a Wind, the cracking of a thing moſt brittle, the ſlipping away of a thing moſt fugacious and ſlippery; What is honour and fame, but thought, and what more flitting, what ſooner gone away than a thought? and why art thou diſpleaſed at the loſs of a thing ſo very ſlender and ſlimme? If thou didſt know its nature, thou canſt not be diſappointed; if thou didſt not, it was worth thy while to be thus informed by experience, that thou maieſt not any more regard it. Is the contempt, thou haſt incurred, from thy fault? bear the conſequence thereof patiently, and do thy beſt by removing the cauſe to reverſe the effect: is it undeſerved and cauſeleſs? be ſatisfied in thy innocence, and be glad that thou art above the folly and injuſtice of thoſe, who contemn thee. Let thy affections rather be employed in pity of theirs, than in diſpleaſure for thy own caſe. Did (let me ask thee again) the good opinion of men pleaſe thee? that pleaſure was fond and vain, and it is well thou art rid of it? did it not much affect thee, why then doſt thou much grieve at the loſs thereof? Is not alſo thy fortune in this kind the ſame with that of the beſt men? have not thoſe who have deſerved moſt honour, been expoſed to moſt contempt? But now (Job could ſay) they that are younger than I have me in deriſion, —they abhor me, they flee far from me, and ſpare not to ſpit in my face. And, I am, (could that great and good King ſay) a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people; All they that ſee me, laugh me to ſcorn; they ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head, —and, we are defamed, we are reviled, we are made as the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things unto this day, could the holy Apoſtles ſay; and He is deſpiſed and rejected of men, —he was deſpiſed and we eſteemed him not, was ſaid of our Lord himſelf; and can this condition then in juſt eſteem be ſo very pitiful or grievous?

Job 30. 1, 10.

Pſal. 22. 6, 7.

1 Cor. 4. 12, 13.

Iſa. 53. 3.

But thou art perhaps troubled becauſe thou art wrongfully cenſured, odiouſly traduced and defamed, abuſed by ſlander, or by detraction; which aſperſeth thee with things whereof thou art no-wiſe guilty, or repreſenteth thee in a character unworthy of thee: Be it ſo; what then; why doth this ſo much affect thee?

Exempl. Jeremiæ. Chryſoſt. ad Olymp. 16.

Gratias ago Deo meo, quod dignus ſum quem mundus oderit. Hier. Ep. 39. (ad Aſellam.)

Is not every man ſubject to theſe things? are not the greateſt men, are not the wiſeſt men, are not the beſt men liable to the ſame? yea chiefly liable, excellency being the ſpecial mark of envy and obloquy? can any good men eſcape free of them among ſo many bad men, whoſe doings as goodneſs doth reproach, ſo it provoketh their malignity? Canſt thou imagine to paſs thy days in ſo unjuſt and ſpiteful a World without incurring ſuch bad uſage; can ſo many vain, ſo many bold, ſo many lawleſs, Ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν ἠδίκησαν, ἐγὼ δ' οὐκ ἠδίκημαι. Theod. Ep. 80.

tongues be tied up, or kept within compaſs of truth, or equity? Wilt thou ſuffer it to be in the power of any man at his pleaſure ſo eaſily to diſcompoſe and vex thee? becauſe he will be bad, ſhalt thou be miſerable? why doſt thou not rather pleaſe thy ſelf in the conſcience of thy endeavouring to deſerve and do well; in thy innocence, and clearneſs from the blame which they impoſe on thee; in thy having given no cauſe of ſuch offence and outrage? why doſt thou not rather pity their unworthineſs and unhappineſs, who ſtoop to ſo mean and baſe practices, than fret at them, as bad to thee? they do themſelves far more miſchief, than they can do thee.

And why doſt thou not conſider, that indeed thou art guilty of many faults, and full of real imperfections, ſo that no man can eaſily derogate from thee more than thou deſerveſt: he may indeed tax thee unjuſtly, he may miſs in the particulars of his charge, he may diſcover groundleſs contempt, and ill-will toward thee; but thou knoweſt thy ſelf to be a grievous ſinner, and it is juſt that thou ſhouldſt be reproached, (God, for thy humiliation, or thy correction, may have ordered him, as David ſaid he might have ordered Shimei, to curſe thee) thou haſt therefore more need to be humble in reflection on thy ſelf, than to ſwell with diſdain in regard to his injury.

Thou ſhouldſt improve this dealing, and make it wholeſome to thee, by taking occaſion thence to correct thy real faults, and endeavouring to become truly more worthy; that ſo thy conſcience may be a firm bulwark againſt all detraction and obloquy: In fine, ſatisfie thy ſelf by committing thy ſoul with patience in well-doing unto thy Judge, who aſſuredly will do Theodor. Ep. 83. thee right, will protect thy reputation, and clear thy innocence: his judgment is onely worth regarding, be little concerned with any other.

Again, Being diſappointed and croſſed in the ſucceſs of their projects, or undertakings, is wont to put men, as they conceive, into a woful caſe: but why ſo? why (let me ask thee, who art diſcontented upon this ſcore) didſt thou build much expectation upon uncertainties? didſt thou not foreſee a poſſibility, that thy deſign might miſcarry, and if ſo, why art thou not prepared to receive vvhat happeneth? vvas it not an adventure, vvhy then art thou troubled with thy chance? Is he not a ſilly gameſter, that will fret and fume at a bad caſt, or at the loſs of a game? didſt thou refer the buſineſs to God's diſpoſal and arbitrement? if not, thou deſervedſt to be croſſed, and rather confeſs thy fault, than complain of thy fortune; if thou didſt ſo, then be conſiſtent with thy ſelf, and acquieſce in his determination: In fine, what is thy loſs, is't of thy care and pain? would it have been much better, that thou hadſt been careleſs or idle? but haſt thou not in lieu of them got ſome Wiſdom and Experience? haſt thou not (if thy attempt was reaſonable and worthy) exerciſed thy Wit, thy courage, thy induſtry? haſt thou not (by thy defeat) got an opportunity to expreſs equanimity and patience? if thou ſo improveſt thy diſappointment, thou art a gainer by thy loſs, thou doſt more than conquer by thy defeat: however ſince the gain, the credit, the preferment thou didſt aim at, and haſt miſſed, are things in themſelves of no great value, and ſuch as thou maieſt well live without, as other good men have done, thou canſt not have much reaſon to be diſpleaſed upon this accompt, or to reckon thy condition diſaſtrous.

But friends, will ſome ſay, have been unkind, have been ungrateful, have been fickle and falſe, have neglected, have deſerted, have betrayed
Pſal. 55. 7. me; It was not an enemy, that reproached me, then I could have born it, &c. this is indeed commonly moſt grievous; yet being ſcanned will not render a man's man's condition ſo lamentable : for, ſuch misbehaviour of friends is re their calamity than ours : the loſs of bad friends is no damage, but advantage ; 'tis but the loſs of a miſchief, and a trouble : the fewer come to have of ſuch, the more time we ſave, the leſs trouble we et with, the greater ſecurity we enjoy. The kindneſs we have ſhew- the obligations we have put on ſuch, are not quite loſt, they will ng the rewards due to humanity and fidelity ; it will yeild ſatisfaction us, that however we have been kind and faithful to them. The fide- y of remaining true friends may ſatisfie us ; however if all other friend- ip ſhould fail, there is one remains, worth millions of other friends, ho can never prove unfaithful, or inconſtant, who never will be un- ndful of us, or deficient in kindneſs toward us.

Jam ſibi pœnas dedit qui peccavit. Sen. de Gr. 2. 30.

The death of friends doth it may be oppreſs thee with ſorrow.

But canſt thou loſe thy beſt friend ; canſt thou loſe the preſence, the nverſation, the protection, the advice, the ſuccour of d ? is he not immortal, is he not immutable, is he inſeparable from thee ? canſt thou be deſtitute of iends, whilſt he ſtands by thee ? Is it not an affront, an nous indignity to him, to behave thy ſelf, as if thy ppineſs, thy welfare, thy comfort had dependance on y other but him ? is it not a great fault to be unwilling to part with any ng, when he calleth for it ?

Vid. Sen. Ep. 63.

Οὐ γὰρ ἀπέθανεν ὁ πάντα ἄριστος ἐκεῖνος ἀνὴρ κατὰ τὴν τοῦ Κυρίου φωνὴν, ἀλλὰ καθεύδει ὕπνον τοῦ συνήθους μακρότερον. Theod. Ep. 68.

Ἀποδημίαν τοίνυν παρακαλῶ μακρὰν τὴν τελευτήν. &c. Theod. Ep. 16.

Vid. Greg. Naz. Ep. 202.

Neither is it a loſs of thy friend, but a ſeparation for a ſmall time ; he onely parted from thee as taking a little journey, or ing for a ſmall time to repoſe ; within a while we ll be ſure to meet again, and joyfully to congratu- , if we are fit, in a better place, and more happy ; præmiſimus, non amiſimus ; we have ſent him thi- r before, not quite loſt him from us.

Cur doles ſi periiſſe non credis ? cur impatienter feras ſubductum interim quem credis reverſurum ? profectio eſt quam putas mortem. Tert. de Pat. 9. Sen. Ep. 63.

Thy friend, if he be a good man (and in ſuch friend- ps onely we can have true ſatisfaction) is himſelf in bad condition, and doth not want thee ; thou canſt t therefore reaſonably grieve for him ; and to grieve ly for thy ſelf is perverſe ſelfiſhneſs and fondneſs.

Impatientia in ejuſmodi & ſpei noſtræ male ominatur, & fidem prævaricatur, &c. Tert. ibid.

Πῶς τὸ τῆς ἀγάπης ἀγαθὸν, ἑαυτῷ τὰ ῥᾴω διδόντα τῷ πλησίον ἀπονέμειν τὰ φροντιστέρα ; Naz. Or. 19.

But thou haſt loſt a great comfort of thy life, and advantage to thy af- irs here ? is it truly ſo ? is it indeed an irreparable loſs, even ſecluding e conſideration of God, whoſe friendſhip repaireth all poſſible loſs ? hat is it, I pray, that was pleaſant, convenient, or uſeful to thee in y friend, which may not in good meaſure be ſupplied here ? was it a e of hearty good-will, was it a ſweet freedom of converſation, was ſound advice or kind aſſiſtance in thy affairs ? and mayſt thou not find oſe left, which are alike able, and willing to miniſter thoſe benefits ? y not the ſame means, which knit him to thee, conciliate others alſo to thy friends ? he did not alone ſurely poſſeſs all the good nature, all e fidelity, all the Wiſdom in the World, nor hath carried them all a- y with him ? other friends therefore thou mayſt find to ſupply his om : all good men will be ready, if thou art good, to be thy friends, ey will heartily love thee ; they will be ready to chear thee with their eet and wholeſome ſociety, to yield thee their beſt counſel and help up- n any occaſion : Is it not therefore a fond and unaccountable affection to kind of perſonality, rather than want of a real convenience that diſtur- th thee ?

Vid. Sen. Ep. 63.

In fine, the ſame reaſons, which in any other loſs may comfort us, ould do it alſo in this : neither a friend nor any other good thing we can enjoy is under any ſecurity of not ſoon loſing it ; our welfare is not annexed to one man no more than to any other inferiour thing ; this is the condition of all good things here to be tranſient and ſeparable from us ; and accordingly we ſhould be affected toward them.

Fragile fractum eſt, mortale mortuum eſt.

But farther, it perhaps diſpleaſeth us, that the courſe of the World doeth not go right, or according to our mind ; that Juſtice is not well diſpenſed, that vertue is under hatches, that worth is not conſidered, that Induſtry is not rewarded, that innocence and modeſty are trampled upon ; that favour, partiality, corruption, flattery, craft, impudence do carry all before them ; devouring all the encouragement due to honeſt induſtry ; This may be obſerved, but why ſhould it diſpleaſe ? art thou guilty of contributing to this ? then mend, if not, then bear ; eſpecially ſeeing thou canſt not help it ; for ſo it hath always been, and ever will be in the World, that things never have gone there as the wiſeſt judge, or the beſt men deſire : there have never been good men enough to ſway the World, nor will the few good men that are, be ſo active in promoting publick good, as bad are in driving on their private deſigns ; doth not this courſe of things neceſſarily ſpring from the nature of men, which therefore we ſhould no more be vexed at, than for that a Serpent hath poiſon, or that a Waſp hath a ſting ? we cannot wonder at it, why then ſhould we be ſtrangely affected by it ? could any man ever have been pleaſed, if this were a ſufficient cauſe of diſpleaſure ? However the World goes, we may yet make a tolerable ſhift, God is engaged competently to provide for us ; that ſhould ſatisfie us: God obſerveth theſe things no leſs than we, and he can eaſily hinder them, yet he thinketh good to ſuffer them ; and ſhall not we do ſo likevviſe ? there is in fine appointed a judgment hereafter, when all theſe things ſhall be redreſſed and ſet ſtreight ; when juſtice and vertue ſhall triumph, when integrity and induſtry ſhall find their due recompence, 'tis but a moment to that time, and till then we may reſt ſatisfied.

Thus if we do ſurvey and rightly ſtate things, which cauſe diſcontent, and ſeem to render our condition hard and ſad, we ſhall find, that not from the things, but from our ſelves all the miſchief proceeds : We by our imagination give to the lighteſt things a Weight, and ſwell the ſmalleſt things into a vaſt bulk ; we fancy them very frightful and doleful, then we tremble and grieve at them. Mere names (the names of poverty, of diſgrace, of defeat) do ſcare us, without conſulting reaſon, and conſidering how little terrible the things are themſelves. We follow ſilly prejudices, judging that highly good, which the vulgar admire, that very evil, which the weakeſt ſort of men are wont to complain of ; hence ſo commonly doth our caſe ſeem grievous. But in truth there is no condition ſo bad, but if we manage it well and wiſely, if we bend our mind to comply with it, if we moderate our paſſions about the accidents thereof, if we vigilantly embrace and enjoy the advantages thereof, may not be eaſily ſupportable, yea prove very comfortable to us ; it is our fond conceits, our froward humours, our perverſe behaviours, which do create the trouble, which ſeemeth adherent to any condition, and embittereth every ſtate ; which from any ſlight occaſion doth create vexation, and turneth every event into diſaſter.

—uſque adeo nulla eſt, ſincera voluptas,
Salicitique aliquid lætis intervenit—— Ovid.

2. As there is no condition here perfectly and purely good (not deficient in ſome conveniences, not blended with ſome troubles) ſo there is none ſo throughly bad, that it hath not ſomewhat convenient and comfortable therein ; ſeldom or never all good things do forſake a man at once, or all miſchiefs together aſſail him; ſomewhat uſually abideth, which well improved, or wiſely enjoyed, may ſatisfie a man, yea, render his eſtate comparable to theirs, who to vulgar eyes appear to be in the beſt condition: there is in every condition ſomewhat of good compenſating for its evils, and reducing it to a balance with other more plauſible ſtates. We are, ſuppoſe again, in poverty, (that inſtance I propound uſually, as the moſt ordinary ground of diſcontent) but have we therewith good health? then moſt rich men may envy us, and reaſonably we ſhould not exchange our ſtate with many crazy Princes: have we therewith our liberty? that is an ineſtimable good which often-times the greateſt men have wanted, and would have purchaſed with heaps of gold: have we therein a quiet mind, and a free uſe of our time? It is that, which wiſeſt men have prized above any Wealth, and which the chief men of the World would be glad to taſt of: have we a clear reputation? we have then the beſt good that any Wealth can yeild, we have more than many can obtain in the moſt ſplendid fortune: have we any friends ſticking to us? that is more than the richeſt perſons can aſſure themſelves of, to whom it is near impoſſible to diſtinguiſh the friends of their perſons from the flatterers of their fortune; it is a privilege and ſolace, which Princes are hardly capable to arrive at: have we a bare competency, ſufficient to maintain our life? we thereby keep our appetites in better compaſs, and our faculties in greater vigour; we thence better reliſh all things; we in conſequence thereof avoid the burthens, the diſeaſes, the vices of ſloth and luxury: have we farther (as if we are not very bad, we ſhall in this caſe aſſuredly have, humanity diſpoſing all men thereto) the compaſſion of men; is not this ſomewhat better, than that envy, that ill-will, that obloquy, which uſually do attend Wealth and Proſperity? why then, if our poor eſtate hath ſo manifold conveniencies, do we ſo much diſtaſt it? why do we ſo dwell and pore on the ſmall inconveniencies we feel under it, over-looking or ſlighting the benefits we may enjoy thereby? This indeed ordinarily is our folly and infirmity; that the want of any little thing, which we fancy or affect, doth hinder us, from ſatisfaction in all other things; One dead fly cauſeth all our ointment to ſtink; the poſſeſſion of a Kingdom will not keep us from being heavy and diſpleaſed (as Ahab was) if we cannot acquire a ſmall vineyard near us; on that one thing our head runs continually, our heart is wholly ſet, we can think on, we can taſt nothing elſe; the want of that notwithſtanding all our affluence doth pinch us, our dainties thence doth prove inſipid, our ſplendours appear dim, every thing but that is a toy unto us: So capriciouſly, and unaccomptably prone are we to diſcontent.

(

Aſſueſcendum conditioni ſuæ; & quam minimum de illa querendum, & quicquid habet circa ſe commodi apprehendendum eſt: nihil tam acerbum eſt, ex quo non æquus animus ſolatium inveniat. Sen. de Tranq. an. cap. 10.

Prov. 27. 7.

Eccleſ. 10. 1.

1 Kings 21. 1.

3. Is our condition (let me ask again) ſo extreamly bad, that it cannot be much worſe? Are we ſunk to the bottom of all calamity? No ſurely; God's Providence will not ſuffer, the ſtate of things here can never admit that to be: here are ſuccours always ready againſt extremities; our own Wit and Induſtry, the help of relations or friends, the natural pity and charity of our neighbours will preſerve us from them; eſpecially perſons in any meaſure innocent can never come near them; there will therefore never fail ſome good matter of content in what remains; a few good things, well improved, may greatly ſolace us; but however, let us imagine our caſe to be the worſt that can be; that a confluence of all temporal miſchiefs and wants hath arrived, that we are utterly bereaved of all the comforts this World afforded; that we are ſtripped of all our

Wealth, quite ſunk in our reputation, deſerted of every friend, deprived of our health and our liberty; that all the loſſes, all the diſgraces, all the pains which poor Job ſuſtained, or far more and greater than thoſe, have together ſeiſed on us; yet we cannot have ſufficient reaſon to be diſcontent; for that nevertheleſs we have goods left to us in our hands, or within our reach, far ſurpaſſing all thoſe goods we have loſt, much outweighing the evils we do undergo: When the World hath done its worſt, we remain Maſters of things incomparably better than it, and all it containeth; the poſſeſſion whereof may, and (if we be wiſe) will abundantly ſatisfie us. We are men ſtill, and have our reaſon left behind, which alone, in worth, exceedeth all the treaſures of the World; in well uſing which, and thereby ordering all things for the beſt, we become more worthy, and more happy than the moſt fortunate fool on earth; we may therein find more true ſatisfaction, than any Wealth, or any Glory here can miniſter: We may have a good Conſcience left, (the ſenſe of having lived well heretofore, or at leaſt a ſerious reſolution to live well hereafter) and that is a continual feaſt, yielding a far more ſolid and ſavoury pleaſure, than the moſt ample revenue can afford: We may have hope in God (the authour and donour of all good things) and thereby far greater aſſurance of our convenient ſubſiſtence and welfare, than all preſent poſſeſſions can beſtow; we have reſerved a free acceſs to the Throne of Grace, and thereby a ſure means (grounded on God's infallible word and promiſe) of obtaining whatever is good for us; we have a firm right to innumerable ſpiritual bleſſings and priviledges, each of them juſtly valuable beyond whole Worlds of ſelf; we can, in a word (we can if we pleaſe) enjoy God's favour, which immenſly tranſcendeth all other enjoyments, which vaſtly more than countervaileth the abſence of all other things; of this, by applying our ſelves to the love and ſervice of God, we are infallibly capable; of this no worldly force or fortune can diſpoil us; we having this, our condition cannot be poor, contemptible or pitiful; 'tis indeed thereby moſt rich, glorious and happy: For how can he be poor that hath the Lord of all things always ready to ſupply him; who hath God (as the Pſalmiſt is wont to ſpeak) to be his portion for ever? How can he be deſpicable, that hath the honour to have the Sovereign Majeſty of the World for his eſpecial friend? How can he be miſerable who enjoyeth the fountain of all happineſs, who hath the light of God's countenance to cheer him, who hath the conſolations of God's holy Spirit to refreſh and revive him? What can he want, who, beſide his preſent intereſt in all the needful effects of God's bountiful love, is an Heir of Heaven and everlaſting bliſs? Seeing therefore it is in our power to be religious, ſeeing we may, if we will (God's Grace concurring, which preventeth us to ſeek, which never is withheld from thoſe who ſeek it) be good Chriſtians; ſeeing nothing can hinder us from fearing God, or can ſeparate us from his love, neither can any thing render our condition bad or unhappy, really diſtreſſed or needy: O fear the Lord (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) for there is no want to them that ſeek him: The young Lions (or the rich, as the LXX. render it) do lack and ſuffer hunger; but they that ſeek the Lord ſhall not want any good thing; and, Whoſo keepeth the commandment, ſhall feel no evil thing, ſaith the Wiſeman; and, The hand of our God is upon all them that ſeek him, ſaith the Prophet; and, Who is he that ſhall harm you; (or do ill to you, or make you worſe) if ye be followers of that which is good? ſaith St. Peter; and, We know (ſaith St. Paul) that to them who love God all things cooperate for good; and, Godlineſs (ſaith he again) with contentedneſs is great gain; that is, ſuppoſing we have the goods which piety miniſtreth,

Job, who ἐκένωσεν αὐτοῦ (τοῦ διαβόλου) βελοθήκην ἅπασαν κατατοξευόμενος δι' αὐτοῦ, &c. Chryſ. ad Olymp. 2.

Prov. 15. 15.

Pſal. 73. 26. 16. 5. 119. 57. 142. 5.

Rom. 8. 39.

Pſal. 34. 9.

Πλούσιοι ἐπτώχευσαν. LXX.

Eccleſ. 8. 5.

Ezra 8. 22.

1 Pet. 3. 13.

Ὁ κακώσων.

Rom. 8. 28.

1 Tim. 6. 6.

ſtreth, although we have nothing more, we are, if we can be content, very well to paſs; it is abundantly ſufficient for us.

Why then, I pray, are we diſcontent? What do we groan or grieve for? what is it that we do want? is it the uſe of reaſon, is it vertue, is it God's favour? then indeed we have good cauſe to be diſpleaſed; for the want of thoſe things is indeed lamentable; but if we do want them, it is onely our ſelves that we ſhould complain of; for we may have them if we will, and who can help it if we will not? Who, if we ſhall wilfully deprive our ſelves of them, will be concerned to mind our complaints? But is it onely a lump of traſh, or a puff of honour, or a flaſh of pleaſure, that we do need? Is it that we cannot ſo delicately glut our bellies, or ſo finely cloath our backs, or ſo throughly ſooth our fancies, as we could wiſh, that we ſo pitifully moan? Is it being reſtrained in ſome reſpects from the ſwinge of our humour, is it that we are not ſo much regarded, or are ſlighted by ſome perſons, is it that we are croſſed in ſome deſign, that ſo diſcompoſeth and diſcourageth us? then are we ſottiſhly fond and childiſh in our conceits, and our affections: For proper it is to children, when as they want no ſolid or ſubſtantial goods, to wail for worthleſs toies and trinkets; 'tis for children, when they have not their will in petty and impertinent matters, to cry and lament; children are much affected with every Word, or little ſhew that croſſeth them: If we were (as St. Paul chargeth us to be) perfect men, if we had 1 Cor. 14. 20.
manly judgments, and manly affections toward things, we ſhould not ſo regard or value any of theſe temporal and tranſitory things, either good or evil, as by the want of one ſort, or by the preſence of the other, to be much diſturbed; we ſhould, with St. Paul, ſtyle any preſent evil ἐλαφρὸν τῆς θλίψεως, a lightneſs of affliction: We ſhould with him reckon, 2 Cor. 4. 17.
that the ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the Rom. 8. 18.
glories which ſhall be revealed to us: We ſhould with St. Peter greatly rejoyce, 1 Pet. 1. 6.
though for a ſeaſon we are in heavineſs, through manifold trials, or afflictions:
We ſhould eſteem any condition here very tolerable, yea very good.

4. In truth (if we will not mince the matter, and can bear a truth ſounding like a Paradox) uſually our condition is then better, when it ſeemeth worſe; then we have moſt cauſe to be glad when we are apteſt to grieve; then we ſhould be thankful, when we do complain; that it appeareth otherwiſe to us, it is becauſe in our taxations of things we do ordinarily judge (or rather not judge, but fancy, not hearing or regarding any dictate of reaſon) like beaſts; prizing things merely according to preſent ſenſe, or ſhew, not examining their intrinſick natures, or looking forward into their proper fruits and conſequences.

Adverſity (or a ſtate, wherein we are not furniſhed with all accommodations grateful to ſenſe or fancy; or wherein ſomewhat doth cleave to us offenſive to thoſe inferiour powers of ſoul) is the thing which we chiefly loath and abominate; whereas, in true judgment, nothing commonly is more neceſſary, more wholſome, more uſeful and beneficial to us; nothing is more needful, or conducible to the health of our ſoul, and to our real happineſs, than it: It is the School of Wiſdom, wherein our minds are diſciplined and improved in the knowledge of the beſt things, whence * Pſal. 119. 71.
it is termed παιδεία, that is, inſtructive chaſtiſement; * ſo David found 1 Cor. 11. 32.
it, It is, ſaid he, good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn Κρινόμενοι thy ſtatutes; and, our Lord himſelf, ἔμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, He learned obedience ὑπὸ κυρίου from what he ſuffered. It is the Academy wherein vertue is acquired and παιδευόμεθα. Heb. 5. 8.
exerciſed;

——multoque in rebus acerbis
Acrius advertunt animos ad religionem. Lucret. 3. p. 64.

Καὶ γὰρ τὸν τῦφον περισπᾷ, καὶ τὴν ῥᾳθυμίαν ἐκκόπτει πᾶσαν ἡ θλίψις, καὶ πρὸς ὑπομονὴν ἀλείφει καὶ ἐκκαλύπτει τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων τὴν εὐτέλειαν, καὶ πολλὴν εἰσάγει τὴν φιλοσοφίαν, &c. Chry. in 2 Cor. Orat. 26.

Miraris tu, ſi Deus, ille bonorum amantiſſimus qui illos quam optimos eſſe atque excellentiſſimos vult, fortunam illis cum qua exerceantur aſſignat? Sen. de Prov. 2.

Deut. 8. 2.

Eccleſ. 7. 3. Prov. 20. 30. Heb. 12. 11. Jam. 1. 3. Rom. 5. 3.

exerciſed; ſo God meant it to his people; The Lord thy God (ſaith Moſes) led thee this forty years in the wilderneſs, that he might humble thee, and prove thee. So the Wiſeman ſaith, that by the ſadneſs of the countenance the heart is made better; and, that ſtripes do cleanſe the inward parts of the belly. And, It yieldeth (ſaith the Apoſtle) the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs to them that are exerciſed thereby.

Job 23. 10. (Pſal. 66. 10.) Eccleſ. 2. 5. Sap. 3. 5. (Iſa. 1. 25. 48. 10. Mal. 3. 23. Dan. 11. 35.)

* Hence πειρασμὸς (trial) is the uſual word ſignifying it. 1 Pet. 1. 6, &c.

It is the furnace of the Soul wherein it is tryed, cleanſed and refined from the droſs of vain conceits, of perverſe humours, of vitious diſtempers: When (ſaith Job) he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth as gold: and, Gold (ſaith the Wiſe-man) *is tried in the fire, and acceptable men in the furnace of * adverſity.*

Iſa. 26. 16. 29. 19. Hoſ. 5. 15. Pſal. 78. 34. 107. 4. &c. 84. 16. 2 Chron. 2. 3, 12. Dan. 3. 34. Pſal. 119. 67.

It is the method whereby God reclaimeth ſturdy ſinners to goodneſs, engageth them to ſeek and ſerve himſelf; ſo of the Iſraelites, the Prophet ſaith, Lord in trouble have they viſited thee, they poured out a prayer when thy chaſtening was upon them; ſo Manaſſes, when he was in affliction he beſought the Lord his God, and humbled himſelf greatly before the God of his Fathers; ſo Nebuchadnezzar, after being driven from his Kingdom, his underſtanding returned unto him, and he bleſſed the moſt high, and praiſed and honoured him that liveth for ever. So David himſelf, Before, ſaid he, I was afflicted I went aſtray, but now have I kept thy word.

Ἡ γὰρ τῶν πόνων ἐπίτασις μισθῶν ἐπίτασίς ἐστι καὶ ἔρεισμα ἀσφαλὲς πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἄκοντας ἐκπεσεῖν καὶ γὰρ τῦφον καταστέλλει καὶ ῥᾳθυμίαν ἀποστρέφει καὶ φρονιμωτέρους ποιεῖ καὶ εὐλαβεστέρους ἐργάζεται, &c. Chryſ. tom. 6. Or. 9.

* 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Heb. 10. 36. ὑπομονῆς ἔχετε χρείαν, &c.

1 Pet. 1. 6. 4. 14.

It is that whereby God doth prepare men, and doth entitle them to the bleſſed rewards hereafter: Our light affliction (ſaith * St. Paul) which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; and, Ye (ſaith St. Peter) greatly rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon, if need be, ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, may be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. Such is the nature, ſuch the uſe, ſuch the fruits of adverſity.

Nihil infelicius eo, cui nihil unquam evenit adverſi, non licuit enim illi ſe experiri. Sen. de Provid. 3.

Non fert ullum ictum illæſa fælicitas. Ibid.

Quæ latet, inque bonis ceſſat non cognita rebus,
Apparet virtus, arguiturque malis.
Ovid. Triſt. 4. 3.

Non ignara mali miſeris ſuccurrere diſco. Æn. 2.

It is indeed ſcarce poſſible, that without taſting it ſomewhat deeply, any man ſhould become in good meaſure either wiſe or good. He muſt be very ignorant of himſelf (of his own temper and inclinations, of the ſtrength and forces of his reaſon) who hath not met with ſome rubs and croſſes to try himſelf and them with: the greater part of things he muſt little underſtand, who hath not experienced the worſt part: he cannot skill to weild and govern his paſſions, who never had them ſtirred up, and toſſed about by croſs accidents: he can be no good Pilot in matters of humane life, who hath not for ſome time ſailed in a rough Sea, in foul Weather, among ſands and ſhelves: he could have no good opportunity of employing throughly, or improving his Wit, his courage, his induſtry, who hath had no ſtraits to extricate himſelf from, no difficulties to ſurmount, no hardſhips to ſuſtain: The vertues of humility, of patience, of contentedneſs neceſſarily muſt be unknown to him, to whom no diſgraces, no wants, no ſore pains have arrived, by well enduring which, thoſe vertues are learnt, and planted in the Soul: Scarce can he become very charitable, or compaſſionate to others, who never himſelf hath felt the ſmart of affliction, or inconveniences of any diſtreſs;

for even, as the Apoſtle teacheth us, our Saviour himſelf was obliged to ſuffer tribulation, that he thence might become merciful, and diſpoſed to ſuccour the afflicted. (No wonder, if he that liveth in continual proſperity, be a Nabal, churliſh and diſcourteous, inſenſible of other mens grievances:) And how can he expreſs much piety or love to God, who is not (in ſubmiſſion to God's Will, and for his ſake) put to ſuffer any thing grievous, or want any thing deſirable? When can he employ any great faith or hope in God, who never hath any viſible need of ſuccour, or relief from him, who hath other preſent aids to confide in? Hovv can he purely delight in God, and place his ſole felicity in him? Hovv can he throughly reliſh ſpiritual things, vvhoſe affections are taken up by an affluence of other goods, whoſe appetites are glutted with enjoyment of other delights? What but deprivation of theſe things can lay open the vanity, the deceitfulneſs and ſlipperineſs of them? What but croſſes and diſappointments here can withdraw our minds from a fond admiration, and eager affection towards this World? What but the want of theſe joys and ſatisfactions, can drive us to ſeek our felicity otherwhere? when the deceit of riches poſſeſſeth us, How can we judge right of things? when cares about them diſtract us, How can we think about any thing that is good? when their ſnares entangle us, and their clogs encumber us, How can we be free and expedite in doing good? when abundance fatneth our hearts, and eaſe ſoftneth our ſpirits, and ſucceſs puffeth up our minds; when pride, ſenſuality, ſtupidity and ſloth (the moſt inſeparable adherents to large and proſperous Eſtates) do continually inſinuate themſelves into us, What Wiſdom, what Vertue are we like to have?

Heb. 2. 17, 18. 4. 15, 16.
1 Sam. 25. 6. 3.

Cum moleſtiæ in hujus vitæ fragilitate crebreſcunt, æternam requiem nos deſiderare compellunt. Mundus quippe iſte periculoſior eſt blandus, quam moleſtus, & magis cavendus quum ſe illicit diligi, quam cum admonet, cogitque contemni. Aug. Ep. 144.

Ardua nam res eſt opibus non tradere mores. Mart.

Munera iſta fortunæ putatis? inſidiæ ſunt. Sen. Ep. 8.

Viſcata beneficia. Ib.

Matt. 13. 22.
1 Tim. 6. 9.
Luc. 10. 41.
Deut. 32. 15.
Prov. 1. 32. 30. 9.
Hoſ. 13. 6.
Pſal. 30. 6.
Jer. 22. 21.
Amos 6. 1, &c.

Seeing then adverſity is ſo wholeſom and uſeful, the remedy of ſo great miſchiefs, the cauſe of ſo great benefits to us, Why ſhould we be diſpleaſed therewith? to be diſpleaſed with it, is to be diſpleaſed with that which is moſt needful, or moſt convenient for us, to be diſpleaſed with the health and welfare of our Souls; that we are reſcued from errours and vices, with all their black trains of miſeries and wickedneſs; to be diſpleaſed that we are not detained under the reign of folly and miſchief, that we are not inevitably made fools and beaſts. To be diſguſted with providence for affliction or poverty, is no other than as if we ſhould be angry with our Phyſician for adminiſtring a purge, or for preſcribing abſtinence to us; as if we ſhould fret at our Chirurgeon for ſearching our Wounds, or applying needful corroſives; as if we ſhould complain of the hand which draweth us from a precipice, or pulleth us out of the fire. Many benefits (ſaith Seneca) have a ſad and rough countenance, as to burn and cut in order to healing Such a benefit of God is adverſity to us; and as ſuch with a gladſome and thankful mind ſhould we receive it.

Gratulari & gaudere nos decet dignatione divinæ caſtigationis — O ſervum illum beatum, cujus emendationi Dominus inſtat; cui dignatur iraſci, quem admonendi diſſimulatione non decipit. Tert. de Pat. 11.

Ὁ ἁμαρτάνων κἂν μὴ κολάζηται, πάντων ἐστὶν ἀθλιώτερος, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ.

Ἡ νοσούντων ἰατρεία, ἢ ὑγιαινόντων γυμνασία. Simpl.

Κρείττων δ' ὑγιείας ἀχαλινώτου νόσος φιλόσοφος. Naz. Ep. 66.

Jude 23.

Beneficia multa triſtem & aſperam frontem habent, quemadmodum urere, & ſecare, ut ſanes. Sen. de Benef. 5. 20.

Horrorem operis fructus excuſat. Tert. Scorp. 5.

If with a diligent obſervation we conſult experience, we ſhall find, that as many have great cauſe to bewail, that they have been rich, that they have been blinded and corrupted with proſperity, that they have received their conſolation here; ſo many have great reaſon to be glad, that they have been poor, that they have been

Luke 6. 24. Jam. 5. 1. Amos 6. 1, &c.

Let our condition be what it will, we are the ſame. It doth not change us in our intrinſick worth, or ſtate. It is but a garment about us, or as weather.

diſ-

——Ego utrum
Nave ferar magna an parva, ferar unus & idem. Hor. Epiſt. 2. 3.

diſappointed, that they have taſted the bitter cup; it having inſtructed and corrected them; it having rendred them ſober and conſiderate; induſtrious and frugal, mindful of God, and devout toward him: And what we may rejoice in, when paſt, Why ſhould we not bear contentedly when preſent? Why ſhould not the expectation of ſuch good fruits ſatisfie us?

Why ſhould not ſuch a condition, being ſo plainly better in it ſelf, ſeem alſo better unto us? We cannot, if we are reaſonable, but approve it in our judgment; Why then are we not fully reconciled unto it in our affection?

SERMON VIII.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. 4. 11.

I have learned in whatever ſtate, &c.

5. BUT farther; Let our ſtate be, as to quality, what it will, good or bad, joyful or unpleaſant, we may yet conſider, that it cannot be deſperate, it may not be laſting; for there is not any neceſſary connexion between the preſent and the future; wherefore, as the preſent being momentany and tranſient, can little trouble us, ſo the future being unknown, and uncertain, ſhould not diſmay us. As no man reaſonably can be elevated with confidence in a good ſtate, preſuming on its duration, (Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth;) ſo no man ſhould be dejected for a bad one, in ſuſpicion that it will abide long; ſeeing neither (conſidering the frequent viciſſitudes that occur, and the flux nature of all things here) is each of them in it ſelf, ſtable; and the continuance of each abſolutely dependeth on God's arbitrary diſpoſal; and as God often doth overturn proſperity, to humane judgment moſt firmly grounded, ſo he moſt eaſily can redreſs the appearance to moſt forelorn adverſity; and he, being eſpecially the helper of the helpleſs, doth frequently perform it: As he poureth contempt upon Princes, and weakeneth the ſtrength of the mighty; ſo he raiſeth the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghil: He caſteth down the mighty from their ſeat, and exalteth the humble and meek: He ſendeth the rich empty away, and filleth the hungry with good things. He maketh ſore, and bindeth up, he woundeth, and his hands make whole.

Prov. 27. 1.

Multa intervenient quibus vicinum periculum vel prope admotum aut ſubſiſtat aut deſinat, aut in alienum caput tranſeat. Sen.

Pſal. 72. 12. 107. 9. 10. 4. 106. 9.
Job 12. 21. Pſal. 107. 40.
Iſa. 25. 5. Job 5. 11.
Iſa. 2. 11. Pſal. 18. 27.

Pſal. 113. 7. 107. 41.

Job 5. 18.
1 Sam. 2. 7.

Conſidering therefore the reaſon of things, and the nature of God, if our ſtate be at preſent bad or ſorrowful, we have more reaſon to hope for its amendment, than to fear its continuance. If indeed things went on Τοῖς γοῦν ἔχουσι καὶ σώφρονι λογισμῷ κεχρημένοις οὐδὲν τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἀδόκητον, οὐδὲν γὰρ τούτων σταθερὸν ἢ βέβαιον, &c. Theod. Ep. 14.

Sperat adverſis, metuit ſecundis, Alteram ſortem bene præparatum pectus. Hor. Carm. 2. 10.

on in a fatal track, meerly according to a blind and heedleſs chance, or a ſtiff and unalterable neceſſity; if there were no remedy from God's providence, or ſupport by his grace to be expected (although even then there would be no reaſon to grieve or complain; grief would be unreaſonable becauſe unprofitable, complaint would be vain, becauſe fortune and fate are deaf) yet our infirmity might ſomewhat excuſe that idle proceeding; but ſince not a Sparrow falleth to the ground, not a hair of our head periſheth; nothing at all paſſeth otherwiſe, than by the voluntary diſpoſition of a moſt wiſe and gracious God; ſince he doth always ſtrictly view, and is very ſenſible of our griefs; yea, doth in a manner ſympathize with them (according to thoſe pathetical expreſſions in the Prophets; His bowels ſound, and are troubled, his heart is turned within him; In all their afflictions he was afflicted.) Since he farther hath by promiſe obliged himſelf to care for us, to ſupport, and ſuccour us; we have all reaſon to hope, yea firmly to believe (if at leaſt we can find in our hearts to hope and to believe) that we ſhall, as ſoon as it is good and expedient for us, find relief and eaſe; we ſhall have that εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν, that ſeaſonable ſuccour, of which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh.

Mat. 10. 29, 30.
Luke 21. 18.
Hoſ. 11. 8.
Jer. 31. 20.
Iſa. 63. 9, 15.
Luc. 12. 29, 31.
Heb. 13. 5.
Matt. 6. 33.
Phil. 4. 6.
1 Pet. 5. 7.
Pſal. 55. 23.
37. 5.
Heb. 4. 6.

Hope lieth at the bottom of the worſt condition that can be; The poor (ſaith Job's friend) hath hope; and the rich can have no more; the future being equally cloſe to both; the one can have no greater aſſurance to keep what he hath, than the other hath to get what he needeth; yea clearly the poor hath the advantage in the caſe; for God hath more declared, that he will relieve the poor man's want, than that he will preſerve the rich man's ſtore: If then we have in every condition a hope preſent to us, Why do we grieve as thoſe who have no hope? having ever ready the beſt anchor that can be to reſt upon (for in this rolling Sea of humane affairs, there is no firmer anchor than hope) Why do we let our minds be toſſed with diſcontentful ſolicitudes and fears? Why do we not rather (as the Apoſtle injoineth) rejoice in hope, than grieve out of deſpair? Why do we not as the Prophet adviſeth, hope and wait quietly for the ſalvation of the Lord? the effect of ſo repoſing our ſelves for the future on God's Providence would be perfect content, and peace, according to that of the Prophet, Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed in thee, becauſe he truſteth in thee: And that of the wiſe Man, A patient man will bear for a time, and afterwards joy ſhall ſpring up unto him.

Job 5. 16.
1 Theſſ. 4. 13.
Heb. 6. 19.
Rom. 12. 12.
Lam. 3. 26.
Iſa. 26. 3.
Eccl. 1. 23.

The truth is, and it ſeemeth very obſervable, in order to our purpoſe, that moſt diſcontent ariſeth not from the ſenſe of incumbent evil, but from ſuſpicion, or fear of ſomewhat to come: Although God at preſent diſpenſeth a competency of food and rayment, although we are in a tolerable condition, and feel no extremity of want or pain, yet not deſcrying the way of a future proviſion for us, anſwerable to our deſires, we do trouble our ſelves; which demeanour implyeth great ignorance and infidelity; We think God obliged in kindneſs, not only to beſtow upon us what is needful in its ſeaſon, but to furniſh us with ſtores, and allow us ſecurities; we muſt have ſomewhat in hand, or we cannot truſt him for the future; this is that which our Saviour cautioneth againſt, as the root of diſcontent and ſign of diffidence; Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of it ſelf, ſufficient to the day is the evil thereof: An advice no leſs pious, than manifeſtly full of Reaſon and Wiſdom: For what a palpable folly is it to anticipate that evil which Πολλῆς μικροψυχίας ἐστὶν ὑπὲρ τῶν ὕστερον συμβησομένων ἢ μηδ' ὅλως συμβησομένων τὴν ἀθυμίαν ἤδη καρποῦσθαι. καὶ κόπτεσθαι. Chryſ. ad Stagir. 2.

Matt. 6. 34.

Calamitoſus eſt animus futuri anxius, & ante miſeriam miſer.

Ne ſis miſer ante tempus; cum illa quæ imminentia expaviſti, fortaſſe nunquam ventura ſint, certe nondum venerint, &c. Sen. Ep. 13.

Quod juvat dolori ſuo occurrere? ſatis cito dolebis cum venerit. Ibid.
Quoties incerta erunt maria, tibi fave. Ib.

we would avoid; then, when we earneſtly deſire to put off ſorrow, to pull it toward us; to feel that miſchief which poſſibly ſhall never be; to give it a being in our fancy, which it may never have in nature? Could we follow this advice, never reſenting evils before they come, never prejudging about future events againſt God's Providence, and our own quiet; conſtantly depending on the divine care for us; not taking falſe alarms, and trembling at things, which ſhall never come near us; not being diſturbed with panick fears, no diſcontent could ever ſeize upon us; for the preſent is ever ſupportable; our mind cannot be overwhelmed by the pangs of a tranſitory moment.

Lam. 3. 25.
Iſa. 30. 18. 40. 31. 49. 23.
Pſal. 25. 3. 37. 9. 9. 10.
2 Chron. 28. 9.
Ezra 8. 22.
Amos 5. 4.
2 Chron. 15. 2.
Eccl. 2. 10.

If we need farther encouragement for application of this remedy, we have manifold experiments to aſſure its vertue: as there are innumerable Promiſes, that none who hope in God ſhall be diſappointed, ſo there are many illuſtrious examples of thoſe, whom God hath in remarkable manner, and wonderful meaſure relieved from wants and diſtreſſes, raiſing them out of deepeſt poverty, contempt and worldly wretchedneſs, into moſt eminent degrees of Wealth and Proſperity: Look (ſaith the Hebrew Sage) into the ancient generations, and ſee; Who hath truſted in the Lord, and hath been aſhamed? Or who hath abiden in his fear, and hath been forſaken? Or who hath invoked him, and he did over-look? (or deſpiſe him?) If we look into thoſe generations, we may there find Joſeph out of ſlavery, and out of priſon, advanced to be the chief Governour of a moſt flouriſhing Kingdom; Moſes from an exile, and a vagrant, made the Redeemer and Commander of a populous Nation: Job out of extream poverty and diſgrace, reſtored to be in Wealth and honour twice greater than the greateſt men of the Eaſt: Daniel out of captivity and perſecution, become Preſident of the greateſt Monarchy on earth: David raiſed out of great meanneſs to higheſt dignity, reſtored out of extream ſtraits into a moſt proſperous ſtate; according to thoſe Words of admiration and acknowledgment; O what great troubles and adverſities haſt thou ſhewed me, and yet didſt thou turn and refreſh me, yea and broughteſt me from the deep of the earth again: Thou haſt brought me to great honour, and comforted me on every ſide: Thus hath God eminently done with divers, thus we may be aſſured that he will do competently with us, if with the like faith and patience, we do, as they did, rely and wait upon him.

Job 42. 10. 1. 3.

Pſal. 71. 18. 69. 29. 18. 36.

6. But farther, imagine or ſuppoſe, that our condition (ſo irkſome to us at preſent) vvill certainly hold on to the utmoſt; yet conſider alſo, that it ſoon vvill ceaſe, and change of it ſelf; ſince vve are mortal, our evils cannot be perpetual, we cannot long be infeſted with them.

Eccl. 7. 6.
(Pſal. 27. 13.) I had fainted, if I had not believed to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living.

As it may debaſe, and embitter all the proſperity in the World, to conſider, that it is very fading and ſhort-lived, that its ſplendour is but a blaze, its pleaſure but a flaſh, its joy but as the crackling of thorns; ſo it ſhould abate and ſweeten any adverſity, to remember, that it is paſſing away, and ſuddenly will be gone. Put, I ſay, the worſt caſe that can be, that it were certainly determined, and we did as certainly know it, that thoſe things which cauſe our diſpleaſure, ſhould continue through our whole life; yet ſince our life it ſelf will ſoon be ſpun out, and with it all our worldly evils will vaniſh, Why are we troubled? What is ſaid of our ſelves muſt in conſequence be truly applied to them; They flee like a ſhadow, and continue not; they are winds paſſing and coming not again; they are vapours appearing for a little time, and then vaniſhing away; they wither like graſs, and fade away as a leaf; they may dye before us, they cannot out-

1 Chron. 29. 15.
Pſal. 78. 39.
Jam. 4. 14.
Pſal. 90. 5.
Iſa. 64. 6. 40. 6.

live us; our life is but a hand breadth; And can then our evils have any vaſt bulk? Our age is as nothing; And can any croſſes therein be then any great matter? How can any thing ſo very ſhort be very intolerable? It is but ὀλίγον ἄρτι λυπηθέντες, being (as St. Peter ſpeaketh) a little while yet aggrieved; it is but μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον, a ſmall quantity whatever it be of time, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſaith, that we need patience, it is but τὸ παραυτίκα ἐλαφρὸν τῆς θλίψεως, an affliction for a preſent moment; and therefore as St. Paul intimateth, light and inconſiderable that we are to undergo. We have but a very narrow ſtrait of time to paſs over, but we ſhall land on the firm, and vaſt continent of eternity; when we ſhall be freed from all the troubleſome agitations, from all the perilous ſtorms, from all the nauſeous qualms of this navigation; death (which may be very near, which cannot be far off) is a ſure haven from all the tempeſts of life, a ſafe refuge from all the perſecutions of the World, an infallible medicine of all the diſeaſes of our mind, and of our ſtate: it will inlarge us from all reſtraints, it will diſcharge all our debts, it will eaſe us from all our toils, it will ſtifle all our cares, it will vail all our diſgraces: it will ſtill all our complaints, and bury all our diſquiets; it will wipe all tears from our eyes, and baniſh all ſorrow from our hearts: it perfectly will level all conditions, ſetting the high and low, the rich and poor, the wiſe and ignorant all together upon even ground; ſmothering all the pomp and glories, ſwallowing all the Wealth and Treaſures of the World.

Pſal. 39. 5.
Omnia brevia tolerabilia eſſe de[illegible] etiamſi magna. Cic. Læl.
1 Pet. 1. 6.
Heb. 10. 26, 27.
2 Cor. 4. 17.

Ἶσος χῶρος ἅπασι, πένησι τε καὶ βασιλεῦσι.
Πάντες ἴσοι νέκυες. Phocyl.

It is therefore but holding out a while, and all our moleſtation, of its own accord, will expire: time certainly will cure us; but it is better that we ſhould owe that benefit to reaſon, and let it preſently comfort us: it is better by rational conſideration, to work content in our ſelves, uſing the brevity and frailty of our life as an argument to ſuſtain us in our adverſity, than onely to find the end thereof as a natural and neceſſary means of evaſion from it.

Κρεῖττον——
Ὃ μέλλεις τῷ χρόνῳ χαρίζεσθαι, τοῦτο χαρίζεσθαι τῷ λόγῳ. Plut. ad Apoll.

Serious reflection upon our mortality, is indeed, upon many accompts a powerful antidote againſt diſcontent; being apt to extirpate the moſt radical cauſes thereof.

Is it becauſe we much admire theſe worldly things, that we ſo much grieve for the want of them? this will quell that admiration; For how can we admire them if we conſider, how in regard to us they are ſo very tranſitory, and evanid? How can we deem them much worth the having, when we can for ſo little time enjoy them, muſt ſo very ſoon quite part from them?

How can we dote on the World, ſeeing The World (as St. John ſaith) paſſeth away, and the deſire thereof? 1 Joh. 2. 27. 1 Cor. 7. 31. Eccl. 1. 3, &c.

How can we value any Worldly glory, ſince All the glory of men is (as St. Peter telleth us) as the flower of the graſs; ſince, (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) Man in honour abideth not, but is like the beaſts that periſh? 1 Pet. 2. 24. Pſal. 49. 12. 82. 6.

How can we ſet our heart on riches conſidering that Riches are not for ever, nor can (as the wiſe Man ſaith) deliver from death; that as St. James admoniſheth, The rich man fadeth in his ways; that it may be ſaid to any rich man, as it was to him in the Goſpel; Thou fool, this night thy life ſhall be required of thee, and what thou haſt prepared to whom ſhall it fall? Prov. 27. 24. 11. 4. Jam. 1. 11. Heb. 11. 25.

How can we fanſie pleaſure, ſeeing it is but πρόσκαιρος ἀπόλαυσις, a very temporary fruition; ſeeing however we do eat, or drink, or play, it followeth, the morrow we ſhall dye. 1 Cor. 15. 32.

How can we even admire any ſecular Wiſdom, and Knowledge, ſeeing

Pſal. 46. 4. ing that it is (as the Pſalmiſt telleth us) true of every man, that—his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts periſh; particularly it is ſeen that wiſe Men dye, no otherwiſe then as the Pſal. 49. 10. fooliſh, and brutiſh perſon periſheth; that, as Solomon with regret obſerved, Eccleſ. 9. 10. 2. 14. There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave whither we are going.

Do we admire the condition of thoſe, who, upon the ſtage, do appear in the ſtate of Kings, do act the part of wealthy men, do talk gravely and wiſely like Judges or Philoſophers for an hour or two? If we do not admire thoſe ſhadows and mockeries of ſtate, Why do we admire any appearances upon this Theatre of the World, which are ſcarce a whit leſs deceitful, or more durable than they?

Is it an envious or diſdainful regret at the advantages of others before us (of others perhaps that are unworthy and unfit, or that are, as we conceit, no more worthy and capable than our ſelves) that gnaweth our heart; is it, that ſuch perſons are more wealthy, more honourable, in greater favour or repute than we, that vexeth us? the conſideration how little time thoſe ſlender preeminences will laſt, may (if better remedies want due efficacy) ſerve toward rooting out that diſeaſe; the Pſal. 37. 1, 2. Pſalmiſt doth ſeveral times preſcribe it; Fret not thy ſelf (ſaith he) againſt evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity, for they ſhall ſoon be cut down like the graſs, and wither as the green herb; and, again, Pſal. 49. 17. Be not afraid when one is made rich, and when the glory of his houſe is encreaſed;
for when he dyeth he ſhall carry nothing away, his glory ſhall not deſcend after him: and he being fallen into this ſcurvy diſtemper, did follow his Pſal. 73. 3, 17. own preſcription, I was, ſaith he, envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked—until I went into the ſanctuary of God, then underſtood
I their end; ſurely thou didſt ſet them in ſlippery places— How are they brought into deſolation as in a moment? So likewiſe doth Solomon preſcribe:
Prov. 23. 17, 18. Let not (ſaith he) thine heart envy ſinners; Why not? becauſe ſurely there is an end, and thine expectation ſhall not be cut off: there will be a cloſe of his undeſerved proſperity, and a good ſucceſs to thy well-grounded hope:
So whatever doth breed diſcontent, the reflection upon our mortal and frail ſtate will be apt to remove it.

It was that which comforted Job, and fortified his patience under ſo Job 14. 14, 1. grievous preſſures; All the days of my appointed time (ſaid he) I will wait till my change come: He would not be weary while he lived of his afflictions, Gen. 47. 9. becauſe the days of man are few, and full of trouble: If they are full of trouble, and that be a ſadning conſideration; yet they are few, and that maketh amends, that is comfortable.

7. I add, that it is ſomewhat conſolatory to conſider, that the worſe our condition is here, the better we may hope our future ſtate will be;
the more trouble and ſorrow we endure, the leſs of worldly ſatisfaction we enjoy here, the leſs puniſhment we have to fear, the more comfort we may hope to find hereafter; for as it is a woful thing to have received our portion, to have enjoyed our conſolation in this life, ſo 'tis a happy thing to have undergone our pain here. A Purgatory under-ground is probably a fable; but a Purgatory upon earth hath good foundations. God is wont ſo to order it, that all men, that eſpecially good men, ſhall undergo it:
Heb. 12. 7. for, What Son is there whom the Father doth not chaſten? All that will live
2 Tim. 3. 12. godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution.

8. A like conſolation it is to conſider, that Wealth and Proſperity are great Talents, for the improvement of which we muſt render a ſtrict accompt, ſo that to whom much is given, from him much ſhall be required;
ſo

ſo that they are in effect a burthen ; from which poverty includes an exemption ; for the leſs we have, the leſs we have to do, the leſs we are reſponſible for ; our burthen is ſmaller, our accompt will be more eaſie.

9. I ſhall in reference to our condition, and the nature of thoſe things which cauſe our diſcontent, but propoſe one conſideration more, or ask one queſtion : What is it that we do want, or wait for ? Is it any good we want, which by our care and induſtry we can procure ; Is it any evil that afflicteth us, which by the like means we can evade ? If it be ſo, Why then do we not vigorouſly apply our ſelves to the buſineſs ; why do we not inſtead of idle vexation, and ineffectual complaints, uſe the means offered for our relief ? Do we like and love trouble ? let us then be content to bear it ; let us hug it and keep it cloſe ; if not, let us employ the forces afforded us by nature, and by occaſion, to repel and remove it.

Τῶν μὴ δυνατῶν ἐφίεσθαι ἀνδραποδῶδες ϗ ἠλίθιον, ξένου, θεομαχοῦντος ὡς μόνον οἷόν τε, τοῖς δόγμασιν τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ. Epict. 3. 24.

——Πράως φέρε μηδ' ἀγανάκτει, Ἐᾶσθαι δὲ πρέπει, καθ' ὅσον δύνῃ.
Aur. Carm.

But if we grieve and moan, becauſe we cannot obtain ſome good above our reach, or not decline ſome unavoidable evil, what do we thereby but palpably expreſs our folly, and wilfully heighten our Woe ; adding voluntary diſpleaſure to the heap of neceſſary want or pain ; impreſſing more deeply on our ſelves the ſenſe of them ? in ſuch a caſe patience is inſtead of a remedy, which though it do not throughly cure the malady, yet it ſomewhat alleviateth it, preventing many bad ſymptomes, and aſſwaging the paroxyſms thereof. What boots it to winſe and kick againſt fortune ? to do ſo will inflame us, and make us foam, but will not relieve or eaſe us : if we cannot get out of the net, or the cage, to flutter and flounce will do nothing but batter and bruiſe us.

——Levius fit patientia
Quicquid corrigere eſt nefas. Hor.

Animus æquus optimum eſt ærumnæ condimentum. Plaut. Rud.

Ἐπὶ ζημίᾳ χρημάτων ϗ θανάτῳ, ϗ ἀῤῥωςίᾳ ϗ τοῖς λοιποῖς συμπλέκομεν ἡμῖν δεινοῖς ἀλγοῦντες ϗ ἀθυμοῦντες οὐ μόνον οὐδεμίαν ἀπὸ ταύτης καρπούμεθα παραμυθίαν ἀλλὰ ϗ ἐπιτείνομεν τὰ δεινά. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. 3.

Οἱ δὲ τῷ πάθει δουλωθέντες οὐδὲν μὲν κερδαίνουσι ὀλοφυρόμενοι, ἀνιαρῶς δὲ βιώσονται, ϗ παροξύνουσι τὸν τῶν ὅλων ἡγεμόνα. Theod. Ep. 15.

But farther, to allay our diſcontents, let us conſider the World, and general ſtate of Men here.

1. Look firſt upon the World, as it is commonly managed and ordered by Men : Thou perhaps art diſpleaſed, that thou doſt not proſper and thrive therein, that thou doſt not ſhare in the goods of it ; that its accommodations and preferments are all ſnapt from thee ; that thy pretences are not ſatisfied, and thy deſigns fail ; this thou doſt take to be ſomewhat hard, and unequal ; and therefore art grieved. But if thou art wiſe, thou ſhouldſt not wonder ; if thou art good, thou ſhouldſt not be vexed hereat : for thou haſt not, perhaps, any capacity for this World ; thy temper and diſpoſition are not framed to ſuit with its way ; thy principles and rules do claſh with it, thy reſolutions and deſigns do not well comport with proſperity here ; thou canſt not, or wilt not uſe the means needful to compaſs worldly ends : Thou perhaps haſt a meek, quiet, modeſt, ſincere, ſteady diſpoſition ; thou canſt not be pragmatical, and boiſterous, eager and fierce, importunately troubleſome, intolerably confident, unaccomptably verſatile and various : Thou haſt certain pedantick notions about right and wrong, certain Romantick fancies about another World (unlike to this) which thou doſt ſtiffly adhere to, and which have an influence upon thy actions : Thou haſt a ſqueamiſh conſcience, which cannot reliſh this, cannot digeſt that advantageous courſe of proceeding ; a ſcrupulous humour, that hampereth thee, and curbeth thee from attempting many things which would ſerve thy purpoſe ; thou haſt a ſpice of ſilly generoſity, which maketh divers profitable ways of acting (ſuch as forging and feigning, ſupplanting others by detraction and calumny, soothing and flattering people) to be below thee, and unworthy of thee ; Thou thinkeſt thy ſelf obliged, and art peremptorily reſolved to obſerve ſtrict rules of juſtice, of humanity, of charity, to ſpeak as thou meaneſt, to do as thou wouldſt be done to, to wrong no man any-wiſe, to conſider and tender the caſe of other men as thine own : Thy deſigns are honeſt and moderate, conducible to (or at leaſt conſiſtent with) the publick good, injurious, or hurtful to no man ; Thou carrieſt on thy deſigns by fair ways, by a modeſt care, and harmleſs diligence ; nor canſt be drawn to uſe any other, how ſeemingly needful ſoever, which do ſavour of fraud, violence, any ſort of wrong or baſeneſs : Thou haſt an honeſt pride and haughtineſs of mind, which will not let thee condeſcend to uſe thoſe ſly tricks, crooked ways and ſhifts, which commonly are the compendious and moſt effectual ways of accompliſhing deſigns here: Thou art, in fine (like Helvidius Priſcus) in thy dealings and proceedings, pervicax recti, wilfully and peeviſhly honeſt : Such an one perhaps art thou, and ſuch is thy way ; And canſt thou hope to be any body, or get any thing here ? Shall ſuch a ſuperſtitious fop, ſuch a conſcientious ſimpleton, ſuch a baſhful ſneaksby, ſo phantaſtick a philoſopher pretend to any thing here ? No, thou art here piſcis in arido, quite out of thy element ; this World is not for thee to thrive in.

Τὸ τοῦ ἤθους χαλωόν τε καὶ ἄτεχνον καὶ πρὸς τὰς τοῦ βίου στροφὰς πάντως ἀνεπιτήδειον. Naz. Ep. 63.

This World is for Worldlings to poſſeſs and enjoy : It was (ſay the Rabbins) made for the preſumptuous ; and although God did not altogether deſign it for them, yet men have almoſt made it ſo : They are beſt qualified to thrive in it, who can luſtily buſtle and ſcramble ; who can fiercely ſwagger and huff ; who can fawn ; who can wind and wriggle like a Serpent ; who can finely cog and gloze ; who can neatly ſhuffle and juggle ; who can ſhrewdly over-reach and undermine others ; thoſe ſlippery wily artiſts, who can veere any whither with any Wind ; thoſe men of impregnable confidence, who can inſiſt upon any pretences ; who can be indefatigably and irreſiſtibly urgent, nor will be repulſed or baffled by any means ; thoſe who have a temper ſo laxe and ſupple, that they can bend it to any compliance advantageous to them ; who have a ſpirit ſo limber, that they can ſtretch it any whither ; who have face enough, and conſcience little enough to do any thing ; who have no certain principles, but ſuch as will ſort with their intereſts : no rules but ſuch Lesbian and leaden ones, that eaſily may be accommodated to their purpoſes : whoſe deſigns all tend to their own private advantage, without any regard to the publick, or to the good of others ; who can uſe any means conducible to ſuch deſigns, bogling at nothing, which ſerveth their purpoſe ; nor caring what they ſay, be it true or falſe ; what they do, be it right or wrong, ſo it ſeem profitable : this is called wiſdom, prudence, dexterity, ability, knowledge of men, and of the world, and I know not what beſide ; in the Scripture the wiſdom of the world, and of the fleſh, craft, guile, deceit, κυβεία, &c. For ſuch Perſons it is to flouriſh in this World ; Behold, theſe (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) are the ungodly, who proſper in the world ; and who encreaſe in riches ; They are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like other men ; Their eyes ſtand out with fatneſs, they have

Quod facillimum factu eſt, pravus, & callidus bonos & modeſtos antiebat. Tac. Hiſt. 1.

Ἐφιάλτης στρατηγὸς ὀνειδιζόμενος κατὰ τὴν πενίαν, τὸ δὲ ἕτερον, ἔφη, διὰ τί οὐ λέγεις; ὅτι δίκαιός εἰμι. Æl. 13. 39.

Pſal. 73. 12. 5, 7.

have more than heart could wiſh : They it is who love the World, who ſeek it, who ſtudy and labour for it ; Who ſpend all their time, and employ all their care about it ; And is it not fit they ſhould have it ? Is it not a pity they ſhould miſs it ? Is it not natural, that they who ſow to the fleſh, ſhould reap from the fleſh ? Should not they who uſe the proper means obtain the end ? Should not they arrive at the place, who proceed in the direct road thither ?

1 Joh. 2. 16.

But for thee, who canſt not find in thy heart to uſe the means, why doſt thou hope to compaſs the end ; or grieve for not attaining it ? Why doſt thou blend and jumble ſuch inconſiſtences together, as the eager deſires of this, and the hopes of another World ? It becometh not ſuch a gallant to whine and pule. If thou wilt be brave, be brave indeed ; ſingly and throughly ; be not a double-hearted mongrel ; think not of ſatisfying thy mind, and driving on other intereſts together ; of enjoying the conceit of being an honeſt man, with the deſign of being a rich or great man ; of arriving to the happineſs of the other World, and attaining proſperity in this ? Wouldſt thou enjoy both theſe ? What conſcience is there in that ? Leave rather this World unto thoſe, who are more fit for it, who ſeem better to deſerve it, who venture ſo much, and take ſuch pains for it ; do not go to rob them of this ſlender reward ; but with content ſee them to enjoy the fruits of their labour and hazard : Be thou ſatisfied with the conſequences of thy vertuous reſolutions and proceedings ; if it be worth thy while to live innocently, modeſtly and conſcientiouſly, do it, and be ſatisfied ; ſpoil not thine expectations by repining at the want of thoſe things, which thy circumſtances render incompatible with them : Follow effectually the holy Patriarchs and Apoſtles, who, without regret, forſook all, and chearfully went thither, whither conſcience and duty called them ; if thou art not willing to do ſo, Why doſt thou pretend to the ſame principles, or hope for the like rewards ? But leaving the conſideration of the World as man hath made it ; Conſider that this World is not in its nature or deſign, a place of perfect eaſe and convenience, of pure delight and ſatisfaction : What is this World but a region of tumult and trouble ; a Theatre of vanity and diſaſters ; the Kingdom of care, of fear, of grief and pain ; of ſatiety, of diſappointment, of regret and repentance ? VVe came not hither to do our VVill, or enjoy our pleaſure ; we are not born to make laws for our ſelves, or to pick our condition here : No, this world is a place of baniſhment from our firſt Countrey, and the original felicity we were deſigned to ; this life is a ſtate of travel toward another better Countrey and ſeat of reſt : and well it is, in ſuch caſes, (well it is, I ſay, for us as Exiles and Travellers) if we can find any tolerable accommodation, if we can make any hard ſhift ; It ſhould not be ſtrange unto us, if in this our peregrination we do meet with rough paſſages, foul ways, hard lodging, ſcant or courſe fare ; if we complain of ſuch things, we do not ſurely conſider where we are, whence we came, whither we are going ; we forget that we are the Sons of Adam, the Heirs of ſin and ſorrow, who have forfeited our reſt and joy upon Earth ; we conſider not, how unavoidable the effects are of that fatal condemnation and curſe, which followed our firſt tranſgreſſion ; we mind not that the perfection and purity of the bleſſings we have loſt is not to be found on this ſide the celeſtial Paradiſe. This world is purpoſely made ſomewhat unpleaſant to us, leſt we ſhould over-much delight in it, be unwilling to part with

1 Cor. 10. 13.

Πειρατήριον ἐστιν ὁ βίος τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ γῆς. Job 7. 1. Chryſ. ad Stag. 2. (p. 106.)

Οὐ νενομοθετηκότες ἤλθομεν εἰς τὸν βίον, &c. Plut. ad Apollon.

Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐπίπονον φύσει καὶ μοχθηρὸν ἡμῶν τὸν βίον κατεσκεύαζεν, ἵνα ἀπὸ ἐνταῦθα συνωθούμενοι θλίψεως ἐπιθυμίαν τῶν μελλόντων λάβωμεν, εἰ γὰρ νῦν, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. 5.

with it, wiſh to ſet up our reſt here, and ſay, Bonum eſt eſſe hic; It is good for us to be here.

This life is a ſtate of probation and exerciſe, like to that (which prefigu-red and repreſented it) of God's People in the Wilder-neſs, wherein God leadeth us through many difficulties and hazards, in many wants and hardſhips, to humble and prove us, in order to the fitting us for another more happy ſtate.

Deut. 8. 23.

Λογίζεσθε χρὴ, ὅτι ὁ μὲν τῶν ἐπάθλων, καὶ τῶν στεφάνων καιρὸς ὁ μέλλων ἐστὶν αἰών· τῶν δὲ παλαισμάτων καὶ τῶν ἱδρώτων παρών. Chryſ. ad Stagir. 2.

No temptation therefore (or affliction) can ſeize upon us, but ſuch as is humane; that is, ſuch as is natural and proper to men, 'tis the conſideration, which St. Paul uſeth to comfort and ſupport us in troubles; and a plainly good one it is, for ſeeing Man (as Eliphas ſaith) is born to trouble as the ſparks fly upward; that nothing is more natural to any thing, than trouble is to us; if we are diſpleaſed therewith, we are in effect diſpleaſed that we are men; it implyeth that we gladly would put off our nature, and ceaſe to be our ſelves; we grieve that we are come to live in this World, and as well might we be vexed that we are not Angels; or that we are not yet in Heaven, which is the only place exempt from inconveniences and troubles, where alone there is no ſorrow, no clamour, no pain.

Πειρασμὸς ἡμᾶς οὐκ εἴληφεν εἰ μὴ ἀνθρώπινος. 1 Cor. 10. 3.

Ecclуſ. 40. 1. Ἀσχολία ἔκτισται παντὶ ἀνθρώπῳ, &c.

Job 5. 7.

Vid. Max. Tyr. diſſ. 25. p. 244.

It was the doom of man to eat his bread in ſorrow all the days of his life. Gen. 3. 17.

Eccl. 1. 14. All is vanity and vexation of ſpirit.

Apoc. 21. 4.

It hath always been, and it will ever be an univerſal complaint and lamentation, that the life of man and trouble are individual companions, continually, and cloſely ſticking one to the other; that life and miſery are but ſeveral names of the ſame thing; that our ſtate here is nothing elſe, but a combination of various evils (made up of cares, of labours, of dangers, of diſappointments, of diſcords, of diſquiets, of diſeaſes, of manifold pains and ſorrows) that all ages, from wailing infancy to querulous decrepitneſs, and all conditions, from the careful Sceptre to the painful ſpade, are fraught with many great inconveniences peculiar to each of them; that all the face of the Earth is overſpread with miſchiefs as with a general and perpetual deluge; that nothing perfectly ſound, nothing ſafe, nothing ſtable, nothing ſerene is here to be found; this with one ſad voice all mankind reſoundeth; this our Poets are ever moanfully ſinging, this our Philoſophers do gravely inculcate; this the experience of all times loudly proclaimeth: For what are all Hiſtories but continual regiſters of the evils incident to men; what do they all deſcribe, but wars and ſlaughters, mutinies and ſeditions, tumults and confuſions, devaſtations and ruines? What do they tell us, but of men furiouſly ſtriving together, circumventing, ſpoiling, deſtroying one another? What do we daily hear reported, but cruel broils, bloudy battles, and tragical events; great numbers of men ſlain, wounded, hurried into captivity; Cities ſacked and raſed, Countries haraſſed and depopulated; Kingdoms and Commonwealths overturned? What do we ſee before us but men carking, toiling, bickering; ſome worn out with labour, ſome pining away for want, ſome groaning under pain? And amidſt ſo many common miſeries and miſfortunes, in ſo generally confuſed and diſmal a ſtate of things, is it not ridiculouſly abſurd for us, doth it not argue in us a prodigious fondneſs of ſelf-love, heinouſly to reſent, or impatiently to bemoan our particular, and private croſſes? May not reaſonably that expoſtulation

Ὁ βίος ἀληθῶς οὐ βίος, ἀλλὰ ξυμφορά.
Βίος γὰρ ὄνομ' ἔχει, πόνος δ' ἔργῳ πέλει. Eurip.

Quid eſt diu vivere, niſi diu torqueri? Aug.

Πλείη μὲν γὰρ γαῖα κακῶν, πλείη δὲ θάλασσα. Heſiod.

Ferre quam ſortem patiuntur omnes Nemo recuſet. Sen. Troad.

Ideo mihi videtur rerum natura, quod graviſſimum fecit, commune feciſſe, ut crudelitatem fati conſolaretur æqualitas. Sen. ad Polyb. 21.

lation of Jeremy to Baruch reach us? The Lord ſaith thus, Behold, that which I have built, I will break down; and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land; And ſeekeſt thou great things for thy ſelf? ſeek them not; for behold I will bring evil on all fleſh. Jer. 45. 4, 5.

4. Again, if we more cloſely and particularly ſurvey the ſtates of other men (of our brethren every-where, of our neighbours all about us) and compare our caſe with theirs, our condition hardly can appear to us ſo bad, but that we have many conſorts and aſſociates therein; many as ill, many far worſe beſtead than our ſelves. How many of our Brethren in the World may we obſerve conflicting with extream penury and diſtreſs; how many undergoing continual hard drudgeries to maintain their lives; how many ſorely pinched with hunger and cold; how many tortured with grievous ſickneſs; how many oppreſſed with debt; how many ſhut up under cloſe reſtraint; how many detained in horrible ſlavery; how many by the waſting rage of War rifled of their goods, driven from their homes, diſpoſſeſſed of all comfortable ſubſiſtence? How many, in fine, paſſing their lives in all the inconveniences of rude, beggarly, ſordid and ſavage barbariſm? And who of us have, in any meaſure, taſted of theſe, or of the like calamities? Yet are theſe Sufferers, all of them, the ſame in nature, with us; many of them, (as reaſon, as humility, as charity do oblige us to believe) deſerve as well, divers of them much better than our ſelves: What reaſon then can we have to conceive our caſe ſo hard, or to complain thereof? Were we the only perſons expoſed to trouble, or the ſingle marks of adverſe fortune; could we truly ſay with the Prophet; Behold, if there be any ſorrow like my ſorrow: We might ſeem a little Lam. 1. 12. unhappy; but ſince we have ſo much good company in our conceived Woe; ſince it is ſo ordinary a thing to be poor, and diſtreſſed; ſince our caſe is (as the Poet ſpeaketh) not rare, but commonly known, trite, and drawn out from the heap of lots, offered to men by fortune: Since pitiful objects do thus environ and encloſe us; 'tis plainly reaſonable, humane and juſt, that we ſhould without murmuring take, and bear our lot: For what priviledge have we to alledge, that we rather than others ſhould be untouched by the grievances, to which mankind is obnoxious? Whence may we pretend to be the ſpecial favorites, mignons, privado's and darlings of fortune? Why may not God as well deal with us, as he doth with other men; what grounds have we to challenge, or to expect, that he ſhould be partial toward us; why ſhould we imagine, that he muſt continually do miracles in our behalf, cauſing all thoſe evils, which fall upon our neighbours all about to skip over us, bedewing us, like Gideon's Jud. 6. 37. fleece, with plenty and joy, while all the earth beſide is dry; cauſing us, like the three children, to walk in this wide furnace, unſcorched and un- Dan. 3. 25. ſinged by the flames encompaſſing us? Are we not men framed of the ſame mould; are we not ſinners guilty of like offences, with the meaneſt Peaſant, the pooreſt beggar, the moſt wretched ſlave (if ſo, then a parity of Fortune with any men doth become us, and may be due to us; then it is a perverſe and unjuſt frowardneſs to be diſpleaſed with our lot) we may, if we pleaſe, pity the common ſtate of men, but we cannot reaſonably complain of our own; doing ſo plainly doth argue, that we do unmeaſurably overprize, and overlove our ſelves. When once a great King did exceſſively, and obſtinately grieve for the death of his Wife, whom he tenderly loved, a Philoſopher obſerving it, told him, "That he was ready to comfort him by reſtoring her to life, ſuppoſing

——Nec rara videmus
Quæ patoris; caſus multis hic cognitus & jam
Tritus, & è medio fortunæ ductus acervo. Juv. Sat. 13. v. 8.

Te nunc delicias extra communia cenſes Ponendum, &c. Juv. Sat. 13. v. 140.

" onely, that he would ſupply what was needful toward the performing " it; " The King ſaid he was ready to furniſh him with any thing; the Philoſopher anſwer'd, " That he was provided with all things neceſſary, " except one thing; what that was the King demanded; he replied, That if he would upon his Wives Tomb inſcribe the names of three perſons, who never mourned, ſhe preſently would revive: the King, after inquiry, told the Philoſopher, That he could not find one ſuch man, Why then, O abſurdeſt of all men (ſaid the Philoſopher ſmiling) art thou not aſhamed to moan as if thou hadſt alone fallen into ſo grievous a caſe; when as thou canſt not find one perſon, that ever was free from ſuch domeſtick affliction? So might the naming one perſon, exempted from inconveniences, like to thoſe we undergo, be ſafely propoſed to us as a certain cure of ours; but if we find the condition impoſſible, then is the generality of the caſe a ſufficient ground of content to us; then may we, as the wiſe Poet adviſeth, ſolace our own evils by the evils of others, ſo frequent and obvious to us.

Ἔτι ὦ πάντων ἀτοπώτατε θρηνεῖς ἀναίδην, ὡς μόνος ἀλγεινῷ τοσούτῳ συμπλακεὶς, ὃ μηδὲ ἕνα τῶν πώποτε γεγονότων ἄμοιρον οἰκείου πάθους ἔχων δεῖξαι. Jul. Ep. 38.

Παρηγορεῖ τὰ κακὰ δι' ἑτέρων κακῶν. Menand.

5. We are indeed very apt to look upward toward thoſe few, who, in ſuppoſed advantages of life (in wealth, dignity, or reputation) do ſeem to tranſcend, or to precede us, grudging and repining at their fortune; but ſeldom do we caſt down our eyes on thoſe innumerably many good people, who lie beneath us in all manner of accommodations, pitying their mean, or hard condition; like Racers we look forward, and purſue thoſe who go before us, but reflect not backward, or conſider thoſe who come behind us: two or three outſhining us in ſome ſlender piece of proſperity, doth raiſe diſſatisfaction in us; while the doleful ſtate of millions doth little affect us with any regard or compaſſion: hence ſo general diſcontent ſpringeth, hence ſo few are ſatisfied with their condition; and epidemical eye-ſore moleſting every man; for there is no man, of whatſoever condition, who is not in ſome deſirable things outſtripped by others; none is ſo high in fortune, but another in Wit or Wiſdom, in Health, or ſtrength, or beauty, in reputation or eſteem of men may ſeem to excel him; he therefore looking with an evil or envious eye on ſuch perſons, and with ſenſeleſs diſregard paſſing over the reſt of men, doth eaſily thereby loſe his eaſe and ſatisfaction from his own Eſtate: Whereas if we would conſider the caſe of moſt men, we ſhould ſee abundant reaſon to be ſatisfied with our own; if we would a little feel the calamities of our neighbours, we ſhould little reſent our own croſſes; a kindly commiſeration of others more grievous diſaſters would drown the ſenſe of our leſſer diſappointments.

Nulli ad aliena reſpicienti ſua placent. Sen. de Ira. 3. 31.

——Neque ſe majori pauperiorum
Turbæ comparet, hunc atque hunc ſuperare laboret:
Ut cum carceribus, &c. Hor. Sat. 1.

Inde fit ut nemo, qui ſe vixiſſe beatum
Dicat; &c. Hor. Sat. 1.

Si vis gratus eſſe adverſus Deos, & adverſus vitam tuam, cogita quàm multos anteceſſeris. Sen. Ep. 15.

Nunquam erit felix, quem torquebit felicior. Sen. de Ira. 3. 31. Vid. Ib.

If with any competent heedfulneſs we view perſons and things before us, we ſhall eaſily diſcern, that what abſolutely ſeemeth great and weighty, is indeed comparatively very ſmall and light; that things are not ſo unequally diſpenſed, but that we have our full ſhare in good, and no more than our part in evil; * that Socrates had reaſon to ſuppoſe, that if we ſhould bring into one common ſtock all our miſhaps, ſo that each ſhould receive his portion of them, gladly the moſt would take up their own, and go their ways; that conſequently it is both iniquity and folly in us to complain of our lot.

Εἰ συνενέγκαιμεν εἰς τὸ κοινὸν τὰς ἀτυχίας, ὥστε διελέσθαι τὸ ἴσον ἕκαστον, ἀσμένως ἂν τοὺς πλείους τὰς αὑτῶν λαβόντας ἀπελθεῖν. Plut. Apoll.

* That at worſt we are Extremi primorum, extremis uſque priores. Hor. Epiſt. 2. 2.

6. If even we would take care diligently to compare our ſtate with the ſtate of thoſe, whom we are apt moſt to admire and envy, it would afford matter of conſolation, and content unto us. What is the ſtate of the greateſt perſons (of the Worlds Princes and Grandees) what but a ſtate encompaſſed with ſnares, and temptations numberleſs; which without extreme caution, and conſtancy, force of reaſon, and command of all appetites, and paſſions cannot, be avoided; and ſeldom are? What but a ſtate of pompous trouble, and gay ſervility, of living in continual noiſe and ſtir, environed with crouds and throngs, of being ſubject to the urgency of buſineſs, and the tediouſneſs of ceremony; of being abuſed by perfidious ſervants, and mocked by vile flatterers; of being expoſed to common cenſure and obloquy, to miſrepreſentation, miſconſtruction and ſlander; having the eyes of all men intent upon their actions, and as many ſevere judges as watchful ſpectatours of them; of being accomptable for many mens faults, and bearing the blame of all miſcarriages about them; of being reſponſible in conſcience, for the miſcarriages and miſhaps which come from the influence of our counſels, our examples, &c. of being peſter'd and purſu'd with pretences, with ſuits, with complaints, the neceſſary reſult whereof is to diſpleaſe or provoke very many, to oblige or ſatisfie very few, of being frequently ingaged in reſentments of ingratitude, of treachery, of neglects, of defects in duty, and breaches of truſt toward them; of being conſtrained to comply with the humours and opinion of men; of anxious care to keep, and jealous fear of loſing all; of danger and being objected to the traiterous attempts of bold male-contents, of fierce zealots and wild fanaticks; of wanting the moſt ſolid and ſavoury comforts of life, true friendſhip, free converſation, certain leaſure, privacy and retiredneſs, for enjoying themſelves, their time, their thoughts as they think good; of ſatiety and being cloyed with all ſorts of enjoyments: In fine, of being paid with falſe coin for all their cares and pains, receiving for them ſcarce any thing more, but empty ſhews of reſpect, and hollow acclamations of praiſe; (whence the Pſalmiſt might well ſay, Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree a lye; a lye, for that their ſtate cheateth us, appearing ſo ſpecious, yet being really ſo inconvenient and troubleſome.) Such is the ſtate of the greateſt men; ſuch as hath made wiſe Princes weary of themſelves, ready to acknowledge, that if men knew the weight of a Crown, none would take it up, apt to think with Pope Adrian, who made this Epitaph for himſelf; Here lyeth Adrian the Sixth, who thought nothing in his life to have befallen him more unhappy, than that he ruled: Such, in fine, their ſtate, as upon due conſideration we ſhould, were it offered to our choice, never embrace; ſuch indeed, as in ſober judgment, we cannot prefer before the moſt narrow and inferiour fortune: How then can we reaſonably be diſpleaſed with our condition, when we may even pity Emperours and Kings, when, in reality, we are as well, perhaps are much better than they.

Magna ſervitus eſt magna fortuna, &c. Sen. ad Polyb. 26.

Perſonata felicitas. Sen. Ep: 80.

Pſal. 62. 9.

——adulandi certamen eſt, & unum omnium amicorum officium, una contentio quis blandiſſime fallat. Sen. *de Benef.*6. 30.

Vid. optime diſſerentem.

Vid. & de Clem. 1. 19.

Et ad Polyb. 26.

Antigonus. Neſcitis amici, quid mali ſit imperare, &c. Saturninus apud Vopiſcum.

Hic ſitus eſt Adrian. VI. qui nihil ſibi in vita infelicius duxit, quam quod imperavit. Lud. Guicciard. P. Jovius in vit.

Nihil difficilius quam bene imperare. Diocleſ. apud Vopiſc. in Aureliano.

7. Farther, it may induce and ingage us to be content, to conſider what commonly hath been the lot of good men in the World: We ſhall, if we ſurvey the Hiſtories of all times, find the beſt men to have ſuſtained moſt grie-

Conſider what calamities great, powerful glorious men have endured; Crœſ. Polycr. Pomp. &c. Sen. de Ira. 3. 25.

Οἱ τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἄριστοι πενίᾳ διέζων παρὰ πάντα τὸν βίον. (Ariſtides, Phocion, Epaminondas, Pelopidas.) Æl. xi. 9. 11. 43.

Lamachus, Socrates, Ephialtes.

Abel, Noe, &c. Chryſ. Tom. 6 p. 107.

Gen. 47. 9.

Pſal. 105. 18.

Σίδηρον διῆλθεν ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ.

Socrates, Cato, Regulus, Phocion, &c. Magnum exemplum niſi mala fortuna non invenit.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 27. p. 168. & Tom. 6. Or. 10. p. 107.

Job 13. 27.

1 Sam. 26. 20.

Νῦν καὶ πάλαι ἐξ οὗ γεγόνασιν ἄνθρωποι ἅπαντες οἱ τῷ θεῷ φίλοι τῷ στενῷ καὶ ἐπιμόχθῳ καὶ μυρίων γέμοντι δεινῶν ἐκληρώθησαν βίῳ. Chryſ. in Mart. Ægypt. T. 5. 522.

Ἐν τοῖς πειρασμοῖς λάμπουσιν οἱ δίκαιοι, τοὺς ἁγίους ἅπαντας οὕτως ἤγαγεν ὁ θεὸς διὰ θλίψεως. Chryſ. in 2 Cor. Or. 27.

Lam. 3. 1.

Acts 7. 52.

1 Cor. 4. & 7.

Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 93.

Iſa. 53. 3.

Matt. 8. 20.

Ἐκ γὰρ τῶν πρώτων φύντων ἀνθρώπων μέχρι τοῦ παρόντος καιροῦ τοὺς τὸν τῶν ὅλων ἐσπουδακότας σέβειν θεὸν ἔστιν εὑρεῖν παρὰ τῶν συμβεβιωκότων ἀνθρώπων ἠδικημένους καὶ πλείστοις ἄγαν περιπεπτωκότας ἀνιαροῖς. Theod. Ep. 132.

vous croſſes and troubles; ſcarce is there in holy Scripture recorded any perſon eminent and illuſtrious for goodneſs, who have not taſted deeply of vvants and diſtreſſes. Abraham, the Father of the faithful, and eſpecial friend of God, vvas called out of his Countrey, and from his Kindred, to vvander in a ſtrange land, and lodge in Tents, vvithout any fixed habitation. Jacob ſpent a great part of his life in ſlaviſh toil, and in his old age vvas in reflection upon his life moved to ſay, that the days of his pilgrimage had been few and evil. Joſeph vvas maligned and perſecuted by his Brethren, ſold avvay for a ſlave, ſlandered for a moſt heinous crime, thruſt into a grievous priſon, vvhere his feet were hurt with fetters, and his ſoul came into iron. Moſes vvas forced to fly avvay for his life, to become a vagabond in a foreign place, to feed ſheep for his livelihood; to ſpend aftervvards the beſt of his life in conteſting vvith an obſtinately perverſe Prince, and in leading a miſtruſtful, refractory, mutinous people, for forty years time, through a vaſt and wild deſart. Job, what a ſtupendious heap of miſchiefs did together fall, and lie heavy upon him? (Thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, he might well ſay.) David, How often was he plunged in ſaddeſt extremity, and reduced to the hardeſt ſhifts; being hunted like a partridge in the wilderneſs by an envious Maſter, forced to counterfeit madneſs for his ſecurity among barbarous infidels; diſpoſſeſſed of his kingdom, and perſecuted by his own moſt favoured ſon; deſerted by his ſervants, reproached and ſcorned by his ſubjects? Elias was driven long to ſculk for his life, and to ſhift for his livelihood in the Wilderneſs. Jeremy was treated as an Impoſtour and a Traitour, and caſt into a miry Dungeon; finding matter from his ſufferings for his doleful lamentations, and having thence occaſion to exclaim, I am the man that have ſeen affliction by the rod of his wrath, &c. Which of the Prophets were not perſecuted, and miſuſed? as St. Stephen asked. The Apoſtles were pinched with all kinds of want, haraſſed with all ſorts of toil, expoſed to all manner of hazards, perſecuted with all variety of contumelies, and pains that can be imagined: Above all, our Lord himſelf beyond expreſſion was a man of ſorrow, and acquainted with grief, ſurpaſſing all men in ſuffering as he did excel them in dignity, and in vertue; extream poverty, having not ſo much as where to lay his head, was his portion; to undergo continual labour and travel, without any mixture of carnal eaſe or pleaſure, was his ſtate; in return for the higheſt good will, and choiceſt benefits to receive moſt cruel hatred, and grievous injuries, to be loaded with the bittereſt reproaches, the fouleſt ſlanders, the soreſt pains which moſt ſpiteful malice could invent, or fierceſt rage inflict, this was his lot: Am I poor, ſo may one ſay, was he to extremity; Am I ſlighted of the World? ſo was he notoriouſly; Am I diſappointed, and croſſed in my deſigns? ſo was he continually, all his moſt painful endeavours having ſmall effect; Am I deſerted or betrayed of Friends? ſo was he by thoſe who were moſt intimate, and moſt obliged to him; Am I reviled, ſlandered, miſuſed? Was not he ſo beyond all compariſon moſt outrageouſly.

Heb. 11. 38.

Have all theſe, and many more, of whom the world was not worthy, undergone all ſorts of inconvenience, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented;

And ſhall we then diſdain, or be ſorry to be found in ſuch company? Having ſuch a cloud of martyrs, Let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us. Is it not an Honour, ſhould it not be a comfort to us, that we do, in condition, reſemble them? If God hath thus dealt with thoſe, who of all men have been deareſt to him, ſhall we take it ill at his hands, that he, in any manner, dealeth ſo with us? Can we pretend, can we hope, can we even wiſh to be uſed better, than Gods firſt-born, and our Lord himſelf hath been? If we do, are we not monſtruouſly fond and arrogant? eſpecially conſidering, that it is not onely an ordinary fortune, but the peculiar character of Gods choſen, and children, to be often croſſed, checked, and corrected; Even Pagans have obſerved it, and avowed there is great reaſon for it; God (ſaith Seneca) hath a fatherly mind toward good men; and ſtrongly loveth them——therefore after the manner of ſevere parents, he educateth them hardly, &c. The Apoſtle doth in expreſs terms aſſure us thereof; for, whom (ſaith he) the Lord loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. If ye endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons——but if ye be without chaſtiſement, whereof all (that is, all good men, and genuine Sons of God) are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons. Would we be illegitimated, or expunged from the number of God's true children; would we be diveſted of his ſpecial regard and good-will? if not, Why do we not gladly embrace, and willingly ſuſtain adverſity, which is by himſelf declared ſo peculiar a badge of his children, ſo conſtant a mark of his favour? if all good men do (as the Apoſtle aſſerteth) partake thereof; ſhall we, by diſpleaſure at it, ſhew, that we deſire to be aſſuredly none of that party, that we affect to be diſcarded from that holy and happy ſociety? Verily, verily I ſay unto you, that ye ſhall weep and lament, but the world ſhall rejoice. It is peculiarly the lot of Chriſtians, as ſuch, in conformity to their afflicted Saviour; they are herein predeſtinated to be conformable to his image; to this they are appointed. (Let no man, ſaith St. Paul, be moved by theſe afflictions, for ye know, that we are appointed thereunto:) to this they are called (if when we do well, ſaith St. Peter, and ſuffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God; for even hereunto were ye called) this is propounded to them as a condition to be undertaken, and undergone by them as ſuch; they are by profeſſion crucigeri, bearers of the croſs; (If any one will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs and follow me; Every one that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution) by this are they admitted into the ſtate of Chriſtians; (by many afflictions we muſt enter into the kingdom of heaven) this doth qualify them for enjoying the glorious rewards, which their religion propoundeth; (We are coheirs with Chriſt; ſo that, if we ſuffer together, we ſhall alſo together be glorified with him; If we endure, we ſhall alſo reign with him;) * And ſhall we then pretend to be Chriſtians, ſhall we claim any benefit from thence, if we are unwilling to ſubmit to the Law, to attend the call, to comply with the terms thereof? Will we enjoy its priviledges, can we hope for its rewards, if we will not contentedly undergo what it requireth? Shall we arrive to the end it propoundeth, without going in the way it preſcribeth, the way which our Lord himſelf doth lead us in, and himſelf hath trod before us?

Heb. 12. 1.

Sen. de Provid. c. 2.

Heb. 12. 6, 7, 8.

Ecclus. 2. 1. Τέκνον εἰ προσέρχῃ δουλεύειν κυρίῳ ἑτοίμασον τὴν ψυχήν σου εἰς πειρασμόν.

John 16. 20.

Rom. 8. 29.

1 Theſſ 3. 3.

Phil. 3. 10.

1 Pet. 2. 20, 21.

Mat. 16. 24. 10. 38. 2 Tim. 2: 12.

John 16. 33. Ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ θλίψιν ἕξετε.

Quotam partem anguſtiarum perpeſſus ſum qui cruci milito. Hier. ad Aſellam, Ep. 99.

Acts 14. 22.

Vid. Greg. Naz. Ep. 201. (ad Theclam.)

2 Tim. 2. 12.

(Phil. 3. 10.)

* It is a priviledge of Chriſtians, in favour beſtowed on them; ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη: Phil. 1. 29.

Our glory Eph. 3. 13.

Ὑπομονῆς ἔχετε χρείαν. Heb. 10. 36. Faith and Patience are conſorts. Heb. 6. 12. Apoc. 13. 10.

In

1 Pet. 4. 12.

In fine, ſeeing adverſity is, as hath been declared, a thing ſo natural to all men, ſo common to moſt men, ſo incident to great men, ſo proper to good men, ſo peculiar to Chriſtians, we have great reaſon to obſerve the Apoſtles advice; Beloved, wonder not concerning the fiery trial, which is to try you, as if ſome ſtrange thing happened to you; we ſhould not wonder at it as a ſtrange, or uncouth thing, that we are engaged in any trouble or inconvenience here; we are conſequently not to be affected with it as a thing very grievous.

SERMON IX.

Of Contentment.

PHIL. 4. 11.

I have learned in whatever State, &c.

1 Tim. 6. 6. Ἔστι δὲ μέγας πορισμὸς ἡ εὐσέβεια μετὰ αὐταρκείας.

Aug. de Civ. Dei. 1. 8.

Moreover conſidering the nature of this duty it ſelf, may be a great inducement and aid to the practice of it.

1. It is it ſelf a ſovereign remedy, for all poverty and all ſufferance; removing them, or allaying all the miſchief they can do us. It is well and truly ſaid by St. Auſtine, Intereſt non qualia, ſed qualis quis patiatur; It is no matter what, but how diſpoſed a man ſuffereth: The chief miſchief any adverſity can do us is to render us diſcontent, in that conſiſteth all the ſting, and all the venom thereof; which thereby being voided, adverſity can ſignify nothing prejudicial, or noxious to us; all diſtraction, all diſtemper, all diſturbance from it is by the antidote of contentedneſs prevented or corrected. He that hath his deſires moderated to a temper ſutable with his condition, that hath his paſſions compoſed and ſettled agreeably to his circumſtances, what can make any grievous impreſſion on him, or render him any-wiſe miſerable? He that taketh himſelf to have enough, what doth he need? he that is well-pleaſed to be as he is, how can he be better, What can the largeſt Wealth, or higheſt proſperity in the World yeild more, or better than ſatisfaction o mind? He that hath this moſt eſſential ingredient o felicity, is he not thence in effect moſt fortunate? i not at leaſt his condition as good as that of the mo proſperous.

Cui cum paupertate bene convenit, dives eſt. Sen. Ep. 2.

Nemo aliorum ſenſu miſer eſt, ſed ſuo; & ideo non poſſunt cujuſquam falſo judicio eſſe miſeri, qui ſunt vere conſcientia ſua beati. Nulli beatiores ſunt, quam qui hoc ſunt quod volunt. Salv. de Gubern. Dei, 1.

2. As good do I ſay? yea is it not plainly much be ter, than can ariſe merely from any ſecular proſperity for ſatisfaction ſpringing from rational conſideration and vertuous diſpoſition of mind is indeed far mor precious, more noble and worthy, more ſolid and durable, more ſwee

Οὐ γὰρ τὸ ποιῆσαί τι χρηστὸν μόνον, ἀλλὰ τὸ παθεῖν τι κακὸν πολλὰς ἔχει τὰς ἀμοιβὰς καὶ μεγάλα τὰ ἔπαθλα, &c. Chryſ. ad Olymp. Ep. 3. Vid. p. 73.

and delectable, than that which any poſſeſſion, or fruition of worldly goods can afford: The τὸ ἄφθαρτον τοῦ πρᾳέος, καὶ ἡσυχίου πνεύματος, incorruptibility (at St. Peter ſpeaketh) of a meek and quiet ſpirit is before God of great price; before God, that is, according to the moſt upright and certain judgment it is the moſt precious and valuable thing in the World; There is (the Philoſopher could ſay) no ſpectacle more worthy of God (or grateful to him) than a good man gallantly combating with ill fortune. Not to be diſcompoſed or diſtempered in mind, not to fret or whine, when all things flow proſperouſly and according to our mind, is no great praiſe, no ſign of wiſdom, or argument of goodneſs; it cannot be reckoned an effect of ſound judgment, or vertuous affection, but a natural conſequent of ſuch a ſtate: But when there are evident occaſions, and urgent temptations to diſpleaſure, when preſent ſenſe and fancy do prompt and provoke to murmuring, then to be ſatisfied in our mind, then to keep our paſſions in order, then to maintain good humour, then to reſtrain our tongue from complaint, and to govern our demeanour ſweetly, this is indeed honourable and handſome; to ſee a worthy man ſuſtain croſſes, wants, diſgraces with equanimity and chearfulneſs is a moſt goodly ſight: ſuch a perſon to a judicious mind appeareth in a far more honourable and invidious ſtate, than any proſperous man: his vertue ſhining in the dark is far more bright and fair: this (as St. Peter ſaith, in a like caſe) is thank-worthy, if a man for conſcience toward God ſuffereth grief; if, in our caſe (we may ſay after him) a man out of conſciencious deference to God's Will, doth contentedly undergo adverſity, this God is ready to take for an obligation on himſelf, and will be diſpoſed in a manner to thank him (or to reward him) for it: This indeed amounteth to a demonſtration that ſuch a perſon is truly wiſe and really good: ſo is the ſatisfaction of a contented poor man more worthy: And it is no leſs more ſweet and comfortable, than that of any rich man, pleaſing himſelf in his enjoyments; contentedneſs ſatisfieth the mind of the one, abundance doth only ſatiate the appetites of the other; the former is immaterial and ſprightly, the complacence of a man; the latter is groſs and dull, like the ſenſuality of a beaſt; the delight of that ſinketh deep into the heart, the pleaſure of this doth only float in the outward ſenſes, or in the fancy; one is a poſitive comfort, the other but a negative indolency in regard to the mind: The poor good man's joy is wholly his own, and home-born, a lovely child of reaſon and vertue; the full rich man's pleaſure cometh from without, and is thruſt into him by impulſes of ſenſible objects.

Οὐδὲν τῶν ἐν ἀλγηδόσιν ὑπομονῆς εἰς εὐδοκιμήσεως λόγον ἴσον· ἡ γὰρ βασιλὶς τῶν ἀγαθῶν, καὶ τῶν στεφάνων ἡ κορωνὶς αὕτη μάλιστά ἐστι. Chryſ. ad Olymp. Ep. 16. Vid. Epiſt. 6. & ad Olymp. Epiſt. 3 (p. 75.) de Joſepho. 1 Pet. 3. 4.

Ecce par Deo dignum vir bonus cum mala fortuna compoſitus. Sen. de Provid.

1 Pet. 2. 19.

Honeſta res eſt læta paupertas. Epic.

Οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁ διὰ τὸν Θεόν τι πάσχων μόνον εὐδοκιμεῖ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ ἀδίκως τι πάσχων, καὶ φέρων γενναίως, καὶ εὐχαριστῶν τῷ συγχωροῦντι Θεῷ οὐκ ἐλάττων τοῦ διὰ τὸν Θεὸν ταῦτα πάσχοντός ἐστιν. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. ς′.

Hence is the ſatisfaction of contented adverſity far more conſtant, ſolid and durable, than that of proſperity; it being the product of immutable reaſon abideth in the mind, and cannot eaſily be driven thence by any corporeal impreſſions, which immediately cannot touch the mind; whereas the other, iſſuing from ſenſe, is ſubject to all the changes, inducible from the reſtleſs commotions of outward cauſes affecting and altering ſenſe: whence the ſatisfaction proceeding from reaſon and vertue, the longer it ſtayeth the firmer and ſweeter it groweth, turning into habit, and working nature to an agreement with it; whereas uſually the joys of wealth and proſperity do ſoon degenerate into faſtidiouſneſs, and terminate in bitterneſs, being honey in the mouth, but ſoon becoming gall in the bowels. Nothing indeed can affect the mind with a truer pleaſure, than the very conſcience of diſcharging our duty toward God in bearing hardſhip,

Apoc. 10. 10.
Job 20. 20, 22.

ſhip, impoſed by his providence, willingly and well. We have therefore much reaſon not only to acquieſce in our ſtraits but to be glad of them, ſeeing they do yield us an opportunity of immediately obtaining goods, more excellent and more deſirable, than any proſperous or wealthy man can eaſily have, ſince they furniſh us with means of acquiring and exerciſing a vertue worth the moſt ample fortune; yea juſtly preferable to the beſt eſtate in the World; a vertue, which indeed doth not onely render any condition tolerable, but ſweetneth any thing, yea ſanctifieth all ſtates, and turneth all occurrences into bleſſings.

3. Even the ſenſible ſmart of adverſity is by contentedneſs ſomewhat tempered and eaſed; the ſtiller and quieter we lye under it, the leſs we feel its violence and pungency: It is tumbling and toſſing, that ſtirreth the ill humours, and driveth them to the parts moſt weak, and apt to be affected with them; the rubbing of our ſores is that which enflameth and exaſperateth them: Where the mind is calm, and the paſſions ſetled, the pain of any grievance is in compariſon leſs acute, leſs ſenſible.

4. Whence if others in our diſtreſs are uncharitable to us, refuſing the help they might, or ſhould afford toward the reſcuing us from it, or relieving us in it, we hereby may be charitable and great benefactours to our ſelves; we ſhould need no anodyne to be miniſtred from without, no ſuccour to come from any creature, if we would not be wanting to our ſelves, in hearkening to our own reaſon, and enjoying the conſolation which it affordeth. In not doing this, we are more uncharitable and cruel to our ſelves, than any ſpiteful enemy or treacherous friend can be; no man can ſo wrong or moleſt us, as we do our ſelves by admitting or foſtering diſcontent.

5. The contented bearing of our condition is alſo the moſt hopeful and ready means of bettering it, and of removing the preſſures we lie under.

It is partly ſo in a natural way, as diſpoſing us to embrace and employ the advantages which occur conducible thereto; for as diſcontent blindeth men ſo that they cannot deſcry the ways of eſcape from evil, it diſpiriteth and diſcourageth them from endeavouring to help themſelves, it depriveth them of many ſuccours and expedients, which occaſion would afford for their relief; ſo he that being undiſturbed in his ſpirit hath his eyes open and his courage up, and all his natural powers in order, will be always ready and able to do his beſt, to act vigorouſly, to ſnatch any opportunity, and employ any means toward the freeing himſelf from what appeareth grievous to him.

Upon a ſupernatural accompt content is yet more efficacious to the ſame purpoſe: For chearful ſubmiſſion to Gods Will doth pleaſe him much, doth ſtrongly move him to withdraw his afflicting hand, doth effectually induce him to advance us into a moſt comfortable ſtate: Of all vertues there is none more acceptable to God than patience. God will take it well at our hands if we do contentedly receive from his hand the worſt things: 'tis a monſtrous thing not to receive proſperity with grateful ſenſe, but i is heroical with the ſame mind to receive things unpleaſant: he that d
Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 89. ſo ζημιοῦται μὲν ὡς ἄνθρωπος, στεφανοῦται δὲ ὡς φιλόθεος, he ſuffereth loſs as a man, but i
Vid. Chryſ. ad Stag. 1. & 2. (p. 106.) crowned as a lover of God. Beſides that it is an unreaſonable thing to thin of enjoying both reſt and pleaſure here, and the rewards hereafter; our conſolation here with Dives, and our refreſhment hereafter with Lazaru

1 Pet. 5. 6. Be humbled (ſaith St. Peter) under the mighty hand of God, that he ma exalt you in due time (ἐν καιρῷ when it is opportune and ſeaſonable) an
Jam. 4. 10. Be humble (ſaith St. James) before the Lord, and he will exalt you, and

When (ſaith Job's friends) men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay there is lifting up, and he will ſave the humble perſon. God with favourable pity hearkeneth to the groans of them who are humbly contrite under his hand, and reverently tremble at his word; he reviveth the ſpirit of the humble; He is nigh to the broken of heart, and ſaveth ſuch as are of a contrite ſpirit; He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds; He proclaimeth bleſſedneſs to the poor in ſpirit, and to thoſe that mourn, becauſe they ſhall find comfort and mercy; all which declarations and promiſes are made concerning thoſe who bear adverſity with a ſubmiſs and contented mind; and we ſee them effectually performed in the caſes of Ahab, of the Ninivites, of Nebuchadnezzar, of Manaſſes, of Hezekiah, of David; of all perſons mentioned in holy Scripture, upon whom adverſities had ſuch kindly operations. But diſcontent and impatience do offend God, and provoke him to continue his judgments, yea to encreaſe the load of them: To be ſullen and ſtubborn is the ſure way to render our Condition worſe, and more intolerable: For, who hath hardened himſelf againſt God and proſpered? The Pharaohs and Sauls, and ſuch like perſons, who rather would break than bend, who being diſſatisfied with their Condition choſe rather to lay hold on other imaginary ſuccours, than to have recourſe to God's mercy and help; thoſe, who (like the refractory Iſraelites) have been ſmitten in vain as to any quiet ſubmiſſion or converſion unto God, what have they but plunged themſelves deeper into wretchedneſs?

Job 22. 29.
(Luke 14. 11. 18. 14.)
Iſa. 66. 2. 57. 15.
Pſal. 34. 18. 51. 17. 147. 3.
Matt. 5 3, 4.
Job 9. 4.
Jer. 2. 30. 5. 3.
Iſa. 9. 13. 1. 5. 26. 10.

It is indeed to quell our haughty ſtomach, to check our froward humour, to curb our impetuous deſires, to calm our diſorderly paſſions, to ſuppreſs our fond admiration and eager affection toward theſe worldly things, in ſhort to work a contented mind in us, that God ever doth inflict any hardſhips on us, that he croſſeth us in our projects, that he detaineth us in any troubleſome ſtate; until this be atchieved, as it is not expedient that we ſhould be eaſed, as relief would really be no bleſſing to us; ſo God (except in anger and judgment) will no-wiſe grant or diſpenſe it; it would be a cruel mercy for him to do it: If therefore we do wiſh ever to be in a good caſe as to this World, let us learn to be contented in a bad one: Having got this diſpoſition firmly rooted in our hearts, we are qualified for deliverance and preferment; nor will God fail in that due ſeaſon to perform for us what he ſo often hath declared and promiſed; his nature diſpoſeth him, his word hath engaged him to help and comfort us.

Theſe are the moſt proper inducements unto contentedneſs, which conſidering (in the light of reaſon and holy Scripture) the nature of the thing, ſuggeſted unto my meditation: there are beſide ſome other means adviſable, (ſome general, ſome more particular) which are very conducible to the production of content, or removing diſcontent; which I ſhall touch, and then conclude.

1. A conſtant endeavour to live well, and to maintain a good conſcience. He that doeth this can hardly be diſmay'd or diſturbed with any occurrence here; this will yield a man ſo ample and firm a ſatisfaction of mind, as will bear down the ſenſe of any incumbent evils; this will beget ſuch hope in God, and ſo good aſſurance of his favour, as will ſupply the want of all other things, and fully ſatisfie us, that we have no cauſe to be troubled with any thing here: He that by conſcientious practice hath obtained ſuch a hope is prepared againſt all aſſaults of fortune with an undaunted mind and force impregnable; He will (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) not be afraid of any evil tydings, for his heart is fixed truſting in the Lord. Maintaining this will free us from all anxious care, transferring it upon God;

Pſal. 112. 1. 119. 6.

ſhip, impoſed by his providence, willingly and well. We have therefore much reaſon not only to acquieſce in our ſtraits but to be glad of them, ſeeing they do yield us an opportunity of immediately obtaining goods, more excellent and more deſirable, than any proſperous or wealthy man can eaſily have, ſince they furniſh us with means of acquiring and exerciſing a vertue worth the moſt ample fortune; yea juſtly preferable to the beſt eſtate in the World; a vertue, which indeed doth not onely render any condition tolerable, but ſweetneth any thing, yea ſanctifieth all ſtates, and turneth all occurrences into bleſſings.

3. Even the ſenſible ſmart of adverſity is by contentedneſs ſomewhat tempered and eaſed; the ſtiller and quieter we lye under it, the leſs we feel its violence and pungency: It is tumbling and toſſing, that ſtirreth the ill humours, and driveth them to the parts moſt weak, and apt to be affected with them; the rubbing of our ſores is that which enflameth and exaſperateth them: Where the mind is calm, and the paſſions ſetled, the pain of any grievance is in compariſon leſs acute, leſs ſenſible.

4. Whence if others in our diſtreſs are uncharitable to us, refuſing the help they might, or ſhould afford toward the reſcuing us from it, or relieving us in it, we hereby may be charitable and great benefactours to our ſelves; we ſhould need no anodyne to be miniſtred from without, no ſuccour to come from any creature, if we would not be wanting to our ſelves, in hearkening to our own reaſon, and enjoying the conſolation which it affordeth. In not doing this, we are more uncharitable and cruel to our ſelves, than any ſpiteful enemy or treacherous friend can be; no man can ſo wrong or moleſt us, as we do our ſelves by admitting or foſtering diſcontent.

5. The contented bearing of our condition is alſo the moſt hopeful and ready means of bettering it, and of removing the preſſures we lie under.

It is partly ſo in a natural way, as diſpoſing us to embrace and employ the advantages which occur conducible thereto; for as diſcontent blindeth men ſo that they cannot deſcry the ways of eſcape from evil, it diſpiriteth and diſcourageth them from endeavouring to help themſelves, it depriveth them of many ſuccours and expedients, which occaſion would afford for their relief; ſo he that being undiſturbed in his ſpirit hath his eyes open and his courage up, and all his natural powers in order, will be always ready and able to do his beſt, to act vigorouſly, to ſnatch any opportunity, and employ any means toward the freeing himſelf from what appeareth grievous to him.

Upon a ſupernatural accompt content is yet more efficacious to the ſame purpoſe: For chearful ſubmiſſion to Gods Will doth pleaſe him much, doth ſtrongly move him to withdraw his afflicting hand, doth effectually induce him to advance us into a moſt comfortable ſtate: Of all vertues there is none more acceptable to God than patience. God will take it well at our hands if we do contentedly receive from his hand the worſt things: 'tis a monſtrous thing not to receive proſperity with grateful ſenſe, but it is heroical with the ſame mind to receive things unpleaſant: he that doth Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 89. ſo ζημιοῦται μὲν ὡς ἄνθρωπος, στεφανοῦται δὲ ὡς φιλόθεος, he ſuffereth loſs as a man, but is
Vid. Chryſ. ad Stag. 1. & 2. (p. 106.) crowned as a lover of God. Beſides that it is an unreaſonable thing to think of enjoying both reſt and pleaſure here, and the rewards hereafter; our conſolation here with Dives, and our refreſhment hereafter with Lazarus.

1 Pet. 5. 6. Be humbled (ſaith St. Peter) under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time (ἐν καιρῷ when it is opportune and ſeaſonable) and
Jam. 4. 10. Be humble (ſaith St. James) before the Lord, and he will exalt you, and

When (ſaith Job's friends) men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay there is lifting up, and he will ſave the humble perſon. God with favourable pity hearkeneth to the groans of them who are humbly contrite under his hand, and reverently tremble at his word ; he reviveth the ſpirit of the humble ; He is nigh to the broken of heart, and ſaveth ſuch as are of a contrite ſpirit ; He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds ; He proclaimeth bleſſedneſs to the poor in ſpirit, and to thoſe that mourn, becauſe they ſhall find comfort and mercy ; all which declarations and promiſes are made concerning thoſe who bear adverſity with a ſubmiſs and contented mind ; and we ſee them effectually performed in the caſes of Ahab, of the Ninivites, of Nebuchadnezzar, of Manaſſes, of Hezekiah, of David ; of all perſons mentioned in holy Scripture, upon whom adverſities had ſuch kindly operations. But diſcontent and impatience do offend God, and provoke him to continue his judgments, yea to encreaſe the load of them: To be ſullen and ſtubborn is the ſure way to render our Condition worſe, and more intolerable : For, who hath hardened himſelf againſt God and proſpered? The Pharaohs and Sauls, and ſuch like perſons, who rather would break than bend, who being diſſatisfied with their Condition choſe rather to lay hold on other imaginary ſuccours, than to have recourſe to God's mercy and help ; thoſe, who (like the refractory Iſraelites) have been ſmitten in vain as to any quiet ſubmiſſion or converſion unto God, what have they but plunged themſelves deeper into wretchedneſs?

Job 22. 29. (Luke 14. 11. 18. 14.)
Iſa. 66. 2. 57. 15.
Pſal. 34. 18. 51. 17. 147. 3.
Matt. 5. 3, 4.
Job 9. 4.
Jer. 2. 30. 5. 3.
Iſa. 9. 13. 1. 5. 26. 10.

It is indeed to quell our haughty ſtomach, to check our froward humour, to curb our impetuous deſires, to calm our diſorderly paſſions, to ſuppreſs our fond admiration and eager affection toward theſe worldly things, in ſhort to work a contented mind in us, that God ever doth inflict any hardſhips on us, that he croſſeth us in our projects, that he detaineth us in any troubleſome ſtate ; until this be atchieved, as it is not expedient that we ſhould be eaſed, as relief would really be no bleſſing to us; ſo God (except in anger and judgment) will no-wiſe grant or diſpenſe it ; it would be a cruel mercy for him to do it : If therefore we do wiſh ever to be in a good caſe as to this World, let us learn to be contented in a bad one : Having got this diſpoſition firmly rooted in our hearts, we are qualified for deliverance and preferment ; nor will God fail in that due ſeaſon to perform for us what he ſo often hath declared and promiſed ; his nature diſpoſeth him, his word hath engaged him to help and comfort us.

Theſe are the moſt proper inducements unto contentedneſs, which conſidering (in the light of reaſon and holy Scripture) the nature of the thing, ſuggeſted unto my meditation : there are beſide ſome other means adviſable, (ſome general, ſome more particular) which are very conducible to the production of content, or removing diſcontent ; which I ſhall touch, and then conclude.

1. A conſtant endeavour to live well, and to maintain a good conſcience. He that doeth this can hardly be diſmay'd or diſturbed with any occurrence here ; this will yield a man ſo ample and firm a ſatisfaction of mind, as will bear down the ſenſe of any incumbent evils ; this will beget ſuch hope in God, and ſo good aſſurance of his favour, as will ſupply the want of all other things, and fully ſatisfie us, that we have no cauſe to be troubled with any thing here : He that by conſcientious practice hath obtained ſuch a hope is prepared againſt all aſſaults of fortune with an undaunted mind and force impregnable ; He will (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) not be afraid of any evil tydings, for his heart is fixed truſting in the Lord. Maintaining this will free us from all anxious care, transferring it upon God;

Pſal. 112. 1. 119. 6.

it will breed a ſure confidence, that he will ever be ready to ſupply us with all things convenient, to protect and deliver us from all things hurtful; enſuring to us the effect of that promiſe, by the conſcience of having performed the condition thereof: Seek ye firſt the kingdom of God and its Matt. 6. 33. righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.

This was that which ſupported the Apoſtles, and kept them chearful under all that heavy load of diſtreſſes which lay upon them; Our re-
1 Cor. 1. 12. joicing is this (could they ſay) the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſim-
1 Pet. 3. 16. plicity and godly ſincerity——we have had our converſation in this world.
Acts 23. 1.
24. 16.

'Tis the want of this beſt pleaſure, that both rendreth the abſence of all other pleaſures grievous, and their preſence inſipid: Had we a good conſcience we could not ſeem to want comfort; as we could not truly be unhappy, ſo we could hardly be diſcontent; without it no affluence of other things can ſuffice to content us. It is an evil conſcience that giveth an edge to all other evils, and enableth them ſorely to afflict us, which otherwiſe would but ſlightly touch us; we become thence uncapable of comfort, ſeeing not only things here upon earth to croſs us, but heaven to lowre upon us; finding no viſible ſuccour, and having no hope from the power inviſible; yea having reaſon to be diſcouraged with the fear of God's diſpleaſure. As he that hath a powerful enemy near, cannot abide in peace, without anxious ſuſpicion and fear; ſo he that is at variance with the Almighty, who is ever at hand, ready to croſs and puniſh him, what quiet of mind can he enjoy? There is no peace to the wicked.

2. The contemplation of our future ſtate is a ſovereign medicine to 1 Theſſ. 4. 18. work contentedneſs, and to cure diſcontent: as diſcontent eaſily doth
Vid. Naz. ſeiſe upon, and cleaveth faſt to Souls, which earneſtly do pore and dote
Ep. 201. upon theſe preſent things, which have in them nothing ſatisfactory or (ad Theclam.) ſtable; ſo if we can raiſe our minds firmly to believe, ſeriouſly to conſider, and worthily to prize the future ſtate and its concernments, we can hardly ever be diſcontent in regard to theſe things. Conſidering heaven and its happineſs, how low and mean, how ſordid and vile, how unworthy of our care and our affection will theſe inferiour things appear?
2 Cor. 7. 31. How very unconcerned ſhall we ſee our ſelves to be in them, and how eaſily thence ſhall we be content to want them? What, ſhall any of us be then ready to ſay, doth it concern me in what rank or garb I paſs my few days here? what conſiderable intereſt can I have in this uncertain and tranſitory ſtate? what is any loſs, any diſgrace, any croſs in this World to me, who am a Citizen of Heaven, who have a capacity and hope of the immenſe riches, the incorruptible glories, the perfect and endleſs joys of eternity? This was that which ſuſtained the holy Apoſtles
2 Cor. 4. 16. in all their diſtreſſes; For this cauſe (ſaith St. Paul) we faint not——while
&c. 5. 7. we look not on the things which are ſeen, but on the things which are not ſeen, for the things which are ſeen are temporal, but the things which are not ſeen are
Rom. 8. 18. eternal; and I reckon (ſaith he again) that the ſufferings of this preſent life are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be revealed in us.

If likewiſe we do with faith and ſeriouſneſs conſider the diſmal ſtate below of thoſe, who are eternally ſecluded from all joy and bliſs, who are irrecoverably condemned to utter darkneſs, and the extremity of horrible pain, how tolerable, how pleaſant, how very happy will the meaneſt ſtate here appear to be? how vain a thing will it then ſeem to us to be t diſlike, or to be troubled with any worldly thing; to accompt any chance happening to us to be ſad, or diſaſtrous? What, ſhall we ſay then each of us is this ſame loſs to the loſs of my Soul and all its comforts for ever? what is this want to the perpetual want of heavenly bliſs? what is this ſhor an

and faint pain to the cruel pangs of endleſs remorſe, to the weeping and gnaſhing of teeth in outward darkneſs, to everlaſting burnings?

Thus infinitely ſilly and petty muſt all concernments of this life appear to him, who is poſſeſſed with the belief and conſideration of matters relating to the future ſtate; whence diſcontent in regard to them can hardly find acceſs to his mind.

3. Conſtant devotion is an excellent inſtrument and guard of content, an excellent remedy and fence againſt diſcontent.

It is ſuch in way of impetration, procuring the removal, or alleviation of our croſſes: For God hath promiſed that he will give good things to thoſe that ask him; The Lord is nigh unto all that call upon him in truth; he will fulfil the deſire of them that fear him; he alſo will hear their cry, and will ſave them. The poor man cryeth, and the Lord heareth him, and ſaveth him out of all his troubles; the holy Scripture is full of ſuch declarations and promiſes aſſuring us of ſuccour from our diſtreſſes, upon our ſupplication to God; whence St. Paul thus adviſeth againſt all ſolicitude: Be careful for nothing, but in every thing by prayer, and ſupplication with thanksgiving, let your requeſt be made known to God: And (addeth ſignifying the conſequence of this practice) the peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding, ſhall keep your hearts and minds through Jeſus Chriſt.

Matt. 7. 11.
Pſal. 145. 18.
Jam. 4. 8.
Pſal. 34. 6.
107. 6.
Phil. 4. 7.
(Pſal. 25. 16.
86. 1. 4, 17.
44. 23.)

It likewiſe performeth the ſame by procuring grace and aid from God, which may enable and diſpoſe us to bear all evils well, which is really much better than a removal of them; for that hence they become wholſome and profitable to us, and cauſes of preſent good, and grounds of future reward; thus when St. Paul beſought God for deliverance from his thorn in the fleſh, the return to him was; My grace is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs: It was a greater favour to receive an improvement of ſpiritual ſtrength, occaſioned by that croſs, then to be quite freed from it.

2 Cor. 12. 9.
1 Cor. 10. 13.

Devotion alſo hath immediately of it ſelf a ſpecial efficacy to produce content. As in any diſtreſs it is a great conſolation, that we can have recourſe to a good Friend, that we may diſcharge our cares and our reſentments into his boſome; that we may demand advice from him, and, if need be, requeſt his ſuccour; ſo much more it muſt be a great comfort, that we can in our need approach to God, who is infinitely the moſt faithful, the moſt affectionate, the moſt ſufficient Friend that can be; always moſt ready, moſt willing, moſt able to direct and to relieve us: He deſires, and delights, that in the day of our trouble we ſhould ſeek him; that we ſhould pour forth our hearts before him, that we ſhould caſt our burthens, and our cares upon him, that we ſhould upon all occaſions implore his guidance and aid: And complying with his deſires as we ſhall aſſuredly find a ſucceſsful event of our devotions, ſo we ſhall immediately enjoy great comfort and pleaſure in them.

Pſal. 77. 2. 27. 8. 105. 4. 62. 8.
1 Sam. 1. 15. Pſal. 55. 22.
1 Pet. 5. 7. Pſal. 5. 8; 27. 11. 31. 3.
43. 3. 139. 24. 143. 10. 61. 2.
Jer. 31. 9.

The God of all conſolation doth eſpecially by this chanel convey his comfort into our hearts; his very preſence (that preſence, in which the Pſalmiſt ſaith there is fulneſs of joy) doth mightily warm and chear us; his Holy Spirit doth in our religious entercourſe with him inſinuate a lightſome ſerenity of mind, doth kindle ſweet and kindly affections, doth ſcatter the gloomy clouds of ſadneſs; practiſing it we ſhall be able to ſay with the Pſalmiſt, In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my ſoul.

Pſal. 16. 11.
Pſal. 94. 19.

Humbly addreſſing our ſelves to God, and reverently converſing with him doth compoſe our minds, and charm our paſſions, doth ſweeten our humour doth refreſh and raiſe our ſpirits, and ſo doth immediately breed and nouriſh contentedneſs.

Iſa. 26. 3. It alſo ſtrengthneth our faith, and quickneth our hope in God, whereby we are enabled to ſupport our preſent evils, and peace of mind doth ſpring up within us.

Pſal. 73. 26. 69. 16. 23. 4. 71. 20. It enflameth our love unto God, in ſenſe of his gracious illapſes, thence rendring us willing to endure any want or pain for his ſake, or at his appointment.

